him. If any would be perfectly fit, the courſe is not to reject the means for it: Diſeaſes can never be cur'd with a ſlighting, but by uſing the remedy.

(8.) Conſider what you loſe, and what danger you incur. Whatſoever benefits are ſtor'd up in a Sacrament we loſe by neglects; whatſoever Obedience is in obſerving it, we loſe the reward of; we loſe the fruit of his love in it, and we deny the obligation of his Authority, and the honour of Obedience to it. God will not calmly and coldly ſuffer neglects. To detract from any Ordinance of Chriſt, is in part to diminiſh the Scripture, to deny part of his Will and Teſtament. Why was the neglect of the Jewiſh Sacraments ſo ſeverely puniſhed, that the perſons were cut off, not by a civil puniſhment, but by the hand of God, as the Jews interpret it? Is not the Grace offended in ours as good as was in theirs? Ours may claim the precedency of them in benefits, and therefore ſhould in eſtimation. 'Tis much, that when Chriſt hath graciouſly condeſcended to us, we ſhould not thankfully aſcend to our own priviledge. Well then. Why ſhall not the unconceiveable love of a Saviour move you to the Obedience of a Command ſo eaſy, ſo beneficial, ſo alluring? You are bound to profeſs Chriſt, to remember him in your lives, who remembred you at his Death. Do you think your ſelves his Members within the great Charter of Salvation which he hath purchas'd and ſeal'd? How can any be Members of his Corporation, and diſobey his Orders? Are you not enter'd by Baptiſm, have you not vow'd and promis'd your Allegiance, and is the neglect of a known and poſitive Command the way to perform it? Conſider it is a Law made by the Purchaſer of our Salvation.

2. Uſe. Is of Exhortation to obſerve it and that frequently. Though a dying Saviour is remember'd, yet a living Saviour is ſought for in it; and ſhall not we be as ready to ſeek a living Chriſt in the Sacrament, as the Women were to ſeek a dead Chriſt in the Sepulchre? Mat. 28. 1. The neglect of it doth ſpeak ſome light thoughts of it. Is it becauſe of the meanneſs of the Elements? we may as well deſpiſe a great Redeemer, becauſe clothed with the infirmities of a mortal Body, as deſpiſe the ſpiritual repreſentations of him, becauſe clothed with the meanneſs of Earthly Elements. God doth always delight to convey great things through mean mediums. Gideon ſhall rout a Midianitiſh Army with Potſheards, with Earthern Pitchers; and the Jaw-Bone of an Aſs ſhall be more ſucceſsful in the hand of Sampſon, than a maſſy Sword in the hand of Goliah. By the weakneſs of the Croſs God redeems the World; by the fooliſhneſs of Preaching he converts a World, and conveys through Earthen Veſſels a treaſure wherewith to enrich his people, and a ſtrength that makes confuſion in the Kingdom of darkneſs; and by theſe Elements, mean in appearance, he doth nouriſh the Believer, ſtill making thoſe Ordinances the Pipes of his inviſible Grace. Or is it for want of a diſpoſition? If there be no Faith at all, the cauſe is ſad; if there be no fitneſs for Heaven, there is no preſent fitneſs to converſe with Chriſt in his Supper. Or is it but a weak Faith? The more need then of a ſtrengthening Ordinance. Would we have a more elevated frame of heart? The way to aſcend to the top of a Pinacle is not to run from the ſteps which lead to it. Who is ſufficient for theſe things? But the more ſpiritually ſenſible we are of our own inſufficiency, the more confidence we may have in the ſufficiency of a Saviour; the more ſenſible we are of our Diſeaſe, the more confident of the ſkill and affection of our Phyſician, and the more we ſhould apply our ſelves to his preſcriptions.

Let us conſider ſome queſtions.

(1.) Will any Believer be guilty of diſobedience to the Author of his Faith? Do this, is a word of Command, Luke 22. 19. Not left ad libitum, 'tis not you may if you will as was ſaid before; but do it in remembrance of me. Do it if you will remember me, I will account you no rememberers of me, unleſs you do it. The Command was given to the Apoſtles but to deliver it to the Church, 1 Cor. 11. 23. For I have receiv'd of the Lord that which alſo I have deliver'd unto you. We muſt obey the Commands given to the Apoſtles, ſo far as they are practicable by us, as well as think to ſhare in the comforts of the Prayer Chriſt put up for us and his Apoſtles, John 17. 20. The influence of what was ſpoken in their preſence extended to all Believers, and the obſervance of what was inſtituted in their preſence is to be regarded by all Believers. God would not only have the Iſraelites cleanſe themſelves, ſelves, but be Circumcis'd and eat the Paſſeover, when they were upon the Borders of Canaan, before he would bleſs them with the Victory, Joſh. 5. 2, 10. God would have them renew Covenant with him in the way of his own appointments, before they ſhould have poſſeſſion of Canaan. Suppoſe there were no benefit to be expected, though every inſtitution of Chriſt is a mark of his love as well as a fruit of his authority, yet doth not the greatneſs of Chriſts love deſerve our tenderneſs of his authority in his Commands? If they had nothing of priviledge but all of duty, love to Chriſt would make us often remember him, and Obedience would make our love chuſe the way of his own ordering, and not ways at our own pleaſure. Deus voluit, is a ſufficient motive, and we cannot free our ſelves from the cenſure of Diſobedience, if we obſerve not his Commands in the ſame manner that he enjoins them, in their circumſtances as well as their ſubſtance.

(2.) Is Chriſt ſo mean a Friend as not to be remembred? The memory of a good Friend ſhould be very precious: Is there any Friend we have in the World can outſtrip him in affection, and deſerve a greater ſhare in our firſt-born thoughts? What was ever more advantagious to us than the death of Chriſt, by whom we have our life? than the Agonies of Chriſt, to which we owe our freedom from the wrath to come? Do we not remember our own benefit in remembring our gracious Benefactor, who bore our ſorrows, that we might enter into his Joy; groan'd under the Curſes due to us, that we might triumph in his Fathers Love, and in his own Glory; who emptied himſelf to fill us, and receiv'd the wrathful ſtrokes to free us; who took our ſins upon himſelf and caſt upon us the robe of his righteouſneſs, bore the load of our tranſgreſſions to enrich us with the treaſures of his merits, endur'd our Death to procure our Life, and hung upon our Croſs to advance us to ſit upon his Throne. Is it not a great unkindneſs to be unwilling frequently to remember ſo cordial and choice a Friend? Beſides, Is it not fit to remember him frequently, who remembers Believers perpetually? He regarded ſuch in his laſt Prayer, he remembers ſuch in Heaven to plead for them, he remembers them under their beſpotting corruptions; ſhall not Believers remember him, who hath laid in his bloud a perfect foundation for their perfect holineſs, and taken poſſeſſion of an Heavenly Glory for their perfect Happineſs? He remembers them that were Enemies, and have too much enmity ſtill; and ſhall not they remember him who is a clear and perfect Friend? He bears their names upon his breaſt, as Aaron did the ten tribes on the Ephod, Exod. 28. 12. and remembers even thoſe who have Crucified him; and ſhall not they remember Chriſt who were never wronged by him? Should we not rejoice to ſee the Rainbow in the Clouds, which is a ſign of Gods ſecuring Covenant againſt a deſtroying Deluge? And ſhall we neglect the ſigns of Gods ſecuring Covenant againſt an over-flowing wrath?

(3.) Why ſhould we not often be in thoſe ways where we may meet with our beſt Friend? Certainly he is as graciouſly preſent in this as in any other Ordinance. He is preſent with us in obſerving every thing which he hath commanded, Mat. 28. 20. and ſhall this be without a more ſpecial preſence, when it was inſtituted for a more ſpecial remembrance of him? He is preſent ſymbolically, as a man by his Picture; he is preſent ſpiritually, the Soul ſees him by Faith, as Abraham ſaw his day at a diſtance, and that with Joy; he is preſent by his efficacy, as the Sun is preſent in the Earth, though many hundred Miles diſtant in its Body. This is my Body. This is my Bloud; as ſure as this is Bread and this is Wine, ſo ſurely by Faith are you partakers of my Body and Bloud in this Ordinance. Can this be ſaid of any other Ordinance? Where is Chriſt ſo particularly preſent, ſo cloſely applyed as in this?

(4.) Have you no Graces that need ſtrengthening? Have we not need of all the means to ſtrengthen that Faith, which we ſhall have all the need of in the hour of Death to keep our Souls from fainting under the ſtroke? Is it not a deſireable thing to have the benefits of Chriſt often applied to us, and our Faith confirm'd? Is all our leanneſs remov'd, that we need no more marrow and fatneſs? Are we ſo provided for Heaven, that we need no more viaticum in our Journey thither? Who would come but ſeldom to his ſtated Meals? He that would faſt one day would ſcarce faſt two but by force. We are yet in a Journey, and we need ſtrength to go forward. We are beſet with Diſeaſes, and we need Medicines to cure us. We are often faint, and we need Cordials to revive us. Are our Souls ſo fully eſtabliſhed, our affections ſo ready at our call, as not to need ſenſible objects ſometimes to raiſe them? A vigorous fancy helpt by the ſight of a Picture mounts to a greater activity, ſo doth a ſpiritual Faith. Can you then too often embrace the Croſs, drink down the Bloud of Chriſt, and put your hands into his Wounds? Is your Faith ſo hearty, that it needs no Cordials; your love ſo hot, that it needs no breath for an higher flame; your hopes ſo certain, that they do not ſometimes reel; and your obedience ſo quick, that it needs no ſpur; and your ſtanding ſo ſecure, that it needs no further ſettlement? 'Tis certain, that as if we would have Faith, we muſt attend upon converting Ordinances; ſo if we would have ſtrength of Faith, we muſt frequent ſtrengthning inſtitutions. How would this Sun ſhining upon our Souls in his own Orb, enrich us with his heat and light, ſuffer nothing to ſtand before it, and put out all thoſe leſſer fires, thoſe fooliſh deſires which aſpire to other things, and weaken the Soul? After the Iſraelites were circumciſed, and had eaten the Paſſeover, then did Chriſt, as Captain of the Lords hoſt, appear to Joſhua to encourage his heart, and ſtrengthen his hands againſt thoſe enemies in Canaan, by which our ſpiritual enemies are repreſented, Joſh. 5. 7, 10, 14. 'Tis by a frequent exerciſe of Faith, according to the methods of Chriſt, that Believers would be as Lions (as Chryſoſtom ſaith) breathing fire terrible to the Devils themſelves. Have you not found your own experience, or at leaſt the experiences of others bear witneſs to this? How often hath the empty Soul been fill'd, the palſie hand cur'd, the thirſty heart ſatisfied, the feeble knees ſtrengthened, a creeping love chang'd its pace, and a cloudy ſoul been brightned? The more believing at a Sacrament, the more vigorous is the Faith afterwards. As in eating corporal food, by the aſſimilation of meat to our ſubſtance by the Chymiſtry of Nature, and converting it into bloud and ſpirits, the body is ſtrengthened; ſo by the feeding upon Chriſt by Faith, the ſoul is ſtrengthened, and Chriſt becomes more and more myſtically incorporate in the Believer, Chriſt in them the hope of glory. Joh. 17. 23. I in them, and thou in me.

(5.) Why will any true Believer gratifie Satan? The motions to hinder thoſe that are gracious, muſt either be from God, or Satan: From God they cannot be, who is no enemy to the Ordinance he hath appointed for them. It cannot be thought that God ſhould decry his own inſtitution, or call back his own invitation, or diſcourage a Believer from the remembrance of his Son in that Ordinance, which hath been enjoyn'd for that end. The Spirit in his motions acts according to the Word, not contrary to it. They muſt then be from the Devil, who is an enemy not to be liſtned to. He endeavours to hinder the Believer from the moſt ſpiritual duties, whereby he may gain the greateſt profit. He kindles our corruptions, ſhoots in his temptations, fills us with ſcruples, exhorts us to omit, defer, any thing to ſtave us off from that which is the ſtrengthening of our Souls, and a weakening of his Kingdom. Swallow not therefore this poyſon, ſpit it out, leſt you pleaſe the Devil, and diſpleaſe the Redeemer. How will the Devil triumph, if he can keep you in a conſtant omiſſion of a known duty? If the frequent attendance be a means to ſtrengthen Grace, the neglects are a means to weaken, and the Devil rejoyces in the decays of Grace, next to preventing any Grace at all. He feeds himſelf with hopes, that at laſt he may make ſuch utterly inſenſible.

6, Why ſhould any Believer deny to pay Chriſt the debt of thankfulneſs for his great love, in that way which he hath appointed? 'Tis a thankſgiving, a thankful remembrance, therefore anciently called the Euchariſt. 'Tis appointed as a Feaſt to rejoyce before God for the benefits we profeſs to enjoy by the death of Chriſt: As the eating of the Sacrifice offer'd to an Idol, was a profeſſion, that all that they had, came from the kindneſs and powerful influence of that Idol. Shall not our Souls be filled with Hoſanna's for the greateſt mercy that can be beſtow'd upon us, viz. a redemption from guilt, death, hell, and the wrath of God? Shall we refuſe a thankful acceptance of that honour to ſit at his Table, and to ſup with our Prince? Would not that perſon be accounted ungrateful, that ſhould delight in the picking of ſtraws, when his King calls him to his preſence?

To conclude. Let the benefits of this Ordinance perſwade every Believer to a frequency in it. They muſt needs be great and deſirable upon a worthy and believing partaking, becauſe the ſin and danger are dreadful in an unworthy approach. If indeed we have no enemies to conquer, no weakneſs to ſtrengthen, no ſin to trouble us, no temptations to ſurround us, no damps to ſmother our aſſurance, no ebbs in our Graces, no totterings in our Faith, no coolings in our Love, no emptineſs to be fill'd, no doubts to be reſolv'd. If we are in Heaven, and are as Angels in aſſumed bodies, then we are lifted above the end and intendment of it; but this is no mans caſe in the world. 'Tis a command; to neglect it therefore is to deſpiſe his Authority; 'tis for our good, to neglect it therefore is to contemn his mercy; his inſtitutions are attended with promiſes, to neglect them is to deny his truth.

WE have handled two Doctrines from the words. There is one more yet behind concerning the Duration of this Ordinance from the laſt clauſe, You ſhew the Lords death till he come.

There is eſpecially a twofold coming of Chriſt mentioned in Scripture.

1. His coming in the Fleſh. 2. His coming to Judgment. Both mentioned Heb. 9. 28. Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many, and he ſhall appear the ſecond time without ſin unto ſalvation. The one was to bear our ſins, the other to glorifie our ſouls; the one to expiate our guilt, the other to preſent us to God without any filth; the one to begin ſalvation, the other to perfect it; the one to ſeal the promiſes, the other to perform them; the one to put an end to the remembrance of ſin by ſubſtituting himſelf as a Sacrifice in the room of the legal ones, whereby there was a remembrance of ſin every year; the other to put an end to the fruit of ſin, afflictions and ſufferings of his people.

'Tis not his coming in the Spirit, which is here meant. This had not conſiſted with the intereſt of Chriſt, the wiſdom of Chriſt, or the end of the Sacrament.

1. Not with the intereſt of Chriſt. Chriſt came in Spirit after his Aſcenſion at the time of the liberal effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles, Acts 2. which was his coming to them, as he had promiſed Joh. 14. 18. I will not leave you comfortleſs, I will come unto you. Would he ſo ſolemnly aſſemble the Apoſtles at ſuch a time, when that wrath which he ſaw marching out againſt him, called for the employment of all his thoughts, and his greateſt care in the management of that work? When it was come to that iſſue, would he neglect his preſent intereſt and buſineſs to ſettle an Ordinance ſo ſhort-liv'd as the ſpace of fifty days, when moſt of that time he intended to comfort them by his perſonal preſence after his Reſurrection? It had not conſiſted with his intereſt at that time to employ himſelf about that which ſhould ſo ſuddenly expire.

2. Nor with the wiſdom of Chriſt. To inſtitute that ſo ſolemnly for his remembrance, that ſhould be of ſo little uſe. It was to remember him in his abſence all the time he ſhould be in his Fathers Kingdom: a greater abſence than that of twelve days muſt be meant; for he was abſent from them only during the time of his lying in the grave, and the time between his Aſcenſion and the deſcent of the Spirit, if by coming here be meant his coming in the effuſion of the Spirit, Act. 1. 3. He was ſeen of them forty days, ſpeaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. (Tis likely he was with one or other of them every day in that ſpace.) Which it is probable were not to be put in execution till the coming of the Spirit, which they were to wait for at Jeruſalem, which was to endue them with power from on high, Luke 24. 49. Acts 1. 8. And though after the deſcent of the Spirit, they continued in breaking of bread, yet not before, but only in prayer and ſupplication (Acts 1. 14.) for the power of the Holy Ghoſt, which was to commiſſion them. And would Chriſt take ſuch care to have a Church before the Fall of the Jewiſh Church, and enable his Apoſtles by his Spirit in ſo miraculous a manner, to ſettle his commands among thoſe that ſhould believe in him, him, and this which is one of the greateſt and moſt in favour to the Church, ſo lately inſtituted, and for the commemoration of the fundamental benefit, to expire juſt after the promulgation of it? That did not ceaſe at the coming of Chriſt in the Spirit, which we have no evidence that it was put in practice from the time of the firſt inſtitution till the coming of the Spirit. Did it conſiſt with the wiſdom of our Lord to give a command which was never to be practis'd?

3. Now with the end of the Supper. It was to be done in remembrance. How could they in ſo ſhort a time forget him, in whoſe hands and ſides they had ſeen the marks of the Nails and Spear? How could they forget him whoſe Death they had ſeen, and whom they had enjoy'd again, by a miraculous Reſurrection? Beſides, the ſpirit was come, and ſo this Ordinance ceas'd before Paul writ to the Corinthians, and he who had been ſo vehement an oppoſer of an abrogated Ceremonial Law, would never have reſtor'd an abrogated inſtitution.

Nor is this coming again to be underſtood of the Spirit's coming to a particular perſon. Then.

(1.) As ſoon as ever men come to be fit for this Ordinance, they muſt wave it. If the coming of Chriſt here ſpoken of, be his coming in ſpirit to a Soul; as ſoon as ever he is come in ſpirit, they ought not to obſerve it, becauſe they would break the Command which is limited to ſuch a time, the time of his coming. The ſpirit comes in the work of Regeneration, in the work of Faith; to what purpoſe did Chriſt inſtitute this, if the only Subjects capable of it were ipſo facto depriv'd of it, when they were firſt in a capacity for it? None receives good from this Ordinance, but thoſe that have Faith. Indeed men in a Croud may preſs upon Chriſt, and touch him; yet only that perſon that touches his Garments, and takes the Elements by Faith, receives virtue from him. What a madneſs is it to feed a dead man; and if he ſhould be reſtor'd to life, to deprive him of the means and nouriſhment to preſerve that life?

(2.) It would then be inſtituted only for the refuſe of the World. For ſuch as had no mind to remember him, nor could remember him with any affection to him, or comfort to themſelves, ſince they were alienated from him by their Unbelief. We cannot ſuppoſe that Chriſt that night wherein he was betray'd, ſhould take care only of his Enemies. He pray'd for his Diſciples, not for the World, he gives the Supper to them, and in them as the foundation of the Church, to all that were to believe in him, not to the World. 'Tis therefore the ſecond coming of Chriſt to judgment, that is here meant; when he comes in perfect majeſty to beſtow a perfect Glory. When he ſhall come in that manner as he was taken up into heaven, Acts 1. 11. When the remembrance of his Death ſhall be ſwallow'd up in the Viſion of his perſon, and fruition of the ripe and compleat fruit of his ſufferings. In the mean time it is a ſtanding memorial of the ſufferings of our Saviour.

The Doctrine then is.

Doct. The Lords Supper is a laſting and continuing inſtitution, not to be put down at the pleaſure of any men. It will not be repeal'd till Chriſt come. Another Goſpel is not to be expected, Galat. 1. 6, 7, &c. and therefore while the Goſpel endures, the Appendixes, the inſtitutions annext to it will endure. The times of the Goſpel are called often in Scripture the laſt days, no other diſpenſation is to ſupersede it, and the Ordinances in it are immovable things, not to be ſhaken, till Chriſt comes. He is not yet come, the inſtitutions therefore he tranſmitted to us by the Apoſtles, are ſtill of uſe. Nothing can put a period to them, but the coming of Chriſt, which no man can ſay is yet accompliſht. The Ordinances of Chriſt are like the Pillar of Fire, and the Cloud which guided the Iſraelites in their Journey through the Wilderneſs, and did not withdraw from them, till they enter'd into Canaan. When the Church ſhall be perfected, when Chriſt ſhall appear to put the Crown upon the Head of the glorified Church, and bring it into the promis'd Inheritance, the Clouds of Ordinances will vaniſh, there will be no more need of them, the ends of them will be compleated; there will be no weak Grace to need ſtrengthening, nor any indwelling ſin to need mortification. In the reformation of the Church, propheſied of in Revel. 21. 3. The Tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them. The Ordinances are not to be aboliſht; while

God hath a Tabernacle among men, he will have a worſhip, an inſtituted worſhip to help us in our natural worſhip. (The tie of homage the Creature owes to God, cannot be unlooſed.) If a worſhip, then ſome modes and rites of worſhip. The Tabernacle was the place of worſhip; this cannot be meant of a ſtate of glory in Heaven, becauſe, v. 1. 'tis a new Jeruſalem which comes down from heaven, a ſtate diſtinguiſht from the ſtate of glory in Heaven. In the time of the Reformation of the Church, which is there promiſed, the Lamb is ſaid to be the light of the Church, Rev. 21. 23. The Lamb is the light thereof. Chriſt is always call'd a Lamb in alluſion to the Paſchal Lamb, and in that title his death, as a Sacrifice, is always included. If the Lamb, as a dying Sacrifice, be the light of the City in that glorious ſtate which the Church doth expect in a full and thorow Reformation, the Memorials of him as a Lamb, and ſo the Memorials of his Death, will be preſerved till Earth give place to Heaven. And whereas it is ſaid v. 22. There ſhall be no Temple, i. e. no humane and legal Ceremonies, but pure Ordinances. And the City had no need of the Sun and of the Moon to ſhine in it.

* Grot. in loc. * Men ſhall not ſerve God according to the Equinoxes, and the courſe of the Moon, as the Jews had their Paſſeover about the Vernal Æquinox in March, and the obſervation of the New Moons, to ſhow to them the times of Worſhip. There ſhall be no earthly conſtitutions, inventions of man, any thing that ſmells of the legal Ceremonies; but God ſhall be glorious in his own inſtitutions, and the Lamb ſhall be the λύχνος, the candle of it; the ſimple inſtitutions of Chriſt ſhall be the light of the Church; all thoſe Ordinances, which ſignifie to us the love of the Lamb, the death of the Lamb, the benefits by that death, ſhall be kept up in purity and vigour. In the reformation of the Church, the Ordinances ſhall no more ceaſe than they did in the ſecond Temple, which was a reformed Church after their captivity in Babylon; and ſo reform'd, that they never ran again to Idolatry. But the Ordinances of God continued in the Temple till the coming of the Meſſiah to tabernacle among men; ſo in the reformation from the Idolatries and corruptions of Antichriſt, which will be as it were the erection of a ſecond Temple, the Ordinances ſhall continue till the coming of Chriſt to Judgment. Chriſt intimates the continuation of this Ordinance in the Church till the conſummation of all things, and the inveſting his people with the glory he had promiſed them, in his words after the inſtitution of it, Mat. 26. 29. I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, till I drink it new with you in my Fathers kingdom; which he ſpeaks to ſhow the nearneſs of his death, and to comfort them under the apprehenſions of it, aſſuring them they ſhould be with him in his Fathers Kingdom, partakers of his Glory. It alſo implies, that no other inſtitution was to intervene between that time, and their being with him in his Fathers Kingdom. The communication of himſelf ſhould then be in a new manner. But till that time they muſt not expect any converſe with him, but in thoſe ways he had ſetled. The nearer Chriſts coming is, the more will his Ordinances be in practice. When the Iſraelites were upon entring into Canaan, Circumciſion and the Paſſeover were celebrated, which had been omitted all the time of their wilderneſs-condition.

1. All the Ordinances of Chriſt are to continue in his Church, then certainly this. The inſtitutions of Chriſt in the Goſpel are ſaid to be immoveable, ſuch as cannot be ſhaken, Heb. 12. 26,27. He hath promiſed, ſaying, Yet once more I ſhake not the earth only, but the heavens. And this word, yet once more, ſignifies the removing of things that are ſhaken as of things that are made, that thoſe things which cannot be ſhaken, may remain. Yet once more, Hag. 2. 6. For it is taken out of that place, the Apoſtle following the Septuagint Tranſlation. Once more ſuppoſeth, that that time being paſt, there ſhould be no more change of Laws in the Church. The old inſtitutions under the Law are called τὰ σαλευόμενα, things that are ſhaken, or fluctuating, uncertain. The Evangelical inſtitutions are oppoſed to thoſe, as things that cannot be ſhaken, τὰ μὴ σαλευόμενα. Once more, clearly intimates, that the Ordinances introduced by the Meſſiah, ſhould be unalterable, as long as the Scene of the World, Heaven and Earth, endures. He would change but one time, not many; the new Laws of the Goſpel will not be chang'd by Gods authority, but be left in the ſame ſtate wherein they were eſtabliſhed by the Meſſiah, and not be ſubject to change, as the legal Adminiſtration was. The order order appointed by Moſes, was to be ſhaken, and give place to a better Adminiſtration; but the order ſetled by the Son of God, is to ſtand as firm as a mountain of Braſs, as the foundations of the Earth, or the arch of Heaven. If not ſhaken by God, no reaſon they ſhould be ſhaken by man. The faith is ſaid to be once delivered to the Saints, Jude 3. Once, i. e. Unalterably the doctrine of Faith is deliver'd. As God is ſaid Once to ſwear by his holineſs, Pſal. 89. 36. Once for all, never to be alter'd. The doctrine of Faith and inſtitutions of the Goſpel, are monuments of Gods grace, not to be demoliſht or defac'd, till God puts a Period to the World, and wraps up the perſons of all his Elect in the boſom of Chriſt. 'Tis his injunction to his Apoſtles, when he commiſſioned them, to teach men to obſerve all things that he had commanded them; and he promiſeth his preſence with them in ſo doing to the end of the world, Mat. 28. 20. Teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world. The things Chriſt hath commanded are then to be obſerv'd till the end of the world; for he promiſeth his preſence with them to the end of the world in the teaching of thoſe things. The things therefore that Chriſt hath commanded, muſt be taught. If they be not, no men can have any comfortable hopes of the preſence of Chriſt with them. If Chriſt will have a Miniſtry to the end of the world, he will have a Church to the end of the world. If a Church, which is the Seat of Ordinances, then Ordinances to the end of the world. If Miniſters, who are the ſtewards of the myſteries of God, then Myſteries there are to be diſpenſed to the end of the world. Obſerve the univerſality of the ſubject twice repeated, All things and whatſoever I have commanded you. Every thing that Chriſt hath commanded muſt be taught; every thing therefore that Chriſt hath commanded muſt endure. Obſerve alſo that the extent of the duration is repeated twice too, Always, even to the end of the world; it includes alſo the extent of the duration of the things commanded, becauſe his preſence is promiſed to them in the teaching of whatſoever he commanded. The Ordinances therefore of Chriſt are to be perpetually obſerved: And they are thoſe Evangelical diſpenſations which are here commanded to be taught and obſerved, becauſe they are thoſe which Chriſt, as Mediator, hath appointed; which I have commanded; I that have power given me in Heaven and Earth; for that is the ground of this command, Mat. 28. 18. All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth, go ye therefore and teach all nations. And leſt any ſhould take upon them to determine the time of their continuance, becauſe the firſt word always, is πάσας τας ἡμέρας· He explains what he meant by it, and adds, Even to the end of the world. So that it is not meant to the end of the Jewiſh State, but the end of the frame of Heaven and Earth. The preſence of Chriſt in the way of his Ordinances is here promiſed; Chriſt will be preſent with them after the end of the world, but in another manner of preſence than now; a ſpecial preſence here in the weakneſs of Ordinances, a glorious preſence hereafter in the fulneſs of Viſion. Obſerve alſo, If Miniſters cannot promiſe themſelves the preſence of Chriſt, but in teaching all things whatſoever Chriſt hath commanded, other men cannot promiſe themſelves the preſence of Chriſt with them, but in obſerving all things whatſoever Chriſt hath commanded; and this inſtitution is one of thoſe all things. And ſince the Apoſtles did not live to the end of the world, this promiſe looks further than the perſons of the Apoſtles; it looks to the Church which they ſhould ſettle in ſuch order as he had appointed, founded upon ſuch doctrine, and obſerving ſuch inſtitutions, according to his command; he would be with that Church that ſhould obſerve their doctrine, and preſerve it ſucceſſively to the end of the world. As in his prayer, Joh. 17. 20. he did not only pray for the Apoſtles then with him, ſo he doth not promiſe this only to the Apoſtles then with him, but to the Church. All the inſtitutions ſetled in the Jewiſh Church are often ſaid to be Ordinances for ever, i. e. during that Diſpenſation, till God ſhould give them their Paſs-port and ſend them away. But the Goſpel-ordinances are to be in force till the concluſion of all things in the world.

2. Sacraments were thought by God needful for men in all their ſeveral ſtates in the world. Sacraments were judged neceſſary by God in innocent Nature. The Tree of Life had a ſacramental ſignification of life upon Adams obedience. Much more in lapſed nature have we need of thoſe ſenſible things for the ſupport of our Faith in the Promiſes of God. After the Fall there were various inſtitutions brought in by degrees. Adam, and Abel, and Noah, had their Sacrifices as ſignificant of the Meſſiah promiſed to them, and expected by them. Abraham had an addition of Circumciſion. The Paſſeover and other rights were added under Moſes. The Meſſiah takes away them and introduceth others, which are to continue, ſince they are the laſt days wherein God hath ſpoken to us by his Son, Heb. 1. 1. and are not to be thruſt out by any other diſpenſation. Not but theſe Sacraments under the Goſpel are changeable in their own nature, if it ſeem agreeable to the good pleaſure of God. * For there is a difference between natural Laws and poſitive Laws; natural Laws do not proceed meerly from the will of the Law-giver, poſitive do. Thoſe things which are evil in their own nature, are not evil becauſe they are prohibited by the will of God, but becauſe they are contrary to a rational Creature as rational; ſo that God cannot diſpenſe with them, for then he would diſpenſe with evil as evil, and ſo would deny his own righteouſneſs, if he ſhould allow that which is unjuſt in its own nature. But for poſitive Laws which are not innate in Nature, or Grace, but proceed from the will and authority of God ſolely, they may be chang'd by the will of the Law-giver: ſo the Ceremonial Law was chang'd, becauſe it was neither good nor evil in it ſelf, but had its authority ſolely from the will of God. But the Moral Law cannot be chang'd, becauſe the duties it enjoins, are naturally good in themſelves; and the things it prohibits, are evil in themſelves; and this God cannot diſpenſe with; for then he ſhould call good evil, and evil good. But God hath declared he will never change theſe. The end of all Ordinances was to bring the Worſhippers to real Holineſs, which is the perfection of the Soul; in innocency, to preſerve men in it; in lapſed nature, to diſcover the neceſſity of it, and the way to it; and therefore they muſt be obſerv'd under every diſpenſation for that end for which they were inſtituted. Now if theſe Rudiments proportion'd to the Jewiſh Infancy were not to be violated by them under the ſevere penalty of the Souls being cut off from among the people (which the Jews underſtand of a cutting off by the hand of God) ſure the more noble inſtitutions of the Goſpel ſetled by the Redeemer, being clearer repreſentations of the love he hath ſhown to us, and the benefits we may expect from him, ſtand more ſtable, and are big with greater motives to perſwade men to the uſe of them, than thoſe under the Law; which were grievous in regard of their multitude and chargeableneſs, and obſcure in regard of the diſtance of the thing ſignified by them. They may ſeem to have had more reaſon to deſpiſe the inſtitutions in thoſe ſeveral Ages, than we to ſlight the Evangelical Ordinances, ſince they are dignified by the more excellent diſpenſation they are annext unto. And God always had ſome Conduit-pipes through which to pour out the bleſſings of his Grace upon the Souls of his Creatures.

* Rivet in Geneſ. Exercit. 13. p. 54.

3. All laws once ſetled are of force, till they be repeal'd by that authority which did enact them. Chriſt as Lord of the Church hath power to appoint inſtitutions, and none but he hath power to remove them, and even he hath not power to remove them by any act but by that of his coming. Chriſt hath ſetled this till he comes, ſince his word is paſt, nothing but his coming can repeal it. His Command is therefore in force, and ought to be obſerved, and it is in force till he comes, ſo that if an Angel from Heaven ſhould bring us word of a repeal, we ought not to believe him, becauſe Chriſt is not come, to which Period of time it is to endure. Had it not been a high preſumption for any to aboliſh the Ceremonial Law among the Jews, till the promiſed ſeed was come, which was the Period of its duration? Galat. 3. 19. And is it not as high a preſumption to look upon Goſpel inſtitutions as null, before the time appointed for the coming of Chriſt to put an end to this Scene of things, be fullfilled? But doth not every man who looks upon this, or any other Ordinance, as out of date, aſſume the power of abrogating, as much as in him lies, the Laws of Chriſt? 'Tis the Obedience we owe our Lord, not to entrench upon his Prerogative in the abrogation of his Laws, any more than to uſurp the authority of enacting any. 'Tis enough it is his Law, and while it is ſo, we ought to obſerve it, till he gives us a diſmiſs by giving that a repeal. All Ordinances have their Sanction and eſtabliſhment from Chriſts Authority. The firſt

Patriarchs

Patriarchs, Adam and Noah, liv'd without Circumcision, Abraham without the Laws of Moses. But had God Commanded the one to be Circumcised, as he Commanded Abraham and his Posterity, and enjoin'd the other to observe the legal Institutions, was his authority to be slighted? Had they not been as much bound to use them as the Israelites were? God never gave power to any man to change his Ordinances, or to dispense with them. The Passeover continued, till God superseded it by another institution. Circumcision, till God chang'd it into a more easy. The Supper on Earth must hold by Christs Authority, till it be chang'd into the Marriage Supper of the Lamb, and never-fading delights in Heaven. It must hold till Earth be left for Heaven, Elements for substance and the person they represent. Who can upon a better account challenge an exemption from the observance of positive institutions than our Saviour, who had no need of them? Yet how observant was he of them, because they were established by divine authority: So that he calls his submitting to be baptiz'd of John a a fullfilling of righteousness, Mat. 3. 15. If therefore we do acknowledge that Christ is come, and that he will come again, and believingly look for this coming of Christ, we ought to acknowledge it by such testimonies as he hath appointed.

4. The Covenant is perpetual, and therefore the seals are perpetual. * The Covenant indeed God made with Abraham and the Israelites, was the same Covenant, and perpetual in regard of the substance of it; for God promis'd to be their God, and that they should be his People, and to give them eternal Life, whereof Canaan was a Type. But because the Mediator, in whom this Covenant had its confirmation, was not yet exhibited, therefore it was not perpetual in regard of the accessories and those institutions which were appointed for the confirmation of their Faith in it; as the Priesthood, Sacrifices and Sacraments, which could not remain, but must be abolisht at the coming of the Mediator, the Band of the Covenant. The rites belonging to that were but shadows of things to come; and when Christ whom they shadow'd, came, the shadows must necessarily pass away, and some others be instituted in the room of them. When the Aaronical Priesthood fell, their Sacraments fell with it, and the Priesthood being chang'd the Law is chang'd also. But Christ being a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedeck, hath an unchangeable Priesthood, Heb. 7. 24. And therefore the Seal and Laws belonging to that Priesthood are unchangeable, and will continue to the end of the World. In the Supper God doth witness, that he doth give us the flesh of Christ, and Bloud of Christ, and unite us to him, and incorporate us with him: And on our parts, by the receiving them, we witness our embracing Gods favour, and return to him, and Faith in him, and Obedience to his Law. Since there is no more exhibition of him to be expected in order to Eternal Life, but God hath sum'd up all his will in Christ, setled him an Everlasting Priest, these Seals will endure as long as there is any exercise of that Office of Priest, which will be till his second coming; wherein all his Elect shall be perfected, and no more need of Sacrifice or Intercession. If it were a Type of something to come, when the substance is come the shadow should be done away: But it is a memorial of what is past, and no other administration is to succeed in the room of Christ, and therefore it is to be continued till his coming, and resigning all to his Father.

* Zanch. in Hos. 2. 9. p. 44, 45, 46.

5. The state wherein we are, requires the continuance of it, and of other Ordinances.

1. In regard of our constant decays. Our Bodies would moulder to dust, were they not daily nourished; and is there not as much need of nourishment for our Souls? Our Souls need such institutions, as well as our Bodies need food. A man may expect as well to grow without food, or that his Vine should bring forth Fruit without Sun, and Rain, and dressing, as that while he is in the World, he should thrive in Grace, that doth not take in the fructifying showers of Christ. Our sin is strugling, and needs something to conquer it; our Faith is staggering, and needs something to confirm it; the sin that clogs us must be remov'd; the Grace that burns dim must be brightned. We need pardon, here we may behold it seal'd; we need straiter Union to Christ, here it is promoted. The Conjunction ction between Chriſt and a believing Soul, is as cloſe as between us and the Bread we eat, the Wine we drink. There is need while we are in the wilderneſs of this world, to be fed with Manna; when Canaan is poſſeſt, this will ceaſe. We have a journey to go, a battel to fight. Is it not neceſſary we ſhould, with Jonathan, take ſome honey by the way to recruit our ſpirits? God always convey'd his grace by ſome pipes, and theſe he hath appointed in the times of the Goſpel.

(2.) In reſpect of our weakneſs. Some intercourſe there muſt be between God and us, if we be happy. Immediately we cannot have it; ſuch communications are reſerved for Heaven; theſe are ſhadows fitted to the weakneſſes and dimneſs of our ſenſe. We could not look ſteadily upon Chriſts glorified body; but we may behold him in a Sacrament as in a glaſs without twinkling. The object is not primarily and immediately preſented to our eye; but by the mediation of a glaſs we have ſome broken beams, ſome glances of his preſence. And in thoſe ſhadows we may ſee Chriſt crucified before our eyes, embrace him in our arms, and carry him in our hearts. Our ſtate muſt be chang'd from Earth to Heaven, before Sacraments can well be aboliſht. If the Sacraments be neceſſary as Seals to confirm the truth of the Covenant to us, as pledges of Chriſts love and his conducting preſence, and as inſtruments to convey ſtrength, vigour, and all the bleſſings of the Covenant to the heart, they are therefore needful till the doubting and ſtaggerings of the Soul ſhall be remov'd by full viſion, and till we are got to the top of the mount of bleſſing.

Uſe.

1. Chriſt will always have a Church in the World. A Church is the Seat of Ordinances. Priviledges conferr'd by Charter ſuppoſe a Corporation. If Chriſt hath left a ſtanding Legacy, there ſhall be ſome perſons in the world to whom it ſhall be paid. 'Tis his Royal Prerogative to appoint them. He will not be a Titular King without a Kingdom, without Subjects, Chriſt will maintain his intereſt. And ſince he hath eſtabliſht his Ordinances till he come, he will have a generation to ſerve him in the obſervance of them till he come. The Church and Ordinances cannot conſtantly be ſeparated, though for a time they may; as the Iſraelites had not Circumciſion in the Wilderneſs, and the Paſſeover alſo was omitted, but renewed by them before their entrance into Canaan, yet it will not follow from hence, that Ordinances muſt always continue with us. They may be taken from a particular Church, though not from the Catholick Church. God may have a Church in the world, when he hath it not in this or that particular Nation. Our day may be turn'd into a black night. Our Manna may not always fall. God ſometimes takes away his Ordinances from a people to pull down the houſe, and pluck a people up by the roots, 2 Chron. 7. 20. Sometimes he takes away his influences from them. Urim and Thummim may continue, but he will not anſwer Saul by them; the houſe may ſtand, but darkneſs may fill it when the glory of God departs: though there be a Temple and Sacrifices, yet but the huſks of Ordinances only.

2. 'Tis in no mans power to add to or detract from Chriſts inſtitutions. Not a pin in the Temple he will have alter'd, till he gives order. God is a jealous God, and careful of his Soveraignty. 'Tis not for any inferiour perſon to alter the ſtamp and impreſſion the Prince commands. None can coin Ordinances but Chriſt, and till he call them in, they ought to be current among us.

3. See Chriſts love and bounty. Chriſt would not leave his people without a durable Legacy. As Chriſt prayed for all that were to believe, ſo he provides for them. The Apoſtles were not only to have the benefit, but all. He ſpreads a ſtanding Table for his people before he enters into his purchaſed Glory, provides to feed them till he comes to take them home to himſelf. He intruſted it not to others, leaves it not to the Apoſtles to appoint what they pleaſed; but writes the Bill of Fare himſelf, and directs what diſhes we were to feed on till his return.

4. This Ordinance muſt not be contemned. The Paſſeover was to be obſerved, much more the Supper ſetled by Chriſt. 'Tis to continue till his ſecond coming. Is Chriſt yet come? Doth not the Creation yet groan under vanity, doth not the Heaven and the Earth look with their old aſpect? Have they yet put on new apparel? Doth not the Sun run its ancient courſe? Are there yet the neareſt Signs of his ſecond coming? Then no ſigns of the ceſſation of his inſtitutions. All Commands muſt be kept till the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. 6. 14. Certainly then this that is ſo nobly circumſtantiated. Let not any man think himſelf above it upon a conceit of a greater meaſure of the ſpirit. 'Tis an impiety to pretend the Spirit of Chriſt can overthrow the inſtitutions of Chriſt, which are to have the ſame duration in the World with the influence of the Spirit; to pretend that Spirit, whoſe office it is to bring the things of Chriſt to remembrance, to overthrow a grand memorial of him, contrary to the deſign of his miſſion; this is to ſet Chriſt and his ſpirit at variance. To deſpiſe propheſyings, is to quench the ſpirit, 1 Theſ. 5. 19, 20. Will not the deſpiſing a great Ordinance of Chriſt, be attended with the ſame dreadful effect? * The Spirit doth not do all things in us without means, but directs us how to uſe the means, as he did Solomon to build the Houſe. He that contemns it, after ſo poſitive a Command of remembring him this way till he comes, regards little Chriſts Authority, and preſumes himſelf wiſer than Chriſt; as if he could have given him directions how to have ſetled his Church in a better method. Is it not a great ingratitude to God, to deſpiſe what he commands as a Priviledge? Were not the Apoſtles men of an extraordinary meaſure of the ſpirit, becauſe of their extraordinary employments? and did they not exerciſe themſelves in the inſtitutions of Chriſt? How have many proceeded from the ſlighting of Chriſts Inſtitutions, to the denying the authority of his word; a ſlighting Chriſt himſelf Crucified at Jeruſalem, to ſet up an imaginary Chriſt within them?

* Holinſworth of the Spirit, p. 42.

5. 'Tis a ſtanding Ordinance till he come, no longer. The happineſs of Believers is great in attendance on the inſtitutions of Chriſt, but greater afterwards. 'Tis then, there will be a full ſight of that which is now in dark reſemblances. 'Tis then, Believers ſhall ſee the original Copy of this Picture. 'Tis but till he come, he will not always have his people ſubject to Ordinances, or ſhow himſelf in a Glaſs, but face to face. Then muſt this deputed light give place to a greater; then muſt theſe ſhadows fly away when the Sun appears. 'Tis a priviledge to ſit with him at his Table here, but a greater to drink of the Fruit of the Vine, new with him in the Kingdom of his Father.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE Of the Subjects of the LORDS SUPPER.

1 Cor. 11. 28, 29.

But let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eats and drinks unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lords body.

HAving diſcourſed of v. 26. I now proceed to thoſe which I have read. The ſubſtance of v. 27. will come in in handling v. 29. where the Apoſtle mentions the greatneſs of the puniſhment of unworthy receiving: As v. 26, 27. he had ſpoken of the greatneſs of the ſin. Something we inſiſted on the laſt day in the diſcovery of the ſinfulneſs of Unbelief, and more will upon the ſame ſubject be coincident with what might be ſpoken in this caſe. The Apoſtle here exhorts the Corinthians to a worthy participation of that great Ordinance of the Lords Supper; and (1.) lays down the rule of ſelf-examination before their approach, that they might not contract ſo great a guilt as that of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt. But if he would not be guilty of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, let him examine himſelf. (2.) The manner of participation: So let him eat, and ſo let him drink. (3.) He backs and enforceth it with a reaſon: For he that eats and drinks unworthily, eats and drinks his own damnation. A great danger is incurr'd by the neglect of this manner of proceeding.

* Eſſium.

Let a man, ἄνθρωπος ἑαυτόν.] An * Hebraiſm for every man. The Apoſtle ſpeaks it, ſaith Grotius, in regard of the diſorders which were in the Corinthian Church in matter of Diſcipline. Do not believe, becauſe no cenſures are paſt upon you, and the foundations of Government are razed up in your Church, that therefore you ſhall eſcape puniſhment for the contempt of thoſe Myſteries. No, God requires a worthy receiving, and will puniſh an unworthy one. So that it is an univerſal duty upon every Chriſtian that deſires to approach the Lords Table, to ſet upon a ſerious examination of his heart and life, which the excellency of the Myſtery in its own nature requires; an excellent Ordinance requires a peculiar preparation. Every man, not every man in the world, but every man in the Church; not every Heathen, but every man that pretends a right to the Supper.

Examine himſelf, δοκιμαζέτω.] Some underſtand the word of an artificial examination. As Goldſmiths try Metals by the Touchſtone, to diſcern between what is true Gold and Silver, and what is counterfeit. But it is rather to be underſtood of a judicial tryal, a tryal of matter of fact, a tryal of ſtate, a tryal of graces.

1. A tryal of Grace, whether it be inherent or no. 'Tis a ſhowing the death of Chriſt, there muſt be therefore a ſearch, whether thoſe graces which ſuit the death of Chriſt, and anſwer to the ends of it, be in the ſubject, as repentance, faith, love to God and to our Neighbour; whether there be, not a Legal, but Evangelical worthineſs and a ſuitableneſs between the Maſter of the Feaſt and the Gueſt; whether the heart and life agree with the precepts of Chriſt; what ſtamp of the Spirit upon the Soul and converſation.

2. A tryal of the ſtate, wherein thoſe Graces are. Since the Supper is not worthily receiv'd, but by an exerciſe of repentance, faith and love; 'tis neceſſary to inquire into the ſtate of thoſe Graces, and their vigour or languor in the Soul, that they may be excited to manifeſt themſelves in a ſuitable carriage to the Maſter of the Feaſt, and the grandeur of the Ordinance we are to attend upon.

By this are excluded from this Ordinance,

1. All perſons uncapable of performing this antecedent Duty. Either in regard of natural inability; As children, infants, who though anciently in the times of Auſtin, were admitted to this Ordinance, yet againſt the rule of the Apoſtle; becauſe by reaſon of the imperfection of their age, they were not capable of performing this neceſſary duty which was to precede. As children are not the ſubjects recipient of the Supper, becauſe they are not riſen to a ſuitable degree of underſtanding; ſo neither are mad men, becauſe they have loſt that underſtanding they had, and the great Myſteries of Religion muſt not be expos'd to contempt. And in regard of a negligent inability, as ignorant perſons, who neglect the means of knowledge, or improve them not to furniſh themſelves with a ſufficient ſtock of knowledge to this end; ſo a man grown in age may be a child in underſtanding, and upon the ſame account is as uncapable as a child of this Ordinance; men therefore are unfit to come without a diſtinct knowledge of the doctrine of the Goſpel.

2. All perſons who cannot find upon examination any thing of a Divine ſtamp upon them in the loweſt degree. Such are all unrenewed men, who have not one breathing in their Souls, nor one breath of ſmoak and gracious deſire towards Chriſt in their hearts. And conſequently all ſcandalous perſons in life, who are as uncapable by their ſpiritual madneſs and contracted vicious habits, as men that are mad naturally by a diſtemper of their brain. This tryal is for the finding fit qualifications for this Ordinance, τι δοκιμον, ſomething found and worthy, which ſuch perſons cannot upon examination find.

This command of ſelf-examination evidenceth to us,

1. That a Chriſtian may come to the knowledge of his ſtate in Grace: Otherwiſe it would be wholly fruitleſs to examine our ſelves. If we may know by the want of ſaving conditions, that we are in a ſtate of Nature; we may know by the preſence of them, that we are in a ſtate of Grace.

2. No neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion; To tell all the ſecrets of the life to a Prieſt.

So let a man eat of this bread, and drink of this cup.] So, not otherwiſe, 'tis a hedge planted againſt every intruſion So not without examination, and a fitneſs upon it. 'Tis not an Ordinance appointed for every man. There is a manifeſt diſtinction between perſons capable of the Word, and capable of the Supper. Preaching is to be to every creature, every rational creature, Mark 16. 15, 16. Unbelievers are capable of the Word, Believers only of the Supper. The one is to bring men into the family, the other to nourith them after their entrance. If any man find himſelf in a ſtate of death, let him repent, believe, reſolve a new and ſerious life, and ſo let him come, not elſe; for without thoſe he can receive no fruit of ſpiritual Grace in this Ordinance.

So let him eat, ſo let him drink.] * The Apoſtle here obviates an errour crept into the Romiſh Church, the taking away the Cup, a cuſtom unknown in the pureſt and primitive times of Chriſtianity. Let him eat and drink, ſaith the Apoſtle; Let him eat, but not drink, ſaith the Church of Rome. How ſoundly doth the Romiſh Church accord with the Primitive Church! Drink ye all of this, ſaith Chriſt, Mat. 26. 27. Let the people not touch the Cup, ſaith Rome. How valid with them is the Authority of that Chriſt they profeſs to be the Son of God, and the ſupreme Head of the Church! The Apoſtle, ſaith Eſtius, commands that none ſhould partake without Examination; but doth not command that every one ſhould drink. I anſwer, either it is a Command, or a Permiſſion. It ſeems to be a Command. As the Apoſtle commands the ſelf-tryal, ſo he commands the end of that tryal, which is drinking the Cup as well as eating the Bread. If he commands the tryal, he commands much more the participation, becauſe in enjoining the means, he enjoins the end. We are bound to the uſe of means only in order to the end of thoſe means. If the Apoſtle commands the eating the Bread, he commands alſo the partaking of the Cup. The word ſo, &c. being Grammatically to be applyed to both. It would be ridiculous to think that the Apoſtles Language was in this ſtrain. Let a man examine himſelf, and if he finds himſelf fit for this myſtery, let him chuſe whether he will either eat or drink. He may do one or both if he will, or he may let it alone if he will. Who would dare to put ſuch a ſenſe upon the Apoſtles words? If let be a word of Command in the former Sentence, 'tis no leſs in the latter. If therefore he commands Examination as a means, he commands Communion as the end; and Communion much more, ſince the end is nobler than the means, and the means deſirable for the ſake of the end. But if it be a permiſſion of the Apoſtle (for that it muſt be at leaſt in the judgment of any man.) That every one finding himſelf fit upon a tryal, may drink of the Cup as well as eat of the Bread; what power on Earth ſhould deny that, which the inſpir'd Apoſtle, and great Doctor of the Gentiles permits? What Pope or Councils have Authority to deprive any Chriſtian of that, which the Founder of the Gentile Church hath upon Record allow'd unto them? What reaſon can be alledg'd that it is not as proper for the Church now, as it was for the Church of the Corinthians? It was of uſe many Centuries after the Apoſtles times, and is practiſed in all Churches but that of Rome, wherein the denial of the Cup was introduc'd about two hundred ſixty odd years ago. What a bleſſing do we enjoy, to be freed from the Antichriſtian Yoke, and enjoy thoſe priviledges, which the wickedneſs of men would deprive us of!

Bread and Cup] The Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation was not then known in the Church. * The Apoſtle calls it Bread and Cup three ſeveral times, v. 26, 27, 28. Our reaſon, our ſence, our ſight, our taſt informs us it is Bread and Wine. The Papiſts tell us againſt reaſon and ſenſe, that it is not Bread, though it have the colour and taſt of Bread, but it is really the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt; 'tis chang'd and tranſmuted into his Body and Bloud. 'Tis indeed a ſign of the Body of Chriſt, a memorial of his broken Crucified Body, and of his Bloud ſhed. The Water in Baptiſm repreſents the bloud of Chriſt for the waſhing the Soul, as the Wine doth his Bloud for the nouriſhment and comforting the Soul; can any man ſay againſt his ſenſe, that it is not truly Water? The Church is called the body of Chriſt, Eph. 1. 22, 23. But have not thoſe Men and Women that make up the Church, diſtinct perſons from the perſon of Chriſt, diſtinct ſubſtances from the Body of Chriſt? Are they upon their Union to Chriſt as his Members chang'd into the nature of Chriſt, and corporeally his Members, as his Hands, and Feet, and Fingers were his upon the Earth, and are his now in Heaven? Why ſhould the Apoſtle call it ſo often Bread, if it were not Bread, if the nature and ſubſtance of it were chang'd into another ſubſtance? The Scripture gives both the names of Bread and Wine, and the Body and Bloud of Chriſt to the Elements; they cannot be both properly; it cannot be Bread properly, and the Body of Chriſt properly; one therefore muſt be figuratively underſtood. Our ſenſe tells us, and the Apoſtle informs us, that it is Bread, therefore it is call'd the Body of Chriſt by a Figure, ſince it hath nothing of the qualities of the fleſh but the eſſential qualities of Bread. Beſides, had it been properly the Body of Chriſt, the Apoſtle had diſcours'd far below his intention, which was to correct the irreverence of the Corinthians in this Ordinance, and to recommend to them the ſober and venerable uſe of it. He had neglected the main argument to enforce his main deſign, had it been properly the Body of Chriſt, which would have made their irreverence more unreaſonable, and of the higheſt guilt imaginable. He had been imprudent to have neglected acquainting them, that this was the ſubſtance of the Body of Chriſt, his very fleſh and Bloud, and had been unfaithful in his truſt, and ſilent in the moſt conſiderable argument. This had been more for his preſent purpoſe; but there is not a ſyllable a ſyllable of any ſuch thing. * The Apoſtle might have argued in a higher manner from that, to convince them of the ſinfulneſs of unworthy receiving; but he makes a manifeſt diſtinction between the Bread and the Cup, and between the Body and Bloud of Chriſt. He that eats this bread and drinks this cup of the Lord unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the body and bloud of the Lord. The Bread and Wine may be receiv'd unworthily; but the Body and Bloud of Chriſt cannot be receiv'd unworthily: That implies a contradiction. For Chriſt aſſures us, that every one that eats his fleſh, and drinks his bloud, hath eternal life, Joh. 6. 54. * The Papiſts ſay, That becau e he that receives unworthily, is guilty of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, therefore the Body and Bloud of Chriſt is really in the Sacrament. Sauls perſecuting the Diſciples of Chriſt, was in the account of Chriſt, a perſecuting of himſelf, Acts 9. 4. Was the Body of Chriſt, glorified in Heaven, really preſent in the bodies of his Diſciples perſecuted by Saul? And when the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 10. 29. of treading under foot the Son of God, who is ſo fooliſh as to imagine, that the Son of God was really in his perſon and body under the feet of thoſe Apoſtates, as the body of an enemy they had thrown down, might be under their feet? The Bread is called the Body of Chriſt repreſentatively and ſacramentally. And it is an ingenious obſervation of a Learned man *, That the word, This is my body, refers to the Supper in diſtinction from the Paſſeover, which Chriſt put an honourable end unto, Mat. 26. 26. As they were eating, (i. e. As they were eating the Paſchal Lamb) Jeſus took bread, and bleſſed it, and brake it, and gave it to his diſciples, and ſaid, Take eat, This is my body. The Paſchal Lamb was Chriſts body in a figure, Exod. 12. 46. ſpeaking of the Paſchal Lamb, Neither ſhall you break a bone thereof, which is applied to Chriſt, who had not a bone of his body broken upon the Croſs, which John takes notice of as a fulfilling of the Scripture, Joh. 19. 36. Theſe things were done, that the Scripture ſhould be fulfilled, A bone of him ſhall not be broken; which can refer to no other but the command about the Paſchal Lamb in that place of Exodus. To this it is that the word τοῦτο doth refer in the ſpeech of our Saviour, This is my body. The Paſſeover had been a Sacramental Type of the Body of Chriſt to the Jews. He was the Lamb of God, and he is our Paſſeover ſacrificed for us. But now Chriſt takes bread and tells them, This is my body under the Goſpel. The Paſchal Lamb ſhall no more be a repreſentation of my body, as it hath been hitherto; but, This ſhall be the ſign of it. The Bread upon this account is no more really the Body of Chriſt, than the Paſchal Lamb was the Body of Chriſt for ſo many Ages, wherein it had repreſented it, which none of the Romaniſts will acknowledge to be tranſubſtantiated into the Body of Chriſt. They differ'd not in their repreſentation, but only in the circumſtance of time; one repreſenting Chriſt to be ſlain, the other repreſenting him crucified and ſlain already.

In v. 29. the Apoſtle deſcribes the puniſhment, as he had v. 27. deſcribed the ſin. For he that eats and drinks unworthily, eats and drinks damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lords body.

He that eats and drinks unworthily.] (1.) In an unworthy ſtate. (2.) In an unworthy frame, not actually diſcerning the Lords body.

Eateth and drinketh damnation to himſelf.] Κρῖμα ſignifies ſometimes judgment, Gal. 5. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 17. Unworthy receiving is ſuch an act as deſerves damnation, and if not repented of, will bring damnation. The ſtate may be changed, and ſo damnation avoided; but Believers themſelves, for their unworthy frames, ſhall not avoid the ſtroke of God, which the next verſe manifeſts, v. 30. For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep.

Not diſcerning the Lords body.] Not diſcerning the end, ſubject, and myſtery of this Sacrament; putting no difference between that and common Bread. * There is putting a difference between things, in regard of Opinion and Judgment. As God is ſaid to put no difference between the Jews and Gentiles, in regard of purification by Faith, Acts 15 9. And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. So men put no difference between the body of Chriſt and the body of a meer man, between Bread as repreſenting the Body of Chriſt, and bread the ordinary ſtaff of life; when they make no ſolemner preparation for it, than they do for an ordinary repaſt. When a man doth not regard gard the Perſon and Merit of Chriſt according to the true value of him, and comes to the Lords Table as to common bread; * and conſiders not to what end the Elements are deſtined, nor the greatneſs and glory of that Body which they repreſent, he violates in thoſe Signs the honour due to the Majeſty of Chriſt. If a man did rightly underſtand the dignity of the Body of Chriſt, and how much it ſuffer'd for our ſins, and that we ſhould dye to ſin, he would certainly prepare himſelf by a ſtrict ſurvey of his own heart, that he might not come unworthily to ſo great a Myſtery.

Doctrine,

1. All men outwardly profeſſing Chriſtianity, are not in a capacity to come to the great Ordinance of the Supper. The Apoſtle writes not to the Heathen, but the Chriſtian Corinthians.

2. 'Tis every mans duty ſolemnly to examine himſelf about his intereſt in Chriſt, and his right to this Ordinance, before he come.

3. Without due examination, and by unworthy receiving, a man commits a great ſin, and incurs a great danger.

For the firſt. All men outwardly profeſſing Chriſtianity, are not in a capacity to come to the great Ordinance of the Supper. If all men were capable, pre-examination were not then neceſſary. But becauſe this duty is enjoyn'd as a precedent, therefore thoſe that cannot examine themſelves, and thoſe that find no good iſſue of that examination, ought not to come; for the word So excludes all ſuch. Chriſt preached to a multitude, he excluded none from hearing, no not the worſt of the Phariſees. But this Ordinance he adminiſtred in a ſelect company; he preached openly, he celebrated this privately in an upper room: whence the cuſtom of celebrating in the Chancel or upper part of the Church, not in the body of it, took its riſe. The word is more extenſive, this more contracted. There were multitudes in the Jewiſh Church own'd him as the Meſſiah; but not all were admitted by him at this his firſt inſtitution, but the Apoſtles, and perhaps ſome few other Diſciples. For though he be ſaid to ſit down with the twelve, Mat. 26. 20. yet v. 26. he is ſaid to give it his diſciples. If there were only Apoſtles there, it ſignifies that he gave it to them, not as Apoſtles, but as Diſciples, to ſhow thereby, that all thoſe that give up themſelves ſincerely to his inſtruction, are capable of this Ordinance in all Ages of the Church; and that it is not common to all that only make a meer profeſſion of him. Anciently the Catechumens or perſons entring their Names to Chriſt to be inſtructed, ſtood a long time upon their probation before they were admitted into the more ſecret Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion, whether with good reaſon, I will not here determine; Superſtition lyes principally in exceſs.

In proſecution of this Doctrine, we ſhall lay down ſome Propoſitions.

1. Only regenerate men are fit to come to the Lords Supper. No man in a natural ſtate but muſt needs eat and drink unworthily, for he retains his enmity and hoſtile ſtile diſpoſition againſt God and Chriſt. Sanctified perſons only are the proper Gueſts; this was prefigur'd by the Ceremony of waſhing the Diſciples feet, which Chriſt uſed before the Supper, Joh. 13. 8, 10. Without Sanctification we have no part in Chriſt, and therefore no right to his Supper. An unregenerate man cannot perform the duties neceſſary, drag out his ſins, arraign them before God, mourn for his abominations with a hearty contrition. By Examination in the Text we muſt not underſtand a bare Examination, but that which ought to be the conſequent upon it, a judging our ſelves, and performing thoſe acts conſonant to the ſtate we judge our ſelves in. For ſo the Apoſtle means, as appears by v. 31. following the Text. For if we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged. To what purpoſe is this commanded Examination neceſſary, but for any man to ſee whether he hath thoſe diſpoſitions which are eſſential requiſites to this Ordinance? * The Children of Habajah, the Children of Coz, and of Barzallai, were not to eat of the moſt holy things, becauſe they were not in the Regiſter of the Genealogies, Ezra 2. 61, 62, 63. If our names be not written in Heaven, and are not to be found in the Genealogies of the new Born, we are not fit to eat of this Holy Feaſt. Thoſe that were uncircumciz'd in heart as well as in fleſh, were not to enter into Gods Sanctuary, Ezek. 44. 9. Though an unrenewed man may be a great Moraliſt, and his moral virtues may look like ſome pieces of a Wedding Garment; yet they are not the Wedding Garment, till they be wrought into a right faſhion by Faith. 'Tis a Feaſt, and therefore only for Gods Friends. 'Tis Bread belonging to Children; unrenewed men are not yet in a ſtate of Sonſhip. Circumciſion was to precede the Paſſover, Exod. 12. 44. Baptiſm to precede the Supper. But that is but a ſymbol of an inward Grace, without which no right to participation. The Iſraelites were baptized in the red ſea, before they fed on ſpiritual Manna, 1 Cor. 10. 2, 3.

* Bolton of the Sacrament, p. 87, 88.

(1) Faith is a neceſſary qualification, but unrenewed men have not Faith. Take, Eat, implies ſomething ſpiritually to be done. There muſt be the hand of Faith to receive and apply Chriſt, the mouth of Faith to take in Chriſt; natural men want both a ſpiritual hand, and a ſpiritual mouth. An Unbeliever receives the Elements, not the Life and Spirit of a Sacrament. Faith is as much a condition requiſite to a ſpiritual partaking of the Sacrament, as to Everlaſting Salvation: No Salvation without believing, no taſt of Chriſt without believing. Without Faith a man receives no more the Body of Chriſt, than a Chicken that ſhould come into a room after, and pick up ſome fallen Crumbs of Bread from the ground, receives the Body of Chriſt. The main qualification, which makes Sacramental Bread ſpiritual food, is wanting. We can no more turn the Bread and Wine into the Body and Bloud of Chriſt without Faith, than a Chymiſt can tranſmute one metal into another without the operation of Fire. Chriſt dwells in the heart by Faith only. Eph. 3. 17. The Paſchal Lamb was not to be eaten till the poſts of the houſe were ſprinkled with the bloud of it, Exod. 12. 7. The Soul muſt be ſprinkled with the Bloud of Chriſt by Faith, before it is fit to partake of this Ordinance. As God doth not promiſe Salvation abſolutely to man, but upon condition of Faith, ſo the Sacrament doth not Seal abſolutely remiſſion of ſins to man, but upon the condition of believing. If there be no ſealing therefore of the counterpart to God by performing the condition upon which God doth found his Grants, there is no right to the Seal. The promiſe is made to the Penitent and Believing Sinner. What intereſt can he think to have in the Seal, who hath not yet embrac'd the Promiſe? It Seals in particular to a perſon what the word propoſeth in general upon ſuch a condition. Pardon of ſin is ſeal'd to Faith; there muſt be a performance of the condition on our part, before there can be any ratification by the ſeal to us. God ſeals no more than he promiſes, nor in any other manner than as he promiſes. He promiſes only to Faith, and therefore only ſeals to Faith. Covenant-Graces therefore muſt be poſſeſt and acted, before Covenant-bleſſings can be ratified to us. As in Covenants between man and man, the ſeal annext to the writing ſeals no more than what is contain'd in the writing, and upon the acceptance and performance of ſuch conditions, which are mention'd in the Deed. Where there is not therefore an acceptance and performance of the conditions between the parties, the ſeal is no more than a blank as to any real advantage.

vantage. The Sacrament is a Seal in actu primo, in its own nature, but not in actu ſecundo to a wicked man, a faithleſs impenitent man hath not the beneficial fruit of it: It doth ſeal an Unbeliever his damnation; for he that believes not, ſhall be damned, is part of the Goſpel, as well as he that believes ſhall be ſaved, Mark 16. 16. The queſtion is not, whether the condition of Faith may not be infuſed at the time of partaking by the extraordinary grace of God. The Supper ſeems not to be a renewing, converting Ordinance. That there muſt be Faith, if there be any true fruit of it, is out of queſtion, and that no unrenewed man hath, nor can have any hopes, he ſhould be there inſpired with ſo noble and neceſſary a grace; and therefore in that ſtate he is not a capable ſubject of this Ordinance. For ſuch therefore to approach the Lords Table, is a mocking of God, to come to God to ſeal the remiſſion of ſin, when they have no mind to come up to the conditions wherewith that pardon is propoſed; as it is for a man to come to a Prince for pardon, who hath not yet laid down his arms againſt him. God in his Seal teſtifies his approbation of the promiſes upon the conditions expreſt; man in receiving teſtifies his approbation of the condition: he that hath no principle of approbation in him, mocks God in his approach. Faith is a neceſſary moral qualification to the receiving of the Sacrament.

(2.) An unrenewed man is not in Covenant, and therefore no capable Subject. This follows upon the former: If he hath not faith the condition of the covenant, he is not in covenant with God; and what right hath ſuch an one to the ſeals? All men by nature are ſtrangers to the covenant of promiſe, Aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, Eph. 2. 12. What have they to do with the priviledge of the free Denizons of Iſrael? They that are not included in the Deed, have nothing to do with the Seals of the Conveyance; 'tis but fruitleſs Wax to them, not a confirming Seal. The covenant runs thus, My beloved is mine, and I am his, Cant. 2. 16. 'tis mutual between the parties; by covenanting with God we become the Lord's, Ezek. 16. 8. I entred into covenant with thee, ſaith the Lord, and thou becameſt mine. There is an appropriation of Chriſt to us, and a conſecration of our ſelves to Chriſt. What hath he to do with the ordinance, that wants the eſſentials of the covenant, who hath no valuation of Chriſt, no breathings after him, nor makes any dedication of himſelf to Chriſt? Thoſe that never gave up themſelves to God, receive no Seal, but meer Bread, meer Wine: Unregenerate men are under a covenant of works; the covenant of works was made with the whole nature of man in Adam, the curſe of the covenant ſeized upon all, Gal. 3. 10. the duties of that covenant are incumbent upon them who are under the curſe of it; the violation of that covenant freed not man from his obligation to duty, though it brought upon him a new obligation to puniſhment. 'Tis a priviledge only of Believers to be freed from the covenant of works: For they are not under the law, but under grace, Rom. 6. 14. And there is no condemnation only to them that are in Chriſt, Rom. 8. 1. But where men do not believe, God deals with them upon the terms of the firſt covenant; he expects a full righteouſneſs from them in their own perſons, as being without Chriſt, and having not accepted of his bloud upon his own terms, to take away the guilt of their ſins. 'Tis true, unregenerate men are under the offers of the covenant of grace, but not within actual acceptation of the covenant of grace. They enjoy ſome benefits of the covenant made with Chriſt; for they enjoy their lives, have worldly comforts, the fruits of Gods patience, all which are upon the account of the Mediator; and they have been entred in by Baptiſm; yet ſince they practically diſown the terms of that covenant, they put themſelves back under a covenant of works, to ſtand upon their own bottom; and therefore refuſing a conſent to that covenant, the benefits of the covenant belong not to them. For if a Seal (as ſome affirm) be of the ſame nature with an Oath, whereby God confirms his promiſe; yet it is ſo only to the heirs of promiſe, not to thoſe that are rejecters of the covenant and promiſe.

(3.) This Sacrament is a Sacrament of nouriſhment. Unrenewed men therefore are not fit for it. They are dead, Eph. 2. 1. and what hath a dead man to do with a feaſt? Men muſt be alive before they be nouriſhed. 'Tis Eat, Drink. The principal intent is not to eat corporeally, but ſpiritually; words not to be ſpoken to a dead man. Meat and drink may be put into a dead mans mouth, but he can ſwallow down neither one nor another in a vital way, nor concoct either of them. He that wants the life of grace, can make no uſe of the nouriſhment of grace; ſo that the Sacrament is at beſt but a vain thing to ſuch. But beſides, the very end of the Sacrament is perverted, when the richeſt viands are taken by a man ſpiritually dead; as the end of Bread which is to nouriſh the Body, is perverted, and the Creature abus'd by being us'd contrary to the end of it, when it is put into the mouth of a dead man to whom it can be no advantage. The Body of Chriſt conveys ſtrength and growth to his own Members only, to living Members not to dead; dead branches receive no ſap from the Vine.

(4.) This Sacrament is an Ordinance of inward Communion with Chriſt. But unrenewed men can have no inward Communion with him. They cannot have that joy which ought to be in a converſe with Chriſt; becauſe they cannot taſt any of thoſe ſpiritual dainties which are in this Feaſt. They may eat the Sacramental Bread; but regenerate men only have a new reliſh, ſpiritually to taſt the Body and Bloud of Chriſt; they only relliſh the milk of the word, and the ſweetneſs of a Sacrament. What Communion can Belial have with Chriſt, or darkneſs with light? Chriſt will have no converſe with his Enemies, till they are prepared for his reception by the ſtamp of his Spirit. Chriſt muſt be let into the heart before he ſups with it, Revel. 3. 20. If any man open the door, I will come in to him, and ſup with him. The door muſt be opened by Converſion, before Chriſt will feaſt with the Soul in a ſpiritual Communion. Thoſe that are not graciouſly fit for a ſpiritual Communion with him in Heaven, are not fit for a ſpiritual Communion with him in the Earth; unleſs we be born again, we cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, Joh. 3 5. and therefore have no right to thoſe priviledges which are the foretaſts of glory. Boſom-Communion belongs only to boſom Friends; others are but intruders, and will receive no countenance from Chriſt.

(5.) This Ordinance is to be received by true Chriſtians only. But renewed men only are ſuch. Chriſtianity is an inward powerful work, not a paint, an image. The form of Godlineſs doth not conſtitute a man a Chriſtian, but the power of it, 2 Tim. 3. 5. All natural men are without God in the World, they are ἄθεοι, Eph. 2. 12. Atheiſts, and may as well be call'd ἄχριστοι, not Chriſtians, being without Chriſt. There is not only requir'd an aſſent of the underſtanding to make a man a Chriſtian in foro Dei, but a conſent of the will; there muſt be the accepting as well as the aſſenting part. 'Tis not a bare knowledge, or the profeſſion of Religion, demonſtrates a man a regenerate man, either in the preſence of God, or to himſelf, though to others in the judgment of Charity it doth. 'Tis a work of the will that is requir'd; he is no Chriſtian who barely knows Chriſt to be King, Prieſt and Prophet, and cordially accepts him in none of thoſe Offices. Now this Ordinance being the proper badge and priviledge of Chriſtians, none ought to partake of it but Chriſtians. Theſe evidences belong to the proper Tenant, not to the Counterfeit; to thoſe that are his real Friends, not to his Lip Friends, and heart Enemies. Freemen only have a right to the priviledges of the City, and true Chriſtians to the priviledges of the Church.

Obj. But it may be ſaid, by this, none but thoſe that have aſſurance of their being in a ſtate of grace, ought to come to this inſtitution; and certainly, there is many a true Chriſtian wants this comfort; and the Supper is a priviledge due to Grace, not to aſſurance, to Chriſtians as Chriſtians, not to Chriſtians as comfortable Chriſtians.

Anſ. I anſwer. Caution is to be us'd in this, leſt ſome doubting Chriſtian ſhould be left in a maze. Many humble Souls are moſt backward, the preſumptuous ſpur on apace; the baſer metals are moſt volatile.

[1.] Penitent perſons mourning for ſin, though wanting aſſurance, are regenerate, and have a right. Contrite hearts are the moſt acceptable Sacrifices to God, next to the bruiſed Body of our Saviour, Pſal. 51. 17. Thoſe that have bruiſed hearts, and cannot call to mind their former ſins, but the pulſe of their indignation beats quick againſt them; to ſuch Chriſt appears firſt: he ſhow'd himſelf to Mary Magdalen before he appeared to any of the Apoſtles after his Reſurrection, yea before he appear'd to his own Mother, Mark 16. 9. and poſſibly ſome of her former ſorrow began to ſpring afreſh, and her Speech ſeems to diſcover ſome ſorrow and aſtoniſhment in her, and a great affection to Chriſt, Joh. 20. 11, 13, 15. Such bleeding contrite Souls doth Chriſt love, and ſuch as he loves ſhall be as John lying in his boſom, and leaning upon him at a Sacrament. Where there is a true repentance, a deteſtation of all ſin, a reſolution to avoid ſin for the future, and a lying at the feet of Chriſt, there is true Grace, though it may not be always viſible to the Soul. Theſe are the four herbs we are to eat the Paſſeover withal.

and

(2.) Regenerate perſons cannot always ſay poſitively that they have grace, yet find ſo much ground, as that they cannot abſolutely deny it, unleſs in ſome ſharp fit of deſertion. It is not eaſily diſcern'd ſometimes, becauſe of the weakneſs of it. Faith, like a grain of muſtard ſeed, may lye ſometimes in a heap of rubbiſh; clouds of ſin, withdrawings of the Spirit, and injudiciouſneſs of conſcience may obſcure the work upon the heart at ſome ſeaſons, yet a ſtrong will and an earneſt breathing to pleaſe Chriſt, whiſpers ſomething in the Soul to cheriſh it. A ſtrong and prevailing will is the proper evidence of converſion, and in Scripture it is expreſt by will, Revel 22. 17. Let him that is a thirſt come, and he that will, let him come. The acts of the will and the thirſt of the ſoul are eaſily diſcernable, enough to keep the heart from a denial of the work of Grace, though not enough to clear it up againſt all oppoſitions. The work of Grace may be clouded, the Sun doth not always ſend forth its beams. The thorn in Pauls fleſh ſeems to be a preſent cloud upon his ſpirit, hindring him from a ſight of his own evidences, ſince it is put in oppoſition to the Revelations he had in his Rapture into the third heavens, 2 Cor. 12. Mary knew her own affection to Chriſt, and her ſorrow for her ſin, and could not deny thoſe affections ſo palpable in her ſelf, and viſible to others; but had not aſſurance of her ſtate, till Chriſt ſpake that comfortable word to her, Luke 7. 38, 48. Thy ſins are forgiven thee. Every man that is regenerate, may be able upon a peruſal of his own heart to ſay, I am ſincere in this or that, my ends are right, and the bent of my heart ſtands towards God. In Grace there is ſome light diſcovering of it, though not perfectly, yet ſo as the Soul can ſay, I am no Hypocrite.

[3.] A perfect aſſurance is not required. 'Tis ſaid, Let a man examine himſelf, as to the frame and temper of his heart, not let him be aſſured of his being in Chriſt and of an happy ſtate; but let him take a ſurvey of his heart, and ſee that his frames are ſuitable, and ſo let him come. The Supper ſuppoſeth men not to have a full aſſurance, 'tis a Seal, and Seals are for confirmation, where there may be matter of doubt. 'Tis a queſtion, whether a perfect aſſurance be in the world. As Grace is not perfect, but hath its ebbs and flouds, ſo hath aſſurance. As Faith is mixt with Unbelief, ſo is aſſurance with doubtings. As the Soul ſaith, Lord, I believe, help my unbelief; ſo it hath often ſaid, Lord, I hope, help my doubts. The Needle ſtands right to the North Pole, but not without its tremblings. In the greateſt doubtings, we ſhould have recourſe to thoſe ſparklings and ſpritely leaps of our Souls, when we found the firſt touches upon our hearts, and ſtay our ſelves upon thoſe preſents we had in the day of our Eſpouſals.

2. Ignorant perſons are not in a capacity for the Supper. The ſubjects capable of it are men and women profeſſing Chriſtianity, and underſtanding the grounds of that which they profeſs. Light in the mind, and the true knowledge of God, was part of the image of God, and our original righteouſneſs in the Creation; as well as rectitude in the will, and the right ſtanding of it towards God, Col. 3. 10. Ignorance being a privation of that ornament of the Soul, a fruit of our Apoſtaſie, the root of all our diſhonouring of God, cannot render us fit Gueſts for his Table, or procure a welcome from him. Blind offerings can be no more acceptable to God under the Goſpel, than they were under the Law. He is a great King, Mal. 1. 14. Thoſe that approach to him are bound to know what belongs to the honour of his Name.

By this ignorance we are not to underſtand,

(1.) An ignorance of the abſtruſe Controverſies in Religion: Which are often too knotty for the ſharpeſt and moſt induſtrious underſtanding to unlooſe. A man may be unable to underſtand thorny and intricate Diſputes, yet with a ſanctified knowledge of the Fundamentals of Religion, be in a nearer capacity for the benefits benefits of this Ordinance, than thoſe that by their ſubtile wits can divide a hair.

(2.) Nor a ſcholaſtical knowledge of fundamentals, ſō as to be able to give an exact definition of thoſe things which are neceſſary to be known. 'Tis ſufficient if he knows them as a Chriſtian, though not as a Scholar. A houſe may be ſtrong, and keep out wind and weather for the ſecurity of the inhabitant, though it be not ſo neatly built and skilfully garniſht. A man may know the fundamental Articles, yet not know all the conſequences rationally deducible from thoſe Articles.

(3.) Nor a perfect knowledge of all the ends of the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt. To know that Chriſt dyed, what he was, and for what he dyed is neceſſary, but a perfect knowledge none have. As graces have their ſpots, ſo our knowledge hath its mixtures of darkneſs. The wiſdom which the wiſe Angels are daily learning, cannot be graſpt by the largeſt and moſt elevated underſtanding upon the Earth. The Diſciples in the time of Chriſts being in the fleſh, had but little knowledge of his Death and Reſurrection, Luke 9. 44, 45. John 20. 9. Peter underſtood him to be the Son of God, but was ignorant of Gods deſign to redeem the World by his Blood, Mat. 16. 16, 22, 23. They afterwards knew ſomething of it, and had an habit and diſpoſition to believe whatſoever Chriſt ſhould reveal to them. Yet that knowledge which was ſufficient for the Apoſtles, till a fuller manifeſtation by the Spirit, is no plea for our ignorance in the ſame thing, ſince the pouring forth of the Spirit, the taking off Moſes his vail, and penning the truths of the Goſpel with a Sun-beam. A little knowledge at the time of Chriſts being in the World, and in ſeveral ages of the World, where the means have been leſs, would be more acceptable than a greater knowledge now diſproportion'd to the means of knowing.

(4.) There muſt be an underſtanding and believing in ſome meaſure the fundamentals of Religion. We muſt have ſome underſtanding of the nature and attributes of God, eſpecially thoſe that are more bright in the ſufferings of Chriſt, and they are to be particularly reſpected in all our acts of Worſhip. As the holineſs and juſtice of God, the power and faithfulneſs of God, the omniſcience and omnipreſence of God, the ſoveraignty and goodneſs of God. We muſt know the fall of Adam, the fruits of it upon his Poſterity, the exactneſs and ſpirituality of the Law; there can be no motion to God without a ſence of our miſery. We muſt know Chriſt in his nature, God-man; in his deſign, Redemption; in his commiſſion, ſent; in the manner of effecting it, by the ſhedding his Blood, Reſurrection from the Dead; the manner of applying it, by his Interceſſion in Heaven, and his Spirit on Earth, in his Offices, as King, Prieſt, and Prophet; the efficacy, value, and merit of his ſufferings, the purifying vertue of his Blood, the neceſſity of Salvation by him, that there is no juſtification but by his Righteouſneſs, no ſanctification but by his Spirit, and that one is as neceſſary as the other, the one for our acceptance with God, the other for our communion with God; the neceſſity and nature of Faith for the enjoyments of the benefits purchaſed. There muſt be ſome knowledge in all thoſe things, elſe we know not to whom, or how, or for what to apply our ſelves in this great myſtery of Chriſtianity, which exhibits and repreſents to us on Gods part, the whole ſcheme of Redemption, and requires on our parts, the exerciſe of Faith about its proper and particular Object. There muſt be ſome knowledge of thoſe things; the quantity cannot be determined, the quality is, that it be a ſenſible knowledge; not ſuch a knowledge as a Parrot hath, that may be taught to reherſe the Creed, without reaſon or ſenſe to underſtand or believe a word he ſpeaks. A modeſt and a ſenſible ignorance, provided it be not total, is more tolerable than a pufft and inſenſible knowledge.

[5.] A knowledge of the nature and ends of the Ordinance. The Lords Body cannot otherwiſe be diſcern'd, v. 29. The myſteries of the Ordinance would be as Arabick letters to him that underſtands not the meaning of them. The maſter of the Family was to teach the uſe and ends of the Paſſeover to the receiver, and all that were preſent were to underſtand the ground of the firſt inſtitution, and the nature of the Ordinance. The Supper being a contract between God and man, a man muſt underſtand the nature and terms of that Covenant, and alſo the nature and end of the Seal; he cannot elſe be a worthy Contractor with God. The body of the Lord cannot be diſcern'd without an underſtanding of the nature of the Ordinance, and the nature of the Ordinance cannot be underſtood without a knowledge of thoſe Principles of Religion, upon which it is built.

Ignorant perſons are not fit to come.

(1.) They are uncapable of performing the Duties requiſite. The antecedent duty of ſelf-examination enjoin'd by the Apoſtle as eſſentially neceſſary, So let him eat, not otherwiſe. Thoſe therefore that are unskilful in this work, by reaſon of their ignorance of the univerſal depravation of Nature, the obnoxiouſneſs of all men to the Curſe of the Law, and the impoſſibility of avoiding the terrors of it without an intereſt in that Mediator, in and by the way of his own appointment, are uncapable of performing this duty, and ſo unfit ſubjects for this Ordinance. They cannot repent, for they have no ſpiritual eye to diſcover their own filthineſs. The Prodigal never came to himſelf, till his underſtanding was enlightned, Luk. 15. 17. By the ſame ground that infants and children are excluded (who were anciently admitted to this Ordinance) becauſe of their defect of reaſon, not being able to perform this duty, ignorant perſons are to be excluded: in them there is a natural, in ignorant perſons a moral inability, and under means of Grace a ſinful indiſpoſition. There is as much reaſon for children in age to partake of this Ordinance, as for children in underſtanding. Both have a want of knowledge in thoſe things which are of a concern to a right participation of this Ordinance. Nor can they perform the concomitant duties. Thoſe who underſtand not the nature and ends of the death of Chriſt, cannot commemorate it in a right manner. All our ſervice of God ought to be a reaſonable ſervice; not only as having the higheſt reaſon for a motive to urge it, but in regard of the modus, the manner of doing it. It muſt be done with an exerciſe of reaſon. We muſt ſerve God as Chriſtians; but in our ſervice we muſt not put off the nature of man: The right manner of partaking of this Supper conſiſts in repentance for ſin, and faith in Chriſt; what repentance can there be for ſin, when the evil of ſin and the deplorable conſequents of it are not known? What faith can there be in one ignorant of the cauſe and ends of the death of Chriſt? They cannot come with deſires ſuitable, that know nothing of their own wants. They who know not themſelves empty, cannot deſire ſpiritual fulneſs; who know not themſelves ſick, cannot deſire ſpiritual Cordials; who know not themſelves under the Curſe of the Law, cannot deſire a ſatisfying Chriſt; they have no ſenſe of that for which his body was bruiſed, wounded, and crucified. Nor can they perform the ſubſequent duties, which are a walking in holineſs; there is no foundation in blindneſs for any regular walk.

Ignorantia non eſt conſcius.

(2.) All ignorant perſons are Unbelievers. None formerly entred into Covenant by a ſolemn profeſſion, but thoſe that had knowledge, Nehem. 10. 28, 29. Every one having knowledge and having underſtanding entred into an oath to walk in Gods law. How can any believe the glorious things of the Goſpel, which they know not, nor deſire to know, but ſtop their ears, blind their eyes like Bats and Owls, love the darkneſs of the night better than a clear Sun-ſhiny day? If we know not the firmneſs of the ground, we will never ſet our foot upon it. A man in ignorance is in the chains of darkneſs: darkneſs and the power of the Devil are the ſame thing, Acts 26. 18. He that hath ignorance in his head and heart, is alienated from God. An alienation from God is a friendſhip with the Devil. Is it fit for the voluntary captives of Chriſts greateſt Enemy to come ratling with their chains of darkneſs, and under the conduct and power of the Devil, to a Feaſt appointed for the friends of God?

(3.) Such know not how to value this Ordinance aright. 'Tis not fit a Jewel ſhould be beſtow'd on him who underſtands not the value of it, and would part with it for a ſong to the next Cheat he meets. An ignorant perſon would part with any ſpiritual excellency upon the next temptation of the Devil. As want of ſtrength makes the body, ſo want of knowledge makes the minds of children capable of being moulded into any form. An eye unpurg'd from the films upon it, can never diſcover the beauties of Divine Myſteries, or entertain them with any ſpiritual delight. He that underſtands not his original corruption, knows not how how to prize a medicine. You may ſooner make one born blind admire the Sun, which he never ſaw, than make a blind Soul have an eſtimation of Chriſt, to whom he hath a natural enmity.

(4.) Ignorant perſons are always under the command of ſome ſecret luſt. Ignorance it ſelf is a great ſin; the not knowing what we may eaſily know, ſince it is reveal'd, is ſo far from excuſing, that it rather aggravates. Becauſe it is not a defect in the faculty it ſelf, (as in the caſe of mad men;) but a defect in the improvement of the faculty, and ſuch a defect as is voluntary, which man hath a power to remove. It ſtifles the notion of God, rather than is diſpell'd by it, Joh. 1. 5. The darkneſs comprehendeth it not, i. e. the light. Beſides the evil of its own nature, 'tis the ground of all wickedneſs. If they are only filled with goodneſs, that are fill'd with knowledge, Rom 15. 14. they muſt be fill'd with evil that are fill'd with ignorance. Where the mind is dark, the motion muſt needs be irregular. The ignorance contracted by the fall hath been the root of all the corrupt inclinations and miſcarriages in Adams Poſterity. Ignorance firſt brought luſt into faſhion, and keeps up the Mode, 1 Pet 1. 14. Not faſhioning your ſelves according to your former luſts in your ignorance. A faſhion, courſe, and form of ſin renders men unfit Gueſts for the Lords Table.

And this leads to the Third Propoſition.

3. Propoſition. Men guilty of a courſe of ſin, though ſecret and unknown to others, are unfit for this Ordinance. This injunction, Let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him come, bars out ſuch. By Examination is not to be meant a bare act of examination, but that which ought to be conſequent upon it. Not, Let a man examine himſelf, and in whatſoever poſture he finds his ſoul, let him come; no, Let him examine himſelf to find out the neſt of vipers in his ſoul which hiſs againſt Chriſt, and caſt them out. Let him perform the acts conſonant to that ſtate, wherein upon inquiry he finds himſelf. What man would be ſo wretched, as to make this concluſion, I am a ſwine, a beaſt, I live in ſuch and ſuch ſins unrepented of, yet I have performed my duty, I have examined my ſelf, which is all the Apoſtle requires of me, and I reſt in this act, nothing more is enjoin'd me? Is there no end of this act? All things are commanded, not for themſelves, but for ſome end. The Apoſtle enjoins it, not to make the Sacrament a licence for ſin, or to encourage the wearing of Chriſts Livery to keep mens luſts warm. Every ſecret groſs ſinner ſtands anathematized both by Law and Goſpel; the Law curſeth him becauſe of his ſin, and the Goſpel condemns him becauſe of his unbelief. What excludes a man from admiſſion, when it is known to others, excommunicates him in his own conſcience, when it is only known to himſelf. All things in the Ordinance beſpeak purity; the place was fitted for the firſt inſtitution, the ſoul muſt be fitted for the participation; the place was trim'd for Chriſts entertainment, the heart muſt be trim'd for his reception. The grave of Chriſt was free from corruption, no putrified body was ever lodg'd there, the ſoul muſt be free from any affection to filth. Though Chriſt had not a hole where to lay his head, he will not have a Sty or a Swine-trough wherein to lay his body. His humanity is advanc'd above the higheſt Heavens, and the ſigns of it are not to be receiv'd by an earthly and polluted ſoul. Such ought not to approach, though they ſeem to have a repentance, till it appears that their repentance is ſerious and thorow. * Thoſe that have been ſtain'd with ſome ſecret groſs crime, ought not to approach upon a ſudden and late begun contrition. To mourn one day, and come to this Ordinance the next, argues but little care to diſpoſe themſelves for ſo great an inſtitution. A ſoul glutted with ſin, though beginning to vomit it up, cannot ſo ſuddenly gain a ſpiritual taſte for the body of Chriſt. How many have had ſudden qualms, and diſcharg'd themſelves of ſome ſins, the better to ſwallow more? Imaginations of repentance are not always realities. He that offends another, and ſaith he is ſorry for it, and a ſhort time after offends again, affords no reaſon to believe that he is a penitent in earneſt.

* Cajetan. Sum. P. 59.

Queſt. What ſins debar a man from this Ordinance?

(1.) Not ſuch which are infirmities incident to humane Nature. Every ſin doth not impede the operation of Faith about the proper object. Every breach of the Command is not a hinderance. Sins of daily infirmities are breaches of the Command, otherwiſe they are not ſins. There is no perfection of virtue, while remiſſion of ſins is to be daily petition'd for; the ſtate of perfection is reſerv'd for a ſtate of glory. There is a blackneſs mixed with the Churches comlineſs, Cant. 1. 5. a blackneſs of ſin as well as of affliction. The wheat ceaſeth not to be wheat, though tares are mixed with it. In the beſt mines there are earth and droſs as well as Gold; precious ſtones have their flaws, which cannot be remov'd without the deſtruction of the ſubſtance, nor infirmities aboliſht without the deſtruction of the body. The Diſciples were not without corruptions at the inſtitution; ambition bubbled up in them, Luke 22. 24. and fear quickly made them forſake their Maſter; but they were not naturalized or rooted in this evil, neither did the Devil enter into them as he did into Judas. As the Father of mercies doth not diſcovenant us for every infirmity, ſo neither ſhould we exclude our ſelves from partaking of the Seal, 1 John 2. 1. If any man ſin, we have an advocate with the Father. The Office of Advocacy erected in Heaven, ſuppoſeth ſin after regeneration, and during our continuance in the World. But there is a great difference between the indwelling of ſin, and the rule of ſin; to ſin is to decline from that rectitude in an act which the agent ought to obſerve; in this reſpect we ſin according to the tenor of the Law in every thing we do, though not according to the tenor of the Goſpel.

(2.) But a courſe in wilful and frequent breaches of a known command debars a man. That which is againſt the principal intent of the command, and the main office it requires of us. Such as omiſſions of known duties. When Family-duties are omitted, and the Houſe, which ſhould be as a little Church, is rather a Synagogue of Satan; when there is a total or frequent omiſſion of ſecret Prayer, which diſowns that worſhip of God, which is due to him by the light of nature, and is the note of a wicked man, (Will he always call upon God? Job 27. 10.) Thoſe that forget Chriſt all the week, are not likely to be devout in the remembrance of him upon a Sabbath. And ſuch ſins of commiſſion, as are enumerated, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. (Fornicators, adulterers, effeminate, thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers, extortioners) are a bar, if not repented of, 2 Cor. 12. 21. The heart, that is an habitation of any of thoſe kinds of Devils, is not a member of Chriſt, and can bring nothing but a myſtery of iniquity to fit it to partake of the myſteries of Chriſt. This is a blaſpheming Chriſt in the Heart, while he is received with the Hands, like the reviling Thief that hung beſide him on the Croſs, not like a loving or a beloved Diſciple, that looks upon him by Faith while he is bleeding to Death: Theſe have no right, till their guilt be unbound by Repentance and Faith.

Such ought not to meddle with this Ordinance.

[1.] Moral uncleanneſs is a greater bar than ceremonial. If a man were defiled with a dead carcaſs, he was to forbear eating the Paſſeover, Numb. 9. 6. If any man unclean by the touch of a dead Body, came into the Tabernacle, he defil'd it, and was threatned with a cutting off from Iſrael, Numb. 19. 13. How much more ought they to abſtain from the Table of the Lord, that are not only defiled, but dead, who bear a dead putrified Soul in a living Body? 1 Tim. 5. 6. She that lives in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe lives. If ceremonial uncleanneſs, without any mixture of a moral, were hateful to God, much more hateful to him is moral uncleanneſs. The worſhip of God is more precious, than to be ſacrilegiouſly invaded by impenitent ſinners; every work of the hands, and that which is offer'd is unclean, as well as when offer'd by one that had toucht the dead, Hag. 2. 13, 14. Lepers who had a natural Diſeaſe, were not to come into the Congregation, that they might not defile the place wherein the Lord dwelt, Levit. 13. 46. Numb. 5. 2. much leſs ought they to approach to this Ordinance, where the Lord is ſolemnly preſent as maſter of the Feaſt, who have running ſores, and ſtink above ground in the Noſtrils of God. If for thoſe outward uncleanneſſes men were to abſtain from thoſe inſtitutions, which the Apoſtle calls worldly Rudiments, and carnal Ordinances, they are too foul Gueſts for ſo rich a Feaſt, who can bring nothing elſe but the loathſome exhalations of Hell to ſpiritual Ordinances. The livery of the Devil becomes not the Table of the Lord.

[2.] All the right which they may claim by Baptiſm, is forfeited in foro Dei. 'Tis a

Repentance

Repentance, profeſſion of Faith, reſolution to walk accordingly, and the anſwer of a good Conſcience towards God, which are the foundations of any mans right to the Supper; but ſecret impieties are a diſowning repentance, violating good reſolutions, denying the Faith which hath been before profeſſed; where the terms of the Covenant are not obſerved, there is a forfeiture of any right to the benefits and ſeals of it. All Rebellion is of right followed with an attainder and deprivation of Birth-right; a continual breach of Covenant by commiſſion of known ſin, attaints the Soul in the Court of Heaven, and the Charter is not to be enjoyed but by the Parties that fulfil the conditions required; he that hates inſtruction, hath no part in the Covenant, Pſal. 50. 16, 17. What claim can he be ſuppoſed to have, that declares to God by his practice, that he will not be rul'd by his Law, or own him as his chiefeſt good? A Rebel ſeparated from Chriſt in affection and will, hath nothing to do with an Ordinance of Peace. He that takes no care of the honour of God who created him, nor of his own Soul, which is to run parallel with the endleſs line of eternity, is a much worſe Infidel, than he that neglects proviſion for his own Family; yet of ſuch an one, the Apoſtle pronounceth, that he hath deny'd the Faith, 1 Tim. 5. 8. Dogs they are in the account of God, more deſervedly than the believing Canaanite was in the account of Chriſt: And wicked men are called ſo in Scripture, Revel. 22. 5. 2 Pet. 2. 22. What right have Doggs to the Childrens bread, to the Legacy of choiceſt Love? Can ſuch be ſuppoſed to be included in his will? If they have any right, 'tis to the Table of Devils, not to that of the Lord: And it may well be wondred, how any men can come ſecurely to a Communion with Chriſt, who bring ſuch evil diſpoſitions and full blown ſins unrepented of, which they know will for ever deprive them of any Communion with God in Heaven, unleſs they think that great ſins ſhould merit glory.

(3.) Such cannot in that ſtate perform the duties requiſite in this Ordinance. Faith is a neceſſary qualification; but a denial of ſubjection to Chriſt, is an evidence of a groſs infidelity. Practices are the cleareſt indexes of Faith or Unbelief, evil works deny God in his Promiſes and Precepts. If any man tells you he believes that to be fire which is before him, and that it will burn, and yet wilfully runs into it; you muſt either conclude, he hath no aſſent to what he doth affirm, or elſe that he is mad and hath a mind to deſtroy himſelf. And thoſe that believe neither the promiſe nor command of the Word, will not be induc'd to believe it becauſe of the Seal, when they give no credit to the writing. Repentance is neceſſary to this Ordinance; but this and a courſe of ſin are utterly inconſiſtent; Repentance is a breaking off iniquity by righteouſneſs, Dan. 4. 27. and a ſecret ſinner breaketh off righteouſneſs by iniquity. An unwearied practice manifeſts a fixt reſolution; but Repentance is a change of the purpoſe of the heart, not to commit the ſame iniquity again, nor any other, Job 34. 32. If I have done inquity, I will do no more. A purpoſe of ſin cannot conſiſt with Repentance; nor is a flaſhy purpoſe of repenting, a true remorſe. A Bird may ſoar high towards Heaven, and preſently deſcend as low as Earth; as Saul reſolved not to perſecute David, but was quickly bent upon his old game. He cannot have a ſenſe of ſin, which is a neceſſary qualification to a worthy receiving: He underſtands not, believes not the vaſt breach ſin hath made between God and the World, who every day is reſolv'd to make it wider. He is not in the leaſt truly affected with the greatneſs of that God againſt whom he ſins, with the kindneſs of that Chriſt whom he freſhly murders, the curſe of the Law which he hath incur'd, nor the wrath of God which he hath provok'd. Where any one ſin is lov'd, that Soul hath not a ſence of the juſtice of God againſt it, or the unexpreſſible ſufferings of Chriſt for it; and can ſuch a man have a fundamental right, who hath not a grain of the fundamental graces, or celebrate in a right manner the memorial of Chriſt, who walks every day as if the Devil were his Redeemer?

[4.] Such contemptuouſly undervalue the Blood of Chriſt, and therefore are unfit for this Heavenly Ordinance. 'Tis no better than a mocking of God, to come to his Table with a profeſt enmity in the Heart againſt him; a Judas's hail Maſter, while he is playing the Traytor; the Souldiers hail King of the Jews to Chriſt, while they deſign to Crucifie him: This is to be his executioner, not his his Gueſt; to hold in the heart any one ſin, which is the enemy of Chriſt, while we partake of the Supper, is no other than to deſign the murder of him: As he that invites a Prince to his houſe, wherein he lodges a deſperate Enemy to the Prince he invites, may well be ſuppoſed to have a deſign againſt his life. We may as well profeſs our love openly to the Nails that pierced him, and the Spear that ran into his ſide, and adore them in our thoughts for ſuch an action, as bring a love and zeal for thoſe ſins which were more bitter to him, than the nails in his hands, or the reproaches of the rabble. A remorſeleſneſs in ſin is a killing the Son of God afreſh. What is it to be guilty of the bloud of a man, ſuch a mans bloud as Job would not ſet with the dogs of his flock, or the bloud of a Lazarus, who would be happier by a mortal ſtroke, than a painful and beggerly life! What is it then to have the guilt of the bloud of the glorified Son of God, the bloud of him that came to be our Saviour; and thereby to do more than approve of the curſed action of the Jews! Is it not as great an affront, as if one fallen into a Jakes, ſhould in that filthy condition intrude himſelf into a Princes company, ſit down at his Table, and dip his bemir'd hands in the ſame diſh? He that knows himſelf to be a ſecret enemy to God, undervalues Chriſt by an approach to this Ordinance; as if the Body and Bloud of the Redeemer were food fit for a Viper, or a Swine good enough to wear his Badge. Such is every man that hath a rooted affection to any one ſin under a profeſſion of Chriſt. He puts a diſgrace upon him, while he prefers his ſin before him.

[5.] Such cannot receive any good from this Ordinance. He can deſign no good to himſelf with a reſolution to continue in his ſin: what can his end be, but to ſee Chriſt bowing under ſin, that himſelf may live more contentedly in it? To attend upon any means of Grace, that ſin may abound, and be more at eaſe, is equivalent to continuance in ſin, that grace may abound, which the Apoſtle mentions with God forbid, Rom. 6. 1, 2. Whoſoever lies impenitent in any groſs ſin, is dead, and can receive no more nouriſhment from any ſpiritual Ordinance, than a dead man can by meat put into his mouth. * His ſin petitions againſt him, as Eſther againſt Haman at the Banquet of Wine; and his death, as his ſin, is more increaſed. He makes his ſin more bulky by the addition of that of unworthy receiving, and haſtens his death by a freſh provocation. 'Tis as impoſſible ſuch a man can obtain any beneficial end of the inſtitution, as it was for a Jew to be purified, who held in his hand an unclean thing which defiled him, while he dipt himſelf in the purifying water; and he gets juſt as much good by the Supper, as Judas by the Sop, a part of the Paſchal Sacrament, Joh. 13. 17. to have not only one Devil enter into him, but ſeven more, and return more proud, covetous, unclean, unbelieving, impenitent than before, with his ſins more ſtrengthened, as a Believers graces are, and more contented to lie in the mire, and increaſe ſins to lay upon the Croſs of Chriſt. Judas did no more than this; I ſuppoſe he came only with a reſolution to maintain that peculiar beloved ſin of his, his covetouſneſs, not dreaming of the conſequent of it, the death of his Maſter, nor with any intent to procure it: for he was ſorry when he heard Chriſt was condemn'd; and therefore in all likelihood aim'd not at the loſs of his Maſters life, but the filling his own purſe; yet the Devil took poſſeſſion of him. A reſolution to continue in any ſin after the fit of devotion is over, ſettles Satans Throne faſter in the heart. A wicked mans Sacrifice is always an abomination to the Lord, much more when it is offer'd with a wicked mind, Prov. 21. 27. And what more wicked mind can there be than to reſolve to preſerve the enemy of a bleeding Chriſt ſound, while he is exhibited as broken and bleeding for it?

* Trap on Cant. 7. 7.

[6.] Such as lye in the mire of any ſecret ſin, are not fit for this Ordinance, becauſe 'tis not a converting Ordinance, neither in the intention of God, nor the ordination of Chriſt in the firſt inſtitution. None but viſible Profeſſors were counted capable of it in the primitive times; they firſt continued in the Apoſtles doctrine, and then in breaking bread, Acts 2. 42.

I will grant firſt,

(1.) That it may be the inſtrument of a ſecond or partial converſion. There is a converſion from a natural ſtate to a ſtate of Grace, which is the renewing of the mind; this is ordinarily wrought by the word, as the cord whereby God draws men:

men: And a gradual converſion after ſome fall, as Peter was converted by a look of Chriſt, Luke 22. 32. when thou art converted. This latter may be cauſed by this Ordinance, and that Grace which hath been ſuppreſt by ſin, receive the vertue of a Reſurrection by the Sacrament. The repreſentation of a broken Chriſt, reminds a Man of his ſin committed againſt ſo dear and loving a Saviour. The remembrance of Chriſt in that Ordinance, being the great wheel to ſet all the other wheels in motion, cauſes an actual converſion, by exciting the Grace which was habitually there before: and this may be called a converſion, as converſion is an exerting thoſe principles of Grace infus'd by the Spirit, and habitually reſident in the Heart, though under ſome languor by the prevelancy of ſome ſin.

(2.) I do not queſtion Gods abſolute power. Not what God may do, but what he hath revealed to be his ordinary inſtrument, whereby he will work this or that effect. Who can limit the Holy One of Iſrael? His ways are unſearchable, and his paths paſt finding out: He hath an Almighty Power to create millions of Worlds; it doth not follow therefore that he will do it. God by his abſolute Power may infuſe the firſt Grace into the Heart at this Ordinance; but God hath not diſcover'd any ſuch intention, or declar'd in his word, or in the nature of the inſtitution, that this is the end of it.

3. I do not deny but that it is poſſible, that a man that hath ſome diſpoſitions, and previous preparations to Grace, may have the firſt renewing Grace beſtowed upon him at the Supper. For an unregenerate man may by a ſerious precedent examination rake into his own Heart and Life, ſearch into his ſtate how matters ſtand between God and his own Soul, whereupon follow ſome convictions, contrition, and diſaffection to his darling luſt, and ſome reſolutions againſt it; and God may come in with converting Grace at the Sacrament, and make an utter divorce between the Soul and the Sin, and the new name may be given together with the Manna, and Grace infus'd at that inſtant. Where there are ſuch diſpoſitions to the receiving a new form, why may it not be introduc'd at that time as well as another? Yet if any ſuch effect be, I ſhould rather aſcribe it to the word attending the ſigns, than to the ſigns themſelves, or the act of receiving; the beginning of Grace, being the proper end of the word, and not of the Supper. This is Suarez his opinion.

(4) I will not deny but that 'tis poſſible, that a man ſeeing the paſſion of Chriſt repreſented in the Supper, may have ſuch an impreſſion made upon his heart, and his affections united to Chriſt. The exhortations may be inſtrumental to the converting a ſpectator of the action, and a hearer of the word. The ſight of miracles hath been inſtrumental to the converſion of ſome (though I do not remember any particular inſtance of any mans converſion by the ſight of a miracle, without the word preached before, and then miracles added for confirmation of the word) the ſight of things makes a deep impreſſion upon us. The whole creation is a Book of Gods Printing, and preſents us with inſtructions worthy our notice, and generative of reflections in us. God doth teach by the eye as well as by the ear, and Sacraments are called verbum viſibile. This may be; but there is no example of any ſuch converſion in Scripture; nor doth the end, manner, and nature of the inſtitution, credit the opinion of its being a converting Ordinance; nor hath Chriſt diſcovered his will that it ſhould be ſo. If any man hath been converted by it, I ſhould rather attribute that effect to the word, the proper inſtrument of it: We ſay, ſol & homo generant hominem, yet we do not call the Sun, but the man the Father of the Child. Suppoſe a man had been converted by the Supper by the good pleaſure of God, muſt men unfit for it, plead a right to it? Becauſe one walking in the way hath found a treaſure, muſt every one expect the like hap by walking in the ſame path? I have heard of ſome, and knew one, who dated his firſt ſpirititual awakening from a dream; but would not he dream, that ſhould look upon that as an inſtitution of God to that purpoſe? Becauſe one hath been cured of an ague by running into water as cold as ice, muſt therefore all under the ſame diſtemper follow the ſame courſe, where they may as well expect their Death as their Cure? No man can reaſonably expect his converſion by coming in ſuch a poſture, whereby contracting more than an ordinary guilt of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, he incurs a greater damnation.

But 'tis not likely to be a converting Ordinance;

(1.) Becauſe

(1.) If Baptiſm be not a converting Ordinance, much leſs is this of the Supper. That ſuppoſeth Faith in the adult perſon, and the profeſſion of Faith in the parent for the child. The Jews did not admit a Proſelyte to Circumciſion before he was inſtructed in the Law, then upon his own profeſſion he was admitted to the Seal, and his children upon the profeſſion of the parent; and the Apoſtle admitted no adult perſons to Baptiſm, but upon their profeſſion of Chriſtianity. Circumciſion was a Seal of the righteouſneſs of Faith, Rom. 4. 11. It was a Seal of the righteouſneſs of faith which he had, being yet uncircumciſed. The Circumciſion at the firſt inſtitution ſuppoſed Faith in the party. Baptiſm hath the ſame relation, much more the Supper: a Seal ſuppoſeth ſomething to be ſeal'd. If it be appointed for ratifying the covenant and promiſes of it to the receiving Soul, it ſuppoſeth that condition in the Receiver, which the Covenant requires, otherwiſe it ſeals nothing. Anciently they did admit the baptized perſon immediately to the Supper, though they kept them long in inſtruction before they adminiſtred the former.

* Surrz ſomewhat enlarged.

(2.) This Sacrament is appointed for nouriſhment, and that ſuppoſeth life. *A Sacrament doth not ſuppoſe the effect which it was inſtituted to produce; but this Sacrament ſuppoſeth grace in a Participant. And indeed Bread and Wine are not order'd to enliven a dead man, but to nouriſh and maintain life in a living man. The bellows kindle not the wood, but ſuppoſe fire kindled before. This Sacrament is inſtituted as a part of refreſhment, with meat and drink. And though Chriſt, who is exhibited in this Sacrament, can raiſe a dead man, yet he is offer'd in this Ordinance for producing ſuch effects which are agreeable to the nature of it. He is offer'd as ſpiritual food, and ſpiritual food ſuppoſeth a new birth.

(3.) Pre-examination implies it to be no converting Ordinance. If it were ſo, what need this bar, So let him come, and not otherwiſe? What need ſuch a ſtrict examination, whether they did repent, or whether they were regenerate? He muſt examine himſelf, whether he be a ſincere Profeſſor of Chriſtianity, whether he have true repentance and faith, whether Chriſt be in him. That which is prerequir'd to the Lords Supper, it was not properly inſtituted to effect.

(4.) The nature of Excommunication ſpeaks as much. Had it been a converting Ordinance, ſhould not the inceſtuous perſon rather have been kept in the Corinthian Church for his amendment and reformation, than thrown out? 1 Cor. 5. 13. Put away from among you, &c. It being intended as a medicine to reduce him to repentance and humiliation, did not deprive him of that which was the chief remedy to bring him to repentance. Though it be a cutting off from communion with the Church and Church-priviledges, yet not from hearing the Word, which is not properly a Church-priviledge, but the priviledge of all where the Goſpel comes. An excommunicate perſon is to be held in the ſame rank as a Heathen or Publican, Mat. 18. 17. Who would deny Turks and Pagans acceſs to hearing the Word, if they would come? or not rather invite them to it, and gladly receive them? Converting Ordinances may be diſpenſed to known impenitent ſinners. Chriſt preached the Word to the Phariſees, his ſtout-hearted enemies, who he knew conſpired againſt his life. But he inſtituted and adminiſtred the Supper only among his Diſciples.

(5.) The Word was appointed to work Faith. Rom. 10. 17. Faith comes by hearing. But where is it ſaid, Faith comes by receiving the Sacrament? There is plain proof for the one, none for the other. Paul was ſent by preaching to open mens eyes, Acts 26. 18. We find many converted by the Word, none by the Sacraments; the Jailor by the Word, Lydia by the Word, the Eunuch by the Word, three thouſand by the Word. Faith is neceſſary to a right hearing the Word, not abſolutely; for men hear, that they may believe; but the Word doth not profit us, unleſs mixed with Faith, i. e. unleſs that which they hear, be believed and aſſented to by them. If either this or Baptiſm had been converting Ordinances, Pauls Commiſſion would have run that way; but he was ſent, not to baptize, but to preach the Goſpel.

Since then 'tis no converting Ordinance, thoſe that are unconverted, who never yet repented of, and forſook their ſecret ſins, are not fit Gueſts for Chriſt.

But

But ſome will conclude the approach of ſecret ſinners, from Judas his partaking of this Ordinance; but that is a queſtion. Some think Judas did receive, others conclude he did not, and that he went out before the Supper: Zanchy thinks it thwarts the ſtory of Saint John's Goſpel: Beza gathers that he was not there, from Joh. 13.30. He then having received the ſop, went immediately out, εὐθέως ἐξῆλθεν, which was at the end of the ſecond Supper, after which Chriſt inſtituted the ſacred Supper. The ſop was properly a part of the rite belonging to the Paſchal Lamb, dipt in the ſauce of bitter herbs, which the maſter of the Family reacht to every Gueſt, Exod. 12. But the Sacramental Bread was broken, not dipt in any liquor. Gomarus * hath this argument, Chriſt (Luke 22. 19, 20.) tells them, his body was given for them, and his blood ſhed for them, without making any exception of Judas, which it is likely he would, if he had been preſent, as he did in his Prayer afterwards, Joh. 17. Judas had no intereſt in the Body and Blood of Chriſt, for remiſſion of ſin; his ſins could not be remitted, neither could he have any profit by the Body and Blood of Chriſt; for Chriſt calls him, John 17. 12. the ſon of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled. And conſider, Judas was in Hell before Chriſt ſuffered Death, for he hang'd himſelf as ſoon as ever he heard Chriſt was condemn'd; and Chriſt's Blood could not be ſhed for him any more than for any other in Hell. 'Tis not likely that Chriſt, who never admitted Judas to the choiceſt familiarities, ſhould admit him to this ſtanding token of his love: When he whipt buyers and ſellers out of the Temple, he would ſcarce ſuffer a Devil to be partaker of his Body and Blood. If he would not pray for Judas, it is not likely he would give the ſymbols of his Body and Blood to Judas. As to that, Luke 22. 21. The hand of him that betrays me, is with me on the table, being put after the relation of the Supper, it is no argument for Judas his receiving it. For the Evangeliſts do not obſerve always in their relations the order of things as they were done. Mark (Mark 14. 23, 24.) relates the paſſage of the Supper, as if the words of inſtitution were delivered after they had drunk the Wine, and eat the Bread without knowing to what end, and the inſtitution had been after their participation of it. According to the other Evangeliſts, this ſpeech concerning Judas was before the inſtitution, Mat. 26. 21, &c. Mark 14. 19, &c. But ſuppoſe Judas did partake of the Supper, what encouragement is it to a ſecret ſinner at any time to venture upon it, when he may fear Judas his reward, and a greater power of the Devil and his Luſts over him?

* Vol. 1. p. 471.

Uſe. Let us look well to our ſelves. Priviledges muſt not be reſted in ſecurely, without inſpection into our ſelves, and examination of our ways; we may be odious in Gods eye, though fair in mens. The profeſſion of Faith may be without the Grace of Faith; there may be knowledge without an internal and ſecret practice; much light in rotten wood; there may be a counterfeit integrity, a moral integrity without an Evangelical; a Repentance to be repented of, and a Faith not ſincere. Some ſhall come at the laſt Day and tell Chriſt, they have eat and drank in his preſence, eaten his Body, and drank his Blood in the Sacrament, and be anſwered with a dreadful I know not whence you are, Luke 13. 26, 27. God will ſhut Heaven's Gates againſt many, whom the Gates of the viſible Church cannot be lock'd againſt. Something elſe is required to give a title in the judgment of God, than what gives a title in the judgment of man. Ananias and Sapphira we may rank among the firſt of ſeeming converts, but made the examples of Gods judgment for their ſin.

Doct. 2. 'TIS every mans duty ſolemnly and ſeriouſly to examine himſelf about his intereſt in Chriſt, his habitual grace, his actual right and fitneſs for the Lords Supper before his approach to it. 'Tis not the firſt time of our partaking, but every time, ſo let him come: Now, the ſecond and third time as well as before; great preparations are neceſſary for great duties: The particle ſo, bars men from coming without this previous work. Let him come in ſuch a manner; if he neglects this ſelf-examination, let him not venture upon this great myſtery. Thus Pſal. 26. 6. I will waſh my hands in innocency, ſo will I compaſs thy altar, O Lord, alluding to the ancient cuſtome of teſtifying the purity of their Souls, by the cleanſing their hands, or to the waſhings uſed before Sacrifices: Or if we take Ambroſe his gloſs,

I will with a purity of heart embrace the Meſſiah, ſignified both by the Altar and Sacrifice; So will I compaſs thy Altar; without ſuch an inward Purification, I dare not preſume upon an approach unto it. There ought to be an inſpection into our ſelves that there may be nothing diſagreeable to the Maſter of the Feaſt, or unworthy of his honour. If a care of our Garb and Carriage be neceſſary in our approach to the Table of an Earthly Prince; much more when we come to the Table of the Lord, where the mighty Sovereign of Heaven invites us to feed upon thoſe dainties, which are the delight of his heart, and the nouriſhment of our Souls, the Joy of Heaven, and ought to be the pleaſure of Earth. Chriſt prepar'd himſelf for his ſufferings, he examin'd his own ſtrength before he engag'd, had the aſſurances, ſecurity and accepting teſtimony of his Father before he enter'd upon them, ſo that he had nothing to do but to ſuffer when he came to it; and we ſhould have nothing to do but to feaſt with God, when we approach to him to commemorate thoſe ſufferings. Adam's Body was prepar'd by God before the in-breathing of a living Soul, and our Souls muſt be prepar'd before the entrance of a quickning Saviour. If we take Phyſick, we prepare our Bodies, that the Medicine may have the freer and ſurer operation: when we ſit down at our ordinary Meals, we would have prepared Stomachs. Shall we prepare Veſſels for our own ſervice, and bring unprepared Hearts to the Table of the Lord? Would not we have meat but in a clean Diſh; and ſhall we lay the eternal Food, the Fleſh and Bloud of Chriſt in miry Souls? Every Ordinance hath a preparative, Meditation is to uſher in Prayer, Prayer is to ſanctify the word, the word and prayer to ſanctify other Ordinances. This inſtitution hath Examination for its Harbinger to prepare the way of its acceſs to us, and our acceſs to it.

1. This ſelf-examination or preparation is neceſſary. God requir'd it in all duties. Purification went before Sacrificing. The preparation and examination of themſelves as to Ceremonial uncleanneſs, was ſtrict before the Paſſeover, which was inferiour to this Ordinance, as the legal ſtate was to the Evangelical. The mercy to be now remembred is greater; the duties of preparation and devotion ought not to be leſs. The Death of Chriſt was then repreſented to be ſuffer'd in time; 'tis now repreſented both as ſuffer'd and accepted. The clog of legal adminiſtrations is knockt off by the Goſpel, but not the holineſs, which is both the beauty of the Soul, and an Ornament of divine Inſtitutions. The meaneſt Veſſel belonging to the Sanctuary, the ſhovels, baſons, fleſh-hooks, and fire-pans, were not to be uſed without preparation by an holy oyl, Exod. 40. 9, 10, 11. Much more ought we to be ſanctified for the participation of the Symbols of that Body, which was crucified for us on Earth, and glorified for us in Heaven. The circumſtances at the inſtitution require it; the room wherein it was inſtituted, was prepar'd, Mark 14. 15. Chriſt waſhed his diſciples feet before the Inſtitution, John 13. 5. We muſt imitate him, and waſh our Souls before the participation. The Spirits ſanctification gives a right to the benefits purchas'd by the Bloud of Chriſt. The heart which is a Veſſel to receive the Body of Chriſt, ought to be prepar'd, as well as the room wherein he firſt appointed and celebrated the ſymbols of it, or the Grave wherein his Body was to be awhile enſhrin'd. His Body in the Sacrament muſt be wrapt in a clean Soul, as well as his Body by Joſeph in clean linnen. Our Saviour enter'd not upon his offices without preparation by prayer and faſting, Mat. 4. 12. Mat. 26. 36. to ſet us a pattern of the like practice before any great undertaking. If men were to ſanctify themſelves before they came to the Sacrifice, 1 Sam. 16. 5. Sanctify your ſelves, and come with me to the Sacrifice, and eat of the part appointed for the Feaſt: There is as much reaſon for preparation for the commemoration of the greateſt Sacrifice that ever was, the ſubſtance of all thoſe that were offer'd before it. This cannot be without a previous examination of the quality and meaſures of the habitual Grace in us, and what filth remains to be purged out.

(1.) 'Tis neceſſary to clear up a right. There is an outward acceptation of Chriſt and his Laws, without a true and inward change of heart. All the Corinthians were called Saints by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 1. 2. called to be Saints; Saints by an outward calling, not all ſo by an inward regeneration. There are blazing Comets which may appear bigger and greater than a fixed Star. A gilded Metal and true Gold are outwardly like one another, yet differ in their ſpecies. There is a Sanctification which is common to Apoſtates from the Faith, Heb. 10. 29. The Scripture mentions a dead faith, Jam. 2. 26. which is no more a faith than a carcaſs is a man. There is a repentance unto life, Acts 11. 18. which ſuppoſeth a dead repentance, like the humiliation of Ahab, dropping tears without a mollifying of his natural hardneſs, or Judas his ſorrow raiſed by the fire of his conſcience, not by the look of his Maſter. There is a lively hope, 1 Pet. 1. 3. which ſuppoſeth a dumpiſh and heavy-headed hope. There are lively ſtones, 1 Pet. 3. 5. which implies that there are ſome unhewn and rough ſtones, not fitted and prepared for the Temple. There is a repentance towards God, and a ſorrow which works death, differenced not in their outward acts, their ſhape and reſemblance being alike, but in their inward aims. The building upon the rock and the ſandy foundation, might be of the ſame outward beauty, form, height: the foundations were different; the one firm, the other fading. Satans children may appear Angels of light as well as their Father. There is a Faith common with Devils; there is a Faith proper to Chriſtians, ſolis & ſemper, always in the habit, though not always in the act.

(2.) 'Tis neceſſary for the exciting of Grace. That the Soul may be excited before. That there may not be an ebb in our affections, when there is a floud of our Saviours bloud. That our ſtomachs may not fail us in the preſence of a full banquet. That we may not have little thoughts in the preſence of great and adorable objects. The Paſchal Lamb was not to be eaten boil'd, but roaſted, Exod. 12. 8, 9. The Jews ſay, they were not to baſte it with water, but with Wine or Oyl, both inflaming: To ſhow indeed the mighty agonies and ſcorching ſufferings of Chriſt. Perhaps alſo to mind us of the warm and glowing frame our hearts were to be in at the eating of our Paſſeover ſacrificed for us, that we may have fervent affections without any chilneſs to damp our heat. To think or ſpeak of the work of Redemption without a ſuitable devotion, is unworthy of any that bears a Chriſtian Badge; much more to have ſlight and creeping affections, when the great Myſteries of it, with all the parts, are preſented before our eyes. An actual exerciſe of Grace is neceſſary to the concocting this ſpiritual food, as an actual excitation by Nature of that Vitriol humor, or natural heat, or whatſoever other cauſe of concoction it is, for the preparing our bodily food to be nouriſhing to the members. To give meat to one in a ſwoon is all one as to put meat into the mouth of a dead man; the vitals in one are extinct, in the other oppreſt and languiſhing, and unable to perform their office. This excitation and exerciſe cannot conveniently be without an antecedent preparation and examination. In the caſe of the body it is the work of Nature, in the caſe of the Soul it is the act of the mind and will quickned by Grace. The excitation of Grace in the Soul is not as natural as that of the concoctive faculty in the body, which is done without any act of our mind, as our breathing is. This will revive graces, which ſeem to lye buried under aſhes, into a flame, and rouze up holy Principles that lay dormant in a bed of lazineſs.

(3.) 'Tis neceſſary to prevent Sin. The Apoſtles direction to them to examine themſelves, implies the want of it to be the cauſe of thoſe miſcarriages among them, which he taxeth in the preceding verſes. After he had ſhown them the danger, v. 27. the guilt of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, he adds, But let a man examine himſelf. To prevent the ſin of unworthy receiving, and the danger accruing, Let a man examine himſelf. As if he ſhould have ſaid, Had this duty been practiſed, Chriſt would have had more Gueſts and fewer Executioners of him at his Table. If this were always practiſed, none would dare (as too many in the world do) to approach the Lords Table only with a deſign to wipe off their old ſcores; and, upon a preſumption, that their conſciences are clear'd of their former debts, begin the ſame ſins afreſh with more eaſe. As thoſe in the * Poet, who beſprinkled themſelves with the water Sacred to Mercury, and begg'd of him, that they might more ſecurely cheat and cozen hereafter. This is to offer a Sacrifice with a wicked mind, Prov. 21. 27. To bring Devils to Gods Table to grow up into a Legion afterwards. To make buds of ſin to be full blown, which a ſerious and careful examination would prevent. Melting affections and an hungry ſenſe are the fruits of this work, and Antidotes againſt encroaching temptations.

2. As 'tis neceſſary, ſo 'tis univerſal. Let a man examine himſelf. Not ſome men, but every man. The moſt ſubſtantial Chriſtian, as well as the weakeſt, or one that lies drown'd ſtill in the deluge of the Fall. All the Corinthians were not ſpots in the Feaſt, certainly ſome were free from the common taint. If there be a Judas in Chriſts Family, the reſt of the Apoſtles were holy; there is alſo an Elijah, and ſeven thouſand more that have not bow'd their knees to Baal in the time of Iſraels Apoſtaſie. Yet the Apoſtle excludes none from this duty. Let a man examine himſelf, i. e. every man. Gracious men are beſt fitted for this work of Self-Examination. They ſhould not only conſider whether they have the habits of Grace, but whether the prints of the Spirit be as plain as when they were firſt ſtampt; whether their grace be in ſuch a plight and poſture fit to meet the Lord Jeſus in his great inſtitution. A Nobleman when he comes to his Prince's Table, doth not only reflect upon his quality, kindred, and relation, but whether he hath a garb ſuitable to the preſence of his Sovereign. A Believer in habit may want the act of Faith, and partaking of the Supper in ſuch a poſture, receive a frown inſtead of a ſmile, and bear away a mark of Chriſts anger inſtead of a badge of his favour. Some of the good Corinthians, becauſe of their careleſneſs in this, fell under Gods ſtroke, had weakneſſes and ſickneſſes ſent among them, and ſome ſeiz'd upon by death, which is called a chaſtiſement, a temporal judgment, diſtinct from the condemnation of the carnal world, v. 30, 32. For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep. When we are judged, we are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world. God intending by this means to reduce them to their duty, and a reverence conformable to his inſtitution. He chaſtiſed them with the goodneſs of a Father, that he might not condemn them with the rigours of a Judge. Uzziah a good King, as well as Uzzah a good man, may be too bold with holy things, and may ſuffer a temporal puniſhment while freed from an eternal judgment. Every man is his own Governor, and ought to ride circuit in his Soul to make inquiſition, and ſet up a Tribunal in his own boſom, and cite himſelf before it. We muſt not only examine, whether we have a Wedding-garment, but alſo whether it be well kept and bruſht; whether no moths be got into it, no new ſpots daſht upon it. A rich robe may be ſometimes ſo beſmear'd and daub'd with mire, that none of the gold-lace upon it may be viſible, till cleanſed. Graces are to be purified as well as ſins purg'd out; Grace, as well as Metal, for want of rubbing and exerciſe, will gather ruſt. The act of Grace is as neceſſary to a partaking the fruit of this Ordinance, as the habit of Grace is to a right to Glory. There being therefore to be a ſpecial exerciſe of faith, repentance, affection to Chriſt, theſe Graces are to be awakened and quickened by a ſelf-reflection. But of this I have ſpoke before.

I ſhall only mention two things.

1. Let a man examine himſelf, as to his ſentiments concerning the nature of the inſtitution. The Apoſtle intimates it in the motive he urgeth to preſs this Examination, v. 29. For he that eats and drinks unworthily, eats and drinks judgment to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lords body. Where he chargeth the not diſcerning the Lords Body, upon the neglect of this. We muſt conſider what an holy and glorious uſe thoſe Elements are deſtin'd to, and the glorious Body of our Lord, which they repreſent, that we may not violate in the Signs the honour due to his Majeſty. * To diſcern the Lords Body, is to conſider it as the Body of the Son of God, of God bleſſed for ever, the Sovereign Lord of the whole World, the Body of the Lamb who takes away the ſins of the world, a Miracle of goodneſs, the Pavilion of the Sun of Righteouſneſs, the pledge of Believers entring into Heaven, a Body purer than the Heavens in Holineſs, and higher than the Heavens in Glory. Conſider the deſign of this Body: It was to be a Sacrifice for the World, an Expiation of Sin, the Ligature of the Church to God. It hath been loaded with our crimes, and born the puniſhment of our ſins upon the Croſs. It hath undergone the chaſtiſement of our peace. It hath been the purchaſe of our peace, the price of our liberty, the cauſe of our life. It bow'd down upon the Croſs

Amyraut Paraphr.

* Daillé Melange des Sermons, Serm. 28. p. 300, 301. 302. ſomewhat changed, but imitated.

Croſs to purchaſe our happineſs, and mounted up to Heaven to enſure it to us, and poſſeſs it for us. The Death of this Body was of univerſal influence to expiate our ſins, the Reſurrection of this Body was for the juſtification of our perſons. It ſunk into the Grave loaden with our guilt, it roſe out of the Grave, and aſcended to Heaven to be inveſted with an unconceivable immortality for our conſolation. Angels cannot behold it without admiring our happineſs, God cannot behold it without wiping out the ſins of a Believer, upon the account of the ſufferings it underwent; he cannot caſt his eye upon it, without remembring what, and for what it ſuffered. 'Tis this Body Crucified, but now glorified; this Chriſt dying, but now living for ever, which the Elements repreſent to us, and that as a Sacrifice, not as ſuffering an ordinary Death. We muſt therefore diſcern the gift God preſents us with, as greater than if he gave us the whole World, ſince the Creator, who infinitely ſurpaſſeth the Creature, gives us his Son, and himſelf in his Son. How can we have full and clear ſentiments of this, without rouzing up our minds, fixing our conſiderations upon it, and reflecting upon our ſelves, whether we underſtand the nature of thoſe myſteries, the deſign of the Death of his Body, and the glorious end of its reſurrection: We cannot without it have a Faith, Love, and Devotion anſwerable to the greatneſs of the things, which our Saviour hath done and ſuffer'd in this Body for us.

2. Let a man examine himſelf what ſoyl he hath contracted ſince the laſt time he was with God; whether the intereſt of God hath prevail'd in our hearts above the intereſt of the Fleſh; or whether ſome ſecret Luſt hath not ſpread its wing, and increas'd its Empire, which may have ſtrength to way-lay the benefits we expect, and be as a wall of ſeparation, between the ſupplies of God and the wants of our hearts. We muſt enquire what violations there have been of the Covenant we made before, and bewail them: He is not fit to renew a Covenant with God, who is careleſs of the former breaches of it. Duſt will be contracted in a Houſe, if it be not daily ſwept: Our Houſes are ſwept and cleanſed more ſolemnly before the coming of invited Gueſts. Do we invite Chriſt into our Souls, and ſhall we not examine every corner, and ſearch out the the dirt and cobwebs which may be offenſive to him? The Spirit of Chriſt is a Dove, and Doves love clean places. The Jews before the Paſſeover ſearcht every hole and chink with a candle for any Leaven that might lye hid, and threw it away as a thing to be abominated. Have we not much more reaſon to inquire what old Leaven hath ſwell'd up our Souls, find it out, and manifeſt our hatred of it? Whether we have not ſtor'd up ſome new nails, new ſpears, new gall which may afflict our Saviour, and be as bitter to him as the crucifixion: whether any thing hath crept in to impair our affections to God? The nature of the Ordinance requires this inquiſition. Filth is not fit for a Feaſt: We look what dirt there is upon our Hands, before we take what is neceſſary for our ordinary repaſt. A Belial in the Heart, and Chriſt at a Banquet, have no alliance. A careleſneſs whether we are defiled or no, is inconſiſtent with this Feaſt; and if any traſh be got into our ſtomachs, it may hinder our ſpiritual appetite, and a hearty feeding upon Chriſt. Let that be the matter then of a good mans inquiry, whether he hath kept to God as his Soveraign, to Chriſt as his Saviour, and to the Holy Ghoſt as his Comforter: Whether Grace hath attained more ſtrength, and ſin more weakneſs; whether the Soul be more ſtraightly or looſely within the bond of the Covenant. And indeed true Grace is like the Angel of Gods preſence, which conducted the Iſraelites to Canaan; it will not countenance any intruding Luſt, or pardon any Iniquity, though it will beg Gods Pardon for it. Theſe two inquiries are neceſſary to every man that hath habitual Grace and fitneſs for this Ordinance.

But,

3. We ſhould enquire whether we have habitual Grace or no: Whether there be thoſe uniting glewing Graces*, Faith and Love. He that comes to the Supper without Faith, ſaith good Mr. Tindall, is like a man that thinks to quench his thirſt by ſucking the Ale-bowl; 'tis but a piece of Bread we receive, without Faith; the Symbol of the Body of Chriſt, without the Soul and Spirit of Chriſt; and ſo we have no more advantage by the Ordinance, than the Jews which Crucified Chriſt would have had, if they had eaten of his Fleſh, and drunk of the Blood, which then then iſſued from his Body; or than the Beaſts had, which drank of the Rock (which typified Chriſt) as well as the Congregation, Numb. 20. 11. 1 Cor. 10. 4. which had no more benefit by it, than if they had drunk of any ordinary Water. There muſt be an inward Grace as well as an outward Ordinance, to have a ſpiritual benefit. Plagues come out of the Temple, Revel. 15. 7. great Judgments from Ordinances careleſly and ſinfully uſed. The word is the ſavour of Death unto ſome, as well as the ſavour of Life to others. Habitual Grace there muſt be; a perfection of Grace is not required; if ſo, then none but the innocent Angels, and glorified Saints were fit Gueſts. The perfecteſt indeed Soul is not too good a Veſſel to receive the Lord of Life; but God requires only of us a diſpoſition of Heart, ſutable to the deſign of the Ordinance, a deep ſenſe of our miſery, a lively ſorrow for our crimes, a hearty embracing his Son, a ſtrong reſolution to be at enmity with ſin, and at peace with God: It muſt be a diligent tryal, as we would try Metals by the Fire; we may eaſily be deceiv'd, and think that to be the Eccho of the Spirit, which is but the hiſſing of the * Serpent, and the whiſpers of Satan.

* As D. Preſton calls them.

* Calvinwill.

The great Grace which we ſhould ſearch for, is Faith.

We ſhall lay down ſome ſigns of it,

1. Negatively.

1. Negatively.

[1.] Faith is not a general acceptation of Chriſt or profeſſion of him. Many mens Faith is built only upon humane tradition, education, or the Laws of a Nation. Mens living in a Chriſtian Commonwealth, and owning the Chriſtian Religion upon a ſecular account, is no evidence of Faith, becauſe what is entertained upon the ſcore of intereſt, will upon the change of intereſt, be as ſoon caſhier'd as it was embrac'd. The ten Tribes in Solomons time profeſt the legal and Temple-worſhip; but after Jeroboam had ſet up the Calves at Dan and Bethel, they were as ſuperſtitious in the obſerving of them, which is evident by the complaints of the Prophets, eſpecially of Hoſea throughout his whole Prophecy. They were not forc'd to it ſo much by Jeroboam, as willingly revolted from God, Hoſ. 5. 11. They willingly walked after the commandment, i. e. after the commandment to worſhip the Calves. So eaſily are the vulgar induc'd to ſtep into the Religion of Authority, and make any thing a God that their Rulers would have ſo, though it be a Calf. Faith is an act of the freeſt choice, not a diſpoſition which is deriv'd by inheritance and ſucceſſion, from generation to generation, as it is with People who will be of the ſame ways of their Fathers; but it is a free election of Chriſt upon a ſight of his Excellency.

[2.] Nor is it a dogmatical Faith, whereby we believe the truth of the Scriptures, and the Divine Authority of them. Indeed there muſt be a knowledge of Chriſt, what he hath done, and what he hath ſuffered, elſe there is no taking of him as God preſents him. True Faith is never without this knowledge, though this knowledge and aſſent ſeems to be often without true Faith. There may be a Faith to believe that Chriſt is the Son of God, without a Faith to embrace him; there may be an Oyntment pour'd upon the Head, which doth not as Aarons, run down to the skirts of the Garment, to the Heart and Affections. Many may aſſent to the truth of a propoſition, that Chriſt is excellent and lovely, who never bring their will to conſent to eſpouſe him; and by a bare knowledge, there is not an union to Chriſt, any more than by a ſight and knowledge of a Star there is an union with that Star. Some Scriptures ſeem to place Faith in aſſent in the judgment of ſome, 1 John 4. 2. Every ſpirit that confeſſeth that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God. 1 Cor. 12. 3. No man can ſay that Jeſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt. The Apoſtle John in that, gives only the note of a true teacher as to matter of Doctrine, viz. if he aſſerts that Chriſt is come in the Fleſh, is the true Meſſiah, the Son of God, and Righteous. And the other place ſpeaks of the gifts of the Spirit, not of the inward Grace; the aſſenting to Chriſt that he is Lord, is a gift of the Spirit by a common illumination. And indeed in that age, an aſſent to a new, vilified and perſecuted Doctrine, was a greater teſtimony of Faith, than the higheſt external profeſſions can be in the age wherein we live. An aſſent is the firſt ſtep; but if it be not an approving, efficacious aſſent that overpowers the will, 'tis no more than a condemn'd Devil may have; Putting on Chriſt, Rom. 13. 14. Leaning upon God, Iſai. 50. 10. Believing in Chriſt implies more than a naked aſſent, which is expreſt well enough by a believing God or believing Chriſt.

[3.] Nor is it a temporary joy in the doctrine of the Goſpel, that is true Faith. This is higher than the former: The other being a Glow-worm light in the underſtanding, and this a flaſhy heat in the affections, and a joy in the matter reveal'd, Mat. 13. 20. The ſeed that was receiv'd into ſtony places, was received with joy. Which may be occaſion'd by the novelty of a thing, the ſuitableneſs of it to ſome intereſt or carnal affection upon ſome preſent neceſſity. Such have often been ſeen to revolt again. 'Tis as a mans taking a Servant whom he puts off again: Or as the ſending for a Phyſician in a preſent Fit, and rejoycing at his coming, and putting him off, after ſome eaſe, when the diſtemper is removed.

[4.] Nor is it a preſumptuous perſwaſion of a ſecure and happy ſtate. Many mens Faith is a meer preſumption. They take it for granted, that they have Faith, feed themſelves with an empty conceit, without making an exact ſcrutiny, and bringing it to the Touchſtone of the Word, to try whether it be Faith of the right kind. If Faith were a perſwaſion of a mans Salvation, then all that have not this perſwaſion are not Believers, and then many a gracious Pilgrim in this world, who hath lived many years without it, or with a few glimmerings of hope, would be excluded from that rank wherein he ſtands in the account of God. If it were only a perſwaſion, none of the children of the Kingdom (as Chriſt calls them, Mat. 8. 12. thoſe that live within the Pale of the Church) can be caſt into utter darkneſs. For the command of believing would be no more than a commanding a man to be perſwaded that his ſins are pardon'd, which would be the eaſieſt thing in the world to a carnal heart. And God would command an untruth contrary to his word, if he commanded us to believe that our ſins are pardon'd before we have thoſe qualifications, which are by the word requiſite to the paſſing a pardon to us. Faith is not an aſſurance, much leſs a common perſwaſion. Faith is our Victory, aſſurance the Triumph; Faith is an act of the whole Soul, aſſurance of the mind only: Faith conſiſts in a direct act, aſſurance in a reflex act. Faith is not a proud perſwaſion; for then one in Arms againſt his Creator might be ſav'd in that ſtate with his preſumptuous confidence, as well as that Soul that lies claſping the promiſes, and embracing the precepts.

But (2.) Poſitively true Faith may be evidenc'd,

[1.] In regard of the Object.

(1.) 'Tis a taking Chriſt. The act of Faith on Chriſt is as a Marriage act. Marriage is an act between perſon and perſon, My beloved is mine, and I am his, Cant. 1. 16. The union between the Soul and Chriſt is a ſpiritual union of perſons, as in Marriage, to which it is compar'd, Hoſ. 3. 3. The benefits by Chriſt are conſequent upon it, as the Eſtate follows Marriage. The Perſon of Chriſt is the object of Faith, the promiſe is the encouragement to Faith.

(2.) Taking Chriſt as Chriſt; As appointed and anointed by God. As coming out from God, Joh. 16. 27. Ye believe that I came out from God. Faith ſtands by the Croſs of Chriſt, beholds him bruiſed by the Father for ſin, and ventures upon Chriſt, becauſe the Father hath ſet him out as a Propitiation. If Chriſt be made ſin for us, we muſt receive Chriſt as one that takes our ſins upon him from the date of the Covenant between God and him concerning Redemption: As the Saints of old looked upon him as taking ſin upon him, and then ſlain, which was ſet forth in their Sacrifices, laying their ſins upon the head of the Beaſt before it was ſlain, and in the Scape-Goat, whereon their tranſgreſſions were put, before he was ſent into the wilderneſs, Levit. 16. 21. This is one of the principal things Faith doth eye; for what warrant, what comfort, what encouragement to accept of Chriſt, were it not for this, that the offended God hath appointed him the Redeemer, and his death the way of reſtauration?

(3.) Taking Chriſt entirely, and that upon his own terms. To cleave to the Croſs and bear his Yoke, as a Prince and as a Saviour, taking him as God hath exalted him, Acts 5. 31. Where Chriſt ſaves as a Prieſt, he rules as a Lord, and directs as a Pro-

a Prophet. We are expos'd to wrath by the guilt of ſin; Chriſt is a Prieſt to expiate it: we are captives to the power of ſin; Chriſt is a King to ſubdue it: we are ignorant both of our miſery and remedy; Chriſt is a Prophet to diſpel the foggs of our ignorance. If we will be under the power of ſin, we muſt be under the guilt of ſin; if we will keep our ſins, Chriſt will keep his Blood, and be no Saviour to them, that will be ſervants to their Luſts. In the work of Faith, the Soul feels the guilt of ſin to burthen it, and accepts Chriſt to ſatisfie for it. It ſees the filth of ſin that grieves it, and accepts Chriſt to purge it. It is ſenſible of Armies of ſin which over-run it, and freſh recruits from indwelling corruption, and accepts Chriſt to conquer them; and ſuch a Faith gives glory to God; for by receiving Chriſt to ſatisfie for the guilt, it owns the juſtice of God which hath been provok'd; by complying with the directions of Chriſt for walking in the ways of God, it honours the holineſs of God, which it had before vilified; by bringing all the corruptions to be ſubdu'd by the Royal Authority of Chriſt, it acknowledges the Power and Soveraignty of God, againſt which it had before rebelled. It accepts Chriſt upon his own terms.

(1) To ſerve him. Faith eyes Chriſt as dying, and eyes the end of Chriſts dying. What was Chriſts end in dying, muſt be our end in receiving him. The great end was to redeem a people to himſelf, i. e. to his ſervice, a people zealous of good works, Tit. 2. 14. not only to do good works, but perform them with a zeal for the Redeemer. Faith hath always a holy ingenuity. To pay a ſervice to him that hath paid the ranſom, and lay out its ſtrength for him, from whom it hath received the mercy; to own no other Lord but him, from whom it hath received the Soul, the Life, and all that it hath and hopes for. Faith takes Chriſt for a Lord, not to change him or barter him away for any other maſter, to perform the duties requir'd, as well as to enjoy the dignities offer'd.

(2.) To be ſaved by him. Many men would take Chriſt as a Saviour, but not upon his own terms, they would joyn ſomething elſe with him, they would have Chriſt and Salvation, but in their own way, that ſome glory may be aſcrib'd to their endeavours, to the works of the Law done by them: But Faith is a willingneſs to be ſaved in Chriſts way, merely by his Grace. Faith is the band of marriage on our parts, marriage is but to one; ſince nothing is ſo excellent as Chriſt, he will have no Rival. The bed of Chriſt muſt be kept undefiled. True Faith which works by love, is ſo ingenuous, that it will never rob Chriſt of the honour he paid ſo dear for, and thereby own him but as an half and imperfect Saviour. It will not ſtand before God by any other claim than that of Chriſt.

(4.) Taking Chriſts righteouſneſs is the formal act of it. Faith puts a value upon the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and after a deep ſenſe of ſin, ſings in a triumphant manner, Iſai. 45. 24. In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. This righteouſneſs is entertain'd by true Faith, becauſe by it, the God whom the Soul intirely loves, is exalted in all his attributes; ſaving Faith works by love to God, Gal. 5. 6. and therefore as it is deeply ſenſible of ſin, becauſe it offends God; ſo it cheerfully accepts the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, becauſe it is acceptable and delightful to God. Love to God bubbles up in every act of Faith: for ſince Faith brings us to God, it brings us to affect that God; and it is as impoſſible Faith can act without Love, as that a man can work without hands. The Apoſtle, Phil. 3. 9 deſires to be found in that righteouſneſs, which is through the Faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs which is of God by Faith, values the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, becauſe it was the righteouſneſs of God by Faith; ſo that this righteouſneſs of Chriſt, is entertain'd by a true Believer, becauſe it is a righteouſneſs which doth infinitely pleaſe God. As in the pleadings of this righteouſneſs for it ſelf, it uſeth the pleaſure of God as an argument, ſo in the acceptance of it, it eyes it as a motive. And were there any thing in the World, that a believing Soul could think it ſhould honour God more, or pleaſe God better in, than in relying on Chriſt, it would do that. All true Grace levels the intentions to the glory and delight of God.

(2.) Conſider it in regard of the adjuncts of it.

(1.) 'Tis a mourning and penitent Faith. The ſtrongeſt Faith is ſo. The ſtronger the Faith, the deeper the ſenſe of ſin. Paul cryes ſorrowfully out, Who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? after he had cloſed with Chriſt by Faith.

'Tis

'Tis the work of Faith to keep alive upon the heart the ſenſe of the guilt, filth, and evil of ſin, to make the Soul have vile thoughts of it ſelf, and high thoughts of its Deliverer. When the Law of Faith is in the heart, the heart of ſtone is turned into a heart of fleſh, and the Lion-like diſpoſition becomes Lamb-like, and as a child before God. The horror of conſcience is remov'd by the Sun-ſhine of Faith; but the ſenſe of the guilt and filth of ſin is increaſed by the light of it. Abraham had the ſtrongeſt Faith and the deepeſt humility. How ſelf-abaſingly doth he plead with God for Sodoms ſafety, and receive the promiſe from God with his mouth in the duſt, Gen. 17. 3. And Abraham fell on his face, and God talked with him. And is it not impoſſible for any believing Soul to reflect upon the agonies, wounds, and dying groans of Chriſt, and his own vileneſs and ſin for which Chriſt did undergo them, and not be filled with a godly ſorrow and ſelf-abhorrency? A proud Faith is as great a contradiction as an humble Devil.

(2.) 'Tis joyned with a high eſteem and valuation of Chriſt. The Soul prefers him in the mind and judgment above any thing that can pretend a claim to its affection: it ſets ſuch a rate upon him, that all the Treaſures of Heaven and Earth cannot work it out of that eſteem, 1 Pet. 2. 7. To you which believe, he is precious. But how precious, the tongue of an Apoſtle, no not of an Angel, can expreſs. So precious he is, that the promiſes of Angels, the threatnings of Devils, the allurements of the World, the pleaſures of Sin, yea and the hopes of enjoying ten thouſand worlds, ſhall never perſwade him to part with Chriſt. Alas! there is no loſs dejects him ſo much as his abſence, no purchace delights him ſo much as his preſence. The weakeſt Faith can appeal to Chriſt, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee, would love thee, grieve that I can love thee no more. Faith and Love are the two uniting Graces, and therefore cannot be ſeparated. To an Unbeliever he is without beauty and comelineſs, nothing deſirable in him; to others he is a Pearl of great price, the Head of the corner. Faith only ſees the worth of Chriſt. 'Tis joyn'd alſo with high admirations of God for Chriſt, aſtoniſhments at the riches of grace, and treaſures of love. It works by love; it makes uſe of this affection to carry out all its ſervices to God with thankfulneſs. The love of God is as a Law within the heart of Faith, which makes it return to God as well as receive from him; and it can receive nothing without glorifying the Donor.

(3.) 'Tis accompanied with holineſs; 'tis therefore call'd a holy Faith, Jude 20. It muſt have holineſs as a concomitant, though not holineſs as an ingredient in the juſtifying act. Faith engrafts the Soul into Chriſt, the root of holineſs, and it draws from him ſap for holineſs. Our implanting into Chriſt, is rather to make us fruitful, than to make us joyful. Actions follow life, and actions of the ſame kind with that life which the creature hath; as vegetative life produceth vegetative actions, ſenſitive life ſenſitive actions, a rational life rational actions; ſo a ſpiritual believing life, ſpiritual and believing actions. Faith is not a name, a picture, but a real Principle: 'Tis a working Grace, and therefore obedience is called the obedience of Faith, Heb. 11. 8. Faith doth not only change a mans ſtate, but alters his nature; hence we are ſaid to be purified by Faith, Acts 26. 18. As it goes forth to Chriſt, it is juſtifying; as it bathes it ſelf in the Bloud of Chriſt, 'tis ſanctifying. Education may waſh the feet, but Faith only waſheth the heart. As we were in Adam, members of that corrupt Root, we do partake of his guilt and of his filth. Being united to Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, we partake of his righteouſneſs and his fulneſs. 'Tis a counterfeit Faith which pretends to partake of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt without a communication of the fulneſs of his Grace. True Faith imploys the power of Chriſt in the ſubduing of ſin. 'Tis a fruit of the Spirit, and the Spirit doth not produce one fruit without the reſt. 'Tis the root Grace, the root is dead if it have no branches, no fruit. Faith is ſeated in the heart, and ſpreads it ſelf to the whole man and all the actions, as Lines from the Center. It begins in the underſtanding, but hath its perfection in the will, deſcends to the affections; ſends, like the Soul, its influences out through the whole man. Though it be weak, it will have its motion. If it cannot go to Heaven, it will cry to Heaven. The remark Chriſt makes of Paul, an Infant-believer, is, Behold he prays, Acts 9. 11. As if he did not pray before in the time of his infidelity. His Prayer now was of another colour and temper from his ſelf-righteous, formal, cold Praying before.

(4.) 'Tis attended with growth. 'Tis ſtill climbing, and cannot get high enough till it end in viſion. True Faith is always joyn'd with Prayer againſt Unbelief. It encreaſeth in its acts, and in the frequency and vigour of them. It firſt ſucks the breaſt, and afterwards can chew the Manna; 'tis looking much and often upon Chriſt. 'Tis at firſt accompanied with tremblings; it may be God may hear me and ſupply me; afterwards it comes more boldly, and loves to look Chriſt in the face. * And there is a growth in all Graces proportionable; for where there is life, all the members grow, the head doth not grow in knowledge, and the heart decay in love.

* Dr. Reynolds.

[3.] Conſider it in the manner how 'tis wrought. The word works Faith and preſerves Faith, and Faith improves the word. 'Tis not a Gourd which grows up in a night, there is much tugging to perſwade the Soul to venture upon Chriſt. Great power would not create a World in a moment, but took time; great power doth not produce Faith in an inſtant; there are preparations and conflicts before the hand of Faith lays hold on a Saviour: And it may be ſaid, as Iſaac to his Son, If this be veniſon, how cameſt thou by it ſo quickly? If this be Faith, how cameſt thou by it ſo ſuddainly, without much travel and labour? The Word is the Seed, the Spirit the Sun that quickens it. By the Word the Spirit diſcovers the vileneſs of a mans nature, the ſinfulneſs of Sin, the fulneſs of Chriſt, and the freeneſs of his Righteouſneſs. By the Word, the Spirit opens our Eyes to ſee our nakedneſs and miſery; the Word proclaims the articles of peace, ſilenceth our reaſonings, anſwers our objections, ſtops the mouth of a cavilling ſinner, juſtifies the terms upon which Chriſt doth offer himſelf. 'Tis not a birth of nature, but by the operation of the Holy Spirit. That Spirit that conceived Chriſt in the Womb of the Virgin, doth produce Faith in the Womb of the Soul; ſo that Faith and Chriſt are produc'd by the ſame Spirit, by the ſame Power, by the Spirit that conceived him, by the Power that raiſed him from the Dead.

As there is a neceſſity of Faith in the habit, ſo there is a neceſſity of the acting of Faith in this Ordinance. God will have our recovery in a way contrary to that of our fault; the fall was by believing the Devil rather than God; and God will have our recovery by believing God rather than the Devil. By the ordination of God, there is as great a neceſſity of Faith to partake of Chriſt at a Sacrament, as there is of Chriſt to make a Sacrament beneficial to us.

(1.) Faith is of abſolute neceſſity to regeneration, and only regenerate ones have a right to this Ordinance. Faith is a radical vital Grace; as Blood in the veins is to the Body, ſo is Faith to the Soul. No regeneration without the Spirit, and Faith is the firſt Grace the Spirit infuſeth; no regeneration without the Blood of Chriſt, and Faith is the hyſſop which ſprinkles that Blood upon our Souls. Faith engrafts us into Chriſt, whereas before we grew upon a dead ſtock; 'tis from Chriſt, who is life, that Life is deriv'd to us, and that by Faith, Galat. 2. 20. I live by the faith of the Son of God. We have no right to the Ordinance till we have Faith; this only makes us members of Gods Family. Till we are his Children, we have nothing to do with his Table; they are as carcaſſes that want Faith, and what ſhould carcaſſes do with meat.

(2.) In all worſhip, Faith is to be acted, much more in this. As in worldly actions we ſtir up the faculties of our Souls, and the members of our Bodies; ſo in acts of worſhip we muſt ſtir up the Graces of the Spirit. Faith muſt mix it ſelf with every duty; whatſoever is not of faith, is ſin, Rom. 14 23. It comes from corrupt nature, or refin'd nature, not from renewed and changed nature; ſo inſtead of a welcome, we can expect to be entertain'd only with cloudy looks. To come to this Ordinance without Faith, is to draw water without a bucket, to work without tools, and to go to market without money. There is need of Faith to give us admiſſion into Gods preſence, Heb. 10. 22. There is need of Faith to give us acceptance.

(3.) Faith is the condition of the Covenant of Grace, the ſeal on our part, as the Sacrament is on Gods part. No other Grace hath God cull'd out to make the condition condition of the new Covenant, and indeed no other Grace hath ſuch a congruity and ſuitableneſs to that end, as this. When two parties are fallen out, there can be no firm peace without mutual conſent. God gives his conſent by offering his Son, and Sacraments as a Seal; we give our conſent by Faith only, whereby we owne, approve of, and lay hold on the mercy ſet before us. There is no benefit by any thing in the world, but by accepting and receiving. The Altar is a Sanctuary, but men muſt lay hold on the horns of it. There are Cities of Refuge for ſome ſort of Malefactors, but they muſt run to them. God ſets forth Chriſt as a Propitiation, as a Treaſure of Mercy; there can then be no renewing the Covenant, unleſs as God on the one hand reacheth out his mercy, ſo we on the other hand put forth our hearts to receive it.

(4.) Chriſt in this Ordinance is repreſented as the object of Faith. The Serpent, as lifted up, was the object of the Iſraelites ſight, and upon that they were to expect healing from it; ſo Chriſt as dying is the primary and immediate object of Faith: And being here repreſented as dying, 'tis not a naked repreſentation, but that we may exerciſe Faith upon him under that notion. 'Tis not Chriſt as glorious, but as crucified, is the object of Faith; for as glorious, he is rather the object of love: but the formalis ratio of Juſtification is Chriſt, as taking upon him the form of a ſervant, and becoming obedient to death upon the Croſs. In this Sacrament Chriſt is repreſented as offering himſelf to God, and God offering that Chriſt to us, Chriſts payment in performing the righteouſneſs whereby we are juſtified, and Gods accepting and imputing it to us. Chriſts dying was intended by God as the object of Faith, when he ſet him out upon the Croſs, Rom. 3. 25. And now he ſets him out in the Sacrament, there is the ſame reaſon for Faith: and he is here repreſented more familiar to our Faith than the Perſon of the Father, than the Perſon of the Son of God in Heaven, that we may have more diſtinct thoughts and apprehenſions of him in all the buſineſs he did tranſact between the Father and us, which are the fuel to our Faith. As he was ſet out in Sacrifices under the Old Teſtament, that thoſe that then lived, might exerciſe their Faith in the promiſed Meſſiah; ſo in the Sacraments of the New Teſtament, that we may exerciſe our Faith in the exhibited Meſſiah.

The ſecond Grace to examine our ſelves about, and to exerciſe at this Ordinance, is ſorrow for ſin.

This is neceſſary to the Supper. The way to an heavenly repaſt, as well as the way to heavenly manſions, is through the valley of Baca.

(1.) 'Tis neceſſary to that which is required to the Supper. 'Tis neceſſary to every duty, all approaches to God without it are but impudent ruſhings into his preſence; Repentance is Sanguis Animæ, the Bloud of the Soul. As no Sacrifice was pleaſing under the Law without bloud, ſo no ſervice under the Goſpel is pleaſing without this. Nay, it is the ſoul of all the reſt; hence a broken heart is ſaid to be above all Sacrifices, Pſal. 51. 16, 17. Thou deſireſt not ſacrifice, elſe would I give it, thou delighteſt not in burnt-offering. The ſacrifices of God are a broken ſpirit. God had appointed no Sacrifice for preſumptuous ſins, but brokenneſs and contrition was of force. We perform duties moſt lively, when a ſenſe of ſin is kept alive upon our hearts. The viler thoughts we have of our ſelves, the higher thoughts we have of God. There is nothing ſo much honours God in duties as an humble addreſs. But in this it is very neceſſary, that we may with a broken frame ſuit Gods apprehenſions of ſin in the puniſhment of his Son, and Chriſts apprehenſions of it, when he breathed out his dying groans. To be hard and inſenſible then, is a ſad ſign of a diſtempered heart. The bloud of our Souls ought in a way of gratitude to be beſtow'd upon him, who hath beſtow'd upon us the bloud of his Body. As Mary waſhed the feet of Chriſt, as a preparation to his death, we ought to do the like in a preparation to the ſhowing forth his death.

[1.] 'Tis neceſſary to that ſtate and frame of heart, which every perſon ought to be in. Faith indeed is the condition of the new Covenant; but Repentance is a neceſſary ingredient; faith and brokenneſs joyn hands together in their beings and exerciſes. The matter of the new Creation is a heart of fleſh, which cannot be without a tenderneſs in the concerns of Gods honour. The new Nature cannot be without new affection, and a change of old Sympathies into new Antipathies.

An inſenſible Soul hath no ſpiritual life, a living member will feel pain. 'Tis neceſſary to ſtrong breathings after God; the humbleſt Souls have the quickeſt flights Heaven-ward. The Fowls were created at firſt out of the water, Gen. 1. 20. ſo are our winged deſires from a floud of holy ſorrow.

[2.] 'Tis neceſſary to the ends of this Ordinance.

(1.) Exerciſe and increaſe of Grace. One end is to break the Soul and the ſin, and therefore there ſhould be a preparation by repentance for ſuch an end. If the Soul be well heated before, a look of a dying Chriſt in the Supper will melt it, and ſet the metal a running. There is in this Ordinance the Love and Juſtice of God repreſented, folded in one anothers arms; the ſtrength of them ſingle will do much, much more united. If we have not then a diſpoſition to melt, we ſhall be more hardned, as things are by the Sun, that have no inclination in their nature to be ſoftned. The end of this Ordinance is to wound and ſlay ſin by the power of Chriſts death; and ſin mourn'd for, lyes more naked to the ſtroke, than when it is folded and ſhelter'd in our affections. We come to have clearer and deeper impreſſions from God; and ſoftened wax receives clearer and deeper ſtamps than that which is hard. Every Grace receives a freſh verdure by a ſtream of repentance; the fruitfulleſt Meadows have conſtant ſtreams running through them. Gods end is to repreſent to us the bitterneſs of ſin, as well as his love in Chriſt, and indeed without a ſenſe of the former we cannot have a right eſtimate of the latter. What God aim'd at in the death of Chriſt, he aim'd at in the repreſentation of it to us; and a part of our worthy receiving conſiſts in our having ſuitable affections to Chriſt; and we cannot be affected with his ſufferings, unleſs we underſtand the gall and wormwood in iniquity. The bitterneſs of ſin makes us taſte the ſweetneſs of pardon; mercy would be too cheap, if given to an impenitent Soul. While the taſte of ſin, the Onions of Egypt, is in the heart, it will not reliſh the cluſters of Canaan. We ſhould have a ſuitableneſs to our Maſter. Chriſt is here repreſented as a man of ſorrows, as one that with prayers, tears, and ſtrong cryes obtain'd an anſwer, and with bloud obtain'd Redemption; 'tis not fit we ſhould be ſtrangers to our Maſters temper and diſpoſition, and hug the Spear in our Souls that pierced his heart.

(2.) Comfort is another end, and Communications of the love of God. And this is not to be had without repentance. The dejected humble Publican meets with God ſooner in the Temple, than the flouriſhing Phariſee that ruſh'd in. The Sun refreſheth the Earth when it is ſoftned by rain, but otherwiſe doth parch and ſcorch it. God will not ſmile upon perſons hugging their ſins at a Sacrament. The Wine of conſolation is reſerv'd by God for drooping ſpirits. Job muſt abhor himſelf in duſt and aſhes before God will receive him, Job 42. 6. Though he is as willing as able to revive the ſpirit, yet not till it be humble, Iſai. 57. 15, 17. The fatted Calf is not ſlain, nor to be eaten, till the Prodigal be penitent. The loweſt apprehenſions of a mans ſelf are accompanied with the higheſt Revelations: Moſes and Paul were humble; the one a mourner for his own and the ſins of the people, the other a great ſelf-accuſer, and both had the higheſt communications. If we would have a plaiſter, there muſt be a cutting off the dead fleſh. Mary was bath'd in tears, when ſhe heard that comfortable voice, Thy ſins be forgiven thee, Luke 7. 48. Dark colours are the beſt ground for gilding. If we therefore have a ſlight humiliation, only a little pang of ſorrow, we may meet with a wound inſtead of a plaiſter, and inſtead of Balm be put upon a Rack. We muſt cry Peccavi, before God will return an Euge. The Soul that is moſt humble, hath the firſt ſight of God at the Supper. It will make us prize comfort. That Soul that thinks it ſelf a dog, will be ſure to value a crumb. Repentance makes us have low thoughts of our ſelves and our own deſerts, and high admirations of Chriſt. When ſuch an one meets with ſpiritual comforts at a Supper, what wondring will there be? That I that did not deſerve a ſmile, ſhould have an embrace; I that did not deſerve a drop, ſhould loſe my ſelf in an Ocean! Oh that I that deſerv'd to be damn'd with a witneſs, ſhould meet with a ſeal of his love; that for the flames of Hell, he ſhould give me the cluſters of Heaven! A deep ſenſe of ſin is the moſt powerful Rhetorick to prevail with God. He would deny Abraham nothing, when he prefaced his interceſſion for Sodom with, I am duſt and aſhes, ashes, Gen. 18. 27. The comforts of Christs Bloud are not dropt into, nor can they enter into a heart that cannot weep and bleed for sin.

Since repentance is necessary, let us examine our selves what of this Grace there is in us.

(1.) What is the spring of our sorrow? Whether it be ingenuous, from a sence of what we have received from God, as well as what we have deserved at his hands. Whether it is a scorcht sorrow from a sense of the fire of justice, or a melting sorrow from the kindly heat of mercy. The Fathers kind reception, made his Prodigal Son's icy heart thaw the faster; I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, Luke 15. 18. The Prodigal is the emblem of the Gentiles, and their call to God and repentance towards him, which must be, because they have displeased him. Without a true spring, our crys and groans are of as little value, as the howling of wild Beasts in a toil. Tis then right, when it hath such a temper as the Prodigal, I have offended a kind and loving Father, wasted his Goods, resisted his Spirit, listed my self in the service of the Devil; this Father I have contemn'd, a bountiful hand I have kickt at, a Heaven bespangled with Stars of mercy I have turn'd my back upon. We may weep at the story of Christs passion, when we are not really affected with our sin, the cause of his sufferings, and the displeasure of God. Our sorrow is right, when it is not merely for sin, as it is contrary to our happiness, but as contrary to Gods holiness. This is a conformity to Christ, who mourned for the sins of men, as well as suffered for them, and mourned for them, not because he suffer'd for them, but because God was injur'd by them. There was not a grain of malice and ingratitude in sin but he understood; he had also a clear conception of the holiness of that God, who was offended and injur'd by sin, and from those two parts of knowledge, joyned with an ardent love to his Father, and charity to man, he could not but have the most enlarged sorrow for sin, and the highest detestation of it, both as it displeased God, and as it ruined the Creature.

(2.) What is the subject of the sorrow? Is it the sin of nature? do we judge that the greatest sin, and not regard it, as the common People do the Stars, imagining them no bigger than a candle, when they are of a vast bigness? To bewail outward sins, and not that of our nature, is to have a Philosophical frame of Spirit, not that of a Christian. Doth the Body of Death draw from us the loudest groans? Do we lay the ax to the root of sin, or are we mightily busied in lopping off the branches, without a regard of the root? Are inward and spiritual sins the subject of our grief? Can we mourn as deeply for those sins, that none but God and our own Consciences know, as for those which are visible to the eye of man? Doth our hardness of heart, formality, remainders of hypocrisie and Unbelief most afflict us? Is our grief for all sins, and especially for that which hath been the master sin? Do we oppose that which we have the greatest temptations to, as David had to the killing of Saul, which would have helpt him to a Crown, which therefore he calls his Iniquity, Ps. 18. 23, 24.*. Would we have the greatest Delilah no more spared, than the smallest brat of Babylon? And is the enmity so great, that we would destroy the power and strength of sin, which lyes in that master Iniquity? Do we stop our ears against the strongest pleas it makes for it self, and wish as much its Death, as we do our lives? This is a testimony of repentance. Do we hate every sin because it is a falseness to God? Psal. 119. 104. * Mast.

(3.) What are the adjuncts of the grief? Is it in some measure proportionable to our sin, proportionable not to the Law, but to the Gospel? The first cannot be attained by us, because the injury done to God is infinite. What we cannot attain in the act, we should endeavour to attain in affection; where the sin is great, great must be the sorrow, 1 Sam. 7. 6. They drew water, and pour'd it out before the Lord, which some understand of the tears of the People. To drink in sin like water, and only to drop grief, will not agree. Is our sorrow permanent? Is it a true grief, or only a pang? Like heat drops, or a rouling Cloud, that goes away and never returns again? Is our sin like David's, ever before us? Psal. 51, 3. Have not many, a slight kind of sorrow, sprung up only by the seriousness and solemnity of the Ordinance; a seeming falling out with sin, but a quick reconciliation, and receiving it into a stronger favour than before? Transitory affections are too frequent; quent; we find the Iſraelites in the Temple weeping and lamenting, faſting and praying becauſe of their Idolatries and falſe dealings with God, and ſhortly after returning to the commiſſion of the Idolatry they had bewailed. True repentance is always accompanied with a deteſtation and a revenge, 2 Cor. 7. 11. which is indignation, as a furnace heated ſeven times hotter, not a faint and a dying kind of anger. Is the league between Sin and the Soul broken? As God ſeals in this Supper a Covenant of Grace, we ſhould be prepar'd to ſeal a counterpart of duty. As God is ready to ſeal a Pardon, not to remember our ſins to condemn us; we ſhould be ready to ſign a bill of divorce to ſin, not to remember ſin to commit it.

3. Love to God is another Grace we are to examine our ſelves about.

There is a neceſſity of this.

(1.) Spiritual affections to God are required in all duties, much more in this. The higheſt repreſentation of a loving Saviour ſuffering, ought to have a ſutable return of affection. Duties are regarded, not by the multitude (for Hypocrites may be much in doing) but by the affection; ſincere perſons are only much in loving. All that God requires of us, is ſumm'd up into this Grace, Love, Deut. 10. 12. What doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to love him and ſerve him? Men may delight to pray from a natural eloquence, which is (if I may uſe the expreſſion) but as the trimming of a mangy ſacrifice; and delight to hear with ſuch a kind of affection as they would a lovely ſong; but every duty ought to be kindled and enflamed by the fire of love to God; and a mite of ſervice with this, is better than a talent without it. This expels wearineſs in our duties, and makes Gods injunctions our Songs, Pſal. 119. 54.

[1.] Chriſt is here repreſented as the cauſe of our happineſs, in the foundation of the benefits we enjoy, viz. his humiliation, death and paſſion. Here is Chriſt undertaking our ſalvation upon the hardeſt terms, here are the arms of the Son of God open upon the Croſs, the ſpear reaching his heart, with his affections ſtreaming out to us in Blood, when we were his Enemies, and had not a grain of affection to him; and is it not fit we ſhould be prepar'd to cry out with holy raviſhments of affection, worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive honour and glory? This affection muſt needs be due to him, who revers'd the ſentence of our Condemnation, made our Peace and bore our Curſe, had his Hands nail'd, his Head prick'd, his Side pierc'd, his Heart griev'd, that by thoſe marks we might be induc'd to love him. Who can challenge our affections, if he cannot, who undertook our recovery, when there was but a ſtep between us and eternal Death? And how can we act ſuch an affection, if we be not poſſeſſed with it?

[2.] Chriſt as appropriated to us in a way of union, is here ſet forth. Union to him, Communion with him, both depend upon love in each party. What can expreſs a nearer Union of Chriſt to the Soul, than to feed upon him, eat his fleſh, and drink his Blood. Thus to have him incorporated with us. This is as the breaking of a ring, the renewing of a contract between Chriſt and our Souls, a prologue to the great ſolemnization of the nuptials to all eternity. Hence the entertainment Chriſt makes his People, is ſet out under the notion of a wedding ſupper, Mat. 22. 3. And being thus joined unto Chriſt, we are one body, yea, one ſpirit with him, 1 Cor. 6. 17. Now as there can be no myſtical Union with Chriſt without Faith, ſo there can be no moral Union with him without love. With what violence can we run to him, how can we be glewed* to him without this affection? As Chriſt in this Ordinance makes over himſelf to the Believer to be his in love, ſo the Believer muſt make over himſelf to Chriſt, to be his in all ſervice, affection, and obedience.

[3.] The excellency of Gods love in Chriſt is here repreſented. Here is God bringing his Son from Heaven to Earth, from the Earth to the Croſs, from the Croſs to the Grave, making his wrath find a paſſage to Chriſts Heart inſtead of ours, pouring out his Blood to keep us from bleeding, and liſtning to the pleas of this Blood in Heaven, to anſwer the pleas of ſin againſt us; this being the higheſt elevation of the love of God, was intended to draw out our love to him. Love therefore therefore muſt be anſwer'd with love, not with enmity or a cold affection, we elſe run counter to the deſign of God.

[4.] All the Promiſes are ſhown to us in it ſeal'd. All the promiſes of God bound up in the Covenant of Grace, are here confirmed and ratified. And is not this a time for the love of the Soul to work?

(3.) The Graces to be exerciſed in this Ordinance depend much upon Love. Love is the ſpring of the Soul which moves every Grace, and therefore it is called the fulfilling of the Law. Faith hath no operation but by love, Galat. 5. 6. Faith and love are united as well as uniting Graces, faith is the hand, but love is as the ſpirits which move it. And as faith and love in the habit, ſo in the operations they are inſeparable; we muſt cleave to Chriſt, and be cemented to him by faith; but love muſt ſtrengthen the hand; the more we love, the faſter we hold. Faith is not ſincere, but when it teſtifies it ſelf by the operations of love. True repentance flows from love. Mary's tears were moſt free, when her love was moſt hot. The more inflam'd our love to God is, the ſtronger will be our hatred of ſin, as that which is contrary to him; the ſweeter the remembrance of Chriſt is to our affections, the more bitter is the remembrance of any offence againſt him; and indeed without it, we may ſee the print of the Nails, and put our fingers into his Wounds without any remorſe. Delight in Chriſt cannot be without it. Chriſt cannot be much in our thoughts, till he comes to lye neareſt our hearts, and will never be our delight, till he be our beloved. We cannot have high and raiſed thoughts of him, which are neceſſary for a transformation into his glory, without this: ſtrange imaginations will intrude themſelves and be welcome gueſts, unleſs this Grace ſtand at the door to thruſt them away. We cannot burn in our converſes with God, unleſs this Grace ſet us on fire: nor can we have any heavenlineſs in this duty; for it is by this affection that we have our converſation in Heaven in any ſervice. Nor can we have a ſtrong appetite to Chriſt in a Sacrament without it; the ſtronger the apprehenſion of and affection to any good, the more importunate will be our longings for it, and the quicker our motions to it, and the leſs can the Soul brook any diſtance between that good and it ſelf.

(4.) The nature of the Ordinance requires it. 'Tis an heavenly Banquet and requires an heavenly frame. As love is the greateſt grace in Heaven, ſo it ought to be highly operative here. It preſents us with Gods love to us, and therefore calls for a ſuitable return from us. The Heathens obſerv'd a ſuitableneſs in their Sacrifices to the Idols they worſhipped. They would not offer a ſlow-pac'd creature to the Sun, but an Horſe, becauſe of the quick motion of that creature. God here wills the greateſt good to us, and ſhall not we will the greateſt good to God? An enlarged God ſhould make an enlarged heart. Nothing is more becoming, than that love ſhould be recompenſed with love *.

(5.) No benefit can be by a Sacrament without this Grace. Communion with God is entail'd upon it, Joh. 14. 21, 23. He that loves me, ſhall be beloved of my Father, and I will love him and manifeſt my ſelf to him. Not that our love precedes the love of God in the firſt efflux of it, but the degrees and acts of our love, kindled at firſt by the love of God, are rewarded with greater declarations of his love. Where love is acted to God, there both the Father and Son will combine together for ſuch a Souls ſatisfaction, they will come and dwell there by the Spirit in a more cloſe, familiar, and ſtrict communion and more certain poſſeſſion. Where there are the actings of love, though there ſhould be no ſenſe of any new income, this grace would bring a ſatisfaction in the very exerciſe.

Now for the tryal of this Love.

[1.] Let us not judge our ſelves by a general love. As there is a general love of God to man, a general love of Chriſt to mankind in dying and giving a conditional Grant of Salvation upon Faith and Repentance, and a particular love to the Soul of a Believer; ſo likewiſe in man there is a general aſſent, and a particular ſerious aſſent to the Truth of God; and accordingly a general love upon the apprehenſions of what Chriſt hath done in general. There is a common love to God, which may be ſo called, becauſe the benefits enjoy'd by men are own'd as coming from that Fountain; a love, ariſing from the apprehenſions which men commonly have of the goodneſs of God in himſelf; and a common love wrought wrought in them to God, as to other things that are good. Again, men may have a false faith, and a false apprehension of pardon of sin, when indeed no such pardon is granted to them; so they may have proportionably, a false love upon such an ungrounded Belief.

[2.] Nor let us judge our selves to be Lovers of God, because of our education. Many have no higher reason of their love to Christ, but because their Forefathers profest him, and so upon the same score that any Heathen lov'd his Idol, an Egyptian his Apis and Onions, or a Turk his Mahomet, or a Papist his Images, do many titular Christians love Christ. As among the Papists many cleave to the Popish Principles, because their Fathers did so; so among us, many have no other reason of their adhering to the Christian Profession, and seeming affection to Christ, but the Tradition handed to them by their Parents.

[3.] Nor let us judge our selves by any passionate fits of Love, which may sometimes stir in our Souls. There is a love in the sensitive part, which is the passion of love, a love rather stumbled on than judicially taken up; and those violent kinds of affections, whether of love, joy or sorrow, are not long-liv'd. But there is a love in the will, which is a rational love, which consists in a consenting to and chusing of Christ, and is always accompanied with a true Faith.

But let us examine,

(1.) The motives and object of our affection. Do we love God for himself, or for his benefits? To love Christ for the Loaves, is common to the Multitude. To love God for his outward mercies, is a natural love: to love him for himself, is a gracious love. To love him for his benefits, is rather to love our selves, and love our own ends, than to love God. When the inducements to it are humane, and not divine, 'tis a humane, and not a divine love. Many love Christs Dowry, but not his Beauty, his Merit, but not his Person; as in Marriages, many love the Portion without affecting the Person. True love is between Person and Person, not between Person and Estate; that is a true moral love, the other is a true Physical love, but is defective in the due grounds and ends of it. Not but there is and may be a love of what God hath and Promises, and the benefits he confers; this is a love of the reward. But when we love God meerly for this, 'tis then amor mercenarius: when we love God for himself, and the reward in order to him, 'tis a genuine love, it respects other things for God, and God for himself. True love is grounded upon a sight of God, a serious and deep consideration of him, comparing him with other things, viewing those unmeasurable Excellencies which are in him, upon which the Soul doth judiciously conclude, That there is infinitely more sweetness and amiableness in God and Christ, than in all the pleasures and profits of this World. Thus the Spouse compares her beloved with other beloveds, Cant. 5. 9, 10. She considers what the World affords, and wherewith it allures, and after a diligent inquisition, the object of her love is Christs Person, the motive of her love is Christs Excellency; and such a love will embrace a Crucified as well as a glorified Christ; a Condemn'd, as well as an adored Christ. Where God is lov'd for himself, every thing of God is highly valued, his word, his wayes, his Ordinances. Christ in his whole latitude is beloved, in all his Offices. In his Death as a Sacrifice, in his life as a Pattern; the power of his Death, as well as the propitiation by it.

(2.) What is the nature of our love?

[1.] In regard of the prevalency of it. Do we love Christ solely, supreamly; doth this affection swallow up all other affections; as Moses his Rod turn'd into a Serpent, did the Rods of the Ægyptian Magicians? Doth it like the Sun, obscure the light of the lesser Stars? As God is the chief good in himself, he must be so in our esteem. A true conjugal affection to Christ excludes all other things from an equal interest in it; an equal affection to Christ and the World are as inconsistent, and prodigious as two Suns in the World. The Heathens knew the necessity of a prevailing love to their Idols, to be at an expence for them. If the Israelites begin to be fond, though of a Calf, they will deprive themselves of their Jewels to serve it. This prevalent love of Christ is so necessary an ingredient, that it was the main Lesson he prest upon his Disciples, Mat. 16. 24. Luke 14. 26. Self must be denied, if we follow Christ; all Relations must be hated in comparison of Chriſt, if we be Chriſts Diſciples. The Soul of a man is too narrow, and limited to be intenſly affected with, and ſtrongly to purſue at one and the ſame time two different objects. The heart muſt be a Throne reſerv'd for Chriſt, where other things muſt ſit at his feet. For as Chriſt gives himſelf wholly to the Soul, the Soul muſt beſtow it ſelf wholly on Chriſt; And as Luther, Mallem ruere cum Chriſto, quàm regnare cum Cæſare, I would rather periſh with the intereſt of Chriſt, than reign in grandeur with Cæſar. A Hypocrite wills Chriſt in ſubordination to inferiour goods. A ſincere Votary to Chriſt wills inferiour goods in ſubordination to Chriſt. Do we thus love Chriſt in that which croſſeth moſt the carnal inclinations and intereſt of corrupt nature?

Christ,

[2.] In regard of the reſtleſneſs of it. Can nothing but Chriſt and the enjoyment of him content us? Are there inquiries after him, induſtrious purſuits, unutterable groans, that nothing can ſatisfie us, no not all the world without him? Are we importunate, that he may be as a ſeal in our hearts, as well as we as a ſeal in his heart; That there may be clearer engravings, ſtronger impreſſions? A true Lover rejoyceth that he hath any love to give to God, and grieves that he hath no more to beſtow. His life is bound up in Chriſt, as Jacobs was in Benjamin. An hundred worlds cannot content him without his Beloved. He is upon his watch and guard againſt all temptations, which may diſtrub his affection or enjoyment, and accounts the miſſing of Chriſt worſe than Hell it ſelf; all other things will be abhorr'd, and accounted as loſs and dung, Phil. 3. 8.

[3.] What are the effects and concomitants of our love? Are we careful to pleaſe him, though with our own ſhame? Chriſts love made him take the form of a ſervant to pleaſure man; the Souls love will make it take up the meaneſt ſhape to pleaſe the Redeemer. Chriſt cared not how much he was emptied, ſo he might diſcover his love; the Soul cares not how much it is humbled, ſo it may teſtifie its affection. 'Tis like the ſtring of an Inſtrument ſtrain'd to the ſame height with another, which will move when the other is toucht. A true affectionate Soul will be conform'd to Chriſt in its motions, Galat. 1. 10. If I yet pleaſed men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt. In the ſtate of unregeneracy he pleaſed men, but now as a Servant he would pleaſe Chriſt his Maſter. Are we in our bent and reſolution careful to pleaſe God, without regard to the oppoſitions of the World? As the Sun holds on its race, though the Clouds gather to hinder the ſhining of it. Are we deſirous of his glory, as well as our own happineſs? Would we rather loſe what we deſire, than defraud God of his right? Our own happineſs is but a created good, and therefore ought not to be lov'd for it ſelf. Nor muſt we prefer the gift before the glory of the giver; the glory of God is incomparably more amiable than our own happineſs can be. If a man doth all for his own happineſs more than for Gods glory, 'tis certain he loves that more than God; and if he ſerves God only for happineſs, he ſells his ſervice to God, and he ſerves himſelf not God, for he intends only to advantage himſelf, not to glorify God. It was plain, that Dalilah lov'd not Sampſon, when all her projects were to enrich her ſelf, and gratify the Philiſtins in betraying him; ſo if our projects be to ſatisfy our ſelves, we are not lovers of God. Are the duties he enjoins, delightful to us? Do the Commands which were before burdenſome, ceaſe to be grievous to us? 1 Joh. 5. 3. Are our duties not ſo much preſt by natural Conſcience, as ſweetned by love? Do we eſteem lightly of every ſervice we do? True love never thinks it can do enough. Are we tender of his honour? Do we account the Enemies of God our Enemies, Pſal. 119. 21, 22. The Philiſtins loved their Dagon, when they would not tread upon the threſhold where he had receiv'd a diſgrace, 1 Sam. 5. 4, 5. How is it as to conſtancy? True love will not be quencht by the Waters of afflictions, Cant. 8. 7. Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the Flouds drown it; 'Tis a fire that triumphs over the waters of the ſharpeſt diſpenſations. When ſtorms hang over the head, there is no repentance that ever his love was beſtowed upon Chriſt. In this there is a ſuitableneſs between Chriſts affection and the Soul, in regard of the conſtancy of it. The Creatures love hath its ebbs and flouds. 'Tis ſometimes circumvented by temptation in regard of the acts and exerciſe, though not of the habit which recovers it ſelf. As Chriſts love hath intermiſſions in regard of the diſcoveries of it, though not in reſpect of the reality and truth of it; both are conſtant.

4. Another grace to be examin'd, is love of Gods people. This is the badge of a Diſciple, John 13. 34, 35. A new Commandment I give unto you, that you love one another as I have loved you. This is the Livery whereby men are known to belong to Chriſt, as a Prince's Servant is known by the badge he bears. 'Tis not, as Eraſmus notes, if you uſe this or that Ceremony, have this or that habit; if you uſe the ſame meat, have the ſame title, but if you have the ſame affection. This Chriſt left as his laſt Will and Teſtament, as that which lay moſt peculiarly upon his heart to be obſerv'd by them. * When Moſes was to leave the conduct of the People, he gives them a Commandment not to depart from the law of God. When John the Baptiſt quitted his Function, he recommended to his Diſciples the diſpoſing themſelves by the Baptiſm of Repentance, to receive the Meſſiah; and by the obſerving this and their faſts, they were marked by it to be Johns Diſciples. The Commandment Chriſt gives them a little before his departure, is to love one another, as the ſpecial Character whereby they ſhould be known to be his Diſciples. Hence it is called his Commandment as peculiarly his, as the Commandment to believe; for they are both join'd together, 1 John 3. 23. And this is his Commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and love one another as he gave us Commandment. As that which he took a ſpecial delight in. As if thoſe two, Faith and Love, made up the Body of the Chriſtian Religion. In regard of this Commandment the Apoſtle tells the Theſſalonians, 1 Theſſ. 4. 9. that they were taught of God; and this Chriſt preſſeth again and again; for he repeats it often in that laſt Sermon of his, which he would not have preſt ſo much when he had ſo many things to deliver, if it were not neceſſary. He calls it a new commandment, not only in regard of the renewal of it; it having been as it were out of date, and wholly loſt among the Jewiſh Factions; not only becauſe it is more commanded in the Goſpel, as Sacrifices were under the Law more preſt than this; but in regard of the pattern: Before it was, Love thy neighbour as thy ſelf, but they had no ſuch glorious exemplar, before the love of Chriſt came to be unfolded to the World. Now it is, Love one another as I have loved you. So powerful a motive was never affix'd to the moral Law, which commanded love; former Ages never had ſo fair and ſo full a Copy for it as this. And ſo punctual were the ancient Chriſtians in this, that Tertullian ſaith, it was the amazement of the Heathens to ſee them Animo animaq; miſceri, their Souls and minds united and mingled with each other; and indeed the more Believers love God, the more they will love one another. As lines, the nearer they are to the Center, the nearer they are to one another.

* Amyrant in loc.

(1.) This is neceſſary in all duties. Would we pray? our hands muſt be lifted up without wrath and doubting, 1 Tim. 2. 8. Would we hear the word? if we are ſwift to hear, we muſt be ſlow to wrath, Jam. 1. 19. Would we offer a Sacrifice at the Altar? we muſt firſt be reconcil'd to our brother, Mat. 5. 25. Fire from Heaven will not elſe kindle the Sacrifice. One of the leading ſins to be purg'd out of the Church of Corinth, in order to a due preparation to this Ordinance, was malice, 1 Cor. 5. 8.

(2.) But more neceſſary in this Ordinance.

[1.] It repreſents the union of Believers together. The Bread being made up of ſeveral grains compacted together, 1 Cor. 10. 16. For we being many are one Bread and one Body. * As the Bread is a mark and means of the Communion we have with Chriſt, and as we declare by the participation of the external ſigns, that we have a Communion with the Lord; Do we not alſo make by the ſame means a ſolemn proteſtation that we are of the ſame Faith, the ſame Religion, with thoſe that partake of thoſe ſymbols? And ſince it is the ſame Bread which repreſents one Jeſus, it alſo aſſociates us into one Body. This Bread is appointed to be a band to ty us to Chriſt, and to ty us in affections to one another. This Ordinance was inſtituted to ſolder Believers together. They have the ſame nouriſhment, and therefore ſhould have the ſame affection. Eodem ſanguine glutinati, knit together with the ſame blood, as Auſtin ſaith of himſelf and his Friend. The Death of Chriſt is here repreſented, which is an engagement to this affection. In this his

* Amyrant in loc.

Death

Death is ſhown, which did meritoriouſly purchaſe this unity; in this we partake of Chriſt, in whom all Believers are made one, ingrafted in the ſame ſtock. It was the end of Chriſts Death to reduce all to a harmony, to ſtill the war, not only in the members againſt the mind, but in his people one againſt another. Since we are to remember the Death of Chriſt, we are to remember his will and pleaſure at his Death; when we remember our friends, we would at leaſt remember their dying charge. John 15. 17. Doth not Chriſt preſs this in his farewel diſcourſe, Theſe things I command you, that you love one another, when he was making his Will to man, and his will to God? This was part of that Will he was to ſeal with his Blood. As Chriſt upon the Croſs was the higheſt eruption of love, ſo this Sacrament is the ſetting forth the higheſt pattern of it.

[2.] No benefit of the Ordinance without this Grace. We have no Communion with Chriſt without keeping this Commandment, 1 John 3. 23, 24. This is his commandment, that you love one another, and he that keeps his commandment, dwells in him, and he in him. Paſſion is like a leaven that corrupts this Ordinance to the Soul; as anger hinders the concoction of bodily food in the ſtomach. When Jeruſalem is a quiet habitation, the Tabernacle ſhall not be taken down, and God will be a place of broad rivers and ſtreams to it, Iſai. 33. 20. The greateſt gift next to that of Chriſt, was that of the Spirit, which deſcended when the Diſciples were ὁμοθυμαδὸν of one mind, Acts 2. 1. This being the deſign of the Goſpel, to knit mens hearts together in peace and love, thoſe that have not this love, are not caſt into a Goſpel mould, and therefore not fit to receive advantage by a choice Evangelical Inſtitution.

Let us examine our ſelves as to this Grace.

And that we may not miſtake; Every difference in judgment is not a ſign of the want of this Grace. Paul differ'd from Peter in opinion about the Jewiſh Ceremonies, without any breach of love, Galat. 2. 11. Paul and Barnabas jarr'd ſo as to part aſunder; yet neither of them can be ſuppoſed to be void of this, which their Maſter had ſo particularly enjoyn'd them, Acts 15. 37, 38, 39. It cannot be expected but differences in judgment will be among the moſt ſerious Chriſtian, while the blindneſs of their minds is but imperfectly cur'd. The ſtrings of an inſtrument are not all of one ſize, nor have the ſame ſound, yet agree in a harmony; there may be an harmony in affections, though there may be a difference in opinions.

But this love is true.

(1.) When 'tis founded upon the Grace of a perſon. That which is moſt lovely in Chriſts eye, ſhould be ſo in ours; the grace and holineſs of a perſon is reſpected by Chriſt, not his outward ſtate and condition. 'Tis a loving in the truth, and for the truths ſake, 2 John 5. 1, 2. A love of a Diſciple in the name of a Diſciple, Mat. 10. 42. As there is a common affection to God in men, becauſe of his benefits, ſo there may be alſo ſome common affection in an unregenerate man to godlineſs, which may be the fruit of education, or an enlightned conſcience, in ſome meaſure convinc'd that holineſs is good. Holineſs and Grace are ſo beautiful, that the wickedeſt man would have the appearance of it, and would be eſteemed good. But it muſt be a choice and prevailing affection, out of love to Chriſt, whoſe Image he bears, flowing from a love to God, a ſpirit of regeneration, from the ſeed of the Goſpel rooted in the Soul (Gal. 5. 22. The fruit of the ſpirit is love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs) and is therefore ſet upon the meaneſt Chriſtian; as the meaneſt Box which hath a Jewel in it, will be eſteemed for the Jewels ſake by thoſe that underſtand it. The Corinthians were defective in this love, in deſpiſing the poor in their love-feaſts, a miſcarriage the Apoſtle blames them for in this, 1 Cor. 11. 22.

(2.) It muſt be a fervent love. With a pure heart fervently, 1 Pet. 1. 22. not in appearance and faintly. The word the Apoſtle uſeth, Rom. 12. 10. which is tranſlated, be kindly affectioned to one another, φιλόστοργοι, ſignifies a vehement affection. For as God loves nothing more in this World than his own Image: ſo thoſe that have the Divine Nature drawn in them, are in this part like him; for God never draws any Image unlike himſelf.

(3.) A love manifeſted moſt in their perſecutions. To be aſhamed of Believers in their ſufferings, is in Chriſts interpretation, to be aſhamed of Chriſt himſelf. At the laſt Day, the tryal of men is by their acts towards God's people in time of their perſecutions, Mat. 25. 41, 42, 43, &c. As if the neglect of that which he calls his Commandment, were the great ſin to be anſwer'd for then. It is not, whether we viſited them, when in their houſes, in State and Triumph; or fed them when they had wherewith, to do it themſelves: but when in a ſtate of want. If a man loves the graces of a Believer, he will love him in ſuffering; for though ſuffering alters his outward condition, it alters not his inward relation or gracious diſpoſition. Chriſt upon the Croſs was as dear to John his beloved Diſciple, who would not leave him then, as when the people would have made him King.

5. Another Grace to be examined and acted, is Deſire, a holy Appetite. The Iſraelites were to eat the Paſſeover in haſte, not lento corde & ore langnido *, but with a greedineſs of mind.

* Gaudentius.

(1.) This is neceſſary in all Duties. In hearing the Word the deſire muſt be as inſatiable as the infants cry for milk, 1 Pet. 2. 2. Not the outward breaſt, but the nouriſhing milk convey'd by it, ſatisfies the infant. In prayer there muſt be unutterable groans, ſtrong ſallies and flights of the Soul with a holy impetus, Pſal. 63. 8. My ſoul follows hard after thee. It would have an infinite enlargement of heart to God ſuitable to Gods infinite fulneſs. This deſire is expreſt by hunger and thirſt. No deſire ſo clamorous, as that of a new-born infant for milk, or of an hungry man for meat, who will eat his own fleſh, or offer violence to himſelf, rather than want nouriſhment. But this ſhould not be ſo ſtrong as our deſires for Chriſt.

[1.] 'Tis a Feaſt, and appetite is proper to that. Were it but a crum, yet deſire were fit, as long as it is from Heaven. If there be life, there will be a nutritive appetite, and deſire of thoſe things which are ſuitable nouriſhment; now what but Chriſt can be ſuitable nouriſhment to the new Nature wherein this appetite is ſeated? To come without an appetite upon Chriſts ſolemn invitation, is a wrong to the Maſter of the Feaſt, and the chear he hath provided; 'tis a ſhame to come to ſuch a Feaſt, and leave our ſtomachs at home. 'Tis not a fulneſs Chriſt expects we ſhould bring to him, but an emptineſs with an earneſt deſire, Revel. 22. 17. Let him that is a thirſt come; 'tis an heavenly Feaſt, there muſt be a ſuitable appetite. Evangelical food requires Evangelical hunger; marrow and fatneſs ſhould whet our ſtomach.

[2.] The greater the longings, the greater the ſatisfaction. In great deſires the Soul is ſaid to pant as an Hart, and in ſpeedy mercies Chriſt is ſaid to run as a Roe. When deſire opens the heart wideſt, then God opens the hand largeſt to fill it, Pſal. 81. 10. Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it. Mary comes to the Sepulchre before the other Diſciples, and when ſhe miſſeth her Lord, is more reſtleſs, Joh. 20. 11. ſhe ſtays, and weeps, and looks into the Sepulchre again, when the other Diſciples were more remiſs and went away, and miſſed of the ſight of Chriſt, which Mary was bleſſed with. The wider the heart, the more triumphantly doth the King of Glory enter. We have according to our deſires, as Joaſh according to his ſtrokes, 2 Kings 13. 18, 19. had he ſtruck ſix times, he had utterly deſtroyed his enemies; whereas ſtriking but thrice, he had but a treble Victory. He that is ſo tender of a bruiſed reed, that he will not break it, or a ſmoaking flax, that he will not quench it, will not let an hungry Soul go empty away. God ſcarce gives mercies in a ſanctified way, but where there hath been a reſtleſs importunity before. Benefits would not be priz'd without this, Prov. 27. 7. The full ſoul loaths the honey-comb. The chapt and parcht earth ſucks in the rain after a great drought.

[3.] This is the nobleſt affection we can beſtow upon God. God being infinite, ſhould be loved, not with a finite, but infinite affection. But nothing but deſire can ſtretch it ſelf to a kind of infinity, and therefore is moſt fit to be exerted in this heavenly and eminent Ordinance.

Let us examine our deſires,

(1.) Whether they be vehement. An infinite Being ſhould not be faintly and coldly deſir'd. There ought to be a holy diſtraction in the Soul *: As ſcoreht bowels are full of pain till they get ſatisfaction. There is no queſtion but an imperfect velleity, a languiſhing and feeble deſire may be in unregenerate men; they may have more or leſs ſome apprehenſions of the good which ſtir up proportionable deſires; but the longings of a gracious Soul are ſtrong, ſpiritual, and produce mighty inward operations. As there is all ſweetneſs in Chriſt, ſo there ſhould be all vehemency in the acts of the Soul to him. Is our deſire limited to God alone? Do we apprehend him and pant after him as the greateſt good, and Chriſt as the choiceſt and only Saviour? Is it ſo earneſt, that if all afflictions were remov'd from us, all outward mercies beſtow'd upon us, this ſhould not ſatisfie, but Chriſt alone and the light of his countenance? This holy longing can no more be ſtopt by any creature, than the Sun can be barr'd by clouds from running its race. The whole World is but as the drop of a bucket after all the water is pour-ed out. Would a ſmall drop quench the thirſt of parched bowels? No more can all the World anſwer the deſire of a gracious Soul, any more than a drop can cool the tongue of a damned creature.

* Ὀιὰ μανίας, as Baſil calls it.

2. Whether they are conſtant. Doth the fire in the Temple never go out? Do ſetled apprehenſions of Chriſt keep our hearts alive in their motions, or are they only like the fits of a Feaver, or flaſhes of Lightning which quickly vaniſh? Are they as Pilgrims lodging only for a night, and in the morning leave no footſteps of themſelves, no ſigns that ever they were there? Or are they kept up in ſome life and vigour upon the heart? In an equal heat it cannot be expected in this life; but when they flag, are they quickly reviv'd? Oh let us ſeek God with our whole heart and with our whole ſoul.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE Unworthy Receiving OF THE LORDS SUPPER.

1 Cor. 11. 27, 29.

Whoſoever ſhall eat this Bread, and drink this Cup of the Lord unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the Body and Bloud of the Lord. For he that eats and drinks unworthily, eateth and drinketh Damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lords Body.

AFter the Apoſtle had laid down the Platform of the Inſtitution, he makes his inferences ſuted to the caſe and miſcarriage of the Corinthians. Since this Ordinance was appointed by Chriſt as a memorial of him, and in the celebration of it, we ſhow the Lords Death; an unbecoming frame and carriage in ſo great a myſtery, is a reflection upon the authority of it, contrary to the ends of it, and a contracting the guilt of the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

* Muſculus. * As if he ſhould have ſaid, while you Corinthians come together in a rude manner to this Ordinance, as if it were a common and prophane feaſt, the abuſe and contempt redounds upon the Body and Blood of Chriſt repreſented by thoſe elements. Calvin thinks the Apoſtle makes a digreſſion from the particular Corinthian caſe to an univerſal one, not only comprehending under unworthy receiving the abuſes crept into that Church, but all other miſcarriages which might in the future riſe up in that or any other Church whatſoever; and indeed 'tis as a general caſe to be conſider'd in our days, ſince the particular caſe of the Corinthians hath not its parallel.

He conſiders

1. The Sin, 1. In its nature. Eating and drinking unworthily.
2. In its aggravation. A guilt of the body and bloud of Chriſt.
2. The danger, v. 29. Eating and drinking damnation to himſelf.
3. The cauſe of all. Not diſcerning the Lords Body.

* Amyraut. Daillé in loc. Whoſoever eats and drinks unworthily.] * Whoſoever approacheth without a conſideration of the dignity of that which is repreſented by thoſe Elements, and the ends of their appointment, regarding it as a common thing of no great value, and and brings not those dispositions of Faith and Repentance, doth not reflect upon the Elements themselves, but vilifies that which they represent; and offends not so much against the exterior signs, as violates the reverence due to the Body and blood of Christ; and is so far from gathering the blessed fruit of this Ordinance, that he returns with the mark of the Murderer of Christ upon him; for he contemns the Condition of the Covenant, and consequently the Bloud of the Covenant. The Argument whereby he urgeth it is, the relation it hath to Christ. 'Tis the Bread and Cup of the Lord. Though it be Bread and Wine, yet it is a sacred thing: 'Tis the Bread and Wine of the Lord, instituted by him for his Glory and our salvation. He doth not say, Whosoever eats the Body of the Lord, or drinks the Bloud of the Lord unworthily, but This Bread, this Cup: The Apostle was not so witless, as to have term'd them Bread and Cup, had the Doctrine of Transubstantiation been known in his days. His Argument had run stronger, 'Tis but Bread and Wine in appearance, 'tis changed into the real Body and Bloud of Christ; and therefore your unworthy carriage is immediately and not relatively a violation of his person. * But the Apostle acknowledgeth it to be Bread and Wine; but to distinguish it from Bread of an ordinary use, calls it, The Bread of the Lord. * Muscul.

Unworthily.] A worthy carriage respects either persons or things; Persons, when our demeanour is sutable to the dignity of the person we converse with; or Things, when we manage a business we undertake with a decorum and becomingness, according to the nature of it; as we say a man did this or that very handsomly. He that doth not observe a decorum and decency in a converse with a person or management of a business, doth it unworthily, awkardly, rustically or slovenly. So the word worthy is used, Luke 3. 8. Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, i. e. sutable to the repentance you profess. And Ephes. 4. 1. Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith you are called, i. e. Let your conversation answer your calling, and be sutable to the dignity of it. 'Tis not any precedent act meritorious of the vocation, but a worthy carriage after it sutable to the dignity of the calling. The Apostle doth not say, Whatsoever unworthy person eats and drinks of this Cup, &c. for then he had excluded every man, himself too. For who is worthy enough for these things? as the Apostle speaks in another Case, Who is sufficient for these things? The Apostle requires not here a meritoriousness. Merit belongs to Christ dying, worthiness to the Believer receiving. He speaks not of the worthiness of the person, but a worthiness of the action. A man may want a worthiness of person to be employed in a Prince's service, yet not want a worthiness of Parts which fit him being engaged in it, to manage his employ for his own and his Prince's honour. * Or if a poor man be called to a Prince's Table, he is because of his poverty and distance unworthy to sit with him; yet being invited, he may come: but if he behaves himself uncivilly and indecently, he makes himself guilty of a contempt of the Royal Majesty, in whose presence he is. Unworthily here notes, the want of an Evangelical frame and disposition of heart. * Muscul.

Guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.] He offers wrong to Christ. The Jews were guilty of his blood, when they crucified him; Apostates are guilty of his blood, when they deny him, Heb. 10. 29. An unworthy Receiver doth such an injury to Christ, that God will account him in the Rank of the Jews that crucified him, and charge him with no less a crime than the guilt of the bloud of his Son.

He eats and drinks damnation.] Κρῖμα Judgment, which differs from κατάκριμα. He eats judgment or punishment, which is double, either eternal, or temporary. Final Unbelievers eat it to their eternal condemnation; those that have Faith, and are negligent in due preparations, eat it to their temporary correction. 'Tis the effect for the cause. An Unbeliever doth not properly eat his condemnation; for condemnation is not naturally or Sacramentally in the Bread and Wine; but he eats that which will be the *cause of his condemnation, because not considering the glorious use these Elements are destin'd to, he doth not consider how great and glorious a thing the Body of the Lord is, which they represent, and so violates in those Signs, the honour due to his Majesty: Not but that this is of it self, and in regard of the Institution, wholesome and quickning; but by the evil disposition of the

Rom. 5. 16. κρῖμα μὲν γὰρ κατάκριμα, judgment unto condemnation.

the Receiver, and the abuſe of the Ordinance, that which was ordain'd to Life brings Death: as the foulneſs of the Stomach makes wholeſome food turn to Venome in the Body. Therefore the Apoſtle adds, He eats damnation to himſelf. There is no ſuch thing in the Inſtitution. The fault is wholly in himſelf, not in the Ordinance. He abuſeth that which would be uſeful to him, if he brought worthy diſpoſitions with him. As our firſt Parents eat their death in eating the forbidden fruit, when the fruit it ſelf was not of a venemous nature; but by tranſgreſſing the Command of God, they rendred themſelves obnoxious to the death God had threatned. So we ſay of a man, that he hath ſwallow'd his death, when he hath eaten ſomething which makes way for the entrance of death; not only when it is poyſonous in its own nature, but when it is unſutable to the temper and ſtate of the Patient. So he that eats unworthily, makes himſelf obnoxious to the judgment of God, either to be tormented by his Scorpions hereafter, or awakened by his Scourges here.

Not diſcerning the Lords body.] Διακρίνων. To diſcern a thing or a perſon is to ſeparate it from other things or perſons*, and give it its due rank and order; which is either, (1.) In effect, when a man is endowed with qualities which elevate him above others. As the Apoſtle ſaith, *God makes us to differ, 1 Cor. 4. 7. i.e. he puts a difference between us and others, giving us Graces more advantageous than unto them. (2.) In opinion and eſteem, when we value one thing more than another; ſo Acts 15. 9. God is ſaid to put no difference between the Jews and Gentiles, οὐδὲν διέκρινε, i. e. he hath treated them indifferently. So not to diſcern the Lord's Body, is not to eſteem and honour it as he ought, not to give it its due rank; to entertain it, not as a ſingular and Divine, but a common and ordinary thing. When men diſeſteem Chriſt, they count his bloud as common bloud, Heb. 10. 29. What is there tranſlated unholy, is in the Greek κοινὸν: So after the Apoſtle had diſcours'd of the two Elements, as repreſenting the two Parts of the Sacrifice offered upon the Croſs, his Body broken, his blood poured out, for a propitiation for ſin, not to diſcern it, is to have no higher opinion of the body of the Son of God, the wonder of God's Wiſdom and Goodneſs, than of a common thing, and a matter of no value.

* Τὶς γὰρ οἶδε διακρίνειν;

Or not diſcerning the Lord's Body, is, when our ſenſe ſticks upon the outward Elements, and our ſpirits riſe not up to view the merits and propitiation of Chriſt through the Veil of the Bread and Wine; As if the Elements were the things only we were to feaſt upon. 'Tis a ſpiritual Feaſt, and therefore we diſcern not the Lord's Body, when we have not ſpiritual Meditations of the dignity of Chriſt, the atonement he made, God's Wiſdom, Juſtice and Mercy in the deſign of his death. As Chriſt doth not put us off with empty ſigns, ſo he would not have us reſt upon empty ſigns, but acknowledge his Body and Blood repreſented in them for thoſe ends for which the one was broken, and the other ſhed. The Papiſts, to prop up their Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, draw an Argument for it from this place: The Body of Chriſt is in the Sacrament in its proper ſubſtance, otherwiſe a man could not be guilty of his Body and Bloud. * For no man could juſtly be condemned for not diſcerning the Lord's Body from other Meat, if that which he receives, were not truly the Body of the Lord, but another meat; and the unworthy receiving of the naked Sign cannot make a man guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord. * But this is no Argument: Chriſt is wrong'd in that which hath a relation to him, as well as immediately in his own perſon. The rejecting the Apoſtles, the Meſſengers of Chriſt, is a rejecting Chriſt who ſent them, Luke 10. 16. He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me; and he that deſpiſeth the Commands of God delivered by man, deſpiſeth not man, but God, 1 Theſſ. 4. 8. Was our Saviour therefore ſubſtantially preſent in the perſons of the Apoſtles? Were they not ſeparated from his Body, when he ſent them to other Parts, and gave them this as an encouragement? How could he be with them, and abſent from them in his Body? When he chargeth Saul with perſecuting him, becauſe he breathed out ſlaughter againſt his Diſciples, Acts 9. 4. was the Body of Chriſt therefore ſubſtantially in his Diſciples? He that hath received the knowledg of the truth, and apoſtatizeth from it, treads under foot the Son of God. Is the perſon of Chriſt under the feet of theſe Contemners! To tumble a Kings Robe in the dirt, to counterfeit his

Seal,

Seal, tread upon his Crown, daub his Picture, break down his Arms in deſpite, offer violence to his Embaſſador, is reckon'd as a violation of the Perſon and Authority of a Prince; yet neither the perſon nor nature of the Prince is really preſent in any of thoſe things. They are indeed the marks of his dignity; and he that violates wilfully any of them, is ſuppoſed to be willing to do as much againſt the perſon of the Prince, if it were in his power, as againſt any thing which bears his Character. The ſubſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, is not in the Bread and Wine of the Sacrament; his exalted Body is no more to be broken and ſlic'd in pieces; nor doth it conſiſt with his ſtate of glory, to have his ſubſtantial Body ſhrouded under ſuch mean elements: But the Bread and Wine are memorials and pledges of his Body and Blood, inſtituted by him as Signs to ſignifie him; therefore he that receives them without a due reſpect to Chriſt, and handles them unworthily, deſpiſing thoſe things which are ſignified by them, is a contemner of the Son of God, ſince he hath no value for that which is a mark of his Authority and his Love.

Doct. Unworthy receivers of the Supper contract great guilt, and incur great danger.

In the handling which Doctrine I ſhall ſhow,

I. What unworthy receiving is.

II. The ſinfulneſs of it.

III. The danger of it.

IV. The Uſe.

I. What unworthy receiving is.

1. Something negatively.

(1.) Unworthy receiving is not proper only to a man in a natural ſtate. The Apoſtle chargeth here unworthy receiving, not only upon the profeſſing, but the regenerate Corinthians, upon ſuch as fell under the chaſtning hand of God for this cauſe, that they might not be condemn'd with the World to an eternal puniſhment, 1 Cor. 11. 32. He ſent temporal puniſhments upon them, that they might not undergo an eternal damnation; they were redeem'd from eternal puniſhment, renew'd in their Souls, yet ſome of them were guilty of unworthy receiving. The Apoſtle alſo puts the unworthineſs upon the want of a ſelf-examination, which a good man may by ſome ſupineneſs and negligence be deficient in, andas the ſleepy Church, Cant. 5.2. may contract ſome ruſt in his graces, yea, and fall into ſome bemiring Sin, as a neat man may into a dirty puddle, rendering himſelf at preſent unfit for the entertainment of, and converſe with ſome worthy friend. Sins of a higher magnitude, which a good man may fall into, make him at the preſent unfit for Heaven, and therefore for an Heavenly Ordinance. David was no worthy attender upon the inſtitutions of God while he lay in his impenitency, till his tears had waſht away his iniquity. Nor was Peter reſtor'd to the ſweetneſs of converſe with his maſter, till he had wept bitterly; while a great ſin remains unpurged, or the Soul through negligence untrimmed, 'tis no fit Gueſt for God.

(2.) Unworthy receiving is not to be meaſur'd by our ſenſible joy or comfort after receiving. Two Men that have perfect health, have not equal ſtomachs, nor equal appetites, and conſequently not the ſame joy in their meals, yet both in health. We ſhould more conſider how Graces are acted, than how comforts are diſpenſed; the former is our duty, and neceſſary to a right participation; the latter is an act of Gods Soveraignty, and not our duty. Gods diſpenſations are not equal to all; ſome have only taſts, others full draughts; ſome may have more joy than ſtrength, others more ſtrength than joy. Mary had a ſtrength of love to Chriſt, before ſhe had a joy of a pardon from him, Luke 7. 47. Pauls Grace was not weaker fourteen years after his rapture, though we read not of a ſecond diſcovery of the third Heavens to him. God was moſt pleaſed with our Saviour upon the Croſs, acting his Faith in, and love and obedience to God, when he denied him ſenſible comforts from Heaven, and was bruiſing his Soul for ſin. The life and exerciſe of Grace is the root of joy, though the fruit it ſelf be not always viſible; we may ſeem to have a rebuke from God, when we are in the ſtrongeſt exerciſe of Grace. The Woman of Canaan had no ſenſe of Chriſts kindneſs, while ſhe was acting a Faith ſtronger than others, who had met with ſwifter rewards. Jacob had the honour to be term'd a Prince prevailing with God, in that wreſtling, wherein he received ſuch a touch from God, as made him halt all his life after, Gen. 32. 25, 28. If our Souls can aſcend like Manoah's Angel in the ſmoke of thankſgiving and elevations of ſpirit, and be melted and ſoftned by a flame of love, there is a worthy receiving, though there be not a ſenſible comfort.

But, 2. Poſitively, that is an unworthy receiving.

(1.) When evil diſpoſitions and beloved ſins are not laid aſide and forſaken. As there muſt be Faith reſpecting the Chriſtian Doctrine, ſo there muſt be Repentance reſpecting the Converſation. He eats unworthily that hath different ends from what Chriſt had in the inſtitution, and wants the qualifications which Chriſt requires, who hath neither faith, nor repentance, no ſenſe of ſin, nor love to Chriſt to hold up to God. Common infirmities render us not unworthy, but voluntary defilements. Neither the poverty, blindneſs, or halting of one or other of thoſe invited, Luke 14. 21. Mat. 22. 10. was charg'd upon them, but only the filthy rags that one of them came in; ſuch ſordidneſs as he might have mended, not the lameneſs which he could not cure. Common infirmities are inſeparable in this life; but the great breaches and violations of the Covenant are to be diſcharg'd. Every ſin doth make ſome ſeparation between God and us, (as the ſmalleſt body hath its ſhadow) but they are the darling ſins that are a thick cloud between him and us. Thoſe then are unqueſtionably unworthy receivers, that approach with a love to their luſts; as Judas, who came with his covetous diſpoſition and treacherous purpoſes. Such as lay aſide their ſins at preſent in the act, but not in the habit and affection; that ſhake hands with them for a time, to fondle them afterwards.

(2.) When, though beloved ſins are diſcarded, yet there is not a due preparation ſuitable to the quality of the inſtitution. The Apoſtle implies it in the precept he enjoyns immediately after the declaration of the ſin, v. 28. Let a man examine himſelf. He that doth not trim up the Graces he hath, that doth not ſearch them out, and marſhal them in order to entertain the Maſter of the Feaſt, as well as he who wants thoſe qualifications neceſſary. An actual, as well as an habitual Sanctification was requir'd of Jeſſe's Sons before the Sacrifice, 1 Sam. 16. 5. Sanctifie your ſelves, and come with me to the ſacrifice. Chriſt did ſanctifie himſelf before he made himſelf a Sacrifice, Joh. 17. 19. ſo ſhould we before we commemorate it. If the Lamps be not trim'd, they will burn but dimly. If that he counts the Wedding-garment, be not bruſht, it will be a ſlighting the Lord not to appear in our beſt garb. The Corinthians were chaſtiſed, not for want of grace in habit, but for want of grace in act. 'Tis a diſreſpect to Chriſt not to put on a Wedding-garment which we have in poſſeſſion; when graces and affections are not ſet on work, which the Ordinance requires. A natural man is unworthy, for want of poſſeſſing thoſe graces; a renewed man unworthy, for want of acting them. The party that ſo offended, was not ſent out to clothe himſelf, but puniſhed for his neglect, Friend, how cameſt thou in hither? Chriſts worthy care in the inſtitution muſt be anſwer'd with a worthy carriage in the preparation. He waſhed his Diſciples feet before the inſtitution, Joh. 13. We ſhould prepare our Souls before the participation. When a good mans graces lye dead at the Ordinances, he receives unworthily. What difference is there between a dead man, and one that doth not exerciſe the acts of life? When Chriſt reacheth out himſelf, and our hands are not ready to take, our hearts not ready to embrace, it is an unſuitable carriage. We have no great eſteem of the gales that blow, if we will not prepare and hoiſt our Sails to be filled with them: and ſtand not ready to ſuck Chriſts breaſt in his Ordinance.

(3.) 'Tis an unworthy receiving, when we reſt only in the Ordinance, expecting from the work done, what we ſhould expect only from Chriſt in it. When we content our ſelves with Elijahs Mantle, without asking for the God of Elijah. Thus the Jews deluded themſelves with their priviledges, and diſpleaſed God with their neglect of him; like Joab ſecuring himſelf by laying hold of the horns of the Altar without repentance for his murders. This is to derive from the Sacrament the cauſe of our righteouſneſs and juſtification, and aſcribe that to the naked Elements and Signs, which is only to be expected and defired at the hands of God. This is a wrong to God, when we prefer the ſhadow before the ſubſtance, the ſhell before before the kernel, ſatisfie our appetite, and take no notice of the Maſter. Doth not he ſlight both the Phyſician and the Phyſick, that expects a Cure from a Medicine in his pocket, which he was to take into his body? The like it is to Chriſt, to think that a corporeal feeding, without a ſpiritual reliſh, can nouriſh our Souls; a chewing the Elements with the teeth, without feeding upon Chriſt with the heart. This is evident, when we anſwer not Sacramental engagements, as well as when we come without Sacramental preparations. In that we ſlight the end of the Ordinance, as in the other we ſlight the greatneſs of the inſtitution.

(4.) When there is a gariſhneſs and looſeneſs of ſpirit in the time of our attendance. Not diſcerning the Lords Body, ſay ſome, Not minding the Lords Body, but letting the thoughts run at rovers, which ſhould be fixed upon Chriſts dying. Not making a difference between this holy Bread and common refreſhments in the behaviour of our Souls. Our ſpirits ſhould be low in regard of contrition, not in regard of a ſordid demeanour towards God. To have baſe ends and ſtarts in his worſhip; * to regard our own things in this act, and not the things of God; to have unſetled and roving thoughts, croſſes the end of this Ordinance. 'Tis unworthy not to remember Chriſt, not to ſhew forth his Death; how can this be done without minding him? The Maſter of the Feaſt is not remembred, unleſs we look through the Bread and Wine to the broken Body, and the ſhed blood of Chriſt. We eſteem not him that we do not mind, we value not him that we do not with the weight of our Souls intently lean upon. Not that any man is free from roving while the fleſh cleaves to him; (The involuntary ſtartings of the fleſh, the involuntary injections of the Devil, do not make us Unworthy Receivers. God regards the willingneſs of the ſpirit to affect us, and the weakneſs of the fleſh to pity us. He knows our frame that we are but duſt, and duſt is apt to be remov'd with a blaſt of wind) But when the reins are let looſe to the headſtrong fleſh, when we pull it not in, but follow rather than reſiſt the motions; 'tis then that we make light of the dignity of this Ordinance, and the great and glorious Body of our Lord repreſented thereby. Neither can we underſtand every actual conſent to ſuch motions at the time of our attendance, to be the unworthy receiving, which makes us guilty of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, though it be an unworthy Carriage; unleſs we ſhould count all the Apoſtles to be Unworthy Receivers, who, if not in the time, yet preſently after the firſt partaking of it contended among themſelves about earthly greatneſs in the Kingdom of the Meſſiah, as it is probable from Luke 22. 24. But when it is habitual, voluntary, and without a purpoſe of Soul, and a ſetting the heart to ſeek the Lord, 1 Chron. 22. 19. Such an one is not free from this Character of an Unworthy Receiver.

* Grotius

II. The ſinfulneſs of this. 'Tis a contracting the guilt of the body and bloud of the Lord. This unworthy Carriage derives its original from that diſpoſition which incited the Jews to a Crucifying of him. Though there be not a blow ſtruck at his perſon, there is the ſpring of as many blows as ever the Jews gave him. Diverſa peccata, par contumelia. What hath been ſaid lately about the ſinfulneſs of Unbelief, might be applied to this caſe. I ſhall therefore ſay the leſs of it. Though there be a difference in the circumſtances of the ſeveral ſins, there is little or none in the contempt and indignity. He that doth deſpite to the Image or Arms of a Prince, would do the ſame to his Perſon, were it as much in his Power.

1. 'Tis an implicit approbation of the Jews act in Crucifying Chriſt. If we are not affected with that ſtate of Chriſt, we conſent to, and approve of that act of his Crucifyers; not poſitively, but privatively; not having that temper and affection of ſpirit which ſuch an action doth call for from us. This is one way among many others, of being acceſſary to anothers ſin, by not having a regret at it. * He that makes light of the death of an innocent Perſon, confeſſeth him a Malefactor, and that he deſerves to be ſlain, ſince being ſlain, he deſerves ſo little regard; or at leaſt he makes himſelf a Malefactor, and gives juſt occaſion of ſuſpicion, that he would have been ready enough to have embrued his hands in that mans Blood. The committing a ſin is an approbation of all of the ſame kind that went before. Had it not been ſo, the guilt of the bloud of all the Prophets could not have fallen upon the heads of that Generation which murthered Chriſt, Luke 11.47. Whoſoever hath ſlight thoughts of the death of Chriſt, and neglects thoſe Duties ſo great a condeſcenſion calls for, partly conſents to the ſavage uſage Chriſt met with from the Jews: They were the Authors of the firſt crime, and an unworthy Receiver the Abettor.

2. It exceeds the ſin of the Jews in ſome circumſtances, as well as that exceeded this in others: That was againſt his perſon, this againſt his propitiation; they did it againſt one they accounted a Blaſphemer, we do it againſt one we account, not only innocent but, a Redeemer; the Jews tore his Body, and an unworthy Receiver, ſaith Chryſoſtom, defiles it, by putting the Body of Chriſt into an unclean Veſſel. The ſin is greater, by how much impurity and defilement is more againſt his Nature, than death and torment.

3. In regard of the relation the Ordinance hath to Chriſt. There is an Analogy between the Bread and the Wine, and the Body and Blood of Chriſt. The nearer relation any thing hath to God, the more heinous is the offence. To kill a debauch'd man unjuſtly, innocent of any crime to deſerve death, is an affronting God in his Image, Gen. 9. 6. To neglect uncharitably a Member of Chriſt is greater, becauſe it is a deſpiſing of Chriſt in his Myſtical Body, Matth. 25. 45. This is greater, becauſe it is an affront to his Body and Blood in the Picture and Repreſentation of him. To fling the Picture of a Prince in the Kennel, and ſtamp upon it with contempt, is treaſonable in ſome places. A Man of Quality is not injured ſo much by breaking his Earthen Veſſels, as by defacing and defiling his Arms, the Marks of his Honour. It diſparageth the whole Covenant of Grace, in unworthy uſage of the Seals of it. How baſe a diſpoſition is it, to ſit down at the Table of a man with an hoſtile mind againſt him! to ſtab the Maſter of the Feaſt at his own Table, while he is treating, and entertaining us with Dainties!

4. 'Tis a great ſin, as it is againſt the greateſt teſtimony of his love. That hand which was afterwards pierced and nailed upon the Croſs for us, did firſt break this Sacrament to us. He appointed it when he was to go out of the World, when he knew all things were given into his hands, Joh. 13. 3. when he knew he was to leave the World, and ſit down at the right hand of his Father; he would then do a work worthy of himſelf to declare his own liberality to us. It was the firſt fruit of the power granted to him. 'Tis a violation of that Marriage-Knot whereby Chriſt would have us be join'd to him, and become his Spouſe. He only was the Author of this: His crucifixion could not be without other hands, and the wickedneſs of many perſons in bringing him to his ſufferings. But this acknowledgeth him only the Author. The Motive of his ſufferings was the ſatisfaction of his Fathers Juſtice, as well as his love to us; this hath purely his own love for the Spring of it. His ſuffering was a part of his obedience: But the only Motive of this Inſtitution was his kindneſs. And the Apoſtle prefaceth this Inſtitution (as it may ſeem) with a manifeſtation of his love, having loved his own, he loved them to the end, Joh. 13. 1. as if he could not leave a higher pledge of his love than this: ſince he could not leave himſelf, he would leave his Picture.

III. The danger of this Sin, He eats and drinks damnation to himſelf. As the ſin is ſet forth in the greateſt blackneſs, ſo is the puniſhment in the greateſt dreadfulneſs. The ſin ſubjects us to the ſame puniſhment that was reſerved for the Crucifiers of Chriſt. God inflicts upon his own, temporal corrections; upon final Unbelievers, eternal: He uſeth his Rods on ſome, his Axes on others. 'Tis but reaſon the ſeverity upon the Offender ſhould be proportionable to the communications to the worthy Receiver. Where his liberality is unworthily uſed, his ſeverity ſhall be juſtly felt.

He eats and drinks damnation to himſelf.] Damnation is not the end of the Ordinance, no more than it is the end of the Goſpel, or of Chriſt's coming into the World. The Supper was appointed for holy and beneficial ends; but the unworthineſs of the Receiver, turns that into a Sword which was intended for Food. Worms grew from that Manna, which was intended for a Bleſſing, when they uſed it not according to the command of God, Exod. 16. 20. Rain is to make the Earth fruitful; and where it meets with a good Soil, it opens the Womb of the Earth to bring forth wholeſome Plants: but where it lights upon a bad Soil, it brings forth bryars and thorns. Tis not the fault of the rain, but the diſpoſition of the ground, which produceth hurtful and venemous plants which are nigh unto curſing, Heb. 6. 7. So the Ordinance is Bread to ſtrengthen, Wine to refreſh; but where the wickedneſs of a man is mixed with it, there is poyſon in it; a piercing hook under a delightful bait. The word is a ſavour of life and a ſavour of death, 2 Cor. 2. 16. a ſavour of life, when mixed with faith; a ſavour of death, when mixed with unbelief. Where the Blood of Chriſt doth not cure, it inflames a wound; where it doth not ſave, it condemns. That which is not melted by the Sun, grows into a greater hardneſs. Chriſt, as a Sacrifice on the Croſs, was pleaſing to God; as the murder'd Innocent, a burden of guilt on the Jews: ſo as he is grateful food in the Sacrament to a worthy receiver, he is the bane of an unworthy Communicant, by reaſon of his unholineſs. It was a ſad cut to David to be guilty of the bloud of Uriah, whoſe bloud, though not ſhed by his hand, was deſign'd by him to be ſpilt in the ſervice of his Country; yet how was his Soul gall'd for it, and his Son afterwards in the Head of an Army againſt him for his puniſhment? What a crime is it to kill a child in the womb, who never yet ſaw the light? What is it then to murder the Son of God in the ſigns of his body, the Saviour of the World, the King of Glory, whoſe Bloud is unconceivably more precious than the blood of all men, the life of all Angels; doth not this deſerve a ſevere correction?

IV. The Uſe.

1. The manner of Duties muſt be regarded as well as the matter. The matter of this Ordinance is participated by both the worthy and the unworthy receiver: the manner makes the difference; the ſame matter of prayer may be put up by two ſeveral perſons, the one accepted, the other rejected; one offers it with a wicked, the other with a ſincere mind, Prov. 21. 27. The eating the Paſſeover, otherwiſe then it was written, was dangerous, and needed Hezekiahs prayer to God for a pardon of them, 2 Chron. 30. 18. He that came without a wedding-garment could have reliſht the ſweetneſs of the meat; but intruding in an unbecoming garb, was turn'd out as unfit for the Kings Table. As God hath the love of a friend, ſo he hath the greatneſs of a Soveraign; he will not be treated with as an ordinary friend, but ſanctified in all that draw near to him, Levit. 10. 3. His gracious indulgence muſt not diminiſh our awful thoughts of his Majeſty. Though it is a crucified Chriſt we remember, one cloathed with infirmities, yet it is one that hath dropt his Mantle, and is exalted at the right of the Majeſty on high. Since he is God in Heaven, we muſt not be haſty to preſent our ſelves in an unbecoming garb before him, Eccleſ. 5. 2. Let not thy heart be haſty to utter any thing before God, for God is in heaven. Circumſtances in Worſhip are more than cyphers; but if they were no more, take away all the cyphers joyn'd with an unit, how is the ſumm curtail'd to nothing*? The voluntary omiſſion of a circumſtance, neceſſary to an action, doth not excuſe, but aggravate. * Durand.

2. The holineſs of an Ordinance will not excuſe a miſcarriage in it. Some are nouriſhed by this Ordinance, others pollute themſelves. The fruit is not according to the holineſs of the Ordinance, but the diſpoſition of the receiver. Before the deſtruction of the Temple, Ezek. 10. 2. God ſaith, Fill thy hand with coals, and ſcatter them over the city. The fire in the Temple, which they thought was to ſerve for the expiation of their ſin, ſhould ſerve for the deſtruction of the City. The Temple hath Thunders and Lightnings in it as well as Muſick, Revel. 4. 5. The moſt wholeſom food ſinks under the power of corrupt humors in the ſtomach. Nadab and Abihu were the true Prieſts of God, they intended to offer Incenſe to the true God. The Incenſe was according to the mind of God, and the Cenſers were of the conſecrated Veſſels: They err'd only in taking ſtrange fire which God had not commanded, and this coſt them their lives, Levit. 10. 1, 2. We may have right Ordinances, direct our addreſſes to the true God; but the holineſs of thoſe will not excuſe the want of heavenly fire, the Grace of the Spirit, and the want of a due value of the Mediation of Chriſt.

3. The ſins of thoſe that draw neareſt to God, are the blackeſt. Never was any thing term'd a guilt of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, but the Jews wickedneſs in crucifying, mens Apoſtaſie in denying him after knowledge, and the abuſe of this Ordinance, Ordinance, and that not only in the unregenerate Corinthians, but in the beſt that were guilty of thoſe miſcarriages; he taxeth, whoſoever eats and drinks unworthily. An Univerſal Particle.

4. The ground of our miſchief is always in our ſelves. 'Tis not from the emptineſs of the Ordinance, that is a full Ciſtern; nor from the ſhortneſs of Gods Grace, he is an over-flowing Fountain: but from want of thoſe graces, or of exerciſing thoſe graces which are the Bucket to draw, and the Mouth to drink. The Plantain is not poyſonous in its nature, but the venomous nature of the Toad turns it into Poyſon. Miſery ariſeth not from the inſufficiency of the Sacrament, but the unworthineſs of the Receiver. That judgment is convey'd to one, when grace is convey'd to another, is our own fault. The Door is open, but Unbelief pulls to the Door, and locks it. The miſeries rain'd down upon us are but the aſcended vapours of our own ſin. Chriſt hath an hand to reach the benefit to us upon our worthineſs, and a hand to inflict the puniſhment on us upon our abuſe; he makes himſelf a Feaſt for the Believers Faith, but the Unbeliever makes himſelf a Feaſt for the Redeemers wrath.

5. We ſee here the baſe nature of ſin. It changeth the brighteſt Ordinances, makes the Waters of the Sanctuary bitter, turns Food into Poyſon, and a Cup of Salvation into one of Damnation. We fruſtrate Gods expectations, when he looks for Fruit; then it is juſt he ſhould fruſtrate ours, when we look for food.

6. If an unworthy receiver be guilty of the body and bloud of Chriſt, a worthy receiver hath a ſpecial intereſt in the body and bloud of Chriſt. He hath as much advantage thereby, as the other hath guilt. The Apoſtle ſpeaks this to put a Bar to the Corinthians ſin, to make them ſenſible of their unreaſonable miſcarriage, not to ſcare them from the Ordinance, but to excite them to come to it in a becoming manner, ſo as to honour God and benefit themſelves; that they might ſheath Gods Sword, and not draw it againſt themſelves. Though the Red Sea ſwallow'd up the Ægyptians that would venture into it, yet it was a Wall to preſerve and deliver the Iſraelites from the hands of their Enemies. He that receives worthily, eats and drinks Salvation to himſelf, by the rule of contraries. The Ordinance comes upon him like rain, fitting him to bring forth Herbs meet for the uſe of him that dreſt him; and ſuch a perſon receives bleſſing from God, Heb. 6. 7. Certainly that Chriſt, that never turn'd away a little Faith without a bleſſing when he was upon Earth, will much leſs now diſappoint it, when it is exercis'd on him. Since in Heaven there is no diminution of his compaſſion, there can be no increaſe of his ſeverity to ſuch an one.

7. Should not all of us, that have at any time of our lives been partakers of this Ordinance, reflect upon our ſelves, yea the beſt of us? Can any of us ſay, That we never contracted the guilt of the Body and Blood of Chriſt; that we always had worthy diſpoſitions for him; that our minds were never wavering, our hearts never cold, our affections never languiſhing, our ſpirits that ſhould have been in Heaven never ſunk to the Earth? Is there not then a partial guilt? Yet God hath admitted us again and again, ſpread his Table, fill'd his Cup, put Manna into our Mouths, and his Cup into our Hands; Wonderful patience in God, to bear with a wonderful ſin in us! Deliver me from bloud-guiltineſs O God, may be the cry of every one of us, as it was Davids, Pſal. 51. 14. How often have we wounded him that hath deliver'd us, kill'd him that hath ſav'd us, abus'd that Bloud that was the price of no leſs than the redemption of our Souls and Bodies? Who doth not condemn the Jews for Crucifying the Lord of Life in his Infirmities? And ought we not as well to condemn our ſelves, for crucifying the Lord of Life in his Glory?

8. How then ſhould we take heed, when ever we approach to the Lords Table, of any unworthy demeanour towards him, whereby to contract ſuch guilt, and incur ſuch diſpleaſure? How ſhould we endeavour after as clear affections to Chriſt as he bears to us, with meltings of heart, and faintings of Soul for him? We receive benefit according to our worthineſs. As we prepare our Souls for God, ſo he prepares himſelf for us, Iſa. 64. 5. Thou meeteſt him that rejoiceth, and works righteouſneſs, that remembers thee in thy ways. He is a Feaſt of fat things to them that have Faith to receive him. If we value not the pledges of his love, we ſhall bear the marks of his indignation. Adam the firſt Rebel of Mankind, had the ſweetneſs of a Promiſe, Promiſe, and was not given up to that juſtice of God which he had provokt, and the malice of that Devil whoſe temptation he had ſwallow'd. Nor was Peter, who in the denial of his loving Maſter in ſo baſe a manner, had gratified the Devil, given up to be winnow'd by him. But the firſt that ever offended in an Unworthy Receiving the Supper (if he did receive it) was without remedy given up as a poſſeſſion to that Devil who had animated him to his treacherous deſign. 'Tis a dreadful eating, when attended with ſuch a ſin, and ſuch a judgment. To receive worthily, is to be affected with the ſufferings of Chriſt, the cauſe of thoſe ſufferings, ſin, the end of thoſe ſufferings, Redemption from the guilt and filth of ſin, the acceptation of thoſe ſufferings by God, the confirmation of the fruits of them, to caſt our ſelves into the Arms of a Crucified Saviour, waſhing our Souls in his Bloud, pleading his merits before God, humbly and believingly applying them to our ſelves. Let us then raiſe up our Spirits, drink deep of the Cup of Salvation, drink abundantly of that love which is ſweeter than Wine. If we come before him in a becoming poſture, with our hearts burning, our Souls thirſting, our drooping Faith may be then reviv'd, our cloſed Eyes open'd, dark ſhades may fly away. The Diſciples that knew not Chriſt in the way, neither by the Features of his Countenance, nor the ſpirituality of his Diſcourſe, yet knew him in the efficacy of a Sacrament; If that were the Celebration of it, as ſome think, which is mention'd, Luke 24. 30, 31. He withheld his grace before, to honour this Ordinance with it. * Let then the bounty of Chriſt engage us: He hath not given us a hand or an arm, his head or his feet, a few drops of his bloud; but his whole Body, his whole Soul, his Graces, his Vertues, the Fruits of his death, to be participated by us, to be inſoul'd with us. He hath given himſelf wholly for a Sacrifice; He hath given himſelf wholly in a Sacrament; a greater gift could not be given on the Croſs; a greater gift cannot be given at a Table. He is given for our comfort, our refreſhment, our Phyſick, our Victory. The relation the Sacrament hath to the Sacrifice, and the benefits conveyed to us, call for a becoming carriage from us. Let us diſcern the Lord's Body, which is the Myſtery and Subject of the Sacrament; value it in its due Rank, as the price of our Redemption, the delight of God, the admiration of Angels, a Body that hath nothing comparable unto it in the whole World.

* Lingend. de Euchariſt. p. 185.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF Self-Examination.

2 Cor. xiii. 5.

Examine your ſelves, whether ye be in the faith: prove your own ſelves. Know ye not your own ſelves, how that Jeſus Chriſt is in you, except ye be Reprobates?

THE Apoſtle having blam'd the Corinthians for ſome enormities among them, and knowing there were ſome that had not repented of them, comes now to a Concluſion of his Epiſtle, and aſſures them, that if he ſhould come again to them, he would not ſpare them, but be ſharp againſt them with his Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And as for ſuch who had not been guilty of thoſe crimes, yet had mean thoughts of the Apoſtle, and would have ſome eminent proof of his Apoſtleſhip, or of Chriſt ſpeaking in him, ver. 3; he refers himſelf to them, and makes them the Judges of it, whether they had not found the mighty operation of Chriſt in him. For as though Chriſt's being crucified, evidenced his being ſubject to the infirmities of man, and the penalty of the Law; yet his reſurrection, and his glory is an evidence of the power of God in him, and with him: ſo though I be weak, yet you your ſelves bear Arguments in you of the power of God, working in the Apoſtleſhip, which I have exerciſed among you; and therefore examine your own ſelves, and try whether there be not a mighty change wrought in your ſouls, whether you are not in the faith, and quite other men than you were; if you find not ſuch effects, aſſure your ſelves, you are not yet in the ſtate of true Chriſtianity.

Some underſtand this of Chriſt being in them in regard of the miraculous Gifts, the Gifts of Miracles, Tongues, and Healing; and underſtand by faith here, a faith of Miracles, which was a ſpecial Gift, and very reſplendent in the Primitive Church. But that doth not ſeem to be the ſenſe of it; for the poſſeſſing ſuch Gifts, is not a ſign of Election, nor the want of them a preſage of Reprobation, or a teſtimony of inſincerity. Miracles may be wrought by thoſe that have not a juſtifying and ſaving faith. Judas had the ſame Commiſſion with the reſt of the Apoſtles, at Chriſt's firſt ſending them out in the time of his life; and we may well conjecture, that Miracles were wrought by him, as well as by his Collegues, in that employment. Beſides, it cannot be manifeſted, that thoſe Gifts were beſtowed upon every Member of the Primitive Church; but only upon ſome culled out by God for that purpoſe. And if by Faith be underſtood here a faith of Miracles, whereby they ſhould try themſelves whether Chriſt was in them, thoſe that had not that Gift conferr'd upon them, had no evidence of their being in Chriſt; or at leaſt, had not not so illustrious an evidence as the others had, who outstript the rest of their brethren in those miraculous powers. The gift of miracles was an evidence that Christ was in those instruments, in regard of his power, but true Faith only is an evidence, that Christ is in a man in regard of his grace.

Examine your selves *.] Tempt your selves. The word tempting is sometimes taken for trying, as when God is said to tempt Abraham, in commanding him to sacrifice his Son, to know or make known to him that he feared God, Gen. 22. 1, 12. * Πειρ.

Prove your selves *.] Try your selves as Goldsmiths do Metals; prove your selves, that you may know experimentally what is in you. Δοκιμη is used for experience, Rom. 5. 5. * Δοκι

The phrase speaks diligence in this work; the repetition intimates both diligence and frequency; what is not known in one act, may be known in repeated acts. Self-examination is a duty in all cases, the repetition speaks necessity; it implies also mens natural backwardness to it.

Know you not your own selves.] It implies the folly and unreasonableness of the neglect of it, also the possibility and easiness upon a due and diligent enquiry, to know whether Christ be in us or no.

How that Christ is in you.] Whether the power of Christ hath not wrought in you to the transforming your Soul.

Unless you be reprobates *.] The Apostle doth not understand by the word reprobates, such as are eternally rejected by God, as reprobates are opposed to the elect. Those that had not Christ in them at that time, might have him afterwards, the work of conversion being daily promoted in the Church; but reprobates, i. e. counterfeit, adulterate, not yet purified and refined from your dross; or, unless you are unapprov'd or void of judgment, or unexperienced in the ways of Christ. And he puts μήτι a diminutive term, unless you be somewhat and in part insincere: Or it may go further, and the Apostle might mean thus; If after the power of Christ, which hath appear'd so gloriously among you, you find no strong operation in your own Souls towards him, you have reason to suspect that you are not owned by him, that he may give you over to your selves. * Αδοκιμοι.

The Protestants confirm the doctrine of the possibility of assurance, and a mans knowledge of himself to be in a state of Grace from this Text, which doctrine the Papists impugn *. 'Tis strange, that some of the Schoolmen, who assert that a man may by the strength of pure naturals, love God above all things, yet deny that a man can know that he loves God above all. * Ca loc.

In the verse, Observe,

1. The duty expresst. Examine your selves, Prove your selves.
2. The matter of it. Whether you be in the Faith.
3. The enforcement and motive. Except you are reprobates.

Doct. Self-examination is a necessary duty belonging to every one in the Church, and requires much diligence in the performing of it.

Hence some observe, that when it is expresst, that God created man in his own Image, Gen. 1. 27. In the image of God created he him; the word is Elohim, which is a name of God belonging to his judicial acts, which imply tryal and examination; in the Image of Elohim created he him, i. e. with a power of self-tryal and self-judging. This self-examination is an exact and thorough search into a mans self, an exquisite consideration in what posture he stands to God. The word is the rule, a glass wherein we see Gods will; and Conscience is the examiner, that is, the glass wherein we see our lives, and the motions of our hearts: and which, by the help of the word, doth dissect and open the Soul to its self.

I shall not prosecute this Doctrine fully, only lay down some conclusions.

1. 'Tis a necessary duty, in regard of our comfort. What good doth it do a man to hear that a Christ is sent to redeem, that a ransom is paid, that sin is pardonable, Hell avoidable, Heaven attainable upon the conditions of Faith, and not know whether he hath ſo advantageous a Grace in him, which only entitles him to ſuch glorious priviledges? What comfort in Chriſt, in his meritorious Paſſion, in his triumphant Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, in his prevalent interceſſion, unleſs we know that by Faith we are united to him, and conſequently have an intereſt in all the gracious fruits of his different ſtates of humiliation and exaltation? If we can find this Grace in our Souls, what a joy unſpeakable doth reſult from thence? Chriſt as a King will protect my Soul, Chriſt as a Prieſt hath expiated my ſins, Chriſt as a Prophet will remove my ignorance, my Soul was in his mind upon the Croſs, my concerns are in his breaſt in Heaven, my name is enrolled in the regiſter of his ſubjects.

'Tis neceſſary,

(1.) Becauſe there are common Graces. As there is an outward and inward call, ſo there is an outward profeſſion, and an inward transformation. There are ſome vertues come from the hand of God as Creator, and ſome immediately from the Spirit as a renewer; ſome common Virtues for the preſervation of humane ſociety, and ſome ſpecial Graces for the fabrick of an invisible Church. There is an acceptation of the Law for an outward practice, without an affection to the Lawgiver, or an eſteem of the ſpirituality of the Law it ſelf. There is a ſanctification in oppoſition to Judaiſm, or Paganiſm, or ſome erroneous opinion, which is common to thoſe that may Apoſtatize, Heb. 10. 29. The Apoſtle calls the Church of Corinth Saints, 1 Cor. 1. 2. called to be ſaints, Saints by vocation outwardly, not all Saints by a new vocation inwardly.

(2.) Becauſe there are counterfeit Graces. There is much falſe Coin in the World, waſht Pewter, and guilded Braſs; there are Sepulchres garniſht outwardly, and full of rottenneſs and ſtench within; there are many that want not their artifices in Religion, as well as in common converſe. Good things may be imitated, when they are not rooted. We have read of ſome Limners that have repreſented Chriſt ſo to the life, as to deceive Artiſts as skilful as themſelves. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of a dead Faith, Jam. 2. 26. which is like the carcaſs of a man without life; a Faith that deſerves no more the name of Faith, than a carcaſs doth the title of a man, when the enlivening and principal part is fled. There is a repentance unto life, Acts 11. 18. which ſuppoſeth a dead Repentance, ſuch as Ahabs humiliation, like marble ſweating tears in moiſt and rainy weather, without any mollifying of the natural hardneſs; or Judas his ſorrow, rais'd by the fire in his Conſcience, not like Peters by a ſpiritual influence of his Maſter. There is a lively hope, 1 Pet. 1. 3. which ſuppoſeth a dead hope; there is a lively ſtone, 1 Pet. 2. 5. which implies that there are lifeleſs ſtones, that are not inwardly fitted and prepared for the ſpiritual building. The building upon the Rock and the Sand might have the ſame beauty, form, and ornaments, but not the ſame foundation; one was ſtable, and the other tottering. There is a repentance towards God, Acts 20. 21. when the diſhonour of God afflicts us, which implies there is a Repentance towards our ſelves, when the danger of our own perſons ſtarts a pretended ſorrow for ſin. There is a Faith that is ſound and laſting, a Faith that is temporary and periſhing, a Faith that ſtarts up like a Muſhroom in a night, and withers at the next ſcorching temptation; there is a Faith common with Devils, and a Faith proper to Chriſtians; there is a Faith of Chriſt, and a Faith in Chriſt.

(3.) Becauſe every man is in a ſtate of grace or nature. There is a ſtate of grace, Rom 5. 1. a ſtate of wrath, Epheſ. 2. 3. The World is made up of receivers of Chriſt, or rejecters of him, true ſubjects to God, or rebels againſt him. There are two Families, the Family of God, and the Family of the Devil; the viſible Church was not without its diſtinction; the Ark contains unclean as well as clean Beaſts; there is a Cain in Adams Family, a Cham in Noahs Ark, an Iſhmael in Abrahams Houſe, and a Judas in our Saviours retinue; and at the laſt Day, the whole World will be diſtinguiſht into two only kinds, of Sheep and Goats. 'Tis neceſſary therefore to enquire whoſe we are, whether we belong to the God of Heaven, or the God of this World; whether we have the renewed Image of God, or ſtill retain the old ſtamp of the Devil.

2. 'Tis a duty that requires diligence and care. That which is of infinite conſequence quence in the ſtate of your Souls, ought not to be built upon ſandy and ſlight foundations. 'Tis call'd communing with a mans own heart, Pſal. 4.4. Not a ſlight glance and away: ſweeping and looking with a candle, Luke 15. 8. wherewith every cranny and chink is pryed into. Trying of the reins, which are parts of the body hidden with fat; there muſt be a careful removing of ſeveral things to come at them: a ſearching for ſome precious filings of gold in a heap of duſt. An employing all the faculties of the Soul in a diligent ſearch, Pſal. 77. 6. My ſpirit made diligent ſearch. 'Tis expreſt by counting, Pſal. 119. 59. I thought on my ways, חשבתי, he looked over the acts of his Soul, one by one. The heart is called the inward parts or depths of the belly, Prov. 20. 7. as the bowels are folded together in many coats and coverings, that they are not eaſily come to; ſo the heart of man is full of devices.

(1.) Diligence is requiſite, becauſe the work is difficult. 'Tis no eaſie matter to be acquainted with our ſelves. The Soul is not well acquainted with its own features, and preſerves not the Species of it ſelf. We behold our faces in a glaſs, and ſoon forget what manner of men we are, Jam. 1. 23, 24. As man is apt to know any thing but himſelf; ſo it is more eaſie for him to know any thing than himſelf, as the eye ſees every thing but it ſelf. There muſt be diligence to diſcern the rational workings of our Soul, to know whether we truly underſtand ſuch a thing, or really and firmly will ſuch a good. The judgment of man is corrupted, and miſrepreſents things like a crackt glaſs *. We can more eaſily judge of a bodily than of a ſpiritual diſeaſe; becauſe the underſtanding which ſhould judge of the ſtate of the Soul, is ſickly and ill affected it ſelf. Our wills alſo being ſo changeable, ſometimes ſet on one thing, and ſometimes flitting to another, the ſpiritual workings of them are not ſo readily diſcernable. This work is done by a reflex act; and reflex acts in ſpirituals, as well as naturals, are weakeſt and more languiſhing, whereas direct acts are more powerful and vigorous. Where grace is ſmall, and corruptions many, it muſt be hard to diſcern it, as it is for an eye to diſcern a ſmall needle, eſpecially if in the duſt and rubbiſh. The roots of ſin alſo lye deep, like Achans wedge of gold in the earth, not eaſily to be found without good directions. Luſt lyes in ſecret corners; there is a deceitfulneſs of it, ſubtle evaſions, and ſpecious pretences, conſideration is requiſite to the diſcerning of them. External acts diſcover themſelves; but the inward acts of the Soul, which are the ſureſt evidences, are not diſcernable without a diligent inſpection. The natural inconſtancy and levity of our ſpirits divert us, and the ſtreams of our corruptions cloud and bemit us, and controul our endeavours in ſelf examination, that we cannot ſometimes any more fixedly behold the motions of Grace, than we can ſee the beams of the Sun in a black and mourning Sky.

* Preſton.

(2.) Diligence is requiſite, becauſe man is naturally unwilling to this Duty. He would live any where but with himſelf, think of any thing but himſelf; delights moſt in thoſe things which hinder him from a conſideration of his own ſtate. Men are more willing to have their minds rove through all the parts of Nature, than to buſie themſelves in ſelf-reflexion; would read any Book or Relation, rather than the Hiſtory of their own heart. We are neareſt to our ſelves phyſically, and furtheſt from our own ſelves morally. Men whoſe Titles are crackt and unſure, are loth to have them tryed before the Judge, and come under the ſiftings of Conſcience. Ever ſince the Fall we run counter to God: 'tis the property of the Divine Nature firſt to know himſelf, and then to know other things; but we are croſs, would know any other thing, but not our ſelves, would read others, and not ſo much as ſpell our ſelves. We naturally abhor any actions wherein we may be like God, though they are the moſt proper operations for our Souls, and ſuitable to the nature of them, as reflex acts are. There being in us a contrariety to God and his Law, to God and his Goſpel, there reſults from thence an unwillingneſs in us to bring our hearts under the examination of Conſcience, that power which acts by authority and deputation from God. And when grace doth egg us at any time to the performance of the duty, do not our hearts hang back, and our corruptions check us in it? Satan is no mean inſtrument in this; he is ſaid to blind the world, that they might not know their ſtate. He hath loſt his likeneſs to God in his primitive happineſs, and ever ſince envies man the recovery of that likeneſs, which is poſſible to man, and impoſſible to himſelf; and therefore diverts him from an glances towards it, and endeavours after it, the firſt ſtep to which is ſelf-reflection.

This unwillingneſs ariſeth,

[1.] From carnal ſelf-love. 'Tis natural to man to think well of himſelf, and ſuffer his affections to bemiſt or bridle his judgment. A byaſt perſon cannot be a juſt Judge. Every man is his own flatterer, and ſo conceals himſelf from himſelf. Very few that are uncomely in body, or deformed in mind, but think themſelves as handſome and honeſt as others. David ſo lov'd himſelf, that he ſaw nothing of his ſin, but was fair in his own eyes, till Nathan rouz'd him up, by telling him, Thou art the man. Every man would be right in his own eyes, Prov. 16. 2. Every Blackamore fancies himſelf to have a comely colour. This ſelf-love may ſo far bemiſt a good man, that he may not believe ſuch an act to be a crime, ſuch an excuſe to be a fig-leaf, ſuch a mark to be unſound. And this ſelf-love keeps men off from this work, for fear they ſhould behold their own guilt, and their Souls be ſtung with anguiſh. Men that are Bankrupts are loth to caſt up their Accounts, leſt it ſhould appear to them that they are undone. Some are loth to ſee their ugly faces in a glaſs. Conſcience awakened by this duty, bites and ſtings; and men are loth to impair their own eaſe; becauſe they would eſcape the din of an accuſer in their own boſoms; they turn fugitives from their own hearts, and would rather go to Hell in a feather-bed, than to Heaven in a fiery chariot. While man ſeeks nothing more than himſelf in a ſinful way, he conceals himſelf and flyes furtheſt from himſelf in a reflexive way.

[2.] From Preſumption and Security. Some walk as ſecurely, as if there were no Heaven, and it concern'd them not; others walk as preſumptuouſly, as though they were Heirs apparent unto it, and yet have no Title. Many will have a falſe perſwaſion of their faith and intereſt in Chriſt at the laſt day, Mat. 7. 22. and cry, Lord, Lord: and the fooliſh Virgins will knock as confidently, and expect entrance to the Feaſt as well as the wiſe; will not believe but they have a Title to Heaven, till Chriſt himſelf clap the door upon them, and manifeſt the contrary. Had they rak'd in their own Souls, and been plain dealers with themſelves, they could not but have found themſelves in a loſt condition. Thoſe that thus preſume, cannot endure to hear of the differences between hypocriſie and ſincerity; how far a caſt-away may go in Religion. This was the reaſon the Phariſees were ſuch enemies to Chriſt, becauſe he rak'd in their conſciences; they could never come near him, but he brought ſome inditement againſt them of hypocriſie. As Tertullian called Hereticks Lucifugæ Scripturarum, becauſe they would not be cured of their errors; ſo are ſuch men alſo afraid to bring their hearts to the teſt of the Word, becauſe they would not be cured of their falſe preſumptions. As Ahab hated Micaiah, ſo theſe their own conſciences, becauſe they expect to hear that from them which they think evil, and cannot have ſuch a view of themſelves in that glaſs, as they deſire to have.

(3.) Diligence is requiſite, becauſe man is hardly induced to continue in this work. That ſelf-love which makes them unwilling to enter upon it, renders them unfit to make any progreſs in it. When we do begin it, how quickly do we faint in it? How ſoon are our firſt glances upon our ſelves turn'd to a fixedneſs upon ſome ſlighter object? Every mans heart is like an unruly horſe, that will be going out of the way, if there be not a reſolution to check it in its firſt ſtarts, and bring things to a judicial tryal. The heart it ſelf is ſo light and fluttering, that it wants the ſtability of grace to fix it in the tryal of grace.

(4.) Diligence is requiſite, becauſe we are naturally apt to be deceiv'd, and to delude our ſelves. Our natural blindneſs and dimneſs render us liable to miſtake, and our deceitful heart may ſing a requiem to us while we are fools. We have a ſubtle Enemy that lyes in wait for us, who can transform himſelf into an Angel of light, and diſguiſe his ſerpentine hiſſings to make them appear like the breathings of the Spirit. If Adam in Innocence, who had an ability to diſcern his methods, was deluded by him, much more may we be deceiv'd by him in a ſtate of corruption, when our hearts naturally have his ſtamp, and are inclin'd to take his part, and joyn with him in a ſelf-deceit; The heart of man is deceitful, Jer. 17. 9. 'Tis the great

Impoſtor

Impoſtor and Cheat of the World, the Antichriſt within us, the deceiver of our Souls, as the great Antichriſt is called the deceiver of the Nations. How apt are we to take upon truſt what our heart firſt ſpeaks! James and John could tell Chriſt that they were able to drink of his Cup, and no queſtion they meant as they ſpake, Mat. 20. 22. but had it come to a tryal, they would not have endured to ſip of it; and the iſſue manifeſted it, they turn'd their backs upon him as well as the other Diſciples. The Iſraelites, had they tryed themſelves by their preſent reſolution, Deut. 5. 27. All that the Lord our God ſhall ſpeak unto thee, we will hear and do it, might have ſubſcribed themſelves as Pious as any in the World; they ſpake no other than they meant: But God had a further inſpection into them than they had into themſelves, v. 9. Oh that there were ſuch a heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments always! Natural Conſcience is often ſilenc'd by a pretence and ſhow; and man is naturally apt to make his own corrupt judgment, ſometimes alſo his paſſion, the ſtandard of good and evil; and not only to frame Grace according to his own affections, but a God alſo, Pſalm 50. 21. Thou thought'ſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thy ſelf. The Apoſtle intimates it in that ſignal mark of caution, when he preſſeth a truth to which natural Conſcience will ſubſcribe, that neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor covetous, nor drunkards, ſhall inherit the kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 5. 9. Be not deceived, ſaith he; even in theſe things, men may deceive themſelves with falſe hopes, much more in moral righteouſneſs. Many boaſt themſelves rich in ſpirituals, when they are really poor; ſo did Laodicea think her ſelf rich, when God gave her another inventory of her eſtate, that ſhe was poor and miſerable, and blind and naked, Revel 3. 17. There is too much reſting in the World upon outward priviledges, * and often Beggars conceit themſelves Princes becauſe they dream of Scepters. How many extend their hopes as far as their wiſhes, and theſe as far as a fond fancy and imagination!

* Vaughan Serm. p. 6, 7.

(5.) Diligence is neceſſary, becauſe, To be deceived in this is the moſt ſtinging conſideration. To drop into Hell, when a man takes it for granted that he is in Heaven, to dream of a Crown on the head, when the Fetters are upon the Feet, will double the anguiſh. 'Tis better for a rich man to dream that he is a Beggar, for when he awakes, his fears vaniſh; than for a Beggar to dream that he is rich, for when his Dream ends, his ſorrow begins. The higher the falſe conceit, the lower do men ſink when they fall; the higher mens expectations of Heaven are without ground, the more ſtinging is their loſs of it. * To have vain hopes, till God puts us into the Scale and weighs us, will be a miſerable diſappointment. For a man to deceive himſelf, aggravates this; as ſelf-murder is accounted a greater ſin than the murder of another, becauſe it is againſt that Charity to our ſelves, which is the Copy and Rule of Charity to another.

* Miſerum eſt fuiſſe felicem.

(6.) Diligence is neceſſary, becauſe, Many have miſcarried for want of it. Thouſands that have thought themſelves in the Suburbs of Heaven, have been caſt down to the Depths of Hell. If all ſhould be ſaved that think they ſhall be ſaved, the ſtrait way would be that which leads to Hell: for what man is there almoſt that doth not confidently believe he ſhall be happy? How many dream they are going to Paradiſe, and when they awake, find themſelves in the Devil's Arms?

II. The Uſe.

1. If this be our Duty to examine our ſelves, then the knowledge of our ſtate is poſſible. If we are to examine our ſelves, we may then know our ſelves. Reflection and knowledge of ſelf is a Prerogative of a rational Nature. We know that we have ſouls by the operations of them *. We may know that we have Grace by the effects of it, if we be diligent; as we may know by the Beams of the Sun, that the Sun is riſen, if we ſhut not our eyes. Grace chiefly lyes in the will, and it diſcovers it ſelf in actions. The more raiſed any Being is, the more active it is. The Being of a God is known by the effects of his power in the World, and the being of Faith is known by the operations of it in the heart and life. Though Gold, and that which is gilt, be like in appearance, yet the true nature of each of them may be diſcerned by the Touchſtone. Hypocritical Grace is like true Grace, but it is not the ſame. Sincerity may be known. If

we caſt but a glance upon our hearts in any word or action, we may know whether we mean as we ſpeak or do, or whether we have any by-ends in it. The diſcerning of habitual ſincerity, is not ſo eaſie as the knowledge of an integrity in a particular act: Yet if we keep a due Watch over the motions of our hearts, and the actions of our lives, as they come upon the Stage, and conſider what their ends are, it will not be ſo difficult to know our ſelves. 'Tis impoſſible a mans will ſhould ſteal by him in all the actions it produceth, and a man be ignorant and inſenſible of it. The ſpirit and conſcience of a man may know ſuch things as are in it; both the habits it hath, and particular motives to this or that act, 2 Cor. 2. 11. The ſpirit of a man that is in him, knows the things of a man. If men would be more inward in converſing with their own hearts, they might have an acquaintance with the concerns of their ſouls, as their ſenſe hath with outward objects. There can be no ſufficient reaſon given, why the underſtanding ſhould not as well know the acts of the ſoul and will, as the acts of the ſenſe, and the motions of the body. We know our particular paſſions, and the exerciſes of them. There is no man that fears a danger, or loves an amiable object, but he knows his own acts about them, as well as the object of thoſe acts. If a man have faith and love, why ſhould he not be as able to know the acts of faith and love, as to know the acts of his particular affections? This is eaſie, if we did live more with our ſelves, and oftner exerciſe that prerogative of reflection, which we have above Beaſts. Tis difficult indeed in regard of our corruption; as the Law is ſaid to be weak, not in it ſelf, it was able to anſwer the end for which God apppointed it, and man by the endowments of his Creation was able to obſerve it; but it became weak to make men happy, and man impotent to conform to it, through the fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. by the entrance of corruption. 'Tis the ſame corruption of man which renders this knowledge of himſelf difficult. He lives too much abroad out of his own ſoul, and too little within, otherwiſe there is no doubt but he may know his own will, and the habitual inclination of it.

2. How fooliſh is the neglect of this duty! How many ramble about the World without acquainting themſelves with their own Hearts, or conſidering whether Chriſt be in them? What advantage can there be in the knowledge of other things, if we know not whether there be any operations of Grace in our own Souls? How few give themſelves the opportunity of a ſerious retirement? How unreaſonable is it to reſt ſatified with ungrounded hopes of Heaven, to call our ſelves Citizens of Jeruſalem above, and have no copy of our freedom to ſhow, nor any living witneſs in us to bear teſtimony for us? 'Tis againſt nature to deſire to be in any company rather than our own, to endeavour to know every thing in the World rather than our ſelves, which is the firſt object of knowledge: ſhould that reaſon which God hath given us, more excellent than the nature of the Beaſts, be employed about examining every thing but our ſelves?

III. Uſe of Exhortation.

'Tis our higheſt advantage to know what ſhould become of our Souls in eternity. Is it a ſmall thing to be within the verge of the wrath of God? And is not the knowledge of this neceſſary if we be in ſuch a caſe, that we may avoid it? Or is it a ſmall thing to be an Heir of Heaven? Are juſtification, adoption, acceptation, ſmall priviledges, faith, love, repentance, ſmall graces? Is not the knowledge of them neceſſary, that we may have the comfort of them? May not ſome convenient ſpace of time be every day ſpent in this? May I not ſay as Chriſt to his Diſciples, Can you not watch one hour? Can you not ſpare one hour for ſo great and neceſſary a work? Let us enter therefore into the boſom of our heart, and ſee whether we have a true Faith, ſuch as Abrahams; whether it be ſuch a lively Faith that hath free'd our Souls in part from the mud of our Corruptions? Whether it be a Faith reſting upon Chriſt for ſalvation, without giving indulgence to the leaſt offence to him? Such a Faith that purifies the Heart, reforms the Life, enflames the Soul with a love to God, cauſing us to rejoice in him, and in any further degree of conformity to him? Whether it engenders in us a ſerious deſire, and a ſutable endeavour to obey Chriſt? Such a Faith that relyes upon his Promiſes without ſlighting his Precepts?

I ſhall,

I ſhall, laſtly, give you ſome Directions about this Duty of Self-Examination.

1. Acquaint your ſelves with thoſe marks that are proper only to a true Chriſtian. Overlook all thoſe that are common with the Hypocrite, ſuch as outward profeſſion, conſtant attendances, ſome affections in Duties. Let us not judge our ſelves by outward acts: A Player is not a Prince, becauſe he acts the Part of a Prince. But we muſt judge our ſelves by what we are in our retirements, in our hearts. He only is a good man, and doth good, that doth it from a Principle of goodneſs within, and not from fear of Laws, or to gain a good opinion in the World. Grace is of that nature, that it cannot poſſibly have any by-end. As it is the immediate birth of God, ſo it doth immediately reſpect God in its actings. In the very nature of it, it aims at God, as to love him, believe in him. The great accuſation the Devil brings againſt Job, was, that he ſerved not God for nought, that his ſervice was not ſincere, that he acted a righteous part for his own ends, and to preſerve his worldly proſperity, Job 1. 9, 10. But if our ends be right, and our actions in the courſe of them according to his Rule, if our hearts in them reſpect God's Law and his Glory; how will the Devils Arrows drop down, as ſhot againſt a Brazen Wall? The inward bent, and the habitual delight and affection of our hearts, is chiefly to be eyed, whether they are in God, or in other things. This was the Apoſtles way of tryal, Rom. 7. 22. I delight in the Law of God after the inward man; and what the incitements are to your profeſſion and ſervice; whether they are not bare affections, moveable paſſions, carnal intereſts, a good education, a working fancy, &c. Take thoſe marks, which are inconſiſtent with hypocriſie, ſuch as accompany ſalvation, Heb. 6. 9. and neceſſarily infer a truth of Grace. Begin at the loweſt ſtep of true and ſincere Grace; enquire not at firſt into the marks of an high and towring faith, of the eminent degrees of it: this would be to put a Giant's Suit upon an Infant's Back, and judge our ſelves not men, becauſe the Garments fit us not. A ſmall Beam will manifeſt that the Sun doth peep out of a Cloud; but larger ones, and more ſpread, evidence that it hath got a full Victory. Have a right Notion of true Grace; and though Grace be little, yet you may know it: as if a man hath a true Notion of a Diamond, though never ſo ſmall, he can truly ſay that is a Diamond, as well as if it were bigger. Though a gracious ſpirit may not have Grace enough to ſatisfie its deſires, yet it may find Grace enough to ſettle its ſoul. There may be Grace enough to give a man an intereſt in Chriſt, though there be not a full ſtrength to anſwer all the obligations of the Goſpel. Let us examine firſt the truth of Grace, and afterwards the height of Grace. A little of the courſeſt Gold is more valuable than much of the fineſt Braſs. See how the habitual frame and inclination of the heart ſtands. A heart ſet upon Heaven diſcovers the treaſures of the heart to be there. See whether we have David's temper, to hate every falſe way; or Paul's, to have a conſcience void of offence towards God, in regard of his ſervice, as well as towards man, in regard of his converſe; not to neglect any thing towards God, that conſcience tells us is our Duty to him. One ſound and undeniable mark is better than a thouſand diſputable ones.

2. Let us make the word of God only our Rule in Tryals. This is the only impartial friend we can ſtick to, and therefore it ought to be made our main Councellor. The Word is the Principle whereby Grace is wrought, and it is the medium whereby Grace is known. The Word is that whereby we muſt judge of Doctrine, to the Law, and to the teſtimony: If an Angel from Heaven ſpeaks any other thing, than what God hath delivered, he is not to be heard. 'Tis alſo the Rule whereby we muſt judge of Graces. If Conſcience ſpeak any thing for a mans comfort, that is not according to the Word, 'tis to be ſilenced. If Conſcience preſents us with any thing as a Grace, that will not hold water before God, 'tis to be rejected in that Caſe. Bring it to the Touch-ſtone to ſee if it be currant Coin. As we are to try other Mens ſpirits, ſo our own, by this Rule. 'Tis a part of man's ſinful ambition to be his own Judge, and ſo to make his own fancy his Rule. The Scripture-Beam is like a Sun-Beam, it will diſcover the moſt inward, and the moſt minute thing, Heb. 4. 12. It will reveal the deceitful contrivances and ſophiſtry of the heart. This Word muſt try us at laſt, 'tis to be the Rule of the laſt Judgment, to ſalvation or condemnation; let it be the Rule of our our ſelf-judgment. 'Tis ſafe for us to take that Rule, which God himſelf will take, and take in good part whatſoever the Word ſaith: If it ſhew us our evil, let us change our courſe; if it ſpeak good, let us be thankful to God; and give him the Rent-charge and Tribute due to him for it.

(3.) Take not the firſt dictates of Conſcience. He that truſts his own heart, is a fool, Prov. 28. 26. i. e. without a diligent inquiſition, 'tis not wiſdom to do ſo; but he that walks wiſely, ſhall be delivered: he that makes a ſtrict inquiry into it, ſhall be deliver'd from its ſnares and his own fears. 'Tis a ſearching, examining, proving our hearts, that is required, not taking them at the firſt word. There may be gold at the top, and droſs at the bottom. We are naturally quick of belief of thoſe things we would have, and deſire. We ſhould be jealous of theſe hearts which have ſo often deceiv'd us, as we are of thoſe who have often broken their word. Whatſoever it ſpeaks, ſuſpend your belief of its ſentence, till you have well examin'd the ground and reaſons why it gives in ſuch a report. If it tells you, you are in a good ſtate, that you are Penitents, Believers, have a choice love to God, an eye fixing on the glory of God as your end, bring it to the teſt, examine why it ſaith ſo; we have here to do with the greateſt Impoſtor, and in other things we will not give credit to a Cheater. Therefore our ſearching often in Scripture is join'd with trying. We muſt not only ſearch out our graces, but try whether they be of the right ſtamp, and have the mark of God upon them. Examination and proof muſt go together in this act, as they do in the Text.

(4.) In all implore the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God. Natural Conſcience is not enough in this caſe, there muſt be the influence of the Spirit. 'Tis Gods Interpreter that can only ſhow unto a man his righteouſneſs, Job 33. 23. The Sun muſt give light, before the glaſs can reflect the beams. Grace cannot be diſcern'd, if the Spirit obſcure and hide it ſelf. In the night the beautiful colours in a room are by the darkneſs as it were buried from the ſight; but when the Sun diſcharges its beams into the chamber, they are enlivened, and affect our ſenſe. There may be graces in the Soul which appear not, if the Spirit withdraws his light; but when he diſplays himſelf, they will appear in their true luſtre. In all our tryals of our ſelves, let us beg of God to try us. When David had been ranſacking his heart, he would not reſt in his own endeavours, but begs of God to open his heart more fully to his knowledge, and bleſs him with a perfect diſcovery of it, Pſal. 139. 21, 23. Do not I hate them which hate thee? I hate them with a perfect hatred. I think, I conclude I do; but leſt my concluſions may be wrong, Do thou, O God, ſearch me and know my heart, try me and know my thoughts, i. e. make my heart and thoughts and bent of them viſible and fully diſcernable to me.

(5.) Let us take heed that while we examine our graces and find them, our hearts be not carried out to a reſting upon them. We may draw ſome comfort from them, but muſt check the leaſt inclination of founding our Juſtification upon them. Graces are ſigns, not cauſes of Juſtification. Chriſts Righteouſneſs only is our Wedding-garment, our Graces are but as the fringes of it. Liberty is a ſign the Malefactor is pardon'd, but it is not the cauſe of his pardon, but the Kings merciful Grant. God is a jealous God, and is likely there to withdraw his hand, where the glory of his works ſhall be attributed to any thing below him, and his gifts made equal with his Son: and therefore as one ſaith, * In our tryals of our ſelves we ſhould do as men with a pair of Compaſſes, fix one foot in the Centre while they move the other about the Circumference; ſo let our Souls reſt in Chriſt, and hold him with one hand, while with the other we turn over the leaves of our hearts, and be inquiſitive after our evidences. Our Juſtification is not by any inherent Grace, but our Juſtification is known to us by the grace we find in our ſelves.

* Manton.

(6.) In caſe we find our ſelves not in ſuch a condition as we deſire, let us exerciſe direct acts of Faith. Let us not deject our ſelves, and make ſo bad a concluſion, as Peter did, and ſay to Chriſt, Lord, depart from me, for I am a ſinful man; but let us caſt our ſelves upon the Truth and Faithfulneſs of God in the promiſe of life in Chriſt. Lay hold on the promiſe of life, as if you had not laid hold of it before. When comfort is not fetcht in by reflex acts, let Faith be exerciſed in direct acts. When there is darkneſs and no light, truſting in the Name of the Lord, and ſtaying ſtaying upon God, is the proper buſineſs of the Soul, Iſai. 50. 10. We ſhould then drink of the waters of life, groan under our ſin, and go to a Saviour; forget, as Paul, the things that are behind, and preſs forward to the things which are before, Philip. 3. 13, 14. We naturally would believe God upon his deed, and truſt in him, becauſe we find ſomething wrought in our own Souls; God therefore ſometimes hides a mans own graces from him, to draw out the Soul in acts of Faith, which indeed gives the moſt glory to God. God will be believed upon his Word, and God turns it often to the great advantage of the Soul, and puts it upon the exerciſe of Faith, when he denys it the comfortable ſight of Faith. In this caſe we ſhould make uſe of ſuch Scriptures which may foment and nouriſh Faith, and put us upon the caſting out that filth and mud in our Souls which we diſcern'd. When we can find no Grace to preſent Chriſt with, we ſhould fetch Grace from him. A City of refuge is for a Malefactor, a Phyſician for the ſick, and a Chriſt for thoſe that groan under the burden of ſin; a Chriſt lifted up and dying, for thoſe that are ſtung by the Serpent.

To conclude. Let us be frequent in this work. Let us not neglect a priviledge God hath inveſted us with above other Creatures below us. There is nothing can reflect upon it ſelf, inquire into the nature of its own being, but man; and ſhall we only reſemble the Beaſts, to ſee thoſe things which are without us, and not turn our eyes inward, and ſee what workmanſhip of God there is in our Souls, and what conformity there is between us and our Creator, between us and our Redeemer? Shall we put ſuch an affront upon our ſelves, as to baniſh the nobleſt part of our Souls from its proper operation? A frequent examination of our ſelves would ballaſt our Life, keep Faith and Repentance freſh and vigorous. Let us take heed of a ſpiritual lazineſs, and ſaying, there is a Lion in the way; let us remember it is neceſſary, and though it be difficult, it is not ſo in it ſelf, but by reaſon of our averſneſs to it. The difficulty may be cured by diligence; the neceſſity of it, and the advantages of it, ſhould both enflame our deſires to it, and encreaſe our pains in it. Certainly there can be no more dreadful ſign of no Grace at all, than a neglect of tryal whether we have Grace or no. If we examine not our ſelves, prove not our ſelves whether we be in the Faith, we are reprobates, i. e. unſound, inſincere, not in a ſtate of true Chriſtianity.

A DISCOURSE OF THE KNOWLEDGE OF Chriſt Crucified.

1 Cor. 2. 2.

For I determined not to know any thing among you, ſavē Jeſus Chriſt, and him Crucified.

THE Church of Corinth, to which the Apoſtle directs this Epiſtle, was a Church as flouriſhing in gifts as any; yet as much crumbled into diviſions, as eminent in knowledge. A year and ſix months the Apoſtle had been converſant among them, planting and watering with expectation of a plentiful Harveſt; but no ſooner had he turned his back, but the Devil ſteps in and ſows his tares. It was a Church ſtill, but divided; it had the Evangelical Doctrine, but too much choak'd with ſchiſmatical Weeds.

1. Obſerve. The beſt Churches are like the Moon, not without their ſpots. The pureſt times had their imperfections; a pure ſtate is not allowed to this, but reſerv'd for another World.

2. Church antiquity is a very unſafe rule. Other Churches at ſome diſtance from the Apoſtles, were as ſubject to error as this. Pride and ambition were leſs like to keep out of them, than out of Chriſts Family. Had the Hiſtory of this Churches practices and tenets, without this corrective Epiſtle of the Apoſtle, been tranſmitted to after-Ages, they would have been uſed as a pattern; not the Church, but Scripture Authority is to be followed. Fathers muſt not be prefer'd before Apoſtles, Church practices are no patterns, but as they are parallel to the grand and unerring rule.

The Apoſtle laying to heart the rents, draws up the whole Doctrine he had before preached unto them, into a ſhort Epitome, but firſt declares the manner of his firſt carriage among them, v. 1. He came not to them with excellency of ſpeech, or of wiſdom, declaring unto them the teſtimony of God.

To come with mans wiſdom,

1. Would detract from the ſtrength and excellency of the word, which as the Sun, ſhines beſt with its own beams. The Spirits eloquence is moſt piercing and demonſtrative, and quickly convinceth a man by its own evidence. Carnal wiſdom charms the ear, but this ſtrikes the heart.

2. It

2. It detracts from the glory of God, who is more honour'd by the simplicity of the Gospel than luxuriances of wit. It was his honour by the Doctrine of a Crucified Saviour to nonplus the wisdom of the World; and the glory of his wisdom as well as strength, to confound, by impotent and weak men, the power of Satan, which so long had possess'd the hearts of the Corinthians.

3. It would be an argument of hypocrisie to use any other arguments than divine. Men in this would but seek themselves, not Gods glory. It would be pride to think that their fancies could be more prevalent than Evangelical reason. And therefore the Apostle would do nothing but endeavour to set out Christ in his own Colours, as he hung upon the Cross, that their Souls might be captivated to the obedience of a Crucified Lord.

I determin'd *.] I judg'd it most convenient for me, most profitable for you. It was a resolution taken up deliberately. It was not for want of the knowledge of those principles which are cryed up in the World for true wisdom. I understand them as well as others; but what things I counted gain before, I now count loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ; and think it not worth the while and pains to make much enquiry about them

* Οὐ γὰρ ἔκρι-να.

To know nothing.] to believe nothing, to approve of nothing, to make known nothing.

1. Not your traditions, which have for themselves the Plea of a venerable Antiquity, and have been handed to you from your Ancestors. What I chiefly determine to know, is as ancient as the oldest of those mysteries you so much admire, even the Lamb slain from the foundation of the World.

2. Not your Philosophical wisdom, so much admir'd by you and the rest of the World. I come not to teach you a Doctrine from Athens, but from Jerusalem, and not so much from Jerusalem, as from Heaven. I come to declare him in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

3. Not your Poets, wherein the chief mysteries of your Religion are coucht. I come to teach him to you, which your Sibyls and their prophetick Writings pointed at long ago.

4. Nor your mysterious Oracles, which had so long deluded the World; but I come to declare him by whose Death they were silenc'd.

But Jesus Christ, and him Crucified.] Christ in the Deity and glory of his person, but also as Crucified; in the ignominy of his Passion, and the advantages of his Office.

This is the sum of the Gospel, and contains all the riches of it. Paul was so much taken with Christ, that nothing sweeter than Jesus could drop from his Lips and Pen. 'Tis observed, that he hath the word Jesus, five hundred times in his Epistles.

Others understand it thus, I will know nothing but Jesus Christ, though he were Crucified; I will boast of him whom others despise.

Among you.] You Corinthians, though learn'd, though rich, I would not know any thing else among you than Christ, who is the wisdom of God, and the treasures of God.

Observe

1. All humane wisdom must be denied when it comes in competition with the Doctrine of Christ.

2. Christ and his Death is the choicest subject for the wisest Ear.

3. As all Christ, so especially his Death is the object of Faith.

4. As all of Christ, so more especially his death in all the mysteries of it, ought to be the main subject of a Christians study and knowledge.

Doct. For the last, As all of Christ, so more especially his death in all the mysteries of it, ought to be the principal subject of a Christians study and knowledge. This is the honour of the Gospel, and therefore the preaching of the Gospel is called the preaching of the Cross, 1 Cor. 1. 18. Which should be consider'd by us

I. In the first spring.

II. In the perſon ſuffering.
III. In the fruits of it.

I. In the firſt ſpring. His Death was ordered by God.

Peter as the Preſident of the Apoſtles, delivers it as the ſence of the whole Colledge of Apoſtles then preſent, Acts 2. 23. He was deliver'd by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God. It was decreed and enacted in Heaven, reſolv'd before time, though done in the fullneſs of time. Therefore Chriſt is called the Lamb ſlain from before the foundation of the world, determinately in the Counſel and Decree of God; promiſſorily in the promiſe and word of God paſſed to Adam after the fall; typically in Sacrifices which were ſetled immediately upon that promiſe of redemption: Efficaciouſly, in regard of the merit of it, applied by God to Believers, before the actual ſuffering. He was made ſin not by us, not only by himſelf, and his own will, but by Gods Ordination, 2 Cor. 5. 21. He hath made him to be ſin for us, by a divine ſtatute, i. e. he was ordain'd to be put into the ſtate and condition of a ſinner in our ſtead; not into the practical and experimental ſtate of ſin, but the penal ſtate of a ſinner, to be a Sacrifice for it, not to be polluted with it. Indeed had not God appointed it, it had not been meritorious; for the merit was not abſolute for us, but pactional and conditional; It was capable of meriting, becauſe of the worth and dignity of the perſon: But not actually meritorious for us, but upon the Covenant tranſacted between the Father and the Son; that it ſhould be perform'd by him for us, and accepted by the Father for us, and applied by the ſpirit to us.

And as it was appointed by God it was,

1. An act of his Soveraignty. Suppoſe God might have pardon'd ſin, and recover'd man by his own abſolute Prerogative, had not his word been paſt that in caſe of mans tranſgreſſion, he ſhould dy the Death: As a Word created the Earth, and caſt it into ſuch a beautiful frame and order, ſo by one word he might have reſtor'd man, and ſet him upon his former ſtock, and have for ever kept him from falling again, as he did the ſtanding Angels from ever ſinning: Yet God pitcheth upon this way, and is pleaſed with no other contrivance but this, and in a way of ſoveraignty he culls out his Son to be a Sacrifice; and the Son putting himſelf into the ſtate of a Surety and Redeemer, is ſaid to have a command given him on the part of God as a Soveraign, Joh. 14. 31. As the father hath given me commandment, even ſo I do; and received by him as a ſubject, Joh. 10. 18. And as God owns him as his ſervant, Iſa. 42. 1. So he took upon him the form of a ſervant, Phil. 2. 6. i. e. the badge and livery of a ſervant; and the whole buſineſs he came upon, from his firſt breath to his laſt gaſp, is called the will of God; and at the upſhot he pleads his own obedience, in finiſhing the work given him to do, as the ground of his expectations, and the glory promiſed him, Joh. 17. 2.

2. An act of the choiceſt love. God at the Creation beheld man, a goodly frame of his own rearing, adorn'd with his own Image, beautified with his Graces, embelliſht with holineſs and righteouſneſs, and furniſht with a power to ſtand; and afterwards beheld him ungratefully rebelling againſt his Soveraign, invading his rights, and contemning his goodneſs, forfeiting his own priviledges, courting his ruine, and ſinking into miſery. So blinded is his mind, as not to be able to find out a way for his own recovery; ſo perverſe is his will, that inſtead of craving pardon of his Judge, he flies from him, and when his flight would not advantage him, he ſtands upon his own defence and extenuates his crime; thus adding one provocation to another, as if he had an ambition to harden the heart of God againſt him, and render himſelf irrecoverably miſerable. God ſo overlooks theſe, as in immenſe Love and Grace to ſettle a way for mans recovery, without giving any diſſatisfaction to his Juſtice, ſo ſtrongly engag'd for the puniſhment of the offence. And rather than this notorious Rebel, and prodigious Apoſtate, ſhould periſh according to his merit, he would tranſfer the puniſhment (which he could not remit without a violation of his truth, and an injury to his righteouſneſs,) upon a perſon equal to himſelf, moſt beloved by him, his delight from Eternity, and infinitely dearer to him than any thing in Heaven or Earth. Herein was the Emphaſis of divine love to us, that he ſent his ſon to be the propitia- tion for our sin, 1 Joh. 4. 10. It was love that he would restore man after the fall; there was no more necessity of doing this, than of creating the World. As it added nothing to the happiness of God, so the want of it had detracted nothing from it. There was no more absolute necessity of setting up man again after his breaking, than of a new repair of the World after the destructive deluge. But that he might wind up his love to the highest pitch, he would not only restore man, but rather than let him ly in his deserved misery, would punish his own Bowels to secure man from it. It was purely his grace which was the cause that his Son tasted death for every man, Hebr. 2. 9.

3. An act of Justice. As his love to us propos'd it, and Christ out of his affection to the honour of the Father, and our welfare accepted it, and was willing to undertake for us, and interpose between us and divine wrath, to stand in our stead, and bear our sins, so it was then an act of justice to inflict; for God being the Governour of the World, the great Lawgiver righteously exacting Obedience from his rational Creature, upon the transgression of his Law becomes a Judge, and his rectoral justice demands the punishment due for the transgression to be inflicted upon the offender. To preserve the rights of Justice, and to give a contenting Answer to the cry of the Bowels of Mercy, to wipe off, as I may say, the tears of one, and smooth the frowns of the other, God lays our iniquity upon Christ, Isa. 53. 6. Christ takes the punishment upon himself, to bear our sins in his own Body on the Tree, and becomes responsible for our transgressions. And though he never sin'd, nor stood indebted to God in his own Person, yet becoming our Surety, and being made under the Law, putting himself in subjection to the Law, and standing in our stead, he put himself also under the obligations of it to punishment. And thus the weight of the whole punishment, due to man, was laid upon Christ by God as a just Judge. That which he could not have from the Debtors, he might have from the Surety, who had put himself under that obligation of payment, and so was bound to undergo all those Curses the Law might have inflicted upon us: and pursuant to this obligation God imputed our iniquities to him, and punished them in him.

II. Consider the person suffering.

1. In regard of his dignity. The Son of God became man, the Lord of glory emptied himself. It was the Lord of Angels that took upon him the nature of a Servant; the Lord of Life shed his blood. It was the Son of God that stoopt down infinitely below himself into our nature, to be a Sacrifice for our Redemption; he that was greater than Heaven, became meaner than a Worm.

2. The willingness of his suffering. He being equal with the Father, could not be commanded to undertake this: He willingly consented, and willingly accomplisht it. He was not driven, as the legal Sacrifices were, to the Altar. His Enemies were not so desirous to make him a sufferer, as himself was straitned, till he was a sufferer, Luke 12. 50. The Cup was as willingly drank by him, as it was temper'd by God; and his Enemies did not so maliciously put him to shame, as he joyfully endur'd it, Heb. 12. 2. The desire that the Cup might pass from him, was the struggles of his humane nature, not an unwillingness in his person, or a repenting of his undertaking this Office. It was a natural motion, evidencing the truth of his humanity, and the greatness of what he was to suffer.

3. The greatness of his suffering. His Death had all the ingredients of bitterness in it. It was a grievous punishment, because the holiness of God would not have been so manifested in a light one.

(1.) Ignominious. It was a Death for Slaves and Malefactors; for Slaves whose condition render'd them most despicable, and for Malefactors whose actions had render'd them most abominable. The Lord of Heaven endur'd the punishment of a Slave, and was number'd among transgressors. 'Tis called shame, Hebr. 12. 2. Each suffering was sharpned with shame; he was buffeted, spit upon, wounded in his good name, accounted an Impostor, the most odious terms of Blasphemer, Belzebub's Agent, &c. were put upon the Son of God.

(2.) Cruel and sharp: lingring, not sudden; from his scourging by Pilate to his Death was six hours, all that while in much torture; he suffer'd from Heaven, Earth, Hell, in his Body, in his Soul.

(3.) Accursed.

(3.) Accurſed. As under Gods bleſſing all bleſſings are included, ſo under the notion of a Curſe all puniſhment is contain'd, Gal. 3. 13. he was made a curſe for us. There muſt be ſomething more dreadful than a bare outward pain, or bodily puniſhment; Chriſt wanted not courage to ſupport that, as well as the moſt valiant Martyr; he bore the beginnings of it till he ſaw a black Cloud between his Father and himſelf. This made him cry out, my God, my God, &c. The Agonies of Chriſt were more than the ſufferings of all the Martyrs, and all men in the World, ſince God laid upon him the ſins of the whole World.

III. Conſider the fruits of this death, which will render it worth our ſtudy.

1. The appeaſing the wrath of God for us. God was willing to be appeaſed, (hence the ſending of Chriſt is every where in Scripture aſcrib'd to the Love and Grace of God) but his Juſtice was not actually appeaſed till the death of Chriſt. As a merciful God, he pitied us; but as a holy God, he could not but hate our tranſgreſſion; as a God of Truth, he could not but fulfil his own threatning; as a God of Juſtice, he muſt avenge himſelf for the offence againſt him. He gave Chriſt as a God of Mercy, and required ſatisfaction as a God of Juſtice. He ſet him forth as a propitiation, that he might be juſt, Rom. 3. 25, 26. His Mercy render'd him placable, but his Righteouſneſs hinder'd the actual placation. He had a kindneſs for man, but could not have a kindneſs for his ſin; he had bowels for his creature to free him, but no bowels for his tranſgreſſion to let that go unpuniſht. That Juſtice whereby he can no more abſolve the guilty, than condemn the innocent, was an obſtacle to the full iſſues of his Mercy. But when an offering for ſin was made by an infinite Perſon, and our near Kinſman, who had a right of Redemption; there was no Plea in Juſtice againſt it, ſince the Sacrifice was compleat, no Plea in Divine Veracity, ſince the penalty was ſuffered, no Plea in Divine Holineſs, ſince that was infinitely manifeſted; no bar to Mercy to come ſmiling upon the World. The wrath of God was appeaſed upon the death of the Redeemer, and this reconciliation is actually applied upon the acceptance of the Believer. If God had not been placable, he had never accepted a Subſtitute; and if he had not been appeaſed, he had never raiſed this Subſtitute after his Paſſion, nor ever held out his hand of Grace to invite us to be reconciled to him. There is nothing now remains to be done, but our conſenting to thoſe terms upon which he offers us the actual enjoyment of it. This crucified Redeemer only was able to effect this work. He was an infinite Perſon conſiſting of a Divine and Humane Nature, the union of the one gave value to the ſuffering of the other. The word of God was paſt in his threatning, his Juſtice would demand its right of his Veracity, a Sacrifice there muſt be to repair the Honour of God by bearing the penalty of the Law, which could not be done by the ſtrength and holineſs of any Creature. All the created force in the Earth, and the ſtrongeſt force of the Angelical Nature, were too feeble for ſo great a task. Juſtice muſt have ſatisfaction, the ſinner could not give it without ſuffering eternal puniſhment. He then puts himſelf into our place to free us from the arreſt of Juſtice, and bear thoſe ſtrokes, which, by virtue of the Law, wrath had prepared for us. The dignity of his Perſon puts a value upon his puniſhment, and renders it acceptable for us, it being a death ſuperiour in virtue to the death of Worlds; it was a death which Juſtice requir'd, and at the ſight of it Juſtice was ſo calm'd, that the ſharp revenging Sword drops out of its hand. God hath ſmelt in it ſo ſweet a ſavour, that hath fully pleaſed him. He can now pardon the ſins of Believers with the glory of his Righteouſneſs as well as of his Grace. He can legally juſtifie a repenting ſinner. God hath been ſerv'd in the Paſſion of the Redeemer, his Juſtice and Holineſs were glorified, and the Law accompliſht, the Honour of God is ſalv'd, and the Author of the Law righted, the Juſtice of God ſweetned. By this propitiation for ſin God is render'd propitious to guilty man, and ſtretcheth out his arms of love inſtead of brandiſhing his Sword of vengeance. The ancient Believers lived in the expectation of this, but they beheld not the conſummation of it: they thirſted for it, but were not ſatisfied with it till the fulneſs of time. It ſolely depended upon the Paſſion of Chriſt, 'tis by the Croſs that God is reconciled and all enmity ſlain, Eph. 2. 14. He was then wounded for our iniquities, and being caſt into the furnace of Divine wrath, quencht the flames; as Jonas

the Type, being caſt into the raging Sea, quell'd the ſtorm. He bore our ſins by bearing the wrath due to them, and ſatisfied Juſtice by ſuffering its ſtrokes. It could not ſtand with that Juſtice to puniſh him, if he were not placed in our ſtead to be the mark and butt of that Juſtice for us and our ſins. Doth not then a crucified Chriſt deſerve to be known and ſtudied by every one of us, who hath done that upon the Croſs, which the holy Law, Sacrifices divinely inſtituted, the bleſſed Angels, the purity and ſtrength of Univerſal Nature had never been able to effect? He hath expiated our ſins, and by his Bloud hath ſecur'd us from the Sword of Divine vengeance, if we refuſe not the atonement he hath made.

2. Silencing the Law. Chriſt crucified by ſatisfying the juſtice of God, brake the thunders of the Law, and diſſolv'd the frame of all its Anathemas; Being made a curſe for us, he hath redeem'd us from the curſe of the law, Galat. 3. 13. i. e. from the ſentence of the Law giver, denounc'd in his Law againſt the tranſgreſſors of it; ſo that now there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, Rom. 8. 1. becauſe they are dead to the law by the body of Chriſt, Rom. 7. 4. By the body of Chriſt as ſlain and rais'd again; for this hand writing of ordinances, which was contrary to us, is taken out of the way by God, being nailed to his croſs, Col. 2. 14. He hath aboliſht the obligation of the Moral Law, as to any condemning power, it being the cuſtom to cancel bonds anciently by piercing the writing with a nail. * The Ceremonial Law was aboliſht in every regard, ſince the ſubſtance of it was come, and that which it tended to, was accompliſht; and ſo one underſtands, v. 15. Having ſpoiled principalities and powers, he made a ſhow of them openly, of the Ceremonies of the Law, called Principalities and Powers in regard of the Divine Authority whereby they were inſtituted. Theſe he ſpoiled, the word ἀπεκδυσάμενος ſignifies uncloathing or unſtripping, he unveil'd them, and ſhew'd them to be miſty figures that were accompliſht in his own perſon. The flower falls when the fruit comes to appear; Grace and Truth came by Jeſus Chriſt, Grace to obey the Precepts, and Truth to take away the Types. But it is alſo meant of the condemning power of the Moral Law, which was null'd by the death of Chriſt, who upon his Croſs ſealing another Covenant, repeal'd the former. The ſetling a new Covenant implies the diſſolution of the old. That was nailed to his Croſs which was contrary to us, a Law that was a charge againſt us, and by virtue whereof we were ſued; and this was the Law as ſentencing us to death, which was piereed and torn by thoſe nails, that did diſcover that debt and denounce the ſentence, which cannot be meant ſo properly of the Ceremonial as the Moral Law. The Ceremonial Law of Sacrifices was the Goſpel in ſhadows, and appointed for the relief of men, and as a ground whereon to exerciſe their Faith till the appearance of the ſubſtance; and therefore cannot be ſaid to be contrary to us, but an amicable diſcovery, that we were to have that relief in another, which we wanted in our ſelves; and that we were to be freed from the ſentence of Death by ſome grand Sacrifice repreſented by thoſe Sacrifices of Animals. Beſides, the Apoſtle writes this as a Cordial, iſſuing out of the Bloud of Chriſt to the Gentile Coloſſians, who never were under the obligation of the Ceremonial Law, that being appropriated to the Jews. The Apoſtle brings it to back his aſſertion, that their treſpaſſes were forgiven. This argument had been of no uſe to the Gentiles, who ſin'd not againſt the Ceremonial Law, but the Moral Law; and if one only had been cancell'd and not the other, the Jews themſelves, whoſe offences were moſt againſt the Moral Law, had had little or no comfort in having the feweſt of their ſins forgiven. Our Saviour dyed by the power and force of the Moral Law: that brought him to the Croſs for the fulfilling it in its penalty, as well as he had done in his life by his obedience: and he receiving the full execution of its ſentence upon himſelf on the Croſs, as a Subſtitute in our place, null'd that ſentence as to any force upon thoſe that believe in him. The plea againſt it is, That it hath already been executed, though not upon our perſons, yet upon our ſurety; ſo that being nail'd to his Croſs, the virtue of his Croſs muſt ceaſe, before the killing power of the Law can revive. This crucified Chriſt, who diſarm'd the Law of its Thunders, defac'd the Obligation of it as a Covenant, and as it were ground the ſtones, upon which it was writ, to powder, is worth our exact knowledge and ſtudious inquiry.

* Pearſon on the Creed, p. 424.

3. Upon this muſt follow the removal of guilt. If God the Judge of the World be appeas'd and ſatisfied, and the Law, upon which our accuſation is grounded, and which is the teſtimony of our Debt, be cancell'd, the removal of our guilt muſt neceſſarily follow. And this forgiveneſs of ſin is the chief and principal part of our redemption, and aſcrib'd to his bloud as the procuring cauſe, Epheſ. 1. 7. in whom we have redemption through his bloud, even the forgiveneſs of ſin. He bearing our ſins in his own Body on the Tree, there neceſſarily follows a diſcharge of every Believer from them. The payment made by the Surety, is a diſcharge of the principal Debtor from the purſuit of the Creditor. As he took away the Curſe from us by being made a Curſe, ſo he took away ſin from us by being made ſin for us. The taking away the ſins of the World was the great end of his coming. There had been no need of his aſſuming our nature, and expoſing himſelf to ſuch miſeries for our relief, had we been only in a ſimple miſery, for then we might have been reſcued by his ſtrength; but being in a ſinful miſery, we could not be reliev'd but by his Sacrifice to remove our guilt, as well as by his ſtrength to draw us out of our Gulf. Our ſin was a Bar upon the treaſures of divine bleſſings, this muſt be remov'd before thoſe could be opened for us, and could not righteouſly be remov'd by bare power, but by a full payment and ſatisfaction of the Debt. 'Tis a violent Oppreſſion to free a Creditor from the hands of a Debtor by force; 'tis righteous only when it is by legal payment. Well then, Chriſt was made ſin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. and that in his Death upon the Croſs; to what end? that ſin might remain in its guilt upon us? No, for him to be made ſin, and that by God, without reſpect to the taking away of ſin, had been inconſiſtent with the wiſdom and righteouſneſs of God. The juſtice of God would not permit him to take our Debt of another, and yet to charge it upon our ſelves. He was therefore made ſin for us, that we might become the righteouſneſs of God in or by him. He was made ſin, that we might be counted without ſin by the imputation of the righteouſneſs of the Mediator to us, as if it were our own; that as he repreſented our perſons, and bore our penalty, we might likewiſe receive the advantages of his righteouſneſs for the acquittal of our Debts, the ſin of our nature, and the ſin of our perſons, the removal of the guilt contracted by Adam, and imputed to us, and the guilt contracted by our ſelves. For it is of many offences unto juſtification, Rom. 5. 16. He was the true perſon figur'd by the ſcape-Goat that took away our ſins, and carried them into a Land of forgetfulneſs, where none dwells to take notice of them, and cenſure us to Death for the Crimes. Is not then this Crucified Chriſt worth the knowing, who took ſuch heavy burdens upon his own ſhoulders, that they might not oppreſs ours; and ſuffer'd as a victim in the place of our guilty perſons to obtain an eternal redemption for us? Heb 9. 14. He that gives ſo great a ranſom for us as that of his Life and precious Bloud, rather than we ſhould remain in our Chains, deſerves the choiceſt place in our underſtanding as well as affections. Were it a bare deliverance, it would challenge this; but he is ſaid not only to deliver us which ſpeaks power, but to redeem us which ſpeaks price, and a buying what was paſt into the poſſeſſion of another; a payment of that which we were never able to pay.

4. Another fruit is the conqueſt of Satan. The Empire the Devil exercis'd over man, did not ariſe from any dignity in his Perſon, or any right he had to him in himſelf, but it was firſt founded on ſin, and granted to him by the Juſtice of God, and was not the power of a Prince, but of an Executioner. Had not ſin firſt open'd the Door, his venom could not have infected us, nor his power have hurt us. He could never have been our Accuſer without ſome matter of charge from us; nor ever have been our Executioner, had we not fallen under the hands of divine Juſtice. His power is erected upon our Crimes, whereby he becomes the Miniſter of divine vengeance. But a Crucified Chriſt hath bruiſed the head of this old Serpent, and wounded the Prince of this World; he hath diſplaced him from his Power, ſnatcht from him the ground of his Inditements, by cancelling the law upon which his Accuſations are founded; and deſpoil'd him of his office by ſatisfying divine juſtice, which conferr'd an authority upon him of executing divine vengeance, Revel. 12. 10. the accuſer of the bretbren is caſt out. And deſtroyed him that had the power of death, and that through his own death, Heb. 2. 14, 15.

That

That the Devil had not a total power over Adam, after the Fall, proceeded from the intervention of this Surety, and the absolute credit of his future Victory over him; yet that Promise, that the Serpents Head should be bruis'd, did not, through the weakness of their Faith, and the long delay of performance, preserve them from the fear of Death: notwithstanding that, they were all their Life time subject to Bondage; for since the Devils Empire was rear'd upon the ruins of men by sin, he could continually object to them that their sins were not expiated, that Death remain'd as a punishment of sin; but the Cross of Christ hath disarm'd him of this Weapon; his grand Plea whereby he kept men in a servile fear, is compleatly answer'd. In bruising our Saviours Heel by the Death on the Cross; he felt a fatal blow on his Head, his Conquerour got above him out of his reach, without any hope left in him to touch his Heel again. The Devils right was legally taken from him by Christs Death on the Cross; the foundation of his authority, viz. sin, was taken away. He was destroyed, (that is the Apostle's expression) not in his person, but in his authority; he was irrecoverably expell'd from his Dominion which he had by his false Oracles usurpt over the World, John 12. 31. and it is by this Crucified Christ that we are more than Conquerours over him. And should we not know this Crucified Christ, who hath weakned the venom of the Serpent, broke the force of the tempter, vanquisht him on the Cross by the merit of his Blood, and conquers him in us by the efficacy of his Spirit?

5. Sanctification is another fruit of the Cross of Christ. To be deliver'd from the guilt of sin, that bound us over to punishment, had been a great favour; but it would not have been a perfect favour, without being deliver'd from the venom of sin that had infected our nature. Though God willed man good by a love of good will, yet he could not delight in him with a love of complacency; if the contagion and filth of sin had deform'd and sullied our Souls as much as before; if our guilo were only remov'd, we had been freed from punishment; but without restoring the Divine Image, we had not been fit for any converse with God. It was necessary that our Souls should be washed, and our faculties put into a state, to serve in some measure the glory of God, and the end of our Creation God would have seem'd to deny his own holiness, if he had regarded only the reverence of his justice, by appointing a sacrifice for atonement, and not consulted the honour of the other, by renewing his Image in the nature of man: But this is purchased by the Death of Christ; He came by water and blood, 1 John 5. 6. by Blood to expiate our sins, and by Water to purifie our Souls, answerable to the Jewish state wherein it was typified, where there were sacrifices for guilt, and washings for filth. These two things come to us by the Death of Christ, the remitting our crime, and the removing of our spot. He gave himself that he might save us, Ephes. 2. 25. Tit. 2. 14. when he came to purchase the blessings we had forfeited, he would not omit this, which was one of the chief. By him the Conscience is purg'd from dead works, from sin which brought Death, and being worse than a pollution by a dead Body, hindred us from access to God, as that did from an entrance into the Temple. He hath broke our chains, as well as blotted out our crime; heal'd our natures, as well as procur'd our pardon; purchas'd our regeneration, as well as remission. 'Tis by his Cross that the old man, which had incorporated himself with our Souls, is crucified, Rom. 6. 6. By this he gain'd the power of sending a saving Spirit, which had not enter'd into our Souls, had not Christs Blood flowed out of his veins. The effusion of this Blood, was the cause of the effusion of the Spirit; it was shed upon us through Christ alone. He hath by suffering for sin on the Cross, render'd it a detestable thing, and shew'd how dreadful that is, that could not receive its fatal wound, without a wound first in the heart of the Son of God. This is the most powerful motive to quicken us to a hatred of sin, and a love of holiness, and his life the most illustrious pattern; but all this had been of little efficacy to us, had not the Water of the Spirit flowed out from the Rock, when it was struck, to cleanse the filthiness of our Souls. This is given upon the account of his Death to Believers, to purifie their hearts from the mud of the World, and to form them to a new life for the honour of God; and it is not denied to those that will ask, and seek, and knock, Luke 11. 13. Had Christ only purchas'd remission without sanctification, it had not been for the honour of Gods holineſs, nor would our condition have been elevated, Heaven had been no place for defilements or ſlaves. It was neceſſary the filth of ſin ſhould be removed, the dominion of ſin be aboliſht, that we might as holy perſons approach to God, and as free men converſe with God. Is not a Crucified Chriſt then worth the knowing, that hath not only deſtroyed Satan our Enemy without us, but can deſtroy ſin our Enemy within us? As he hath ſnacht us from puniſhment by expiating our ſins, ſo he can bring us to Communion with God, by razing evil habits out of our hearts; without this latter, we are not capable of enjoying a compleat benefit by the former.

6. Opening Heaven for us. What is this life but a wallowing in a Sink, a converſe in the dregs of the Creation, in an Earth polluted by the ſin of man, wherein we every day behold freſh affronts of God, and find motions in us diſhonourable to our ſelves? But Chriſt by his Death hath provided a better place than this, yea, a place more glorious than Adams Paradiſe, which was deſign'd for our habitation by the firſt Creation. A place, not only built by the Word of God, but cemented and prepared by the Blood of Chriſt. By the Law againſt ſin, we were to have our Bodies reduc'd to duſt, and our Souls lye under the ſentence of the wrath of God: But our crucified Saviour hath purchaſed the redemption of our Body, to be evidenced by a reſurrection, Rom. 8.23. and a ſtanding ſecurity of our Souls in a place of bliſs, to which Believers ſhall have a real aſcent, and in which they ſhall have a local reſidence, which is called the purchaſed poſſeſſion. As Adam brought in the Empire of Death, ſo Chriſt hath brought in the Empire of Life, Rom. 5. 17. Shall reign in life by one Jeſus Chriſt. He hath not purchas'd for us a Paradifical Life, or reſtor'd us to the mutable ſtate wherein Adam was created; he hath not link'd us for ever to the Earth, and the uſe of the Creatures for our ſupport; he hath purchaſed for us an Eternal Life, and prepared for us Eternal Manſions, not only to have the company of men, or the ſociety of the bleſſed Angels, but to be bleſſed with the viſion of God, to reſide in the ſame place where his glorified Perſon is adored by the happy Spirits, to live with him, Rom. 6. 8. a life, wherein our underſtandings ſhall be freed from miſts, and our wills from ſpots, and our affections from diſorder. We loſt a Paradiſe by Sin, and have gain'd a Heaven by the Croſs. And ſhould not this crucified Chriſt be ſtudied, who hath ſetled the Regions above for our reception, and procur'd an entrance into that place, which juſtice, by reaſon of our ſin, had elſe made for ever inacceſſible to us?

I might mention more, as the eſtabliſhment of the Covenant, acceſs to God, Perſeverance, and the conqueſt of the World.

Uſe.

1. Let us be thankful to God for a crucified Redeemer.

There is nothing in Heaven or Earth ſuch an amazing wonder as this, nothing can vye with it for excellence. All love and thankfulneſs is due to God, who hath given us his Son, not only to live, but to dye for us a Death ſo ſhameful, a Death ſo accurſed, a Death ſo ſharp, that we might be repoſſeſt of the happineſs we had loſt. All love and thankfulneſs is due to Chriſt, who did not only pay a ſmall ſumm for us as our ſurety, but bowed his Soul to Death to raiſe us to Life, was numbred among tranſgreſſors, that we might have a room among the bleſſed. Our crimes merited our ſufferings, but his own Bowels made him a ſufferer for us; for us he ſweat thoſe drops of Blood, for us he trod the Wine-preſs alone, for us he aſſwag'd the rigor of Divine Juſtice, for us, who were not only miſerable, but offending Creatures, and overwhelmed with more ſins to be hated, than with miſery to be pitied. He was crucified for us by his love, who deſerv'd to dye by his power, and laid the higheſt obligation upon us, who had laid the higheſt diſobligements upon him. This Death is the ground of all our good, whatever we have is a fruit that grew upon the Croſs. Had he not ſuffered, we had been rejected for ever from the Throne of God, ſalvation had never appear'd but by thoſe groans and agonies. By this alone was God pleaſed, and our Souls for ever pleaſur'd; without it, he had been for ever diſpleaſed with us, we had been odious and abominable in his ſight, and could never have ſeen his face. Nothing is ſuch an evidence of his Love as his Croſs;

the Miracles he wrought, and the Cures he perform'd in the time of his Life, were nothing to the kindness of his Death, wherein he was willing to be accounted worse than a murtherer in his punishment, that he might thereby effect our deliverance. If he had given us the riches of this World and a greater, had he given us the honour of Angels, and made us Barons of Heaven, without exposing himself to the Cross to accomplish it, it had been a testimony of his affection, but destitute of so endearing an Emphasis. The manner of procuring is more than a bare kindness in bestowing it; he testified his resolution, not only to give us glory, but to give it us whatsoever it should cost him, and would stick at nothing rather than we should want it. The Angels in Heaven in their glistering lustre, are the Monuments of his liberality, but not of so supream an affection as is engraven on the Body of his Cross.

2. Let us delight in the knowledge of Christ crucified, and be often in the thoughts and study of him. Study Christ, not only as living, but dying, not as breathing in our air, but suffering in our stead; know him as a victim, which is the way to know him as a Conquerour. Christ as crucified is the great object of Faith. All the passages of his Life, from his Nativity to his Death, are past over in the Creed without reciting, because, though they are things to be believed, yet the belief of them is not sufficient without the belief of the Cross; in that alone was our redemption wrought. Had he only lived, he had not been a Saviour. If our Faith stop in his Life, and do not fasten upon his Blood, it will not be a justifying Faith. His Miracles, which prepared the World for his Doctrine; his Holiness, which fitted himself for his suffering, had been insufficient for us without the addition of the Cross: Without this, we had been under the demerit of our crimes, the venom of our natures, the slavery of our sins, and the tyranny of the Devil; without this, we should for ever have had God for our Enemy, and Satan for our Executioner; without this, we had lain groaning under the punishment of our transgressions, and despair'd of any smile from Heaven. It was this Death, which as a sacrifice appeas'd God, and as a price redeem'd us; nothing is so strong to encourage us; nothing so powerful to purifie us; how can we be without thinking of it? The World we live in had fallen upon our heads, had it not been upheld by the pillar of the Cross; had not Christ step'd in and promised a satisfaction for the sin of man. By this all things consist; not a blessing we enjoy but may put us in mind of it; they were all forfeited by our sins, but merited by his precious Bloud. If we study it well, we shall be sensible how God hated sin and loved a World; how much he would part with to restore a fallen Creature. He showed an irresistible love to us, not to be overcome by a love to his own Bowels.

(1.) This will keep up life in our repentance. We cannot look upon Christ Crucified for us, for our guilt, and consider that we had deserved all that he suffered, and that he suffer'd not by our intreaty, nor by any obligation from us, but meerly from his own love, but the meditation of this must ndees melt us into sorrow. Should we not bleed as often as we seriously thought of Christs bleeding for us? You cannot see a Malefactor led to Execution for a notorious Crime, but you have some detesting thoughts of the fact, as well as some motions of pity to the person. A strong meditation on Christ will excite compassions for his sufferings, but a detestation of our sins and selves as the cause of it. 'Tis a look upon Christ pierced that pierceth the Soul, Zach. 12. 10. Would not this bloud acquaint us, that the malignity of sin was so great, that it could not be blotted out by the bloud of the whole Creation? Would it not astonish us, that none had strength enough to match it, but one equal with God? Would not such an astonishment break out into penitent reflections? Would not the thoughts of this make us emulate the vail of the Temple, and be asham'd that it should outstrip us in rending, while our hearts remain unbroken? Should we not be confounded, that a lifeless Earth should shake in the time of his sufferings, while our reasonable Souls stand immovable? Could any of the Israelites, that understood the nature and intent of Sacrifices, be without some penitent motions, while they saw the innocent victim slain for their sin, not for any fault of its own? and should we be unmelted, if we consider'd the Cross, the punishment of our Crimes, not any of his?

(2.) It would ſpirit our Faith, when we ſhall ſee his bloud confirming an everlaſting Covenant, wherein God promiſes to be gratious. All the Promiſes center'd in the Croſs, receiv'd their Life from his Death, and are from thence reflected on us. Where can Faith find a vigour, but in the Royalties of Mercy, diſplay'd in the ſatisfaction of Juſtice? where can it find a Life, but in the views of its proper object? when we behold a Chriſt Crucified, how can we diſtruſt God, that hath in that, as a plain Tablet, writ this Language, that he will ſpare nothing for us, ſince he hath not ſpared the beſt he had? What greater aſſurance can he give? where is there any thing in Heaven or Earth, that can be a greater pledge of his affection?

(3.) This will animate us in our approaches to God. Not only a bare coming, but a boldneſs and confidence in coming to God was purchas'd by a crucified Chriſt, Heb. 10. 19. God was before averſe from man, and man unwilling to approach to God. Now God invites, and man may come; man calls and God anſwers. What can be more encouraging than to conſider, that by his bloud he hath made us Kings and Prieſts to God, Revel. 5. 9, 10. to offer up Sacrifices with a Royal Spirit, ſince the Curſe which ſhould have fallen upon our Heads, has been born by him? We ſhould think of it every time we go to God in Prayer; it was by this Death the Throne of God was open'd. This will chaſe away that fear that diſarms us of our vigour. It will compoſe our Souls to offer up delightful Petitions. 'Tis in this only we ſee the face of God appeas'd toward us.

(4.) This will be a means to further us in a progreſs in holineſs. An affection to ſin which coſt the Redeemer of the World ſo dear, would be inconſiſtent with a ſound knowledge, and ſerious ſtudy of a Crucified Saviour. We ſhould ſee no charms in ſin, which may not be overcome by that raviſhing love, which bubbles up in every drop of the Redeemers bloud. Can we with lively thoughts of this, ſin againſt ſo much tenderneſs, compaſſion, grace, and the other perfections of God, which ſound ſo loud in our Ears from the Croſs of Jeſus? Shall we conſider him hanging there to deliver us from Hell, and yet retain any ſpirit to walk in the way which leads thereto? Shall we conſider him upon the Croſs, unlocking the Gates of Heaven, and yet turn our backs upon that place he was ſo deſirous to purchaſe for us, and give us the poſſeſſion of? Shall we ſee him groaning in our place, and ſtead, and dare to tell him by our unworthy Carriage, that we regard him not, and that he might have ſpar'd his pains? It muſt be a miſerable Soul, worſe than brutiſh, that can walk on in ways of enmity, with a ſence of a Crucified Chriſt in his mind. Could we then affect that ſin which appears ſo horrible in the Doctrine of the Croſs? Can we take any pleaſure in that which procur'd ſo much pain to our beſt Friend? Can we love that which hath brought a Curſe, better than him who bore the Curſe for us? For want of this ſtudy of Chriſt Crucified we walk on in ſin, as if he ſuffer'd to purchaſe a Licence for it, rather than the deſtruction of it. The due conſideration of this Death would encline our wills to new deſires and reſolutions. It would ſtifle that Luxury, ambition, worldlineſs, which harraſs our Souls. We ſhould not dare to ruſh into any iniquity through the wounds of Chriſt. We ſhould not under a ſence of his dying groans cheriſh that for which he ſuffer'd. We ſhould not do the works of darkneſs under the effuſions of his bloud, if we did in a ſerious poſture ſet our ſelves at the feet of his Croſs.

(5.) This will be the foundation of all Comfort. What comfort can be wanting, when we can look upon Chriſt Crucified as our Surety, and look upon our ſelves as Crucified in him, when we can conſider our ſins as puniſhed in him, and our ſelves accepted by virtue of his Croſs? It was not an Angel which was Crucified for us, but the Son of God; one of an equal dignity with the Father; one that ſhed bloud enough to blot out the demerit of our Crimes, were they more than could be numbred by all the Angels of Heaven, if all were made known to them. He was not Crucified for a few, but for all ſorts of offences. When we ſhall ſee judgments in the World, what Comfort can we take without a knowledge and ſence of a Crucify'd Chriſt? What a horrour is it for a Condemn'd man to ſee the preparation of Gibbets, Halters and Executioners? But when he ſhall ſee a propitiation made for him, the anger of the Prince atoned, the Law ſome other way satisfied, and his Condemnation chang'd into remission; all his former terrors vanish, and a sweet and pleasing calm possesseth him. With this knowledge and sence we should not be much terrified at the approaches of Death in our last gasps; when we consider it self gasping under the weight of the Cross. The bloud of Christ is as a Balsom dropt upon the points of the Arrows of Death. That by removing the guilt of sin, pull'd out the sting of Death. When we tremble under a sence of our sins, the terrors of the Judge and the Curses of the Law, let us look upon a Crucified Christ, the remedy of all our Miseries. His Cross hath procur'd a Crown, his Passion hath expiated our transgression. His Death hath disarm'd the Law, his bloud hath washed a Believers Soul. This Death is the destruction of our Enemies, the spring of our Happiness, the eternal testimony of divine love. We have good reason, as well as the Apostle, to determine with our selves, to know nothing but Jesus Christ, and especially him Crucified.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF Chriſt our Paſſeover.

1 Cor. 5. 7.

For Chriſt our Paſſeover is ſacrificed for us.

THE words are a reaſon of the Apoſtles exhortation to the Corinthians to caſt out the inceſtuous perſon, in regard of the contagion, which might be by ſo ill an example diſperſed to others, as a leaven ſpreads its vapors through the whole lump, v. 6. Know you not, that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? And having uſed this ſimilitude of leaven, he purſues it in alluſion to the cuſtom of the Jews before the celebration of the Paſſeover, according to the command, to have no leaven found in their houſes at that time, upon the penalty of being cut off from the Congregation of Iſrael; and with reſpect to the true deſign of that Ceremonial injunction, exhorts the Corinthians to purge out the old leaven, viz. that perſon from their ſociety, luſt from their hearts, every member of the old Adam, that they might be a new lump anſwering their holy and heavenly calling. The reaſon of this exhortation is in the words, For Chriſt our Paſſeover is ſacrificed for us, and by his death hath taken away the ſin of the world. * As the Sacrifice of the Paſchal Lamb repreſented the Sacrifice of Chriſt, ſo the manner wherein the Iſraelites celebrated that Solemnity with unleavened bread, repreſents the manner wherewith we ought to celebrate the death of the Redeemer of the World. As therefore our true Paſſeover, which is the Lord Jeſus, hath been ſacrificed for us, let us daily celebrate the memory of it in a manner worthy of ſo great a grace. As therefore the Jews abſtained from all leaven in the time of the figure, let us not only abſtain from, but purge out all things contrary to God, becauſe for this end Chriſt was ſacrificed for us. As the Paſſeover was a Type of Chriſt, ſo the unleavened Bread was a Type of Chriſtians, and of their innocence and purity of life *. And that becauſe you are unleavened, i. e. de jure, you ought to be ſo: For that is ſaid in Scripture ſometimes to be de facto which ought to be, as the Prieſts lips preſerve knowledge, i. e. ought to preſerve knowledge *. Ἐκκαθάρατε, Purge out is more emphatical and preſſing than a ſimple purging; purge it out wholly, that nothing may be left in you, that you may be ſuch as a new lump did figuratively ſignifie.

Chriſt our Paſſeover.] The inſtitution of this ſolemn Figure is particularly ſet down Exod. 12. 3, 4, 5, &c. * It was appointed by God as a Memorial both of the Iſraelites ſlavery in Egypt, and their deliverance from it. After they had been about two hundred years in that Country, God mindful of his promiſe ſets upon their delivery, and ſince all the former Miracles had proved unſucceſsful for the bending Pharaohs heart to give the Captives liberty to depart, God deſigns the slaying of the first-born of every Ægyptian Family, and thereby sending the greatest strength of the Nation to another World. Upon this occasion he orders the Israelites by Moses, to slay the Lamb the fourteenth day of the first month (which answers to our March) and sprinkle the posts of their Doors with the Bloud, and Feast upon the flesh of it in their several Families; and that night the Angel comes and mortally strikes every first-born, none escaping, but those who observ'd this command of God, and had sprinkled their Door posts with the Blood of the slain Lamb; every House besides being made that night a House of mourning. It was an earnest of the Israelites deliverance, and the Ægyptians calamity.

Observe 1. Gods greatest mercies to his Church, are attended with the greatest plagues upon their Enemies. The salvation of man is the destruction of sin and the Devil; the Passeover was the salvation of Israel and ruine of Ægypt.

2. God provides for the security of his People, before he lays his wrathful hand upon their Adversaries. He provided a Moses to conduct them, an Ordinance to comfort and refresh them, before he shoots his Arrows into the Ægyptians hearts. Gods settles this Passeover as a standing Ordinance in the Church; a Feast throughout their Generations, to be kept by an Ordinance for ever, Exod. 12. 14. so that it was not only a memorial of a past and temporal deliverance, but the type of a future and spiritual one. As all the sacrifices were types of what was to be perform'd in the fulness of time, in the person of the Messiah; so this was a great and signal type, and had its truth, reality, and efficacy in the Death of the Redeemer.

Christ the Passeover.] i. e. the Paschal Lamb. The Lamb was called the Passeover. The sign for the thing signified by it, 2 Chron. 35. 11. And they kill'd the Passeover, i. e. the Lamb; for the Passeover was properly the Angels passing over Israel, when he was sent as an Executioner of Gods wrath upon the Ægyptians. So Mat. 26. 17. Where shall we prepare for thee to eat the Passeover, i. e. the Paschal Lamb.

Our Passeover.] Our Paschal Lamb. He is called Gods Lamb, John 1. 29. Gods in regard of the Author, ours in regard of the end; Gods Lamb in regard of designation, ours in regard of acceptation.

Our Passeover.] Not only of the Jews but of the Gentiles; that was restrained to the Israelitish Nation, this extends in the offers of it to all, and belongs to all that are under the new administration of the Covenant of Grace.

For us ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.] Not only for our good, but in our stead, to free us from eternal Death, to purchase for us eternal Life; Sacrifices were substituted in the place of the transgressor, and received the stroak of Death which his sin had merited. The title of the Paschal Lamb is given here to Christ, not only in regard of his meekness and innocence, but in regard of his being a sacrifice, whence he is called the Lamb slain, Revel. 5. 12, the Lamb that redeems us by his blood, 1 Pet. 1. 18. Here we have,

1. A description of Christ in the type [Passeover.]
2. The end of his death.
   1. Finis cujus. A Sacrifice.
   2. Finis cui. Our, for us.

Three Doctrines may be observed from the words.

1. Christ is our Passeover.
2. Christ is a Sacrifice.
3. Christ is a Sacrifice in our stead.

For the first. Christ is our Passeover. In allusion to this, he is so often called a Lamb, as also in allusion to the Lambs offer'd in the daily sacrifice; but especially in relation to the Paschal Lamb, which did more fully express, both the nature of his sufferings, and the design of his office; you do not therefore find him exprest in the New Testament by the name of any of those other Animals, which were figures of him in the Jewish sacrifices, but only by this of a Lamb, as being more significant of the innocence of his Person, the meekness of his Nature, his sufficiency for his People, than any other.

1. The

1. The design of the Passeover was to set forth Christ. All the Sacrifices, which were appointed by God as parts of Worship, were design'd to keep up the acknowledgment of the Fall of Man, his demerit by sin, and to support his Faith in the promised Redeemer; for they being instituted, not before the Fall, but probably immediately after the first promise of the seed of the Woman, did all refer to that seed promised, whose heel was to be bruised, as to the foundation of their institution; and being unable of themselves to purge the sin of a rational Creature, and the spiritual substance of the Soul, they must refer to that which was only able to do it; Heb. 10. 8. Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; then said I, Lo I come to do thy will: The will of God manifested in the first draught and agreement in Heaven, and shadowed in all the Sacrifices under the Law. When Sacrifices of themselves were not, nor could be grateful to God, nor the bloud of an Animal give a due compensation to an offended God for the sin of man, then said Christ, Lo, I come, as the person represented by those pictures, as the body signified by those shadows. All those institutions not being design'd for any virtue in themselves, but as notices of the intent of God, and the methods he design'd for the taking away of sin by the promised seed; that it was to be by bloud and death, that this was the agreement between God and the seed so promised; therefore they were in all those doleful spectacles of bloud and slaughter to look through that veil to the calamities the promised seed should endure for the taking away of sin, and have a prospect of the hainousness of sin, and the sharpness of the Sufferings of the Messiah in the groans and strugglings of those dying creatures. So the design of this Passeover was ultimately to represent the Messiah to them, by whose Bloud they were to have a spiritual deliverance from Sin and Satan; as by the bloud of the Lamb they had a deliverance from the Sword of the destroying Angel, and afterwards from Pharaoh and the Egyptian pressures. He is therefore called the Lamb of God, as being shadowed by the Paschal Lamb of the Old Testament. All things under the Law were but shadows of things to come, Heb. 10. 1. Christ is the real accomplishment of all, he is our mystical, spiritual, heavenly, perfect Passeover; therefore those words which are immediately spoken of the Paschal Lamb, and did immediately respect the Passeover, Exod. 12. 46. Neither shall you break a bone thereof; and Numb. 9. 12. are said to be fulfilled in Christ the Antitype, as if they had been immediately pronounced of him, when they were spoken of the Paschal Lamb, Joh. 19. 36. For those things were done, that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken. And indeed if we consider all the circumstances in the institution, they seem not worthy of the Wisdom of God, nor are capable of having any reason rendred for them, if they be not referred to some other Mystery: and what can that be but the Redeemer of the World represented thereby? * Why should so much care be in the choice and separation of a Lamb? What virtue had the bloud of a poor Animal to secure the house, and the life of the first-born against the Sword of a strong and invisible Angel? Was the sprinkling of the bloud upon the posts a necessary mark for the Angel, as though he had not understanding enough to distinguish between the houses and children of the Israelites and Egyptians? Could not God have signified his pleasure to the Angel without such a mark, and given him directions for the security of his people? How can we think God should appoint so many Ceremonies in it, lay such a charge upon them for the strict observation of them, if he design'd it not as a prop to their Faith, a ground to expect a higher and spiritual deliverance by the Bloud of the Messiah, as well as a tryal of their obedience, a memorial of their temporal deliverance, and a sign for the direction of the Angel in the execution of his Commission?

* Daille Sermon sur 1 Cor. 5. 7.

2. The Believers in that time regarded it as a Type of the Messiah; Heb. 11. 28. Through faith he, i. e. Moses kept the Passeover and the sprinkling of bloud, lest he that destroyed the first-born should touch them. It was an illustrious testimony of Moses his faith, to rely upon the promise and good will of God, and keep the Passeover, when the bloud of a Lamb seem'd so improbable a means of preserving the Israelites from the destroying Angels Sword; yet certainly Moses his faith pierced further, and looked through this shell to the kernel, through this sign to the thing signified by it. Moses could not have esteemed the reproach of Christ, v. 26. had he not known Christ; and we cannot suppose so illustrious a Prophet, that had such an estimation of Christ as to value his reproaches, did terminate his Faith upon the outward action and the bare type, but pierced further to the promised seed, as well as Abel in his sacrifice. 'Tis not likely that his Faith stuck only in the effusion of the blood of an Animal, and did not see the effusion of the blood of the Messiah, whose reproach he had been so willing to bear. It had been too low a Faith for so great a man, not to regard the spiritual deliverance promised to be wrought by the bruising the heel of the seed of the Woman. Who can think Moses utterly ignorant of the design of that promise? And if not, who can think his Faith should terminate in the outward sign, and that the Apostle should give such Encomiums to a Faith of no higher an elevation, than that which respected the command of God in that present affair? Moses his Faith had been great in former commands, why should the Apostle skip them, if he had not designed to show his Faith in the Messiah figured in the Passeover? The Apostle doth not speak of Faith in God simply considered in that Chapter, but of Faith in the Mediator or high Priest, which he had discoursed of throughout that Book. How could the ancient Believers eat the same spiritual food, and drink of the same spiritual rock, which was Christ, without Faith in him, and respecting him as the object of Faith in that rock and manna? 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4. Some of the Jews acknowledge, that the Messiah is to come exactly on that day wherein the Passeover was offer'd when they fled out of Ægypt *. And to redeem Israel the 15*th* day of the Month Nisan, which was the day wherein Christ by his Death redeem'd the World. They came out of Ægypt the first Month, when the Moon was at the full, and in the same Month, and the same appearance of the Moon, did Christ procure our spiritual liberty by his Death.

* Ezrahin. in Exod. 12. Masius in Josh. 5. 10. tells us out of the Talmud, that this was the opinion of the ancient Jews.

9. The Paschal Lamb was the fittest to represent Christ. It was a Sacrifice and a Feast, a Sacrifice in the killing it and sprinkling the Blood, a Feast in their feeding upon it. It represents Christ, as a victim satisfying God, as a Feast refreshing us; he was offer'd to God for the expiation of our sins, he is offer'd to us for application to our Souls. The Apostle mentions one in the Text, the other in the Verse following, therefore let us keep the feast. A Lamb is both cloaths and meat; Christ is cloathing to us by his Righteousness to cover our nakedness, and food to us by his Body and Blood to satisfie our appetite, a Sacrifice and a Feast for us.

The truth of this Proposition will appear,

1. In the resemblance between the Paschal Lamb and the Redeemer.
2. In the effects or consequents of it.

(1.) In the resemblance between the Paschal Lamb and the Redeemer.

[1.] A Lamb is a meek Creature. It hurts none, is hurt by all; it hangs not back when it is led to the slaughter, it crys not when it is stuck, no greater emblem of patience to be found among irrational Creatures. To this the Prophet likens our Saviour, when he saith, Isai. 53. He was brought as a Lamb to the slaughter, and as a Sheep before the shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. How strange was his humility in entering into such a Life! How much more stupendous in submitting to such a Death, as shameful as his Life was miserable! For the Son of God to be counted the vilest of men, the soveraign of Angels to be made lower than his Creatures, the Lord of Heaven to become a Worm of the Earth, for a Creator to be spurn'd by his Creatures, is an evidence of a meekness not to be parallel'd. The Souldiers that spat upon him and mock'd him, met not with a reproachful expression from him: He held his peace at their clamours, offer'd his back to their scourges, revil'd them not when he lay under the greatest violences of their rage, was patient under his sufferings, while he was despis'd more than any man by the People. His calmness was more stupendous than their rage, and the Angels could not but more unexpressibly wonder at the patience of the sufferer, than the unmercifulness of the executioners; he was more willing to dy than they were to put him to Death; he suffer'd not by force, he courted the effusion of his Blood, when he knew that the hour which his Father had appointed, and man needed, was approaching. Neither the infamy of the Cross, nor the ſharpneſs of the puniſhment, nor the preſent and foreſeen ingratitude of his Enemies, could deter him from deſiring and effecting mans ſalvation. He went to it, not only as a duty but an honour; and was content for a while to be the ſport of Devils, that he might be the ſpring of ſalvation to men. And when he was in the furnace of divine wrath, and deſerted by his Father, he utters a ſenſible, but not a murmuring, expoſtulation; he received our ſins upon his ſhoulders, to confer his divine benefits upon our hearts; he endur'd the contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, he deſpiſed the ſhame, ſubmitted to the Croſs, his own worldly reputation was of no value with him, ſo he might be a ſacrifice for the redemption of forlorn man; and, in the whole ſcene, manifeſted a patience greater than their cruelty. From this Paſchal Lamb typifying the Redeemer, the Jews might have learn'd, not to expect a Meſſiah wading through the World in blood and ſlaughter, ſheathing his ſword in the bowels of his Enemies, and flouriſhing with temporal victories and proſperity; but one meek, humble, and lowly, ſuting the temper of the Lamb which repreſented him in the Paſſe-over.

[2.] It was to be a Lamb without blemiſh, Exod. 12. 5. It was to be intire in all its parts, ſound, without bruiſe, ſcab, or maim; and the reaſon why it was ſeparated four days before the killing of it, was, that they might have time to underſtand whether it had any ſpot or defect in it: So is the Lamb of God, he was holy in the production of his Nature, as well as in the actions of his Life; though he was of Adams ſubſtance, he was not contain'd in Adams ſeminal virtue; he was conceiv'd by the Holy Ghoſt, therefore unblemiſht in his Conception, unſpotted in his Birth. From the firſt moment of his Conception, he was filled with all ſupernatural Grace according to the capacity of his humanity; his union with the Divine Nature, ſecur'd him againſt the ſinful infirmities of our nature, and made all ſupernatural perfections due to him, whereby he might be fitted for all holy operations. As he was that holy thing in his birth, Luke 1. 35. ſo he was righteous to the laſt moment of his Life. The Law of God was within his heart, ſignified by the tables of the Law laid up in the Ark, a type of his Humane Nature, which poſſeſſed in a ſoveraign degree all the habits of the moſt accompliſht righteouſneſs that ever was in the World; to which Peter alludes, 1 Pet. 1.19. a Lamb without blemiſh and ſpot, a Divine Idea of all virtue, who infinitely ſurpaſt all the holineſs of men or Angels. The Apoſtle multiplies expreſſions to declare it, and all little enough to expreſs it, Heb. 7. 26. Holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners: He was like us in our nature, but not in our blemiſhes; he had our fleſh, but without the leaſt ſtain of imperfection; he had the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, but there was not any inherency of ſin in him, or adherency of it to him in the aſſumption of our nature, Heb. 4. 15. As the Serpent upon the pole had the likeneſs, but not the venom of the Serpent. He was not ſubjected to our ſin, as he was to our natural infirmities; he had the form of a ſervant, without the impurities of our ſlavery, and in all the days of his fleſh, was not found guilty of one inobſervance to God or man. It was neceſſary he ſhould be ſo. Had he been obnoxious to ſin, he had not been able to take away the ſins of the World; no impure Perſon could have made our Peace with God, becauſe he could not have made his own Peace, nor have procured quietneſs in his own Conſcience; he could not have merited for himſelf, much leſs have wrought any Righteouſneſs for others.

[3.] The Lamb was to be choſen, and ſet apart three days, and kill'd the fourth in the evening, Exod. 12. 6. Or between the two evenings; as it is in the Hebrew. Our Saviour was ſeparate from men, manifeſted himſelf in the work of his Prophetical Office three Years and upwards, before he was offer'd up as a Sacrifice in the fourth year, after he had been ſolemnly inaugurated in the exerciſe of his Office. Their keeping the Lamb in Cuſtody, and tying it at the feet of their Beds, that being in view it might mind them of their ſervitude in Ægypt, and deliverance from thence by the mighty hand of God, noted the humiliation of Chriſt before his Death, which is called his Priſon, and therefore the beginning of his exaltation is called a taking him from Priſon, and from Judgment, Iſa. 53. 8. As the Lamb was ſet apart the tenth day, ſo ſome obſerve *, that in anſwer to the

* Gerhard. loc. commun.

Type,

Type, Christ did on the tenth day solemnly and in triumph enter into Jerusalem, and by the same Gate, through which Lambs were led to Sacrifice; and he was crucified that very day and time wherein the Paschal Lamb was to be slain, between the two Evenings, i. e. the declining of the Sun from Noon, which was the first Evening, and the setting of it, which was the second; for it was about the ninth hour, or three in the Afternoon, the usual time wherein they kill'd the Passeover, that Christ was offer'd up as a compleat Sacrifice to God, Mat. 27. 46. 50. It was order'd by God to be kill'd in the Evening, to signify the Sacrifice of the Messiah in the Evening of the World. He was crucified at the end of the second Age of the World, the Age of the Law, and the beginning of the third Age, that of the Gospel, which is called in Scripture the last times, Heb. 1. 2. And the ends of the World, 1 Cor. 10. 11. which Peter alludes to, when he resembles him to the Paschal Lamb without blemish, 1 Pet. 1. 19, 20. manifested in these last times for you. The Death of Christ was in the first Evening of the World. The Sun is turn'd, the World shall not last so long after the coming of Christ, as it did before; the state of the World is far declin'd, and the consummation of all things is not far off, since more than sixteen hundred years are past, since the first Evening began.

[4.] The Lamb was to be roasted with fire whole, Exod. 12. 4, 8, 9. not sodden. To put them in mind of the hardship they endur'd in the brick-kilns of Egypt, and as a Type of the scorching sufferings of the Redeemer, whose strength was dried up like a Potsherd, and his tongue cleav'd to his Jaws, Psal. 22. 15. Probably alluding to this roasting of the Paschal Lamb. He bore the wrath of that God who is a consuming Fire, without any Water, any mitigation or comfort in his torments. It may note also the gradual rising of the suffering of Christ. As his Exaltation was not all at one time, but by degrees, so were his sufferings, by outward Wounds, cutting reproaches and inward agonies. The pains of the Body were unexpressible in regard of the nervousness, and therefore sensibility of those parts, his hands and feet, which were pierc'd upon the Cross. The consideration of those Millions of sins laid upon him, could not but be an unexpressible grief to the pure nature of Christ, had there been nothing of the wrath of God mixed with it. But this Bodily Death and grief was not all, the wrath of God dreadfully flam'd out against his Soul; there was the principal seat of the sufferings of Christ, because the Soul is the principal seat of that sin for which he suffer'd. What should have been inflicted upon us, was inflicted upon him: But we had not only merited the Death of the Body, but a Death join'd with the Curse of God tormenting the Soul. He tasted Death, that Death which the Devil had the power of, that Death which men fear'd, Heb 2. 9, 14, 15. which is the weight of that eternal death due to sin. How sharp must that be, which had the bitterness of a thousand Deaths, for those Millions of sins which Christ bore in his Body, every one of which had deserv'd an entire Death from the hand of God? * How grievous was that Death, since he that was more couragious than all the Martyrs, sweat drops of Bloud at the approach of the Cross; and when he was upon it, utter'd that terrible complaint, My God, my God, &c. words which never came out of the mouth of any of the Martyrs in the strength of their torments; so that the sufferings of Christ were of that weight, that a meer Creature would have sunk under them; not only the holiest man but the highest Angel.

* Daillé Sermons sur 3 Jean Serm. sur Gal. 3. p. 613.

[5.] Not a bone of the Paschal Lamb was to be broken, Exod. 12. 46. * Which according to the opinion of some, signified that kind of Death to which the breaking of the Bones belonged, and that was Crucifixion; it being the custom to break the Bones of Malefactors, that their punishment might be shortned. This was fulfilled in our Saviour, Joh. 19. 36. Death had not a full power over him, he was not broken to pieces by the greatness of his sufferings, but surmounted his Enemies upon the Cross, and was reserv'd entire for a Resurrection.

* Pearson on the Creed, p. 408.

There may be other resemblances noted. As the Lamb was to be a Male, which implies the perfection and strength of the Sacrifice; not above a year old; the sufferings of Christ were in the prime of his Age.

(2.) There is a resemblance in the effects or consequents of the Passeover.

[1.] The diverting the deſtroying Angel by the ſprinkling of the bloud upon the poſts, to be a mark to the Angel, to ſpare the Firſt-born of ſuch Houſes, was the main end expreſt in the inſtitution, Exod. 12. 12, 13. Their preſervation could not be merited by the bloud of an Animal. It had a higher cauſe, the bloud of Chriſt, which was repreſented by it; to which purpoſe the obſervation of Chryſoſtom is remarkable. As the Statues of Kings, though they are inanimate things, yet are Sanctuaries to preſerve thoſe that fly to them, not becauſe they are Statues, but becauſe they repreſent the Prince; So the bloud of the Lamb preſerv'd the Families, not becauſe it was bloud, but becauſe it repreſented the blood of the Meſſiah. This Bloud quencheth that fire of wrath we had merited, turns away that vengeance which would elſe conſume us. By virtue of this Sacrifice, we paſs from death to life, John 5. 24. When God ſhall judge the World, he will paſs over thoſe whom he ſees ſprinkled with the bloud of his well beloved, and turn from them the edge of that conſuming Sword, which ſhall ſtrike through the hearts of thoſe that are without this bloud of ſprinkling. 'Tis only under the Warrant of this Bloud, that we can be ſafe. The Redeemers Bloud ſhed for us, and ſprinkled on us, preſerves our Souls to eternal life. As the deſtroying Sword did not touch the Iſraelites, ſo condemning wrath ſhall not ſtrike thoſe that are under the protection of it; Death ſhall have no power over them. The bloud of the Paſchal Lamb wrought a temporal deliverance, and this bloud a ſpiritual and eternal one.

[2.] Upon this ſucceeded that liberty God had deſign'd for them, Exod. 12. 31. As it ſecur'd them from Death, ſo it was the earneſt of their deliverance, and broke the Chains of their ſlavery. The Death of Chriſt is the foundation of the full deliverance of his People, and the earneſt of the fruition of the purchas'd and promis'd Inheritance. This was the Conqueſt of Pharaoh, upon which ſoon after follow'd his deſtruction. Pharaohs heart was not bent till the Celebration of this Paſſeover; that which ſucceeded upon it, laid him more flat than all the former Plagues, whereby he had ſmarted. The Promiſes concerning the Meſſiah, and the Sacrifices which were Types of him, terrified the Devil, Pharaohs Antitype; but only the bloud of Chriſt ſhed, conquers him and pulls Captives from his Chains. The Iſraelites ſlavery ended, when their Sacrifices were finiſhed; the efficacy of this divine Paſſeover delivers men from a ſpiritual Captivity, under the yoke of ſin, and the Irons of Satan, inſtates them in the liberty of the Children of God, whereby they become a holy Nation, a Royal Prieſthood, a free and peculiar People; this ſtrikes off the ſhackles, works an eſcape from the preſſures of ſpiritual Enemies, changeth a deplorable Captivity into a glorious liberty, and reduceth Satan to ſo impotent a condition, that all his ſtrength, and all his ſtratagems cannot render him maſter of that Soul that is once freed from his Chains: As after this Paſſeover, the Ægyptian ſtrength was ſo ſcatter'd, that they were as ready to force that People to their liberty, as before they were deſirous to detain them their Slaves, and were never able to reduce them to their former Chains.

[3.] After this Paſſeover they do not only enjoy their liberty but begin their march to Canaan, the promiſed and delightful Land. They then turn their backs upon Ægypt, and their Faces towards Canaan; and after a Pilgrimage in the Deſart, they enter into the Land flowing with Milk and Honey; ſo by the merit of the Sacrifice of Chriſt, the true Iſraelite turns his Face from Earth to Heaven, from a World that lies in wickedneſs, to an inheritance of the Saints in light, and travels towards Canaan, whither he ſhall be ſure to enter after he hath finiſhed his Pilgrimage, to feed upon the Milk and Honey, the glory and happineſs proper to that ſtate. Then ſhall all the ends of this Paſſeover be fulfill'd and compleated in the Kingdom of God, Luke 22. 16. and the Soul remain for ever in a glorious ſtate beyond the reach of its former Tyrants, free from all fear of ſlavery, for ever rejoycing in the happy accompliſhment of the promiſes of God. In ſhort, As after the Celebration of this Paſſeover in Ægypt, all the promiſes of God to them began to take place and paſs into performance; ſo by the Death of Chriſt, the true Paſſeover, all the Promiſes were made Yea and Amen, in him, and began to be made good to every Believer.

The Uſe.

1. Of

1. Of Information. Is Christ called our Passeover? Then

1. The study of the old Testament is advantagious. The Apostle here writes to the Corinthians, among whom were not only Hellenists, but Gentiles, who could not understand the nature and ends of the Passeover, without the knowledge of the Old Testament; by this they are implicitely directed to the study of it. The Old Testament verifies the New, and the New illustrates the Old. The Old shows the promises of God, and the New the performance; what was predicted in the Old, is fulfilled in the New. By comparing both together, the wisdom of God in his conduct is clear'd, and the truth of God in his word confirm'd. The Old Testament delivers the Types, the New interprets them: the Old presents them like money in a Bag, the New spreads them, and discovers the value of the Coin; the Israelites in the Old felt the weight of the Ceremonies, Believers in the New enjoy the riches of them.

2. Upon what a slender thread doth the Doctrine of Transubstantiation hang? Christ is here called the Passeover; was the Paschal Lamb therefore substantially the Body of Christ? Were those Lambs that were slain in Egypt or at any other time in the celebration of this Ordinance, transubstantiated into Christ? Yet Christ is as absolutely here called the Passeover, and in other places the Lamb, as the Bread in the Sacrament is called his Body, or the Wine his Bloud. Christ is said to be the Rock, of which the Israelites drank, 1 Cor. 10. 4. was the Rock or the water that flowed from it, transubstantiated into Christ? But in Scripture the name proper to the thing represented, is given to that which represents it. The Lamb is called the Passeover, because it is a Memorial of the Angels passing over the Israelites Families, and not only called so at the first institution, but above fifteen hundred years after that miraculous mercy. So the Bread and Wine are called the Body and Bloud of Christ, because they are Memorials and Signs of his Body and Bloud. If the Church of the Jews spake figuratively in the case of the Passeover, what difficulty is it, that Christ should call the Memorials of his Body and Bloud by the name of the things they signified?

3. It gives us a probable reason for the change of the Sabbath from the seventh day to the first. That it is changed is evident by Apostolical example. * 'Tis probable that from the Creation the year began in September, the Autumnal Equinox, the fruits being on the trees at the Creation; but now God orders the beginning of the year from the time of this first Passeover, and the consequents following upon it, their deliverance from Egypt, which was in March the Vernal Equinox, Exod. 12. 2. This month shall be unto you the beginning of months, it shall be the first month of the year to you. Had the year began from March at the beginning, it had not been so proper to command them to begin it from that month, which they had always observed before as the beginning of the year. The Israelites had been as it were buried in Egypt, and this being the month of their resurrection, should be the first month of the year. This change of the beginning of the year, gives us a probable reason of the change of the Sabbath. If the beginning of the year were changed upon the account of the Type, a day might well be changed upon the account of the Antitype. If this in the figure were counted greater than Creation, that the month of the Worlds creation must give place to it, the substance of this figure appearing, might well be the cause of the change of a day, and the seventh day of the Creation give place to the first day of the perfection of Redemption.

* Lightfoots Gleanings on Exod. 12. 2.

4. The ancient Jews were under a Covenant of Grace. Christ was the end, the Spirit, the life of their Sacrifices. The Passeover, Rock, Sacrifices, Manna, were the swadling-bands wherein he was wrapt. They eat of the same spiritual meat, drank of the same spiritual drink, the rock which followed them cherished them, and watered them, was Christ, 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4. Christ to come was set forth to them as an object of Faith. Christ was the Rock, the Passeover Sacramentally. Their Sacraments and ours were the same in re, though diverse in signs. Hence their Sacraments are attributed to us, Circumcision and the Passeover, spiritually; ours in the same manner to them, Baptism and the Lords Supper, 1 Cor. 10. 2, 3. They indeed had Christ as it were in his infancy, we in his ripe and full age. They had him under the obscure veils of Lambs, Bullocks, Goats; we have him in in his perſon. They had the Sun under a cloud, we the Sun at noon-day in his Glory.

2. Comfort. In the ſecurity Chriſt procures. The deſtroying Angel was not to enter into any ſprinkled houſe, no paſſage was afforded to him. The wrath of God, or the malice of the Devil can have no power over them that are ſprinkled with the Bloud of Chriſt. In the efficacy. The bloud of the Lamb was but a ſign of that deliverance of the Iſraelites, but could not purge their defiled conſciences; but the bloud of our Lamb hath merited our Salvation, can cleanſe our conſciences from dead and condemning works to ſerve the living God, and rejoyce in him, who without this ſprinkling will be to us a conſuming fire. As the Paſſeover was kill'd, that it might be their food as well as their ſecurity; ſo was Chriſt crucified, that he might be our atonement and our nouriſhment, our ſhield and our food, to make us partakers of his benefits by a ſpiritual application and a cloſe incorporation of us with himſelf. This comfort is the greater, by how much the Tyrant we are deliver'd from, is more dreadful than Pharaoh, whoſe deſign is not only like his to afflict our bodies, but tumble our Souls and Bodies into the ſame Hell with himſelf. 'Tis from the wrath of God our Paſſeover hath deliver'd us: and what is the anger of Pharaoh to the fury of an offended Deity kindled againſt us by our multiplied tranſgreſſions? 'Tis true, deliverance is yet but begun; 'tis not yet perfect; miſeries, and ſpiritual conteſts are to be expected. Pharaoh will purſue, but ſhall not overtake; the Sea ſhall ruine the Egyptians, but ſecure the Iſraelites; death ſhall not ſwallow up thoſe who are ſprinkled with this holy Bloud. Conſider alſo, if God were ſo punctual to his word in ſo light an inſtance as the bloud of the Lamb, he will be as ſtedfaſt to it in ſo great an inſtance as the bloud of his Son beheld cleaving to the Soul.

3. Exhortation.

1. Thankfully remember this Paſſeover. A redemption from Divine wrath, a ſpiritual life and liberty, the fruits and purchace of this Lamb, are incomparably beyond the temporal deliverance conferr'd upon the Jews. * The giving thanks was a duty annext to the eating of the Paſchal Lamb, wherein they bleſſed God for the mercy ſhew'd to their Fathers in bringing them out of Egypt. How infinitely more precious is the Bloud of the Son of God than the bloud of a ſilly Animal? How highly doth the benefit of the one ſurmount the immediate fruit of the other? And is it not fit our praiſes ſhould ſurpaſs thoſe of the Jews for the old Paſſeover? Remember it with bitterneſs. The Iſraelites eat the Paſſeover with bitter herbs; ſhall we be without it, when we conſider the cauſe of our ſlavery, and the means of our deliverance? A bitterneſs of ſoul will make the taſte of the benefit of Chriſt more delicious.

* Buxtorffi Synag. Jud. Cap. 13

2. Enquire whether he be our Paſſeover. He is a Paſſeover, but is he a Lamb eaten by us, own'd by us? He is ours by the gift of God, but is he ours by the acceptation of our Souls? 'Tis the moſt uſeful, moſt neceſſary inquiry we can make. All the comfort of poſſeſſions in the world conſiſts in the word Mine, Ours, and the uſe as ours; all the comfort of ſpiritual mercy conſiſts in property, poſſeſſion and fruition. If he be our Lamb, we muſt be like him, we muſt learn of him. As he is the cauſe of our expiation, he muſt be the Copy of our imitation, Mat. 11. 29. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly, and you ſhall find reſt unto your ſouls. No reſt without a ſenſe of ſin, and humiliation for it. This Lamb is ours in the liberty, life, glory and reſt he hath purchaſed, when we are like him, when we learn of him.

3. Have Faith in the Bloud of Chriſt. The killing the Lamb ſignified the death of Chriſt, the ſprinkling the bloud ſignified the application of it by Faith. * It was not the bloud contain'd in the veins of the Lamb, or ſhed upon the ground, that was the mark of deliverance, but ſprinkled upon the poſts: nor is it the Bloud of Chriſt circulating in his Body, or ſhed upon the Croſs, which ſolely delivers us, but as applied by Faith to the heart. That was ſprinkled upon every houſe that deſired ſafety, and this upon every ſoul that deſires happineſs. Satan will have an undoubted right over all that are without the token of this Bloud, as the deſtroying Angel had over every houſe that was not ſprinkled with the bloud of the Paſſeover. This was the Sanctuary of the Iſraelites, the want of it, the death of the Ægyptian first-born, from the Prince to the Peasant, from him that sat upon the throne, to him that was in the Dungeon, Exod. 12. 29. Without this blood of sprinkling neither Prince nor Beggar can possibly escape; the ones grandeur cannot priviledge, nor the others misery procure a pity. The blood was to be taken and put upon the posts; this condition was requisite. To have a part in the great Passeover of our Lord, the condition is to sprinkle our hearts by Faith with his blood; 1 Pet. 1. 2. Had an Israelites Family neglected this, it had felt the edge of the Angels Sword; the Lamb had not avail'd him, not by a defect of the Sacrifice, but by their own negligence or contempt of the condition: Or had they used any other mark, they had not diverted the stroke; no work, no blood but the blood and sufferings of the Redeemer, can take away the sin of the World; without it, every man in the World lyes in the sin of his nature under the wrath of God. If any thing else in the World had a virtue for it, it could not prevail, unless God would accept it, because he did not appoint it. This only is designed to be our Passeover; where else can we find any remedy against the stings of our Consciences, any ease under the weight of our sins, any consolation against divine wrath?

4. Let us leave the service of sin. The Israelites after this Passeover did no more work at the brick-kilns of Ægypt; they ceas'd to be Pharaohs slaves, and began to be the Lords freemen. God intended no more to turn them to their former labour; he would have them eat their Passeover with their loins girt in the habit of Travellers. We must be in a readiness to leave the confines of Ægypt, all commerce with, and service of Sin and Satan, and have our faces set towards Canaan, our steps directed to observe his commands for our rule, to attain his promises for our comfort, and go forward rejoicing in his goodness, celebrating his name, offering our Souls and Bodies to him, which is a reasonable service to Christ our Passeover.

Doct. 2. Christ is a Sacrifice, ἐτύθη. The word θύειν properly signifies to kill as a Sacrifice. Some dispute whether the Paschal Lamb was a Sacrifice, because in a Sacrifice something was offer'd to God either in whole or in part, but the Paschal Lamb was not offer'd to God, but eaten by the People; it was killed to the end that the blood should be sprinkled upon the posts of the Doors, and therefore it is rather a Sacrament than a Sacrifice. Again, the Jews did not Sacrifice out of the Temple, and therefore in their captivities they did not Sacrifice, but both then and now they celebrate the Passeover. Others again think it a Sacrifice, because the sprinkling of the blood upon the posts, was in a manner an offering it to God to turn away his wrath (Exod. 34. 25. Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven, neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of passeover be left until the morning.) And a means of reconciliation to him, Deut. 16. 2. Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the passeover unto the Lord. But whether properly a Sacrifice or no, yet it was significative of the propitiating blood of Christ, the future grand Sacrifice, by virtue of which we have our deliverance. The Apostle might here allude to the Passeover and other Sacrifices, all which did prefigure the spiritual redemption by the Messiah. * A Sacrifice is defined to be, a religious oblation of something consecrated and dedicated to God by the ministry of a Priest according to Gods institution, to be destroyed for a testimony of the Worship of God and an external Symbol.

* Cloppenburg. de sacrificiis, p. 4. Owen against Biddle, p. 479.

I shall lay down some Propositions for the illustrating this Doctrine.

1. Sacrifices were instituted as types of Christ.

(1.) They were instituted by God. No satisfactory reason can be rendred of the custom of sacrificing derived from the first age of the World, practised by all Nations, till the appearance of the Gospel abolisht it in those places where it shone. It could not be a dictate of the Law of Nature inscrib'd in all mens hearts, for then they would have been of force still. Christianity doth not extinguish any beam of natural light, but adds a clearness to it; it aboliſheth only what was corrupt, or only ceremonial. Though natural light could not invent them, yet it made them entertainable by all, while they were ſtung with the Conſcience of ſin and expectations of vengeance. Men might know that they were unlike to what they were in their Creation; they found their light darkned, their beauty defac'd, and might ſuppoſe that a God of infinite goodneſs did not ſend them forth in ſuch a ſhape out of his mint; this deformity muſt come upon them for ſome provocation, and by the means of their own ſin. They alſo found the marks of Gods anger upon them, ſaw and felt his thundring judgments in the World, they had a notion of the vindictive juſtice of God, they had frequent manifeſtations of it upon themſelves and others. This the Apoſtle affirms generally of the Heathens, Rom. 1. 32. They knew the judgment of God, that they which commit ſuch things, are worthy of death; they had a ſentiment of God and revenging juſtice in their Conſciences, that it did not become the holineſs and righteouſneſs of the divine nature, to let their Rebellions remain unpuniſhed. The Apoſtle ſpeaks not there of any ſupernatural Revelation, but the natural manifeſtation by the Creatures, whereby his juſtice was diſcover'd as well as his eternal Power and Godhead. Upon this account Sacrifices were practis'd among them, as ſeeming to them congruous means for the expiation of ſin, and to put a ſtop to the wrath of God, either fear'd by them, or already kindled among them. For by this action they confeſt their deſert of death for their Crimes, acknowledg'd Gods Soveraignty and right over all they had, and own'd his mercy in accepting in their ſtead the life of an irrational animal. For when men are ſenſible of the anger of God, the next thought in order, is how to eſcape it. When men ſee a Magiſtrate ſuffer Murders and Violences in a Nation to go unpuniſht, they generally have an horror of it, and expect ſome judgment of God, till an expiation be made by the Death of the Offender. And could they reaſonably think God to be void of that virtue of juſtice, which is commendable over all the World by the light of nature, when thoſe perfections of humane nature, left in the midſt of corruption, are but as little ſparks to thoſe which are infinite in God? They were at firſt inſtituted by God; though we have not the inſtitution of them in expreſs words, yet we have the practice in Abel, Gen. 4. 4. afterwards in Noah, Gen. 8. 20. Noah offer'd burnt offerings on the Altar. And ſince the Apoſtle, Heb. 11. 4. ſpeaks of Abels offering a Sacrifice in Faith, it muſt be Gods Command; for no act of worſhip of a humane invention can pleaſe God. The demand might be made, who hath requir'd thoſe things at your hands? It had not been formally good unleſs offer'd in Faith; nor had it been a fit ground or medium of Faith, without a divine ſtamp upon it. If the foundation were not divine, the act could not be acceptable.

(2.) No other reaſon can be render'd of the inſtitution of them, but as typical of the great Sacrifice of the Redeemer. The Scripture gives us the only account of this; all Nations in the World without the Scripture are in the dark, as to the deſign of thoſe Sacrifices, though they practis'd them conformably to the ſentiments of their Conſciences. The inſtitution of them from the beginning of the World cannot reaſonably be concluded to be for any other end, than to prefigure ſome ſufficient Sacrifice, able to appeaſe the wrath of God, and pacify the Conſciences of men, and to inſtruct men in what was to be brought upon the ſtage in time, in the exhibition of the perſon of the Redeemer. In the ſtate of innocence we find no mention of them, nor could they have had any place had man continued in his created rectitude and integrity. The Covenant of works, which then was the rule and ground of mans ſtanding, requir'd not Faith in a Redeemer, and therefore implied no ſuch act as ſacrificing. Man then had no relation to God, but as a Creature, and perſiſting in obedience could not by the righteous Law of God be ſubject to Death, and therefore no other ſubjected to Death for him; for to have any one to dy for us, implies that we had merited Death our ſelves. It cannot enter into the reaſon of man to imagine what uſe they could be for in that ſtate. Death was not due to the righteouſneſs of mans nature, but to his corruption. Adam ſtood upon his own bottom, and was the foundation of all his Poſterity, and no perſon was ſubſtituted in his room. What could Sacrifices then repreſent? Whereof could they be typical? Could they be for the confeſſion of ſin? There was none to confeſs. Could they be to repreſent a Death deſerv'd? There was no crime committed whereby to merit it? Could it be to typify Christ to come? there was no Revelation of him till after the fall, Gen. 3. 15. And supposing (as some do) that Christ should have been incarnate, had man persisted in his first integrity; yet none suppose Christ should have been crucified in that nature, without the entrance of sin. What end could be suppos'd of shedding his Bloud? For satisfaction of Justice? Justice was not provok'd. For example? Man perfect in all vertue needed none; besides, he was not capable of the exercise of suffering vertues, who was not capable of suffering in that state. They were appointed therefore after the Fall, as representations of this Sacrifice, so necessary for the expiation of sin. And some conclude with probability, that they were put in practice immediately after the making the promise of the seed of the Woman (though there be no express Scripture for it) from Gen. 3. 21. God made them coats of skins: which probably were the skins of slain beasts, very likely consum'd by fire from Heaven; as the Jews say Abel's Sacrifice was, which was a token of Gods acceptation of it. This was probably done for the confirmation of the truth of the promise, the clearer representing the design of it to them, by substituting another in the room of the offender, and comforting them thereby, since without shedding of bloud is no remission, Heb. 9. 22. And of those Sacrifices the skins were appointed to be the garments of the first Man and Woman, to put them in mind of their Apostasie, and the way of their recovery, and the righteousness of another, wherein they were to stand before God. * But howsoever it be, we cannot suppose Abel to be the first that offer'd Sacrifice, and that 129 years should run without the offering of any. 'Tis likely Abel was slain in that year, because Seth was born in the 130 year of Adams age, Gen. 5. 3. * Indeed Sacrifices, as they looked backward, could be no other than a transcript of the agreement between the Father and the Son, of the one's paying, and the other's accepting the price of bloud for the redemption of man: And as they looked forward, a Type of the real performance of the sufferings on the one part, and the acceptance of them on the other part, when the fulness of time should come, wherein they were actually to be undergone. This Tradition of Sacrifices was handed down to all Nations of the World, but the knowledge of the end of them was lost. Yet in an exercise of reason they might rise to a consideration, that this low bloud could not be a compensation for sin, as not being proportion'd to the dignity of him with whom they had to do. But as to the true end of them, the representation of a higher Sacrifice, they were not able to discern it by all the reason in the world, after they had lost the revelation of it. By the way: This adds a credit to the Scripture, since it gives us an account of the reason of that which was practis'd by all Nations, which they could not without revelation render any tolerable reason for. The Scripture makes it plain. [* God would have a representation of that which the Redeemer was to offer in the fulness of time for the abolition of sin. As men always need a satisfaction of the Justice of God, so God would have it, that in all their Worship there should be a mark of this necessity, and some presage that one day there should be a Sacrifice eternally efficacious, the reality of which was represented by this figure.]

3. Christ did really answer to these Types. They were all Christ in a cloud, the substance did answer to the shadows, and he was used in such a manner as the Figures of him were. Christ was a Victim put in the place of the sinner to appease the anger of God; and as sins were laid upon the head of the Sacrifice, so God put upon him the iniquities of us all, Isai. 53. 6. In regard of this Typicalness of the legal administration, Christ is often called a Lamb, and the Lamb of God, Joh. 1. 29. and a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, not only in the Decree, but in the Type of him, the first Sacrifice mention'd in the Scripture, which was a firstling of the flock, Gen. 4. 2, 4. Abel being a keeper of sheep. To those Figures of him he seems to refer in his last speech upon the Cross, Joh. 19. 30. 'Tis finished. The whole design of the daily and extraordinary Sacrifices was compleated, the demerit of sin and severity of Divine Justice were manifested, and the Truth of God, as well as his love, made glorious therein; upon which follow'd the rending of the veil, and the setting Heaven open for the entrance of all that believ'd in him, to approach to God upon the account of this Sacrifice.

2. The Sacrifices thus inſtituted, were of themſelves inſufficient, and could not expiate ſin; they muſt therefore receive their accompliſhment in ſome other. Being but ſhadows by their inſtitution, they could make nothing perfect, Heb. 10. 1, 11. where and in the following verſes the Apoſtle lays the glory of the legal Sacrifices in the duſt; nor really atone, though they typically did: they did but evidence the guilt of ſin and miſery of men, whence the Law is called a Miniſter of death.

(1.) It was not conſiſtent with the honour of God to be contented with the blood of a beaſt for an expiation of ſin. How could there be in it a diſcovery of the ſeverity of his Juſtice, the purity of his Holineſs, or the grandeurs of his Grace? How would he have been known in his infinite hatred of ſin, if he had accepted the blood of an abject Animal as an atonement for the ſin of a ſpiritual Soul? * Was it becoming the Majeſty of God, who had denounc'd a curſe in the Law upon the tranſgreſſors of it, and publiſh'd it with ſo terrible a ſolemnity, as thunders, lightnings, earthquakes, which made it paſs under the title of a fiery law, Deut. 33. 2. in regard of the ſevere menaces againſt the tranſgreſſor, to make ſo light of it, to accept of the mangling a few Beaſts in the place of the offender againſt it? Should he appear on Mount Sinai with ten thouſand of his Angels in the giving of it, to let all the threatnings of it vaniſh into ſmoke? Was it likely all thoſe curſes ſhould be poured out upon a few irrational and innocent Creatures who had never broken that Law? Can it be imagin'd, that after ſo terrible a proclamation, he ſhould aquieſce in ſo light a compenſation, as the Death of a poor Beaſt? No man can reaſonably have ſuch deſpicable thoughts of the Majeſty, Juſtice, and Holineſs of God, or the vileneſs of ſin and greatneſs of its provocation, as to imagine that the one could be contented, or the other expiated by the blood of a Lamb or Bullock. Our own Conſciences will tell us, that if God will have a Sacrifice, it muſt be proportion'd to the Majeſty of him whom we have offended, and the greatneſs of the crime we have committed.

* Amyraut des Religions, p. 309, 310.

2. They have no proportion to the ſin of man. The ſin of a rational Creature, is too foul to be expiated by the blood of an irrational Creature; nor could the blood of a Humane Body, though the firſt-born, the ſtrength and delight of Man, Mich. 6. 7. much leſs of a Beaſt, bear any proportion to the ſin of the Soul, Heb. 10. 4. 'Tis not poſſible that the blood of bulls and goats ſhould take away ſin. The butchery of ſo poor a Creature, cannot be any compenſation for that which is a diſparagement of the Creator of the World. What alliance was there between the nature of a Beaſt and that of a man? An inferiour nature can never atone the ſin of a nature ſuperiour to it. There is indeed in the groans of thoſe dying Creatures ſome demonſtration of Gods wrath, but no bringing in an everlaſting Righteouſneſs, nor any vindication of the honour of the Law.

(3.) The reiteration of them ſhows their inſufficiency *. Had the wrath of God been appeas'd by them, why ſhould the fire burn perpetually upon the Altar? Why ſhould it be fed perpetually with the carcaſſes of Beaſts? As often as they were offer'd, a Conſcience of ſin was excited in the preſenter of them, iniquity was called to remembrance, Heb. 10. 2, 3. The whole ſcene of that adminiſtration loudly publiſh'd, that the wrath againſt ſin was not appeas'd, the guilt of the Soul not wiped off. If a man had preſented a Sacrifice for his ſin one day, and fallen into the ſame, or another, before night, he muſt have repeated his Sacrifice for a new expiation; had there been ability in them to perform ſo great a thing, there had not been a repetition. They were rather a commemoration of ſin, and confeſſions of it, than expiations of any, rather accuſers than atoners.

* Jackſon, Vol. 2. p. 292.

(4.) God had often ſpoken ſlightly of them. He reſembles them to the cutting off a dogs neck, when done with an unholy heart, Iſai. 66. 3. While the Temple ſtood, he ſtruck their fingers off from hanging upon them, Iſai. 1. 11, 12, 13. indeed he would not reprove them for their offerings *, but he would not have them place their juſtification in them. He profeſſeth he had no delight in them, Pſal. 40. 6. If all Sacrifices of the Law were not of ſuch value, as love to him, and fear of him, they could not expiate; and if that which was more excellent than thoſe, were too weak to effect it, an utter inability muſt remain in the other. He doth doth frequently predict the abolition of them, and hath destroyed the Temple to which he had affix'd them, which remains in desolation without a Sacrifice to this day. Besides, he never provided a typical remedy for all sins in them; some transgressors were to be cut off without a Sacrifice for them, according to the judicial Law, the rule of the Government of that People; upon which account David argues, that God did not delight in them, Psal. 51. 16. Thou desirest not sacrifice, thou delightest not in burnt-offerings, because he had provided no Sacrifices for those sins David at that time was guilty of; whereupon he desires, v. 18. that God would do good to Sion in his good pleasure; bring forth that Redeemer out of Sion which he had promised, whose Sacrifice being a Sacrifice of Righteousness, should be infinitely delightful to him. Since therefore 'tis unbecoming the Majesty of God to be satisfied with the bloud of a Calf or Goat, since it bears no proportion to the sin of man, since he never intended those institutions to be perpetual, since the threatnings of the Law must [if God be a God of truth] have their accomplishment either in the person offending, or in some undertaker for him, capable to bear them in his stead; there must be some other Sacrifice suited to the Majesty of God, able to make an expiation proportionable to the sin of man, a Sacrifice able to remove the guilt, and pacifie the conscience, a rest for God, and a security for the Creature. The natural order of things requires, and the whole design of those legal institutions declares, That as he that keeps the Law, should have a reward from the goodness of God; so he that breaks it, should endure a punishment from the Justice of God: and every man being a breaker of the Law, must either sink under the menaces of it, or present a sufficient Sacrifice to God to avert his wrath, a precious bloud that may quench the flames of his anger, that God may say to the sinner, I have found, and accepted a ransom for thee. And what is said of this, may be said of all our duties and performances, the staves upon which men naturally lean for acceptation of their persons. They can no more be acceptable in themselves to God, or remedies for man, than the legal Sacrifices which had no merit in themselves, but represented that which was grateful to God, and meritorious for the Creature, and whatsoever virtue and efficacy they had, was not from themselves, but from that which they shadowed.

3. Proposition. Such a Sacrifice therefore is necessary for a sinful creature. No Creature can be such a Sacrifice; as the Apostle argues, If righteousness be by the Law, then was Christ dead in vain, Galat. 2. 21. Upon the same account it may be concluded, If expiation could be made by a Creature for himself, in vain did God send his Son to be a propitiation for sin. Had man himself been sufficient for it, God's sending his Son had rather appeared an act of cruelty to Christ, than of mercy to us. Who could think God should expose the delight of his Soul to our infirmities, and a shameful death, if a sufficient Sacrifice could have been found elsewhere? Besides, the wrath of God being so terrible, that the humane Nature of Christ trembled at it, how is any Creature ever able to bear the horror of it, and stand as a Sacrifice under the weighty strokes of that Justice?

(1.) What is a Sacrifice for sin must be pure and sinless. God will not accept a defiled Offering. He that provokes him by his own offence, is not capable of appeasing him for his own or another's. The least blemish in a typical Lamb render'd it unfit for the Altar. God is infinitely pure who is offended; the Law is exactly holy which is contemn'd; a compensation cannot be made to a holy God, and a righteous Law by the criminal without enduring an infinite penalty, which because it cannot be intensivè so, must be extensivè, infinite in point of duration, i. e. since it cannot be infinite, it must be perpetual. As he would be always suffering, so he would be always sinning, and wrath can never be appeased by that which provokes it at the same time it endeavours to pacifie it. What is displeasing can never be capable of pleasing an infinite Holiness. If a man had but one sin, and thought to expiate that by any thing he could do, he would still need another Sacrifice to expiate the sin of the former, and so would be always satisfying and always sinning, since there is no man that doth good and sins not, i. e. in the doing of it, Eccles. 7. 20. he could not possibly find any thing in himself, or in any corrupted Creature, where he might rest his foot with any content and ſecurity? Where any ſin is, though but one, there can be no merit. Whatſoever is done after all our ſtrength is gone, is done by the Grace of God; in that caſe God deſerves ſervice of us, but we deſerve no acceptation from him. Since therefore we are not able, ſince our Fall, to do one Good Work, we are not able to offer one acceptable Sacrifice; how can man then ſatisfie for himſelf, any more than a man that owes a Shilling, pays that, by borrowing two; whereby he is ſo far from paying his Debt, that he encreaſeth it?

(2.) An infinite Sacrifice is neceſſary for a ſin in ſome reſpects infinite; for every ſin intrencheth upon the honour of an infinite God. An infinite Sacrifice is due for an infinite offence. God is infinite in his glory, which is impair'd, infinite in his Soveraignty, which is degraded; the Sacrifice muſt be of as great a dignity as the offence was of malignity. [* It muſt be fully proportion'd to the ſin of Man, and the Majeſty of God. What Man, nay, what Creature is capable of ſuch a proportion? The condition of his nature is too low, and the limits of his dignity too ſtrait, to correſpond with ſuch an effect.] The drop of a Bucket, and the duſt of the balance, are of too vile a nature to be a ſatisfactory Sacrifice to God: All men are no more, Iſa. 40. 15, 16, 17. nay, worſe than nothing and vanity; and therefore all men in the World put together would be ſo far from redeeming themſelves by a ſufficient Sacrifice, that as themſelves, ſo their Sacrifice would be worſe than nothing and vanity, and would be over-whelm'd under the puniſhment due to their offence. Finite bears no proportion to infinite, therefore a finite Sacrifice carries no equivalent compenſation in it for an infinite wrong. So that neither length of time, nor ſtrength of nature, can ever make a recompence for that offence, which encreaſeth in proportion, according to the dignity of the perſon againſt whom it is committed. If every hair of our Head were a Soul, and every Soul a Sacrifice, all would be too poor an amends for that glorious God wronged by us, though it had been but by one act of Rebellion; for man cannot do any act of that value in the nature of ſatisfaction, as one act of ſin is injurious in the nature of wrong. [* Upon the ſame account of finiteneſs no Angel could be a proportionable Sacrifice to the Juſtice of God, for the ſin of Man. For though the excellency of the Angelical far tranſcends the nature of man, yet it cannot equal the dignity of God. They are Creatures, and an unconceivable diſtance is perpetually between Creatures and the Creator. Therefore ſaith Job, Job 4. 18. He puts no truſt in his Servants, and his Angels he chargeth with folly. All the Excellency of the Angelical nature is deſpicable, compar'd with God: and if God did not ſecure them, they would fall; if God did not preſerve light in them, they would be darkneſs as well as we.] If they could not, becauſe they are Creatures, man could not, becauſe he was a ſinful Creature. Thouſands of rivers of oyl, and thouſands of rams, would have born far leſs proportion to the Creator of them, or to ſins againſt him, Micah 6. 6, 7.

* Amyraut des Religions, p. 395.

* Amyraut des Religions, p. 335.

(3.) Neceſſary, in regard of the Juſtice of God: Which is an immutable and infinite perfection of the Divine Eſſence. As God is ſo infinitely holy, as it is impoſſible he ſhould not but hate the leaſt ſin, ſo he is infinite in his Juſtice, and cannot let any ſin go unpuniſhed; ſince he hath declared by his Law, that curſed is he that continueth not in all things of the Law to do them, and that it was irrevocably paſt, that in the day man ate of the forbidden Fruit, he ſhould dye the death, Gen. 2. 17. As the perfection of his Nature requires, that he ſhould have for ſin an implacable averſion; ſo the ſame Perfection requires, that Juſtice be not appeaſed without puniſhment. Since God therefore would have a Sacrifice for ſin, to have one diſproportioned to his infinite Dignity and Juſtice, had been the ſame as to have none at all. An infinite Sacrifice cannot be offered, but by an infinite perſon: 'tis neceſſary therefore that one of the Perſons of the Trinity ſhould be this Sacrifice; and it was moſt congruous to the Wiſdom of God, upon ſeveral accounts, that it ſhould be the Second. This Sacrifice is neceſſary at leaſt in Point of becomingneſs, as God is the Author of all things, and placed them in a rectitude from which they departed by their own folly, and ſullied that Glory they were created to manifeſt; it became him to bring things into order again by ſuch a method, as ſhould manifeſt his hatred of that diſorder ſin had introduced into the World, and how ſtrict a Guardian he would be of the eternal order of things, things, and of thoſe ſacred Laws whereby he governs the World, Heb. 2. 10. It became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many ſons to glory, to make the captain of their ſalvation perfect through ſuffering. As God had made all things for his glory, ſo it was fit his Son, becoming the head of the World, ſhould be put in ſuch a poſture, as to ſhow forth the glory of God in the moſt illuſtrious manner. Now in the ſufferings of Chriſt, the juſtice of God flames more bright than it could in any Creature, and ſhows it ſelf inflexible againſt ſin; the treaſures of his Grace are wider open'd, than could be in any other act; and his wiſdom ſparkles more glorioufly in bringing men to glory by puniſhment: And ſince he made all things, and that for himſelf, it became him after the apoſtaſie of man, and the defacing the Creation, to reſtore things in ſuch a way as might conduce moſt to his own glory and the happineſs of the Creature.

4. Propoſition. Chriſt only was fit to be this Sacrifice. Whatſoever any Creature could have done, had been a debt of duty, and that could not have made a compenſation for a debt of Rebellion; whatſoever a meer Creature could do, was by the gift of God, and therefore could not merit any thing at the hand of God; whatſoever is meritorious, muſt be our own, as well as that which is not due. Beſides, from any other hand God would have received leſs than the offence merited, at the beſt it would have been but a feigned and partial ſatisfaction, which had not been congruous to the wiſdom and juſtice of God, ſince he determin'd it neceſſary to have a Sacrifice. But Chriſt in his Divine Nature was equal with God, Phil. 2. 6. and therefore in his Perſon was anſwerable to the dignity of the Perſon offended; and as he was in the form of a ſervant, and innocent, he offer'd that which was not due from himſelf, and upon his own account to God; for though as a Creature he was bound to the obedience of the Precepts of the Law, yet as an innocent Creature he was not oblig'd to the penalties of the Law, ſuffering was in no wiſe due upon his own account. And he was without blemiſh; had he been a criminal, he could not have been a remedy. He had alſo an alliance with both parties, he could treat with God, as partaking of his glory, and be a Sacrifice for man, as partaking of the infirmities of his nature; he had a Body to bear the ſtroke due to a victim, and a Divine Nature to ſuſtain him under it; he had a Humane Nature to offer as a Sacrifice, and a Divine Nature to render it valuable, and infinitely meritorious; being God and Man, he wanted not a fitneſs to accompliſh ſo great an undertaking. If he had not been Man, he could not have been a Sacrifice, and if he had not been God, he could not have been a remedy.

5. It was neceſſary, in regard of his office of Prieſthood, that he ſhould be a Sacrifice. He was conſtituted as a Prieſt for ever by an oath, Pſal. 110. 4. Now he could not be a Prieſt without a Sacrifice, a Prieſt and a Sacrifice are relatives, Heb. 5. 1. Every high Prieſt taken from among men, is ordain'd for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and ſacrifices for ſins. 'Tis therefore of neceſſity, that this man have ſomething to offer, Heb. 8. 3. As he was a Prophet, he was to have a Doctrine to teach; as a King, he was to have Subjects to govern; as a Prieſt, he was to have a Sacrifice to offer; as he was a Prophet, he was to deliver ſomething from God to men; as he was a Prieſt, he was to preſent ſomething for man to God; as a Prophet, he was to teach men obedience to God; as a Prieſt, he was to make God propitious to men; that which he was to offer muſt be expiatory, that is the proper notion of a Sacrifice; the other offerings are termed gifts. If he had offered the blood of Bulls and Goats, we had been in the ſame caſe we were in before; the inſufficiency of them had not been remov'd by the dignity of the offerer; they could never in their own nature be proportion'd to the dignity of the wrong'd Soveraign, or be adequate to the puniſhment the criminal had deſerv'd. The impoſſibility of their taking away ſin is poſitively aſſerted, Heb. 10. 4. The tranſcendent excellency of the Prieſt could never alter the diſproportion between the juſtice of God provok'd by ſin, and the Death of the miſerable Beaſt for it; though the Perſon offering had been greater, the thing offer'd had been the ſame; beſides, the offending nature had not ſuffered, but a nature inferior to it. They muſt have been always offered, the repetition of them muſt have been continued, and had that been a proper imployment for the Son of God, to have been always imbruing his hands in the bloud of Animals? But a Sacrifice muſt be offer'd by him (if he did not offer one, he was no Prieſt) and none but himſelf was a Sacrifice worthy to be offer'd by ſo great a Prieſt. He offered but once, and it was himſelf he offer'd, Heb. 7. 27. And this was ſo ſpotleſs, Heb. 9. 14. and of ſo ſweet-ſmelling ſavour, Eph. 5. 2. that it need not again be repeated, Heb. 9. 28. His unblemiſht Soul was made an offering for ſin, Iſai. 53. 10. For being a Prieſt of another kind than the legal Prieſts, he muſt have a Sacrifice of another kind.

6. Propoſition. Jeſus Chriſt then was a Sacrifice in his humane Nature. To this end a body was prepared for him to be ſubſtituted in the place of thoſe Sacrifices wherein God had no pleaſure, Heb. 10. 5. Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but a body haſt thou prepared me. Cited out of Pſal. 40. 6. Mine ears haſt thou opened [as ſome think figuratively, the ear being taken for the whole body, becauſe obedience is learned by the ear, the inſtrument of hearing the will of another]. The will of God was, that he ſhould be an offering in this body, Heb. 10. 10. By which will we are ſanctified through the offering of the body of Chriſt once for all. And his Soul was an offering for ſin, Iſai. 53. 10. The firſt promiſe evidenced, that though the ſeed of the Woman ſhould tear up the Empire of the Devil, which by the Law he had over ſinners, yet it ſhould be by the ſuffering ſomething from him, by having his heel bruiſed. There was an obedience to the Law to be perform'd, without which he had not been capable of being a Sacrifice; the penalty of the Law to be endur'd, without which he could not be an actual Sacrifice. Neither of thoſe could be but in the humane Nature: obedience to the Law is not conſiſtent with the Soveraignty of God; according to his Divine Nature he was under no Law: Suffering was impoſſible to the Deity, 'tis the property of God to be immutable and impaſſible. His humane Nature therefore was the Sacrifice; for as he was made of a Woman, whereby he took our Nature, as he was made under the Law, whereby he ſubjected himſelf to our obedience, he redeemed us from under the Law, from our condemnation, Galat. 4. 5. He that was to break the Serpents head, i. e. to diſſolve the power, which, as an Executioner, he had from an offended God, was to be the ſeed of the Woman. And this he effected by his Death and bloudy Sacrifice, appeaſing the wrath of God, and thereby deſtroying the power of the Jailor, which he obtained by the entrance of ſin and the Curſe of the Law, Heb. 2. 14. Through death he deſtroyed him that had the power of death, i. e. the Devil. This Sacrifice was both of Soul and Body, as the threatning was, In the day thou eateſt thou ſhalt dye the death, i. e. be ſubject to the death and condemnation both of Soul and Body. As the reward of goodneſs reſpects the entire man compoſed of ſoul and body, ſo doth the puniſhment of ſin, which hath corrupted one as well as the other. The Sacrifice therefore to be offer'd for the appeaſing that wrath, and removing that Curſe, was to conſiſt both of ſoul and body.

Owen againſt Biddle, p. 477.

7. Propoſition. That whereby this Sacrifice was ſanctified, was the Divine Nature. Every Sacrifice was ſanctified by the Altar, Mat. 23. 19. [* There muſt be ſomething to add an infinite value to the ſufferings of his Humanity, which could be nothing but the Divine Nature, and union with it. Nothing but that which is infinite, can confer an infinite value on that which is finite. The infiniteneſs of dignity reſides in the Divine Nature and Eſſence, and the infiniteneſs of dignity is as incommunicable as the infiniteneſs of Eſſence. For it hath its root and foundation in the infiniteneſs of Being, and the one is but the reflection of the other. 'Tis impoſſible to add a dignity without limits, but one muſt attribute an Eſſence without bounds, as it is impoſſible that any thing can poſſeſs the luſtre and enlivening virtue of the Sun but the Sun it ſelf.] The humane Nature ſuffer'd, and the Divine Nature ſanctified the Humanity, and by reaſon of this admirable Union, and the reflexion of the Divinity upon the Humanity, what was done to the humane Nature upon the Croſs, is aſcrib'd to the whole Perſon. They crucified the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. 2. 8. And God purchaſed the Church with his own bloud. It was this made his ſufferings acceptable to God, whoſe Juſtice was to be ſatisfied; and efficacious for man, whoſe happineſs and commerce with God were to be reſtor'd, and his indigencies to be ſupplied. Thus ſome interpret Heb. 9. 14. Through the eternal Spirit he offered himſelf to God, underſtanding by eternal Spirit his Deity; not that he ſuffer'd in his Divine Nature, but by virtue of that preſented himſelf to his Father a moſt acceptable Sacrifice. So that he had a humane Nature to ſerve for a Sacrifice, and an eternal ſpirit or divine nature, wherein he ſubſiſted, from whence that Sacrifice deriv'd an infinite dignity. As Gold which hath a luſtre of it ſelf, hath a greater when the Sun ſhines full upon it. We may ſee here how Chriſt was a Prieſt, Sacrifice, Altar, in ſeveral reſpects; a Prieſt in his Perſon, a Sacrifice in his Humanity, the Altar in his Divinity. He was the Offerer and the Sacrifice; both are expreſt, Eph. 5. 2. He offer'd up himſelf. Active as a Prieſt, paſſive as a Victim; as one, offering; as the other, offered. Upon this account of his bloud being offer'd by his perſon, he is called God in the act of oblation of his bloud for the redemption of the Church, Act. 20. 28. which he, referring to God, hath purchas'd with his own bloud. The Jews and Souldiers were not the Prieſts, as ſome affirm. They were the inſtruments of ſlaying him, but not with the intention of a Sacrifice. They were inſtruments in it, but could not force him to it. His Death was intended by them; his Death as a Sacrifice intended by himſelf; his laying down his Life was of himſelf, John 20. 18. which is not meant barely of his Death, but of his Death as reſpecting his Sheep, v. 15. and indeed unleſs it had been voluntary, it had not been ſavoury.

8. Propoſition. Upon the Sacrifice of Chriſt, all his other ſacerdotal acts depend, and from thence they receive their validity for us. 'Tis fit therefore we ſhould well underſtand and often conſider this Sacrifice, which is the foundation of all our Peace and Comfort in reference to God. This was the chief thing God ey'd in the firſt Declaration of him, Gen. 3. 15. in the Serpents bruiſing his Heel; nothing but this ſpoken of. His Reſurrection was firſt repreſented in the ſafety of Iſaac after he was deſign'd to Death, and other things not till after that ſucceſſively; God making the light to dawn upon them by degrees.

(1.) This was the ground of his aſcenſion and entrance into Heaven as a Prieſt. The High Prieſt was not to enter within the Vail without bloud: what was in the Type, was to be anſwered in the Antitype. An Expiatory Sacrifice was neceſſary to precede his Aſcenſion to Heaven; the Sacrifice muſt be offer'd upon the Earth, as the legal Sacrifices were without, (Heaven was no place for ſlaughter) and with this bloud he was to enter: Heavens Gates had been ſhut againſt him without it. Death was the penalty threatned, if the legal High Prieſt ventur'd to ſtep into the holy of holies without bloud. The Apoſtle argues from this Heb. 9. 7. into the ſecond went the High Prieſt alone once every year, not without bloud, which he offer'd for himſelf, and for the errors of the people, and v. 25. According to this Type, Chriſt by his own bloud enter'd once into the holy place; how and in what order? after he had obtain'd redemption for us, Heb. 9. 12. which is aſcrib'd to his Death, v. 15. His entrance into Heaven, and what he doth for us there, is laid upon the account of his Death as a Sacrifice upon the Earth; by virtue of which he went to Heaven to preſent it to God, and apply it to us. And beſides, all his Royalty and Power, whereby we have ſecurity and protection from him, depends upon this; for it is becauſe of that obedience to bloud and death which he render'd to God, that he hath given him a name above every name, and advanc'd him to a Soveraign Power, Phil. 2. 8, 9. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him: wherefore, referring to his Death, v. 8.

(2.) This is the foundation of his interceſſion. [* There are two functions of Chriſt's Prieſthood, Oblation and Interceſſion: they are both join'd together, but one as precedent to the other. The legal High Prieſt, when he had firſt cut the throat of the Sacrifice without, (upon the day of the Anniverſary Sacrifice) was not eſteem'd by that act to have compleated his propitiation till he had enter'd into the Sanctuary, and ſprinkled the bloud of the Sacrifice with his Finger; ſo the propitiation made by our Redeemer, was not fully compleat, till he enter'd into Heaven to exerciſe his Interceſſion.] Yet the oblation precedes the interceſſion, and the interceſſion could not be without the oblation. It was with the bloud of the victim, and no other bloud, he was to enter. Without the oblation he would have had nothing to preſent in his interceſſion. They are placed in this order by the Apoſtle,

* Amyraut, Serm. ſur Heb. 9. p. 187.

Apoſtle, 1 Joh. 2. 1, 2. He is firſt a Sacrifice for propitiation, then an Advocate for interceſſion. What he doth as an Advocate, is grounded upon what he did as a Sacrifice; and were it not ſo, the Apoſtles arguing would not be valid, who placeth our Salvation by the life of Chriſt, upon our reconciliation by the death of Chriſt, Rom. 5. 10. Indeed he could not have been admitted according to the Type, as an Advocate, but as being the High Prieſt, and a High Prieſt he could not have been without a Sacrifice.

(3.) This is the foundation of all the grace any have. The conveyance of all the gracious love of God is through this Chanel. In redemption by his bloud, the riches of the Grace of God abounded, and that with the marks of the higheſt wiſdom, Eph. 1. 7, 8. All had laid buried from the view of man, and the fruition of men, without this Sacrifice. This did commend his love as well as ſatisfy his juſtice. His wrath had not been appeas'd, nor his Grace drawn out to us without it; nor could the Redeemer lay any claim to any grace and mercy, for thoſe for whom he came, unleſs he had ſuffer'd for them as well as taken fleſh for them. His offering himſelf * precedes his having a Seed. The being and beauty of his Seed depend upon the efficacy of his meritorious Sacrifice. The offering his Soul goes before the Pardon of our ſin. The payment of the ranſome before the ſprinkling it on us; the ſealing the Covenant before the making good the Covenant; his ſufferings before his triumph, and the ſtreams of his bloud before the treaſures of his Grace. Upon the account of this Sacrifice we enjoy the preſence of God, protection againſt the Enemies of our Salvation, and receive the bleſſings neceſſary for our Souls. By all this it appears, that Chriſt is a Sacrifice. This was his intent in coming. His Death as a Sacrifice was his intention in the aſſumption of our fleſh; the Prophecies predicted it, the Types repreſented it; this he purſued, for this he thirſted. The accompliſhment of this fiery Baptiſm was the matter of his longing, his thoughts were never off from it, his will ſhrunk not from it; when his humane will ſhewed ſome reluctance, it quickly return'd to its fixedneſs: nothing could deter him, nothing could divert him. When he undertook to be Mediator, he undertook to be a Sacrifice, as a thing neceſſarily annext to that office for the honour of Gods Juſtice, and the preſervation of the rights of his Sacred Law. Upon which account, when the Apoſtle ſpeaks of this Mediator, he adds with the ſame breath, who gave himſelf a ranſome for all, 1 Tim. 2. 5, 6. After the title of Mediator follows the blood of ſprinkling, Heb. 12. 24. A Mediator he was by means of his death, Heb. 9. 15. 'Tis with good reaſon therefore, that in our Creed there is ſo quick a paſſage from the Nativity of Chriſt to his Paſſion, without any mention of the acts of his Life, becauſe he was incarnate, that he might be Crucified.

* Iſa. 53. 10, 11, 12.

The Eſſence of a Sacrifice conſiſted,

[1.] In the ſlaying or deſtroying it. [2.] In the offering it to God. Both were done in Chriſt.

[1.] In the ſlaying or deſtroying it. The ſhedding of the Bloud, the ſeat of the Spirits, which are the inſtruments of action, was neceſſary to an Expiatory Sacrifice. The Scape-goat indeed is call'd a Sacrifice, Levit. 16. 5. which was not ſlain in the Temple, nor burnt, but ſent into the Wilderneſs; and, as the Jews tell us, deſtroyed by being thrown down a Rock, to which purpoſe men were appointed, who were to give notice of it by ſome ſignals from Hill to Hill, at a convenient diſtance, before which notice, the Congregation at Jeruſalem did not diſſolve. But the other Expiatory Sacrifices were devour'd by Fire; Fire being the higheſt repreſentation in the World, of the Juſtice of God. The ſufferings of Chriſt extended to Soul and Body. He was ſcorcht by the wrath of God, Pſal. 22. His ſoul pour'd out to death, Iſa. 53. 12. alluding to the bloud of the Sacrifices pour'd out; and his humane nature diſſolv'd by the ſeparation of the Soul and Body.

[2.] In the offering it to God. Oblation to God was a main part of a Sacrifice, ſo Chriſt offer'd himſelf to God, Eph. 5. 2. To God as eſſentially conſider'd, whereby the whole right of Rectorſhip and Dominion was acknowledg'd belonging to God. Had the Death of Chriſt been only for Example, it had not been offer'd to God who was not capable of any Example to be ſet him. It being therefore offer'd to him, manifeſts it to be a Sacrifice.

Doct.

Doct. 3. CHrist was sacrificed for us. ὑπὲρ when joyned with suffering for another, always signifies in anothers stead and place; 'tis so used Rom. 5. 7. For a good man some would even dare to dye, i. e. instead of a good man, to free him from the Death he was design'd to, not only for his sake; so Galat. 3. 13. He was made a curse for us, i. e. in our stead, suffering the curse due to us for our sins. He is called the Lamb of God, in regard of Gods designation of him; our Lamb, our Passeover, in regard of his substitution in our place; as he dyed to appease the wrath of God, his Death referred to the justice of God; as that justice flam'd out against us, his Death referred to us; he was a screen between the heat of wrath, and the sufferings of the Creature; a Mediator, respecting God for his satisfaction and glory, respecting us for our reparation and Grace.

This will be cleared if we consider,

[1.] That Christ could not be a Sacrifice for himself. The Messiah was to be cut off, but not for himself, Dan. 9. 26. he needed no Sacrifice for himself as the other High Priests did; they were sinners, he was harmless; they being encompast with infirmities, needed, or ought to offer Sacrifices for themselves, Heb. 5. 2, 3. He was a Lamb without blemish, 1 Pet. 1. 19. who knew no sin, nor was guile found in his mouth, nor did he ever do any thing displeasing to his Father, John 8. 29. He needed no glory to be purchas'd for him, for he was from eternity happy in the same essence with the Father, being God blessed for ever over all, Rom. 9. 5. having the command over all, and wanting nothing to a perfect blessedness. The Sacrifices which were Types of him, could not be for themselves; they were not capable of sinning; as wanting a rational nature, and therefore a sinful nature. A Beast was not capable of sin, because not capable of a Law, and therefore its blood was not due for any sin of its own. Christ had no sin, none actual, no guile was found in his mouth, 1 Pet. 2. 22. nor original, that was stopt by his extraordinary Conception by the Holy Ghost, which rendred him immaculate.

[2.] Sacrifices implyed this. They had a relation to the offerer, and were substituted in his place. The substitution of the Sacrifice in the place of the offenders, was always suppos'd by the Heathen; hence did the offering of humane victims arise, their opinion being, that they could not present to God a nobler Creature in their stead, than one of their own nature. The notion of all Sacrifices was, that they were in the place of a sinner to appease the offending Deity, and exempt the guilty person from punishment. And the actions about the Jewish Sacrifices manifested this; the offerer laid his hand upon the head of the Beast, signifying by that ceremony its consecration to God, and owning the translation of his guilt upon that Creature, and putting it in his place to undergo the punishment deserved by his sin, Levit. 4. 24, 29. And in this action of laying on hands, both hands, and with all their strength, as the Jews tell us, confession of sin was made by the presenter of the Sacrifice, which signified also the disburdening of his guilt upon the head of the victim. By those actions was manifested a transferring of sin from the offender to the Sacrifice, and of the Death due to the criminal in like manner. Besides, the pouring out of the bloud, wherein the Soul of the Beast was supposed to be, was destin'd for the expiation of the sin of the soul of the offerer, Levit. 17. 11, 14. not that the blood is properly the Soul, but because the vital Spirits which are the instruments of action, and conveying the virtue of the Soul to particular members, are seated in the blood.

[3.] The whole Oeconomy of Christ is expresst in the whole Scripture to have a relation to us. All things preparatory to his sufferings were for us; some were first given to him, before he was given for them, John 17. 9. he took flesh for us, Isai. 9. 6. Unto us a child is born; for us he had a fulness of grace in his humane nature, John 1. 16. for our sakes he did dedicate himself, that we might be sanctified, John 17. 19. for us he gave himself, Gal. 2. 20. in the very moment of his sufferings our iniquities were laid upon him, that health by his stripes might be derived to us. Christ was a common Person for us, as the scape-goat was common to the whole congregation, Levit. 16. 21. representing all of them; Christ was a common Person for us as Adam was, to whom, in this regard, he is compared,

Rom. 5. 14. Who is, i. e. Adam, the figure of him that was to come. The Apoſtle compares one Adam and one Chriſt, he illuſtrates the condition and the actions of the one, by the condition and actions of the other, what hapned to us by Adam, and what hapned to us by Chriſt. This Typicalneſs of Adam cannot be in any other regard than as he was a common perſon, repreſenting all that were in his loins by natural generation. In this regard Chriſt is called the ſecond man, 1 Cor. 15. 47. The firſt man is of the earth earthly, the ſecond man is the Lord from heaven. Not that he was the ſecond man born in the world (for many ages were run before his Incarnation) but the ſecond common root in the world. As when Adam, being the firſt root of mankind in a natural way, fell, the Curſe came upon him and all his poſterity, and the ſtanding puniſhments pronounc'd againſt him did reach, and were meant of all his poſterity, Gen. 3. 19. not only of Adam perſonal, but of Adam as a repreſentative, and ſo of all thoſe who were not yet born into the world: As we ſinned in Adam as a common root of natural generation, ſo we were all ſacrificed in Chriſt as a common head of all that are in him by a ſpiritual Union; the one merited death and damnation for all that deſcend from him; the other life and ſalvation for all that believe in him.

[4] Our ſins were imputed to him as to a Sacrifice. Chriſt the juſt is put in the place of the unjuſt to ſuffer for them, 1 Pet. 3. 18. Chriſt is ſaid to bear ſin, as a Sacrifice bears ſin, Iſai. 53. 10, 12. His Soul was made an Offering for it. But ſin was ſo laid upon the Victims, as that it was imputed to them in a judicial account, according to the Ceremonial Law, and typically expiated by them. Chriſt had not taken away our ſins as Mediator, had he not born the puniſhment of them; as a Surety, He was made ſin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. and he bare our ſins, which is evident by the kind of death he ſuffer'd, not only ſharp and ſhameful, but accurſed, having a ſenſe of Gods wrath linkt to it.

(1.) It cannot be underſtood of the infection of ſin. The filth of our Nature was not tranſmitted to him. Though he was made ſin, yet he was not made a ſinner by any infuſion or tranſplantation of ſin into his Nature. It was impoſſible his Holineſs could be defiled with our filth.

(2.) But that our ſin was the meritorious cauſe of his puniſhment. All thoſe phraſes, that Chriſt dyed for our ſins, 1 Cor. 15. 3. and was delivered to death for our offences, Rom. 4. 23. clearly import ſin to be the meritorious cauſe of the puniſhment Chriſt endur'd: ſin cannot be ſaid to be the cauſe of puniſhment, but by way of merit. * If Chriſt had not been juſt, he had not been capable of ſuffering for us; had we not been unjuſt, we had not merited any ſuffering for our ſelves, much leſs for another. Our unrighteouſneſs put us under a neceſſity of a Sacrifice, and his righteouſneſs made him fit to be one. What was the cauſe of the deſert of ſuffering for our ſelves, was the meritorious cauſe of the ſufferings of the Redeemer after he put himſelf in our place. The ſin of the offerer merited the death of the Sacrifice preſented in his ſtead.

* Ball on the Covenant, p. 278.

(3.) Our ſins were charged upon him in regard of their guilt. Our ſins are ſo imputed to him, as that they are not imputed to us, 2 Cor. 5. 19. and not imputed to us, becauſe he was made a curſe for us, Galat. 3. 13. He bore our ſins, as to the puniſhment, is granted. If he were an Offering for them, they muſt in a judicial way be charged upon him. If by being made ſin, be underſtood a Sacrifice for ſin (which indeed is the true intent of the word ſometimes in Scripture) ſin was then legally tranſferr'd on the Antitype, as it was on the Types in the Jewiſh Service by the Ceremony of laying on of hands, and confeſſing of ſin, after which the thing ſo dedicated became accurſed, and though it was in it ſelf innocent, yet was juridically and ſubſtitutivè nocent. In the ſame manner was Chriſt accounted; as on the contrary, Believers are perſonally nocent, but by virtue of the ſatisfaction of this Sacrifice imputed to them, they are judicially counted innocent. Chriſt, who never ſinned, is put in ſuch a ſtate as if he had; and we who have always ſinned, are put into ſuch a ſtate by him, as if we never had. As we are made righteous in him, ſo he was made ſin for us. Now as juſtifying righteouſneſs is not inherent in us, but imputed to us; ſo our condemning ſin was not inherent in Chriſt, but imputed to him. There would elſe be no conſiſtency in the Antitheſis, 2 Cor. 5. 21. He hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin.

* Turretin.

He

He knew no sin, yet he became sin. It seems to carry it further than only the bearing the punishment of sin. He was judicially charged in our stead with the guilt of sin. Our iniquities were laid upon him, Isa. 53. 6. He had spoken v. 5. of his bearing the chastisement of our peace, the punishment of our sin, and then seems to declare the ground of that, which consisted in Gods imputation of sin to him in laying upon him the iniquities of us all. What iniquities? Our goings astray, our turnings every one to his own way. He made him to be that sin which he knew not, but he knew the punishment of sin, the knowledge of that was the end of his coming; He came to lay down his Life a ransome for many. He knew not sin by an experimental inherency, but he knew it by judicial imputation. He knew it not in regard of the spots, but he knew it in regard of the guilt following upon the judgment of God. He was righteous in his person, but not judicially, or juridically pronounc'd righteous as our surety, till after his Sacrifice, when he was taken from prison and from judgment, Isa. 53. 8. Till he had paid the Debt, he was accounted as a Debtor to God.

[1.] The Apostle distinguisheth his second coming from his first by this, Heb. 9. 28. He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. 'Tis not meant of the filth of sin, for so he appear'd at first without sin; but without the guilt of sin which he had at his first coming deriv'd, or taken upon himself to satisfy for, and remove from the Sinner. He shall appear without sin to be imputed, without punishment to be inflicted. At the time of his first coming he appear'd with sin, with sin charg'd upon him, as our surety arrested for our criminal Debts; he pawn'd his Life for the lives which we had forfeited, and suffer'd the penalty due by Law, that we might have a deliverance free by Grace. In his first coming he represented our persons as an Undertaker for us, our sins were therefore laid upon him; in his second coming he represents God, as a Vicegerent, and so no sin can be charg'd upon him.

[2.] He cannot well be suppos'd to suffer for our sins, if our sins in regard of their guilt be not supposed to be charg'd upon him. How could he dye, if he were not a reputed Sinner? Had he not first had a relation to our sin, he could not in justice have undergone our punishment. He must in the order of justice be suppos'd a Sinner really, or by imputation; really he was not, by imputation then he was. How can we conceive he should be made a Curse for us, if that which made us accursed, had not been first charg'd upon him? 'Tis as much against divine justice to inflict punishment where there is no sin, as it is to spare an Offender who hath committed a Crime, or to clear the guilty which by no means God will do, Exod. 34. 7. The consideration of a crime precedes the Sentence, either upon an Offender or his Surety. We cannot conceive how divine justice should inflict the punishment, had it not first consider'd him under guilt. Though the first designation of the Redeemer to a Suretyship or Sacrifice for us, was an act of Gods Soveraignty; yet the inflicting punishment after that designation and our Saviours acceptation of it, was an act of Gods justice, and so declar'd to be Rom. 3. 26. to declare his righteousness that he might be just; that he might declare his Justice in Justification, his Justice to his Law. Can this highest Declaration of Justice be founded upon an unjust act? Had that been Justice or Injustice to Christ, to lay his wrath upon the Son of his love, one whose person was always dear to him, always pleased him, had he not stood as a Sinner juridically in our stead, and suffer'd that sin, which was the ruin of Mankind, to be cast with all the weight of it, upon his innocent shoulders? After by his own act he had engag'd for our Debt, God in justice might demand of him every farthing, which without that undertaking, and putting himself in our stead, could not be done: Which submission of his, and complyance with it, is expressed twice, Isa. 53. 7. By his not opening his mouth; and no wrong is done to a voluntary Undertaker. Add this too. 'Tis from his standing in our stead as guilty, that the benefit of his Death doth redound to us. His Death had had no relation to us, had not our sin been juridically adjudg'd to be his, nor can we challenge an Acquittance at the hands of God for our Debts, if they were not our Debts that he paid on the Cross. He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, Isa. 53. 5. The laying hands upon the head of the sin-offering, was necessary to make it a Sacrifice; for the offender, without which ceremony it might have been a ſlain, but not a ſacrificed Beaſt. The transferring our iniquities upon him, muſt in ſome way precede his being bruiſed for them, which could not be any other way than by imputation, whereby he was conſtituted by God a debtor in our ſtead, to bear the puniſhment of our ſin; he being made ſin for us, our ſin was in a ſort made his; he was made ſin without ſin, he knew the guilt, without knowing the filth, he felt the puniſhment, without being touch'd with the pollution. Since Death was the wages of ſin, and paſſed as a penalty for a violated Law, Rom. 6. 23. it could not righteouſly be inflicted on him, had not ſin firſt been imputed to him. In his own Perſon he was in the arms of his Fathers Love; as he repreſented our ſinful Perſons, he felt the ſtrokes of his Fathers wrath.

* Turretin. (5.) The ſufferings of this Sacrifice are imputed unto us. * He took our ſins upon himſelf, as if he had ſinned, and gave us the benefit of his ſufferings, as if we had actually ſuffer'd and ſatisfied; he offered one Sacrifice for ſin for ever, Heb. 10.12. i.e. to take away ſin, if you compare it with v. 11. to remove the wrath due to us by reaſon of iniquity, was the end he aimed at. As our ſins were imputed to him for puniſhment, ſo his ſufferings are imputed to us for acceptation, Eph. 1. 6, 7. Who hath made us accepted in the beloved, in whom we have redemption through his blood. Chriſt had the relation of an undertaker for us, and we the relation of debtors to God; our debts then being charged upon him, his payment muſt be imputed to us; the ſurety and the principal are legally regarded as one Perſon, ſo are the repreſentative and the Perſons repreſented by him. As Adam and all mankind were as one Perſon, and as all Iſrael were called Jacob from the common root of them, ſo Chriſt and Believers are as one Perſon, and what he did, is as if a Believer himſelf did it, as the ſuffering of the Sacrifice was accepted in lieu of the life of the ſinner. By the ſtripes of our Sacrifice we are healed, Iſai. 53. 5. an exchange is made, ſtripes to him, health to us; he was made a curſe, that we might be freed from the curſe, Galat. 3. 13. The firſt thing riſing upon Faith from the ſufferings of Chriſt, is a non-imputation of ſin, 2 Cor. 5. 21. not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them; they are not imputed to a Believer, becauſe born by the undertaker for him. The main end of his Death as a Sacrifice, was to communicate a righteouſneſs to us, Galat. 2. 21. If righteouſneſs come by the Law, then Chriſt is dead in vain; if this were the main or only thing that would make the Death of Chriſt a meer vanity, then the great and main end of his Death, was to procure a compleat righteouſneſs for us, a righteouſneſs whereby he was to be glorified, a righteouſneſs whereby we might be juſtified, his ſufferings procur'd it, his reſurrection enſur'd it, Rom. 4. 25. All the World ſtands guilty before God, cannot preſent God with a righteouſneſs of their own commenſurate to the Law; not one act any man can do can bear proportion to it, all ſtrength to do any thing ſutable to it was loſt in Adam. Since no righteouſneſs of our own can juſtifie, it muſt be the righteouſneſs of the Son of God, which muſt be imputed to us in the ſame manner our ſins were imputed to him; as it is accepted by God for us, ſo it is accounted by God to us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. He hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. Sin was in us, but charged upon Chriſt, righteouſneſs is in Chriſt, and imputed to us; therefore the Apoſtle adds, him, to ſignifie, that it is not our own righteouſneſs but anothers, not inherent in us, but imputed to us.

The redounding of theſe ſufferings to us, ariſeth,

1. From the dignity of the perſon undertaking to be a Sacrifice for us, and the union of our nature with his. He aſſum'd our nature, that he might be a common Perſon, and ſtand in our ſtead; he had not been a fit repreſentative of us, without it. But the main conſideration is, the fulneſs of the God-head dwelling in him bodily Coloſſ. 2. 9. and his being the man Gods fellow, Zach. 13. 7. whereby what he did and ſuffered in our ſtead, became, according to the value of the Perſon performing it, infinitely meritorious for thoſe for whom he ſuffered, being infinitely more than all the obedience of Men and Angels, and more meritorious of happineſs, than ſin could be of miſery. As infinite ſin deſerves an infinite puniſhment, becauſe it receives its aggravation from the dignity of the Perſon againſt whom it is committed; ſo the ſufferings of Chriſt, though finite in regard of his Humane Nature, received an infinite value from the infiniteness of his Person, equivalent to the debts of all that come to him. Sin is finite in regard of the subject, infinite in regard of the great God against whom it is; the sufferings of Christ are infinite in regard of the subject, and infinitely please the Governour of the World, unto whom the offering is made, and therefore are of more force to convey a righteousness and beauty to the Creature, than sin is to convey guilt and filth; though sin abounded, grace did much more abound, Rom. 5.

2. From union with this infinite Person by Faith. All Believers have a Communion with him in his Death, 2 Cor. 5. 14. If one dyed for all, then were all dead. All were accounted as dying and bearing the wrath of God, by Gods reckoning that Death to them. As the sin of Adam is imputed to all his natural posterity, as being one with him in his loins, so are the sufferings of Christ imputed to all his spiritual seed, Rom. 5. 18. as being one with him in a real union. Hence we are said to be crucified with Christ, Rom. 6. 6. and risen with him, Eph. 2. 6. as in the Person representing us; as if the same wrath endured by Christ had been endured by us, and the same acquittance given to Christ, had been given to us by God together with him; for all his meritorious passions were endured by him in the name of his Elect, and for their use, and are fully belonging in the fruit and benefit of them to every Believer. What Christ as a Mediator did personally do, redounds in the benefit of it to Christ mystical, and is reckon'd to every member of his Body; we are made, we, and every one of us that believe, are made the righteousness of God in him. Well then, Christ bearing our iniquities, is the cause of our justification, Isai. 53. 11. By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justifie many, for he shall bear their iniquities. If our sin had not been imputed to him, his righteousness could not be accounted to us; the commutation is clear, he first bears our iniquities, that we might partake of his righteousness.

Use.

If Christ be a Sacrifice,

1. We may see the miserable blindness of the Jews in expecting the Messiah as a temporal Conqueror. The Jews wait for such an one to this day. Though the promises represent spiritual deliverances under temporal grandeurs, not to raise carnal hopes but spiritual apprehensions; yet are there not multitudes of places which speak of sufferings, misery, death? Is not his heel to be bruised, his garments to be parted, a restoration to be made by him of what he took not away? Are not the Sacrifices of the Law to be perfected, his Soul to be made an offering for sin, wounds made for transgression, his hands and his feet to be pierc'd? It was not by the slaying the bodies of men, that he is to make reconciliation for the iniquities of men, Dan. 9. 24. How can he be a Conquerour of Kingdoms, who is to be cut off, and the City, where he was, to be destroyed, as with a flood, and the desolations of it to be determin'd? v. 25. כרת penally cut off, as it signifies, Levit. 17. 4. as one was cut off that had no sacrifice allowed for him. The right apprehensions of the Promises concerning the Messiah in the Old Testament, what he was to be, what he was to do, cannot let you be ignorant of him in the New. How do those poor People overturn at once the whole design of that Divine Law they seem to reverence in the highest degree? What blindness will seize upon the hearts of men, even under the Oracles of God, if the Spirit of God doth not vouchsafe to enlighten them? Own.

2. If Christ be a Sacrifice, it shews the necessity of a satisfaction to the Justice of God, and a higher satisfaction than men could perform. Bloud must satisfie Justice, and no bloud but that of the Son of God could be a sufficient and valuable propitiation. If meer mercy could or would have pardon'd, it might have done it with or without the bloud of the poor Creatures mangled under the Law. But alas! neither the bloud of those, nor the bloud of a rational Creature could take away sin. Less than death Justice could not demand, death was setled by the immediate order of God, as the penalty of the Law. The Law then after transgression could not be vindicated in its honour without death. A God of infinite goodness delights not in the shedding the bloud of his creatures, nor can we suppose him to be pleased pleaſed with the effuſion of the bloud of Animals. The inſtitution of the legal Sacrifices could not be exemplary to man. What virtue could the pangs of a dying beaſt repreſent to him? No other ends can be imagin'd but an acknowledgment of guilt, the deſert of ſin, the debt of death, the neceſſity of a higher ſatisfaction, and the raiſing them up to a faith in the promiſe of God, that another valuable Sacrifice ſhould be put in the room of the ſinner to take away that ſin, which the bloud of beaſts, and the eternal groans of men were not able to remove.

3. Chriſt as ſacrificed, is the true and immediate object of Faith. We are revolted from God, and are made uncapable of performing the terms of the firſt Covenant. The precepts of the Law are too holy for our corrupt nature, the penalties of the Law too grievous to be born by our feeble nature; a remedy muſt be lookedafter. When the venom of ſin begins to work in the conſcience, and the Thunder of the Law alarms it to Judgment; and the puniſhment due to ſin, is preſented in the horrors of it, the queſtion immediately is, whether there be any remedy? and where? How forgiveneſs of ſin is to be attain'd? The only remedy is propoſed in Chriſt, and Chriſt as a Sacrifice. 'Tis not Chriſt riſen, or aſcended, or exalted: not Chriſt only as the Son of God, or the head of Angels; not Chriſt as the Creator of the World, or by whom all things conſiſt; but Chriſt as anſwering the terms of the firſt Covenant, as diſarming Juſtice, and this he did as a Sacrifice. By this he bore the Curſe, by this he broke down the partition-wall, by this he joyn'd Apoſtate man and an offended God. This is that true Faith pitcheth on, daily revolves, and daily applies to. This is the firſt object of the Soul, Chriſt made ſin, Chriſt bearing the puniſhment, Chriſt ſubſtituted in the room of the offender. His Reſurrection and Aſcenſion come in afterward to aſcertain the comfort. But as his being a Sacrifice, is the foundation of his being an Advocate, a Prince, a Saviour to give repentance and remiſſion of ſins; ſo it is the foundation of peace in our ſelves. This is that which pacifies God, and only what pacifies God, can pacifie Conſcience. This Death as a Sacrifice purchaſed our comfort, becauſe it purchaſed the Comforter. Chriſt begg'd not the Spirit before he dyed, Joh. 16. 7. he aſſures them he could not come, unleſs himſelf went; and he could not have gone with any ſucceſs to Heaven, if he had not ſhed his bloud, Juſtice would have ſtopt his entrance, Luke 24. 26. Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered thoſe things, and to enter into his glory? Suffering was to precede his Glory. Beſides, our comfort lyes in his being an Advocate. But how is he an Advocate? With his Bloud in his hands. 'Tis by his Bloud he ſpeaks in Heaven, and by his Bloud Faith ſpeaks to God. He paid the debt in his ſuffering, and pleads the payment in his Glory. The payment went before the plea in order of Nature, and our eying the payment precedes our eying the plea in order of Faith. Both reſpect God as the Rector. Chriſt without his garments roul'd in bloud, could not be anſwerble to God, nor acceptable to a ſinner. Faith is therefore called faith in his bloud, Rom. 3. 25. As Faith is the inſtrument of Juſtification, ſo it muſt eye the cauſe of our Juſtification, and under that notion wherein it is the cauſe. And that is Chriſt as groaning and offering up himſelf to God a ranſom, a righteouſneſs for many. The Curſe upon Adam is the laſh wherewith an angry Conſcience ſcourgeth a ſinner. The freedom from this Curſe is only found in the vengeance God exacted of the Redeemer for the ſins of all that return to him by repentance. Both the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt concur to the ſame end, viz. our Juſtification, Rom. 14. 9. but in different manners, his Death as the meritorious cauſe, his Reſurrection as declarative of the ſufficiency of his Death to that end, that as the Son of God and ſurety of men, he had perform'd whatſoever he undertook in his being a Sacrifice. But the firſt act of relying Faith is about him as a bloudy Victim. As often as the Iſraelites were ſtung by the fiery Serpents, they were to look up for health to the Serpent lifted up, a Type and Emblem of the Death of Chriſt. Upon every ſin of a Believer, the Sacrifice is pleaded in Heaven by the Prieſt, and ought in the remembrance of it to be renewed in the repeated acts of our Faith.

4. 'Tis no true opinion that Chriſt dyed only for an example. Wounded he was for the tranſgreſſions in Iſaiah's time, when his example could reach only thoſe that came after him; but the credit of his ſufferings upon his Promiſe to undergo them, might, and did reach to the first ages of the World. The expressions in Isai. 53. sound his Death higher than a bare pattern, or a testimony to the truth. The notion of expiation of sin, was always implyed in the notion of a Sacrifice, even among the Heathens. When they parted with the deerest first-born of their Bodies to Moloch, it was not for an example, but for the sin of the soul, Micah 6. 6. As Christ was the Son of God sent, he was a testimony of the Love of God; as he was a Sacrifice, he was our ransome from the curse of the Law.

5. Comfort to every true Believer. He was sactificed for us: God counted him a sinner for our sakes, that he might count us righteous for his sake.

(1.) As Christ hath been sacrificed for them, so he has been accepted for them. He is no more to be made sin, iniquity no more to be charged upon him, his next appearance shall be without the imputation of sin, for the conferring salvation, Heb. 9. 28. with all the bonds of a Believers sins cancel'd. He is pronounc'd Gods righteous servant, and from this declaration of his righteousness, and the true and believing knowledge of it, doth our Justification arise, Isai. 53. 11. Had it not been a perfect Sacrifice, it could never have wrought such compleat effects, and for ever have perfected those that are sanctified, Heb. 10. 14. He is gone with the smoke of his Sacrifice to Heaven, and was well entertain'd, which is a signification of the compleatness and perfection of his righteousness for man, Joh. 16. 9, 10. The pure and piercing eye of Divine Justice could not perceive a spot in him. Had any blemish been, it could not have escap'd an infinite knowledge. Nor could the Justice of God, in turning over all the Registers of the debts owing from the Creatures, perceive one but might be cancel'd upon the value of this payment, if the Creature did not negligently or wilfully refuse his own delivery, and prefer his debts and captivity before it. It was a Sacrifice offer'd according to Gods heart, with which his Soul was infinitely well pleased. The person of the Son of God made every gaping wound, every panting groan, and doleful agony, grateful to God, and profitable for us. The Godhead united to the Manhood, put an unexpressible value upon every pang. Not that every pang, or the least drop of bloud was sufficient for our Redemption (the Law requir'd death, and death must be suffer'd) but all those passions preceding his death, were meritorious in conjunction with his death.

(2.) This Sacrifice unites all the Attributes of God together for a Believers interest. The floud-gates of Mercy are open'd, and the fire of Justice confin'd in its flames: the flames of the one center in Christ, that the streams of the other might flow down to us; rivers of Mercy quench not the flames of Justice, nor the flames of Justice suck up the rivers of Mercy. As the sacrificing Christ is a vengeance against sin, 'tis an act of Justice; as it is a means of remission of the sins of those for whom he was sacrificed, 'tis an act of Mercy to the Creature. Both Justice and Mercy joyn hands to help the fallen Creature up. God is just in being merciful, and merciful in being just; so that we well may cry aloud with the Psalmist, Psal. 116. 5. Gracious is the Lord and righteous. Justice struck the Sacrifice, that the streams of Mercy might have a fuller scope. Compassion helpt Justice to a satisfaction more honourable than could have been had from Creatures; and Justice helpt Mercy to a fuller and more illustrious exercise of it self, than ever it could have had without it. Justice is now a Second to Mercy, of an Antagonist it is become an Advocate. God must be unjust, if he be not merciful to a Believer. Since our High-Priest hath been faithful to God, God will not be unfaithful to him, or those for whom he offer'd up himself. Happy must he be, that hath Mercy supplicating, and Justice it self pleading for him.

(3.) This Sacrifice is of eternal virtue. The virtue of the Sacrifice is parallel to the Office of his Priesthood: a Priest and a Sacrifice are relatives. The immutable Oath then that constituted him a Priest for ever, settles for ever the value and virtue of the Sacrifice; for without a Sacrifice he could not be a Priest; his Office would expire, if the virtue of his Sacrifice did; they eternally live together in conjunction. 'Tis the bloud of an everlasting Covenant, Heb. 13. 20. 'Tis an everlasting Covenant, because an everlasting Bloud whereby 'twas setled. The ground of its prevalency is, that it was not the Sacrifice of a meer man, but of God, Heb. 9. 14.

(4.) The effects of this Sacrifice therefore are perfect, glorious, and eternal. 'Tis our deliverance from wrath, the ſcorchings of Hell, and terrors of puniſhment. The purity of this Sacrifice expiates the impurities of our ſervices. No ſin ſo great, but the value of this Sacrifice believ'd in, can anſwer it. The higheſt ſin is the tranſgreſſion of the Law, and this is the ſatisfaction of the whole penalty of the Law. Sin is an offence againſt God, and this Sacrifice is the higheſt pleaſure to him. None of our ſins can be ſo great as all thoſe that met upon the back of this innocent Lamb. Tis enough to croſs every Book of accounts; Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods Elect? 'Tis God that juſtifieth, and Chriſt that died, Rom. 8. 33, 34. There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt, becauſe he hath as a Sacrifice for ſin condemn'd ſin in the fleſh, Rom. 8. 1, 3. Not, no deſert of Condemnation; that there is: Not, no condemnation becauſe of ſomething done by themſelves; No, But becauſe of ſomething done by Chriſt, who hath obliterated the bloudy Roll of Sin and Curſes by his Bloud. God will not refuſe it to any that believingly plead it; he will not be unjuſt to the true value of it, nor to his own Ordination. If it be unrighteous in God to forget the labour of a Believers love, Heb. 6. 10. it will be ſo to forget the Obedience of his Son, and the perſon intereſted in it. God was not ſo ready to bruiſe him for us, but he will be as ready to apply the Plaiſter of his bloud to us.

How great then is the happineſs of a Believer on the account of this Sacrifice! Whatſoever is loſt by the ſin of the firſt Adam, is gain'd by the Sacrifice of the ſecond; with what boldneſs may we enter into the holieſt with this bloud of Jeſus in our hands and hearts! Heb. 10. 19.

6. We muſt then lay hold on this Sacrifice. The people were to be ſprinkled with the bloud of the Sacrifice, Exod. 24. 8. ſo muſt we with the bloud of our Lamb. Thus only can it ſave us, 1 Pet. 1. 2. Thus is our Saviour deſcrib'd by this part of his Office, Iſa. 52. 15. He ſhall ſprinkle many nations. Our guilt cannot look upon a conſuming fire without a propitiatory Sacrifice; our ſervices are blemiſht, ſo that they will rather provoke his juſtice than merit his mercy; we muſt have ſomething to put a ſtop to a juſt Fury, expiate an infinite guilt, and perfume our unſavoury Services. Here it is in Chriſt, but there muſt be Faith in us. Faith is as neceſſary by the Ordination of God in a way of inſtrumentality, as the grace of God in a way of efficiency, and the bloud of Chriſt in a way of meritoriouſneſs of our juſtification. All muſt concur, the will of God the offended Governour, the will of the Sacrificing Mediator, and the will of the Offender. This Will muſt be a real Will, an active operative Will, not a faint velleity. We muſt have a Faith to juſtify our perſons, and we muſt have an active ſincerity to juſtify the reality of our Faith. Chriſt was real in his Sacrifice, God was real in the acceptation of it, we muſt be real in believing it. Rocks and Mountains cannot ſecure them that neglect ſo great a Sacrifice, that regard this atoning bloud as an unholy thing. 'Tis as dreadful for men to have this Sacrifice ſmoaking againſt them, and this bloud calling for vengeance on them, as it is comfortable to have it pleaded for them, and ſprinkled on them. Why will any then deſpiſe and neglect a neceſſary ſoveraign remedy ready at hand? Is it excuſable, that when we ſhould have brought the Sacrifice our ſelves, or our ſelves have been the Sacrifice, we ſhould ſlight him who hath voluntarily been a Sacrifice for us, and cheriſh a Hell merited by our ſin, rather than accept of a righteouſneſs purchas'd at no leſs rate than the bloud of God? This Sacrifice is full of all neceſſary virtue to ſave us; but the bloud of it muſt be ſprinkled upon our Souls by Faith. Without this we ſhall remain in our ſins, under the wrath of God and Sword of Vengeance.

7. We muſt be Enemies to ſin, ſince Chriſt was a Sacrifice for it. Unleſs ſin die in us, we cannot have an evidence that this Sacrifice was ſlain for us. He that hath an intereſt in Chriſts bloud, muſt be planted into the likeneſs of his death, Rom. 6. 5. We are highly unjuſt, if we will not ſacrifice a beloved ſin for him, who ſacrific'd a precious life of more value than Heaven and Earth for us. We ſhould empty our ſelves of our filth, ſince he emptied himſelf of his glory. The very expreſſion Sacrific'd for us, carries a force and a ſpirit in it to animate us to this. We muſt be Friends to the duties God enjoins us. 'Tis diſingenuity to put him off with a

ſhred

ſhred of our Souls, or a grain of Service, who became a Holocauſt for us. Scanty Services are fit only for a ſcanty Sacrifice. As God ſhows in this Sacrifice his compaſſions to the Sinner, ſo he declares the certainty and terror of his penalties upon the obſtinate Rebel. If the Son of God, undertaking to be a Sacrifice, was not preſerved from death upon the account of his filiation; men cannot expect but to ſink under it upon the account of their Rebellion. Well then, Let us not look upon the leaſt ſin without horror, ſince 'tis a crime not to be expiated by any lower price than an infinite bloud. It ſhould cauſe us to mourn alſo for ſin. It was our unrighteouſneſs made Chriſts back and his Soul to ſuffer; he had never felt the wrath of his Father, if we had not broke the Law of his Father. When the Death of Chriſt, our Sacrifice, comes into our thoughts, the remembrance of our ſins ſhould bear it Company. We ſhould never conſider that Chriſt died, but we ſhould join alſo with ſorrow the conſideration of that for which he died.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE VOLUNTARINESS OF CHRISTS DEATH.

Ephes. 5. 2.

And walk in love, as Christ also has loved us, and has given himself for us, an offering, and a Sacrifice to God of a sweet smelling savour.

THE exhortation in this verse to a mutual love, depends upon what the Apostle had urged in the end of the former Chapter, where he had endeavoured to perswade them to a kindness and tenderheartedness to one another, and back'd it by the pattern God had set them in his pardoning Grace; and in v. 1. of this Chapter, he extends that motive to all other duties, and draws a general maxime for their observance; that they ought to imitate God in all things imitable by a Creature, v. 1. Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children. Consider the great example God hath set you, and as you have obligations to him, not only as your God, but your Father; so imitate him, not only as Creatures, but as Children, and express in your lives those admirable perfections, which he hath engraven on you by regeneration, and especially his patience and meekness in bearing, and his love and kindness in pardoning those that injure you.

Doctrine. Those that lay claim to a relation to God, without imitation of him, are not Children, but Bastards. They may be of his Family by instruction, not by descent. There is no implantation in Christ, without an imitation both of the Creator and Redeemer.

He doth prosecute the exhortation in this verse. Walk in love, let the perpetual tenor of your lives be in love; and that by the example of Christ, as before he had done it by the example of God, which indeed Christ had in Person urged to his Disciples before his departure from them, John 13. 14, 15. I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done to you; and amplifies this example of the love of Christ

1. From

1. From the effect. His Paſſion.
2. The manner of it. Voluntary, has given.
3. The ſubject of it. Himſelf.
4. The end of it. A Sacrifice.
5. The event and fruit of it. A ſweet ſmelling ſavour *, A fragrant odor, which by a Metalepſis is put for the appeaſing God, it having a wonderful force to appeaſe the wrath of God which was enflamed againſt us. The moſt generous example to imitate, is the Perſon of our Saviour; the moſt efficacious motive to perſwade to that imitation, is the Sacrifice of our Saviour, the courſe of our lives ought to be in love, not only an act, a ſpurt, but a walk. As Chriſt hath loved us: An as of ſimilitude, not of equality; we cannot equal the ſtature of Chriſts affection, but we may draw in our life lineaments like to his.

* ἐις ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας.

The latter words are the ſubject of this Diſcourſe. [Loved us.] This is the firſt ſpring of all the actions of Chriſt towards us, and the paſſion of Chriſt for us; there could be no other motive as it reſpected us. Our miſery might excite his pity, but his affection produc'd his paſſion; he loved us, as God, in common with his Father; he loved us, as man, by a participation of our nature. * In this love, there is his Divine Will as a Prieſt, his Humane Will as a Sacrifice; he pitied us while we were inſenſibly hurried down by the Devil to a gulf of perdition: love was the only impulſe, love excited him, love prepar'd him, love ſent him, love offer'd him; the higheſt aſſurance of his love, was the loſs of his life, the excellency of the Fruit ſhows the goodneſs of the Tree.

* Coccius.

Has given himſelf.] He was given by God, yet he offer'd himſelf; there was a joint conſent, The ſon can do nothing of himſelf, but what he ſees the Father do, John 5. 19. 'tis ſpoken after the manner of men, as Sons learn of their Fathers, and imitate them in their actions. Chriſt's giving himſelf, implies the Fathers giving him.

Παρίδωκεν.

Himſelf.] He was both the Prieſt and the Sacrifice; he offer'd not Gold or Silver, or a whole World, but himſelf, more precious than millions of Worlds, compos'd only of Angels and innumerable Spirits, as excellent as the Omnipotency of God could create.

Himſelf.] Not only his Body of Fleſh, not only his Soul a Spirit, but himſelf, his whole Perſon. * His Soul, his Body, himſelf the Son of God, and the Son of Man; he loved us as he loved himſelf, above what he loved himſelf ſhall I ſay? He expoſed his life for us, his moſt holy Perſon for us; the act of his murderers is not regarded as a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, but his own act of Obedience.

* Zanchius.

To whom did he thus give himſelf? To God. To that God, to whom by our baſe apoſtaſie we had rendred our ſelves obnoxious, and had fallen under his deſerved wrath. Our Saviour was Gods before, as he was the Son of God, but he delivers himſelf to God, * as a Mediator, a victim to ſatisfie for our ſins, and reconcile us to our injur'd Creator; he offer'd himſelf to God, as the judge and revenger of Sin, the guardian of the Law, the aſſertor of his Truth in his threatning, he appear'd before God as ſitting upon a ſeat of juſtice, that he might open to us a Throne of Grace.

* Muſculus.

To what end did he deliver himſelf? [An Offering and a Sacrifice.] Not like an Offering or like a Sacrifice *, but an Offering, a Sacrifice; not to do us a ſmall kindneſs, but to offer his life for us; he would dye in our ſtead, that we might live by his Death; not only an Offering, but a Sacrifice, an Incenſe to be conſum'd into ſmoke, a Sacrifice to be ſtuck and bleed to Death; all the Offerings and Sacrifices of the Law were compleated in Chriſt. * All his life wherein he acted for the glory of God, was an Offering; in his Death, he bled and expir'd as a Sacrifice; * he underwent a Death, not honourable, but ignominious, and not only ignominious among men, but joyn'd with the legal curſe of God. As he was the Son of God, he gave himſelf, having power to do it, John 10. 18. Unleſs he had been the Son of God, he could not have been a ſufficient Sacrifice for us.

* As Crellius in loc.

* Zanchius in loc.

* Bodius in loc.

For a ſweet ſmelling ſavour.] He gave himſelf with an intention to be accepted, and God received him with a choice acceptation. Sacrifices under the Law were accounted by God as a ſweet ſavour, Levit. 1. 9. Levit. 3. 16. Exod. 29. 41. This expreſſion is firſt mention'd at the time of the Sacrifice of Noah, Gen. 8. 21. ſo God is ſaid to ſmell an Offering, 1 Sam. 26. 19. God accepted Noahs Sacrifice, and took an occaſion from thence of declaring his counſel to Noah, that he would not deſtroy the World, implying, that he would in time recover it by the promiſed ſeed. A ſmell is here attributed to God by an Ἀνθρωποπαθεία. As good ſcents recreate and refreſh the ſence of a man, ſo did the Sacrifice of Chriſt pleaſe and content God. Our ſins had ſent up an ill ſavour to Heaven, had diſturb'd the reſt of God. Chriſt expels our ill ſcent by the perfume of his Bloud, and reſtores a ſweet ſavour in the heavenly places, Heb. 9. 23. purifying the heavenly things himſelf. God being a pure Spirit, could not be taken with the ſmoke of the legal Lambs, nor refreſh'd with the fumes of Incenſe; but both God and Believers under the Old Teſtament had a content in them, as they were ſhadows of this ſweet Sacrifice, which was intended for the appeaſing God, and ſecuring the offending Creature. What the legal Sacrifices could not perform, as being earthy, mean, and too low for the acceptation of God, and delighted him no otherwiſe than as they refer'd to Chriſt, that this ſweet Sacrifice of the unblemiſh'd Lamb of God, poſſeſt with a perfect love both to Gods glory and mans ſafety, performed, and ſent up ſuch a fragrancy to the noſtrils of God, that he approv'd both of the Prieſt and the Sacrifice, infinitely above the beſt Sacrificers and Sacrifices under the Law, and changed his countenance towards the filthy Creature, that had raiſed ſuch noiſom ſteams in his preſence.

The things obſervable are many.

1. The love of Chriſt was the ſpring of his Paſſion.
2. The perſon of Chriſt was conſecrated for us, and given to us.

But the only things I ſhall take notice of, are

1. Chriſt was a voluntary Sacrifice.
2. Chriſt was an efficacious Sacrifice.

Doct. 1. The Sacrifice and Sufferings of Chriſt for us were free and voluntary. His Offering was a free-will Offering. 'Tis expreſt in the ſame Chapter, Eph. 5. 25. He gave himſelf for the Church. His voluntarineſs was typified by the Paſchal Lamb, a Lamb being the mildeſt of all creatures, reſiſting neither the ſhearers nor butchers, Iſai. 53. 7. All his work is aſſign'd to his love, Revel. 1. 5, 6. His love was antecedent to his ſhedding his bloud, and our being waſhed in it. Love renders any work delightful. The Sun of Righteouſneſs hath not a leſs Bridegroom Spirit and chearful diſpoſition in running his humble Race, than a Sun in the Heavens is expreſt to have, by the Pſalmiſt, in running his natural Race in the Heavens, Pſal. 19. 5. He was not made poor by force, but became ſo, and laid aſide his own riches for our ſakes, 2 Cor. 8. 9. * He became deſtitute of the advantages other men injoy, that from his worldly poverty we might become rich in ſpiritual Graces. He was not emptied of his Glory by another, but made himſelf of no reputation: he took upon him the form of a ſervant, it was not impoſed upon him by conſtraint: he was not debaſed by others, till he had humbled himſelf to the loweſt degree of humility. He could have reſiſted them when they lifted him up upon the Croſs, but he would be obedient to the determination of his Father to the laſt gaſp, Phil. 2. 7, 8. The hiding the Majeſty of God under the form of a ſervant, his deſcent not only to the Earth, the loweſt dregs of the World, the footſtool of the Divinity, but to the moſt abject and forlorn condition in that Earth. His taking the ſimilitude of weak fleſh, and running through all the degrees of reproaches and puniſhment, even to the grave it ſelf, were voluntary acts, the workings of his love, that he might reſcue us from a deſerved Hell, to advance us to an undeſerved Heaven, and make us partakers of that bleſſedneſs he had voluntarily quitted for our ſakes. He willingly put himſelf into the condition of a ſervant, which is to be at the beck of another, and have no will but that of his Maſter's. He ſubmitted his reaſon and affections to God to be employed in his work according to his will. He had an abſolute power over his own body, Joh. 10. 18. yet he made a free offer of it, and ſubjected it to the penalty to be inflicted on him. One place more, Joh. 17. 19. For their ſakes I ſanctifie my ſelf; it cannot be meant of his Conſecration to his Office of Prieſthood

* Amyraut in loc.

Prieſthood, that depended upon the Call of his Father; he was conſtituted a Prieſt, not by his own intruſion, but the Fathers Election, ſeiled by an Oath. The Father, and not himſelf, glorified him in this regard, Heb. 5. 4, 5. Nor of his habitual and inward holineſs, for ſo he was ſanctified by the ſpirit in his Conception, and filled with all graces, Luke 1. 35. Joh. 3. 34. But it is meant of his offering himſelf a Sacrifice. His Father made him a Prieſt, the Spirit made his humane nature fit to be a Sacrifice, his own will made him an actual offering.

In the handling this Doctrine, I ſhall do theſe four things.

1. Lay down ſome Propoſitions for explaining this.
2. The evidences of this voluntarineſs.
3. The neceſſity of it.
4. The Uſe.

1. Propoſitions for explaining it.

1. The Fathers appointing him to be a Sacrifice doth not impair his own willingneſs in undertaking. The Father is ſaid to ſend him and deliver him, Joh. 3. 34. Rom. 8. 32. Not that the Son was over-perſwaded, or came only out of Obedience, without any inclination of his own. The Father being the Root and Fountain of the Deity, all actions are originally aſcrib'd to him, though common to all; ſo he is firſt in order of being, as he is firſt in order of working. The Father is ſaid to deliver him, becauſe the firſt motion of redemption is ſuppos'd to ariſe from the will and motion of the Father; yet the love of Chriſt was the ſpring of all mediatory actions, and his taking our nature on him; and therefore he is no leſs ſaid to give himſelf than the Father is ſaid to give him to us, and for us. God is ſaid to ſet him forth, Rom. 3. 25. yet he is ſaid to come, Mat. 20. 28. Not thruſt out or forc'd to come. God lays our ſins upon him, yet Chriſt is ſaid to bear them. His engagement was an act of choice, liberty and affection. He could not be conſtrain'd by his Father to undertake it. His will was as free in conſenting, as his Father was in propoſing. The Spirit is ſaid to be ſent by the Father, and the Son, to take of Chriſts, and ſhow it to us, to fit thoſe for Heaven that are given to Chriſt; yet his diſtributions are according to his own will, 1 Cor. 12. 11. dividing to every man according as he will. If you conſider Chriſt as one God with the Father, there is but one and the ſame will in both; * will belongs to eſſence or nature; the eſſence of God being one, there are not in God divers wills, though the Godhead be in divers perſons, becauſe the power of willing is the nature, not a perſonal propriety. The Decree of Redemption was joint in Father and Son. [† What Chriſt Decreed as God, he Executed as Man. And what he willed from Eternity, he began in time to will as Man.] * Chriſt, as God, gave himſelf to Death with the ſame will, and by the ſame action as the Father gave him; but as man, he gave himſelf by a will inſpir'd by the Father. Yet for our Conception's ſake the Scripture repreſents things ſo as if they were diſtinct wills, which yet we muſt not imagine, any more than becauſe the Scripture in condeſcenſion to our weakneſs repreſents God with Eyes, and Ears, and Hands, we muſt conceive God to have a fleſhly Body like ours.

* Aquin. ſum. Part. 3. Qu. 47. part. 3.

2. The neceſſity of his death impeacheth not the voluntarineſs of it. Many things are voluntary, which yet are neceſſary; there are voluntary neceſſities. God is neceſſarily, yet voluntarily holy; the Devils are neceſſarily, yet voluntarily evil. 'Tis not in their power to become good, yet they are carried to evil with a compleat will. Man deſires to be happy by a natural, and therefore neceſſary inclination, yet willingly and without conſtraint. This death was neceſſary by a determination of God; voluntary by a cheerful ſubmiſſion of Chriſt. The Election of the good Angels render'd their ſtanding neceſſary, but the adherence of their wills to God made their ſtanding alſo voluntary. Grace did not force them againſt their will, nor Gods determination of Chriſt render him a Sacrifice againſt his mind.

(1.) It was voluntary in the foundation. The Decree was not neceſſary, but an act of divine liberty. Nothing can incline God to an act of grace, but his own moſt holy will. Chriſt being at liberty whether he would eſpouſe our intereſt or no, his undertaking to manage it was a pure voluntary act ariſing from his own will.

will. He was not bound to become a Creature, and take upon him the form of a Servant, but his entering into that condition was an act of free choice and condeſcenſion. No reaſon can poſſibly be ſuppos'd, why the Son of God, and Lord of the Creation, ſhould make himſelf lower than the Angels for us, by any neceſſity of his own condition. There was indeed a neceſſity for us who could not be redeem'd without him, but no neceſſity ariſing from the divine nature. If a Creature ready to be famiſht be in a place where there is only one perſon of ability and ſufficiency to relieve him, there is a neceſſity on the part of the poor Creature to be reliev'd, and reliev'd by that perſon, ſince there is no other to help him, but there is no neceſſity on the part of the ſufficient perſon to relieve him; the help he affords him will be a meer act of Charity. This act of Chriſt is therefore called Grace, 2 Cor. 8. 9. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that though he were rich, yet for our ſakes he became poor; nothing could move him to become either a Creature or a Servant in a Created ſtate, but the yearnings of his own Bowels towards fallen and miſerable man.

(2.) It was neceſſary after this engagement. His engagement to make himſelf liable to puniſhment in our ſtead was free, but when he had enter'd into Bonds to the Judge of Heaven and Earth, he was then in his power to be deliver'd up to Death according to that obligation which he ſubſcrib'd and conſented to; he was then legally, and by his own conſent, bound to perform what he had undertaken, and could not juſtly detract. The promiſes of Chriſt are without Repentance, as well as the gifts of God. After Chriſt had put himſelf into the ſtate of a Creature, and form of a Servant, the homage due from a Creature to God, and the work of a Servant after his Ear was bor'd, was neceſſary, and could not be refus'd by him. He had then broke his word paſt to his Father in the Covenant of Redemption, had he abſolutely declin'd it. He ought to die as Chriſt, Luke 24. 46. i.e. As cloathed with our nature for ſuch an end. He needed not to die, as he was the Son of God by Eternal Generation, and lay in the Boſom of his Father; but it was neceſſary as he was made under the Law, made Chriſt, i.e. Anointed to ſuch a purpoſe. It was neceſſary alſo, in regard of the truth of God laid to pawn in ſeveral Promiſes, Prophecies, and legal repreſentations; but ſtill the Fountain of all this, was the free bubbling up of infinite affection to Mankind. Yet this neceſſity was a neceſſity of immutability, not of conſtraint. The holy and unchangeable will which complied with the firſt propoſal, remain'd in force till the firſt Execution. The will of the Eternal Spirit, whereby he offer'd himſelf to his Father, was immutable. 'Tis a neceſſity ariſing from himſelf, and the perfection of his own nature; from his own holy will, not from any conſtraint. God cannot be conſtrain'd, liberty is ſo eſſential a property of the divine nature, that though it may determine it ſelf, it cannot conſtrain it ſelf. To be God is a term of infinite Power, to be conſtrain'd is a term of Impotency: Theſe are contradictions in the Godhead. * Beſides, in his humane nature he could not ſin, he could not be overcome by the Devil, he could find nothing in him as a foundation to ſtand upon, John 14. 30. He could not do any thing againſt his Father. But to deſert his Suretyſhip had been contrary to that Law to which he had ſubjected himſelf; the word of the Oath, whereby he was conſtituted a Prieſt, had been fruitleſs. It had been the utter ruin of all the gracious Decrees of God, becauſe all the Elect were choſen in him, Eph. 1. 4, 5. the Covenant with Abraham and the Patriarchs had been null; the oath which he ſware to them, broken, Luke 1. 73. and the foundation of their Faith falling, the whole ſuperſtructure had been diſſolv'd, and they would have believ'd God in vain. All this neceſſity is no Plea againſt his willingneſs. The obligation which the truth of God lays upon him, after he hath promis'd, doth not diminiſh his firſt kindneſs and grace in making the Promiſe. As the neceſſity of his Death did not extenuate the Jews ſin in butchering him, ſo neither doth it leſſen Chriſts willingneſs in laying down his Life after he had voluntarily enter'd into our Bonds.

* Cocc. de fæd. p. 115, 116.

(3.) Though his death was violent in regard of man, yet this doth not abate the voluntarineſs in regard of himſelf. Judas betray'd him, the Serjeants apprehended him, Pilate Condemn'd him, and the Souldiers Crucified him: Theſe were but inſtruments to execute the counſel of God, Act. 4. 28. yet he need not have been apprehended

apprehended unleſs he would; he ſhow'd his power to eſcape, not only the united force of the Jewiſh Nation, but of the whole World, by ſtriking his apprehenders to the ground with the Majeſty of his looks. He that can reſcue himſelf from the hands of men, and will not, may be ſaid to dye willingly, though he dye violently. They ſlew him as Murderers, and made him a Sacrifice to their revenge, not to God, with wicked hands, Acts 2. 23. and with wicked minds too. He was the ſole offerer of himſelf, as it reſpected God and advantag'd us. Judas willingly delivered him, Pilot with an imperfect will condemn'd him, the Jews delightfully reproach'd him, but the intention of none of them was to make him a Sacrifice of Redemption. It was for our ſakes he ſanctified himſelf, John 17. 19. but it was not for our ſakes that the Jews butcher'd him. Judas deliver'd him for the Silver, and Pilot condemn'd him to preſerve his Grandeur; but He delivered himſelf with an exceſſive affection for us. His Murderers had no regard to the making him an expiation for the ſin of the World; his oblation to God as a Sacrifice, was an act purely of his own Will at the very time of his Death, not of his Enemies rage. In this capacity his Death was ſolely the fruit of his love, and the hovering of his Soul over the loſt Sons of Adam; it did not ariſe from a neceſſity of nature, but the will of his mercy to us; he gave himſelf, and gave himſelf out of love, Galat. 2. 20. Enemies did not give him, Nature did not give him. The inward tranſports and affections of his Soul, the actings of his choiceſt Graces, whereby his offering was render'd acceptable to God, his Murderers were not the cauſe of; they had not force enough to crucifie him, had not a joy been ſet before him, which made him endure the croſs, Heb. 12. 2. i. e. the things wherein he rejoiced, as thoſe things are called our hope, which are the object of our hope. The joy of Chriſt, which made him deſpiſe the ſhame and ignominy of the Croſs, was the glorious good he ſhould procure by his ſuffering, the expiation of ſin, reconciliation of God, the new creation of the World; for the producing and ripening ſuch Fruits did he hang upon the Tree. This gave him contentment and pleaſure in the midſt of his indignities, and this was increaſed, not impaired by the fury of his Enemies. Though his Death, in regard of men, was violent, yet, as the Death of a Sacrifice, it was wholly voluntary.

(4.) When our Saviour ſeemed unwilling to it in the time of his Agony, he was then highly willing. This was when he pray'd earneſtly, that the Cup might paſs from him, and begins Joh. 12. 27. Father, ſave me from this hour. The ſtrugglings of innocent Nature do both times end not only in a gracious ſubmiſſion to the will of God, but in an ardent deſire that the will and glory of God might have their full accompliſhment. But for this cauſe came I unto this hour, therefore Father, glorifie thy Name, Do thy own work, and finiſh every part of thy will in me, and what thou haſt appointed me to undergo. The ſtate Chriſt was in muſt needs admit of ſome ſhrinkings in his Nature encompaſſed with our infirmities; he ſaw the comfortable influences of God ſuſpended, the indignation of God for our ſins breaking out, the guilt of innumerable iniquities imputed to him, and the Law with all its Curſes edg'd againſt him, and himſelf left to bear the weight of all this, and conflict with a wrath no creature ever bore before. The apprehenſions of all theſe meeting in a clear underſtanding, could not but raiſe ſuitable paſſions of fear and trouble in his humane Nature. If he had not known the greatneſs of the puniſhment he was to endure for our Redemption, he had undertaken to ranſom us from he knew not what. If he had not fear'd it, he had not been a ſenſible man; if he had not trembled at it, he had not been an innocent man. Suitable affections to God in his carriage towards us, are the neceſſary duties of a creature. God is the object of fear in his vindictive Juſtice, which Chriſt then was to be ſubject to. It had not conſiſted with that reverence which Chriſt always ſhow'd to God, not to be ſenſible of the ſharpneſs of thoſe puniſhments which were then providing for him as a ſubſtituted criminal in our ſtead. Though the Perſon of our Saviour was but one, yet he having two Natures, had two Wills, a Divine and Humane, otherwiſe he were not God and Man. If he had not a Humane Soul, he were not a man; and if he had not a Humane Will, he had not a Humane Soul; as he truly took our Nature, ſo he took the Laws of it, whereby it cannot affect pain, but ſhun whatſoever it apprehends hurtful to it. As death was an evil againſt Nature, he deſires to decline it; as it was to be an atonement for ſin, and appeaſing of wrath through the dignity of the Sacrifice, he deſires to undergo it; he regarded it as man, and ſo had ſome reluctance to it; he regarded it as a man deſign'd for ſuch an end, and therefore ſubmitted to it. But for this cauſe came I unto this hour. [As it was a diſſolution of Nature, a fruit of Gods diſpleaſure againſt ſin, and ſhould for a time exclude his Soul and body from the fruition of the Divine favour and glory (though the perſonal Union ſhould not be diſſolv'd) he ſtartled at it; for the more Chriſt loved the ſenſe of the Divine love, which he enjoyed in his life, the more grievous would the apprehenſion of the want thereof be *.] But when he conſider'd, that he was united to that Nature, that he might ſuffer in it, and lay it down as a Sacrifice to that Juſtice which brandiſht a naked Sword againſt man, that without it the World could not be freed from that miſery ſin had hurl'd it into, he then put his neck under the Croſs. * As a Patient, who conſidering the potion offer'd as bitter, abhors it; but remembring the intention of the Phyſician, and the beneficial qualities of the Medicine, doth readily accept it. Both the abhorrency and acceptance are acts of the ſame will upon divers conſiderations, or rather the abhorrency is an act of Nature regarding it as diſtaſtful, the acceptance is an act of Reaſon regarding it as wholeſom. Now, was not the will of Chriſt as Mediator as victorious in the iſſue over the reluctance, as it had been in the capacity of a man deſirous of the removal of the Cup? The humane will veils to the Divine will, and conforms it ſelf, not only in a quiet poſture to the reſolves of God, but in an ardent deſire that his will might be perform'd. There was more of obedience in Thy will be done, not mine, and more of ardent affections in Father, glorifie thy ſelf, than there was of reluctancy in Let this cup paſs from me, or ſave me from this hour. He diſclaims the will of his humane Nature to perform the will of his Fathers mercy.

1. He willingly offered himſelf in the firſt Counſel about Redemption to ſtand in our ſtead. When our necks were upon the block, and the blow from Juſtice was otherwiſe unavoidable, Chriſt ſteps in, diverts the blow from us to himſelf, and declares himſelf willing to ſuffer what we had merited, that we might eſcape upon that ſuffering. The Father propoſed it, the Son conſented to it: The will of God is antecedent to the conſent of Chriſt, Pſal. 40. 7. I come to do thy will, O my God; which will was the will of God for our Sanctification through the offering of the body of Chriſt, Heb. 10. 10. Though he knew every thorn in the way he was to paſs, the greatneſs of the wrath he was to undergo, yet his heart leapt into the Fathers arms with a full and ready conſent at the firſt overture. The Father propoſed it not with more affection than the Son entertain'd it with delight, I delight to do thy will, O my God. He was loth to leave expreſſing it, I come, that is not all, I delight to do thy will, nor doth it reſt there, Thy Law is within my heart: 'Tis ſo ſetled, that it cannot be rooted out but with the utter diſſolution of my heart. Thus in the Volume, or the beginning of the Book, it is written of him. In the Book of Geneſis, in the firſt promiſe, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity (who is ſuppoſed to appear to our firſt Parents after the Fall) repreſents himſelf a ſuffering Saviour, and teſtifies his own conſent to the ſuffering he was to undergo, as the ſeed of the Woman by having his heel bruiſed by the Serpent, and the victory he was to obtain by breaking the Serpents head. When the Counſel was reſolv'd upon, Chriſt is ſaid to delight in the habitable parts of the earth, Prov. 8. 31. His conſent was paſt before the World was; it was a delight to him, becauſe of the glory of Gods grace, to be made illuſtrious in the Sacrifice of himſelf. It cannot be meant of the firſt Creation, for that is ſuppoſed, and there could be no exulting delight in that, ſince the defilement of it by ſin preſently ſucceeded the laying on the top-ſtone. 'Tis meant therefore of the reſtoration of the World, which was to be wrought by this Wiſdom of God. Some to invalidate the Deity of Chriſt, underſtand by Wiſdom in that Book and Chapter an intellectual habit, which is ridiculous. The antiquity of the Wiſdom here ſpoken of is before the mountains were ſetled, and before there were any fountains abounding with water. The Wiſdom here deſcrib'd deſcrib'd was preſent with God, when he made the World. It was intirely familiar with him; there was ſuch a familiarity between God and Wiſdom, as between a Father and a Son, v. 30. I was by him as one brought up with him, and peculiarly the delight of God.

2. The whole courſe of his life manifeſts this willingneſs. His will ſtood right to this point of the compaſs all his life. He never had any defect in his underſtanding, nor did his memory of what was appointed for him ever fail him. In the time of his life he frequently mention'd the Tragedy to be acted upon him, the manner of his Death by lifting up on the Croſs, John 3. 14. And he who was intimately acquainted with the Prophets, knew every circumſtance of his Death predicted in them. Many enter the Liſts with difficulties out of ignorance, but the willingneſs of our Saviour cannot be aſcrib'd either to ignorance or forgetfulneſs. He knew long before that Judas was to betray him, before ſuch a deſign enter'd into Judas his heart, John 6. 64. yet caſhier'd him not from his Family. He foretold the hour of his Death; his deſires were ſtrong for it, he was ſtraitned till he was baptiz'd with that bloudy Baptiſm, Luke 12. 50. He had little eaſe in his own Bowels, as though it were a kind of Death to him not to be a Sacrifice; and when Peter would have diſſwaded him from ſuffering, he uſeth him as ſmartly as he would have done the Devil, Mat. 16. 23. Get thee behind me Satan. Implying that in that Speech he was the ſame Enemy by giving him the ſame title. * And the Night before, he doth ſolemnly oblige himſelf to ſuffer by his Deed, as well as he had before by his Word; he makes his Teſtament in the inſtitution of the Supper, and delivers his will into the hands of his Diſciples. His heart was bent to wade through it; he gave them his bloud in the Sacrament, to ſhow how freely he would pour it forth the following day in a Sacrifice; the free diſtribution of his Body to them repreſented the free offering up his Body for them.

* Liegnd Euchariſt. p. 22.

3. At the time of his death he manifeſted this voluntarineſs in his whole carriage. When the time drew near, he declin'd it not; He would enter Jeruſalem with Hoſanna's, as if when he went to his Death, he went to his triumph; and indeed it was ſo, for by that oblation of himſelf upon the Croſs, he triumph'd over principalities and powers, Col. 2. 15. * He went into the Garden, which was as it were the bringing himſelf to the Door of the Tabernacle to be offer'd to God. He had at the Paſſeover bid Judas to execute quickly his traiterous intention, and now quickens the High Prieſts dull Officers to apprehend him; when he told them twice, Himſelf was the perſon they ſought. He ſummon'd not one Angel to take arms for his reſcue, though he could have commanded Legions to attend him; but as he had rebukt Peter before for diſſwading him, he now rebukes him for defending him; mov'd thereto by an ardency of zeal to drink the Cup, Joh. 18. 11. Shall I not drink of the Cup which my Father hath given me. He would not court the protection of Herod by working a Miracle to pleaſe his curioſity. As he would have no relentings himſelf, ſo he would not endure them in others; and therefore diſſwades the women from expreſſing their natural affection in a few tears, Luke 23. 28. His Soul was not wrung and torn from him, but he render'd his ſpirit into the hands of his Father, and cryed with a loud Voice before that laſt act; ſo that he died not by a defect of ſtrength, but by an ardency of will. He was more delighted with his Sufferings for us, than we can be with the greateſt Worldly pleaſures and grandeurs, and valued reproaches for us above the Empire of the World. To conclude, his Soul was not torn from him, but he pour'd it out, Iſa 53. 12. even that which was deareſt to him, as a man doth Water, freely and willingly out of the Veſſel, he pour'd out his ſoul unto death; he order'd Death to come and fetch it.

* Dr. Owen.

3. Thing. Why this voluntarineſs was neceſſary.

1. On the part of the perſon.
2. On the part of Juſtice.
3. On the part of acceptation.

1. On the part of the Sacrifice it ſelf. He was above any obligation to that work he ſo freely undertook for us. When he made himſelf of no reputation, it was a work of his Charity, not of neceſſity; and he was bound in no other Bonds, but those of his own love. Nor could he be over-rul'd to any thing against his own consent; for being God equal with the Father, Phil. 2. 6. he was subject to no Law, nor could be constrain'd to bend under the terms and penalties of it. Christ as the second person was not under a law any more than the Father; for he was in the form of God, i. e. had the same essence with God. Suppose he had been incarnate without entering into any Bonds for us, though so far as he was man, he was bound actively to obey the Precepts of the Law, yet not bound to endure the penalties of the Law, unless he had been a transgressor of the Precept: he was to have obey'd it as a Creature, but not suffer the Curse, unless he had been a guilty Creature. But he was not only made under the Law, as an innocent Creature, but in the likeness of sinful flesh, Rom. 8. 3. as like as possible could be, sin only excepted; and therefore observ'd those Ceremonial Precepts which concern'd Creatures, as sinful; as Circumcision, though he had no lust in his humane nature to be cut off, and Baptism, though he had no stain to be washt away. And indeed, as he was not, so he could not be a transgressor, being secur'd by his Conception from any original taint, and by the hypostatical Union from any actual spot: If he could possibly have been a transgressor, the Salvation of the Elect had been contingent. Being a Creature, of the Seed of the Woman, he may be suppos'd to be under the condition of the Covenant of nature; yet not violating that Covenant, he could not justly die for himself.

2. Necessary on the part of justice. The satisfaction for sin was to be made by Death, because man upon his revolt from God, was by the immutable Law bound over to Death. Man could not satisfy the Law but by Death, and so must have lain under the bonds of that Death for ever, and no convenient way could be found for his rescue, unless some one, who was not obnoxious to that penalty by nature, should suffer in his stead that Death which he ow'd. Now had it not been an injustice to inflict a punishment upon a person purely innocent, and unwilling to render himself in the place of the Criminal? No man can be justly constrain'd to pay either a pecuniary or criminal Debt for another without his own consent, either actual at the time of paying, or suffering, or legal when by entering into the same Bonds he hath made himself legally one person with the Debtor or Offendor. Had not Christ voluntarily undertaken it, Justice had been wrong'd instead of being satisfied. It could upon no account have been just to punish one that had not been guilty upon his own score, or by substitution. The satisfaction of justice in one kind had been an injury to it in another. Well then; The will of Christ could not have sav'd us without his suffering, because as the Law had denounc'd Death, Justice was to be satisfied by Death. Nor could the sufferings of Christ have sav'd us without his will; for none can be an involuntary Surety; had he not consented to have our sins imputed to him, the punishment of our sins could not have been inflicted on him. To take from any what is not due, and when they are unwilling to part with it, is rapine.

3. Necessary in regard of acceptation. Christs consent was as necessary as God's Order. Had Christ suffer'd for us without the consent of his Father the Judge of the World, though his sufferings had been of infinite value, because of the dignity of his Person, yet God had not been oblig'd to look upon us as concern'd in him, nor count him to us or for us; and had not Christ consented that they should be for us, they could not justly have been accepted for us, or applied to us. It had been an alienating the Goods against the will of the Donor. As Gods Order makes his Sacrifice capable of being satisfactory, so the consent of Christ makes it capable of being accepted for us, and applied to us. The Heathens would not offer a Beast that came struggling to the Altar; but God under the Law, regarded not the reluctance of the Sacrifice, but the Free-will of the Offerer, which was necessary to make the Sacrifice a sweet savour. How much more necessary is the voluntariness of that person who was to be both Sacrifice and Priest? Love belongs to the integrity of a Sacrifice, a burnt body without Charity is of no value, 1 Cor. 13. 3. The merit of his Death depended not upon the act of dying, or the penal part in that Death, but upon his willing Obedience in it, in conjunction with the dignity of his person; and without this his Soul might have expir'd without being a Sacrifice. As the Disobedience of Adam rendred the World obnoxious to wrath, ſo by the voluntary oblation of Chriſt, Juſtification is conferr'd upon Believers, Rom. 5. 19. His love made his Sacrifice a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour. By the pouring out his Soul is our Redemption wrought, Iſai. 53. He ſhall divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong, becauſe he poured out his ſoul unto death, or he ſhall partake of the ſpoil with the ſtrong, he ſhall take us as his own ſpoils, who were before the Devils prey, and reſtore to us that bleſſedneſs which the Devil rifled us of. We are reſtored, and himſelf exalted, not meerly becauſe he dyed, but becauſe he dyed willingly. * In vain had we hoped for the benefit of a forced Redemption.

World

* Hall Vol. 1. p. 246.

Uſe.

1. The way of Redemption by a Sacrifice was neceſſary. Why ſhould Chriſt ſo willingly undertake this task, be a man of ſorrows, lay himſelf down into the grave, if the atonement of our ſins could have been procur'd at an eaſier rate? He that made the World by a word, would have redeem'd us by a word, if it had ſtood with his own honour. 'Tis at leaſt neceſſary for Gods greater honour and mans ſurer benefit. The application of it to us muſt be as neceſſary as the oblation of it for us. Think not a few tears, the heat-drops of a natural repentance, can expiate thoſe ſins for which Chriſt thought the beſt bloud in his heart ſo neceſſary to be ſhed.

2. The Death of Chriſt for us was moſt juſt on the part of God. What Chriſt did willingly ſubmit to, God might juſtly charge upon him as a due debt. That man that will enter into bond to ſecure the debt to the Creditor, or ſatisfie for the Criminal to the Governor, may juſtly be ſued upon default of payment by the one, and arreſted for default of appearance by the other; what he promiſed may juſtly be demanded of him.

Volenti non fit injuria.

3. How wonderful was the love of Chriſt! To accept ſo willingly of ſuch hard conditions for us, and dye ſo ignominiouſly upon the Croſs we had deſerved! He knew the burden of ſin, he knew the terrors of Hell, yet he did not ſhrink from the imputation of the one, or the ſufferings of the other; it was not a willingneſs founded upon ignorance, but upon a clear-ſighted affection. He was willing to be reproacht, that we might be glorified; he would be like to us, that we might be conform'd to him; and took our humane Nature, that we might in a ſort partake of his Divine. Oh wonderful love! to open his breaſt to receive into his own heart the ſharp edge of that Sword which was directed againſt us. * Had not his feet been well ſhod with love, he would ſoon have turn'd back, and ſaid his way was unpaſſable. A courteſie is enhanc'd by the greater ingredieney of the will in it; our Saviour had a double will in this matter, the will of the Divine, and the will of his humane Nature, like two ſtreams from diſtant parts meeting together in conjunction. Worſe than Devils are we, if we are not raviſht with ſo great an affection, which made him leave the Heaven of his Fathers preſence for a time, to paſs through our Hell in the dregs of the Creation.

* Gurnal's Armour, Part 2. p. 444.

4. How willingly then ſhould we part with our ſins for Chriſt, and do our duty to him? Oh that we could in our meaſures part as willingly with our luſts, as he did with his bloud! He parted with his bloud when he needed not, and ſhall not we with our ſins, when we ought to do ſo, for our own ſafety, as well as for his glory. Since Chriſt came to redeem us from the ſlavery of the Devil, and ſtrike off the chains of captivity, he that will remain in them, when Chriſt with ſo much pains and affection hath ſhed his bloud to unlooſe them, prefers the Devil and ſin before a Saviour, and will find the affront to be aggravated by the Redeemers voluntarineſs in ſuffering for his liberty. How willingly ſhould we obey him, who ſo willingly obeyed God for us? Chriſt did not let his enemies ſnatch away his life, but laid it down; our duties ſhould not be wrung from us, but gently diſtil from us. The more will in ſin, the blacker; the more will in obedience, the ſweeter. 'Tis in this we ſhould imitate our great Pattern.

A DISCOURSE OF THE Acceptableness of Christs Death.

Ephes. 5. 2.

------A Sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour.

HAving dispatched the first Doctrine about the Voluntariness of Christ's Death; from those Words [Hath given himself] I proceed to speak of the Acceptableness of it, from this latter Clause of the Verse. Allusion is made here to the perfume God commanded under the Law, Exod. 30. 34. The Spices were to be pounded, and afterwards put into a Censer, to be dissolved into a sweet fume, in the Levitical service: Christ was bruised by his humiliation, to be rendred a sweet perfume to God.

Doctr. The Sacrifice of Christ was acceptable to God, and efficacious for men. There was a compleat satisfaction made to God, the supreme Judge offended, pleasing to him, and effectual to free the guilty party from the obligation to the deserved punishment. Christ was white, in regard of his innocence; ruddy, in regard of his bloody passion: both put together, made him the chiefest among ten thousand, Cant. 5. 10. The efficacy of this Sacrifice in many fruits of it, is fully expres'd, Dan. 9. 24. The transgression was finished, an end put to sin, the apostasie of Adam was check'd, the idolatry of the Gentiles overthrown, the atonement of sin made, which could not be by the Legal Sacrifices; a righteousness pleasing to God, and therefore everlasting, introduc'd; all the Predictions of him fulfill'd, whereupon he is anointed, i. e. fully settled in all his Offices, and declared by that anointing to be a compleat Sacrifice, and the Prince of our salvation. The last words our Saviour spake upon the Cross, gave us an assurance of this; He saw and knew the work compleatly perform'd, and then gave up the Ghost, Joh. 19. 30. When Jesus had receiv'd the Vinegar, he said, 'Tis finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the Ghost: All the Prophecies of what I was to do, are accomplished; I have nothing else now to do, to render my undertaking compleat, but the bowing down my head, and sending out my last breath to my Father. All the Sacrifices of the Law, the daily and anniversary Sacrifices, were shadows and images of him, and fulfilled in their main design in and by him. It could not be otherwise than acceptable; since there was no omission of any thing required of him, no commission of any thing forbidden to him. The whole Law, both the Mediatory Law, and the Law of Nature, were within his heart; the whole Law was answered by his Life. He paid an obedience, not by measure, as he had received the Spirit not by measure, to prepare him to be a Victim for our redemption. It was acceptable to God for us; so must the Apostle be understood. It was a sweet savour to God for those persons, and those ends for which he gave himself. As it was a Sacrifice intended and offered to God for us, so it was accepted cepted as a ſweet ſmelling ſavour by God for thoſe perſons and ends.

In handling this Doctrine, I ſhall,

1. Premiſe two things for the Explication of it.
2. Prove it.
3. Apply it.

1. I ſhall premiſe two things for the Explication of it.

1. God was not abſolutely bound to accept it for us. Though this Sacrifice was infinitely valuable in it ſelf; and had it been without a Divine Order, might have been counted a teſtimony of affection to the honour of God, and the Good of the Creature: Yet God might have refuſed any acceptance of it for us; he might have rejected every Sacrifice, but that of the Offender. If we conſider it ſimply in it ſelf, without any previous order, without any Covenant ſtruck between the Father and the Son concerning it, he was not obliged to have any reſpect to the Apoſtate Creature, upon the account of it. But after a Covenant ſtruck between them, wherein it was agreed, that Chriſt ſhould lay down his ſoul as a ranſome, and offer himſelf an unblemiſh'd Sacrifice for the Sons of men, and that he ſhould ſee the travail of his ſoul, and by his righteouſneſs juſtifie many, after he had born their inquities in his own body on the tree, Iſai. 53. 10, 11. God could not but accept it, unleſs he could have found a ſpot in the Offering, and charged him with a non-performance of any Article covenanted between them. If it were according to the tenour of the Covenant of Redemption, it could not be refuſed by God, being conſequent to his Decree and promiſe. But if we conſider it in it ſelf, God was not bound to accept it for us, though he might have had an high eſteem of it: For according to the tenour of his Law, he might have demanded a compenſation from the perſon of the Sinner, and laid the puniſhment upon the perſon upon whom he found the guilt, and exacted the life of the Sinner as a Sacrifice for the ſin. The acceptableneſs of this Sacrifice was from it ſelf, in regard of the dignity of the perſon, the infiniteneſs of the Sacrifice; but the actual acceptation of it for us, was from the Covenant and Agreement between them. When a man offers to give a thouſand Pound for that which is not worth a thouſand Pence, the Summ is not only a valuable, but an over-valuable conſideration for that which is deſired; but the acceptation of this Summ from the other, depends upon the will of the perſon whoſe propriety it is. The Death of Chriſt was a Sacrifice of a valuable Conſideration for the ſin of the World, and ſufficient to expiate the greateſt crimes both for number and weight: But the receiving of it upon ſuch an account, depended upon the will of the Law-giver, whoſe Authority was violated in the breach of the Law, and who, as the only Judge, had paſs'd Sentence on the offending Creatures, and had concluded all under ſin, Rom. 11. 32. and ſentenc'd the whole World, ὑπόδικον, under condemnation, Rom. 3. 19. It muſt be accepted by him, it had not elſe been of it ſelf valid for us. In regard therefore of the valuableneſs of this Sacrifice, all the beneficial fruits of it ſtreaming upon the Creature, are in Scripture aſcribed to the Death of Chriſt: But in regard of God's acceptation of it for us, they are aſcribed to the Grace of God; to the Grace of God, as appointing and accepting; to the Death of Chriſt, as procuring and purchaſing. The Grace of God gave a virtue to the mediation of Chriſt, in regard of its application to us; but the Death of Chriſt had a value in it ſelf, whether it had been accepted for us or not, or order'd by God to be applied to us. And as God reſpects the Agreement in the Promiſe he makes to us, ſo Chriſt doth not enter any Pleas in reſpect of the intrinſick worth of his blood, but makes this Agreement the foundation of them, Joh. 17. 4, 5, 6. I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do. The prevalency of it for us depended upon God's order. Indeed, had he not finiſhed the work, he could not have challenged the reward promiſed: there was to be merit on his part, before a reward on God's. Yet the ſufferings on his part may be conceived without any reward on God's part, if conſidered ſeparate from this Agreement and Divine tranſaction between them. We muſt not underſtand this, as though, if God had not been obliged to dignifie Chriſt for his ſufferings, by the promiſe he had made him, he would not have rewarded thoſe ſufferings out of meer goodneſs; for ſince God in his own Nature is infinitely good, he cannot but love holineſs and affection to him, and teſtifie his approbation of it by ſome retribution.

2. As

2. As the acceptation of it depended upon the will of the Law-giver and Rector, ſo the acceptableneſs of it depended upon the will of the Redeemer. The Apoſtle therefore ſaith, He gave himſelf for us; the ſweetneſs of it depended upon the will of the Donor, in concurrence with the will of God. The more of will there is in any act of a Creatures obedience, the more ſavoury it is to the Divine Majeſty, to whom it is paid: His love both to God and us made his Sacrifice a ſweet ſmelling ſavour. The merit of his Death depended not upon his meer dying, or upon the penal part in that Death; but upon his willing Obedience in it, in conjunction with the dignity of his Perſon: without this, he might have breath'd out his Soul without being a victim. Had not Chriſts Will been full and firm in it, that his ſufferings ſhould be for us, they could not juſtly have been accepted for us, or applied to us; it could not have been a payment of our debt, and the application of him to us, had been an alienating the goods of another againſt the will of the Proprietor. This ſweet ſavour exhal'd from his voluntarineſs; he was not dragged to his ſufferings, but ſuffer'd more willingly than we had greedily ſinned againſt God. We had Conſcience checking us in ſinning, but Chriſt had no Conſcience checking him in ſuffering; it was his meat and drink to do his Fathers Will. As Gods order makes his Sacrifice capable of being ſatisfactory, ſo the free willingneſs of Chriſt makes it capable of being accepted for us, and applied to us. Involuntary ſervices are rather paſſions than actions; in them we rather ſuffer a ſervice than perform it. There was Obedience in every preparatory act of Chriſt, Obedience in the laſt act in the ſuffering Death, and it was his Obedience in ſuffering not ſimply the ſuffering it ſelf, made it meritorious of his mediatory Glory for us, Philip. 2. 8, 9. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, viz. becauſe of his Obedience to the death of the Croſs. His joy in performing, was the incentive of Gods joy in valuing, accepting, and rewarding it; God ey'd his Obedience in the Crown he gave him; and it was in the conſideration of his Obedience in ſuffering, that he advanc'd him to that excellent dignity.

2. Thing. That this Sacrifice is acceptable to God and efficacious for us, will appear in ſeveral Propoſitions.

1. God took pleaſure in the deſignment and expectation of it.

(1.) His eternal delights were in him, not only as his Son, but as a Redeemer. Gods delight in Chriſt, and Chriſt's rejoicing in the habitable parts of the Earth, and delighting in the ſons of men, are coupled together, Prov. 8. 30, 31. as if God delighted in him, becauſe he delighted in the redemption of man. Hence God is introduced ſpeaking with a kind of joy of this ranſom, Job 33. 24, Then is he gracious to him, and ſaith, deliver him from going down into the Pit, I have found a ranſom, i. e. I have accepted a ranſom, and have a price in my hand; as Hoſ. 12. 8. I am become rich, I have found me out ſubſtance, i. e. I have got wealth enough; ſo I have here price ſufficient, unlooſe the chains of the Priſoner. This finding is the ſame on Gods part with acceptation, as finding on Chriſt part is the ſame with obtaining, Heb. 9. 12. Having obtained eternal redemption, ευραμενος, having found. 'Tis the ſpeech of God: who elſe but the Rector of the World, and the Judge of all Fleſh, hath power to order the delivery of the captive? It is the exultation of his mercy at the appearance of a ſufficient Sacrifice for the forlorn ſinner, whoſe Soul was drawing near to the Grave, and his life to the deſtroyers. 'Tis the triumph of mercy at the thoughts of it.

(2.) What was the ground of his promiſes to him, but his pleaſure in him for this undertaking? What elſe can be the meaning of thoſe words, which the Apoſtle cites to prove the Deity of Chriſt, Heb. 1. 5. And again, I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a Son; that God would be always to him a Father, accepting his Obedience, and he ſhould always be a Son, offering upon the Croſs, or pleading upon the Throne his ſacrifice and ſufferings; a Father to him as Mediator, to countenance, encourage, accept him and all his undertakings? This is a promiſe made to Chriſt; what need of any promiſes to Chriſt, conſidered only as the Son of God, equal with the Father? 'Tis a promiſe to Chriſt as the ſeed of David; (the place the Apoſtle cites it from, is, 2 Sam. 7. 14.) and if to him as the ſeed of David, 'tis made to him as Mediator, promiſing a Kingdom to him upon upon his ſuffering, and an eternal acceptation of him as an obedient Son; the ground whereof was his purging our ſins by himſelf, Heb. 1. 3. all the promiſes of God to Chriſt, reſpect not Chriſt abſolutely conſidered as the Son of God, but in the relation of Mediator, Sacrifice, ranſome for man, for they are all branches iſſuing upon that firſt promiſe to man in Paradiſe of the ſeed of the Woman, whoſe heel was to be bruiſed. God promiſeth to be a Father to Chriſt, in the ſame ſence that Chriſt owns him to be his God, and his Father after his Reſurrection, John 20. 17. which reſpects Gods relation to him as Mediator; for as he is conſidered abſolutely as the Son of God, God could not ſo properly be ſaid to be his God. The term implies a Covenant between them, in purſuance of which Chriſt was to be Gods ſervant, and in acceptance of this God was the God of Chriſt, and promiſes to be his Father, manifeſting his fatherly and gracious acceptance of his ſervices, as a Father doth the obedience of a Son; and therefore Chriſt pleads the righteouſneſs of God for the obtaining the accompliſhment of his Grace in thoſe that believe in him, as well as the love which God bore to him as Mediator, John 17. 25, 26. O righteous Father, &c. Grace was the fountain of the promiſe, but Juſtice is oblig'd for the performance.

(3.) Hence it was that he declared his acceptation of him at his entrance into his office, which was at his baptiſm, Mat. 3. 17. This is my beloved ſon, in whom I am well pleaſed, not reſpecting only his eternal filiation, but the work he was entering into the exerciſe of, and the preparations to his being a Sacrifice; with this work, wherein his Son was to glorifie him, was he well pleaſed; his interpoſition as a victim for the ſalvation of many Brethren, was grateful to God. The word רצה the word in Iſai. 42. whence this place is cited, is often uſed to expreſs Gods pleaſure in, and acceptance of Sacrifices offer'd to him according to his will, as Job 33. 26. Mal. 1. 8. and here it refers to the whole work of Chriſt, as the whole work of Redemption is called the good pleaſure or εὐδοκία of God, Epheſ. 1. 5. He confirms here by his own teſtimony, what he had declared before by the Angels in their Hymn, Luke 2. 14. Good will towards men, εὐδοκία. So certain was God that this Sacrifice would anſwer all his ends, that he teſtifies himſelf well pleaſed with him, before the full performance of his work.

(4.) Hence it was that God delighted to bruiſe him, and in the thoughts of it. He foreſaw what pleaſure he ſhould take in this, as I may ſay, aromatick Sacrifice, after it was bruiſed and pounded, Iſai. 53. 10. Not that God did delight in the act of bruiſing, conſidered ſeparately from the ends for which he bruiſed him (ſince all acts of juſtice are his ſtrange works) but with an eye to the iſſue of it, which was the glory of his divine perfections, the recovery of loſt man, the reſtoration of the health and ſoundneſs of the Creation; as the Phyſician delights not in the ſharpneſs of the Phyſick he adminiſters to the Patient, or a Chirurgeon in lancing the Body, but as it conduceth to the health of the Patient.

(5.) Hence it was that he took pleaſure in the repreſentations of it before it was actually offer'd. Hence the very firſt ſervice after the promiſe was probably a Sacrifice, as hath been ſaid before, and the chief part of Worſhip in the only Church, God had in the World for many Ages, conſiſted in Sacrifices, the repreſentations of this grand victim in the end of the World. In all thoſe things, which could not upon their own account ſatisfie God, as not being ſuited to his juſtice and wiſdom, and not able to expiate the ſin of a rational Creature, he ſmelt a ſweet ſavour as they were images of this Sacrifice, whence the greateſt and moſt pleaſant fragrancy ſhould be exhaled, Gen. 8. 20.

All this pleaſure of God teſtified before the oblation, was from the certainty of its accompliſhment. God knew he laid help upon one that was mighty, Pſal. 89. 19. mighty to pleaſe him and pleaſure us. God could not have before-hand rejoic'd in that which ſhould have come ſhort of his expectation; 'tis inconſiſtent with the Deity to have ſuch a diſappointment; the leaſt failure in the Sacrifice would have fruſtrated his contrivance, and rendred it as loathſome to God as the ſin of Adam for which he ſuffered; but it was impoſſible for God to be diſappointed; and impoſſible for the Redeemer, being God as well as Man, to fail in the performance of his part, and thereby God come ſhort of his ſatisfaction, and the ſinner of his ſecurity.

2. God

2. God had a reſtoration of his reſt, which had been diſturb'd by the entrance of ſin, and therefore this Sacrifice was highly acceptable to God. He was Gods ſervant in whom his Soul delighted, or had a reſt, Iſa. 42. 1. Excluding all other things from contributing to the reſt or delight of God. God reſted in the Works of Creation as they were ſhadows of his Wiſdom, Power, and Greatneſs; eſpecially as they were effluxes of his goodneſs, and anſwer'd his glorious ends; for the ground of his reſting was a review of the goodneſs of them according to his own mind and Idea. He ſaw himſelf and his Attributes glittering in the Creatures. But the reſt of God was diſturb'd by the invaſion ſin made upon his rights in the World; and no ſooner had he made the World, and was refreſht, Exod. 31. 17. but diſorder and confuſion, by means of ſin, ſpread it ſelf over that frame; whereupon he Curs'd the Earth, which he had newly made; gave Sentence againſt Man, and though it was temper'd with the mercy of a gracious Promiſe, yet he left him under ſome outward penal evils all his days, becauſe of his revolt, and had no reſt but in that Seed of the Woman, whoſe Heel was to be bruiſed by the Serpent, that the Serpents Head might be ſhatter'd and bruis'd by him; and thereby an end put to that diſorder which had enter'd by the Serpents breath. And therefore all the Joy God hath in his Church, the beſt part of his Creation, is from this reſt or acquieſcence in his Love, or the object of his Love, Zeph. 3. 17. He will reſt in his love, he will rejoice over thee with ſinging. Hence it is, that the Temple, the Type of Chriſt, is call'd in regard of thoſe ſhadows of him, viz. Sacrifices daily perform'd in it, the houſe of his glory, Iſa. 60. 7. A glorious high Throne, Jer. 17. 12. The place of his reſt, Iſa. 66. 1. Could Gold and Silver, poliſht Stones, and artificial Structures be the reſt and Throne of God? As little as the bloud of Bulls and Goats, could affect him of themſelves with a fragrant ſmell. His ſole acquieſcence was in the Temple of the Body of Chriſt made fit to be a Sacrifice and repreſented by thoſe Types. Such a reſt he had in him as a Sacrifice, that upon that very account he gave all things into his hands: and as by Eternal Generation he had communicated to him the perfections of his nature; ſo, as he was a Mediatory Sacrifice, he gave him Authority to execute Judgment, gave him a Kingdom as large as his own, and ſeem'd to vail his own authority, to encreaſe his, and as it were ſtands behind the Curtain, while this our Mordecai, that ſaved us from Death, manages all the concerns of his Empire, and all to this end, that men might honour the Son as they honour'd the Father, Joh. 5. 22, 23. Such a perfect acquieſcence hath God in him, that he will entertain nothing to the prejudice of the honour of Chriſt in his Work. He will not have the beſt works and Sacrifices of Men, Partners and Competitors with him: He will for ever diſcard all thoſe that have not the ſame thoughts of him, the ſame ſatisfaction and glorious reſt in him, according to their meaſures, as himſelf hath. No other Sacrifice ſhall be of value with him for the atonement of Sin; not a dram of Mercy, not ſo much as to the quantity of the cooling virtue of a drop of Water, can reaſonably be expected by thoſe that refreſh not themſelves with that Sacrifice wherein God found ſo delightful a reſt. Such a reſt hath God in this Sacrifice, that it ſhall be the matter of the praiſes of the Saints to all Eternity in Heaven.

3. The higheſt perfections of Gods nature had a peculiar glory from this Sacrifice. All his perfections, not diſcover'd before to the Sons of men, are glorified punctually, according to his intentions and reſolves for their diſcovery. Not a tittle of his nature which was to be made known to the Sons of men, but is unvail'd in this Sacrifice, to their view, in a greater glory than the Creatures were able to exhibit him. The knowledge of the glory of God ſhines in the face or appearance of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4. 6. i.e. all the perfections of his nature are delineated in this ſaving Sacrifice. In which reſpect ſome think that Coloſ. 2. 9. of the fullneſs of the Godheads dwelling in him bodily, is to be taken, not only that the Deity dwelt in the humane nature, but the full diſcovery of the perfections of the Godhead was in the appearance of Chriſt in his Body, as prepar'd for a Sacrifice, as in a Map and Scheme, as clear as could poſſibly be repreſented to the view of men. 'Tis in the purchace of our redemption by his bloud, that he appears to be the Image of the inviſible God, as well as the firſt-born or head of every Creature, Coloſ. 1. 14, 15. The image of thoſe perfections of the Godhead which otherwiſe otherwiſe had been utterly inviſible to man. The Image not of his will, as the Socinians, but of his nature. Hence is the glory of the Lord, as well as the Salvation of his People, the name and title of Chriſt, Iſa. 40. 5. the glory of the Lord ſhall be reveal'd, Luke 2. 32. His holineſs was glorified in the diſcovery of the helliſh filthineſs of ſin; his juſtice in the grievous puniſhment of it; his mercy to his Creatures, in the giving the deareſt thing he had, a ranſom for them. In him he appeared gracious as well as righteous, tranſcendently merciful in the exerciſe of the higheſt juſtice, Pſal. 116. 5. both ſhin'd clearly in the head of this Sacrifice, being temper'd for the glory of God, and the good of the Creature; the ſeat of Juſtice is turn'd into a Throne of Grace, puts on the quality of an Advocate inſtead of that of an Accuſer, uttering abſolutions inſtead of condemnations. Since Juſtice is propitiated by the Death of Chriſt, it ſteps in as an Agent in the juſtification of a Believer, Rom. 3. 25, 26. Juſtice, the main Attribute to be dreaded by man, was ſo glorified and pleas'd by this Sacrifice, that this alone would oblige him to the remiſſion of ſin, if mercy ſhould not have any ſuit for it ſelf.

4. Compare this Sacrifice with the evil for which he was ſacrificed, and which had invaded the rights of God, and the ſweet ſavour of it will appear, as alſo the efficacy of it.

(1.) This Sacrifice was as honourable for God, as our ſins had been a diſhonour to him. As much glory accrued to him by it, as injury was offer'd him by our ſin. Our ſin was the ſin of a Creature, and the Sacrifice was the act of that perſon by whom God made the World. The ſin was the act of his Creature-Image, the Sacrifice was the act of the expreſs image of his perſon, Heb. 1. 2, 3. Sin was committed by man, and expiated by him who was God. It was not only a rational Sacrifice for the ſin of a rational Creature, but a divine. The ſin was an infinite offence in regard of the perſon againſt whom it was committed; the price was of an infinite value in regard of the perſon by whom it was paid; the dignity of the perſon makes a compenſation for the malice of the crime; an infinite perſon was not more wrong'd by the tranſgreſſion, than he is righted by the dignity of the perſon who made the compenſation for it. 'Tis every way proportion'd to the infinite guilt of the crimes for which it is offer'd, and the infinite Juſtice of God which was offended thereby. God had a price of a full value, he was fully repair'd in his honour, and we deliver'd from our Chains. In ſome reſpect the Attributes of God were not ſo much diſhonour'd by the ſin of Adam, as they were glorified by the Death of Chriſt; Chriſt glorified by his Sacrifice thoſe perfections which were not then diſcover'd, nor diſcoverable to Adam in his innocence, as patience and grace; as well as thoſe which were particularly offended by the revolt of man. This Sacrifice fully repairs the honour of God, which nothing elſe could do. The reaſon why the damn'd ly for ever under the weight of his wrath in Hell, is, becauſe by all their ſuffering they cannot reſtore that honour to God, which they have rob'd him of by their Iniquities.

(2.) There was therefore a greater pleaſure aroſe to God from this Sacrifice, than noyſomneſs from our ſin. The dignity of the perſon ſuffering was equal to the dignity of the perſon injur'd, and infinitely exceeding the quality of the perſon offending. The ſin of a Creature could never be ſo filthy, as the bloud of the Son of God was holy; and the noyſomneſs of the firſt could not equal the ſweetneſs of the latter. The ſtench of ſin was not only ballanc'd and temper'd, but overpowr'd by the ſweetneſs of this Sacrifice. Divine Juſtice was not more incens'd againſt the crime, than divine holineſs was delighted with the offering. Sin was the ſin of the humane nature, the Sacrifice was of the humane nature in union with the divine, and offer'd up by an eternal ſpirit, Heb. 9. 14. The Apoſtle in that text alludes to Gen. 8. 21. God ſmelt ſo ſweet a ſavour from Noahs Sacrifice, the Type of this, that he reſolves never more to curſe the ground, or ſend a Deluge upon the new World, though he knew it would prove as bad as the old; for in the ſame breath, wherein Gods reſolution is diſcover'd to us, his ſenſe of the evil of mens imaginations from their Youth is declared alſo. The fragrant odor of the one, was above the noyſom ſcent of the other. Though our Conſciences are purg'd from dead works, which do morally pollute us, as the touch of a dead Body did Ceremonially pollute the Iſraelites, yet they are but partially purg'd here to ſerve the living God. There is not a ſervice we offer, but hath ſomething mixed with it contrary to the Holineſs of God; yet the evil fumes that ſteam up with our Sacrifices of duty, are over-power'd by the rich Perfume of the Sacrifice of the Son of God: That when for the foulneſs of our imperfections we deſerve a repulſe, yet for the ſweetneſs of his Sacrifice we find an acceptation; ſo much did the Merit of his Bloud overcome the ill ſcent of our iniquities in the noſtrils of God, that he cancels our Bonds, which were due to him, and makes new ones of himſelf to Chriſt; he frees the Creature from the deſerved puniſhment, and obligeth himſelf to give eternal life to every one that believes in him thus ſacrificed, howſoever noiſom his ſins were wherewith he had affronted Heaven before.

(3.) Therefore 'tis efficacious for man, becauſe ſo pleaſing and ſweet to God. Sin did not ſo much hurt to the tranſgreſſor, as this Sacrifice procures good to the Believer. Sin took away our ſpiritual life, Chriſt by his Sacrifice procures a reſtoration of it in a fuller communication than before, Joh. 10. 10. a richer and more overflowing fountain than before, more abundantly than Adam in Innocency, who had it mutable in his own hands, we immutable in the hands of our Head, who is our life; more abundantly than the Patriarchs of the Old Teſtament, who had it in hope, and we in the full exhibition. A ſpiritual life more firm than Adam's, ending in an eternal life more durable. Therefore the grace of Chriſt ſurmounts the effects of Adams ſin. The Apoſtle diſcourſeth of the abundance of grace above the abundance of ſin, Rom. 5. 15, 16, 17. As Adams ſin barr'd Paradiſe againſt him and his poſterity, the Bloud of Chriſt, as oyl to the lock, makes Heaven-gates open eaſily for the re-admiſſion of every Believer.

5. His Reſurrection after his bloudy Sacrifice, is a clear evidence of the ſweetneſs of its ſavour with God, and its ſufficiency for us. He was not totally ſwallowed up by Divine Juſtice, but ſurmounted all the ſtrokes of it, and lifted up his head above the waves that ſurrounded him. The fetters of death had not been unlockt, if his Sacrifice had not been ſatisfactory. The Juſtice of God might as well have diſcharg'd him without any Sacrifice at all, as diſcharg'd him upon an inſufficient one. The freedom therefore of the Priſoner from his chains, is an evidence of the full ſatisfaction of the debt, and the compleatneſs of the Sacrifice, ſince it is by that God, whoſe Name hath that letter in it, By no means to clear the guilty, Exod. 34. 7. that the Writ of Execution was taken off, Iſai. 53. 10. He was taken from priſon and from judgment. By whom? By him who only had authority to releaſe him, who became a God of peace by his Sacrifice, before he ſhowed himſelf a God of power in his Reſurrection, Heb. 13. 20. He was appeaſed as an offended Law-giver, before he gave a judicial diſcharge as the Supreme Governor, unlooſed the chains of death, ſent an Angel as his Officer to unlock the Priſon doors, the grave, and ſet him at full liberty, no more to be arreſted. There could be in this caſe no forcible breaking of priſon, he being in the hands of the Almighty God, who had as much power to keep him in the chains of death, had his Sacrifice been blemiſht, as he had to free him, when his Sacrifice was ſpotleſs. Juſtice therefore is fully ſatisfied, ſince the pains of death are unlooſed, Acts 2. 24, 25, &c. for it was not poſſible he ſhould be holden of them, becauſe the Truth of God was engaged, that his holy One ſhould not ſee corruption. This raiſing him was a Juſtification of him; for when he was taken from Priſon, he was taken from Judgment alſo, that no Suits could be brought againſt him, or any new Actions laid upon him, and he was declared to be the Son of God, Rom. 1. 4. and if we take in v. 3. that ſeed of David alſo, which was propheſied of; and he was declar'd to be ſo with power *, not only by the power that raiſed him, but by the power of the Government of the World, wherein he was inſtated upon his Reſurrection. For this act of God was a teſtimony, that he had ordained him, and ordained him alſo to judge the world, Acts 17. 31. By this he was acquitted by God, as having done all that he did according to the Articles between them. And in that act all his members have an original and fundamental diſcharge to be ſued out in due time in particular upon their Faith. 'Tis in this diſcharge he triumphs as it was his Juſtification before men and Angels,

* in Swidpn.

Iſai.

Iſai. 50. 8. He is near that juſtifieth me, who will contend with me? This is the foundation of the Apoſtles Epinicion and triumphant challenge, 1 Cor. 15. 55, 56. O death where is thy ſting? Where is ſin that uſher'd death into the world, and by it ſtung man to the heart? 'Tis conquer'd by the Reſurrection of Chriſt, which is a clear evidence of the ſweetneſs of this Sacrifice to God, and its efficacy for us. Our Faith is not in vain, which it had been according to the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15. 17. if he had not riſen as he dyed, viz. in the quality of our Surety and Head. Had not the Sacrifice been without exception, the Devil had been the Victor, and Chriſt his Triumph. He would have acquir'd a ſtronger power over men by the leaſt blemiſh, as he firſt gain'd it by Adams ſin. Had he not been juſtified himſelf, he could never have juſtified us, nor could the mercies of David have been ſure and perpetual without it, Acts 17. 34. So mightily pleaſed was God with this Sacrifice, that he employed his glorious Power to raiſe him, Juſtice had no plea to continue him in priſon, nor the Devil any power to hinder the breaking of his fetters. His Sacrifice was his act to propitiate God, his Reſurrection was Gods act to comfort us.

6. The Aſcenſion and full Exaltation of Chriſt after his bloudy Sacrifice, is a full evidence of this Doctrine. Since the promiſes made to Chriſt are accompliſht, which were conditional upon the making his Soul an Offering for ſin, it manifeſts he is an unexceptionable Sacrifice. He had a Kingdom promiſed him, and doth now rule in the Majeſty of God, Micah 5. 4. Had there been the leaſt blemiſh upon him, he could not have claim'd the performance of any one promiſe, nor had Juſtice been bound to make any good to him. Grace to man made the firſt promiſe to Chriſt in favour of Juſtice, and Juſtice would have hinder'd the performance of any promiſe, had it been able to find any exception. This Sacrifice of his in pouring out his ſoul to death, is the foundation of all his advancement, Iſa. 53. 11, 12. This being the condition on his part, could not but be followed upon the fulfilling of it with a performance of the promiſes on Gods part.* Now Chriſt went firſt to Heaven in his Soul immediately after his oblation to preſent his Sacrifice to God, and receive his judgment about the validity of it; for that day, the day of his ſufferings, he was to be in Paradiſe; after death the judgment. This was agreeable to the Type of him in the anniverſary Sacrifice upon the day of Expiation, when the High Prieſt was to go with the bloud into the Holy place immediately after the ſhedding of it, and ſprinkle it on the Mercy-ſeat; for after the bloud was clotted, it was uncapable of being ſprinkled. Chriſt immediately after his death appears in Heaven to receive the acceptation of his Father. This was in his Soul, his body then lying in the grave, which the Scripture calls not an Aſcenſion till his Soul and body were re-united, and both went up to Heaven together. By this firſt entrance into Heaven Chriſt obtain'd eternal Redemption for us. Had not this judgment paſt from God, of the prevalency of his Sacrifice, God had never ſent an Angel to unlock the Grave, nor a Cloud as a Chariot to carry him up to Heaven. This ſuppoſeth his Sacrifice on Earth to be already ratified in Heaven. By this Aſcenſion he was again declar'd, as well as by his Reſurrection, to be without ſin, without any need of repeating his Sacrifice, Heb. 9. 28. His triumphant entrance into Heaven aſſures us, that his Sacrifice was admitted into the boſom of God with infinite delight and pleaſure. He could not have had a glory, had he not punctually obſerv'd his order. Triumph doth not precede, but follow a Victory. His going to the Father was a full conviction of the righteouſneſs of his perſon and his punctual diſcharge of his Office; and the chief Topick whereby the Spirit ſhould argue men into a compliance with him, Joh. 16. 9, 10. is, becauſe he is gone to the Father. Heaven had been no place for a blemiſht and imperfect Offering. The Angels had not been commanded to be his Adorers, but rather with their flaming Swords have chaſed him out of Heaven; he could as little have continued there with a ſpot, as Adam in Paradiſe after his tranſgreſſion. No gift could have been pour'd out upon the ſons of men. The holy Spirit could never have been the purchace of an unaccepted Sacrifice. He could not have been inveſted with a Power to exerciſe any Office in Heaven, if he had not executed what he had undertaken upon Earth; he could not have liv'd to apply his Sacrifice to us, if he had not been accepted in his offering himſelf a Sacrifice for us.

* Lawſon's Body of Divinity, Book 2. Chap. 3. p. 97. much changed.

But ſince he ſits at the right hand of God, 'tis an infallible token of Gods abſolute reſt in him, and his own reſt from any further travel; 'tis an argument of ſpecial favour and dearneſs; God hath given him all power in Heaven and Earth, ordered all the Angels to worſhip him, and not only to give him a ſimple adoration, but to be at his command, his Miniſters and Attendants in his Kingdom; he ſubjected his whole Court to him and his ſervice; he beſtowed upon him all the honour that was poſſible to be given him as Mediator, out of the complacency he had in him as a Sacrifice. It was upon the account that he purged our ſins by himſelf, that he ſat down at the right hand of the majeſty on high, and had all that dignity conferred upon him which is afterwards nam'd, Heb. 1. 3. The whole Prophecy of it is called a Song of loves, Pſal. 45. (title.) So highly pleaſing it is to God, that he will not ceaſe ſhooting his Arrows, till he hath put every Enemy under his feet, that doth not agree with him in his pleaſure and delight in Chriſt, Pſal. 110. 1. Since therefore he is enter'd into Heaven, ſat down at the right hand of God, and maintain'd the Plea of his Sacrifice for ſo many hundred years ſince he firſt enter'd his Suit, 'tis a proof that the pleading his Death, and the ſight of his Sacrific'd Body, is not wearisome and diſtaſtful to God. 'Tis not like a Carcaſs that he deſires to be buried out of his ſight. He joyfully hears the Voice of his bloud ſounding in his Ears to this moment. Well therefore might the Apoſtle upon this account make ſo great a Challenge to all, Rom. 8. 33, 34. Who is he that condemns? it is Chriſt that dyed, yea, rather that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo makes interceſſion for us. Chriſt by his Death appeas'd the wrath of God, by his Reſurrection he was acquitted by the juſtice of God, by his Aſcenſion he took poſſeſſion of his Regal Throne, by his ſitting at the right Hand of God he prevalently pleads his Sacrifice for the ends for which it was offered, and by his Spirit applies his Blood to them that believe in him.

7. The admirable virtue of this Sacrifice, evidenceth the ſweetneſs of it in the account of God. It had a vertue antecedent to the oblation of it, and after the oblation it hath a perpetual virtue.

* Leſſius de Perfect. Divin. p. 125.

(1.) It had a virtue antecedent to the oblation of it. * God upon the foreſight of this Sacrifice to be made in due time, did diſpenſe his pardon to thoſe that reſted upon this future Sacrifice, and did not ſtay till the ſatisfaction ſhould be made for the injury committed, but imparted it to men, that hoped in the merit of the Sacrifice before the oblation of it, and releas'd the Captive upon the ſingle bond of Chriſt, before the actual payment of the ranſom. Upon his promiſe to be a Sacrifice, Believers under the Old Teſtament were ſaved by the merit of it, as well as thoſe under the New. Abraham rejoiced to ſee his day, and was juſtified by Faith in him. When he appear'd, his deſign was to put away ſin, Heb. 9. 25, 26. what ſin? Not only ſins committed while he was in the fleſh, or ſins committed after his Aſcenſion, but ſins before, even thoſe tranſgreſſions, which the legal Sacrifices from the time of their firſt inſtitution, were unable to expiate; ſuch ſins, which the High Prieſt entering into the holy place every year with the bloud of Animals, was not able to wipe off, and to make that perfect which the Law could not, Heb. 7. 19. and redeem from the tranſgreſſions under the firſt Teſtament, Heb. 9. 19. As an head appointed by God he ſav'd men before his coming, as Adam the firſt head ruined men before their birth. 'Tis not more efficacious now, nor will be to eternity, than it was before; for he is the ſame in point of virtue yeſterday in the ages paſt, as he is to day at preſent, and will be in the ages to come, Heb. 13. 8. Whoever were accepted by God in their perſons and ſervices, were accepted upon the account of the firſt-born or head of every Creature; as in him all the elect were choſen, ſo in him they were all accepted, Eph. 1. 4, 6. Faith was from the firſt ages of the World; the proper object of Faith is God in the Redeemer, and he was not conſidered by the Patriarchs, but in that quality in all their Sacrifices, ſince he had changed the Government after the Fall, from God as Creator, to God as Redeemer; and therefore as all his acts of Government reſpected the Redeemer and the Redemption, ſo all the ſervices of men were to reſpect the Redeemer promiſed. What God did to them, was in the name of Chriſt, the Angel of his Covenant, and what they offer'd to God,

God, was with an eye to the promiſed ſeed, which is the ſame thing with our doing all things in the name of Chriſt, the circumſtance of time only being alter'd, what was future then being changed into time paſt now. The ground of this was the agreement between God and Chriſt for the performance of this oblation. When Bonds are agree'd on, and time given for the payment of the Debt, the Priſoner hath his liberty till that revolution of time. Now, not only the thing to be done, but the time when it was to be done, was ſetled between them, called therefore a due time, or a ſtated opportunity, Rom. 5. 6. and the fulneſs of time; and till that time there was to be a πάρεσις, a relaxation or pretermiſſion, a not charging the Debt upon them, which is the word uſed by the Apoſtle, Rom. 3. 25. For the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt. Had not this Sacrifice had a virtue antecedent to the oblation of it, Chriſt himſelf in the days of his fleſh, could not well have utter'd thoſe words ſo often, thy Faith hath ſaved thee, before he had bowed his head upon the Croſs. The removal of ſin, the bar to Communion with God, upon the credit of a future Sacrifice, is an undeniable evidence how ſweet the expectation of it was to God, and therefore ſweet muſt the actual immolation of it needs be.

(2.) After the oblation it hath a perpetual virtue. If the virtue of it before it was offered, reach'd to the firſt ages of the World, as far as Adam and Abel, it will continue in as excellent a force to the laſt Believer, that ſhall cloſe up the number of the elect at the end of the World. If the bloud of Abel is ſo efficacious, as to procure a perpetual vengeance upon Cain, ſhall not the bloud of that Perſon, by whom God created the World, be more efficacious to procure a perpetual bleſſing from the Grace of God, to which he is more enclin'd than to acts of vengeance? Though this Sacrifice was but once offered, yet it works, in regard of its virtue perpetually as a moral cauſe. As the act of ſin ceaſing, the guilt and power of ſin remains binding over to puniſhment, ſo, though the act of Chriſt's offering himſelf ceaſed, yet the vertue of it is durable. The bloud of this redeeming victim, is intimated to be an incorruptible bloud, 1 Pet. 1. 18. We are not redeemed with corruptible things, as gold and ſilver, but with the precious bloud, precious becauſe incorruptible; the oppoſition teſtifies it, though it be not the ſame expreſſion; precious Bloud is oppoſed to corruptible things. As his Body, ſo likewiſe his Blood, and the efficacy of his Sacrifice was not to ſee corruption; his Bloud is like the rod of Aaron, always flouriſhing in the holy of holies before the Mercy-Seat. Aarons rod flouriſhed after Aarons Death, the Sacrifice of Chriſt is always freſh and ſmoking before the Throne of God, producing the Fruits it merited, and the Grace we want. This Bloud is called a new and living way *, as if it were juſt now ſhed, or had been ſprinkled upon as as ſoon as it ſtreamed out of his Body. Since he is a Prieſt for ever, the vertue of his Death abides for ever; he could not be a Prieſt for ever without an everlaſting Sacrifice, for Prieſt and Sacrifice are relatives. If he be a Prieſt for ever, he is a Sacrifice for ever; the ſame moment that the virtue of the latter ceaſeth, the honour of the former would ſhrink away: But that is unchangeable Heb. 7. 24. His Kingdom cannot be ſhaken, his Sacrifice therefore, which was the foundation of his Kingdom, cannot be waſted; he muſt ceaſe ſitting upon his Throne, fall from being the Fathers darling at his right hand, if the virtue of his merit, and the efficacy of his Bloud, ſhould ceaſe producing the true Fruits of it among his People. Though the oblation was but once, yet the preſentation is perpetual; he pleads upon his Throne what he offered upon the Croſs. If it were a waſted thing, it were not worthy of the plea of ſo great a Perſon as the Redeemer, nor worthy to be pleaded before ſo great a Perſon as the Judge of all the World. He is, in regard of the continued virtue, not ſaid to have been, but to be our propitiation, 1 John 2. 2. He is the propitiation for our ſins; he is, not has been, he is now as ſitting in Heaven; he was a propitiation on Earth in his offering, he is a propitiation in Heaven in the preſentation of that offering. While his Plea is heard, his Death is accepted, for his Plea is only the voice of his Bloud, and the fumes of his Sacrifice. If the Goſpel muſt be preached to the end of the World, the vertue of his Sacrifice, upon which the efficacy of the Goſpel depends, ſhall endure as long as the World endures. This perpetual tual virtue, was typified by the aſhes of the red heifer burnt without the Camp, which were reſerv'd for purifying from legal uncleanneſs, Numb. 19. 9. As the power of the Devil ſhall never be able to pull him out of his Throne, ſo the power of ſin ſhall never be ſo prevalent as to weaken the virtue of his Bloud; as long as he remains in a ſtate of life, his Bloud will have its efficacy, becauſe it is the Bloud of the everlaſting covenant, Heb. 13. 20. What greater evidence can there be of the gratefulneſs of it to God, than its vertue reaching to the moſt diſtant ages of the World, and running through all the revolutions of time?

8. 'Tis ſo acceptable to God, that 'tis a ſufficient Sacrifice for all, if all would accept of it, and by a fixed Faith plead it. 'Tis ſufficient for the Salvation of all Sinners, and the expiation of all ſins. The wrath of God was ſo fully appeas'd by it, his Juſtice ſo fully ſatisfied, that there is no bar to a re-admiſſion into his favour, and the enjoyment of the priviledges purchaſed by it, but man's unbelief. The Bloud of Chriſt is a ſtream, whereof all men may drink; an Ocean, wherein all men may bathe. It wants not value to remove our ſins, if we want not faith to embrace and plead it. As no ſickneſs was ſtrong enough againſt the battery of his powerful word when he was in the World; ſo no guilt is ſtrong enough againſt the power of his bloud, if the terms upon which it is offer'd by God, be accepted by us. 'Tis abſolutely ſufficient in it ſelf, ſo that if every Son of Adam, from Adam himſelf to the laſt man that ſhall iſſue from him by natural deſcent, ſhould by Faith ſue out the benefit of it, it would be confer'd upon them. God hath no need to ſtretch his wiſdom, to contrive another price, nor Chriſt any need to re-aſſume the form of a Servant, to act the part of a bloudy Sacrifice any more. If any periſht by the biting of the fiery Serpent, it was not for want of a remedy in Gods inſtitution, but from wilfulneſs in themſelves. The Antitype anſwers to the Type, and wants no more a ſufficiency to procure a ſpiritual good, than that to effect the cure of the Body. He is therefore called the Saviour of the World, 1 Joh. 4. 14. And when the Apoſtle upon the citation of that in the Prophet, that whoſoever believes on him ſhall not be aſham'd; concludes, that there is no difference between Jew and Gentile, but that whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved, Rom. 10. 11, 13. By the ſame reaſon it may be concluded, that there is no difference between this and that man if they believe: what is promis'd to one Believer, as a Believer, is promis'd to all the World upon the ſame condition. And when the Apoſtle ſaith, v. 9. If thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and believe with thy heart, thou ſhalt be ſaved; he ſpeaks to every man that ſhall hear that Sentence. If any man believe, this Sacrifice is ſufficient for his Salvation. As Adams diſobedience was ſufficient to ruine all his Poſterity deſcending from him by natural Generation, ſo is this Sacrifice ſufficient to ſave all that are in Chriſt by a ſpiritual implantation. The Apoſtles compariſon would not elſe be valid, Rom. 5. 18. As by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, ſo by the righteouſneſs of one the free gift came upon all men unto juſtification of life. And if all men in the World were united to him by Faith, there could not be any more requir'd of Chriſt for their Salvation than what he hath already acted; for it is a Sacrifice of infinite value, and infinite knows no limits. Since it was ſufficient to ſatisfy an infinite juſtice, 'tis ſufficient to ſave an unexpreſſible number; and the virtue of it in ſaving one, argues a virtue in it to ſave all upon the ſame condition. Who will queſtion the ability of an Almighty Power to raiſe all men from Death to Life, that hath raiſed one man from Death to Life by the ſpeaking of a word? If men therefore periſh, 'tis not for want of value, or virtue, or acceptableneſs in this Sacrifice, but for want of anſwering the terms upon which the enjoyment of the benefits of it is propos'd. If a man will ſhut his Eyes againſt the light of the Sun, it argues an obſtinacy in the perſon, not any defect in the Sun it ſelf.

9. The effects of this Sacrifice ſhow the acceptableneſs of it to God. As the effect of Adams diſobedience demonſtrates the blackneſs and ſtrength of his ſin, ſo the fruit of this Sacrifice evidenceth the efficacy of it. Had it not been ſweet to God, we had ſtill been in our ſins. He was to perfect his people, which had been impoſſible, had he not been perfect himſelf in his ſufferings; If he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, then that Sacrifice whereby he did perfect them is fully compleat, Heb. 10. 14.

for

(1.) Remiſſion of ſin. Our lives by our Rebellion were a Debt to the violated Law; when we tranſgreſt the Precept, we incurr'd the penalty: this Debt is diſcharg'd to Believers by Chriſts offering his Soul in our ſtead, a Sacrifice for ſin, a reſcue for our Souls. He took away ſin as the Lamb of God, Joh. 1. 29. As a Sacrificed Lamb, for the Analogy relates not to a Lamb as a Creature, but a Lamb as a Sacrifice. He took away the ſin of the World *, the guilt of ſin, the curſe of God, whatſoever belongs to the eternal wages of ſin, he transferred upon himſelf. There is a perpetual virtue in its nature, He took, as when we ſay a drug purges, we ſignify not only the act, but the natural quality of it. The Apoſtle concludes the efficacy of this oblation from Gods remembring ſin no more, Heb. 10. 16, 17, 18. Their ſins and iniquities I will remember no more; now where remiſſion of thoſe is, there is no more offering for ſin. The compleatneſs of the fruit diſcovers the Judgment of God, for the compleatneſs of the merit upon which it is founded. Himſelf therefore after his Reſurrection gives his Apoſtles Commiſſion to publiſh this as the fruit of his Death, to let men know, that the way to Heaven in the removal of the Bar, was ſecur'd by the bloud of Jeſus, John 20. 22, 23. Luke 24. 27. All the Sacrifices wherein there was a daily remembrance of ſin, were abrogated as uſeleſs after this offering, which ſurmounted the efficacy of all the legal ones put together. They expiated Ceremonial uncleanneſs, and the pollution of the Body; this, moral iniquities and the filth of the Soul, Heb. 9. 13, 14. the Apoſtle inſtanceth in the moſt ſoleman Offering, that of the red Heifer, ſuppos'd to be of a more durable efficacy than the daily Offerings, ſince the aſhes of it were reſerv'd for a purification for ſin, Numb. 19. 9. But this, much more the reſt, were exceeded by this offering that purg'd the Conſcience from thoſe dead works that bound the Soul over to eternal Death. And indeed the Ceremonial act of the High Prieſt in ſprinkling the bloud of the Heifer directly before the tabernacle, v. 4. intimated that the efficacy of it was to be deriv'd from the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt typified by that ſtructure. By this we gain a plenary indulgence, ſo as to have no more Conſcience of ſin, Heb. 10. 2. Not that there is no more ſin in Believers, or no more ſence of ſin, but no more accuſations and charges of ſin before God, or deſpairing ſervile thoughts for ſin in their own Conſciences. For in his bloud we have redemption, the forgiveneſs of ſins, Eph. 1. 7. Upon which account a Challenge is made by the Apoſtle to all the Believers Adverſaries to bring an effectual charge againſt them, Rom. 8. 33, 34. It frees us not from one or two ſins, but vaſt numbers of them, 1 Joh. 1. 7. The bloud of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin. So that all the powers of Hell can never lay the load upon them again; for this ſaves to the uttermoſt, covers their iniquities, and blots them out as a thick Cloud. Death is ſwallowed up in victory, the deſtruction and condemnation by ſin; O death where is thy ſting? i. e. Where is ſin? that is the ſting of death, 1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. And indeed ſo acceptable to God was the firſt undertaking of our Saviour, that God promis'd him this as the fruit of his ſuffering, that his labour ſhould not be in vain, that he ſhould ſee his ſeed, that by his knowledge he ſhould juſtify many, when he bore their iniquities, Iſa. 53. 11. And therefore when the Apoſtle ſaith, the old man is Crucified with Chriſt, he underſtands that the deſtruction of the body of death, and the remiſſion of all the extravagancies of it is purchas'd by Chriſt at the hands of God, Rom. 6. 6. And all the ſence we have of remiſſion, from any Ordinance, eſpecially by that of the Supper, is not from the Ordinance it ſelf, or the remembrance of this Sacrifice; but from the perpetual and prevailing efficacy of it with God to this day. The removal of ſo great a weight from the Soul, which we were unable to bear, ſo great a Curſe which we were unable to ſuffer, ſhows the high acceptableneſs of it with God.

(2.) The confirmation of the Covenant. After ſin had ſtept into the World, and invaded the rights of God, the firſt Covenant became utterly unprofitable for the relief of man. God makes a new one, which was not ſignified to be valid to any without Sacrifice. 'Tis not unlikely that the firſt Declaration of it to Adam, in the promiſe of the Seed, was accompanied with the Sacrifices of Beaſts; both to ſhow to him a token of that puniſhment he had merited at the hands of Juſtice; ſtice, and in what a bloudy way his recovery was to be accompliſht. The repetition of it to Abraham was confirm'd by Sacrifices, Gen. 15. 18. And the ſolemn Covenant between God and the Iſraelites was confirm'd by Sacrifices, and the bloud of them called by Moſes, the bloud of the Covenant, Exod. 24. 5, 8. i. e. a Type of that Bloud which ſhall be ſhed for the confirmation of that bleſſed Covenant whereby the Soul ſhall be purified from ſin. And by the inſtitution of God this ſeems to be eſſential to a Covenant with God, Pſal. 50. 5. My Saints that have made a covenant with me by ſacrifice. And this cuſtom was uſed by the Heathens in their Leagues and ſolemn Contracts between Nations, and in Covenants between their Gods and them, which deſcended to them probably by Tradition from the firſt Parents, though they had loſt the true intent of that Tradition. All this reſpected the confirmation of the Covenant of Grace (ſucceeding in the room of that violated Covenant of Works) by the bloud of the promiſed Seed, whereby man was to be repair'd, and the Devil defeated. Hence is God ſo mightily affected with the engagement of Chriſt to be our Surety, that he preſently eſtabliſheth the Covenant of being their God, and making them his people, Jer. 30. 21, 22. Who is this that hath engaged his heart to approach to me, ſaith the Lord? Ye ſhall be my people, and I will be your God. That is the immediate iſſue of this engagement. To this purpoſe was he given to be a Witneſs of the everlaſting Covenant, Iſai. 55. 3, 4. And to this his Sacrifice had an immediate reſpect, whence the bloud that merits the ſtriking off the chains of the Priſoners, and taking away the bars, is called the Bloud of the Covenant, Zach. 9. 11. And Chriſt in the inſtitution of the Supper, Luke 22. 20. calls it the New Teſtament in his bloud, i. e. the true Bloud ſhed for the ratification of the Covenant, which was only typified by the bloud of all former Sacrifices. And for the remiſſion of ſins; this only is mention'd, though other benefits beſides this flowed from the Covenant, becauſe as ſin was the foundation of all evil, ſo pardon of ſin is the fountain of all good. Had other bleſſings been merited without this, a bar had been put to our enjoyment of them by the want of this. Upon this firſt link all other bleſſings in the chain of happineſs depend. All the promiſes of God, which are branches of this Federal engagement, are Yea and Amen in Chriſt, of an infallible certainty. He himſelf is the Amen, the faithful and true witneſs, Revel. 3. 4. And to this purpoſe is the Sacrament of the Supper appointed, being the perpetual repreſentation of this Sacrifice, wherein God ſhows himſelf reſolv'd to ſtand firm in the Covenant, which was confirm'd by the Bloud of the Croſs, and make good to a Believer all the branches of it. This manifeſts it to be highly acceptable to God, ſince the Covenant made juſt after the unprofitableneſs of the old, is upon the account of this Sacrifice ratified by God (as the ſure mercies of David) in all the parts of it to all the indigencies and higheſt ſatisfaction of every Believer.

* Chemnit. in loc.

(3.) Reſtoration of peace, and intercourſe with God. Man was upon the terms of enmity with God, hating him, and being hated by him. God hates Men, not as creatures, but as ſinners. Man hates God, not as God, but as Soveraign and Judge. Man turn'd off God from being his Lord; God turn'd off man from being his Favourite. Therefore Chriſt in reſpect of this Sacrifice is called ἱλασμὸς, 1 Joh. 2. 2. our propitiation, and ἱλαστήριον, Rom. 3. 25. alluding both to the Sacrifices and the place of the ſprinkling the bloud. As He was bruiſed for our iniquities, the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, Iſai. 53. 5. And though he was reconciling us all his life, yet it is principally aſcrib'd to his Sacrifice in his death, Col. 1. 21, 22. All that Chriſt did in his life, had not been available for us, had he not added the top-ſtone in the ſhedding his bloud: and therefore in the Creed there is a tranſitus and leap from his Birth to his Death, all intermediate actions of his life being omitted, becauſe that was the great work whereby it was finiſhed. Acceſs to God was barr'd up, till the way was open'd by the bleſſed Son of God, Heb. 10. 19, 20. So much is God pleaſed with it, that his Majeſty condeſcends to the loweſt ſtep, to ſollicite his apoſtate Creatures; and miſerable man is admitted to importune God, not only with hopes, but aſſurance of his favour, and an happy ſucceſs upon the account of this expiatory Sacrifice. God hath laid aſide the rigours of his Juſtice, to beſeech us with the bowels of his mercy; and and tore down the partition-wall that hinder'd his deplorable Creature from an acceſs to him, and hereby given us a full evidence what an inteſtimable fragrancy aſcended from this Sacrifice before him, ſince he did not only blot our ſins out of the Records of his Juſtice, but reſtore us to his forfeited favour, and confer upon us the priviledge of children, and converſe with man as an object of his love, who before had render'd himſelf the mark of his wrath.

(4.) The miſſion of the Spirit. God firſt ſent Chriſt to be an acceptable Sacrifice to him, and to teſtifie his high valuation of it, ſent the Spirit in his Name, or upon his account to be an abiding Comforter to us. Had not the ſin which firſt drove the Spirit out of the World, been expiated according to the mind and will of God, he had not reviſited the World, but left it in its original darkneſs. His firſt Miſſion and all his conſequent Operations, are the fruits of this Sacrifice. Though he was ſent by the Father, yet ſent in the Name of the Son, Joh. 14. 26. as a fruit of Gods acceptation of him. His Name had been of no prevalency for ſo great a gift, had not his Death been firſt of a grateful ſavour with the Father. Had he not gone away, the Comforter could not have come to us, Joh. 16. 7. which refers not only to his Aſcenſion, but to his Paſſion; and had he gone, and his Death been unapproved of, the Spirit had ſtaid in Heaven. Nor would the Spirit have been imploy'd to bring things to our remembrance, which were not worth our remembrance to our comfort, if they had not been firſt worthy of his Fathers acceptation. He was not to ſpeak of himſelf, Joh. 16. 13. i. e. he was not to publiſh a new Doctrine, but impreſs what Chriſt as a Prophet had taught, and what Chriſt as a Prieſt had acted. He would not have been ſent to act upon a weak foundation, and to propagate that which had not exactly anſwer'd the will and deſign of God. He was to glorifie Chriſt, (Joh. 16. 13, 14.) i. e. to declare the efficacy of his Death. Chriſt had not been a fit ſubject to be glorified in the World, had he not in the adminiſtration of his Office glorified God, and been glorious in his eyes. And ſince he is an abiding Spirit, his perpetual inhabitation manifeſts the perpetual favour of this Sacrifice; for ſince the firſt acceptation of it was the cauſe of his coming, the perpetual fragrancy of it muſt be the ground of his abiding. He could no more abide, if there were an interruption of its ſweetneſs, than he could firſt have come, had there been a defect of ſweetneſs in it. This Sacrifice did not only procure the coming of the Spirit, but his coming with the moſt glorious things in the poſſeſſion of God, Joh. 16. 15. All things that the Father hath are mine, therefore ſaid I, He ſhall take of mine, and ſhew it unto you. All things that the Father hath: the greatneſs of the Comforter, the fulneſs of the Treaſure, and his perpetual abiding with theſe rich gifts, are full evidences how much God is pleaſed with this Offering. As God could not teſtifie his good will to man in a higher manner than ſending his Son to be a Sacrifice for him, ſo he could not in a higher manner teſtifie his delight in that Sacrifice, than to ſend ſo great a Perſon as the Holy Ghoſt to be a Sollicitor to men to accept of it, and a Comforter to thoſe that believe in it, the third Perſon in the bleſſed Trinity, to preſerve the honour of the oblation of the ſecond. God would never have been at the expence of ſo great a gift to keep up the credit of a Perſon and Sacrifice wherein he had no pleaſure.

(5.) The acceptance of our Perſons and Services. His delight in this Sacrifice is the ground of the acceptation of every perſon accepted by him: 'tis in the beloved that every one is accepted, Eph. 1. 6. Not beloved ſimply as his Son, the ſecond Perſon in the glorious Trinity, but beloved as a Sacrifice; for he was beloved as he was a Medium for the praiſe of the glory of the grace of God, which was not as he was a Son by eternal generation, but as he aſſum'd our Nature by his Incarnation, and offer'd it to God by his Paſſion. The Trinity had been bleſſed, if man had not been created, and had been bleſſed, if revolted man had not been redeem'd, and not a ſpark of grace ſhot out upon the World. Therefore in the following verſe this, as well as the other parts of Redemption, is aſcrib'd to his Bloud. Had not Chriſt been firſt accepted as an oblation of infinite value, neither the perſons nor ſervices of men, abounding with guilt and filth, could have been worthy of the notice and entertainment of God. Our acceptation is the fruit of the acceptation of the Offering Chriſt made of himſelf. The pleaſure

God takes in his obedience to Death, makes Believers as his Members, and their ſervices as ſprinkled with his Bloud, delightful to God; upon which account, the laſt time, wherein this victim was to be offer'd, is called the acceptable year of the Lord, Iſai. 61. 2. and the day of vengeance of our God; an acceptable time, when it was the day of vengeance upon ſin in the ſuffering of the ſinners Surety.

* Drilincourt. (6.) The joys and peace of Conſcience. * By his Bonds he procur'd our liberty, by his condemnation our abſolution, and taſted of the vengeance of God, to fill us with the delights of the Spirit. As God had a reſt in his acceptation of it, ſo he gives us a joy and peace in our believing it, which is the acceptation on our parts, anſwering to the acceptation on Gods part, Rom. 15. 13. This is accompanied with a repoſe to the Conſcience, a ſilencing our fears, and a filling with a joy unſpeakable and full of glory. Theſe gifts God doth moſt plentifully diſtribute, when we are deepeſt in ſufferings for the acknowledgment and approbation of this Sacrifice; 'tis then Stephen ſhall ſee the Heavens opened, and behold Chriſt at the right hand of God, have a ſence how highly God values that in Heaven, which wicked men reproach, and Believers ſuffer for on Earth, Acts 7. 55. then it is that a ſpirit of glory and of God reſts upon them, 1 Pet. 4. 14. God eats not his morſels alone; he impreſſeth a joy in the hearts of his People, when they are either publickly witneſſing to this Bloud, or privately acting Faith in it, or celebrating the memorials of it; when we eat our ſpiritual meat with ſingleneſs of heart, God doth accompany it with gladneſs, Acts 2. 46. Every beam of Paradiſe, darting into the heart at ſuch ſeaſons, is a token of its ſweet ſavour with God, and an aſſurance of Gods valuing us, for valuing that which is ſo much the the object of his delight. Man only ſtands in a poſture for ſuch ſpiritual viands, when he is in an exerciſe of an eſtimation of Chriſt in imitation of that eſteem God hath of him; this is the beſt ſavour to God next to that of the oblation of his Son.

(7.) Beſtowing of the glory of heaven upon this account. The reſtoring men to that eternal ſalvation they had loſt, is a certain proof of the ſtrength of this Sacrifice. As ſoon as Chriſt was made perfect by ſuffering, he became the author of eternal ſalvation to all that obey him, Heb. 5. 9. Nothing can be a higer demonſtration to the ſence of the Creature of Gods eſteem of this victim, than his admiſſion of poor Creatures to reſide with him for ever to behold and enjoy his glory. By this we have liberty to enter into the holy place, not only a licence or bare permiſſion, but a right of purchace, whence it is called a purchaſed poſſeſſion, Eph. 1. 14. a right of donation as a fruit of his delight in Chriſt, Rom. 6. 29. The gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt. Juſtice that barr'd Heaven, is ſatisfied, and God conſented to a preparation of Manſions in Paradiſe, inſtead of Dungeons in Hell, that his Eneimies might become the Heirs of his Kingdom. So agreeable to God is the odor of this Sacrifice, that God is not only content to free us from the Hell we had merited, but he would alſo open for us the Heaven we had forfeited, that we might be partakers of the Glory and Kingdom of his Son; not only deliver us, but perfect us; not only croſs our debts that entitled us to Priſon, but impute a righteouſneſs to entitle us to Glory; ſtop the mouth of Hell, and open the gates of Heaven; hence we are ſaid to be rais'd together with Chriſt, viz. by the glory of the Father, as he was, to ſit in heavenly places with Chriſt, by the donation of the Father, as he did, Eph. 2. 5, 6. the meaning of which is, that by thoſe acts of raiſing up and exalting to glory his ſacrificed Son, he hath ſealed to every Believer the perfection of regeneration in a poſſeſſion of glory for ever. The ſatisfaction God hath in the value of this offering, cannot give forth it ſelf in fuller expreſſions, than in our ſalvation by the virtue of it, every thing formidable and burdenſome being removed, every thing great and glorious beſtowed, Juſtice with all its vengeance appeaſed, the Law with all its retinue of curſes ſilenced, ſin with all its demerits expiated, the Covenant with all its benefits ratified, Peace with its bleſſings reſtored, the Spirit with all its treaſures beſtowed, our ſervices purified from their filth, our Conſciences pacified from their fears, whatſoever is grievous abrogated, the vail of the Temple, with all the heavy weight of ceremonies, rent in twain: Hell quench'd, and Heaven prepared and furniſhed for all that imitate God in his valuation of this Sacrifice.

2. Thing.

Q. What was it that rendered this Sacrifice acceptable to God, and efficacious for us?

A. 1. The dignity of his Perſon. That which is inferiour, cannot be the reſt and ſatisfaction of a ſuperiour nature; nothing but infinite therefore can be the reſt and ſatisfaction of an infinite Being. The holineſs and goodneſs of any, or of all Creatures, could not render a Sacrifice worthy of the acceptance of God. The holineſs of a Creature was not infinite to anſwer the infinite evil of ſin, and ſuite the infinite holineſs of God, any more than the weakneſs of a Creature could have rendered him ſtrong enough to endure the ſtrokes of an infinite juſtice. * Since the Heavens are not pure in the ſight of God, and the Angels, if compared with him, are not free from vanity, Job 15. 15. Job 4. 18. 'Tis neceſſary that be in whom God doth reſt, ſhould excel, not only the dignity and perfections of Angels, but the condition of any finite Being. If the holy Angels cannot be the Reſt of God, becauſe of their natural mutability abſtracted from the eſtabliſhing Grace of God, much leſs can man, who is filthy, and drinks iniquity like water; for whatſoever dignity might be conſidered in his Perſon to commend the Sacrifice, might be conſidered alſo in his crime to aggravate the guilt. But the dignity of this Perſon was ſolely to be regarded in the offering, becauſe he had no crime to be greatned by the conſideration of it, being offer'd, nor for any ſin of his own, but for the ſins of others. This Sacrifice was of infinite value, and therefore worthy of the acceptance of an infinite nature; his Perſon was of as great a dignity as the Fathers, to whom he was offered. Though there be a diſtinction of order between the three Perſons, yet not of dignity; he had no Peer but God, for he was equal with him *, had equalities of perfections with God, was every way equal to the party offended, ſo that he is called Gods fellow, one of the ſame nature with him; a man as ſtricken by the ſword, yet his fellow as conſidered in his Divine Nature, Zach. 13. 7. meant of Chriſt, part of the verſe being applied by Chriſt to himſelf, Mat. 26. 31. his fellow, though man, yet not as man: In whom the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt, Coloſ. 2. 9. not typically as in the Sanctuary and moſt holy Place, nor myſtically as in Believers, but perſonally as his Fleſh was the proper Fleſh of the ſecond Perſon. Hence that name that is peculiar to the eſſence of God is aſcribed to him, Jer. 23. 6. He ſhall be called the Lord our righteouſneſs. Jehovah, the incommunicable name of God, he, that righteous branch whom Jehovah ſhould raiſe up, v. 5. ſhall be called Jehovah; he that is raiſed up is Jehovah, as well as he that raiſed him; the glorious name of God would not have been aſcrib'd to a ſimple man. He was in the form of God, before he took upon him the form of a Servant, and laid not aſide the form of God, when he made himſelf of no reputation, and in that diſreputed ſtate became obedient to the Death of the Croſs; upon this account, his Sacrifice is more worthy of acceptance, than the Sacrifice of all Creatures, As the mediation of a Prince is far more noble than that of a Peaſant, and the head of a King of greater value than that of a Subject; the Perſon of one David was more worth than ten thouſand of the common Iſraelites, 2 Sam. 18. 3. And as the Perſon of Chriſt, ſo the ſufferings of that Perſon, are of more worth than the Souls of all men, and their Bodies too caſt into the ſcale.

* Amyrald. de Trinit. p. 245.

* Phil. 2. 6. Ἶσα Θεῷ.

The dignity of Chriſt thus appearing, let us ſee how his ſufferings are dignified by the greatneſs of his Perſon.

(1.) His ſufferings were partly finite, partly infinite. They were finite, in regard of the time of duration; finite, in regard of the immediate ſubject wherein he ſuffered, his humane Nature; which being a Creature, could no more become infinite, than it could Omnipotent, Omniſcient, or Eternal. But in regard of the Perſon who ſuffered, the ſufferings were infinite; the Deity being in Conjunction with the humanity. That which is finite in regard of time, and in regard of the ſubject, may be infinite in regard of the object. As the ſin of a ſhort minute, and the ſin of a finite Creature, in regard both of the time when it is committed, and the perſon guilty of it, is finite; but in regard of the object, God, whoſe Glory is eclipſed, 'tis an infinite evil. As the greatneſs of an offence is to be meaſured by the greatneſs of the perſon whoſe honour is invaded; as, the ſtriking a King is Capital, when the ſtriking an ordinary man falls under a ſmall pecuniary mulct: So the value of a ſatisfaction is to be meaſured by the excellency of the perſon ſatisfying. As therefore an infinite ſin deſerves an infinite puniſhment, becauſe it is committed againſt an infinite God; ſo the Sacrifice of Chriſt deſerves an infinite acceptation, becauſe it is offered by an infinite perſon. The Subject ſacrificed, makes the Sacrifice infinitely grateful; as well as the perſon offended, renders the injury infinitely heinous. This was not the Sacrifice of a man, or an Angel; but of the Head of the Creation, the brightneſs of Gods glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, Heb. 1. 3. By which, his ſufferings were advanced into infinity, and the merit of them an infinite odour before God. There could not have been ſo much honour rendred to God by the obedience of a meer Creature, as there was injury offered him by the tranſgreſſion of the Sinner*. Though our ſins were not infinite in number, becauſe no number can encreaſe ſo vaſtly as to be actually infinite, ſince it is compos'd of Unites added to one another; yet had they been far leſs, they had needed an infinite virtue in the Sacrifice, by reaſon of the infiniteneſs of their guilt, becauſe the Majeſty of God and his Perfections are infinite, which are diſhonoured by ſin. Such a Sacrifice this is, which hath an infinite virtue of expiating.

* Amyrald. de Trinitate, p. 265.

(2.) This infiniteneſs ariſeth from the near and ſtrait union of the Divine with the humane Nature. It was not the ſimple offering a Sacrifice by the Son of God, which was ſo acceptable. Had the Son of God offered any thing elſe, though the Offerer had been infinite, yet the Offering had been finite, becauſe not allied to, and in conjunction with the perſon offering. It was infinitely valuable, not becauſe himſelf was the Offerer, but becauſe himſelf was the Offering, offering that which was in Conjunction with his Deity. Purg'd by himſelf, Heb. 1. 3. Offered himſelf up through the eternal Spirit, Heb. 9. 14. By the perſonal union, the Dignity was conferred upon the ſufferings of his humane Nature. If you will ſay, A Sacrifice had been infinite, only becauſe it was offered by an infinite perſon; you may as well call the meaneſt Worm in the World infinite, becauſe it was made by an infinite God, and in an infinite manner of operation. The Dignity therefore ariſeth from the unity of the ſame infinite perſon, in whom the two Natures were united; ſo all the actions of Chriſt, as Mediator, received their value from his Perſon. And by reaſon of the unity of his Perſon, that which was the act of one Nature, is attributed to the other: As when it is ſaid, Joh. 3. 13. The Son of man came down from heaven; i. e. that perſon who was man, though his humane Nature had not been in Heaven: And when his bloud is called, The bloud of the Son of God, 1 Joh. 1. 7. and The bloud of God; it was not the bloud of the Godhead, but of that perſon who was God.

(3.) In regard of this near Conjunction, the Godhead of Chriſt did influence every Mediatory action. (I do not take in all the actions of the humane Nature, that had no reſpect to his Mediation, any more than as they did refer to the ſuſtentation of his humane Nature, as his eating, drinking, ſleeping, &c.) This value was as inſeparable from his ſufferings, as the Divine Nature was inſeparable from the humane. In all that he did, he was the Son of God; as much upon the Croſs, as before his Deſcent from Heaven; in the loweſt pitch of his humiliation, as well as in his higheſt ſtate of exaltation; the Son of God as much, when at his Death he ſaid, It is finiſhed, as after his Reſurrection, when he ſaid, All power is given to me. The man againſt whom the Sword did awake, was Gods fellow when he felt the piercing edge of it, Zech. 13. 7. Indeed he laid aſide the manifeſtation of his glory, but could not lay aſide his glory; for then he might lay aſide his Eternity, Omnipotency, his Deity, and ceaſe from being God, which is utterly impoſſible. He was always the ſame, and as his Years, ſo neither did his glory fail, Heb. 1. 12. In all his ſufferings he retain'd the relation and reality of the Son of God, the union of his natures remain'd firm in all his paſſions, and therefore the efficacy of the Deity mingled it ſelf with every groan in his agony, every pang and cry upon the Croſs, as well as with the bloud which was ſhed: and as his bloud was the bloud of God, Acts 20. 28; ſo his grones were the grones of God, his pangs were the pangs of God, and were therefore ſubjectively infinite in value; yet did not every groan and pang procure our Redemption by it ſelf, upon the account of the infiniteneſs of its value in being the groans of God, becauſe they without Death did not anſwer the tenor of the Law; nor was the curſe of the Law, which he was deſign'd to endure, accompliſh'd in any act of ſuffering, without ſhedding of Blood, and that to Death, Heb. 9. 22. Without ſhedding of bloud there is no remiſſion; for as there was a neceſſity of the conjunction of the Divine Nature with the Humane, to make his ſufferings infinite, ſo there was a neceſſity of a full conformity to the threatning of the Law, and his Fathers order to make them efficacious for the honour of God and redemption of the Creature. The ſumm is this, as what the Divine Nature acted, was wrought inſtrumentally by the Humane; ſo what the Humane Nature acted or ſuffered, was made efficacious, and dignified by the divine.

(4.) In this reſpect God, his Deity, may be accounted as it were ſuffering, or as if he ſuffer'd. It was not neceſſary his Deity ſhould ſuffer to make the Sacrifice infinite, and indeed it was impoſſible. The divine nature is as impaſſible as it is immutable; yet in regard of the ſtrait union of the two natures, his mediatory actions and ſufferings, being the actions and ſufferings of the perſon, may be counted as the ſufferings of the Deity it ſelf in a moral way, and by legal eſtimation. As ſin is called Deicidium, not that it is ſo, or can be ſo phyſically, but in a moral way, in mens doing that which puts on the nature of deſtroying God, were it in the power of the Sinner, or poſſible in it ſelf; Or as ſin in Scripture is call'd a wearying of God, when omnipotency cannot be tir'd, and if God were tir'd, he were not omnipotent: But they carry themſelves ſo towards God, as would weary the moſt patient man in the World; and it is eſteem'd by God a wearying of him. As Chriſt was not guilty of ſin, but in a juridical manner, by reaſon of his voluntary ſubjection to puniſhment in the ſtead of the Sinner; So neither could the divine nature ſuffer but by way of eſtimation, as the perſon of the Son of God did voluntarily aſſume the humane nature wherein he was to ſuffer. As Chriſt hung upon the Croſs, as if he were guilty, ſo the divine nature in conjunction with it might be eſteem'd to ſuffer, as if it were paſſible; the Deity did ſuffer in an Eclipſe of its glory, and vailing the manifeſtation of it. Hence, As he had a Body, his bloud was the bloud of a man, yet becauſe it was the bloud of his perſon, it was the bloud of the Son of God, 1 Joh. 1. 7. And the bloud of God, Act. 20. 28. The immediate ſubject ſuffering was the humane nature, but the perſon ſuffering was the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. 2. 8. In that ſtate and condition he offer'd up himſelf, which the Apoſtle ſignifies, Heb. 9. 14. He offer'd up himſelf through the eternal ſpirit. Διὰ Through imports not only that the divine nature of Chriſt did offer the Sacrifice, but it ſeems to have the ſame ſenſe as the ſame word διὰ, Rom. 4. 11. The Father of them that believe, though they be not circumcis'd, διὰ ἀκροβυστίας. The Father of them that believe through Uncircumciſion, i. e. in an uncircumciſed ſtate, or Rom. 2. 27. who by the letter and circumciſion doſt tranſgreſs the law, διὰ γράμματος, through; not that Circumciſion was the cauſe of the ones Faith, or Uncircumciſion the cauſe of the others ſin; but that the one believ'd, and the other tranſgreſt in thoſe ſeveral ſtates. So Chriſt here, when he offer'd himſelf, was not in the condition of a meer man, but had a divine and eternal nature in the offering himſelf up unto God. 'Tis from this ſtate and condition of his in his ſuffering, that the Apoſtle draws an argument for the value of his ſuffering above thoſe of the legal Sacrifices, and their excellency to purge the Conſcience, and puts the Emphaſis of a how much more? The very foundation of our Redemption by his bloud, is his being the Image of the inviſible God, Coloſ. 1. 14, 15. In whom we have redemption through his bloud; who is the image of the inviſible God.

Amyrald. in loc. & de Trinit. p. 268.

(5.) Hence it follows, That the ſufferings of this perſon, becauſe of his dignity, were equivalent to an endleſs duration of puniſhment. Becauſe the infiniteneſs of the perſon did more than recompence the ſhortneſs of the duration of his puniſhment. As the dignity of his perſon did outweigh the perſons of all the Angels, and all men in the World, had they been without ſpot; ſo the time of his ſufferings, though the moments of enduring them had been fewer, in regard of his greatneſs, was equivalent to the eternity of the ſufferings of all Creatures; becauſe it was more that God ſhould ſuffer one minute, than that all Creatures in Heaven and Earth ſhould endure torments to an endleſs Eternity.

6. Hence

(6.) Hence it follows, That in regard of the dignity of his perſon, he was not only equivalent, but ſuperiour to all thoſe for whom he was a Sacrifice; and to all, for which he was a Sacrifice. The Sacrifice was as noble as the ſin was vile, and offer'd by an hand more honourable than the perſons, by whom the crime was committed, could be unworthy. The dignity of the perſon was greater than the meanneſs of the offender could be baſe. The ſin could not be more infinitely evil than the perſon ſatisfying was infinitely excellent. What an infinite object ſuffer'd by the offence, was made up by an infinite ſubject expiating the crime. The dignity of his perſon is the reaſon why his Righteouſneſs hath a ſufficiency in it for all unto juſtification of life, Rom. 5. 19, 20. He is ſuperiour to all that were to be redeem'd by him out of every Kindred, and Tongue, People and Nation, becauſe he is God bleſſed for ever. The Oblation is greater than the offence, and the Offerer than the tranſgreſſor. What wrath ſo infinite, that the Bloud of an infinite God cannot calm? What death ſo ſharp and ſtrong, that the Life of God cannot remove? It ſhould be no leſs a Cordial to us, than it is a ſavour to God, to think that our Sacrifice is as infinite as the wrath we had merited, and more infinite than the ſin whereby we had deſerv'd it. Our ſin was objectively infinite, as committed againſt God; our Sacrifice was objectively infinite, as offer'd to God, proportionable to the honour he would have repair'd; and ſubjectively infinite, in regard of the Sacrifice offer'd for the reparation of it. God regarded him as the Man his Fellow, when he ſtruck him; we ſhould regard him in the ſame relation, when we plead him. To conclude, ſince this Victim was equal with God, equal with him in Eſſence, equal with him in Nature and Perfections, he could not be diſpleaſed with the Sacrifice, unleſs he had been diſpleaſed with himſelf and his own Nature.

2. As the dignity of the Perſon, ſo the purity of the Sacrifice renders it fragrant to God, and efficacious for us. His freedom from taint and conjunction with the fulneſs of the Deity, are linkt together in demonſtrating the efficacy of it to purge our conſciences from dead works, Heb. 9. 14. Who through the eternal Spirit offered himſelf without ſpot. He was as free from blemiſh, as full of an eternal Spirit. The ſpotleſneſs of his humane Nature was neceſſary to his being a Sacrifice, and the Union of the Divine Nature was neceſſary to his being a valuable one. As the legal Lambs were to be without blemiſh, ſo was Chriſt a Lamb without ſpot, 1 Pet. 1. 19. He had no ſin naturally imputed (juridically indeed he had) no ſin perſonally inherent: he had no ſin naturally imputed, becauſe he was not in the loins of him who introduc'd ſin into the world, and deriv'd it to his poſterity. His extraordinary Conception by the Holy Ghoſt in the Womb of the Virgin was a bar againſt original ſin; whence by way of Emphaſis, he is called that holy thing, Luke 1. 35. He was infinitely holy as he was God, habitually holy as he was Man. Every faculty of his Soul, every member of his Body was elevated to the higheſt degree of Holineſs. His humane Nature was holy by the union of the Divine, holy by the effuſion of the Spirit, whoſe office it is to ſanctifie. Though by reaſon of the Divine Nature united, it was impoſſible but that his humane Nature ſhould be holy, (the perſon of the Son of God would never have aſſum'd a tainted Nature) yet the holineſs of his humane Nature did flow from the ſtores of the Spirit, it being not the office of the ſecond, but third Perſon, to ſanctifie. But the humane Natute in conjunction with the Divine, could not but be pure. Had that been tainted while in union with the Divine, making but one Perſon, the taint might have been called the Sin of God, as well as the bloud of his body be called the Bloud of God. A thing therefore not to be imagin'd poſſible; he was holy in every action. As he was Man, he was bound to all ſorts of obedience; for having taken the Nature, he was ſubject to all the duties incumbent on that Nature; and he did run through every Oeconomy, he obſerved the Law of Nature, conform'd to the Ceremonial part of the Moſaick Inſtitutions, ſubmitted to the Baptiſm of John, a mid ſtate of the Church, and therein fulfilled all righteouſneſs, Mat. 3. 15. the righteouſneſs of the poſitive Laws of God in every ſtate. He was holy in all his Offices, harmleſs as a Prieſt, faithful as a Prophet; holy in his life, holy in his death, no guile was found in his mouth, no inordination of murmuring in his heart. Had there been any ſpot (which is impoſſible) his Sacrifice could not have been for our ſins, it muſt have been for his own; if his own debt could have been paid by it, ours could not: his ſpot had been infinitely greater than ours can be; it had been objectively infinite as ours, and ſubjectively infinite, which is more than ours. The Rights of God had been more invaded, inſtead of being repair'd, the guilt would have been as great in the ſinner, as the ſatisfaction could have been in the ſufferer, a ſubjective infiniteneſs in the ſin, as well as a ſubjective infiniteneſs in the Sacrifice. But there was not, there could not be any of this; Satan could not charge him with any, but confeſt him holy, Mark 1. 24. The all-diſcerning Eye of God could ſee nothing contrary to his honour, but juſtified him as holy, Heb. 7. 26. Impurity had been contrary to the dignity of his Perſon: God could as well be unholy, as the Perſon of Chriſt unholy. His Holineſs therefore was infinite, though the holineſs of his humane Nature was not of it ſelf infinite, no more than his ſufferings were of themſelves, and in regard of the humane Nature, the ſubject ſuffering, infinite; yet the holineſs of his humane Nature deriv'd an infiniteneſs from his Perſon, as well as his ſufferings deriv'd from it an infinite value; ſo that there was an infinite Holineſs in this Sacrifice offer'd to an infinitely holy God. It had no ſtain to be purg'd by the addition of another bloudy Offering. It anſwer'd the deſign of God, terminated the reſt and delight of God. Needs then muſt ſuch a holineſs be highly acceptable to God, who loves and is delighted with righteouſneſs in his Creature, much more with that of his only Son, the unſtain'd and infinitely pure Sacrifice for us.

2. The Graces exerciſed in this Sacrifice, rendered it fragrant in the account of God.

(1.) His Obedience. The acceptableneſs of it to God did not ariſe ſimply from his dying, but his Obedience in his Death, Phil. 2. 8. became obedient unto death; and not only from an Obedience to the Law of Nature, and the Precepts of God as a Creature, but his Obedience to the Law of redeeming Love as a Mediator, and his delight in it, Pſal. 40. 8. As the diſobedience of man ſhook the reſt of God, ſo the Obedience of the Son of God ſetled the reſt of the Deity. Obedience run through the whole web of his life, he ſubmitted to a Body fitted for thoſe dreadful ſtrokes of wrath we ſhould have endured; a Body made under the Law, Gal. 4. 4. He delighted in the thoughts of performing the Will of God in our Fleſh; he came not to do his own Will; whatſoever his Father ordered him, that he ſpake, that he did, that he ſuffered, he laid down his Body when the hour was come appointed by his Father: It was not a ſimple but an affectionate Obedience, John 14. 31. I love the father, and as the father gave me commandment, even ſo I do, where principally his Obedience to the mediatory Law is intended, as alſo Phil. 2. 8. Obedient to the death of the croſs, which the Law did not oblige him to; the moral Law bound over the ſinner to Death, but the mediatory Law bound over Chriſt to Death in our ſtead. The Obedience to the moral Law or Law of Nature, as it concern'd the ſtate of Angels, was perform'd by him without any defect; in this the Obedience of Chriſt was greater than theirs, in regard of the infinite Dignity of his Perſon above all the Angels in Heaven, yet the rule of their Obedience was of the ſame nature: But in the Obedience of the mediatory Law, the Redeemer ſtood ſingle; as he trod the Wine-Preſs alone, ſo in the whole mediatory work none were in conjunction with him, none had any likeneſs or reſemblance to him. This was above the Obedience of all Creatures, not only in regard that it was the Obedience of him that was God, but an Obedience wherein he could not be imitated by any Creature already created, or that could be created, it being a work above the ſtrength of any created Being. It was Obedience under the higheſt provocations to reſume his Glory, and come down from the Croſs, and declare at that moment the iniquity of thoſe reproaches they caſt upon him. Obedience in the higheſt pitch of his ſufferings, Obedience in Heaven, practiſing that compaſſionate Obedience upon the Throne, which he learn'd by his ſufferings on the Croſs, Heb. 5. 8. acting according to his Fathers orders, preſenting his Obedience on the Croſs, as meritorious for his Members he left in the World. If the Obedience of Abraham a ſinful Creature, in his willingneſs to offer up his Son Iſaac a ſinful Creature alſo, was ſo pleaſing to God, that thereupon he makes him glorious promiſes; how much more grateful is the Obedience of him who was God, and offer'd not up a Son but himſelf, a pure, not a ſpotted Sacrifice? If obedience be better than Sacrifice, then Sacrifice is inſignificant without Obedience; the offering himſelf a Sacrifice according to the Will of God for our ſanctification, was the moſt ſignificant part of his Obedience, Heb. 10. 7. 10. In this he did exactly anſwer the mediatory Law as his rule, and God found the Will of Chriſt in the performance, fully conformable to his own Will in the Precept, more obedient to the Will of God in his offering, than Adam was diſobedient to the Will of God in his ſinning. Such a height and perpetuity of Obedience under all the circumſtances of temptations, the ſtrugglings of the fleſh, which could not but deſire the removal of penal evil, under the fear of wrath alſo, the ſence of agonies, and reproaches of men, whereby he teſtified, that he preferred the glory of his Father above the ſafety of his own nature, Obedience to his command above the contentment of his fleſh, and was ſwayed by the form of a ſervant to ſubmit, againſt the ſuggeſtions from his nature as a man, to deſire the paſſing it away; all this, I ſay, rendered his Sacrifice highly acceptable.

was

(2.) His Humility. His Humility is joined with his Obedience, as the cauſe of his exaltation, which was the evidence of its fragrancy, Phil. 2. 8. God loves to be imitated in his condeſcenſions to his Creature. The condeſcenſion of Chriſt equal with God, to the taking upon him the form of a ſervant, ſetting himſelf in the ſtead of the ſinner, the eclipſing his own Glory, ſhrouding it under the diſguiſe of our fleſh, ſubmitting to an harder piece of ſervice and a deeper humiliation, than any Creature in Heaven or Earth was capable of; to deſcend from Heaven to Earth, expoſe himſelf to the fury of Men and Devils without murmuring; to bow his head to the ſtroke, not of an honourable, but an infamous death, endure the wrath of a Father he loved, come down to the loweſt ſtep before he did re-aſſume the glory which was due to him, was an unexpreſſible and unimitable act of humility. Lower than this he could not humble himſelf. Since humility renders men ſo pleaſing to God, that he heaps upon them the greateſt teſtimonies of his favours, and richly diſpenſeth to them the doles of his grace, Jam. 4. 6. it muſt render his Son in thoſe ſufferings moſt acceptable to his Father; and draw from him the greateſt diſtribution of his favour, becauſe it was the greateſt act of humility, as well as obedience, that could poſſibly be perform'd.

(3.) His Faith. This reſolution of truſt he brought with him, and this reſolution he kept, Heb. 2. 13. I will put my truſt in him, cited out of Pſal. 18. 2. He had not a ſpark of infidelity, or any grain of diſtruſt in the goodneſs of God. He ſuffer'd for a time the torments of Hell, without the deſpair of the Inhabitants of Hell; he had a working of Faith under the ſenſe of his Fathers greateſt diſpleaſure, and confided in his love while he felt the outward and inward force of his frowns. The ſharpneſs of the Scourge, and the ſmart of his Wounds, beat not off his Soul from a faſt adherence to him. He had a Faith of the acceptableneſs of his Death for his Elect, and gave evidence of his confidence in the promiſe for a happy and glorious ſucceſs, in acting like a King, while he was hanging as a Malefactor on the Croſs, in diſtributing his largeſſes to the poor Thief, aſſuring him, that that day he ſhould be with him in Paradiſe. He let not his confidence in his Father flinch; he confided in him for the beſtowing that Royal Power upon him, which he ſignified by this promiſe of Paradiſe to this Criminal upon the Croſs: and both his obedience to God in not turning away his back, and his truſt in God for his aſſiſtance, are put together as the ground of his Juſtification, Iſai. 50. 5, 7, 8. The height of his Faith was to be diſcover'd in oppoſition to the unbelief of Adam; his humility in oppoſition to the pride of Adam; his obedience in doing all according to Gods order, in oppoſition to the diſobedience of Adam. By his active and paſſive obedience he glorified the Holineſs and Juſtice of God; by his humility, the Soveraignty and Power of God; by his truſt, the Faithfulneſs and Veracity of God: all which muſt needs render his Sacrifice as a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour and efficacious for us.

4. In regard of the full compenſation made to God by this Sacrifice, and the equivalency of it to all the demands of God. His Obedience was fully anſwerable to the

the Law, his active anſwer'd the preceptive part, and his paſſive the penalty; as he fulfill'd the righteouſneſs of the Law in his Life, ſo he underwent the threatnings of the Law in his Death; he obey'd the commands in our ſtead and ſuſtain'd the Curſe. He bore the ſorrows we ſhould bear, Iſa. 53. 4. Surely he hath born our griefs, and carried our ſorrows; ſpiritual as well as bodily. He took our nature, Soul and Body, to ſuffer in that nature what was due to our Souls and Bodies. Our whole nature had ſinn'd, and our whole nature muſt ſuffer; Chriſt took our nature, that he might ſuffer what was due to our nature. He ſuffer'd in his Soul, which is the greateſt part of our nature, as well as in his Body, which is but the caſe and ſheath of the Soul. 'Tis againſt the order of Juſtice, for the principal to ſin, and the acceſſory only be puniſhe. The puniſhment threatned againſt the firſt Adam, was the Death of the Soul as well as of the Body, the puniſhment born by the ſecond Adam was of the ſame nature; not a ſpiritual death, a ſeparation from God by ſin, that he was not capable of, but a moral death, a ſeparation from God by deſertion. When he cryed out, my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? He was forſaken of God in regard of the ſenſible comforts of his preſence, though not in regard of the inviſible ſuſtentations of his Soul. The Union of the two natures was not diſſolv'd, but the comfort of the Fathers preſence was eclips'd. Though he did not ſuffer Eternity of Torments, yet he ſuffer'd what was due to us; for Eternity of puniſhment is not primarily threatned in the Law, but ſecondarily inferred. Death was threatned, but becauſe man cannot ſatisfy by Death, therefore he lies under that Death for ever. He is kept in Priſon, becauſe he cannot pay the Debt which was due, nor repair the honour of the Law which was violated. Juſtice would always be ſtriking, and never contented. If the honour of the Law could have been vindicated, and the juſtice of God ſatisfied by the temporary groans of a Creature, not only the goodneſs of God, but the juſtice of God would releaſe him; but becauſe the juſtice of God could never have been ſatisfied, the perſon of the Sinner muſt always have been a Sufferer. Chriſt therefore ſuffering a Curſed Death, ſuffer'd what we ſhould have ſuffer'd; Death was threatned to us, and Death was inflicted on him; the Eternity of Death was accidental. As Chriſt obey'd the whole Law, yet not every accidental relation of the Law, as it reſpected men in particular ſtates, and particular Callings and Relations; as the Duty of a Parent to a Child, of an Husband to a Wife; not for want of a principle of Obedience in him, but for want of thoſe particular relations to which thoſe particular acts of Obedience were annext; ſo Chriſt ſuffer'd every part of the Curſe, but not the ſins conſequent upon that Curſe, by reaſon of the corruption of Man, nor the accidental continuance of the Curſe, which the impotence of man to ſatisfy, render'd him obnoxious to, but the ſtrength of Chriſt exempted him from. * He endur'd all that the Law impos'd upon Sinners; whether in regard of loſs by deſertion, or in regard of ſenſe by malediction; hence he is ſaid to be made a Curſe, Gal. 3. 13. To be made ſin, 2 Cor. 5. 21. And if ſo, he bore the puniſhment due to us, ſince the Law threatned no more than a Curſe, and Chriſt bore the Curſe according to the threatning of the Law; he ſuffer'd that which the Law demanded of us, and was made ſuch a Curſe as the Law requir'd. He ſuffer'd the torments of Hell without the iniquities of Hell, which were not poſſible to be committed by an infinitely holy perſon, he ſuffer'd thoſe agonies which were of the nature of the torments of Hell, and that deſertion of God which is the ſting of Hell. Nothing was omitted that was demanded by divine holineſs for keeping the Commands, or by divine juſtice for violating the Commands. As we were Creatures, we ow'd God a Debt of Duty; as we were revolted Creatures, we ow'd God a Debt of puniſhment. Since our fall ſin hath made us uncapable to anſwer the holineſs of God in the performance of our Duty, and our nature as Creatures renders us too weak to ſatisfy the juſtice of God by enduring the penalty exacted by the Law. Chriſt hath done both, and in anſwering the whole demand of the Law, as to both Debts, delights the holineſs of God, ſatisfies the juſtice of God, and by both repairs the Creature. If the Creature could have ſatisfied juſtice for what was paſt, yet it ſtill lay under a debt of duty for the time to come. If it had fallen ſhort of this, it muſt have re-aſſum'd its ſuffering; what a deplorable condition had this been, to have come out of ſuffering one hour, and return to it the next? But our Redeemer performs an Obedience that reacheth to the utmoſt of the Creatures duty, and endures a penalty that reaches to the utmoſt of the Creatures demerits. A recompence was made by the Obedience of Chriſt for the diſobedience of Adam, Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans diſobedience, many were made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one, ſhall many be made righteous; for what had the Law to enjoin which he did not perform, or what had the Law to inflict which he did not endure? Had he not done and ſuffer'd what the Law requir'd, how could he be called the end or perfection of the law for righteouſneſs? Rom. 10. 4. Had he not ſuffer'd what was due to ſin, he could not have made an end of it; and had he not done what the Law commanded, he could not have brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, Dan. 9. 24. He is λύτρον, Mat. 20. 28. ἀντίλυτρον, 1 Tim. 2. 6. a valuable Price and Sacrifice commenſurate to the demerit of our crimes; he ſuffered whatſoever was requiſite to diſcharge our Debts, and could not have been ἀντίψυχος, offering his Soul inſtead of ours, if he had not born in his Soul what we were to bear in ours; in regard therefore of the full compenſation made to God, it muſt needs be fragrant to God and efficacious for us.

5. In regard of the Glory Chriſt by his Sacrifice brought to God. The Glory of God was that which he aimed at, and that which he perfected. It was the Will of God which he came to do; but the deſign of Gods Will is to glorifie himſelf, and declare his own name in all his acts. The Glory of all the Attributes of God appear'd in the face or manifeſtation of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4. 6. They all center'd in him, and ſhone forth from him in all their brightneſs, and in a full combination ſet off one anothers luſtre; not only in his incarnation, but alſo, and that chiefly in his Sacrifice. Mercy could not be glorified, unleſs juſtice had been ſatisfied, and juſtice had not been evident, if the tokens of divine wrath had not been upon him; Grace had not ſail'd to us, but in the ſtreams of his Bloud, without bloud there is no remiſſion; Juſtice had not been ſo fully known in the eternal groans of a World of Creatures, nor could ſin have appear'd ſo odious to the holineſs of God by eternal ſcars upon Devils and men, as by the deluge of Bloud from the heart of this Sacrifice. Wiſdom in the contrivance, had not been evident without the execution. The Glory of the Divine Perfections, had lain in the Cabinet of the Divine Nature, without the diſcovery of their full beams; and though they were active in the deſigning it, yet they had not been declar'd to Men or Angels, without the bringing Chriſt to the Altar. By the ſtroak upon his Soul, all the glories of God flaſht out to the view of the Creature. When Judas went out from his company to prepare the way for his oblation, now, ſaith he, is the ſon of man glorified, and God is glorified in him, John 13. 31. The honour of God, and the glory of the Son depended upon this point, and in this laſt act threw off all their vails; the Father was glorified in appointing him, and the Son was glorified in ſubmitting to be a Sacrifice; the truth of God was glorified in bringing things to a period, and the Obedience of his Son was glorified in his perſeverance to the laſt act; his Grace was elevated to the higheſt note in the ſongs of Angels, an unſearchable depth of manifold wiſdom was unfolded, a depth of wiſdom more impoſſible to be comprehended in our minds, than the whole Globe of Heaven and Earth in our hands; ſuch a wiſdom of God in the Croſs, which the Angels never beheld in his face upon his Throne; wiſdom to cure a deſperate Diſeaſe by the Death of the Phyſician, to turn the greateſt Evil to the greateſt Glory, to bring forth Mercy by the ſhedding of Bloud. The ultimate deſign of this victim, was the honour of God in our Redemption; Chriſt ſought not his own glory, John 8. 50. but the glory of his father in the ſalvation of men. Needs muſt that be fragrant to God, that accompliſh'd the triumph of all his Attributes.

Uſe.

1. If this Sacrifice be acceptable to God, 'tis then a perfect oblation. If it had not been perfect in it ſelf, it could not have been accepted by an infinite juſtice, a juſtice inexorable without it. An incompleat offering, could have given but an imperfect ſatisfaction, and that had been as good as no ſatisfaction at all. God would would never have approved it; an all-ſeeing Wiſdom could not be deceived, a ſevere juſtice could not have acquieſced in it, a pure holineſs could not have ſmelt a ſweet ſavour from it. God as a Judge delivered him to be a Sacrifice, God as a Judge accepted him after he was offer'd; this Sacrifice therefore anſwered the ends of God, both ſatisfied his juſtice, and glorified his holineſs; how could God elſe judicially glorifie him, if he had not been fully glorified by him? If he had performed an imperfect Obedience, he would at the beſt have had but an half exaltation, or rather none; but ſince he hath been accepted with the higheſt pleaſure, and hath a glory in the higheſt pitch, he hath performed an Obedience to the utmoſt point, and touch'd the Goal deſigned him. Though there was Grace in Gods appointing it, yet there was no Grace given out to make it acceptable. God did not ſupply by his acceptation any defect in the Sacrifice; there was a meritorious worthineſs on Chriſts part, before there was an acceptation on Gods part; it was not perfect by acceptation, but it was accepted becauſe of its perfection. Infinite purity accepts nothing but what is perfect in it ſelf, or hath a relation to that which is perfect and agreeable to its nature. He doth indeed accept the imperfect Obedience of Believers, but not for it ſelf, but for this Sacrifice, to which by Faith it hath a relation. Had it not had a gratefulneſs in it ſelf, God could have ſcented nothing in it; he could not have ſmelt a ſavour where none was; it would have been as little pleaſing to him, as the burnt offerings under the Law. This could not but be perfect in the account of God, ſince there was the Humanity in conjunction with the Divinity to be the Sacrifice, and the Divinity in conjunction with the Humanity to be the Altar for the ſanctification of it; and the ſequel ſhows, that the offering hath been as valuable as the offence was provoking, ſince in conſideration of it, Juſtice forgets the injuries done to the Deity, and treats Believers as heirs of Heaven inſtead of Rebels; 'tis the inference the Apoſtle draws from the Prieſthood of Chriſt, Heb. 8. 12. and what is the fruit of his Prieſthood, is the fruit likewiſe of his Sacrifice. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt is alſo perfect, ſince the all-ſearching Eye of God ſees nothing in it to give him any cauſe of diſtaſte; 'tis perfect becauſe everlaſting, Dan. 9. 24. All the righteouſneſs of the holy Angels in Heaven, had there been numberleſs millions of them, had not been ſo pleaſing to God as this.

2. All Popiſh Doctrines of ſatisfactions, and all reſting upon our own righteouſneſs and inherent graces, are to be abandon'd. There is a natural Popery in the minds of men; fallen man is deſirous to ſtand upon his own bottom, and is as little content with Gods Judgment of things, as his firſt Parent was in Paradiſe. We are ſtudious of making God compenſations, applauding our ſelves in our own inventions and ſatisfactions of our own minting, unwilling to aquieſce in his Wiſdom.

(1.) This is an high Preſumption. If Chriſt were a perfect Sacrifice in the eſteem of God, 'tis a boldneſs and blaſphemy in us not to think him ſo; If it be perfect, what need of any thing from us to piece it out? If it were not ſufficient, God was much miſtaken to accept it; if it were not perfect, Chriſt had a want of ſtrength and holineſs to be a Sacrifice, and God a want of wiſdom to diſcern the defects of it; he was then deceiv'd, to count that ſweet which needed ſomething elſe to ſweeten it. Such additions are an injury to Chriſt; 'tis to make him but half a Sacrifice, ſince he hath offer'd himſelf to God without ſpot, Heb. 9. 14. Can we pretend to any other, without charging him with weakneſs and deficiency? Is not his Divinity enough to make his Offering compleat, without any ſupply from our corrupt Humanity? Can we acknowledge that perfect, that we think needs ſomething from us to ſtrengthen it? It muſt be then a falſe aſſertion of the Apoſtle, when he ſaith, Heb. 10. 14. That by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified. To make Chriſt in part a Saviour, is to make him in part no Saviour, and to aſcribe ſalvation to ſomething elſe as well as to him. All ſuch ſatisfactions entrench upon the honour of Chriſts Sacrifice, and pull the Crown from his Head to ſet it upon our own; or at beſt, aſcribe that in part to our ſelves, which is wholly due to him; by how much the more ſufficient it is for us without any addition, ſo much the more glory redounds to the Sacrifice. He needs no more of additions to ſweeten his Offering, than he needed of Cordials to ſtrengthen and ſupport him in the time of his ſufferings: They are rather Gall and Vinegar offer'd him upon his Throne, as the Jews did in the time of his oblation upon the Croſs. 'Tis an high preſumption in us not to be content to reſt in that, which is the reſt and pleaſure of God.

(2.) 'Tis a Folly. 'Tis as if a man ſhould ſet up candles to increaſe the light of the Sun, and eek out its beams. Can the righteouſneſs of a man add any perfection to the Bloud of a God? or perfect a work which could not be done by the Deity? If God ſtood not in need of any thing from us to perfect his work of Creation, how can man be ſo fooliſh to imagine, that Chriſt ſtands in need of any thing from us to perfect his work of Redemption? If that Sacrifice wants ſomething to render it efficacious, it muſt be a Sacrifice of the ſame kind; nothing that is of an inferiour nature can add an intrinſick value to that which is ſuperiour. What can man offer to God that can be in any ſort equivalent to this Sacrifice already accepted? All that we can offer to God is but as a few blaſted ears of corn, ſuch as Pharaoh ſaw in a dream, which can add nothing to the value of it. If there had been any failure in him, the defects of a Redeemer could not be repair'd by the offerings of the Captives; and if there be no failure, all additions, all other inventions of atonement are utterly ſuperfluous. How fooliſh will it be, to reſt in that which God never pronounc'd or own'd to be a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him? If all our righteouſneſs be as a menſtruous rag, Iſai. 64. 6. the offering it up to God is a noiſom ſtench, not a pleaſure. The beſt of our works and graces derive a ſweetneſs and value from the virtue of this Sacrifice, without contributing any thing to the ſavour of it. 'Tis a folly to leave a ſure for an uncertain road. All other reſts have no Divine ſtamp and ſignature upon them. God never found any ſavour in any other Offering. The Spirit of God never gave any ſo noble a Character as this, of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour, but as they had a relation to this as the Antitype of them. This one Victim ſends forth more grateful odors to God, and is more efficacious for the concerns of our Souls, than the joynt Interceſſions of Saints and Angels. Let us therefore be diligent in our duties, aim at the perfection of an inherent righteouſneſs, but never place our confidence in them, or equal them to the Sacrifice God hath ſo affectionately accepted. Did God ever ſet up his reſt in the ſervices of a Creature? Can this be ſavoury to an infinite Purity? Whatſoever is done without Faith, is but the offering of an Enemy, whatſoever fair colours it may be outwardly adorn'd with. The Scripture ſets an impoſſibility upon the head of all theſe, Heb. 11. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, to gain or keep his favour. Whatſoever is done without Faith, though of the higheſt elevation, is but a creature, and therefore not the object of truſt. And whatever ſignificancy believing works have, is from the tincture they receive from the bloud of this Sacrifice, wherein Faith dips them, as being Faith in the Bloud of Chriſt. Though Adam, while he continued in his created rectitude, might have entred his righteouſneſs as a plea; yet becauſe it was mutable, it had been no fit object of truſt for him. But ſince our revolt, all pleas of a fleſhly corrupted righteouſneſs are overrul'd in the Court of Heaven, and our pleas muſt run in another Name; all other things have ceaſed to be ſavoury to God, ſince they were tainted by ſin. Let men make lyes their refuge, and hide themſelves under falſhood, the falſe coverings of their own righteouſneſs, and think to ſhelter themſelves from the overflowing ſcourge, Iſai. 28. 15, 16, 17. It will be a miſerable ſelf-deceit, the hail will ſweep away ſuch a refuge, and the waters will overflow ſuch a hiding-place. All other hiding-places, but the ſmoke of this Sacrifice, are too weak to preſerve us from the overflowing waters of Divine vengeance.

3. 'Tis a deſperate thing to refuſe this Sacrifice which is ſo ſweet to God.

1. 'Tis a great ſin. As Faith in Chriſt redounds to the honour of God, as being an approbation of his mercy, juſtice and wiſdom, in the acceptance of this Sacrifice; ſo Unbelief redounds to the contempt of God, as ſlighting all the pleaſure, the wiſdom, the juſtice and holineſs of God took in it, as though he were delighted with a ſleeveleſs and unworthy matter. 'Tis to trample upon that which is Gods delight, accounting that which is ſweet to the Deity, loathſom to us; refuſing to be guided by Gods judgment of this offering, ſetting up our own wiſdom, not only equal with, but above the wiſdom of God; a regarding that which God is infinitely pleaſed with, as a frivolous thing, as though God had pleas'd himſelf with a trifle, or ſmelt ſweetneſs in a Weed. Gods acceptation of it owns a fragrancy in it; Mans refuſal calls it Gall and Vinegar, a rotten ſervice. God's language is, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleas'd, Mat. 3. 17. This is my odoriferous Sacrifice with which I am infinitely delighted. The language of an Unbelievers Heart is, This is an offering in which I can find no pleaſure. The heart of God and the heart of an Unbeliever, the wiſdom of God and the judgment of an Unbeliever, ſtand in direct oppoſition. How inexcuſable a Pride is it, to think that not worth our receiving, which God hath entertain'd with the higheſt affection? To count that unſavoury, which God hath accepted as the ſweeteſt Preſent can be given him in Heaven or Earth? Unbelief cannot be excus'd without accuſing God of weakneſs and folly. 'Tis a ſin againſt his Precept, as he commands us to believe; a ſin againſt his pattern, as he directs us by his own act to an acceptance of him. Other ſins are againſt his Soveraignty in the violations of his Law. This is againſt his wiſdom in his gracious acceptation of a propitiating Sacrifice for us. We diſown him as our Lord, and as our Pattern.

(2.) It will end in to a great miſery. God will not ſuffer that which is ſweet to him, to be ſlighted by man, without the recompence of a juſt indignation. The Vagabond Nation of the Jews bears to this day the ſad tokens of Gods vengeance upon them for the unworthy refuſal of ſo great a victim. Becauſe of Unbelief they are broken off from the root, Rom. 11. 20. and are depriv'd of all the ſweetneſs which God and Believers taſt in it. Nothing in the World was ever the object of Gods delight but this; nothing in the World can ever be pleaſant to him without this. To neglect it, is to neglect that which is the only thing God will accept, and ſo fall under the condemnation of Law and Goſpel too. 'Tis to reject God as a ſatisfied Judge in the flowings of his Mercy, to fall under God as a provoking Judge in the thunders of his wrath. If we will not comply with divine juſtice in an eſtimation of it, we muſt fall under his fury for our contempt. If this Offering be not cordially, and upon Gods terms accepted by us, we muſt be a Sacrifice our ſelves, Juſtice muſt have a Sacrifice for every Sinner, from himſelf, or another. God in honour will not pardon ſin without one, in greater honour he cannot but puniſh ſin upon the refuſal of this. Oh how *fearful a thing is it to fall into the hands of the living God? A living unpacified God; a living and reproached God, a living God who hath been counted a ridiculous Fool by a willful Sinner, in his accounting the bloud of the Covenant as an unholy thing. God will not have his wiſdom juſtled againſt by the folly of his Creature. No other Sacrifice remains for ſin. * No other mark of diſtinction was appointed by God for the ſecuring the firſt-born of the Iſraelites from the ſtroke intended for the Ægyptian Heirs, but the bloud of the Paſchal Lamb ſprinkled upon the Poſts of the Doors: had any fed upon the Lamb and neglected the ſprinkling, he had felt the ſharp Sword of the deſtroying Angel. The Lamb had been of no efficacy to him, not for any defect in that, but negligence or contempt in the Offender. The Sacrifice of Chriſt hath an infinite vertue to ſave. But it is no remedy to them that will not ſprinkle their Souls by Faith with the bloud of it: without this, we ſhall remain in our un-aton'd ſins, and have the Sword of Vengeance doubly whetted againſt us.

* Heb. 10. 31. compar'd with v. 29.

4. It adminiſters matter of comfort to the Believer. 'Tis ſome comfort to all, that they are in a fair way of being happy. The juſtice of God was the bar to God and mans meeting together. It was morally impoſſible in regard of Gods truth and holineſs, for man to be reſtor'd without a Vindication of that Law which had been broken; but now the honour of the Law is reſtor'd by this Sacrifice, God hath own'd it, the bar is remov'd, and where God hath found a ſweetneſs, man may find Salvation, if he be not his own enemy, and wilfully caſt away his own mercy. He gave himſelf a ranſom for all, 1 Tim. 2. 5, 6. ἀντίλυτρον, a ranſom in our ſtead, or a counter-ranſom, in oppoſition to the ſin of Adam, the fountain of our bondage; for all upon Goſpel-conditions. As he gave himſelf for all, ſo he was accepted for all upon the ſame conditions; for he was accepted as he gave himſelf.

ſelf. 'Tis a comfort to a diſeaſed Hoſpital, that a Phyſician is choſen and accepted by the Governors, that is able to cure every diſeaſe: 'tis no leſs a comfort to a guilty Soul, that there is a Sacrifice ſufficient to expiate every ſin. But there is a ground of ſenſible comfort to thoſe that believe. If when Chriſt walked upon the waters, and was labouring in the flouds of affliction in the days of his humiliation, he bid his Diſciples not to fear; how much more may we expel fear from our believing hearts, ſince he is ſat down upon his Throne, and the whole Merit of his Sacrifice graciouſly accepted? Let us repreſent to our ſelves this crucified, but now crowned Victim lying in the boſom of his Father, repreſent to our ſelves the Father full of delights, rejoycing in the views of this ſacrificed Body, drawing a perpetual ſtream of pleaſure and ſweet ſmells from the fumes of this Sacrifice riſing up continually before him. May not this calm our fears, ſince it ſmooths the frowns of Divine Juſtice? Did the people ſhout when the Ark returned, and ſhall our hearts be full of fears, when our Sacrifice is returned to Heaven, and hath found a gracious reception from that Juſtice we had ſo highly provoked? A diſconſolate carriage in an holy Believer implies, as if God had rejected it as mean and weak, rather than receiv'd it as perfect and glorious. A heavy walking is a diſparagement to the greatneſs of the Sacrifice, and the Wiſdom and Judgment of God the Accepter of it. If we ſhould eat our bread with a merry heart, becauſe God hath accepted our works, Eccleſ. 9. 7. much more ſince God hath accepted our Victim, by whoſe Merits our duties and works ſmell ſweet, that before ſmelt rank by Nature. We ſhould therefore draw as much ſweetneſs from this Sacrifice for our Souls according to our meaſures, as God did from it for his own content and ſatisfaction. It appeaſed Gods fury againſt us, and ſhould baniſh our jealouſies of God.

(1.) If once acceptable to God, then 'tis for ever acceptable. If once ſweet, it is always ſweet. God cannot be deceiv'd in his eſtimations, nor change his value of it, nor can the Sacrifice ever become noiſom. The ſtrength of the Divine Nature, that render'd it at firſt grateful, preſerves its ſavour for ever. He dyed to offer it, and lives to preſerve the virtue of it, Rom. 5. 10. The fragrancy conferr'd upon it by the Deity in conjunction with the Humanity, is as durable as the Deity it ſelf, Heb. 10. 11. He ſate down on the right hand of God after he had offer'd himſelf a Sacrifice, to exerciſe the Office of a Prieſt. God would have the Prieſt and Sacrifice for ever in his ſight. His Prieſtood is for ever, his Sacrifice therefore is for ever ſweet. Without a Sacrifice he could not be a Prieſt. As his Prieſtood hath a perpetual vigour, ſo his Sacrifice hath a perpetual freſhneſs and inexhauſtible virtue. For the exerciſe of his Office depends upon the continuance of the Offering. The bloud of this Sacrifice is not compar'd to a Pond, or water in a Veſſel, though of the largeſt capacity, but to a living and ever-running Fountain, Zach. 13. 1. A fountain ſet open for the houſe of David. Repentance was hid from the eyes of Chriſt in offering it for a ranſom from the power of the grave, and a redemption from death, Hoſ. 13. 14. and no leſs is repentance hid from the eyes of God in accepting it. The Covenant ſealed by it is everlaſting, and derives its duration from this bloud of the Victim, Heb. 13. 20. the virtue of it endures as long as the Covenant, ſince if that fail'd, the Covenant would expire, the ſuperſtructure not being able to ſtand, if the foundation be rotten. And from hence an everlaſting Righteouſneſs is deriv'd, that our perſons odious by Adam, may be beautiful by Chriſt. At the ſame time that he made reconciliation for iniquity, he brought in everlaſting Righteouſneſs, Dan. 9. 24. at the ſame time therefore that God accepted that reconciliation, he accepted that everlaſting Righteouſneſs for ſecurity and juſtification. He hath not pacified God for a few days or years, but for ever, Heb. 10. 14. If it were ſo ſweet in the expectation, as to be the ground of the juſtification of thoſe that hoped for it, 'tis much more ſweet ſince the oblation, and of a ſtronger efficacy. He is the Captain of the Salvation of all the Sons that are brought to glory, and that believe. Himſelf was made perfect through ſufferings, Heb. 2. 10. The twenty four Elders confeſt themſelves redeemed by this bloud, Revel. 5. 8, 9. The Patriarchs that dyed before him, as well as the Apoſtles, who expir'd after him. He was a Lamb, a Sacrifice ſlain from the foundation of the world, Revel. 13. 8. * Not in regard of Decree (that were a jejune ſenſe of the place, as it would be to ſay, a man were dead from the foundation of the World, becauſe it was appointed for him once to dye) but in regard of efficacy and a myſtical ſprinkling of his Bloud upon thoſe that liv'd at the beginning, as well as thoſe that ſhall live at the end of the World. If it had a favour with God for thoſe that lived before him, it hath much more a favour for thoſe that have lived ſince his actual offering and acceptation.

(2.) From this ariſeth pardon of ſin. He was a ſweet ſavour as he offer'd himſelf, and in the ends for which he offer'd himſelf. He was a Sacrifice for ſin. For ſo thoſe words περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Rom. 8. 3. which we tranſlate [And for ſin] muſt be underſtood, and read thus, And by a Sacrifice for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh. If offer'd for ſin, and accepted as an Offering for ſin, the conſequent of this muſt be remiſſion. Through the bloud of that Beloved, whom he accepted, we have redemption, even the forgiveneſs of ſin, Eph. 1. 6, 7. not of one, or two, or a few ſins, but all; he was made ſin indefinitely, all kind of ſin in the extent, as much made ſin as he was made accurſed; as he bore all the Curſe, ſo he ſatisfied for all ſin, the greateſt as well as the leaſt; ſo that the bloud of this Sacrifice cleanſeth from all ſin, 1 Joh. 1. 7. where Goſpel-diſpoſitions are found; from all that from which the Law of Moſes could not juſtifie, Acts 13.39. And by him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which you could not be juſtified by the Law of Moſes. What was impoſſible to be done by the Sacrifices of the Law, is compleatly done by the offering of the Redeemer. The ſtrength of this is directly oppoſite to the weakneſs of the other; that could not really juſtifie from any, and this is able to juſtifie from all. As it was not over-valued by God, ſo it cannot be over-balanced by ſin; ſince the Judgment of God hath paſt upon it with an approbation, the monſtrouſneſs of guilt is not too great for an expiation. Whatſoever our ſins are, yet they have their limits; but Gods infinite pleaſure in the Sacrifice ſpeaks the merit of it infinite, and the efficacy of it eternal. All ſins were at once laid upon the head of this Offering, Iſai. 53. 7. He ſuffer'd but once, and therefore at that one time all ſins by one act were laid upon his ſhoulders, 1 Pet. 2. 24. he bore them his own ſelf, and God accepted him his own ſelf, and accepted him as he bore them, and glorified him, becauſe he purged them, Heb. 1. 3. So that though he did but once offer himſelf, and that for all ſins in the bulk, he was receiv'd with a welcome, as if he had offer'd in particular for every ſin; and therefore there is no more need of an Offering, but a recourſe to that one Price. To think it is not able to expiate all ſin, is to undervalue the Judgment God hath given of his Son, to charge him with a miſtake, and to imagine, that there is more in ſin to ruine, than in this Sacrifice to repair.

(3.) Hence then there can be no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt. The Apoſtle layes down this concluſion, and confirms it by the reaſon of his being a Sacrifice, Rom. 8. 1, 3. They who are preſented by Chriſt, quickned by the virtue of this Sacrifice, cannot fall under the ſtroke of Divine Juſtice. If it was offer'd for thoſe that ſhould believe, it was accepted for ſuch as ſhould believe, it being accepted for the ſame perſons, and the ſame ends for which it was offer'd, and therefore thoſe perſons fundamentally accepted in the acceptation of it, and the ends for which it was offer'd, granted, and concluded on in the act of acceptation. The Apoſtle upon this ſcore breathes out a challenge to all to bring a condemning charge againſt him; the Juſtice of God, the Curſe of the Law, the charges of Conſcience, and the accuſations of Devils may be all anſwer'd by this, Rom. 8. 33, 34. 'Tis Chriſt that dyed, it is God that juſtifies. 'Tis Chriſt that is offer'd, and God that accepts. Juſtice cannot condemn; for though his Sacrifice was ſweet and pleaſant to all the perfections of the Divine Nature, yet Juſtice was the peculiar object of it. God as a Judge deliver'd him, God as a Judge accepted him: Juſtice requir'd it, and Juſtice is diſarm'd by it; Juſtice only was to be contented; Mercy requir'd no bloud; Wiſdom ſtept in to decide the controverſie, and make an agreement. If the condemning Attribute be ſatisfied, there is no condemnation to be expected. If it be ſweet to Juſtice, Juſtice cannot retain its former frowns; Juſtice cannot be pleaſed with that, and diſpleaſed with thoſe for whom it was offer'd, and accepted, and by whom it is received. 'Tis part of our happineſs, that we come not only to God as gracious, but God as a Judge, To God the Judge of all, Heb. 12. 23. As Chriſt was made ſin for us, ſo are we made righteous by him. He was made ſin to undergo a condemnation, that we might be made righteous and be above a condemnation. 'Tis more efficacious to divert the ſword of Divine Juſtice from the believing offender, than the Bloud of the Paſchal Lamb was to turn the edge of the Angels ſword from the houſe of an Iſraelite. The Bloud of Chriſt ſprinkled, cannot be of leſs force than the Bloud of a ſilly Lamb, ſince the efficacy of it was not as it was the Bloud of a Lamb, but the Bloud of a Type, deriving its virtue, not from the ſubject whence the Bloud was drawn, but from the Perſon ſignified, and the Sacrifice prefigur'd by it. Well then, his condemnation hath procured our abſolution, and Gods acceptation of him hath enſur'd our liberty; the ſweet ſavour of the Sacrifice hath overcome the ſtench of our ſins. Though God forſook him for a time, he hath now accepted him, that he may not abandon us for ever; neither the wrath of God, nor the malediction of the Law is to be feared. God by this one act hath ſtop'd the courſe of his vengeance, and laid aſide the thunders of Sinai. The flames we had deſerv'd are quench'd by the Bloud flowing from the wounds of this victim; the ſmoke of our Sacrifice ſhadows us, and in Gods acceptance of him, every Believer finds his infallible abſolution.

(4.) Here is a ſufficient ground for peace of Conſcience. This only can give a repoſe to our Spirits, turn our fears into hopes, and our ſorrows into ſongs. If it were a ſweet ſavour to God, whoſe infinite knowledge was acquainted with the leaſt mite, as well as the greateſt mountain in the number of our ſins, and whoſe holineſs found an infinite loathſomneſs in our iniquities; if it thus contented God, it may ſettle the agitations of our Spirits; and becauſe it ſtill'd fury in God, it may ſilence troubles in us; if it gave God a delight, who in the knowledge of our ſins, loathing of them, and condemning for them, is greater than our hearts, 1 John 3. 20. 'tis a ground of peace to us, who come infinitely ſhort of God in knowing our charge, infinitely ſhort of his holineſs in loathing our guilt, and infinitely ſhort of his juſtice in condemning our ſelves. That which hath been a ſweet ſavour to pacifie God, wants not a ſavour to appeaſe our Conſciences. Our great enquiry is in troubles of Spirit, how ſhall we appear before God? The anſwer from this Doctrine is, in the ſmoke of this Sacrifice; the impurities of our Natures, the ſin of our Souls, and the mixture in our Services are purified by this. The ſweetneſs of this Sacrifice hath ſweetned the terrors of the Lord, and rendred man a welcome ſupplicant to that God, before whom he durſt not formerly appear.

(5.) Here is a full ground of expectation of all neceſſary bleſſings. God accepted it as it was offered; it was offered, not only as a propitiating, but a purchaſing Sacrifice, and the acceptance of it was in the ſame quality wherein it was offered, Acts 20. 28. His Bloud was a purchaſing Bloud; he purchas'd a People for Heaven, and purchas'd Heaven for his People; he did not only ſilence Juſtice with its wrath, but merited Heaven with its riches, and ſhed his Bloud as a price for the pleaſures of Paradiſe. God judged this Sacrifice, not only enough to free man from miſery, but inſtate him in happineſs; not only to deliver our Souls from the pit, but to enlighten us with the light of the living. It was valued by him as a full compenſation for the wrongs he had ſuſtained, and a full merit for the bleſſings we wanted. When he found this ranſom, his voice was not only deliver him from going down into the pit, but I will make his fleſh freſher than a childs; a ſtrength and vigor of Grace ſhall be reſtor'd in him, as the radical moiſture in a Child; He ſhall return to the days of his youth, he ſhall pray to God, and God will be favourable to him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy, Job 33. 24, 25, 26. The Iſraelites addreſt to the propitiatory, not only for the pardon of their ſins, but the conferring of other bleſſings; this is the Bloud of the Covenant, and therefore procures for us the bleſſings of the Covenant. The bleſſings we want, are often in the Goſpel aſcrib'd to the merit of this Sacrifice, and not ſimply to the Grace of God. The Grace of God appointed the Sacrifice, but the bleſſings we receive, were merited by it; our victim was ſo pleaſing to God, and the Obedience in it ſo full of an infinite love to him, that he gain'd by it the affections of God, and a grant of whatſoever was moſt precious, to be beſtowed upon thoſe for whom he offered himſelf, that thereby the pleaſure he took in it might be fully evidenced.

5. Uſe

5. Uſe. Let us lay hold of it and plead this Sacrifice.

(1.) Let natural men imitate God in an acceptance of this Sacrifice. No man periſheth for want of Gods pleaſure in it, but for want of his own acceptance of it upon the Goſpel conditions. No bitten Iſraelite periſhed for want of a brazen Serpent, but for want of a look to it. Caſt not an aſperſion upon God by undervaluing that which he doth ſo highly prize; be guided by his infallible judgment, rather than by the errors of your own; think not of it coldly, as if you were indifferent whether you had a ſhare in it or no, ſince God receiv'd it not with an indifferent, but an unconceivable affection. Let that which is ſweet to God, be ſo to us; that which is ſavoury to that infinite Spirit, cannot juſtly be unſavoury to our contracted Souls. God found no ſweetneſs in the bloud of goats, or ſmoke of Incenſe, Pſal. 50. but only in this Sacrifice; nor ſhould any of us reſt in the tranſitory pleaſures of this life, and ſing a requiem to our Souls from periſhing enjoyments, but from the Bloud of the Lamb that endures for ever. There is no likelihood for a Creature to find reſt in that wherein God finds none; we are not ſure of our lives, but we are ſure we are guilty; and ſhall any of us be unconcerned about a powerful Sacrifice? Let a ſelf-abhorrency poſſeſs our Souls, without which we can have no eſteem of this Offering. As God's loathing of ſin made him value this for expiation, ſo our ſence of ſin will make us value this for our atonement. Let no man think that unworthy of him, which God thinks not unworthy of himſelf; he commanded the Angels to adore him for it, either when he brought him into the World to be a Sacrifice, or brought him into the World above, after he had by his Bloud purg'd our ſins, Heb. 1. 6. God would have men and Angels concur with him in the magnificent acceptation of our Saviour.

2. Let thoſe that believe, continually apply and plead it. This is ſo ſweet to God, that there is no need of a new Sacrifice, but there is need of a daily application; there was no need of a new Serpent to be erected upon every ſting, but there was need of a new looking up to the Serpent upon every wound. We can be no more without this one day to comfort our Souls, than we can be without Bread to nouriſh our Bodies; the remembrance of it muſt come up with the remembrance of every ſin in our Conſciences. In this only ſhall we find mercy for our iniquities, and comfort for our ſorrows. What was ſweet to God in the acceptance, will be ſweet to him in the pleas of it; it hath not loſt its ſavour, nor hath God changed his judgment. Chriſt is in the fragrancy of his Sacrifice with God, as well as in his Divinity, the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever. We contract a daily guilt, and we ſtand in need of a daily application to this. God will not make us perfect in this life, to keep up the continual credit of this Sacrifice, that we may live by Faith, and have every day ſenſible thoughts of the power of this oblation. Let all our pleas with God be founded in his acceptance of this; 'tis always to be pleaded by us, as it is always eyed by the Father. No pardon is granted but upon the account of it; in every pardoning act, God looks firſt with pleaſure upon this victim, and dips his pen in the Bloud of it to blot out the iniquity. No bleſſing is pour'd upon us, on which the merit of this Sacrifice is not ſtampt; and no petition muſt be preſented by us, but in the virue of it.

A DISCOURSE OF THE NECESSITY OF CHRISTS DEATH.

Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffer'd theſe things, and to enter into his glory?

THE words are an anſwer of our Saviours to the Diſcourſe of two of the Diſciples who were going to Emmaus, v. 13. He came incognito to them, while they were diſcourſing together of the great news of that time, viz. the Death of their Maſter, whom they acknowledge a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people, v. 19. confirm'd by God to be ſo by Miracles, and confeſſed to be ſo by the people. Yet they queſtion'd whether he were the Meſſiah that ſhould redeem Iſrael, and erect the Kingdom ſo much promiſed and predicted in the Scripture. They could not tell how to reconcile the ignominy of his Death with the grandeur of his Office, and glory of a King. And though they had heard by the Women of a Viſion of Angels that aſſur'd them he was alive, yet they do not ſeem in their Diſcourſe to give any credit to the report, but relate it as they heard it; though both by what they ſaid before v. 21. that they had truſted that it was he that ſhould have redeem'd Iſrael, and alſo by the ſharp reproof Chriſt gives them, v. 25. O Fools and ſlow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have ſpoken, we may conclude, that they thought it a meer illuſion, or a groundleſs imagination of the Women. Chriſt to rectify their minds, begins with a reproof, and follows it with an inſtruction, that what they thought a ground to queſtion the truth of his Office, and the reality of his being the Meſſiah, was rather an argument to confirm and eſtabliſh it; Since that perſon Character'd in the Old Teſtament to be the Meſſiah, was to wade to his glory through a Sea of bloud, and ſuch ſufferings in every kind as cruel and ſhameful, as that perſon in whom they thought they had been deceiv'd, had ſuffer'd three days before: and afterwards diſcourſeth from the Scripture, that his Death, and ſuch a kind of Death did well agree with the Predictions of the Prophets, and therefore beginning at Moſes and all the Prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himſelf. He might well ſum up in two or three hours hours time (wherein we may ſuppoſe he was with them) moſt of thoſe teſtimonies which did foretel his ſufferings for the expiation of ſin. The Propoſition which he maintains from Moſes and the Prophets, is in the Text, Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffer'd thoſe things? which is laid down by way of interrogation, but equivalent to an affirmation; and he backt, without queſtion, his Diſcourſe with many reaſonings for the confirmation of it; to reduce them from the diſtruſt they had to a full aſſent to the neceſſity of his Death, in order to his own glory, and conſequently theirs; the foundation of his own Exaltation, and the Redemption of Mankind being laid in his being a Sacrifice.

Ought not?

1. 'Tis not ſaid, 'tis convenient or becoming. As it was ſaid of his Baptiſm, Mat. 3. 15. It becomes us to fulfil all righteouſneſs. * His Baptiſm had more of convenience than neceſſity. He might have been the Meſſiah without ſubjecting himſelf to the Ceremonial Law, or paſſing under the Baptiſm of John. But it was impoſſible he ſhould be a redeeming Chriſt without undergoing an accurſed Death. No ſin was expiated meerly by his ſubmiſſion to the Yoke of legal rites, or the Baptiſmal Water of John; all expiation of ſin was founded only in his bloudy Baptiſm.

* Daillé Serm. de Reſurrect. de Chriſt, p. 226.

2. 'Tis ſaid, He ought. Not an abſolute, but a conditional ought. Not his original duty as the Son of God, but a voluntary duty as the Redeemer of Man. He voluntarily engag'd at firſt in it, and voluntarily proceeded to the utmoſt Execution; yet neceſſarily after his firſt engagement. Neceſſity there was, but not compulſion. All Neceſſity doth not imply conſtraint and exclude will. Paul muſt neceſſarily die by the Law appointed to all men, but willingly he deſires to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt. God is neceſſarily holy and true, yet not unwillingly ſo. Angels and glorified Souls are neceſſarily holy by their confirmation in a gracious and glorious ſtate, yet voluntarily ſo by a full and free inclination. Neceſſary by the decree and counſel of God: Neceſſary by the engagement and promiſe of Chriſt, neceſſary by the Predictions and Prophecies of Scripture. * All which cauſes of neceſſity are linkt together; becauſe the reſtoration of man requir'd ſuch a ſuffering, therefore it was from Eternity decreed by God, embrac'd by Chriſt, publiſht in Scripture; It was Ordain'd in Heaven, and ſet out in the Manifeſto of the Old Teſtament; ſo that if this Death had not been ſuffer'd, the Councel of God concerning Redemption had been defeated; the Word and Promiſes of Chriſt violated, and the truth of God in the Predictions of the Prophets had fallen to the ground. * The Decree of God was declar'd in many Prophecies before the Execution, and this will of God is an evidence of the neceſſity of it. Why did he Ordain it, if it were not neceſſary to ſo great an end? Though the end, the Redemption of man, was not neceſſary, yet when the end was reſolv'd on, this as the means was found neceſſary in the Counſel of God. The natural inclination and will of Chriſt, as Man, did ſtartle at it, when he deſir'd that this Cup might paſs from him. It was contrary to the reaſon and common ſenſe of men; How then ſhould that infinite wiſdom that wills nothing but what is unqueſtionably reaſonable, have determin'd ſuch a means, if it had not been neceſſary for his own Glory and mans recovery? But both the Father and the Son were mov'd to it by the height of that good will they bore to the fallen Creature.

* Gerhard. in loc.

* Daillé Serm. de Reſurrect. de Chriſt, p. 226.

Theſe things, ταῦτα. Every one of thoſe ſevere and ſharp circumſtances. The whole ſyſtem of thoſe ſufferings; not a Dart that pierc'd him, not a reproach that grated upon him, but was ordain'd; Every ſtep he took in bloud and ſuffering, was markt out to him. Since Chriſt was to die for the reparation of man, for the expiation of ſin; it was neceſſary that his Death ſhould be attended with thoſe particular ſharpneſſes that might render his love more admirable, the juſtice of God more dreadful, the evil of ſin more abominable, and the ſatisfaction it ſelf more valuable. The intenſeneſs of his love had not been ſet off ſo amiably in a light and eaſy Death, as in a painful and ſhameful ſuffering. And though the greatneſs of his merit, and the fulneſs of his ſatisfaction did principally ariſe from the dignity of the ſuffering perſon; yet ſome conſideration might be alſo had of the greatneſs of his ſuffering. Not only his Death as he was conſider'd equal with God, but his ſhameful Death in the circumſtance of the Croſs, is a mark of his obedience and a cauſe of his Exaltation, Phil. 2.8. Both were regarded in the Crown of Glory, and that high dignity wherein he was inſtated. So that the ſumm of Chriſts Speech amounts to thus much; be not doubtful whether the Perſon ſo lately ſuffering, whom you account ſo great a Prophet, were the Meſſiah. You clearly may ſee in the Prophets, that nothing hath been inflicted on him, but what was predicted of him. So that it is not meerly the malice of man that hath caus'd thoſe ſufferings, that was only a means God, in his infinite Wiſdom, uſed to bring about his own Counſel. He was not forc'd to what he ſuffer'd, but willingly deliver'd up himſelf to perform the Charge and Office of a Redeemer, which could not elſe have been accompliſht by him. And that glory which you expected, was not by the Order of God to be conferr'd upon him, till he abas'd himſelf to ſuch a paſſion. He will have a glory to your comfort, though not anſwering your carnal expectations. Be not dejected, but recover your hopes of redemption, which you ſeem to have loſt, and let them be rectified in the expectation, not of an Earthly, but an Heavenly Glory.

1. The nature of Chriſts ſufferings Theſe things.
2. The neceſſity, Ought not Chriſt to ſuffer?
3. The conſequence. And to enter into his glory?

There are two Doctrines to be inſiſted on from theſe Words.

1. There was a Neceſſity of Chriſts Death.
2. Chriſts Exaltation was as neceſſary as his Paſſion.

For the firſt, There was a neceſſity of the death of Chriſt. It was neceſſary by the Counſel of God, Acts 2. 23. Him being deliver'd by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God, Acts 4.28. It was not a fruit of ſecond cauſes, which God only ſuffer'd by a bare permiſſion, but it was a Decree of his will, fixed and determined, and that before the World began; an irrevocable Decree God made to deliver his Son to Death, for the ſins of men, and according to this Counſel he was in time deliver'd, and by the merit of his Death hath reconcil'd to God all thoſe that believe in him.

In handling this Doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

(1.) What kind of Neceſſity this was.
(2.) That it was neceſſary.
(3.) The Uſe.

1. What kind of neceſſity this was.

Propoſ. 1. His Death was not abſolutely neceſſary, but conditionally.

(1.) It ſuppoſeth firſt the entrance of ſin. There was no neceſſity that ſin ſhould enter into the World. There was no neceſſity on mans part to ſin. Though he was created with a poſſibility of ſinning, yet not with a neceſſity; he was created mutable but not corruptible; God made man upright, Eccleſ. 7. 29. His faculties, as beſtowed upon him, ſtood right to God. He had an underſtanding to know what of God was fit for him to know, a will without any wrong biaſs to embrace him, and affections to love him. God permitted him to fall, the Devil allur'd him to ſin; but neither the one nor the other did immediately influence his Will to the Commiſſion of his Crime. There was no neceſſity on Gods part, that ſin ſhould enter; though his wiſdom thought good to permit it, yet there was no abſolute neceſſity that it ſhould ſtep up in the World. He might have fixt man as well as the holy Angels, in an eternal purity. He might have enlightned the mind of man by a particular act of grace at the firſt propoſal of the temptation by the Devil, to diſcern his deceit and ſtratagem, and ſo might have prevented mans ſin as well as permitted it. Had not ſin enter'd, there had been no occaſion for the Death of the Creature, much leſs for the Death of Chriſt. The honour of God had not been invaded; there had been no provoked juſtice to ſatisfy, nor any violated Law to vindicate. * Some indeed there are, that think the Incarnation of Chriſt had been neceſſary without the entrance of ſin, becauſe they conſider God of ſo holy a nature, that it had been impoſſible for him to be pleas'd with any Creature, though the work of his own hands; ſo that neither Angels nor Men could have ſtood one moment in his ſight without without beholding him in the face of a Mediator. * Several had anciently imagin'd, that if man had continued in obedience till the time appointed for his confirmation, then Chriſt would have been incarnate, and man have become one myſtical perſon with him for his confirmation, as the Angels were confirm'd by him. But none aſſert the Death of Chriſt, but upon ſuppoſition of ſin. All Sacrifices for ſin imply the guilt of ſin antecedent to them. But after man had tranſgreſt the rule by his diſobedience, and thereby made himſelf uncapable of anſwering the terms of that righteous Law which God had ſet him; the Death of Chriſt became as neceſſary as his Incarnation, for the righting the injur'd Law, and ſatisfying offended juſtice, and the conveyance of mercy to the Creature, with the honour of God and preſervation of his rights. As Chriſts rejoycing from Eternity in the habitable parts of the Earth, ſuppoſeth the Creation of the World, in the Order of Gods Decree, Prov. 8. 31. So the Eternal Counſel of God for the making his Son a Sacrifice, ſuppoſeth the riſe of ſin and iniquity in the World. Had not man run croſs to the preceptive will of God, he had enjoy'd the preſence of God without a Sacrificed Mediator, and would have had an Everlaſting Communion with him in happineſs. But after ſin enter'd upon the World, there was need of a propitiation for ſin; an infinitely pure God could not have Communion with an impure Creature. It was not fit a Soveraign Majeſty ſhould make himſelf lavingly known to his Creature without a propitiatory.

* Jackſon, Vol. 2. Quart. p. 191.

(2.) It ſuppoſeth Death to be ſetled by God as the puniſhment of ſin. Some queſtion whether it were abſolutely neceſſary that Death ſhould have been threatned upon the breach of the Law: 'Tis true, As the Law depends upon the will of the Lawgiver, ſo doth the puniſhment. And it is in his liberty, if you conſider him as an abſolute Soveraign, to annex what penalty he pleaſeth. Yet as all Laws are to ſpring from righteouſneſs, ſo all puniſhments are to be regulated by righteouſneſs and Equity, that a puniſhment deſerv'd by the greateſt Crime, ſhould not be order'd as the recompence of offences of a lighter nature. But in the caſe of tranſgreſſions againſt God, no penalty leſs than Death, and Eternal Death, could according to the rules of Juſtice, have been appointed. 'Tis certain, ſin doth naturally oblige to puniſhment; 'tis ſenſleſs to imagine, that a Law ſhould be tranſgreſt without ſome penalty incurr'd. A Law is utterly inſignificant without it, and it is inconſiſtent with the wiſdom of a Lawgiver to enact a Precept without adding a penalty. If therefore a puniſhment be due to ſin, it is requiſite, according to the rules of Juſtice and Wiſdom, to proportion the puniſhment to the greatneſs of the offence. I ſay, this is the rule that righteouſneſs requires. And it is as natural that a crime ſhould be puniſht futably to its demerit, as that it ſhould be puniſht at all. Why doth any fault deſerve puniſhment, but becauſe there is an unreaſonableneſs in it; ſomething againſt the nature of man, againſt the nature of a Subject, againſt the authority of the Lawgiver, againſt the order and good of a Community. The puniſhment therefore ought to be as great as the damage to authority by the Crime. To order a puniſhment greater than the Crime, is Tyranny; to order it leſs than the Crime, is folly in the Government: Unrighteouſneſs in both; becauſe there is an inequality between the ſin and the penalty. Now ſuch is the excellency of Gods nature, and ſo inviolable with his Creature ought his authority to be, that the leaſt offence againſt him deſerves the higheſt puniſhment, becauſe it is againſt the beſt and moſt Soveraign Being. It ſeems therefore to us, that God had not acted like a righteous Governour, if he had not denounc'd death for the ſins againſt him; the offence being the higheſt, the puniſhment in the order of Juſtice ought to be the higheſt. What could be ſuppos'd more juſt and reaſonable, than for God to deprive man of that Life which he had given him, that Life which Man had receiv'd from the goodneſs of his Creator, and had employ'd againſt his Authority and Glory? As his ſin was againſt the ſupream good, ſo the puniſhment ought to be the depriving man of his higheſt good. The vileneſs of the perſon offending, and the dignity of the perſon offended, always communicate an aggravation to the Crime. The ſin of man being infinite, did in the juſtice of God merit an infinite puniſhment. And this is not only written upon the hearts of men by nature, that it is ſo, but that it is deſervedly ſo, Rom. 1. 32. That they are worthy of death; the juſtice of

God

God in inflicting Death for ſin, is as well known as his Power and Godhead; and the juſtice of it is univerſally own'd in the Conſciences of men, when they are awakened. Adam when he ſinn'd, did not think the offence of ſo great a weight; but his rowz'd Conſcience preſented him with thoſe natural notions of the juſtice of God, and ſunk him under the ſenſe of it, till God had reviv'd him by a Promiſe.

(3) It ſuppoſeth that after mans tranſgreſſion, and thereby the demerit of death, God would recover and redeem man. There was no neceſſity incumbent upon God to reſtore man after his defection from him, and rebellion againſt him. As God was not obliged to prevent mans fall, ſo he was not obliged to recover man fallen. When he did permit him to offend, he might have let him ſink under the weight of his own crimes, and left him buried in the ruines of his Fall. He might for ever have reſerv'd him in thoſe chains he had merited, and have let him feed upon the fruit of his own doings without one thought of his delivery, or employing one finger of that power for his reſtoration, whereby he had brought him into Being: For the reſtoration of man was no more neceſſary in it ſelf, than the firſt Creation of him was. As God might have left him in his nothing without producing him into Being, ſo he might have left him in his contracted miſery without reſtoring him to happineſs. Nor was it any ways more neceſſary, than the reducing the fallen Angels to their primitive obedience and felicity. The bleſſedneſs and happineſs of God had no more been infringed by the eternal deſtruction of man, than it was by the everlaſting ruine of Devils. Upon the ſuppoſition that God would ſave ſinners after his Juſtice was ſo fully engaged to puniſh them, no way in the underſtanding of man can be thought of, but the ſufferings of the Creature, or ſome one for him, to preſerve the Juſtice of God from being injured. Though the thoughts of ſome differ in other things, yet not in this. All ſay, it was not ſimply neceſſary that man ſhould be freed from his fallen ſtate. But ſince God would not hurl all men into the damnation they had deſerv'd, and treat them as he did the Devils in the rigours of his Juſtice, this way of the death of his Son was the moſt convenient way *; And indeed neceſſary, not neceſſary by an antecedent neceſſity (for there is no ſuch neceſſity in God reſpecting created things) but a conſequent neceſſity upon a Decree of his Will; which being ſetled, ſomething elſe muſt neceſſarily follow as a means for the execution of that Decree: as ſuppoſing God would create Man to be Lord of the Creature, and return him the glory of his works, it were then conſequently neceſſary that he ſhould create him with rational faculties, and fit for thoſe ends for which he created him; but the Creation of Man in ſuch a frame is not of abſolute neceſſity, but depends upon that antecedent Decree of his Will, of creating ſuch a Creature as ſhould render him the Tribute of his Works. So it is not neceſſary that God ſhould free man from the ſpot of ſin, and the miſery contracted thereby, and reduce him from damnation to felicity. But ſince he determined the redemption of him after the violation of the Law, which he had confirm'd by the penalty of death, God could not without wrong to his Juſtice and Truth freely pardon man, becauſe he is immutably righteous and true, and cannot lye. And ſince he is ſo righteous a Judge, that he can no more abſolve the guilty, than he can condemn the innocent, Exod. 34. 7. His Juſtice was an invincible obſtacle to the pardon of ſin, though men had implor'd his Mercy with the greateſt ardency and affection, unleſs this Juſtice had been ſatisfied with a ſatisfaction ſuitable to it, i. e. infinite, as the Divine Juſtice is infinite. And ſince neither man, nor any other creature, being all of a finite nature, were able to give a full content to the Juſtice of God, a neceſſity is then introduced of ſome infinite Perſon to put himſelf in the place of the fallen Creatures, cloath himſelf with their nature, and ſuffer in it the penalty they had merited, that they might be exempted from that, which by the tranſgreſſion of the Law they had incurr'd.

* Ptav. Theol. Tom. 4. lib. 2. cap 13. §. 10.

(4.) It ſuppoſeth Chriſts voluntary engagement and undertaking of this affair firſt. There could be no neceſſity upon God to redeem, nor any neceſſity upon Chriſt to be the Redeemer. But after his conſent, which was wholly free, his promiſe engaged him to performance. He was free from all bonds till he entred into bond; he was at liberty, whether he would be our Surety, no compulſion could be uſed to him, Joh. 10. 18. He had power to lay down his life; it implies a liberty either of laying down his life or not; a liberty of choice, whether he would dye for man or no; he had power, if he pleaſed, to avoid the Croſs; but he undertook it, deſpiſing the ſhame, Heb. 12. 2. * And after having once undertaken this charge, it was neceſſary for him to ſuffer; as it is in the liberty of a mans choice, whether he will engage himſelf in bonds for an inſolvent debtor; yet when he is entred into ſuretyſhip, both his own honeſty and the equity of the Law neceſſitates him to ſtand to his engagements, and pay the money he is bound for, if the debtor be ſtill inſolvent. So after Chriſt had promiſed payment for bankrupt man, he could not retract both in regard of his truth, and in regard of the tenderneſs, which firſt mov'd him to it. He could not violate his promiſe, nor deny his contract, both the order of his Father, and his own Righteouſneſs, did not permit him to caſt off this reſolution. Though it was naturally voluntary, yet it was morally neceſſary, and therefore often when he ſpeaks of his Sufferings to his Diſciples, he puts a muſt to them, Mat. 16. 21. Joh. 3. 14. muſt ſuffer many things, muſt be lifted up. And his Prayer from a natural inclination of the humane Nature, that this Cup might paſs from him, if it were poſſible, not being granted, ſhows it to be morally impoſſible after it was determined, that we could be ſaved any other way. God's not anſwering his own Son, manifeſts an impoſſibility to divert his death without our eternal loſs. Had not that promiſe been paſt, if Chriſt had been incarnate, he might have liv'd in the world with glory and honour; he might have come, not as a Surety, but as a Law-giver and Judge: But after that promiſe made by him to his Father, and that the Father had by the Covenant of Redemption laid upon him the iniquities of us all, and Chriſt on his part had covenanted to take upon him the form of a ſervant, Phil. 2. 7. and to be made under the Law, Gal. 4. 4. he did owe to God an obedience as our Surety, according to the Law of Redemption, as well as an obedience to the Moral Law as a Creature, by virtue of his Incarnation. Had he been incarnate without ſuch a promiſe of ſuffering, he had not been bound to ſuffer, unleſs he had ſinned; for having no ſpot, neither original nor actual, he had ſtood firm upon the Baſis of the firſt Covenant. But the obligation to the obedience of ſuffering was incumbent upon him, by virtue of the compact between the Father and himſelf. Had he been incarnate without that precedent compact, he had owed an obedience to God in his Humanity as a Creature; but as he was incarnate for ſuch an end, and was purſuant to the Law of Redemption, made under the Moral Law, he owed an obedience to both thoſe Laws; an obedience as a Creature, an obedience as Mediator; as a Son owes obedience to a Father by virtue of his relation of a Son; but if this Son be bound Apprentice to his Father, he owes another obedience to him as a Servant by virtue of the Covenant between them, the duty of obedience as a Servant is ſuperadded to that of a Son; ſo the neceſſity of obedience, as a ſurety, was added to the neceſſity of obedience as a Creature in regard of Chriſt's Humanity. So that this neceſſity is only conſequent, and ſuppoſeth at firſt the voluntary engagement of Chriſt. * For indeed his ſufferings could not be of infinite merit for us, except they had been voluntarily undertaken by him. If his ſufferings took their worth and value from his perſon, they muſt likewiſe have their freedom and election from his perſon. Whatſoever puniſhment, reproach and trouble the fury of wicked men brought upon him, was not ſuffered by an abſolute neceſſity, but conditional, after the engagement of his Will.

Propoſition 2. All things preceding his death, and all circumſtances in his death, did not fall under a neceſſity of the ſame kind. Upon the former ſuppoſition, his death was neceſſary, and could not be avoided. Death was threatned by God as a Soveraign; it was merited by man as a Malefactor, and was neceſſary to be inflicted by God as a Judge and Governour. And by virtue of this threatning and his engagement in Suretyſhip, it was neceſſary that he ſhould ſuffer, not as an innocent perſon, but under the imputation of a ſinner; A reputed ſinner, though he were perfectly innocent in his own nature, 1 Cor. 5. 21. He was made ſin for us. Yet Chriſt in his humiliation did undergo ſome things which were not immediately neceſſary to our Redemption. We might have been redeem'd by him without his his being hungry and weary. But this was mediately neceſſary to our Redemption in manifeſting the truth and reality of his humane Nature. We might have been redeem'd without the piercing of his ſide, and the letting out the water in the Pericardium. But this was convenient to ſhow the truth of his death. Theſe were neceſſary by virtue of Gods Decree, manifeſted in the Prediction of the Prophets, to be done unto him. But his Incarnation and Paſſion to death were immediately neceſſary to our recovery, and the atonement of ſin. We could not have been redeem'd unleſs he had ſatisfied Juſtice; Juſtice could not be ſatisfied but by Suffering; Suffering could not have been undergone, unleſs he had been incarnate. A Body he muſt have prepar'd for ſuffering; nor could he have ſuffer'd for us, unleſs he had been incarnate in our nature.

2. Thing. To demonſtrate this neceſſity. Having declared what kind of neceſſity this is, we may now demonſtrate this neceſſity.

1. To ſuffer Death was the immediate end of the interpoſition of Chriſt. The principal end of his undertaking, was to right the honour of God, and glorifie his Attributes in the recovery of the Creature; but the immediate end was to ſuffer, becauſe this was the only way to bring about that end which was principally aimed at in Chriſts interpoſition, and Gods determination concerning him. Death being denounc'd as the puniſhment of ſin, Chriſt interpoſeth himſelf for our ſecurity, with a promiſe to bear that puniſhment in our ſtead, for the procuring our exemption from it; therefore what puniſhment was of right to be inflicted on man for the breach of the Law, was by a gracious act of God the Governour of the World, and Guardian of his Laws, transferred upon Chriſt, as putting himſelf in our ſtead. His firſt interpoſition was for the ſame end with his Death, but his Death was evidently for our ſins. It was for them he gave himſelf, Galat. 1. 4. they were our ſins which he bare in his own Body on the tree, 1 Pet. 2. 24. for our iniquities he was wounded, and for our tranſgreſſions he was bruiſed, Iſai. 53. 5. our health was procured by his ſtripes, and therefore intended by him in his firſt engagement. He offered his Perſon in our ſtead, which was able to bear our ſin, and afford us a righteouſneſs which was able to juſtifie our Perſons; he offered himſelf to endure the curſe of the Law in his own Body, and fulfil the righteouſneſs of the Law in his own Perſon; he would be united with us in our nature, that he might make the ſins of our nature his own in ſuffering for them; and give to us what was his, by taking to himſelf what was ours; he took our ſtripes, that we might receive his medicine. This therefore being the end of his firſt undertaking, was neceſſary to be performed, for Chriſt is not yea and nay, 2 Cor. 1. 19. one time of one mind, and another time of another, but firm and uniform in all his proceedings, without any contradiction between his promiſe and performance.

That this was the end of his firſt interpoſition is evident,

(1.) By the terms of the Covenant of Redemption incumbent on his part. What God demanded, was complied with on the part of Chriſt. The demand of God was the offering of the Soul, becauſe upon that condition depends the promiſe of his exaltation, and ſeeing his ſeed, Iſai. 58. 10. When thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed; or as others, when his Soul is put an offering for ſin. The word אשם is properly a ſin-offering, and his Soul is the matter of this Offering, as well as the ſpring and principle of the offering himſelf to God. It was upon this condition only he was to ſee his ſeed; he had had no ſeed, i. e. none had been ſaved by him according to this Covenant, unleſs his Soul had made it ſelf an Offering for ſin. This Death of Chriſt was the main Article to be performed by him; this was the Eye of Chriſt fixed upon in the offering himſelf in the firſt tranſaction to do the Will of God, Pſal. 40. 6, 7, 8. Burnt-offering and ſin-offering haſt thou not required. Lo I come, I delight to do thy will, Heb. 10. 7, 8. The Will of God for a ſatisfaction by Sacrifice; the Will of God was the demand of ſomething above all legal Sacrifices, for he had no pleaſure in thoſe which were offer'd by the Law, wherein Chriſt complies with God, and it was ſomething which was not to fall ſhort of, but ſurmount thoſe legal Offerings. The denial of any pleaſure or content in them, implies a demand of an higher pleaſure and content, than all or any of them could afford. To this Chriſt give his full conſent, and offers himſelf according to the Will of God to be a Sacrifice, and puts himſelf in the place of thoſe ſin-offerings wherein God had no pleaſure; as if he ſhould have ſaid, a ſin-offering Lord thou wilt have, and one proportionable to the greatneſs of the offence; ſince none elſe can be ſutable to an infinite Majeſty, I will be the ſin-offering, and anſwer thy will in this; and therefore the Apoſtle infers, Heb. 10. 10. that the offering the Body of Chriſt for our ſanctificaion, our reſtoration, was the particular Will of God in this affair, which Will, Chriſt particularly promiſes in that eternal tranſaction to perform, Galat. 1. 4. Who hath given himſelf for our ſins according to the will of God; and indeed, God could not have been ſaid to enter into his reſt at the foundation of the World without this tranſaction, as he is ſaid to do, Heb. 4. for foreſeeing that an univerſal ſtain and diſorder would over-ſpread the World by ſin; that the glory which ſhould naturally iſſue to him from the Creatures, would meet with an obſtacle from it, and no way be left for the glorifying of any other Attributes after ſin, but his Power and Juſtice in the due and righteous puniſhment of the Creature; he could not take any pleaſure in the works of his hands, had not the ſecond perſon ſtood up as a Sacrifice of atonement to purify the beſpotted World, rectify the diſorder, and render a content to the juſtice of God, that all the other Attributes of God in the Creation might have their due glory perpetuated and elevated. It was in this one perſon, and that by his bloud, that God found the beſt way and method to gather together thoſe things which ſin had ſcatter'd, Eph. 1. 7, 10. And the firſt promiſe in Paradiſe after the fall, of the bruiſing the Serpents Head, in having the Seed of the Womans Heel bruis'd by the Serpent, intending thereby his Death (as is clear'd up by conſidering the Revelations of God afterwards) ſhows that this was fixed in him, ſince it is moſt likely it was the ſecond perſon appear'd to Adam, and made that promiſe; this was the firſt Promiſe to man founded upon this Covenant of Redemption.

(2.) The command that Chriſt receiv'd to dy, manifeſts his interpoſition for this end. * He was made under the Law, and his Death is call'd obedience, Phil. 2. 8. Obedience implies a Command as the rule of it. Obedience to the moral Law engag'd him not to dy for us: It had bound him over to Death, had he been a tranſgreſſor of it, but conſider'd in it ſelf, it obliged him not, being innocent, to ſuffer Death for thoſe that were Delinquents. Obedience therefore in regard of his Death muſt anſwer to a particular command of God, flowing from ſome other act of his will than what was formally expreſt in the moral Law. Such a command he receiv'd from his Father, To lay down his life, John 10. 18. Which ſuppoſeth the free proffer of himſelf to a ſtate of humiliation for ſuch an end as dying. Had it not been Obedience to a Command, God had not been bound to accept his Offering. Though in it ſelf and its own nature, upon the Tryal of God it would have been found ſufficient, yet it had been a juſt exception, Who hath requir'd this at your hands? If he had not offer'd himſelf to this purpoſe, he had not been Gods voluntary Servant; and if he had not receiv'd a Law in order to the performance of what he offer'd, he had not been Gods righteous ſervant, as he is called, Iſa. 53. 11. there being no rule whereby to meaſure his righteouſneſs in this act. The concurrence of both theſe made his Death neceſſary and acceptable. Though as I ſaid before, this command of dying for us was not formally any command of the moral Law, yet after once he had receiv'd this order, and obliged himſelf to the performance of it, the moral Law oblig'd him to the higheſt manner of performing this, i. e. with the higheſt love to God and his Neighbour, whoſe nature he had taken, and thereby became our Kinſman. Since God was diſhonour'd and man damag'd by ſin, his love to the glory of God, and the Salvation of man were to be with the greateſt intenſeneſs; and this the moral Law enjoins in all acts we undertake for God.

* Cocc. de Fœd. cap. 5. p. 117.

(3.) If he had not interpoſ'd himſelf for this end, he could not have ſuffer'd. Since God paſſed ſuch a judgment on him, and laid upon him the iniquities of us all, there muſt be ſome precedent act of Chriſt for this end; For it was not juſt with God to force any to bear the puniſhment of anothers ſin. The juſtice of God in his dealings with man is regulated by his own Law, he inflicts nothing but what his Law hath enjoin'd. To puniſh without Law, and a tranſgreſſion of it, is Injuſtice. No Law of God ever threatned puniſhment to one in every reſpect innocent. Chriſt by a free act of his own, put himſelf into the ſtate of a reputed nocent, and by his interpoſition for us, as a ſurety, was counted by God as one perſon with us; as a Surety and a Debtor are in a legal and juridical account as one perſon, and what the Debtor is liable to in regard of that Debt for which the ſurety is bound, whether it be a pecuniary or criminal Debt, the ſurety being conſider'd as one perſon with him, is to undergo. Chriſt's ſubſtituting himſelf in our ſtead, was to this end, that the ſins of thoſe that God had given him, might be imputed to him; for he proffer'd himſelf to make his Soul an offering for ſin; it could be no ſin of his own; ſin he did not, ſin he could not; It muſt be anothers ſin transferr'd upon him in a juridical manner; transferr'd I ſay upon him, not by any transfuſion of our ſins into Chriſt, by way of inherency, but by imputation, without which he could not be a Sufferer. For what reaſon, what juſtice had there been to expoſe one to ſuffering, that was wholly innocent, and had no ſin, neither by inherency nor imputation? How could any be liable to puniſhment, that could not in any manner be regarded as guilty? To be under judgment, ſuppoſeth a mans own crime, or the crimes of others. Since God therefore made him to be ſin for us, 2 Cor 5. 21. and could not in juſtice make him ſo without his own conſent, his conſent then in the firſt offer of his mediation was to be made ſin for us, i. e. to bear our ſins. He offered himſelf for the ſame end for which God accepted him, and for which God uſed him. Purſuant to this offer of himſelf, he was made under the Law, and put into ſuch a ſtate and condition, by his inveſting himſelf with the Humane Nature, as that the Law might make its demands of him, and receive the penalties which were due by it for the offence.

Cocc. de Fœd. Cap. 5. p. 118, 119.

Add to this, * The giving of ſome to Chriſt to ſave, John 17. 8. John 6. 39. which preſuppoſeth the obligation of Chriſt to Death; for after ſin the Law being to be vindicated, and Juſtice glorified, Gods committing ſome to him to ſave, preſuppoſeth his engagement to ſatisfie the Law and Juſtice on their behalf. It was for this end alſo he came to the hour of his Death, John 12. 27. and his Prayer to his Father to ſave him from this hour had been groundleſs, if he had not paſt his word to his Father to enter upon that hour. What need he have prayed to his Father to ſave him, who might have ſaved himſelf, if there had been no antecedent obligation to undertake this task?

He thus interpoſing himſelf for this end, it was neceſſary he ſhould dye. For,

[1.] Elſe none could have been ſaved from the foundation of the World. Some were ſaved before his actual Death upon the Croſs. God was the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, but God is the God of the living, not of the dead, Mat. 22. 32. they therefore lived in his ſight before the actual oblation of Chriſt upon the Croſs; but they could no more have been ſaved without the credit of this Death of Chriſt in our nature, than the fallen Angels could have been ſaved. The reaſon they are not ſaved, is rendered by the Apoſtle, Heb. 2. 16. becauſe Chriſt took not their nature: his taking our nature therefore, and dying in it, is the cauſe of any mans ſalvation that lived after his coming; his promiſe of taking our nature, and dying in it, is the cauſe of the ſalvation of any that lived before. The Apoſtles reaſoning would not elſe ſtand good; had Chriſt aſſum'd the Angels nature, they would have been ſaved; had not Chriſt then aſſumed our nature, we could not have been ſaved; and had he not promis'd to aſſume our nature, none could have been ſaved. He could not have been called the Captain of the ſalvation of all the Sons that are brought to glory, whereof many were before his coming, Heb. 2. 10. They muſt have been ſaved upon the account of that future Death, or elſe there muſt be ſome other name beſides that of Chriſt whereby they were ſaved, but that there is not, Acts 4. 12. Faith had not been always the way of Salvation. Chriſt had began to be a Mediator and Redeemer at the time of his Death, and not before, and ſo had not been in that relation, the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever. Had he not dyed, he could not have been ſet out with any good ground before his coming as an object of Faith. The promiſes of him had wanted their due foundation, the predictions of him had been groundleſs, and conſequently the Faith and Hope of the antient Believers had been in vain. Tis certain, all that were ſaved, were ſaved upon the account of his Death; for the merit of his Death might have an influence before it was ſuffered, it being a moral, not a natural cauſe of Salvation; as many times a Priſoner is delivered upon the promiſe of a ranſom before the actual payment of it.

[2.] Since ſome were ſaved before upon the account of his future Death, had he not dyed, God had been highly diſhonoured. Had not Chriſt performed his promiſe of ſuffering, and thereby ſatisfying the Juſtice of God, God having ſaved many before his Incarnation upon the credit of this promiſe, had received a manifeſt wrong. It would have argued a weakneſs in him to lay ſuch ſtreſs upon that which would not be full and ſecure, which would never have been accompliſh'd. God had not been omniſcient, but had been deceiv'd in his foreknowledge, had his expectations been fruſtrated. For what was the reaſon God ſav'd any before, but upon the credit of this ranſom, which was promiſed to be paid in time, and his foreknowledge that when the term came, the Surety would not be wanting to diſcharge himſelf of his promiſe? Had not then Chriſt really ſuffer'd and accompliſh'd what he had promiſed, God had ſuffered in his Honour, and all things could not have been ſaid to be preſent to him, he would have been deceiv'd. As if a Priſoner be delivered upon the promiſe of a ranſom, and the ranſom be not paid according to agreement, the Perſon that hath delivered the Priſoner ſuffers in point of wiſdom, in truſting a Perſon that hath not been as good as his word, and is defeated of that which is in Juſtice due to him. Again, ſince God had admitted ſome to happineſs before the actual ſuffering of Chriſt, had not Chriſt performed what he had actually undertaken, God muſt have renounc'd either his Juſtice or his Mercy; his Juſtice, had he let ſinners go unpuniſh'd, and then he had deny'd in part his own name, which is by no means to clear the guilty, Exod. 34. 7. or elſe he muſt have puniſhed ſin in the Perſons of thoſe whom he had already brought to happineſs; and had he done ſo, how had the honour of his mercy ſuffered in turning them out of that felicity wherein he had always plac'd them? Some therefore make the remiſſion of the ſins paſt before the coming of Chriſt, not to be properly a full Pardon, but a paſſing by, the full remiſſion not being to be given till the actual payment was made; and indeed the word the Apoſtle uſeth in that place, Rom. 3. 25. is different, πάρεσις, a paſſing by, a word not uſed for pardon in all the New Teſtament, but ἄφεσις. Had not Chriſt ſuffered, there had been nothing of the Righteouſneſs of God manifeſted in the remiſſion of ſins which were paſt; the end of God had been fruſtrated, it being his end in the Death of Chriſt, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, to declare at this time his Righteouſneſs, i. e. what his Righteouſneſs was in paſſing by ſins before committed, to declare that he pardoned no ſins before, without an eye to this ſatisfactory Death of his Son; but that in all his former proceedings he kept cloſe to the rules of his infinite Juſtice. Now had not Chriſt dyed according to his engagement, God had highly ſuffer'd in his Honour, his Omniſcience had been defeated, God had been deceived in the credit he gave, his Righteouſneſs had not been manifeſted, his Juſtice had ſuffered, or his Mercy to his poor Creatures had been damm'd up for ever from flowing out upon them.

2. The veracity of God in ſetling the penalty of Death upon tranſgreſſion, made it neceſſary for redemption. God paſt his Word that Death ſhould be the puniſhment of ſin, Gen. 2. 17. the Veracity of God ſtood engag'd to make this Word good upon the conditions expreſt. The Sentence was immutable, and the Word that went out of Gods mouth muſt ſtand; had it been revok'd without inflicting the puniſhment, the Faithfulneſs and Righteouſneſs of God, in regard of his Word, could not have been juſtified; God cannot ly or deny himſelf, Tit. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 2. 13. his truth is not a quality in him, but himſelf, his Eſſence. Had he then, after ſo ſolemnly pronouncing, without any reverſe, that the wages of ſin ſhould be no leſs than Death, been careleſs of his own word, and left ſin unpuniſhed, God had made a breach upon his own Nature, and had infringed his own Happineſs; for a lye or falſity is the fountain and original of all evil and miſery. Suppoſing

God had other ways to deal with man (though it is beyond the capacity of man to imagine any other way of Gods Government of him, or any intellectual and rational Creatures, than by a Law, and a penalty annext to that Law, which otherwiſe would have prov'd inſignificant) yet after his Wiſdom had ſetled this Law, and the threatning had paſt his Royal and immutable Word, it was no longer arbitrary, but neceſſary by the Soveraign Authority, that either the ſinner himſelf, or ſome ſurety in his ſtead, ſhould ſuffer the Death the ſinner had incurr'd by the violation of the Precept; we muſt either pay our ſelves, or ſome other pay for us, what we ſtand bound in to the Juſtice of God. Impunity had been an invaſion of Gods Veracity, which is as immutable as his Nature; ſince therefore the inflicting of Death upon tranſgreſſion was the real intent of God, upon the commiſſion of ſin Death muſt enter upon man, otherwiſe God would be a diſregarder of himſelf, and his threatnings a meer Scar-crow.

(1.) Had God violated his word, he had rendred himſelf an unfit object of truſt. He had expos'd all the promiſes or threatnings he ſhould have made after mans impunity to the mockery and contempt of the Offender, and excluded his word from any credit with man. Had God ſet man right again by a meer act of mercy, without any regard to his word paſt, and inflicting any puniſhment upon the Offender, though he had made man more glorious promiſes than at the firſt, he would have had little reaſon to truſt God. If he had found God unfaithful to himſelf in the word of his threatning, he could not have concluded that he would have been true to the word of his Promiſe; but might reaſonably have ſuſpected, that he would falſify in that, as he had done him in the other. Had his truth fail'd in the concerns of his Juſtice, it had been of little value in thoſe of his mercy. He might be as careleſs of the honour of the one, as of that of the other. If a man fail of his word in one thing, there is little reaſon to believe him in another. The righteouſneſs of God would as little have engag'd him to fulfil his promiſe, as it did engage him to fulfil his threatning. God would have declar'd himſelf by ſuch an act, not willing to be believ'd, not worthy to be truſted, fear'd, lov'd, becauſe regardleſs of his truth and righteouſneſs. And by the ſame reaſon that he denied himſelf fit to be truſted, he would deny himſelf to be a God, becauſe he would thereby have acknowledg'd a weakneſs incompatible to the nature of the Deity. How could any truſt him who had deny'd himſelf, by reſtoring a life to him, without righteouſneſs and truth on his part? It had rather been an encouragement to them to diſown him to be any fit object for their confidence, ſince the great ground of truſt among men, is their faithfulneſs to their word. Upon the ſuppoſition of Gods reſtoring the Creature, the doing it by the intervention of a ſatisfaction, was very neceſſary to fix the Creatures confidence in God; for when he ſees God ſo righteous and true, that he will not do any thing againſt the rules of his truth and juſtice, he hath the more ground to believe God after a ſatisfaction made, that he will preſerve the honour of his Wiſdom in approving and accepting that ſatisfaction, and his Truth in promiſing, declar'd upon it.

(2.) Had God violated his word, he had juſtify'd the Devil in his Argument for mans Rebellion. The Devils Argument is a plain contradiction to Gods threatning. God affirms the certainty of Death, the Devil affirms the certainty of Life, Gen. 3. 4. Te ſhall not ſurely dy. Had no puniſhment been inflicted, the Devil had not been a Lyar from the beginning. God would have honour'd the tempter, and juſtified the charge he brought againſt him, and own'd that Envy the Devil accus'd him of, and thereby have render'd the Devil the fitteſt object for love and truſt. As the Devil charg'd God with a lie, ſo had no puniſhment been inflicted, God would have condemn'd himſelf, and declar'd Satan inſtead of a lying Tempter to be the trueſt Counſellor. He had expos'd himſelf to contempt, and advanc'd the credit of his Enemy, and ſo ſet up the Devil as a God inſtead of himſelf. It concern'd God therefore to manifeſt himſelf true, and the Devil a Lyar; and acquaint the World, that not Himſelf, but the Evil Spirit, was their Deceiver, and that he meant as he ſpake.

(3.) Suppoſe God might have alter'd his Word, yet would it conſiſt with his Wiſdom to do it at that time? It was the firſt word of threatning that ever went out of his lips to man: and had he wholly diſpens'd with it, after he had fenc'd his Precept with ſuch a penalty, and ſeen ſuch a contradiction in his new created ſubject to his Truth, Authority, and Righteouſneſs, ſuch a daring contempt of his rich and manifeſted goodneſs; he had emboldned the Apoſtate Creature in his ſin, and encourag'd him to a freſh Rebellion as ſoon as ever he had been ſet right again by an infinite Mercy, without any mark of his Juſtice. Men would have thought God had either been miſtaken in the reaſon of his threatning, and had ſetled a penalty too great for the offence; or had wanted power to maintain his Authority in inflicting the due puniſhment, had he indulg'd man in this ſin. What influence could any of his Precepts have had upon the Souls of men, if he had ſo lightly paſt by the tranſgreſſion of his Law? Would he not have been leſs ſecur'd in the rights of his Authority for the future, than he had been for the time paſt? Would not man have been encouraged to have run the ſame risk of diſobedience in hopes of an eaſie Pardon, and continued the attempt which he had begun in his firſt Apoſtaſie, to have freed himſelf from all the orders of the Divine Law, to have been his own rule? How could a juſt ſenſe and awe of God have been preſerved in the minds of men, when they ſhould have thought God like one of themſelves, and as falſe to his own Righteouſneſs as they had been to his Authority? Pſal. 50. 21. This certainly would have been the iſſue, had man been ſet up in his former ſtate without inflicting that puniſhment upon the Humane Nature, which had been ſo righteouſly denounc'd, and ſo highly merited by the diſingenuity of man. Man had been more tempted by this to ſin, than he could have been by the Devil; and when he had been brought to an account for his ſecond tranſgreſſion, he would have excuſed himſelf by Gods indulgence to him for the firſt; and indeed Gods denial of his truth in this, would ſeem to be a ſufficient Apology for after Offences.

(4.) Therefore God, for the preſervation of his Truth and Righteouſneſs, accepts of a Surety to bear the juſt puniſhment for man. Since God had enacted, That if man ſinned, he ſhould dye; upon mans Apoſtaſie God muſt either eternally puniſh him to preſerve his Truth and Juſtice, or neglect his own Law, and change it to diſcover his Mercy. Theſe things were impoſſible to the Nature of God, he muſt be true to his Nature, and true to his Word. If Juſtice ſhould deſtroy, what way was there to diſcover his Mercy? If Mercy ſhould abſolutely pardon, without the due puniſhment, what way was there to preſerve the honour of his Truth? The Wiſdom of God finds out a means to preſerve the honour of his Truth in the puniſhment, and diſcover the glory of his Mercy in a pardon; not by changing the Sentence againſt ſin, but the perſon; and laying that upon his Son as a Surety, which we in our own perſons muſt have endur'd, had the rigour of the Law been executed upon us, whereby his Righteouſneſs and Veracity are preſerved by the puniſhment due to the ſinner, and the honour of Mercy eſtabliſhed by the Merit of our Saviour. Death was threatned by the Law, but there was no excluſion of a perſon by that Law that ſhould offer himſelf to ſtand in mans ſtead under the puniſhment. Man had been for ever irrecoverably miſerable, had ſuch a clauſe been inſerted, and would have been without hope as much as the Devils. And therefore, ſaith a learned Author of our own *, This acceptance of a Surety for us was not an abrogation of the Law, for then there could be no execution of the Sentence upon wicked men and Unbelievers for their ſins againſt it (where no Law is, there is no tranſgreſſion; and where no tranſgreſſion, no juſt execution) but it was a merciful relaxation or condeſcenſion of the Soveraign Lawgiver, by his infinite Goodneſs and Wiſdom to find out an expedient for the good of the fallen Creature, with the preſervation of the rights of thoſe Divine Perfections engag'd in the threatning. God was not prejudiced, or his immutability impaired by a change of the Perſon ſuffering, as long as the penalty threatned was inflicted. Though there was a tranſlation of the penalty, yet there was not a nulling of the penalty; the Perſon was changed, not the puniſhment; Death was threatned, Death was inflicted; Death was threatned, not ſo much to the Perſon of Adam, as the Humane Nature, whereof he was the head, and regarded the the deſcendents from him; Death was ſuffered by the Humane Nature, though in another Perſon; Death was threatned to Adam as the root of all in him; Death was ſuffer'd by Chriſt, as the myſtical head of all in him by Faith; ſo that, as in Adam ſinning, all ſinned that were in his loins as in their root, Rom. 5. 12, 14, 18. ſo it may be ſaid, that in Chriſt ſuffering all Believers ſuffered, his ſufferings being imputed to them by vertue of that union they have with him: Beſides, God having created the World for the diſplaying his Divine Perfections in Chriſt, for whom all things were created, Coloſſ. 1. 16. had in his eternal counſel decreed the Death of Chriſt as a Surety for man; and this threatning, as well as the Creation, being purſuant to this eternal counſel, did not exclude, but rather include the Surety, though it be not expreſt.

3. The Juſtice of God made the Death of Chriſt neceſſary for our redemption. Chriſt in his coming reſpected the glory of Gods Righteouſneſs, for he ſubſtituted himſelf as a Sin-Offering inſtead of thoſe inſufficient ones under the Law, Heb. 10. 8. Sin-offering thou wouldſt not, Lo, I come to do thy will, i. e. the will of the Divine Juſtice as well as Divine Mercy: For in the legal Sacrifices both were expreſt; Juſtice in the Death of the Beaſt, whereby Man was taught what he had merited; and Mercy in ſubſtituting the Beaſt in his room. Chriſt came to do that in the room of a Sin-Offering, which the legal Sin-Offerings were not able to effect. The Command of the Father did chiefly reſpect this ſatisfaction of Juſtice. It principally requir'd of him the laying down his life, and making his ſoul an offering for ſin, John 10. 18. And this it was which his Obedience did principally reſpect, whence it is call'd an obedience to death, Phil. 2. 8. Death is an act of Juſtice. After the Command was given, with the Sanction of it, the Authority of God in enacting it, and the Juſtice of God in adding the penalty to it, were contemn'd; and Man could not well be reduc'd to his Order without a reparation of the damage done to the Authority and Juſtice of God. How could God be the Judge of all the Earth doing right, Gen. 18. 25. had he ſuffer'd ſuch a manifeſt wrong to himſelf, to go unpuniſht? Juſtice had as loud a Cry for Condemnation, as Mercy could have for any ſtream of Compaſſion. The Sanction of the Law was irrevocable, unleſs God had ceas'd to be immutable in his Juſtice as well as his truth. * God can do whatſoever he will, but he can will nothing againſt his Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs. God had derogated from his own Righteouſneſs, if he had not recompens'd the ſin of man. For as Juſtice requires puniſhment, ſo it requires the greateſt puniſhment for the greateſt offence. Satisfaction muſt then be given in ſuch a manner as the Juſtice of God in the Law requir'd. It muſt be then by ſuffering that Death it exacted as due to the Crime, which muſt be done by the perſon Sinning, or ſome other capable to do it in his ſtead, and anſwer the terms of the Law, between whom and the Sinner there might be ſuch a ſtrait union, as that there might be a mutual imputation of our ſins to him, and his ſufferings to us. That he might ſuffer, Juſtice was to impute our ſins to him; that his ſufferings might be advantageous, Mercy and Juſtice were to impute his ſufferings to us.

* Dr. Jackſon.

I ſhall lay down under this, three Propoſitions.

(1.) It ſeems to be impoſſible but that juſtice ſhould flame out againſt ſin. There is the ſame reaſon of all Gods Attributes. 'Tis impoſſible that the goodneſs of God ſhould not embrace and kindly entertain an innocent Creature, for then he would not be good. 'Tis impoſſible his mercy in Chriſt ſhould refuſe a penitent Believer, then he would not be compaſſionate. 'Tis impoſſible he ſhould look upon ſin with a pleaſing Countenance, then he would not be holy. 'Tis impoſſible that he can be falſe to his word, then he could not be true. 'Tis impoſſible that he ſhould not act wiſely in what he doth, then he would be Fooliſh. Shall we deny the ſame rites to his Juſtice, that we acknowledge to belong to the other perfections of his Nature? Why ſhould not his Juſtice be as unchangeable and inflexible as his Goodneſs, Mercy, Truth and Wiſdom? Shall we acknowledge him firm in the reſt, and wavering in this? Juſtice is as neceſſary a perfection pertaining to him as the Governour of the World, as his Wiſdom, or any other glory of his nature. Had God acted the part of a juſt Governour, if he had ſuffer'd thoſe Laws to be broken with impunity, whereof he was the Guardian as well as the Enactor? Is there not a double reaſon of puniſhment accruing to him, both as he is the offended fended Party, and the Rector of the World? And what is Juſtice, but a giving to every one his due, reward to whom reward belongs, and puniſhment to whom puniſhment is due? If God had pardon'd, where puniſhment was due, it had been an act of Mercy, but what had become of his Juſtice? If God be not juſt in every thing he doth, he is unjuſt in ſomething, and then doth Iniquity, which is utterly impoſſible for the Divine Nature; he neither will nor can do iniquity, Zeph. 3. 5. This is an inſeparable property of the Divine Nature. What ſhould his Creatures judge of him, if he were utterly careleſs of vindicating his Law, and did totally abſtain from evidencing his holineſs to his rational Creatures? Is his holineſs only to be manifeſted in precepts, and not demonſtrated in puniſhments? If his love to righteouſneſs be eſſential to him, the exerciſe of that righteouſneſs upon ſutable objects is neceſſary. His love of righteouſneſs flows from his nature as righteous, Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs; 'tis not only an act of his will, but of his nature; 'tis not ſo natural to him as heat is to the fire, that doth neceſſarily ſcorch and burn without any influence of a free and rational principle. There is a liberty of the Divine Will to order thoſe acts of his Juſtice in convenient ſeaſons. God acts in all things according to his own nature, and cannot act below himſelf and the rectitude of it. The firſt foundation of all his actings towards his Creatures is in his Will. As upon the ſuppoſition that God would create man (which it was free for him to do or not to do, and ſo depended only upon his Will) he could not according to the rectitude of his own nature but create him upright, otherwiſe he had denied his own holineſs; ſo upon the ſuppoſition of mans ſinning (the prevention or permiſſion of which depended upon his Will) he cannot but puniſh him, becauſe otherwiſe he had denied his Juſtice, and ſeem'd to have approved of the diſorder man had introduced into the World; and if he had not puniſhed it in the degree it merited, there had ſeem'd to be ſome abatement of that hatred which was due to the unrighteouſneſs of it; for ſo much as a puniſhment is leſſened, ſo much leſs doth the deteſtation of the crime appear. * The power of God is not limited hereby; his own holineſs and truth, and the righteouſneſs of his nature bound him. Doth any man deny the power of God in ſaying he cannot forget his Creature? Would it not be a weakneſs in him to be capable of lying? Is it not an imperfection to be capable of doing any thing unjuſt? And what would it be but injuſtice in the Judge of all the Earth, to let ſin go unrevenged? * 'Tis rather an argument of ſtrength and virtue, whereby he cannot renounce the rectitude of his nature.

[1.] This ſeems to be a general and a natural notion in the minds of men. God hath ſetled it as an immutable and eternal Law, and engraven it upon the hearts of men, that ſin is to be puniſhed with Death. What other ſentiment could be expreſt by the univerſal practice of ſacrificing Beaſts, and, in ſome places, men for the expiation of their ſins, implying thereby a neceſſity of vindictive Juſtice, that God would not leave ſin unpuniſht without a compenſation from the Sinner himſelf, or ſome other in his ſtead? And therefore they thought the bloud of man, the beſt of the Creatures, a means to avert the ſtroke they had merited from him themſelves. What other foundation could there be of all thoſe Sacrifices, than a Conſcience of ſin, and a ſetled notion of the vengeance of God? For that which they principally, or only reſpected in thoſe Sacrifices, was the Juſtice of God. Upon this account it was probably, that the Apoſtle ſo poſitively aſſerts, Rom. 1. 32. that they knew that they were worthy of death. They ſufficiently expreſt it in ſubjecting other Creatures to the ſtroke of Death in their ſtead, to pacifie the offended Deity, acknowledging thereby, that he could not pardon ſin without a ſatisfaction. This was learned by them in the ſchool of nature, not by the revealed Will of God; or if it were handed to them by tradition from Adam, it had ſo near an alliance with an univerſal principle in their own Conſciences, that it met with no oppoſition or diſpute, the practice of it being almoſt as univerſally ſpread, as the notion of the Being of a God, ſince we ſcarce find a Nation without the ſacrificing Animals, for the appeaſing the Divinity they ador'd.

[2.] The holineſs of God ſeems neceſſarily to infer it. Since Juſtice is nothing elſe but the teſtimony or expreſſion of Gods hatred of ſin, it muſt be by conſequence unavoidable, unavoidable, unleſs the ſin committed can be wholly undone, which is impoſſible; or his Juſtice be appeaſed ſome way or other. If God did not puniſh ſin, how could his hatred of it be manifeſt? His Creature could not diſcern any averſion in him from it, without the interpoſition of vindictive Juſtice: for that perfection of Gods Nature, which requires that he ſhould have an implacable deteſtation of ſin, requires alſo that the Sinner, remaining under guilt, ſhould be perpetually puniſhed. If God cannot but hate all the Workers of Iniquity, (Pſal. 5. 5. Thou hateſt all the workers of iniquity) he cannot but puniſh them. The holineſs of God is not only voluntary, but by neceſſity of Nature; were it only an act of his will, he might love iniquity if he pleaſed, as well as hate it. How could it be ſaid of him by the Prophet, Hab. 1. 13, that he is of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look upon iniquity, if his purity had been only from choice, and a determination of the indifferency of his Will, and not from his Nature? 'Tis not ſaid, He will not look on iniquity, i. e. with affection; but he cannot. God cannot but be holy, and therefore cannot but be juſt; becauſe injuſtice is a part of unholineſs. And upon the holineſs of God, Joſhua aſſerts, the Iſraelites ſins in themſelves unpardonable, Joſh. 24. 19. He is a holy God, he is a jealous God, he will not forgive your tranſgreſſions, nor your ſins. He is jealous of the honour of his Perfections; His holineſs and jealouſie ſtand as Barrs againſt forgiveneſs, without ſome means for preſerving the honour of them. His holineſs and jealouſie, whereby his Juſtice and wrath are ſometimes expreſs'd, are link'd together; * and are nothing elſe, but the contrariety in the Nature of God, which is infinitely good and righteous, to the Nature of ſin, which is evil and unrighteous, whereby he is inclined to deteſt it. All hatred is a deſire of revenge; and the ſtronger the hatred, the more vehement the inclination to revenge. The loathing of ſin being infinite in God, as he is the Rector of the World, and ſo neceſſary a Perfection of his Nature, that without it he would not be God; the inclination to puniſh it, and thereby highly manifeſt his hatred of it, neceſſarily follows that Perfection. A will to puniſh ſin is always included in an hatred of it. Now if the hatred of ſin be as eſſential to God as his love to his glory, puniſhment muſt follow it: There is a certain connexion between the one and the other. This hatred muſt neceſſarily be evidenced by ſome acts, according to the greatneſs of the evil; how ſhall it be teſtified, but by puniſhment? If he doth not puniſh, how ſhall we certainly know but that it pleaſeth him? By his bare Precept we cannot, if he ſuffers it to be violated at the pleaſure of men without rebuke; we may then judge him to be a negligent Governour, and one that hath no regard to his own Command, and cares not whether his Creature obſerves it, or no. Hatred cannot be diſcovered without ſome expreſſions of averſion: What ſigns can thoſe be, unleſs Gods denying his Communications to his Creature, and a poſitive inflicting of evil? If a Governour hates a diſorder never ſo much, if he expreſſeth it not, whereby the offending perſon may be ſenſible of his hatred, 'tis as much as no hatred: for, Idem eſt non eſſe, & non apparere. What would all his prohibitions of ſin amount to, if he did not puniſh the commiſſion of it? He that cannot but prohibit ſin, cannot but puniſh ſin. God cannot but prohibit ſin, becauſe he cannot but hate it, it being contrary to his holy nature. The Commands of God are not bare acts of his will, but of his Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs. If they proceeded from bare will, without any regulation by his Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs, he might command things contrary to the Law of Nature, and the neceſſary relation of a Creature to himſelf. So neither is his hatred of ſin only a free act of his Will, but neceſſarily reſults from the rectitude of his Nature. If it were only an act of his will, as the Creation of the World, he might as well love ſin as hate it; as he might as well have neglected the Creation of the World, as performed it; and let the ſeveral Creatures remain in their Nothing, as well as have brought them into Being. But it flows from the righteouſneſs of his Nature, (Prov. 15. 9. The way of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord) and conſequently ſo doth his Juſtice, which is an expreſſion of this hatred, otherwiſe God would be unjuſt to his own holineſs.

* Amyraut des Religions, p. 309.

(2.) Hence it follows, That this Juſtice muſt be ſatisfied before man could be reſtored. The Juſtice of God was the bar in the way, and muſt be removed by puniſhment.

puniſhment. Chriſt could not have brought one Son to Glory, had he not firſt been made perfect by ſuffering, Heb. 2. 10. The wrath of God for the violations of the Law, was the flaming Sword that guarded Paradiſe from being enter'd into by guilty man. This was becoming God as the Governour of the World, in which capacity he is conſider'd in puniſhment. It became not God to do any thing unjuſtly or inordinately. It was an intolerable thing that the Creature ſhould deſpoil God of his honour, and withdraw it ſelf from that indiſpenſable ſubjection it owed to its Creator. It became God to reſtore that order by puniſhment, which had been broken by ſin.

Let us conſider,

[1.] Juſtice had at leaſt an equal plea with Mercy. If mercy pleaded for pardon, juſtice as ſtongly ſollicited the puniſhment of the ſinner. The remiſſion of the offence would appear more charitable; but the vindicating the publick Laws, and puniſhing the offence, would appear more righteous. It was not convenient the Creature ſhould be utterly ruin'd as ſoon as ever God had diſplay'd his Power in creating it; nor was it convenient the Creature ſhould be embolden'd in ſin by a free act of pardon, after ſo high and baſe an act of diſingenuity. What could mercy plead on the behalf of the Creature, that juſtice could not as ſtrongly plead on the behalf of God? If the ruine of the Creature be argued to move compaſſion, the diſhonour on God on the other ſide would be argued to excite indignation. If the Nature of God, as love, 1 Joh. 4. 8. be pleaded by mercy, the Nature of God, as righteous and a conſuming fire, Heb. 12. 29. would be oppoſed to it by juſtice. His mercy would plead, It were not for his honour to let his enemy run away, juſt after the Creation, with the ſpoil of the beſt of his works. His juſtice would reply, It was fit the Judge of the World ſhould do right, and be the Protector of his righteous Law. If his mercy inclines him to will our Salvation, juſtice would not permit him to leave ſin unpuniſh'd, and his Laws trampled in the duſt. Had mercy been diſcover'd without preſerving the rights of juſtice, when the whole nature of man fell, God had been but a half Governour of the World, and exerciſed but one part of Government.

[2.] Juſtice ſeems to have a ſtronger plea. (1.) The higheſt right falls on the ſide of Juſtice. That had been declared, and backt by his Truth, when Mercy was not yet publiſht upon the ſtage of the Creation. The righteous and juſt Nature of God had been ſignified to Man, and his Veracity brought in to ſecond it, Gen. 2. 17. No notion of pardoning mercy had yet been imprinted upon the mind of man, or revealed to him; ſo that God was not ſo much concern'd in honour to ſhow mercy, which ſtood ſingle, as I may ſay, and lay hid in the Nature of God without the appearance of any perfection to back and ſupport it. Had man ſtood, the Veracity of God had ſtood on the ſide of his Goodneſs (for we may ſuppoſe a promiſe of life implied, if man continued in obedience, as well as a threatning expreſt, if he fell into rebellion.) But when man broke the precept, the whole force of Gods truth fell on the ſide of juſtice. There being not a ſyllable of pardoning grace utter'd in any promiſe before the ſin of man, the truth of God had no part at that time to take with mercy; ſo that there were greater engagements at that time from the manifeſtation of Gods Nature for the making good his Juſtice, than for the demonſtration of his Mercy.

(2.) Mercy could principally plead the good of the Creature, Juſtice principally inſiſted on the honour of God. Mercy might ſollicite the liberty of Gods Will, but Juſtice might ſtrongly challenge the holineſs and rectitude of Gods Nature to ſupport it. The Creature was fallen under the hatred of God, and penalty of the Law, and rendred it ſelf an unfit object of love by its rebellion and filthineſs.

(3.) Beſides, the Wits and Conſciences of men cannot frame ſo many arguments for the neceſſity of Mercy, in regard of God, as for the neceſſity of his Juſtice. Mercy is wholly a free act, but Juſtice is a debt due to a ſinful Creature. The neceſſity of mercy to a fallen Creature, in regard of God, cannot poſſibly be aſſerted with any reaſon. For it would then be aſſerted on the behalf of Devils more than men. I ſay, the neceſſity: For perhaps ſomething may be ſaid for the congruity of God's ſhowing mercy to man rather than to Devils. * Juſtice reſpects merit cauſed by the righteouſneſs or unrighteouſneſs of men, according to which God

* Zarnov. de ſatisfact. Chriſti, part 1. cap. 2.

God immutably carries himſelf in rewarding or puniſhing of them, and never doth reward or puniſh any but according to their merit; but the mercy of God doth not at all reſpect merit, or any work done by man, but is buſied wholly in giving freely, and offering graciouſly to man thoſe things he hath not deſerved.

(4.) Again, Juſtice had ſtronger arguments from the rectitude of Gods Nature. Juſtice might argue, If God did righteouſly judge ſinners to everlaſting death, then if he had not judged them to everlaſting death, he had done unjuſtly, being unmindful of the rectitude of his own Nature. And if he ſhould not now, after ſin, inflict eternal death, but wholly lay aſide his threatning, he would do unjuſtly; for thoſe being contrary acts, one of them muſt needs be unjuſt. Who could call that a righteous Government, wherein Laws ſhould be made with the greateſt wiſdom, and be broken with the greateſt impunity?

(5.) Again, conſider. Though mercy be eſſential to God, yet mercy muſt not be unjuſtly exerciſed. The fallen Creature indeed was an object for both; as miſerable, he was an object of Mercy; as criminal, he was an object of Juſtice: But being firſt criminal, before he was miſerable, he was firſt the object of Juſtice by his crime, before he was an object of Mercy by his miſery. Had he been miſerable without being culpable (which was impoſſible, in regard of the goodneſs of God) he had then been an object for compaſſion only. But falling under Juſtice firſt, it was not fit Mercy ſhould wholly deſpoil Juſtice of its rights.

(6.) Again. Man, as miſerable by the fall, is not the object of mercy. For what Mercy could pardon an obſtinate Rebel? And how could man have been otherwiſe, without ſome ſupernatural operation upon him? Mercy could not challenge any footing to exerciſe it ſelf about man, till he had confeſs'd and bewail'd his crime, and been ſenſible, not only of his miſery, but of his offence. 'Tis not honourable for God to exerciſe mercy upon thoſe that continue in their enmity; this ſeems to be clearly againſt the rectitude of the Divine Nature; this had been a favouring of the crime as well as the criminal. Had he been ſenſible of, and ſorrowful for his miſery, without a true grief for his offence, this had been an act of love to himſelf, but had had in it nothing of a true affection to God. After man had contracted in his nature an enmity againſt God, how could he have acquir'd a true repentance flowing from an affection to God? Repentance for a fault againſt a Prince, and enmity againſt a Prince are inconſiſtent. How ſhould man have attained this quality of himſelf, any more than the Devils have done, of whoſe repentance we read not one ſyllable in the Scripture, who are left to thoſe habits of malice and averſion from God, which they had ſuperinduc'd upon themſelves? And if Devils, who were Creatures of greater underſtanding, and more ſenſible of their miſery, becauſe they fell from a greater happineſs than man, were morally impotent to this: Can we think that man had a ſtronger biaſs in his will after the revolt from God, to return again to God? Beſides, Repentance is made a gift of God, 2 Tim. 2. 25. And the Spirit that gives repentance, is a fruit of Chriſts death, and the repentance it ſelf is made a fruit of Chriſts exaltation due to him upon his death, Acts 5. 32. To ſtrengthen this, it may be conſider'd, that when God came to examine Adam, as a Judge, about his crime, there is not a ſyllable that ſavours of any true repentance, iſſues from him, Gen. 3. 8, 9, 10, &c. whatſoever he might exerciſe after the promulgation of the Goſpel-promiſe.

[3.] Conſider. If there had not been a tempering of theſe two perfections towards man, one of them had remained undiſcovered to the World. Juſtice only could have appear'd in the Creatures ſuffering, Mercy only could have appear'd in the Creatures reſtoration. Mercy could not have been diſcover'd by the condemnation of the Creature, nor Juſtice by the meer ſalvation of the Creature. Had there been no puniſhment, or a light one below the demerit of the Creature, there had been no demonſtration of the higheſt glory of his Holineſs in the hatred of ſin, or of the higheſt glory of his Juſtice in the puniſhment of ſin. Had the puniſhment due to the Creature been inflicted upon him, the Creature had been utterly deſtroyed, and mercy had been for ever obſcured; and had mercy ſolely acted about the Creature, juſtice had been wrong'd. Juſtice therefore muſt be one way or other righted, that the ſtreams of his grace might flow out to man, ſince after mans Fall, juſtice had ſtopt all commerce of God with man, becauſe ſin had had render'd him unfit for the Communications of God. As the nature of compaſſion muſt be ſatisfied in acting about a miſerable Creature, and the love God bore to man as his Creature manifeſted; ſo the nature of Juſtice muſt be ſatisfied for the injury done, and the hatred of God to man as a Sinner diſcover'd. And this muſt be ſatisfied either by the Creatures bearing the puniſhment, or compenſating the injury, for that properly is ſatisfaction. Gods Juſtice could not have come off with honour without it. For ſince he was engag'd by his word to have ſin puniſhed, would not God have been unjuſt, had he laid by all conſideration of his Juſtice and Holineſs in this Caſe? Had Juſtice been glorified upon the perſon of the Sinner, Mercy would have loſt the manifeſtation of it ſelf, and have had no objects to exerciſe it ſelf about. Had mercy been glorified in bringing man to a happy ſtate, without any puniſhment, after ſo baſe a breach of his Law, where had been the demonſtration of the unchangeable holineſs of God, and the exactneſs of his Juſtice? God therefore appointed a Mediator in whom he might act as a righteous Judge for the puniſhment of ſin, according to his Law, that his dreadful Majeſty might be more fear'd; and a tender Father according to the neceſſity of his Creatures, that his love might be commended; as a wiſe Governour tempering both together. And therefore God foreſeeing the fall of man, elected ſome to eternal glory; but in Chriſt as the means, Eph. 1. 4. not as the meritorious cauſe of Election, but as the means and foundation of the Execution of it; that the glory of his grace might iſſue out in the preſervation of the rights of his Juſtice, maintain'd by the bloud of his Son; in whom we have redemption, v. 6, 7. and without this way we cannot ſee how the glory of God had been preſerv'd. God had made the World for his Glory, and the Communication of his goodneſs. After the World was polluted and diſorder'd by ſin, the juſtice of God by annexing ſuch a penalty to the Law, ſtood as a Bar in the way of any kindneſs to the Creature, unleſs ſome way might be found out to preſerve the honour of that Juſtice. Shall God in a moment loſe all the glory of his Creation? Did he make the Creatures, whoſe fall he did foreſee, only to puniſh and damn them; and that the glory of his other perfections, ſave that of his Juſtice and Holineſs, ſhould be ſpoil'd by it? His glory therefore muſt be preſerv'd; that could not be if the glory of his Juſtice or Mercy were wholly loſt. To preſerve it therefore Chriſt is ſubſtituted in our room, and the Captain of Salvation made perfect through ſufferings, which was moſt becoming God; as he was Lord of all, and his glory the end of all, Heb. 2. 10. * His love not permitting him to leave the World under the Curſe, nor his Juſtice to leave ſin without puniſhment, both thoſe neceſſities are provided for by the wiſdom of God; a wonderful temperament wrought, whereby ſin is puniſhed in the Surety, and impunity ſecur'd to the believing Sinner.

* Daillé ſur 1 Jean p. 330.

[4.] This ſatisfaction muſt be by Death, becauſe death was threatned: Since it was the judgment of God, that ſin was worthy of Death, God had contradicted his own Judgment, and holy Wiſdom, if he had remitted it without Death, or puniſhed it with leſs than Death. God eſtabliſh'd our propitiation in the bloud of Chriſt, to declare his juſtice, Rom. 3. 25.*. If Juſtice had requir'd leſs than Death, it had been unjuſt to have demanded ſo much as Death; for then he had demanded more than was due. Sin could not be expiated by a leſs puniſhment than it had merited, but that was Death. Beſides, the love of God to his Son would not have permitted him to expoſe him to a Curſed and Cruel Death, meerly to ſhow his Juſtice implacable, had it not really been in it ſelf implacable without it, as the moſt tranſcendent means to diſcover the incomprehenſible purity of his nature. Certainly, that God who would not do the leaſt injuſtice to the meaneſt of his Creatures, would not have deliver'd up his Son to ſo ſhameful a Death, and took ſo many Counſels about it, and made it the principal work of his Wiſdom in all Ages of the World, to order all things for the Execution of it, if Juſtice could have been contented with leſs than Death, and remiſſion of ſin could have been granted by the pure Mercy and Bounty of God, at leaſt after the threatning. Could Juſtice have been ſatisfied at a lower rate than Death, the Father would have anſwer'd the requeſt of his Son when he prayed ſo earneſtly that this Cup might paſs from him. Nor would Death have been exacted of him, if a drop of his bloud had been a ſufficient payment to the demands of Juſtice. The ſuffering death had been ſuperfluous, and the impoſing death upon him had been an unrighteouſneſs in God, and his giving himſelf up to death without any neceſſity, had been an injuſtice to himſelf. Could a few drops of bloud have ſatisfied Juſtice, it might have been ſatisfied without any bloud at all, as well as with a puniſhment beneath what the Law demanded. The effuſion of one drop of bloud cannot paſs for a puniſhment of ſin, when death for it was requir'd by the Law; ſo that it could be no leſs than death.

* εἰς ἔνδειξιν, for a demonſtration of his juſtice.

3. Propoſition. None could ſatisfie the Juſtice of God but the Son of God incarnate.

[1.] Let us remove thoſe things that might be ſuppoſed capable to do it. Neither could man do it for himſelf, nor any intellectual or rational Creature do it for him, nor any obſervances of Gods inſtitutions do it, ſo that it muſt neceſſarily fall upon ſome one above the rank of Creatures; ſome Divine Perſon only was capable to undertake it and effect it. There is a neceſſity of ſatisfaction to the Law, both by paying Obedience to every tittle of it, and by enduring the penalty for the tranſgreſſion of it. God ſtands ſo much upon the honour of his Law, that the Heavens ſhall be folded up, and the Earth ſhaken out of its place, before one point of the Law ſhall be diſregarded, Mat. 5. 18. Some one therefore muſt repair the breach made upon it, and reſtore the honour of it. Let us ſee if any thing elſe could.

(1.) Man was unable to do it for himſelf. It muſt be done either by active or paſſive Obedience, by doing or ſuffering; but was man uncable of either as a full compenſation to God? Man by ſin fell in his Perſon, and with all that he had, under the curſe of the law, Galat. 3. 10. and what was under the curſe, and by ſin was forfeited, could not remove the curſe. Man may be conſidered as a ſinful Creature, or a gracious Creature; a ſinful Creature cannot ſatisfie, for being a ſinner in that ſatisfaction, he doth offend the Holineſs of God, and heap new provocations before the Eyes of his Juſtice inſtead of pacifying it. A gracious Creature cannot, for that ſuppoſeth ſatisfaction firſt, whereby Juſtice is mov'd to take away the bar that locks up the treaſures of Grace from being diſpens'd to man. A man might be gracious after a ſatisfaction, but not before. Beſides, Grace is finite, for whatſoever is in a finite Creature is finite; its effect therefore cannot be of an infinite value.

(1.) Man could not effect it by offering ſomething to God, or by doing ſomething equivalent to the offence.

1. Man had nothing to give. What was there he could call his own, ſince he was a Creature; eſpecially ſince as an offender, he had forfeited what was his by right of Creation? Had man the World to give? How came he by it? Was it created by him or for him? If not by him, it was none of his own; he was but a Steward to manage all for the uſe of his Lord and true Proprietor. Can a Steward recompence his Lord for the wrong done to his honour, by offering to his Maſter thoſe goods which are his own already, and which the Steward was only intruſted with? The World was none of mans to give; he never had it as an abſolute Lord by right of an independent Propriety, nor was it poſſible he ſhould, ſince he was not either the Creator or preſerver of it; and neither man, nor any other Creature in the World could poſſibly be brought into a ſtate independent on God, ſo that man held as a feudatory in capite of God. But ſuppoſe it had been his own, he had forfeited all by his Rebellion; for his ſake, for his ſin, the Earth was curſed by the Soveraign Lord of it, Gen. 3. 17. and a thing curſed in all the parts of it, could not be fit for an oblation to the Divine Majeſty.

2. Nor could his Repentance be a compenſation. Bare grief for an offence is not a compenſation for an injury done to man, much leſs for an affront of ſo high a nature offer'd to God. But we find no ſuch thing in man at the time wherein he fell from the top of his felicity to the gulf of miſery. If he, who had a ſence of the happy ſtate he had loſt, and the miſerable condition he had contracted, was more for excuſes than relentings, how can a penitent poſture be found by nature in any of his deſcendents? Gen. 3. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. If there were any bluſhes in him, they were occaſioned more by the diſcovery of his crime, than by the ſence of the crime it ſelf; and he was troubled more at his loſs than at his offence, and ſo might relent that he was miſerable, not that he was criminal; and ſo it was a Repentance as it reſpected himſelf, not as it reſpected the honour of his Lord; and ſuch a Repentance is to be found in Hell, but is unable to break thoſe chains wherein they there are held. How ſhould man come by a Repentance? Can he break himſelf into a true contrition? What ſtone was ever heard to melt it ſelf? Is not captive man fond of his ſin, in love with his chains? And how can he by Nature attain that which is ſo contrary to what he is by Nature mightily delighted with? The leaſt ſpark of Grace is above the power of corrupted Nature. How ſhould man then come by this repentance? Muſt it not be a melting ſpark from Heaven, lighting upon his Soul, that muſt produce ſo kindly a work in a forſaken Creature? Would it have conſiſted with the wiſdom of Divine Juſtice to ſeize upon the forfeiture, to withdraw from man ſupernatural grace, and preſently to reſtore it without any regard to the vindication of the honour of that Juſtice? Beſides, ſuppoſe man had been able to repent of himſelf, and had actually perform'd a repentance of the right ſtamp, what would this have ſignified, ſince no ſuch thing was requir'd as the condition the Righteouſneſs of God exacted in the Law? That demanded not repentance, becauſe it gave not liberty to any crime. It challenged an exact and perfect obedience, compleat in all circumſtances, of man in his uprightneſs, and in caſe of failure left man to the ſeverity of the penalty he had incurr'd. Not a drop of repentance was allow'd as any part of legal obedience. That was introduc'd upon a change of the Diſpenſation from Legal to Evangelical. The Law is not of faith, and as little of repentance, but the man that doth them ſhall live in them, Galat. 3. 12. Beſides, if repentance and faith in the mercy of God could have razed out the ſin of Adam, and broken in pieces the chains of eternal death, could we think that God ſhould be at the expence of the bloud of the promiſed Seed? What need had there been of a Sacrifice to appeaſe God, if he had been already appeaſed by the relentings of man? * What a vanity had that been, to go about the taking away that which the faith and repentance of Adam had already remov'd? The Wiſdom of God would not do any thing uſeleſs and in vain. Faith and repentance could never change the nature of Gods Righteouſneſs, but muſt firſt ſuppoſe ſome ſatisfaction made to Juſtice, and then ſtep in as conditions, and the one as an inſtrument apprehending and applying mercy obtain'd by ſome other means, not the efficient or meritorious cauſe, no more than the looking upon the brazen Serpent was the efficient or meritorious cauſe of the cure, but only the means. But how can we think man after his Fall ſhould have either faith in the mercy of God, or repentance, which flows from a ſenſe of mercy, when no mercy had been reveal'd to him? He found nothing of it in the Law; and though he might apprehend ſuch a perfection in God by the conſideration of his own Nature, yet ſince he had never ſeen any miſerable object to draw out ſuch a perfection, 'tis a queſtion, whether he knew any ſuch quality to be in himſelf or no, and therefore could not conclude any ſuch perfection to be in God, ſince there was not the leaſt Revelation of it; and therefore could have no footing for any ſuch exerciſe of Faith and Repentance, till the diſcovery of mercy in the promiſed Seed.

* Zarnovitc de ſatisfact. part 1. cap. 4. p. 14, 15.

3. Nor could any after-obedience to the Law, be a compenſation for the offence. For,

(1.) Man had not power of himſelf after his Fall to obey. He had by his revolt loſt that original righteouſneſs, which enabled him to a conformity to the Law, Gen. 3. 10. I was afraid becauſe I was naked. His corporeal nakedneſs could be no more the cauſe of fear after, than it was before his ſin; but he was naked, i. e. ſtript of the image of God, and his primitive integrity. Man cannot now do any work commenſurate to the precepts of the Law. In every thing he comes ſhort of his duty, and therefore being defective in what he ought to do by the Law of Creation, cannot ſatisfie for the injury done to God in the ſtate of corruption. How ſhall a man be juſt with God? If he will contend with him, he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand, Job 9. 2, 3. God requires an obedience to the Law, not according to our meaſure, but according to his own righteouſneſs, which which is perfect, and this no ſinful Creature can ariſe to of himſelf. If any man were able to offer God a ſpotleſs Obedience, free from any defect the Law could find in it; by whoſe ſtrength would he do it? not by his own; for ſince he was a Sinner, he hath been without ſtrength. To be Sinners and to be without ſtrength are one and the ſame, *Rom.*5.6.8. From whom then ſhould he have this ſtrength? From the Creator? How can he then ſatisfy God by that which is Gods already? 'Tis as if when a man had wrong'd a Prince, he ſhould ſatisfy him for the injury by a ſumm taken out of the Princes Exchequer. Indeed man is not willing to obey any Command of God: There is nothing in his nature but an enmity againſt God and his Law, Rom. 8.7. And therefore no compleat will to give God any ſatisfaction, or pay him any Obedience. The will is naturally enſlaved to ſin, and under the power of vitious habits, ſins always, never obeys perfectly, but in the moment of a material Obedience offends God, comes ſhort of what the Law requires. Till the will of man be chang'd, he cannot be willing with a compleat will to obey God, and the will cannot be chang'd before a ſatisfaction be made, becauſe 'tis not reaſonable that the puniſhment of ſin, which was a ſpiritual as well as Eternal Death, and conſiſted in leaving the Soul under the power of thoſe ill habits it had contracted (which are indeed the Death of the Soul, as Diſeaſes are the Death of the Body) ſhould be taken off till ſome ſatisfaction were made. Man can no more free himſelf from this ſpiritual Death, than he can free himſelf from the Death of the Body; and we have no reaſon to think God would do it before a ſatisfaction, for then the Law he had enacted, would be wrong'd by himſelf. Well then, Man hath not power to obey God, Job 14. 4. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one, i. e. (ſaith Cocceius) who can change an unclean thing into a clean? Is there not one? yea, and but one, Chriſt only can do it.

(2.) Suppoſing man had power to obey the Law, and that perfectly, yet this was due to God before the ſin of man, and therefore cannot be a compenſation for the ſin of man. After-Obedience will not make amends for paſt Crimes; for Obedience is a Debt due of it ſelf, and what is a Debt of it ſelf cannot be a compenſation for another. What is a compenſation, muſt be ſomething that doth not fall under the notion or relation of a Debt due before, but contracted by the injury done. Obedience was due from man if he had not ſinn'd, and therefore is a Debt as much due after ſin as before it; but a new Debt cannot be ſatisfied by paying an old. As ſuppoſe you owe a man money upon a Bond, and alſo abuſe him in his reputation, or ſome other concern; is there not a new Debt contracted upon that Treſpaſs, a Debt of Reparation of him in what you have wrong'd him? The paying him the Money you owe him upon Bond, is not an amends for the injury you did him otherwiſe. They both in Law fall under a different conſideration. Or when a man rebels againſt a Prince of whom he holds ſome Land, will the payment of his quit-Rent be ſatisfactory for the Crime of his Rebellion? So Obedience to the Law in our whole courſe was a Debt upon us by our Creation, and this hath relation to the preceptive part of the Law, and to God as a Sovereign: But upon ſin a new Debt of puniſhment was contracted, and the penalty of the Law was to be ſatisfied by ſuffering, as well as the Precepts of the Law ſatisfied by obſerving them. And this was a Debt relating to the Juſtice of God, as well as the other to the Soveraignty of God. Now, How can it be imagin'd, that man by paying the Debt he ſtood oblig'd to before, ſhould ſatisfy the Debt he hath newly contracted? The Debts are different, the one is a Debt of Obſervance, the other a Debt of Suffering, and contracted in two different ſtates; the Debt of Obedience in the ſtate of Creation, the Debt of Suffering in the ſtate of Corruption; ſo that the payment of what was due from us as Creatures, cannot ſatisfy for what was due from us as Criminals. All ſatisfaction is to be made in ſome way to which a perſon was not oblig'd before the offence was committed; as men wrong'd in their Honour, are ſatisfied by ſome acts not due to them before they were injur'd. So that all men taken together, yea the Creatures of ten thouſand Worlds, cannot by Obedience to the preceptive part of the Law ſatisfy for one tranſgreſſion of it; becauſe whatſoever they can do, is a Debt due from themſelves before. When Men fell from God, and enter'd into League with the Devil, they laid themſelves ſelves at the foot of Gods righteous wrath, and ſunk themſelves into the deſert of eternal Death, and ſo ſtood in another relation to God than as ſubjects; and God might require a reparation for the paſt diſobedience, and ſecurity for obedience for the future; unleſs man could perform this, he muſt lie bound in chains of darkneſs. What compenſation could man make for what was paſt, or what ſecurity could he give for time to come? Some other therefore muſt interpoſe, whoſe ſuretyſhip God would accept, who could give a ſatisfaction to God as pleaſing to him as ſin had been diſpleaſing, and offer to God what was not due to him before, who was able to perform what he undertook, and whoſe ſecurity for what was due for the future, might be eſteemed valid; and therefore it muſt be ſome Divine Perſon, that was not bound in his own nature to thoſe terms of obedience, which were neceſſary to this ſatisfaction.

(3.) Suppoſing man had power after his fall to obey, and that obedience were not due before, yet could not his obedience be compenſatory for the injury by ſin. Becauſe being a finite Creature, whatſoever obedience he could pay, could not be infinite, and ſo not proportioned to an infinite Majeſty. Since the ſin of man is infinite, in regard of the Perſon offended, who is an infinite and eternal Being, and thereby debas'd below the meaneſt of his Creatures, in the reflection that every ſin caſts upon him, as being not worthy to be belov'd and obey'd; and that which doth ſatisfie, muſt be as great as the demerit of the crime (for it muſt be proportionable to the diſgrace and dammage accruing to God by ſin); this a finite Creature cannot do: for though obedience is an honour paid to an infinite Perſon, as well as ſin a contempt of an infinite Perſon; yet the offence is always aggravated by the Perſon offended, as an injury done to a Prince, is by the dignity of his Perſon, and the greatneſs of his Authority; but the ſatisfaction is meaſur'd from the capacity of the ſubject offending, which is finite, and not commenſurate to the greatneſs of a wronged God. * Nor can our obedience and holineſs be counted infinite, becauſe they are the fruits of an infinite Spirit in us; for by the ſame reaſon all Creatures ſhould be accounted infinite, becauſe they are the works of an infinite power. The Spirit infuſeth the habits of obedience and holineſs, and excites them; but the Creature, and not the Spirit, exerciſeth them, the Soul doth obey and believe, &c. ſo that though they are the Spirit's efficiently, yet they are the Creatures ſubjectively. Beſides, though the Spirit dwells in Believers, yet he is not hypoſtatically united to them, as the Divine Nature of the ſecond Perſon was to the Humane. The Holy Ghoſt and the Soul do not make one Perſon; if ſo, the acts of the new Creature would be ſubjectively infinite, as the mediatory acts of Chriſt were, becauſe his Perſon, which was the ſubject of them, was infinite. So that our obedience cannot be infinite; and indeed the beſt obedience any meer Creature is able to pay, cannot be ſo honourable to God as ſin is debaſing, becauſe by our obedience we honour him according to his nature, as far as our capacity reacheth, and give him no more than his due, and acknowledge him as he is the moſt excellent Being, the moſt rightful Soveraign; but in ſin we prefer every thing before him, do what we can to ungod him, fight againſt his Soveraignty, ſnarl at his Holineſs, dare his Juſtice, and render him ſo vile, as if he were not fit to be rank'd above, or with any of his Creatures in our hearts; and what rate of obedience is able to render God a ſatisfaction for ſo great a contempt and audaciouſneſs? All the obedience a ſubject can pay to a Prince, can never be eſteemed in value equal to the contempt, which an endeavour to deſtroy his Perſon, and pull down his Statues, and trample his Picture in the dirt, doth caſt upon him. * Sin is of a higher order in the rank of evils, than the works of righteouſneſs are in the rank of good.

* Leſſius.

2. Nor could man give a full ſatisfaction by ſuffering, ſo as to obtain a reſtoration to happineſs. He is as unable to ſuffer out his reſtoration, as he is to work it out. His ſufferings would be as finite, in regard of the ſubject, as his obedience; but the Glory he had ſtain'd, and the Juſtice he had wrong'd, were the Glory of an infinite God; and the Sufferings of a finite Creature, though lengthened out to eternity, could not be a compenſation to an infinite Glory diſgrac'd by ſin. Alas, the wrath of an incenſed God, is too fierce and heavy for the ſtrength of a feeble man to break through. But ſuppoſe it were poſſible for a man that had committed committed but one crime againſt God, and afterwards repented of it, and retain'd no more affection to that ſin or any other, by ſuffering torments for ſome millions of years to make a compenſation for that one ſin; yet how is it poſſible for men, whoſe natures are deprav'd, and have nothing of a Divine Purity in them, to ſatisfie by ſuffering, ſince they ſuffer, not only for ſin, but in a ſinful ſtate, and are increaſing their ſins while they are paying their ſatisfactions? No ſuffering of any that retain their Rebellious Nature, can be a ſatisfaction to the Majeſty of God, ſo as to free ſuch a Creature from ſuffering, while that Nature remains, and he loves that ſin for which he is puniſhed, though he hath not opportunity to commit it. Beſides, ſince man by nature is enmity againſt God, Rom. 8. 7. Gods Judicial Power would not render him amiable to the ſinner, nor ſuffering inſpire him with a love to his Judge; if he ſhould therefore ſuffer multitudes of years, without any certain hope of recovery, could he be without a hatred of God? So then, all the time he would be ſuffering, he would be highly ſinning, and ſtill ſinning would encreaſe the debt of ſuffering inſtead of diminiſhing it. A Creature while a Creature, in every ſtate is bound to love God; but no fallen Creature can do it without a change of nature. Beſides, if a man be not able to ſatisfie by ſuffering for one ſin, how is he able to ſatisfie for numberleſs? Every new ſin increaſeth our obnoxiouſneſs to God, both in its own nature, and as it is a vertual approbation of all former ſins, at leaſt of the ſame kind; now he that cannot pay a farthing, or a ſhilling, or make ſatisfaction for a ſmall ſumm, is not able to make a recompence for millions. And though a man might begin his ſatisfaction by ſuffering, where would he end? Since he cannot give one infinite in value, he muſt give one infinite in time, and then he would be always paying, and never coming to a period of payment; for when you have in your thoughts run along the line of eternity, you would have further to go than you have gone, for in looking back you may find a beginning, but in looking forward you will never find an end; the further you look, ſtill more remains to come than is paſt.

To conclude this. The Church of old ſaw her utter inability any way to make a propitiation for ſin, but by God himſelf, Pſal. 65. 3. Iniquities prevail againſt me, as for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt purge them away. Our iniquities are too ſtrong for us, we cannot make an atonement for them; but thou ſhalt be the Meſſiah, thou ſhalt propitiate by the Meſſiah, who is typified by the legal propitiatory, and therefore the ſame name is given to Chriſt, Rom. 3. 25. a propitiation, or the propitiatory for our ſins. Since the firſt age of the World to this day, wherein ſo many ages are run out, there is not one man to be found that ever was his own ranſomer, or paid a price for his own Redemption.

(2.) No Creature is able to do it for us. All Creatures are nothing in their original; there could be then nothing of dignity in a meer Creature, to anſwer the dignity of the Perſon offended; the plaiſter would be too narrow for the wound; the whole collection of Creatures was of a finite goodneſs, and nothing to the honour due to ſo great a Majeſty. If a Creature could ſatisfie, it could not be by his own ſtrength, but by a great deal of Grace conferred upon him, ſo that he had not paid what was his own to God, but what was Gods own already. No Creature but muſt be ſuſtain'd by the Grace of God, that he may not fall into utter ruine, while he is ſatisfying. Angels themſelves could not do it but by Grace; and the more any Creature ſhould do by the Grace of God, the more he would be oblig'd by God, and the leſs compenſate him. Again, it muſt be one Creature, or a multitude of Creatures. How one meer Creature could ſatisfie for a numberleſs number of men, every one of them ſoully polluted, cannot well be conceived by common reaſon; one Creature can only be ſuppoſed to be a ſufficient ranſom for one of the ſame kind. There could not be a dignity in any Creature, to anſwer the dignity, and equal the value of all mankind; if a multitude of Creatures were neceſſary, there muſt be as many Creatures ſatisfying as were Creatures ſinning, ſo God would loſe one ſpecies of Creatures to reſtore another, or an equal number of Creatures to them that were redeemed; but indeed no Creature could ſatisfie, if the wrong was infinite; and by the rights of juſtice the ſatisfaction is to be proportioned to the greatneſs of the injury, and the Majeſty of the Perſon injured. Thoſe being infinite, no Creature was able to manage this affair, and bring it to a happy period, becauſe no Creature but is finite, and cannot be otherwiſe than finite; infiniteneſs being the incommunicable property of the Deity. Therefore neither man, nor any Angel, is able to effect it.

1. Not man. This is clear. All men were ſunk into the gulf of miſery, and he that was unable to redeem himſelf, could not pretend to an ability to redeem another, Pſal. 47. 7. None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ranſom for him. All that a man hath, is not of ſo much worth as the Soul of man; ſo that no man can pay a ſufficient price for the redemption of his captive brother. All humane Nature could not have ſhown a valuable Sacrifice. Conſider him as man, he is worſe than nothing and vanity. How ſhall God have a ſatisfaction for an unexpreſſible evil from that which is worſe than nothing? Can the drop of a Bucket repair an infinite damage? But conſider him in a ſtate of rapture with God. And you find him by his uncleanneſs much more unfit for ſo great a task. It had been too much a debaſing the Majeſty of God, had one meer man been ſacrificed for others as a ſufficient price of Redemption, as if he had been equal in dignity to the offended Majeſty of God. And what advantage could it have been to the reſt of mankind, ſince the Sacrifice would be as corrupt and unclean as thoſe that needed it? No ſuch thing as an innocent meer man can be found ſince Adams revolt, in all thoſe Ages which have run out ſince. All were ſunk into the common gulf, all come ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. 3. 23. All were deſtitute of the image of God, and become filthy, every one without exception, Pſal. 14. 3. And could the Sacrifice of Rebels redeem rebellious Creatures? Could any thing morally impure content God, when a maim'd Beaſt was not thought fit for his Altar? A polluted Sacrifice over-grown with uncleanneſs, and corrupt imaginations, would rather have provoked than pacified him. But ſuppoſe an innocent man could be found out, ſtor'd with all the holineſs of men and Angels; yet how can we conceive, that the holineſs of that man ſhould pleaſe God as much as the ſin of Adam diſpleaſed him? Such a perſon in his obedience would only have given God his due, whereas by ſin man robb'd God of his honour, more dear than many Worlds, and unconceivable numbers of men and Angels.

2. Nor could Angels be a Sacrifice for us; Becauſe they were not of the ſame Nature with the offending perſon. And the Apoſtle intimates, that the Redemption is to be made in the ſame Nature that tranſgreſt, when he excludes the fallen Angels from the happineſs of Redemption, becauſe Chriſt took not upon him the Angelical nature, Heb. 2. 17. Though the Angels were innocent, yet they were Creatures and finite, nor were they the offending Nature. And though they tranſcend man both in the dignity and holineſs of their Nature, yet they come infinitely ſhort of the dignity of God, who was injur'd. They are not pure in his ſight, with ſuch a purity as is commenſurate with the infinite Holineſs of their Creator, Job 4. 18. He chargeth his Angels with folly. They would fall and vaniſh from their glory, if they were not ſupported by the grace of God. By Angels is not meant Prophets, Meſſengers God ſends to men; for he ſpeaks of perſons diſtinct from them that dwell in houſes of clay: But the Prophets were of this latter number. And that he means the good Angels, is evident, by giving them the title of his Angels, his Servants, as peculiarly belonging to his Service. He proves man not to be juſt and pure in Gods ſight, à majori, becauſe he chargeth the Angels with folly. There had been nothing in the Argument, to ſay, Man is not more pure than his Maker, becauſe the Devils are not. Angels were Creatures, and therefore had not a holineſs adequate to the Holineſs of God. What proportion was there between a finite mutable holineſs, and that which is immutable? Though Angels were innocent, yet in their own Nature they might ceaſe to be ſo. They had not ſtrength enough to bear and break through an infinite wrath; they could not ſatisfie ſo as to effect Redemption, till their ſatisfaction had been compleated, which could not have been even in an endleſs Eternity. What is finite in Nature can never become infinite in Nature; one cannot paſs into another. If one ſin ſunk a number of them into Hell, how could one Angel, or a number of them, anſwer for the multitude of ſins charg'd upon the World?

So great alſo is the malignity of ſin, and ſo great an injury to the Majeſty of God, that it cannot be compenſated by all the ſervices and ſufferings of Saints and Angels. But ſuppoſe Angels had been capable to be Sacrifices for us, and ſo our Redeemers, it had not been agreeable to the Wiſdom of God to confer that honour upon a Creature to be the Redeemer of Souls, which would mount a ſtep higher than the bare title of Creator, and thereby glorifie a Creature above himſelf.

To conclude this. The moſt excellent Satisfaction, and Sacrifice becomes the dignity of an injur'd God, and ſuch a ſatisfaction that there cannot be imagin'd a greater by a Creature; but whatſoever ſatisfaction can be given by men or Angels, is not ſo great as may be imagin'd and apprehended by a Creature; for ſuch an one may be imagin'd as may proceed abſolutely holy from the perſon offering, and be attended with an immutable Innocence, without any poſſibility of a charge of folly, which is a condition above a created ſtate. God was made lower than any Creature by ſin, and therefore ſuch a ſatisfaction was ſuitable, as might render God infinitely higher than any Creature, and demonſtrate the higheſt and moſt glorious perfections of his Nature. This was wrought by the death of the Son of God, and could not have been evidenced in that height by the death of any Creature.

3. Ceremonial Sacrifices under the Law could not be ſufficient for this affair. The Jews indeed did reſt upon them; thought that, if not by their own virtue, yet by virtue of Gods inſtitution they purged away their ſin, Iſai. 1. 13, 14, 15. But,

[1.] This was againſt common Reaſon. Common Reaſon would conclude, That the ſin of a Soul could never be expiated by the bloud of a Beaſt, and that a Nature ſo inferior could not be a compenſation for the crime of a Nature ſo much ſuperiour to it. The Prophet ſpake but the true reaſon of mankind, when he aſſerted, That the Lord would not be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or ten thouſands of rivers of oyl, nor the firſt-born of the body be a ſatisfaction for the ſin of the ſoul, Mich. 6. 6, 7. The firſt-born and fruit of a mans own body was too low, much more the firſt-born of a beaſt. The Soul was the principal in ſin, and what fitneſs had a corporeal bloud to make amends for the crime of a ſpiritual Nature? A rational Sacrifice only was fit to be an atonement for the ſin of a rational Being. The brutiſh Nature was not the humane, there was no agreement between the nature of man and that of a Bullock. The tranſgreſſing Nature was to ſuffer, The ſoul that ſins, that ſhall dye, Ezek. 18. A beaſt had no communion in nature with man, whereby it might reſpect the ſinner, nor any worth in it ſelf, whereby it might reſpect God, nor any willingneſs or intention for ſuch an end. Can any think ſin ſo light, as to be expiated by ſuch pitiful mean bloud? * The remedy ought to be ſuted to the diſeaſe and the party afflicted. The ſin conſiſted in rebellion and hatred of God; the remedy then muſt conſiſt in perfect righteouſneſs, exact obedience, and intenſe love to God. All which beaſts were uncapable of. A man muſt put off his own reaſon, and have very debaſing apprehenſions of the Perfections of God, if he thinks infinite Holineſs ſcorn'd, infinite Juſtice provokt, infinite Glory rifled, can put up all upon the offering brutiſh bloud, that knows not why and to what end it is offer'd. It was too baſe a thing to be thought to bear a proportion to an infinite offended Nature. What ſhould the fleſh and bloud of goats ſignifie to a ſpiritual Nature, with which it had no agreement? Pſal. 50. 13. It was not agreeable to the Wiſdom of God. A wiſe earthly Law-giver would not think the life of a Beaſt to be a fit recompence for the capital crime of a Malefactor. The Wiſdom of God knew that they were unproportion'd to the end of an expiatory Sacrifice. And was it not inconſiſtent with this Perfection, for God to be contented with ſo vile a thing, after ſuch terrible Thundrings from Mount Sinai, and giving the Law with ſo much Solemnity? What a ridiculous thing would all that ado appear to be, if a Beaſts bloud were powerful enough to quench the force of thoſe flames, and put to ſilence the Thunders of the Divine fury, if the tranſgreſſion of any part of it might be waſht away by ſo cheap an Offering? Beſides, the ſame Wiſdom ſurely would not let man, the moſt excellent Creature, be beholden to Brutes for the merit of righteouſneſs, nor could they be agreeable to the Juſtice of God in the Law, which requir'd the death of the party offending. If all the Beasts of Lebanon were Sacrific'd, and the Cedars cut down for Wood for the Burnt-Offerings, all could not be a sweet smelling savour before God. There is an infinite disproportion between this kind of satisfaction and the divine Majesty. With God only is plenteous redemption, Psal. 130. 7, 8. with God, not in the Bloud of Beasts, but in the true Sacrifice, and ransomer; yet with God, and not then manifested to the World.

Beaſts

[2.] The repetition of those Sacrifices show'd their imperfection and insufficiency. 'Tis from this head the Apostle argues their weakness and impossibility to take away sin, Heb. 10. 1, 2, 3, 4. There was after them a remembrance of sin; the Offerer was not so better'd by them, but still he had need of new ones to keep him right with God. Had any thing been perfected by them, they had ceas'd; only the new application of an old Sacrifice had been requir'd; but there was no ground for an after application of a past Sacrifice upon new sins, because the efficacy of the bloud ceas'd as soon as it was shed and sprinkled; so that multitudes of them could not constitute an inexhaustible treasure of reconciliation and merit. The variety of them manifested, that there was nothing firm in them. As many Medicines show their own inefficacy, so the many Sacrifices and purifications did evidence, that a firm and efficacious Propitiation was to be sought elsewhere. If the great annual Sacrifice, the most solemn one in that whole institution (of which you may read Levit. 16. 29. Levit. 23. 27.) could not effect it, much less could Sacrifices of a lower dignity. 'Tis from the repetition of this great Sacrifice Paul argues the insufficiency of all. This was the most solemn Sacrifice, because it was offered by the High Priest himself, and for all the people, and the bloud sprinkled in the Holy of Holies. A less Sacrifice could not have a larger Virtue than the greatest; yet the repetition of this show'd it's imperfection.

[3.] God never intended them for the expiation of sin by any virtue of their own. The Majesty of God that sin fought against, was infinite; the Sacrifice then must be infinite; but none of those Sacrifices under the Law were so. Why then did God institute them? Not with any intention to purge away the sin of the Soul, but the Ceremonial uncleanness of the flesh, Heb. 9. 13, 14. the bloud of Bulls sanctifies to the purifying the flesh. The Apostle compares those and the Sacrifices of Christ together, showing that one purified only the flesh, the other the Conscience. It was not a moral guilt, they were intended to remove, but a Ceremonial, as when one was defil'd by touching a dead Carcass, or a leprous Body; which was in estimation a defilement of the Body, not of the Soul. * It was a guilt judged so by God, not by any Law of nature, but a positive Law, an arbitrary Constitution, which punished it not with Death, but with a suspension from Communion till it were expiated by a Sacrifice: and therefore God might settle what compensation he pleased of a lower nature, for that which was not a moral guilt; for there was nothing in those Ceremonial impurities which might waste the Conscience, or be accounted a dead work, v. 14. or infect the Soul. But as to moral Crimes, they were rather the confessions than expiations of them. And indeed God often discover'd their weakness, and that they could not give him rest, or recompence the injury receiv'd by sin, Isa. 66. 1. Where is the House that you build me, and where is the place of my rest? For all those things have my hands made, and all those things have been, saith the Lord. By the House or Temple is meant all the Jewish Oeconomy, and the lump of Sacrifices; all those things though God appointed them, and though they had been us'd and perform'd, God had no rest in. They neither satisfied his Justice, nor vindicated the honour of his Law; nor could they ever take away sin, Heb. 10. 11. And therefore the only wise God never instituted them for that end, unless we will say he was deceiv'd in his expectations, and mistaken in the end of his appointments. God therefore rejected them, not only upon the account of the Hypocrisy of the Offerers (as sometimes he did) but upon the account of their own nature, being unable to attain the end of a propitiatory Sacrifice, Heb. 7. 18. They were disannull'd for the weakness and unprofitableness of them. Though they had been practis'd for so many Ages, yet not one sin had been expiated by them in that long tract of time.

* Turretin. de satisfac. p. 237, 238.

[4.] God did therefore appoint them to prefigure a more excellent Sacrifice able to do it. The vileneſs and poorneſs of a Beaſt appointed for Sacrifice might admoniſh the Jews, that ſuch light things were inſufficient for ſo great a work, as the taking away of ſin, the wrath of God, and Eternal puniſhment; and redeeming the Soul of Man (more precious than all the Beaſts of the Field, or Birds of the Air) they muſt needs conceive ſin was too foul to be waſh'd away with ſuch Bloud, and this would naturally lead them to conceive that they prefigur'd a Sacrifice more excellent and ſufficient for thoſe ends. They were but ſhadows, Heb. 10. 1. and did typically reſpect a Crucified dying Chriſt as the ſubſtance; and what virtue they had, was not in and from themſelves, but from their typical relation to that which they ſhadow'd: They ſignified the Sacrifice of Chriſt, by whoſe Bloud in the fulneſs of time, the ſins that were paſt, were to be expiated, Rom. 3. 25. and as ſhadows, receiv'd what value they had from their ſubſtance; they did not as ſhadows purge away any ſin, but repreſent that which ſhould. The ſhadow of a man ſhows like a man, but hath not the virtue and power of a man, whoſe ſhadow it is, to act what he doth. * They eaſily might collect from them, that they were not able to expiate their ſins themſelves, that it muſt be done by Death, and by the death of ſome other, not the Offender, but of one too that was innocent, and whoſe Sacrifice might be of perpetual Virtue; and this thoſe ſhadows ſignified to any inquiſitive mind. And the Scripture evidenceth this, the will of God was the reparation of Mankind; and when thoſe were inſufficient for it, Chriſt ſteps in, as the great Sacrifice wherein God had pleaſure, to do this will of God, viz. Mans reſtoration in a way congruous to the honour of God, Heb. 10. 6, 7, 8. So that what pleaſure God had in the inſtitution of legal Sacrifices, did not ariſe from any thing in themſelves, nor was terminated in them, but in this Sacrifice more excellent than the Sacrifice of Worlds of Creatures.

* Mornai contra Inſt. p. 168, 169, &c.

[2.] Since all theſe were inſufficient, ſome other muſt be found out to effect it. And this was Chriſt only, the Son of God. To fancy a ſatisfaction below the demerit of the offence, and diſproportion'd to the injury committed, is to wrong the Wiſdom and Juſtice of God, and to vilify God in ſuch low thoughts of his nature. That only can be properly call'd a ſatisfaction, which is ſuted to the Majeſty of God, and is equivalent to the ſin of man. Now ſince none elſe were able to offer to God any thing for the reparation of his glory, there muſt be ſomething offer'd to God, which is greater than every thing that was not God. There is therefore a neceſſity of ſome divine perſon to give that ſatisfaction which was neceſſary for the honour of God, as that a Father ſaith, there might be as much humiliation in the expiation, as there was preſumption in the tranſgreſſion. If God would have accepted a ſatisfaction leſs than infinite, he might as well have pardon'd ſin without a ſatisfaction at all.

(1.) Chriſt was the fitteſt, and only capable of effecting it. He was more excellent than all the Creatures of the loweſt and higheſt Rank put together. There was none, whoſe merit and dignity could equal the greatneſs and infiniteneſs of the injury done to God by ſin. None could compenſate the blackneſs of the offence with ſuch a greatneſs of ſatisfaction. And indeed, we cannot imagine, that God would expoſe his Son to ſo cruel a death, were it not neceſſary, or highly convenient for his honour, or that the Son himſelf would have taken ſuch a taſk upon his ſhoulders, to redeem man in a way of perfect Juſtice. The Death of Chriſt was neceſſary, our Redemption could not elſe have been in the moſt perfect manner. None but a Divine perſon could offer a price of Redemption worthy of God. His Perſon was infinite, and therefore was able to compenſate an infinite injury; He was the prime male in the World, and therefore called, The firſt-born of every Creature, Col. 1. 15. i.e. the beſt and foundation of the whole Creation. He was innocent, he was free from every thing, that might render him an unſavoury Sacrifice. He was like us, and in that had what was neceſſary for a Sacrifice; but ſin excepted, and in that he wanted what would have made him uncapable of effecting our Redemption. It was neceſſary, that we ſhould have ſuch a Surety and Satisfier, as was not only innocent, but immutably ſo, that could not by any means be beſpotted by ſin; and that the Apoſtle intimates, Heb. 7. 26. Holy, harmleſs,

* D'avenant in loc.

harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from Sinners, and from ſin. Had he only been holy, without being immutably ſo, the Election of God had not ſtood firm: For ſince God choſe ſome to bring to glory, and that in Chriſt, it had been a tottering and uncertain reſolution, had the perfecting the redemption of his choſen ones depended upon the tranſactions of a mutable perſon, that could not eternally ſecure himſelf from offending. Had it been poſſible for the Redeemer to ſin, it had been poſſible for the abſolute Decree of God to become vain, and of no effect. He had alſo ſtrength to do it, His own arm br ought ſalvation, Iſai. 63. 5. He paid God that which he was not bound to pay; he paid an obedience as man, which was not due from him as God; he was made ſubject to the Law, Gal. 4. 4. not, he was ſubject to the Law by his Nature, but made ſo by his Incarnation. He was the fitteſt, in regard of his being the Second Perſon in the Trinity *. It was not fit the Father ſhould ſuffer, he is regarded as the Governour of the World; who ſhould then have been Judge of the ſatisfaction, whether it had been ſufficient, or no? Was it fit the Father ſhould have appear'd before the Tribunal of the Son? Nor was it ſo fit, that the Spirit of God ſhould undertake it; becauſe, as there was a neceſſity of ſatisfaction to content the Juſtice of God, ſo there was a neceſſity of applying this ſatisfaction, and quickning the hearts of men to believe and accept it, that they might enjoy the fruits of this Sacrifice. The order of the three Perſons had then been diſturbed, and that Perſon, whereby the Father and the Son execute all other things, had changed his operation.

* Amyrald. ſur 6. Heb. p. 156, 158. much changed.

He was fit, in regard of both Natures in Union *. Since neither man nor Angel could do this buſineſs, and there is no Nature above theirs but the Divine, it muſt be the Divine Nature and humane together: Humane, becauſe man had ſinned; Divine, becauſe the ſatisfaction ſhould equal the offence. Here they are both in Conjunction; the ſubſtance of the ſatisfaction is made in the humane Nature ſuffering, and the value of the ſatisfaction is from the Divine. Had he not been mortal, he could not have undergone the puniſhment, ſin had merited; and had he not been Divine, he could not have given a reparation equivalent to the damage by ſin: He was man to perform it, and God to be ſufficient for it.

* Ferrii Orthod. Scholaſt. cap. 22. §. 3. p. 223.

(2.) The honour of God was moſt preſerv'd and elevated thereby. This way mercy did not invade the rights of juſtice, nor juſtice treſpaſs upon the bowels of mercy; both contain themſelves in their own ſpheres. Mercy was preſerv'd from being injured, by ſeeing man ſolely puniſhed; and Juſtice was preſerv'd from being wrong'd, by ſeeing man ſolely pardoned. Thus was the nature of God glorified, without one Attribute claſhing againſt the other. Juſtice could not ſo well have been declar'd without the Death of Chriſt; he was therefore ſet forth εἰς ἔνδειξιν, Rom. 3. 25. To declare his righteouſneſs, as an index of juſtice, to point to every head, and part of it in the nature of God. In this way God ſaved us as a Judge, a Law giver, and a King, Iſai. 33. 22. as a Judge in the manifeſtation of his Righteouſneſs, as a Law-giver in the vindication of his Holineſs, as a King in the demonſtration of his Soveraignty; in ſuch a way as that his Juſtice is clear'd, his Law righted, and his Soveraignty acknowledged. His hatred of ſin was more clearly manifeſted, and his truth in his threatnings made good and eſtabliſhed, and ſinners more oblig'd to God, and engag'd upon the account of ingenuity, to a greater abhorrency of ſin, and a fear and love of God, which by the ſuffering of any Creature, could not have had ſo ſtrong a foundation in them. God ſet a high value upon his Law, it was his Royal Law; and had it been wholly neglected, the Royalty of God had not only been violated, but his Holineſs and righteouſneſs had been diſparaged, which ſhone forth in the Law, and made up the whole frame of it; and ſince Death was required by the Law, Death muſt be ſuffered, that there might be an agreement between the threatning and the ſuffering, the puniſhment and the juſtice of God which required it; we may reaſonably think it had been a greater act of Wiſdom, to make no Law, than to let it be violated always, without preſerving the honour of it.

* The Doctrine of the Death of Chriſt is the ſubſtance of the Goſpel; though there be many Doctrines in it beſides that, there is no comfort from any of them, without the conſideration of the Croſs of Chriſt; for though God be merciful in his own nature, yet ſince ſin hath made a ſeparation between God and his Creature,

* Amyrau Sermons ſur l' Evangile, Sermon 3.

Creature, 'tis impoſſible to renew any Communion with him, without a propitiation for the offence. We ſee then Chriſt is the only meritorious cauſe of our juſtification; nothing that we can do can ſatisfie God, we muſt be wholly off from our ſelves and our own Righteouſneſs, as to any dependance on it, and act Faith in the Death of the Son of God, if we would be ſecure here in our Conſciences, or happy hereafter.

As to ſuffer Death was the immediate end of the interpoſition of Chriſt. And the Veracity of God in ſetling the penalty of Death did require it. And the Juſtice of God made the Death of Chriſt neceſſary for our Redemption. So,

4. It was neceſſary in regard of the Offices of Chriſt.

(1.) For his Prieſtly Office. The reaſon that he was to be made like his Brethren ſubject to the Law, and the penalties and curſe of it, with an exception of ſin in his own Perſon, was that he might be a faithful and merciful high Prieſt, Heb. 2. 17, 18. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high Prieſt in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people; faithful to God for the expiation of the guilt of ſin, merciful to men for the ſuccouring them in their miſeries by ſin; faithful to God in that truſt committed to him, to ſatisfie God for the guilt of ſin, that his anger might be averted, and the ſinner received into favour; and therefore he was made like to them in the curſe, though not in the ſin, which was neceſſary for his being a merciful high Prieſt. This qualification of compaſſion could not reſult in ſuch a high manner, from any thing ſo well as from an experimental knowledg of the miſeries we had contracted; and this muſt be by a ſence and feeling of them. No man is ſo affected with the wretched eſtate of men in a ſhipwrack by beholding it in a picture, as when he ſees the Ship daſh'd againſt the Rocks, and hears the crys, and beholds the ſtrugglings of the Paſſengers for Life; nor is any man ſo deeply affected with them upon ſight, as upon feeling the ſame miſeries in his own Perſon. That makes a man's compaſſions more readily excited upon ſeeing or hearing of others in the like ſtate. Now, had not Chriſt run through the chief miſeries of Humane Life, and the puniſhment of Death, he had not had that experimental compaſſion which was neceſſary to qualifie him for this Prieſthood. It was by being made perfect through ſufferings, that he became the author of eternal ſalvation, Heb. 5. 10. It was a thing becoming God as a juſt and righteous Soveraign in bringing many Sons to Glory, to make the Captain of their Salvation perfect through ſufferings, Heb. 2. 10. It became him, by whom, and for whom are all things. It became God as the Soveraign of all things, to have his Juſtice vindicated; and as the end of all things, to have the Glory of his Attributes exalted. Had not Chriſt ſuffered, he had not been a perfect Saviour, neither faithful to God, nor merciful to man, becauſe without Bloud, Juſtice had not been ſatisfied, and ſo ſin, the great hindrance of Salvation, had not been expiated. If he were a Prieſt, he muſt have a Sacrifice; a Prieſt and a Sacrifice are relatives; a Prieſt is not properly a Prieſt without a Sacrifice, nor a Sacrifice properly a Sacrifice without a Prieſt; being ſetled a perpetual Prieſt, Pſal. 110. 4. he muſt have a perpetual Sacrifice. Now, having nothing worthy of Gods regard but himſelf, he ſacrificed himſelf, no other Sacrifice could have been perpetual in its efficacy, and conſequently without a perpetual Sacrifice, he could not have been a perpetual Prieſt. He as a Prieſt purg'd our ſins, but by himſelf as the Sacrifice, Heb. 1. 9. By his own blood as the offering, he entered into the holieſt as a Prieſt, Heb. 9. 12. he could not have entered into Heaven to act as a Prieſt there without Bloud, and no Bloud was fit to be brought in there but his own; there had been elſe no analogy between him and the legal Prieſts, who were to enter into the moſt holy Place with Bloud, and never without it. He could not have been an interceding Prieſt, unleſs he had been a ſacrificing Prieſt, becauſe his Sacrifice is the ground of his interceſſion; his interceſſion is not a bare ſupplication, but a ſupplication with unanſwerable arguments, a preſenting his atoning Bloud, which he carried with him into the holy Place, when he went to appear in the preſence of God for us; whence the Apoſtle ſpeaking of his advocacy, joins it with his propitiation, 1 John 2. 1, 2. his propitiation on Earth, and his advocacy in Heaven, compleat him a Prieſt for ever; the one is the foundation of the other; without it Chriſt had been a bare petitioner in Heaven, and would have had no ground for any Plea againſt the demands of Juſtice.

(2.) For his Kingly Office. The firſt thing he was to do for our reconciliation, was the offering his ſoul for ſin, Iſai. 53 10. Upon this Article did all the promiſes of his Mediatory Exaltation depend; ſo that nothing of the Dignity promiſed, could be rightly claimed, or reaſonably expected by him, without the performance of this main and neceſſary Condition, which himſelf had conſented to in the firſt Agreement. For conſenting to this undertaking, upon the Condition of the promiſe of his Exaltation, he implyed, that he would not expect any Exaltation, unleſs he perform'd the Condition requir'd on his part, of making his ſoul an Offering for ſin; and therefore without ſuch an Oblation, could not juſtly demand the making good the promiſe to him. There was an Ought to dye, and then to enter into glory by the way of Death, as a price to be paid for the reſtoration of our nature to that happineſs from whence it fell; his obedience to Death was to precede, his exaltation to a Throne and Dominion was to follow; he was not to ſit down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high, till he had purg'd our ſins by himſelf, Heb. 1. 3. nor had he been Lord of the dead and living, unleſs he had dyed, Rom. 14. 9. The Royalty, not only over thoſe whom he had redeem'd from ſin, but over the good Angels, was granted him as a recompence for his ſufferings, Phil. 2. 8, 9. and the conqueſt of the evil Angels was by his Death, for in his Croſs he triumphed over principalities and powers, Coloſſ. 2. 15. The change of Laws in the Church, which is a part of Royalty, was to follow this Sacrifice of himſelf, which is underſtood in Cant. 4. 6. Until the day break, and the ſhadows fly away, I will get me to the mountains of myrrh. The removing the ſhadows of the Law, was to follow his being upon the Mount Moriah, the place of his ſufferings, there being an alluſion in the word מור myrrh, or Moriah; nor had the Spirit been ſent into the World, unleſs his Death had preceded. John 7. 39. The Holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorified. This rich treaſure could not be diſpenſed till the acceptation of this Sacrifice, till his glorification; and he could not have a mediatory Glory, till he had offered his mediatory Sacrifice. 'Tis the Lamb ſlain that hath ſeven eyes and ſeven ſpirits, Rev. 5. 6. power to prefer his People, and power to ſend the Spirit to them for their ſupply. Beſides, the Spirit could not have come as a comforter without it, becauſe the conſolations he ſhoots into the Soul, are drawn out of this quiver. Without his Death we had not had a propitiation for ſin, the myſteries of Divine Love had lain undiſcerned in darkneſs; ſince we cannot be renewed without the Spirit (becauſe the nature of man was deprav'd by his fall, whereupon Juſtice denyed the reſtoration of original Righteouſneſs) Juſtice muſt be ſatisfied, and God reconciled, before Mercy could reſtore it. Juſtice muſt be appeaſed, before it would conſent to the return of that favour which had devolved into its hands by forfeiture; ſo great a gift as the Spirit, the author of renewing Grace, was not like to be beſtowed upon us by God, while he remained an Enemy. The gift of the Spirit is therefore aſcribed to the purchace of Chriſts Death.

(3.) There was ſome neceſſity of it for his Prophetical Office. His Death was the higheſt confirmation of his Doctrine. This was not indeed the only cauſe, nor the principal cauſe of his Death; if it were, his Death would differ little in the end of it from the Death of Martyrs. Beſides, if he had ſuffered Death chiefly for this, what need was there of his undergoing the curſe, and groaning under the deſertion of his Father? There was no abſolute neceſſity of his Death for the confirmation of his Doctrine, ſince the miracles he performed, were a Divine Seal to aſſure us of its heavenly original; therefore he directs the Jews to his works as a means of believing him to be from Heaven, John 10. 38. Yet in his Death he ſet forth a perpetual pattern of that obedience, meekneſs, love to God and Man, and truſt in his Father above what any Creature had ever been able to propoſe to us. He taught us in his Life by the words of his mouth, and in his Death inſtructed us by the exemplary exerciſe of his Graces, and the voice of his Blood, 1 Pet 2. 21. He taught us the higheſt part of obedience to the utmoſt, moſt, by performing the exacteſt and ſublimeſt part of obedience to his Father. And therefore after he had diſcourſed to his Diſciples of his Death and departure, he adds the reaſon of it, That the world may know that I love the Father, and as the Father gave me commandment, even ſo I do, Joh. 14. 31. That the World might know that he loved the glory of the Father, who was ſo merciful as to be willing to remit ſin, yet ſo juſt as not to remit it without a Sacrifice.

5. The Death of Chriſt was neceſſary upon the account of the Predictions and Types of it in the Scripture. Had not Chriſt ſuffer'd, all the Predictions had been falſe, and the Types to no purpoſe. In this the Veracity of God was engag'd, not only in making good the threatning of death diſcover'd to the firſt Man, in inflicting what was threatned, but in the way of Redemption by his Son. This was not only truth to his own reſolve, as he had determin'd it, but truth to his word, as he had publiſht it. God having decreed and declar'd the Redemption of Mankind, and the Death of the Meſſiah, as the medium, could not appoint then another way; becauſe his Counſel had not only pitcht upon Redemption as the end, but the Death of Chriſt as the means, and there could be no change in God. Had there been a change in the end, and had God alter'd his purpoſe for mans Redemption, he had obſcur'd and loſt the glory of all thoſe Attributes which ſparkled in it. There could be none in the means; if ſo, it muſt have been for the better, or worſe: the better it could not be; for no way of ſo great a ſufficiency could be found out as this, nor could any Sacrifice of a higher value be thought of: Nor could it be worſe; for he could not have pitched upon any deficient way, but he would have teſtified himſelf weary of, and changed in his end for which he appointed thoſe means. This neceſſity of his Death, Chriſt, in his diſcourſe with his ſtaggering Diſciples, confirms by the Expoſition of all the Scriptures, which contain'd the things concerning himſelf, beginning at Moſes, i.e. at the Books of Moſes, and all the Prophets, Luke 24. 27. which he teſtifies again, v. 43. naming the Pſalms alſo, as particularly containing things that concern'd his Perſon and Death. Moſes diſcover'd it by Types, as he was the Miniſter of ſetling them, and by Prophecies, as he was the Amanuenſis to write ſome of them. The Prophets declar'd it in expreſs words, they ſpake it all with one mouth, and their chief Prophecies center'd in this, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, Acts 26. 22, 23. Saying none other things than what Moſes and the Prophets did ſay ſhould come, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer. And the Apoſtle Peter excludes none of the Prophets from ſpeaking of thoſe things which were to be done in the latter days, Acts 3. 21. * And that this was the deſign of the Spirit in them to teſtifie of the ſufferings of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 11.

(1.) Predictions. We ſhall ſpeak of a few.

[1.] The firſt Promiſe, Gen. 3. 15. It ſhall bruiſe thy head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel. Speaking to the Serpent of the ſeed of the Woman, which was to defeat all his devices. The Meſſiah here, as the ſeed of the Woman, was promiſed to Adam to break the Serpents head, i.e. to take away ſin, and eternal death from man, which the Devil had introduced by the ſubtle contrivances of his head, into the World: for he was to take away the ſtrength, power, and wiſdom of the Devil ſignified by the head. The way whereby he was to do it was, by having his heel bruiſed, viz. the heel of his Humanity, by ſuffering. For as he was the ſeed of the Woman, having humane Nature, he was to be bruiſed, he was to feel the power of the Devil (now the power of the Devil was the power of death, Heb. 2. 14.) yet ſo to feel the power of the Devil, as not utterly to ſink under it; for not his head, but his heel, was to be bruiſed, i.e. his fleſh, not his wiſdom and chief deſign for the Redemption of man. He was only to be bruiſed, not deſtroy'd, or to ſee corruption; ſo that his Death and Reſurrection are here predicted. And by ſuffering his heel to be bruiſed by the Serpent, he was to break the Serpents head, i.e. through death to deſtroy him that had the power of death, Heb. 2. 14. And we know the Death of Chriſt was the Conqueſt of the Devil. * Sufferings are neceſſary; for there can be no conqueſt of the Devil but by a ſatisfaction perform'd to the righteouſneſs of the Law; for his whole Empire conſiſted in the Curſe of the Law, and the Law after ſin requir'd death, called therefore a Law of ſin and death, Rom. 8. 2. The Devil was the Jailor, having the

* Coer. in Gen. 3. 15.

the power of Death; the Law muſt be ſatisfied before the Priſoner be freed from the Jailors power. * The value of thoſe ſufferings is declared, becauſe his bruiſe cannot wholly deſtroy the ſeed, nor hinder him from bruiſing the Serpents Head; he could not by ſuffering bruiſe the ſerpents Head, unleſs he had been innocent, and from his innocence derived a dignity and worth to his ſufferings, and this no fallen Greature could do. Again, he muſt be innocent; for if he had been under the power of the Devil, he could not have bruiſed his Head; and ſince he was to overcome the Devil by having his Heel bruiſed, it ſignifies his ſuffering for thoſe ſins which were the foundation of the Empire, and Dominion of the Devil. Adam might well underſtand this conqueſt of the Devil to be by the Death of the Seed, becauſe after this promiſe he was taught to ſacrifice; and the Sacrifices he was preſently taught (as may be well conjectured by the Skins of Beaſts, viz. of ſacrificed Beaſts, wherewith God cloathed him) as a Comment upon this Promiſe, ſhowed him in their Death what he had deſerved, and in what manner he was to expect his Redemption ſo lately promiſed him. And ſurely the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God would not teach him the way of ſacrificing, without acquainting him with the reaſon and end of Sacrifices, which the Scripture mentions as a means to make man accepted with God, Geneſ. 4. 7. to purge away ſin, 1 Sam. 3. 14. and to make reconciliation for it, Ezek. 45. 17. And Adam having more natural knowledge after his Fall, than all his poſterity have had ſince, might eaſily know by reaſon, that the Bloud of Beaſts was too weak and vile to make an atonement for his late offence, which had brought ſo much miſery upon him, and thereby was manifeſted to be infinitely offenſive to God, and therefore more offenſive to him than the Bloud of Beaſts could be pleaſing. This he could not but know, that thoſe Sacrifices could not make him that did the ſervice, perfect, as pertaining to the conſcience, as the expreſſion is in Heb. 9. 9. And Adam being the High Prieſt, as head of all, could not but know that thoſe Sacrifices were offered for ſin, becauſe this was the end of the appointment of a Prieſt, and the chief part of his Office, as well as the end of the Sacrifice, Heb. 5. 1. Every high Prieſt is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer ſacrifices for ſin. Let us further conſider, the end of this promiſe was to defeat the Devil, and to comfort Adam after his revolt from God, and thereby his falling under the vindictive Juſtice of God, and to chear him up before he ſhould hear his own ſentence which was pronounc'd, Gen. 1, 17, 18, 19. ſo that Adam could not reaſonably underſtand this promiſe any other way for his comfort, than that this promiſed ſeed ſhould take away ſin, and the Death threatned for it; otherwiſe it had been but little comfort to Adam to ſee himſelf ruined beyond any hopes of recovery, and to hear only of the deſtruction of his Enemy: but in this promiſe Adam ſaw the ſentence of Death reſpited, becauſe the ſeed of the Woman was promiſed, which neceſſarily included the continuance of his Life, elſe there could have been no ſeed of the Woman. This alſo ſignifies to us, that the ſufferings of Chriſt were intended for a ſatisfaction of the violated Law and provoked Juſtice; for if Sin and Death were to be taken away by Adams imitation of this promiſed ſeed when he ſhould appear, Adam could take no comfort in the promiſe, unleſs he had been ſure to live to ſee this promiſed ſeed in the fleſh. How could he imitate as an example the promiſed ſeed, whom he was never to ſee in the World, but was to return to duſt long before the appearance of it in the World? And it was neceſſary Adam ſhould behold this ſeed in the fleſh, if the breaking of the fetters of ſin and Hell, were to be brought about only by his imitation of this ſeed. Again, to bruiſe the Serpents Head, cannot reaſonably be underſtood of a confirmation only of the promiſed Mercy, (which ſome make the end of the Death of Chriſt) there was no need of bruiſing the Heel barely for a confirmation of this Mercy; for that was confirmed by the unalterable Promiſe and Will of God. And no queſtion but Adam thought it ſufficiently valid, ſince he received it from the mouth of God himſelf, and had had ſo late an experience how true God was to the word of threatning. There is no other thing left then as the end of this bruiſing the Heel, but to render Mercy triumphant without any wrong to Juſtice, and to vindicate the honour of the Law, and in a way of Righteouſneſs, not only of Soveraign Dominion, to defeat the Serpent, and reſtore the fallen Creature.

* Cocc. in Gen. 3. 15.

[2.] Another Prediction is Pſalm 22. All the circumſtances of his paſſion are here enumerated; ſufferings, revilings, contempt by men, the deſertion of God, his Agonies, the parting his Garments, and at laſt the propagation of the Goſpel, and the calling of the Gentiles are here predicted. * The Jews underſtood it of the Body of the Jewiſh Nation, but the deſign of the Pſalmiſt is to ſet forth a particular Perſon, who is diſtinguiſh'd from the wicked Crew that oppreſſ'd him, and from thoſe that favoured him, whom he calls his Brethren, and diſtinguiſheth himſelf from the Congregation wherein he would praiſe God, v. 23. and upon the Death of this Perſon the World was to be gathered in to God, v. 27. All the ends of the world ſhall remember, and turn unto the Lord. Agreeable to the Prediction of our Saviour, that when he ſhould be lifted up, he would draw all men after him. Here is the Prediction of the very words he ſpake upon the Croſs, when he lay under the imputation of our ſins, and cried out under a ſenſe of his Fathers wrath, v. 1. My God, my God, &c. The miſerable condition he was brought to, v. 6. as a worm and no man, expoſed to ſuch a ſtate of miſery, and to be of no more account than the moſt contemptible Animal, a Worm. The word Worm * comes of a תולע which ſignifies the grain which gave a ſcarlet dye, becauſe the colour proceeded from a Worm encloſed in that grain. Our Saviour was as a Worm cruſh'd to tincture others with his Bloud. The very geſture of the People when they reviled him, wagging their heads, v. 7. & Mat. 27. 29. the reproaches they belch'd out againſt him, v. 8. Mat. 27. 43. He truſted in God, let him deliver him; the ſharpneſs of his Death, v. 14. I am pour'd out like water, all my bones are out of joint, a diſtortion and racking of all his Bones, effuſion of his Bloud, diſſolution of his vital vigor (like wax melted) under the ſenſe of Gods wrath, an expreſſion uſed, Pſal. 68. 2. to ſhow the greatneſs of Gods wrath againſt ſin and ſinners. His extreme thirſt, v. 15. My tongue cleaveth to my jaws. The manner of his Death by crucifixion, v. 16. By piercing his hands and his feet, ſhowing it be a lingering and painful Death; which manner of Death is alſo propheſied, Zach. 12. 10. They ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced, which the ancient Jews underſtood of the Meſſiah, and is a proof that the Meſſiah was to be pierced or digged into. And this place is cited as a Prediction of the Death of Chriſt, John 19. 37. Revel. 1. 7. and as the manner of his Death, ſo the excellency of his Perſon is deſcribed there, the ſame Perſon is a God to pour out the Spirit, and a man to be pierced; he works wonders as God, and ſuffers wonders as man.

* Dr. Owen on Heb. Vol. 1. Exercit. p. 217, 218.

* תולעת Vermillion colour is derived of vermis.

[3.] The whole 53. of Iſaiah is a Prediction of this. He was to be rejected of men, wounded for our tranſgreſſions, to have our ſins laid upon him by God, to bear iniquity, to be led as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, to make his ſoul an offering for ſin. * This is ſo plain, that the Jews anciently underſtood it of the Meſſiah; but the latter Jews to evade it, have fanſied a double Meſſiah; one a ſufferer, another a triumpher; the ſufferer, of the Tribe of Ephraim, the triumpher, of the Tribe of Judah; but where doth the Scripture mention a Meſſiah of the Tribe of Ephraim? It always fixeth his deſcent from the Houſe of David of the Tribe of Judah.

* Pugio fidei. part 3. diſtinct. 1. cap. 10. §. 4, 5. & diſtinct. 3. cap. 16.

Many other Prophecies there are of this, Zach. 13. 7. I will ſmite the Shepherd, and Dan. 9. 24. the Meſſiah ſhall be cut off, but not for himſelf; he ſhall be counted the wickedeſt man, and put to death as the greateſt Malefactor, who hath no crime of his own to merit death, but his death ſhall be for the good of mankind. And the ends of it are expreſs'd, ver. 24. To finiſh tranſgreſſion, and make an end of ſin, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy. To finiſh tranſgreſſion, or reſtrain it; to aboliſh ſin in regard of the guilt of it, and reſtrain it from accuſing us before God, and procuring the condemnation of us. To make an end of ſin, or ſeal up ſin, covering it, that it ſhall no more appear againſt us: As the Writings of the Jews were roul'd up, and ſealed on the Back-ſide, that the Writing could no more be ſeen. To make reconciliation for iniquity, to expiate iniquity, (a word belonging to Sacrifices) to take away the obligation of ſin. (And it is obſervable, that all the words uſed in Scripture to ſignifie ſin, are here put in, to ſhew the univerſal removal of them, as to any guilt, by the Death of Chriſt.) And to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs; As righteouſneſs was loſt by the firſt Adam, ſo it was to be reſtored by the ſecond, to make us for ever accepted before God. And to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy, to accompliſh all the Viſions and Prophecies in the appearance of his Perſon, and performance of his Work. All Prophecies pointed to him, and center'd in him; and the end of his coming and exciſion, was to deliver us from ſin, and introduce ſuch a righteouſneſs as might be valuable for us before God. And then he was to be a Prince, when he had been a Sacrifice, and cut off for the ſins of the people. As the time approached for the coming of this promiſed Seed, God made clearer revelations of the Death of the Meſſiah, and his chief deſign in it. And this is ſuch a teſtimony of a dying Meſſiah, by the hands of violence, and for thoſe great ends which the Chriſtian Religion affirms, that the Jews, with all their evaſions and obſtinacy, know not how to get over it. חָתַם חָזוֹן וְנָבִיא

to

(2.) The ſecond thing is, The Types. There were ſeveral Types of Chriſt in the Old Teſtament, both in the perſons of men, and the Ceremonies of the Law. No one Type, no, nor all together, could fully ſignifie this great Sacrifice. * The Figure hath not what the Truth hath. The Image of a King, repreſents not all that the King hath, or is. Moſes was a Type of the Meſſiah, who was to be raiſed up like to Moſes, Deut. 18. 15. Moſes, put into an Ark, was expoſed to the mercy of the Egyptians on the Land, and the Crocodiles in the River; and after that advanced to be chief Governour of Iſrael: Jonas buried three days in the Belly of the Whale; Noah penn'd up in an Ark, to become the Father of a ſecond Generation; Joſeph, cruelly put into a Pit, and ſold by his Brethren; and afterwards lifted up to a Throne, to be the Preſerver of his ſpiteful Brethren; theſe 'tis likely had all ſome relation, as Types, to Chriſt. It would be endleſs to mention all: Let us conſider in general. * Theodoret.

[1.] Sacrifices. Theſe were practis'd by all Nations, as well Gentiles as Jews, and from a notion that they did pacify their offended Deities. Heathen Authors give us a full account of their ſentiments in this caſe; and the Philiſtines, Neighbours to the Jews, declare this as their ſence in their treſpaſs offering, they would return to God after they had felt his hand. 1 Sam. 6. 3, 4, 5. The common notion of all Heathens was, that they were offer'd to God for a propitiation for ſin, and either for preventing the Judgments they fear'd, or removing the Judgments they felt.

(1.) Theſe Sacrifices could not ariſe from the light of nature. Being univerſally practis'd, they muſt ariſe from the light of nature, common to all men, or from ſome particular inſtitution deriv'd to all men by Tradition. The light of nature could not be any ground for the framing ſuch an imagination in mens minds, that God ſhould be appeas'd by the bloud of irrational Creatures. The diſproportion of them both to the offence, the Offender, and the offended perſon, hath been ſeen and ſpoken of by the wiſer ſort of the Heathens themſelves. Natural light would rather have dictated to them, that their devout Prayers, deep Repentance, and hearty reformation, would have been more efficacious to avert the anger of God, than the cutting the throat of a Bullock, or Lamb, and pouring out the bloud at the foot of their Altars. They could no more ſuppoſe that ſuch offerings ſhould appeaſe an offended God, than the cutting off a Dogs Neck, or the cruſhing a Fly before the Statue of a Prince would have appeas'd the anger of their injur'd Soveraign. And none could think but the killing a Worm, and offering it to the Prince, had been as well or more ſufficient to have mitigated his wrath, than the killing a thouſand Cattle had been to allay the wrath of God, in regard of the proportionableneſs of a Worm to the one, greater than that of all the Beaſts in the World to the other. The light of nature would not inſtruct the Heathens barbarouſly to take away the lives of men, and offer them for the expiation of their ſins. For that teacheth us to love one another, as being deſcended from one root, and being of the ſame ſtamp. Beſides, had any Law of nature oblig'd men at any time to bloudy Sacrifices in ſuch a nature, it would have oblig'd them ſtill. No Law of nature is ras'd out by the Goſpel, but more clear'd; and whatſoever is due to God by the Law of nature, is more improv'd by the Chriſtian Religion. Natural light would be able to make more objections for the forbearance of ſuch a practice, than arguments for the preſerving it in the World.

(2.) They muſt be therefore from inſtitution. And ſince the practice hath been ſo univerſal, and the head of it can leſs be trac'd than the Head of the River Nilus; it muſt be ſuppos'd to deſcend from the firſt man by tradition, and carried by his Poſterity to all the places which they firſt peopled, and ſo continued by their Deſcendants. Bloudy Sacrifices ſeem to be inſtituted juſt after the fall. How ſhould Adam be cloth'd with the Skins of Beaſts? Gen. 3. 21. If it be meant that God only taught him to cloth himſelf with the Skins of Beaſts, it implies a giving him order to ſlay Beaſts, and moſt probably firſt in Sacrifice, and ordering him to take the Skins for Clothing, which in the Levitical Service were appropriated to the Prieſts. For food, 'tis probable, they were not kill'd; the food then appointed was the Herb of the field, even after the Fall, Gen. 3. 18. And the objection againſt this, that there were but two of a Kind, Male and Female, Created; and therefore if two Beaſts of the ſame Kind had then been ſlain, a ſpecies had been deſtroy'd, is of no validity. For the ſtory of the Creation mentions not ſuch a parſimonious Creation, nay it is more probable there were more than two of a ſort Created. However Sacrifices began early, Abel is the firſt we plainly read of, Gen. 4. 4. He brought of the firſtlings of his flock, and Cain brought of the fruit of the ground, an offering to the Lord. They may not be out of the way, who think that there was a crime in the matter of Cains Sacrifice, it not being a bloudy one. No doubt but he had ſeen his Father offer to God the Fruits of the Earth, as well as the Bodies of Beaſts, and might think that the offering thoſe Fruits of the ground (the tilling whereof was his proper employment) was ſufficient, that there was no need of bloud for the expiation of his ſin. He ſeems to ſtand upon his own righteouſneſs, and offer only what was an acknowledgment of Gods Dominion, and Lordſhip over the World; as if he had been only his Creature, and not an offending Creature. It was not inconſiſtent with a ſtate of innocence for man to make ſuch acknowledgments to God, as the Lord of the Creation, and the Benefactor of Man. But after the Fall there was not only the Dominion of God, but his Juſtice, to be acknowledged, which was beſt ſignified in a way that might repreſent to man the demerit of his offence, and the Juſtice due to him, which could not be by the offering of Fruits, but by the ſhedding of Bloud, without which there is no remiſſion.

(3.) If then they were from the ſpecial inſtitution of God, they muſt be figures of ſomething elſe intended. For ſince we find an univerſal ſentiment in the Practicers of them among the Gentiles, that they were for Expiation; and that common reaſon could not find ground enough to fortifie ſuch an opinion in them; and that the Scripture, the ancienteſt Book in the World, gives us an account of their ancient practice and Divine inſtitution; they could not be inſtituted by God, as the prime means of appeaſing him; for that could not be congruous to the Nature of God. There was no proportion between the Juſtice of God and them, nor between them and the ſin of man. But the moſt reaſonable concluſion would be, that they were ordain'd to ſignifie ſome other thing or Sacrifice intended for the expiation of ſin. That they were typical of the death of ſome one able to bear the puniſhment, and purge the tranſgreſſion; ſince they could not purge the Conſcience, they muſt be concluded to be Types of ſomething that ſhould have a ſufficiency, and an actual efficacy to this end. And this the Heathens might have gueſt from reaſon and the univerſal practice, that they were ſhadows of ſomething elſe, though they could not have imagin'd the true perſon they were ſhadows of.

To ſumm up therefore the account the Scripture gives us of them, we muſt conſider, * That after Adams revolt, and contracting death and the curſes of the Law by that Apoſtaſie, there was a neceſſity of maintaining the hooour of the Law, and Gods own Veracity in the commination, and ſatisfying his provoked Juſtice, which muſt be done by that Nature which had offended. Upon this account account and for this end the ſecond Perſon, the Son of God, voluntarily expoſed himſelf, and ſtood as a Screen between the conſuming Fire and the combuſtible Creature. Hereupon the ſufferings of the Son of God were mutually agreed upon, the particular ſufferings appointed and determined, and the time when he ſhould be incarnate, and expoſe himſelf to that which the Criminal ſhould have endured, was ſetled, and the Redemption the deſign of thoſe Sufferings declar'd by promiſe; and becauſe the time would be long before his coming to ſuffer, and the faith of men might languiſh, God kept it up by lively repreſentations of thoſe Sufferings, and the end of them in the death of Sacrificed Beaſts. Not that they ſhould reſt upon them, but uſe thoſe ſhadows as props to their Faith in the promiſed Seed, till the fulneſs of time ſhould come. All thoſe Sacrifices were a rude draught or initial Elements or Rudiments, to teach the World what was to be done with a full efficacy by the perſon appointed to it. Whence the Apoſtle calls them the rudiments of the world, Col. 2. 20. And ſo they were a Copy of what was reſolv'd in Heaven from Eternity to be fulfilled in time for the expiation of ſin. They all had relation to Chriſt. They were to be without blemiſh, and dedicated wholly to God, as things that were to periſh for his glory; and being burnt, and the ſmoke aſcending to Heaven, God might, as it were, partake of the Oblation, as the Scripture teſtifies, Gen. 8. 21. And God ſmelt a ſweet ſavour, viz. from Noahs Sacrifice. So Chriſt offered himſelf as a Holocauſt to the Father, as the Antitype of thoſe Victims that were wholly to be conſum'd by fire. And this bloud ſpeaks better things than the bloud of Abels Sacrifice, or the bloud of all the Sacrifices ſhed from the very firſt; for this pacifies an angry God, purges a guilty Conſcience, and breaks the chains of Hell and Damnation. There is no queſtion to be made, but the Believers among the Jews did apprehend the heel of the promiſed Seed bruiſed in every Sacrifice; they could not elſe offer them in Faith. * As Mathematicians meaſure the greatneſs of the Stars, which are above their reach, by the ſhadows of the Earth, which are within their Compaſs; ſo did they, upon the view of thoſe Sacrifice-ſhadows, apprehend the virtue and efficacy of the grand Oblation. As thoſe that did underſtand Chriſt in the Manna, did alſo eat Chriſt in the Manna, 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4. So thoſe that did apprehend Chriſt in the legal Sacrifices, were alſo ſprinkled with the Bloud of Chriſt. Thus was Chriſt a Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the World, not only by Purpoſe and Decree, but ſignificatively and typically in all the ancient Sacrifices. I might here inſtance in the two anniverſary Goats, Levit. 16. one offer'd, the other devoted to the Wilderneſs. In the red Heifer, Numb 19. burnt upon the day of Expiations, both eminent Types of the Death of Chriſt. As alſo in the Paſſover or Paſchal Lamb, the Bloud whereof ſprinkled upon the poſts, was of no neceſſity in it ſelf for the Iſraelites preſervation from the deſtroying Angel, nor had any intrinſick virtue in it to procure their ſecurity. * The Angel no doubt had acuteneſs of ſight enough to diſcern the Houſes and Perſons of the Iſraelites from thoſe of the Ægyptians. We cannot juſtify the Wiſdom of God in this conduct, if we refer it not to Chriſt as a repreſentation of that great miracle of Redemption to be wrought by him for the true Iſraelites, when he ſhould come to free man from a Bondage worſe than Ægyptian. This is the true Lamb of God, that hath the virtue and vigour of all that whereof the Paſchal Lambs had but the Image and ſhadow. Let me add the obſervation of one * [the command of God, that the bones of the Paſchal Lamb ſhould not be broken, ſignified that the Redeemer of the World ſhould dy ſuch a Death wherein the breaking of Bones was uſual.] Yet that that circumſtance ſhould not be us'd in his Death, and therefore that that Order of not breaking the Bones of the Paſchal Lamb is cited by John, as if it had been literally meant of him and not of the Lamb, John 19. 36. That the Scripture ſhould be fulfill'd, a bone of him ſhall not be broken. I might alſo inſtance in that eminent type of the bloud of Chriſt, the bloud of the Sacrifice ſprinkled upon the Altar, Book of the Law, Veſſels of the Sanctuary. After which the Elders of Iſrael eat and drunk in the preſence of God, no longer expos'd unto his anger, Exod. 24. commented upon by the Apoſtle, Heb. 9. 19, 20.

bearing the Wood, did prefigure the manner of the Death of Chriſt, viz. ſuch a Death, wherein the bearing the Wood was cuſtomary: As in crucifying, the Offenders bore the Croſs to the place of Execution, and Chriſt did his. And a Type alſo of the Reſurrection of Chriſt: For it was the third day from the Command of offering him, that Abraham received him to life, as new born, and raiſed from the dead, Gen. 22. 4. and that in a figure of ſome nobler Sacrifice and Reſurrection, Heb. 11. 19. Moriah was the place appointed by God, where Abraham was to offer his Son, Gen. 22. 2. In one part whereof was the Temple, and the Tower of David; another part of the Mount was without Jeruſalem, and was called Calvary, upon which Iſaac was to be ſacrificed; as Hierome tells us from the Jewiſh Tradition. Now upon Abraham's readineſs to offer his Son Iſaac, God binds himſelf by an Oath, That in his Seed all the Nations of the Earth ſhall be bleſſed, Gen. 22. 16. 18. In his Seed, as dying, and to be offered up, and riſing again; as Iſaac did in figure. God now binds himſelf by an Oath, to do that to Abraham, which he had before promiſed to Adam. The intent of which Oath, the Apoſtle, Heb. 6. 13, 19, 20. refers to the ſetling of Chriſt as Redeemer, and more poſitively affirms, This Seed to be Chriſt, Galat. 3. 10. This Oath to Abraham, was purſuant to that promiſe to Adam, which expreſs'd the bruiſing of the Seed of the Woman; and now God by Oath appropriates this Seed to Abraham, (as being ſingled out from the reſt of the World) from whom the Meſſiah ſhould deſcend. God oblig'd himſelf to bleſs the World by one of the Seed of Abraham to be offer'd up really, as Iſaac was in figure. And by his hindering him from Sacrificing Iſaac, and ſhowing him a Ram, he intimates that there would be ſome interval of time before the bleſſed Seed ſhould be offer'd. And the words which Abraham ſpeaks, Gen. 22. 8. God will provide himſelf a Lamb for a burnt-offering, ſeem to be a Prophetick Speech of the Death of this great Sacrifice. Though Abraham might not at that time know the true meaning of that Speech, no more than many of the Prophets knew what they propheſied of, 1 Pet. 1. 11. And the Mount Moriah is concluded by that Prophecy, v. 14. In the mount of the Lord it ſhall be ſeen, to be the place of the appearance of this Seed, In the mount the Lord Jehovah ſhall be ſeen; the Particle [of] not being in the Hebrew Text, which was the place afterwards of the ſufferings of Chriſt.

Uſe.

* Charron. 1. Let us ſee here the evil of ſin. * Nothing more fit to ſhow the baſeneſs of ſin, and the greatneſs of the miſery by it, than the ſatisfaction due for it: As the greatneſs of a diſtemper is ſeen by the force of the Medicine, and the value of the Commodity by the greatneſs of the price it coſt. The ſufferings of Chriſt expreſs the evil of ſin, far above the ſevereſt judgments upon any Creature, both in regard of the greatneſs of the Perſon, and the bitterneſs of the ſuffering. The dying groans of Chriſt ſhow the horrible nature of ſin in the eye of God; as he was greater than the World, ſo his ſufferings declare ſin to be the greateſt evil in the World. How evil is that ſin that muſt make God bleed to cure it? To ſee the Son of God hal'd to Death for ſin, is the greateſt piece of Juſtice that ever God executed. The Earth trembled under the weight of Gods wrath when he puniſh'd Chriſt, and the Heavens were dark, as though they were ſhut to him, and he crys and groans and no relief appears; nothing but ſin was the procuring meritorious cauſe of this. The Son of God was ſlain by the ſin of the lapſed Creature; had there been any other way to expiate ſo great an evil, had it ſtood with the honour of God, who is inclin'd to Pardon, to remit ſin without a compenſation by Death, we cannot think he would have conſented that his Son ſhould undergo ſo great a ſuffering. Not all the Powers in Heaven and Earth could bring us into favour again, without the Death of ſome great Sacrifice to preſerve the honour of Gods Veracity and Juſtice; not the gracious interpoſition of Chriſt, without becoming mortal, and drinking in the Vials of wrath, could allay divine Juſtice; not his interceſſions, without enduring the ſtrokes due to us, could remove the miſery of the fallen Creature. All the holineſs of Chriſts Life, his innocence and good works, did not redeem us without Death. It was by this he made an atonement for our ſins, ſatisfied the revenging Juſtice of his Father, and recover'd us from a ſpiritual and inevitable Death. How great were our

Crimes,

Crimes, that could not be wip't off by the works of a pure Creature, or the holineſs of Chriſts Life, but requir'd the effuſion of the bloud of the Son of God for the diſcharge of them? Chriſt in his dying was dealt with by God as a Sinner, as one ſtanding in our ſtead, otherwiſe he could not have been ſubject to Death. For he had no ſin of his own, and Death is the wages of ſin, Rom. 6. 23. It had not conſiſted with the goodneſs and righteouſneſs of God as Creator, to afflict any Creature without a cauſe, nor with his infinite love to his Son to bruiſe him for nothing. Some moral evil muſt therefore be the cauſe. For no Phyſical evil is inflicted without ſome moral evil preceding; Death being a puniſhment ſuppoſeth a fault. Chriſt having no crime of his own muſt then be a ſufferer for ours. Our ſins were laid upon him, Iſa. 53. 6. or tranſfer'd upon him. We ſee then how hateful ſin is to God, and therefore it ſhould be abominable to us. We ſhould view ſin in the ſufferings of the Redeemer, and then think it amiable if we can. Shall we then nouriſh ſin in our hearts? This is to make much of the Nails that pierc'd his Hands, and the Thorns that prickt his Head; and make his dying groans the matter of our pleaſure. 'Tis to pull down a Chriſt that hath ſuffer'd, to ſuffer again, a Chriſt that is rais'd, and aſcended, ſitting at the right hand of God, again to the Earth, to lift him upon another Croſs, and over-whelm him in a ſecond Grave. Our hearts ſhould break at the conſideration of the neceſſity of his Death. We ſhould open the heart of our ſins by Repentance, as the Heart of Chriſt was open'd by the Spear. This doth an [Ought not Chriſt to dy?] teach us.

2. Let us not ſet up our reſt in any thing in our ſelves, not in any thing below a dying Chriſt. Not in Repentance or Reformation. Repentance is a condition of Pardon, not a ſatisfaction of Juſtice; it ſometimes moves the Divine Goodneſs to turn away judgment, but it is no compenſation to Divine Juſtice. There is not that good in Repentance, as there is wrong in the ſin repented of; and ſatisfaction muſt have ſomething of equality, both to the injury and the Perſon injured; the ſatisfaction that is enough for a private Perſon wrong'd, is not enough for a juſtly offended Prince; for the greatneſs of the wrong mounts by the dignity of the Perſon. None can be greater than God, and therefore no offence can be ſo full of evil as offences againſt God; and ſhall a few tears be ſufficient in any ones thoughts to wipe them off? The wrong done to God by ſin, is of a higher degree than to be compenſated by all the good works of Creatures, though of the higheſt elevation. Is the Repentance of any Soul ſo perfect, as to be able to anſwer the puniſhment the Juſtice of God requires in the Law? And what if the Grace of God help us in our Repentance? It cannot be concluded from thence that our Pardon is formally procured by Repentance, but that we are diſpoſed by it to receive and value a Pardon. 'Tis not congruous to the Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs of God, to beſtow Pardons upon obſtinate Rebels. Repentance is no where ſaid to expiate ſin; a broken heart is called a ſacrifice, Pſal. 51. 17. but not a propitiatory one. Davids ſin was expiated before he penn'd that Pſalm, 2 Sam. 12. 13. Though a man could weep as many tears as there are drops of water contained in the Ocean, ſend up as many vollies of Prayers as there have been groans iſſuing from any Creature ſince the foundation of the World; though he could bleed as many drops from his heart, as have been pour'd out from the veins of ſacrificed Beaſts both in Judea and all other parts of the World; though he were able, and did actually beſtow in charity all the Metals in the Mines of Peru, yet could not this abſolve him from the leaſt guilt, nor cleanſe him from the leaſt filth, nor procure the pardon of the leaſt crime by any intrinſick value in the acts themſelves; the very acts as well as the perſons might fall under the cenſure of conſuming Juſtice. The Death of Chriſt only procures us Life. The bloud of Chriſt only doth quench that juſt Fire ſin had kindled in the breaſt of God againſt us. To aim at any other way for the appeaſing of God, than the Death of Chriſt, is to make the Croſs of Chriſt of no effect. This we are to learn from an [Ought not Chriſt to dy?]

3. Therefore, Let us be ſenſible of the neceſſity of an intereſt in the Redeemers Death. Let us not think to drink the Waters of Salvation out of our own Ciſterns, but out of Chriſts wounds. Not to draw Life from our own dead Duties, but Chriſts dying grones. We have guilt, can we expiate it our ſelves? We are under der Juſtice. Can we appeaſe it by any thing we can do? There is an enmity between God and us. Can we offer him any thing worthy to gain his Friendſhip? Our natures are corrupted, can we heal them? Our ſervices are polluted, can we cleanſe them? There is as great a neceſſity for us to apply the Death of Chriſt for all thoſe, as there was for him to undergo it. The Leper was not cleans'd and cur'd by the ſhedding the bloud of the Sacrifice for him, but the ſprinkling the bloud of the Sacrifice upon him, Levit. 14. 7. As the Death of Chriſt was foretold as the meritorious cauſe, ſo the ſprinkling of his bloud was foretold as the formal cauſe of our happineſs, Iſa. 52. 15. By his own bloud he enter'd into Heaven and Glory, and by nothing but his bloud can we have the boldneſs to expect it, or the confidence to attain it, Heb. 10. 19. The whole Doctrine of the Goſpel is Chriſt Crucified, 1 Cor. 1. 23. and the whole confidence of a Chriſtian ſhould be Chriſt Crucified. God would not have mercy exercis'd with a neglect of Juſtice by man, though to a miſerable Client, Levit. 19. 15. Thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor in judgment. Shall God who is infinitely juſt, neglect the rule himſelf? No man is an object of mercy till he preſents a ſatisfaction to Juſtice. As there is a perfection in God, which we call mercy, which exacts Faith and Repentance of his Creature before he will beſtow a pardon; ſo there is another perfection of vindictive Juſtice that requires a ſatisfaction. If the Creature thinks its own miſery a motive to the diſplaying the perfection of mercy, it muſt conſider, that the honour of God requires alſo the content of his Juſtice. The fallen Angels therefore have no mercy granted to them, becauſe none ever ſatisfied the Juſtice of God for them. Let us not therefore coin new wayes of procuring pardon, and falſe Modes of appeaſing the Juſtice of God. What can we find beſides this, able to contend againſt Everlaſting Burnings? What refuge can there be beſides this to ſhelter us from the fierceneſs of Divine wrath? Can our Tears and Prayers be more prevalent than the Cryes and Tears of Chriſt, who could not by all the ſtrength of them divert Death from himſelf, without our Eternal loſs? No way but Faith in his bloud. God in the Goſpel ſends us to Chriſt, and Chriſt by the Goſpel brings us to God.

4. Let us value this Redeemer, and redemption by his Death. Since God was reſolv'd to ſee his Son plung'd into a diſgraceful emptineſs, cloath'd with the form of a Servant, and expos'd to the ſufferings of a painful Croſs, rather than leave ſin unpuniſhed; we ſhould never think of it without thankful returns, both to the Judge and the Sacrifice. What was he afflicted for, but to procure our Peace? bruis'd for, but to heal our wounds? brought before an earthly Judge to be condemn'd, but that we might be brought before a Heavenly Judge to be abſolv'd? fell under the pains of Death, but to knock off from us the ſhackles of Hell? and became accurſed in Death, but that we might be bleſſed with Eternal Life? Without this our miſery had been irreparable, our diſtance from God perpetual. What Commerce could we have had with God, while we were ſeparated from him by Crimes on our part, and Juſtice on his? The Wall muſt be broken down, Death muſt be ſuffer'd, that Juſtice might be ſilenc'd, and the goodneſs of God be again Communicative to us. This was the wonder of divine love, to be pleas'd with the ſufferings of his only Son, that he might be pleas'd with us upon the account of thoſe ſufferings. Our Redemption in ſuch away, as by the Death and Bloud of Chriſt, was not a bare Grace. It had been ſo, had it been only Redemption; but being a Redemption by the Bloud of God, it deſerves from the Apoſtle no leſs a title than riches of Grace, Eph. 1. 7. And it deſerves and expects no leſs from us than ſuch high acknowledgments. This we may learn from [Ought not Chriſt to die?]

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE NECESSITY OF CHRISTS EXALTATION.

LUKE XXIV. XXVI.

Ought not Christ to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his Glory?

WE have already ſpoken to the Firſt part of this Scripture, and from thence declared the Neceſſity of Chriſts Death; the next is his Exaltation. His Sufferings were neceſſary for the expiation of our ſin, and his Exaltation neceſſary for the application of the merits of his Death. Some adde the particle [ſo] and ſo to enter into his Glory, but that is not in the Greek, though it may be implyed, for the entrance of Chriſt into his Glory, was to be by the way of Suffering.

Obſerve by the way. The great Grace of God, that makes often the diffidence of his People an occaſion of a further clearing up of the choiceſt Truths to them. Never did thoſe Diſciples hear ſo excellent an Expoſition of the Scriptures concerning the Meſſiah from the mouth of their Maſter, as when their diſtruſt of him had prevailed ſo far. Glory he was to enter into] by this Glory is not meant only his Reſurrection; that was not his glory, but the beginning of his Exaltation, a cauſa ſine qua non, it freed him from mortality and inveſted him with immortality, but was not the term, but a neceſſary means of his glory, (as the fetching Joſeph from Priſon, was a neceſſary antecedent to his elevation on a throne, he could not be a Governour while he was a Priſoner.) By his Reſurrection he was prepar'd for it, by his Aſcenſion he was poſſeſſed of it, his Reſurrection was an entrance into his glory, but not the conſummation of his felicity. [His Glory] 'tis called his as diſtinguiſht from the glory belonging to any other; thus he diſtinguiſheth a glory peculiarly his own, from the glory of his Father, and the glory of the holy Angels, when he mentions his coming to Judgment in all thoſe glories, Luke 9. 26. When he ſhall come in his Own Glory, and in His Fathers, and of the Holy Angels, * in the mediatory glory; in the glory of the Father, the glory of his Godhead, as he is equal with God; in the glory of the whole Creation, the Angels being the top of it; or in the glory of all the adminiſtrations of God, the glory of God as Creator, Creation being attributed to the Father; the glory of the holy Angels by whoſe diſpoſition the Law was given, in the glory of the legal Adminiſtration; in his own glory, the glory of the Goſpel adminiſtration, as judging men according to thoſe ſeveral degrees of light they were under, the light of nature, that of the Law, and the more glorious of the Goſpel. His Glory.

* Sterry of the Will p. 244.

(1.) As having a peculiar right to it.

[1.] In regard of his deſignation to it by his Father. He calls it a glory given by God, John 17. 24. His glory as promiſed him by the Father, and covenanted for by himſelf; he was to be the firſt-born higher than the Kings of the Earth, Pſal. 89. 29. His glory, as by gift he was to have dominion from Sea to Sea, and from the River to the ends of the Earth, they that dwell in the Wilderneſs ſhall bow before him, and his enemies ſhall lick the duſt, for he ſhall redeem the Soul of the needy from deceit and violence, his name ſhall indure for ever, men ſhall be bleſſed in him; and the whole Earth was to be filled with his glory, Pſalm 72. 8, 9, 14, 17, 19. verſes.

[2.] In regard of his purchaſe of it, all this was his glory. 'Tis generally ſaid that Chriſt had a title to glory, by virtue of the union of the divine nature to the humane; 'tis true, had Chriſt been only incarnate for no other end, but to take our fleſh, glory had of right belonged to him from the beginning, by vertue of that union; but in regard of that œconomy of God for Redemption by bloud, and the covenant paſt between them conſiſting of ſuch Articles, it was not his incarnation, but his paſſion inveſted him with a right to claim it; he was to fulfil his charge before he was to have the fruition of his reward. His glory was promiſed to him, not as aſſuming our fleſh, but as ſuffering in our fleſh, and making his Soul an offering for ſin, and being incarnate for this end. Glory belong'd not to him till his death had been actually ſuffered, and declared valid in the ſight of God: The ſatisfaction of his Father by him, was to precede his Fathers ſatisfaction of him, Iſaiah 53. 11. His obedience to death gave a wherefore to his Exaltation, Phil. 2. 8. 10. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him; the right to it may be meaſur'd by the order of conferring it; it was not conferr'd, till he had purged our ſins, Heb. 1. 3. and therefore the right to claim it was not, till he had performed what was due to his Father.

(2.) As being the firſt ſubject of glory, as being the ſpring of glory to all that were to be glorified. As Adam the head of mankind was the firſt ſubject of Gods rich gifts to his reaſonable Creature, ſo was Chriſt the firſt ſubject of Gods glorious grace, and gifts to and for his redeemed Creature. Others have a glory from him as private perſons, Chriſt hath this glory as a publick perſon, as a ſecond Adam, and ſo it is his glory peculiar to him, and incommunicable to any elſe, as being the only and ſingular head, the one and only publick perſon in the charge of Redemption. As his ſufferings were peculiarly his, wherein neither men nor Angels could be partners with him, ſo is the glory peculiarly his. As he trod the wine-preſs alone, ſo he alone hath right to the Crown, and whoever elſe wears a Lawrel, wears it as his member, not as a head.

Let us conſider the connexion: ought not Chriſt to ſuffer thoſe things, and to enter into his glory ? 'Tis argued whether there was a meritorious connexion between the ſufferings of Chriſt, and his glory, i. e. whether this glory was merited by his ſuffering.

1. Some ſay his ſufferings were not meritorious of his own glory, though his Exaltation altation followed upon his passion, yet it was not merited by it, his cross was the way to his crown, but not the deserving cause of his crown, he merited by his sufferings a glory for us, but not for himself, and the act of God whereby it was conferr'd is expresst by a word, χαρίσατο Phil. 2. 9. given him, or freely given him a name which is above every name, which signifies an act of grace and not of debt; as he did not fulfil the Law for himself, but for us, that he might redeem us from under the curse of the Law, by being made a curse for us, and therefore is said to be given to us, Isa. 9. 6. or for our sakes, not to himself or for his own sake; so he acquir'd nothing for himself by his death, but what he had possession of before, quoad divinitatem and quoad humanitatem, for all power both in Heaven and Earth was conferred upon him before his death, Matth. 11. 27. * All glory, say they, would have flowed down upon his humanity at the instant of his Conception, as the glory of the Husband is confer'd upon the spouse at the first moment of Marriage; but God by a special dispensation detain'd it till he had accomplished his work in the lowest degree of his humiliation, God suspended his concourse, as he did to the fire, which hindered it from exercising its proper quality of burning upon the three Children; but this work being performed, and the suspension taken off, his glory could not but naturally fill his humanity, as the quality of fire would return to its natural course upon removing the stop; and therefore to assert any merit for himself is a disparagement of, and an impeachment to his glorious union; and for those Places which are alledged for his merit of it as, Phil. 2. 8, 9. Heb. 1. 9. and also the text, they show the order of conferring it rather than the merit of it, that his glory followed his passion, not that his passion merited his glory *; his glory rather seemed to be a necessary consequent of Gods acceptation of his death, and a testimony of Heavens approbation of it. As the occasion of his death was the fall of man, so the moving cause of his death was the Redemption of man, not the Exaltation of the name of Christ primarily and immediately; for our sakes he slid down from Heaven into our Nature, for our sakes he bore that burden the Law and wrath of God had cast upon him, it was for us that he combated with death, and forced our enemies out of their fortresses, and so by this voluntary submission and humiliation he came to his former dignity, for if he came to an higher dignity than he had before, it had been evident that he was obedient for himself, not for others.

* Donn Vol. 1. p. 108. Alvarez de Incarnat.

* Suarez.

2. Others say, Christ did merit this glory for himself. The Oyl of gladness was pour'd upon his humanity, wherein he had fellows, because he had loved Righteousness, Heb. 1. 9. Therefore is a causal particle, not only of the final cause, but the moral, efficient, or meritorious cause. He did by this merit an Exaltation at the right hand of God, above all the quires of Angels. It was indeed due upon his suffering, yet called Grace * because the whole design of Redemption in the pitching upon Christ and the sending him was an act of free Grace in God to us; as it was grace to accept his interposition for us, so it was grace to promise him this glory and set this joy before him for his encouragement in his sufferings *, and as it was free grace to unite the flesh to the person of the Son of God, so it was of grace, that there was a continuation of demonstrating the glory of the Deity in the same flesh; yet after his sufferings the glory of Christ may be said to be a merited reward, because his glory was not improportionable to his sufferings, he merited the dispossession of the Devil, and merited therefore the transferring that power upon himself, to manage for the honour of God which the Devil had usurp'd over man in rebellion against God. A man may have a double title to an inheritance, by birth and by some signal services done, whereby what was due to him by birth, may be due to him by merit; as when a province flies into Rebellion against the lawful Prince, he sends his eldest Son with an Army to quell those tumults, his arms prove successful and the rebels are reduced to obedience; doth he not merit a title to that inheritance by his Sword which was due to him by his birth? Indeed Christ did not merit his first mission, no more than the Princes Son merited his being sent for the reduction of the Rebels; nor did he merit his first unction and habitual grace; this belonged to the perfection of the soul of Christ, and fitted him for his mediatory work in our nature, he could not have wanted this without prejudice to the work of Redemption and to our Salvation which was the end of it, though this was necessarily consequent upon an admission of Christs Mediation, and a necessary article in the Covenant of Redemption, yet it was the act of Gods free grace. Nor must we think that this glory was the motive to Christ to ingage him first in this undertaking, but pure grace to us; for what attractives could there be in our nature to make his Divine person assume it? Or what glory could be conferr'd upon the humanity, that could allure the Deity to embody it self in it? Could the promise of an honour to be conferr'd upon an Angel, if he would inclose himself in the body of a fly or other insect, move him to link his own nature with that for ever, since he enjoyed before a higher honour in his own nature, than could be conferr'd upon him upon such a conjunction? It was the grace of Christ that mov'd him when he was rich to become poor, not that he might be the richer by that poverty, but we, 2 Cor. 8. 9. For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. Yet Christ may be said to merit this Mediatory glory for himself; the Holy Ghost was a meritorious fruit of the sufferings of Christ, and why not that glory then which was necessary to the sending the Holy Ghost, whose coming he had purchased? The very sending the Holy Ghost was a great part of his glory, and we must remember that whatsoever was merited by Christ, was not merited by vertue of his humanity singly considered, but as having the Deity in conjunction with it; and why might not so great a person merit at the hands of God?

* as was noted before in the word χαρίσατο Phil. 2. 9. * Coccei. de Fœder. Stct. 106.

3. Let this be as it will, yet the sufferings of Christ were a cause of his glory, or a way to his glory, by Mediatory compact. For as he was by that bound to pay an obedience he was not obliged to before, so was the Father by that oblig'd to give him a glory proportionable to his work, and a glory distinct from the glory of the Deity. The waters were to come into his Soul, Psal. 69. 2. He was to drink of the Brook in the way, therefore should he lift up his head, Psal. 110. 7. This order did God require for the exalting of him, combat before triumph. This glory could not be conferred upon him before his suffering. If he had enjoyed it from the beginning, by vertue of the hypostatical union, his body had been impassible, uncapable of suffering, and so could not have been a sacrifice for our sins. His triumphant lawrel grew upon the thornes of his cross, and received a verdure from his dying tears. The palms spread in his way at his entrance into Jerusalem, a little before his suffering, are by some regarded as an emblem of this, it being the nature of that Plant to grow higher by the weights which are hung upon it, for so did our Saviour rise more glorious by his pressures. There was a worthiness in his death to entitle him to the fruition of glory, Revel. 5. 12. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing; worthy to receive power for silencing the Oracles of the Devil, power to conquer his enemies, Riches to pour out upon his Friends, Wisdom to govern his Empire, Strength to execute his Orders, worthy to be Honoured, Ador'd, Blessed by all; and this glory he challeng'd as due by vertue of his sufferings, John 17. 1. it was fit he should be lifted up above death after he had so obediently suffered, and be instated in the Empire of the World after he had so magnificently redeem'd it. The necessity of his sufferings is here described, and also the necessity of his glory, ought not, is to be referred to both, ought he not to suffer, ought he not upon those sufferings to enter into Glory? How did he suffer? as Man; he entred into glory as Man; as man he suffered, as man he was glorified. His Divine Nature was impassible, and also unglorifiable by any addition of glory to it. His Death was necessary for us, so was his glory. He dyed in a publick capacity as a surety for mankind, he was exalted in a publick capacity as the head of those he died for; as he offered himself to God for us upon the Cross, so he entred into Heaven to appear in the presence of God for us upon his Throne, Heb. 9. 24.

The

The Doctrine to be hence observed is this,

Doctrine. The Exaltation of Christ was as necessary as his passion.

As it was necessary for him to reconcile us by his death, so it was necessary for him to reinstate us in happiness by his life, Rom. 5. 10. Reconciliation is ascrib'd to his Death, Salvation to his Life in Glory. He could not have been a Saviour without being a Sacrifice, he could not have applyed that Salvation without being a King, he was to descend from Heaven cloathed with our infirmities, to suffer for our Crimes; he was to ascend to Heaven invested with Immortality, to present our Persons before God, and prepare a glory for every Believer.

In the handling this Doctrine, I shall shew

I. The Necessity of this Glory.
II. The Nature of it.
III. The Ends of it.
IV. The Use.

I. The Necessity of this Glory.

First, Upon the Account of God.

1. In regard of his Truth, the Truth of his Promise; his Promise to him, his Promises of him.

(1.) His Promise to him; to Christ. Gods Truth was ingaged for his glory, as the Mediators Truth was ingaged for his Suffering, and therefore that was as necessarily to be conferred upon him, as the other was to be endured by him. As the Ignominy of the Cross was an Article on his part, so the honour of a Crown was an Article on Gods part. Upon the making his Soul an offering for sin, did depend all the Promises made to him of his Headship over the Church, Dominion over the World, Manifestation of his Deity, propagation of his Kingdom, and subjection of his Enemies. Without the performance of what he promis'd, he could not claim one; and upon the performance of what he promis'd, he could claim all, and his claim could meet with no demur in the Court of Heaven, so long as God was true to his Word. Christ was to surrender himself as a Surety for Man, to the Wrath of God; and God was to surrender the Government of the World into the Hands of Christ. His Visage was to be mar'd, and he was to sprinkle many nations by his bloud, Isa. 52. 14, 15. and then Kings should shut their mouths at him: Kings in Power, Kings in Wisdom, should be astonished at his growth, and submit to his Scepter. As he was to suffer for many Nations, so he was to judge among many nations, Mich. 4. 3. He was not to see corruption, his Soul was not to be left in hell; Psal. 16. 10, 11. Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy holy One to see corruption, &c. Act. 2. 27, 28. Christ Articled with God to go into the state of the Dead, but not to be left there; he was to pass into the Grave, but not to be invaded by the rottenness of it; he was to be shown the paths of Life, i. e. to be restored to another Life, to be possessed of a fulness of Joy, that was to follow his Resurrection, after the Ignominy of his Death, and the Agonies of his Spirit. As he was to have a fulness of Spirit in the World, so he was to have a fulness of Joy in his Glory. As his Grace was to be so great as not to be measured, so his Glory was to be so great as not to be bounded; and as his Death was to be of a short duration, not fully the term of three days, so his Pleasures were to be of an endless duration, Pleasures for evermore. And all this glory was to flow from the presence of God, whom his humane soul was for ever to behold and converse with, with infinite pleasure; In thy presence is fulness of Joy. His whole Exaltation which consisted principally in a manifestation of his Deity, and Son-ship, was passed by a decree of God, and publish'd to him as Mediator, Psal. 2. 7. I will declare the decree, the Lord hath said unto me, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; which is interpreted of his Resurrection, Act. 13. 33. which was the first powerful declaration God issued out to the World of his being his Son, Rom. 1. 4. Upon which account Peter tells us he was fore-ordained both to his Sufferings and Glory, before the foun- dation of the World, 1 Pet. 1. 20, 21. he was to inherit the spoyles of his Enemies, and take for his own, what was before Satans Prey, as a reward, and that for the pouring out his soul to Death, Isa. 53. 12. he was to see his seed upon the making his soul an offering for sin, Isa. 53. 10. then also his days were to be prolonged; What, to a miserable and infirm life? No, but to such a one as should endure to Eternity; wherein is included, not only his Resurrection, but his glorious State. How could he see his seed, if he remained in the fetters of Death? or behold them with Comfort, if he should enjoy an Immortality in an infirm body as he had in the time of his Humiliation? The sight of his seed was to follow his Investiture in glory, and was a part of it; then it was that Nations should run unto him, Isa. 55. 5. All those Promises were made to him as incarnate, and making himself an oblation; for as God, he was not the subject of any Promise. He was to bear our iniquities on the Cross, and then to live Triumphantly upon a Throne. Christ pleads this, Joh. 17. 1. The hour is come, Father glorifie thy Son; the hour of my Passion, the hour of thy Promise. I am willing to undergo the one, and just now ready to drink of the brook in the way; be thou ready, oh Father, according to thy Promise and Oath wherein thou stoodest oblig'd, to perform the other part, my Glorification; and particularly the manifestation of my Deity, upon which all the other parts of my Exaltation depends, ver. 5. And now, O Father, glorifie me with thy own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. Which was not the glory of his Humanity, (which was not in being before the World was) but the glory of his Divinity in the full unvailing of it, that it might shine brighter before the eyes of men. It had indeed before been obscur'd in the form of a servant in the time of his Life, in the Repute of a Criminal at the time of his Death; but now he prays that he might be manifested to be what he really was, A Person that had a glorious existence before the World was, and that had no need to come down, and take the nature of man for any advantage to himself. Now as God promised him a glory, and Christ pleads the promise to God perform'd it; and therefore his Ascension is expressly said to be receiving him up into glory, as well as by his own act of entring into it, 1 Tim. 3. 16. received up into glory; Anabibasthe, recovered again unto glory, for it was impossible God should be false to his Eternal purpose, and his repeated promise.

(2.) His Promises or Predictions of him. So that his exaltation was necessary to justifie the prophesies of it, which were not the Predictions of one or two of the most eminent of the Prophets, but that which all of them one way or other spake of, ever since the world began, Act. 3. 21. Isaiah is the plainest of all, and many things to this purpose are inferred in his Prophecy, Isa. 4. 2. In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely. As he is the fruit of the earth, he shall be excellent in his humanity, and as he is the branch of the Lord, he shall be acknowledged in his Divinity. Or, as he is the branch of the Lord in his conception by the Holy Ghost, and the fruit of the Earth in his Birth of the Virgin, he shall be glorious in the World. And this was to be for his service, and as the Servant of God, Isa. 52. 13. My servant shall be exalted, and extolled and be very high, which relation of service he had not in the Divine Nature but his Mediatory Function; and so glorious was his Life to be, and so long the duration of it after he should be taken from Prison and from Judgement, that it should be past the declaration of any creature, Isa. 53. 8. Who shall declare his generation? And 'tis very clear in Ezek. 17. 22. I will also take of the highest branch of the high Cedar and will set it, I will crop off from the top of his young twigs, a tender one, and will plant it upon a high mountain and eminent, &c. This is not meant of Zerubbabel, under whom the people had not such a signal rest, nor did his empire extend so far as to shadow the fowl of every wing, the People of every Nation. Christ was a plant of his Fathers setting, a young twig in his Humbled, a tall Cedar in his Exalted state, planted in the highest mountains, eminent above all the rest, i. e. even he was to be cut off, but not for himself, Dan. 9. 26. not to himself, say some †, his cutting off shall ſhall not be without a ſecond ſpringing up in a Reſurrection. And when he is the Son of Man, he was to be brought with the Clouds of Heaven, with the Angels which attended him at his Aſcenſion, before the Antient of days, and that near to him; and ſo welcom he was to be upon his approach, as to be preſented with the dominion of the whole World, Dan. 7. 13, 14. which is not to be underſtood of his coming at the day of Judgment, but his coming after his oblation; he comes not here to judge man, but to be judged by his Father; and upon being found to have perform'd the part of the Son of man, he hath a Kingdom both extenſive and everlaſting beſtowed upon him, which ſhould not be deſtroyed by the ſubtleties or force of his Enemies; a preſent only worthy of the Son of God. Again, He received not his Power at the day of Judgment, but upon his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion after his Death; but this expreſſeth the firſt inveſtiture of this Power in him. * This glory was propheſied of a Thouſand years before the accompliſhment; Pſal. 68. 17, 18. Thou haſt aſcended on high; the whole deſign of the Pſalm manifeſts it, as well as the citation of it by the Apoſtle, Eph. 4. 8. Joſeph was not taken from Priſon to live his former Life of Slavery, but a Princely Life upon a Throne, and Rule the whole Kingdom next to the Soveraign Prince; ſo Chriſt was not to live the ſame Life after his Reſurrection, that he had done before in his Sweats and Combats, and to endure the contradictions of ſinners againſt himſelf; but was to be advanced to a place ſutable to his Greatneſs upon the right hand, and Throne of his father.

* Daille de l'aſcenſion pag. 431.

2. Upon the account of Righteouſneſs and Goodneſs.

(1.) In regard of his Innocence; He was a real innocent, though a reputed Criminal; Innocent in himſelf, Guilty only as ſtanding in our ſtead; Holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, Heb. 7. 26. as if there were not words enough to expreſs his purity, he being moſt holy and undefiled. It doth not ſeem to conſiſt with the Juſtice of God, for him ſo to give his Life for us, as never to reaſſume it. He was a perſon more excellent than the whole World of Men and Angels; he being a Divine perſon, his Life was incomparably more excellent than the Lives of all Mankind; ſurely God that loved him ſo dearly, would not have given ſo glorious a Life for the Salvation of men, to be ſwallowed up in the Grave without a happy Reſtoration of it. It doth not ſeem to conſiſt with the Wiſdom, Love or Juſtice of God, to give ſo excellent a life for the ſaving ours, if it were not again to ſpring up to a glorious ſtate out of the Aſhes of Mortality. Was not his Death the fruit of his Innocence? Was it equal, that he ſhould be held in the bands of that, or walk in the World under the load and burden of a mortal Body, any longer than the expiation of our ſins requir'd *? If this had been, had not a Fundamental Law of God, which orders Immortality and Happineſs to perfect Holineſs, been violated, which is impoſſible?

* Daille ſur reſurrect. de Chriſt. pag. 361.

(2.) In regard of the near alliance to himſelf. Did it conſiſt with equity to let that perſon who was equal with himſelf in regard of the Divine Nature; that perſon who was in the form of God, as well as in the form of a Servant, Phil. 2. 6, 7. that Nature which was ſo gloriouſly united to a Nature infinitely above the Angelical, to corrupt in the Grave, and crumble to dirt and filth? To be a Banquet for Worms, that had been a fragrant Sacrifice to God? Or could it be counted Equity to have rais'd him to no better a Life, than that miſerable one he led before his Agonies in the Garden, and his gaſpings on the Croſs? Had it not been an unrighteouſneſs to himſelf, as well as to his Son? Surely, that a Fleſh which had the honour to be the Temple of God, a branch of the Lord, the powerful Conception of the Holy Ghoſt, that had the glory to be perſonally united to the Son of God, to live and ſubſiſt in him; ſhould not be glorified after it was raiſed again, ſeems to be againſt all the Laws and Rules of Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs.

(3.) In regard of the work he had performed. How could Juſtice forbear to deliver the ſurety, after he had paid ſo much, that it was impoſſible upon an exact ſcrutiny to find a farthing wanting? How could it be agreeable to goodneſs, to continue tinue a perſon under the Chains of Death, or the lighter Fetters of an infirm and earthly Life, who was not lyable to more puniſhment, nor capable of performing a greater Service in this World, than what he had already done? It was the intereſt of ſatisfied Juſtice to raiſe him from Death; and was it not as well the intereſt of remunerative Righteouſneſs, to exalt him to be the head of that Church he had ſo dearly purchaſed? Could Goodneſs continue him a little lower than the Angels, who had performed a task that would have broke the back, and crackt the Heart of the whole Angelical nature to accompliſh? If God rewards as a righteous Judge, 2 Tim 4. A Reward below an Exaltation above all the Angels, had been diſproportioned to ſo deep a Humiliation, to ſo punctual, and in all reſpects a voluntary and unconſtrained Obedience. Was it congruous to the goodneſs of God, to let ſo ſignal an Obedience, more excellent than the Obedience of Millions of Worlds of Angels, paſs away without as ſignal a reward? That ſo ſharp a Croſs endured by an innocent, with ſo much Affliction and Freeneſs, ſhould not be ſucceeded by a Crown as Glorious, as the Croſs was Ignominious? In Equity he was to be placed far above Principalities and Powers, the revolted Rabble of Devils, and their companions bad men, ſince he had ſo gloriouſly conquered and routed thoſe Armies of Hell, Col. 2.15. And above the Corporations of the ſtanding Angels, ſince he had ſo graciouſly confirm'd them, Eph. 1. 10. by whom thoſe bleſſed Spirits commenced, maſters of a greater knowledge of the perfections of God, than they had by the whole Creation for four thouſand years, There was all the reaſon, that ſo incomparable a Victory ſhould be attended with as glorious a triumph.

(4.) In regard of the glory which redounded to God from this work. All that was done, tended to the reſtoring of Gods honour in the caſting out the Prince of the World from his uſurpation, demoliſhing Idolatry, and reſtoring the worſhip of God upon pure and ſpiritual Principles. God received more glory by his Mediation, than by all the works of his hands, the glory of his Grace in his Miſſion, the glory of his Juſtice in his Sufferings, and the glory of his Wiſdom in the whole diſpenſation, which was a new glory that never accrued to him before, nor could ever be brought into his Exchequer by any other way than this; by this the Bar to Gods reſting and rejoycing in his work was removed, the bands of ſin were broken off, a Carnal Adam changed into a ſpiritual, the defac'd Image of God reſtor'd, the World formed into a ſecond and more noble Creation, and the Kingdom of God eſtabliſhed in the World by the conqueſt and ſpoiling of the revolted ſpirits. If God were glorious by creating a World, he was more glorious in the Redemption of the World. It was reaſonable Chriſt ſhould be advanced to the higheſt pitch of Glory, ſutable to that degree of emptineſs to which he had abaſed himſelf for this End *: that he ſhould Triumphantly be ſetled in the moſt glorious and Majeſtick place of the Empire of God, and have not only the higheſt place of Reſidence, but the greateſt height of Authority over men and Angels, having made peace between God and the Creation, and between one part of the Creation and another; that as he died once with a pure Zeal for the glory of God, he might live in a new ſtate to a further exaltation of him; for ſo he doth, Rom. 6.10. In that he lives, he lives unto God. To gather his people to glorifie them, and be glorified by them. As there was a glory brought to God by Chriſt in his low Eſtate, ſo there was a further glory to be brought to him in his exalted eſtate according to the voice of the Father to him, Joh. 12. 28. I have both glorified my name and will glorifie it again; as he had glorified it in the doctrine and Miracles of Chriſt, ſo he would glorifie it again by his Paſſion and Reſurrection, ſending the Spirit, propagating the Goſpel, and ſetting him upon the Throne as the Judge of the World. This glorifying God was the Argument Chriſt pleaded for his Aſſiſtance and Exaltation, in the Prophet, (Pſal. 69. 7. Becauſe for thy ſake I have born reproach, ſhame hath covered my face) that the Faith of the Saints in the Divine Promiſes might not be enfeebled by any careleſneſs of God towards him, ver. 6. And near the time of his Death, he pleads it in his own Perſon, that he might be in a ſtate to carry on that glory he had begun to bring to God, to the higheſt degree, Joh. 1. 17. Glorifie thy Son, that thy Son alſo may glorifie thee. Chriſt was to do more ſervice for God in Heaven, than he did on Earth, and glorifie his Father after his Father father had glorified him, i.e. by a particular application of his death to men, by the virtue of his Interceſſion, though indeed the foundation of all that glory was laid upon the Croſs by his ſatisfaction. Had God been good to the Redeemer, if he had given him leſs than a Crown for a Croſs, a reward for the work effected by his ſuffering? And had he been righteous and good to himſelf, if he had put Chriſt into a ſtate below that, which ſhould capacitate him to perfect the remaines of that honour of his Name, which were further to be extant in the World? What capacity could we imagine him to have, if he had lain under the feet of death, or ſat languiſhing on the footſtool of the earth in a feeble Immortality? A Throne was due for the Glory he had gain'd, and a Throne was fit for the Glory he was yet to effect.

3. Upon the account of Love to Chriſt. * His paternal affection to his Son, required not only a deliverance of him from the jaws of death, but the putting ſuch a Crown upon his head, by which he might be known by all to be his Son, whom he embraced with an ardent Affection. God would not love his Son according to his own greatneſs, if he did not manifeſt it to the World, with the moſt ſignal marks and Enſigns of Authority; and ſurely after he had vanquiſhed his Fathers Wrath and triumphed over the Enemies of his honour, he could expect no other than the ſtrong effluxes of his Fathers Love in the higheſt expreſſions of it. What could hinder him from reſting in his boſom, when all the Wrath excited by the Tranſgreſſion of the Law, was calm'd, and the Redeemer came out victorious from that Furnace of wrath wherein he had been enclos'd. Wrath thus being quenched by his Sufferings, there was no room for the exerciſe of any other affection to him than that of Love, and no teſtimony could be given proportionably to ſuch an Affection, but the higheſt degree of honour conferred upon him. The Father loved him becauſe he laid down his life, Joh. 10. 17. and the ſame Affections would be more ſtrongly manifeſted after he had laid it down, and prompt him to ſhow him greater works than thoſe which had been wrought in the World, that the World might marvel, Joh. 5. 20. He would manifeſt him to be the partaker of all his Counſels, that nothing of Authority ſhould be denied him, nothing of knowledge concealed from him. Theſe were the ſignal demonſtrations of the Fathers Love, expected by our Saviour.

* Amyrauld Symol. Apoſtol. pag. 169.

Secondly, It was neceſſary on the account of Chriſt himſelf.

(1.) In regard of his Nature.

[1.] As it was of an heavenly original; He came down from heaven, Joh. 3. 13. He was that holy thing born of the Virgin, but as overſhadowed by the power of the higheſt, Luk. 1. 35. He was not born by the force of Fleſh and Bloud, according to the Law of Creation ſetled in the old Adam; he was an heavenly man, or the Lord from heaven, 1 Cor. 15. 47. and therefore was immortal in the true, and original conſtitution of his Nature. And though he lived in a vailed condition to fulfill the charge which he undertook, and which could not otherwiſe be accompliſh'd; yet after the compleating of it, he could not be retained in the bands of Death, but muſt neceſſarily return by the Law of his own Nature to his true and original condition, and lead an heavenly and glorious Life, ſutable to the principle whereby he was formed.* All things are order'd by God in places ſutable to their Natures; heavy things are placed loweſt, lighter things higheſt; and if for the good of the Univerſe they remove out of their proper place contrary to their Natures, as ſoon as ever the occaſion which obliged them to ſuch a motion is over, they return to the place of their former ſettlement proportionable to their Nature. As Air, whoſe place is above the Earth, when it is incloſed in the Bowels of the Earth, and there increaſed by vapors, will find its way out by an Earth-quake, to that place which God hath ſettled for it; Stones deſcend, and Water flows down to its proper place, as ſoon as the Let is removed; ſo though Chriſt for the good of mankind, ſtept into the World, yet when he had effected that buſineſs, he muſt neceſſarily take his flight to Heaven, his proper place. When that which oblig'd him to come upon the Earth was ceas'd, and he had no more to do here, upon that occaſion of the Expiation of our Sin. Heaven, that was the principle of his Original, was to be that of his Reſt and abode. As Earth was aſſign'd to the firſt man who was earthly for an Habitation, ſo Heaven was the proper Element of repoſe for the ſecond Man who was Heavenly. * It was moſt convenient that an earthly Man ſhould be lodged in the Earth, and the Son of God have his Seat where the Throne of his Father was. It was not fit that any Creature ſhould be above the Perſon of the Son of God, what Nature ſoever he had aſſum'd, and therefore his Exaltation above the Angels, was due to him alſo upon that Account.

* Faucheur in Act. 1. 9. pag. 109.

[2.] As his Body was changed by the Reſurrection. * Since after his Reſurrection his Body was made Immortal, and had new qualities conferr'd upon it, whereby it had acquired an incorruptible Life: As our bodies ſhall at the Reſurrection be incorruptible and ſpiritual, 1 Cor. 15. 42, 44. It was not fit it ſhould make any long ſtay in a place of Corruption and Miſery; and that ſo excellent a Perſon ſhould have an Habitation in a World of Men and Beaſts. A corrupted place was not convenient for an immortal Body; nor an Earth, curſed by God, ſutable to an unſtain'd Nature, that had nothing further to do here by himſelf; * But ſeeing it was the moſt perfect body, it was convenient it ſhould be taken up into the moſt perfect place, and aſcend above all Bodies. Indeed while he had a body of ſuch a mould as ours, and furniſht with the ſame Earthly Qualities and Infirmities with ours, his abode in the World was ſomewhat ſuted to his body, as well as to his work; but when he had put off his Grave-cloathes, and was ſtripped of that old Furniture, and enriched with new and heavenly Qualities, Heaven was the moſt proper place for his Reſidence. Again, had the Earth been a proper place for him, it was not fit the Divinity ſhould ſtoop to reſide in the proper place of the Humanity, but the Humanity be fetched up to the proper place of the Deity, where the Deity doth manifeſt it ſelf in the Glory of its Nature. The leſſer ſhould wait upon the greater, and the younger ſerve the Elder.

* Faucheur ibid.

* Savanarola Triumph. cruc. lib. 3. cap. 19.

[3.] As the greateſt part of his Exaltation conſiſted in the manifeſtation of his Deity. It was not fit ſo great a Conqueror and Redeemer, who was God as well as Man, ſhould have his Deity ſtill under the Vail of our fleſh, after he had accompliſhed ſo great a Work. Indeed he hath our Fleſh united in Heaven to his Divine Nature, but his Divine Nature is not vaild by it, as it was here. Now, had his Deity been manifeſted here below in that vaſt brightneſs and ſplendour which was proper for it, the Sons of Men had been undone, and met with their Ruin inſtead of their Recovery; for who can ſee God and live? Exod. 33. 20. No man can ſee my face and live. Heaven was therefore the only place, where this could be manifeſted in that Illuſtrious manner which it ought to be, though Earth was the place for the powerful effects of it. I ſay then, it was not fit the glory of his Deity ſhould have been longer over-ſhadow'd by the Vail of his Humanity; and it could not have broken out in its clearneſs, without not only dazling our eyes, but conſuming our Beings, in that ſtate we are. The brightneſs of an Angel, is too great an Object for weak Man, without the ſhadow of ſome aſſum'd body; much more the brightneſs of the Son of God; and what need was there of his being vailed for us ſtill, when he had done all that was neceſſary to be effected in that Vail of Infirmity he had wrapped himſelf in?

(2.) It was neceſſary upon the account of Chriſt, in regard of his Offices. Had not Chriſt been glorified, the Offices conferr'd upon him by his Father could not have been executed; his Prophetical, Prieſtly, and Royal Functions could not have been exerciſed, to which he was choſen by God, and without which he could not have been a Saviour to us. He had been a Sacrifice, without being a Prieſt; a King, without poſſeſſing a Throne; a Prophet, without a Chair to teach in; at leaſt none of theſe Offices could have been managed in a way worthy of himſelf, unleſs he had been in a glorious condition, and his humanity in a glorious place.

[1]. It was neceſſary for his Prophetical Office. As he did but begin to exerciſe his prieſtly Office in his Death, and began to execute his Royal function in his miracles, ſo he did but begin to manage his Prophetical Office in his Life, Heb. 2. 3. Salvation began to be ſpoken by the Lord. His death was a conſecration to a further exerciſe of his prieſtly office, his ſigns and wonders the firſt eſſays of his Kingly, and his his own teachings the first rudiments of Propheſie. After his Aſcenſion he did as the Sun of Righteouſneſs ſpread the wings of his grace, and flew about the World in the illuminations of Hearts, Mal. 4. 2. As it is with the Sun, ſo was it with Chriſt, the nearer the Earth in the Winter of his humiliation, the leſs force he had for the production of fruits, but the higher he mounted in Heaven, the more vigorous. The beams of the Sun ſhot from Heaven make us diſtinguiſh thoſe things which we miſtook in the dark, and the rays of Chriſt after his Aſcenſion manifeſted the difference between Truth and Error: Then the living waters of the Sanctuary grew high, Ezek. 47. 3, 4, 5. and what was before but a drop of knowledge in Chriſt's beginning to teach, became an unfathomable Sea of knowledge in Chriſts effuſion of the Spirit at his Aſcenſion.

[1.] Without this Aſcenſion his Doctrine had not had a perfect confirmation. As his Divine Sonſhip was declar'd in part in his Reſurrection, Rom. 1. 4. ſo his doctrine met with a confirmation in that manifeſtation of him to be the Son of God; but as that was but the firſt ſtep to a manifeſtation of his perſon, ſo it was but the firſt degree of the manifeſtation of his Doctrine. The more compleat juſtification of his doctrine was clear'd by his elevation to Heaven; it then appear'd that he did (as he ſaid himſelf) declare the words of God; that as his humiliation diſcover'd him to be a man, his Exaltation and the fruits of it diſcovered him to be a Divine Prophet of a greater dignity and richer influence than all that went before him. He had been unjuſtly charged in the delivery of his Doctrine with the crime of blaſphemy, and very few were perſwaded either of the divinity of his perſon or the heavenlineſs of his Doctrine; by his Aſcenſion God declar'd him to be a Prophet ſent by him, and that Prophet whereof Moſes ſpake, Acts 21. 22. he acknowledged him to be really what he reported himſelf to be, one with the Father, having a perfect knowledge of the Father, one ſpeaking the words of God, and acting according to the order of God. Had what he aſſerted of himſelf, been falſe, he had been ſo far from being advanced to Heaven, that he had been hurl'd down to the bottomleſs pit for his impoſture. God would not by any act, much leſs by the conferring ſo great a glory, have contributed credit to a lye. But God hath decided the controverſie between him and the Jews his Accuſers, and caſt them by owning him in the quality of his Son, and the great Prophet, whereby he had entitled himſelf among them. What greater teſtimony can there be than Gods putting all power into his hands, giving him the keys of Death and Hell, the power of opening the Seals, and ſlaying by the words of his mouth? Thus God recommended his Doctrine, and by lifting him up to Heaven, ſet him there as a Sun to free the World from the blackneſs of errour, wherewith the night had fill'd it.

[2.] Without this the Apoſtles could not have been furniſhed with gifts for the propagation of his doctrine. Thoſe weak men could not have gone about ſo great a work without a mighty furniture and magazine of Divine eloquence and vigorous courage; to give this was not his immediate work as Mediator, and in the Oeconomy of the Divine perſons pertain'd to the Holy Ghoſt. It was neceſſary therefore that he ſhould as High Prieſt enter into the Holy place, and appear before God with the blood of his eternal ſacrifice, that the treaſures of the Spirit might be opened, and that that Divine flame might iſſue out from thence to inſpire them with abilities for ſo great an undertaking. This he had not had power to do, unleſs he had been glorified, John 7.34. The Holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorify-ed. He could not before inveſt his Officers with a tranſcendent power, becauſe he was not mounted to a full execution of his own office. It was after this he erected the Chriſtian Church among the Gentiles as well as Jews, compleated the Rule of Faith in the Writings of the Apoſtles, which was to endure to the end of the World. Without this glorification he had not been the univerſal Teacher of the myſteries of Salvation, nor qualified the Apoſtles for the propagation of his Doctrine. But by this means he exerciſed his office, not only among the Jews as the miniſter of the circumciſion, but among all Nations of the Gentiles, as the chief Doctor and Prophet of the World, by the publication of the Goſpel, and the Grace of the Spirit.

[3.] Nor could the Apostles without this have had any success. They had nothing of a worldly stamp and beauty, that could perswade people to an entertainment of their Doctrine. They had not the wealth and grandeurs of the World to offer them, nor could allure them by earthly Empires and Conquests, as Mahomet did his followers. * To preach a Crucified God would be justly thought an extravagance and the fruits of a frenzy; but when they should hear not only of his Resurrection, but the possession of a glory, from so many witnesses upon whom they could fasten nothing of distemper, an end would be put to their astonishment. His crucifixion could not appear so irrational to them, as the news of an Exaltation, whereby the ignominy of the Cross was changed into the glory of a Crown, would appear amazing. Since the Spirit could not come unless Christ were glorified, it was impossible that without this glorification of the Redeemer and consequently the effusion of the Spirit, that those Delegates of Christ could publish the Gospel with such power, resist such violences, triumph over such oppositions. And impossible for men to have believed or regarded what they said, since their doctrines were so contrary to the common maxims of the World, which had been so long strengthned by education and custom, the strongest chains next to corrupt nature. As the Ascension of Christ gave the Apostles (the Spectators of it) courage to publish the greatness of our Saviour, with boldness, as before they had denied him with cowardize in his humiliation; so it made way for the entrance of his doctrine into the belief of the hearers, which otherwise they would have been ashamed to entertain, had it not been back't with so great an argument, and testified by such witnesses, and seconded by such miracles against which they could have no exception. Without this, those main truths of the Gospel upon which the Christian Religion depended, and which are the Life and Soul of it, as the Redemption of man, the Justification of Believers by the blood of his Sacrifice, had wanted a ground for the manifestation of them, and all the comforts of the Gospel been frustrate. Men could have had no apprehension of such things without an accomplishment of his Glory. Hence it was that so often Christ assured his Disciples while he was instructing them, in the time of his Life, of the great works they should perform, and the success they should meet with after his departure. His doctrine had been more obscure, and lost much of its clearness, had he staid below.

* Amyraut. in Tim. p. 224.

[4.] Heaven alone was a fit seat for him, wherein to exercise this office. It was no more convenient for him to be placed on Earth, who was to disperse his light into the understandings of men, and scatter ignorance in all parts of the World, than for the Sun to have been placed on the Earth for the spreading its beams into all Climates of the World. * An earthly seat was fit for an earthly Prophet; but was it fit for him who was constituted by God, not only a Prophet to the Jews, but to all the Nations and Tribes of mankind; whose Doctrine was not to be confined to the narrow limits of Jerusalem or Judæa, but extend to all parts of the World? What though the dusty Earth bore his body in the days of his humiliation, while he was laying the foundation of those Truths which were to sound in every quarter? Yet when he came to be installed the sole Doctor and Teacher of the whole World, it was not fit he should be placed in any sphere lower than that of Heaven, whence he might make his voice known both to Heaven and Earth, to Men and Angels, and convey his instructions to those blessed Spirits who were yet to Learn more of the mysteries of Divine Wisdom, Ephesians 3. 10. and also to the multitudes of the Gentiles as well as to the small number of the lost Sheep of the house of Israel.

* Daille sur l' Ascension de Christ. p. 435. somewhat changed.

(2.) Necessary it was for his Priestly Office. Though he was a Priest by authority in the days of his Humiliation, yet he was not fully install'd in the perpetual exercise of this Office, till his sitting at the right hand of God, Psal. 110. 1, 4. And when he was declared harmless, and undefiled and separate from sinners, though sacrificed for them, and thereupon made higher than the Heavens, and by that declared to be the Son of God, then he was as his Son Consecrated a priest for evermore, Heb. 7. 26, 28.

[1.] He had not done the whole work of a Priest, had he remained upon the earth. As the legal High Priest had not been a compleat High Priest, and fulfilled every part part of his Office, had he not enter'd into the Holy of Holies; so neither had Christ performed the whole work of a Priest, had he remained upon Earth, and not entered into the Heavenly Sanctuary to appear, or be manifested in the presence of God for us, Heb. 9. 24. * It was not enough for the Legal High Priest to cut the Throat and pour out the blood of the Sacrifice in the outward Tabernacle and offer it upon the Altar on the day of the annual Expiation; but he was to pass within the Vail to present the blood of the victim to the Lord, and sprinkle it towards the propitiatory, Lev. 16. and upon his return, to publish the Atonement and Reconciliation to the People; so that there had been no Analogy between the Type and the Antitype, if our Saviour after his oblation on Earth, had not in the quality of a Priest passed into the Heavens, as through the Vail, which separated the heavenly Sanctuary from the outward Court. It was necessary therefore, that the true High Priest should advance into the true Sanctuary, into Heaven it self, (figur'd by that Legal Place) where God hath his Residence among the true Cherubins and Angels of Glory; that he should sprinkle this Mercy-seat, and present before the Throne that Blood which he had shed upon the Cross, till the time that the number of his Elect being compleated, he is to return out of the Sanctuary, i. e. descend from Heaven to Earth to pronounce the Sentence of their general Absolution, and gather them to himself in the glory of his Kingdom. By his own blood he enter'd into the holy place, having obtain'd eternal Redemption for us, Heb. 9. 12. This entering into the Holy Place with the Blood of the Sacrifice, was the main end of the Sacrifice, and a necessary act of the High Priest, and appropriate to him alone; the end why it was offered in the Temple, was that it might be presented in the Sanctuary: so while Christ disposed himself to those sufferings which he was to undergo for the expiation of our Sins, it was necessary he should be upon the Earth; but after he had offered himself a Sacrifice upon the Cross, it was no less necessary for him to ascend in Person, and carry the Treasures of his Blood with him, to be laid up in that repository, to be sprinkled in the Heavenly places, and remain for ever as a mark in the true Sanctuary, as a Treasure of perpetual Merit. The Legal Priest was also to burn Incense in the Holy Place; by Incense in Scripture, is frequently meant Prayer. If Christ be not then an Intercessor in Heaven, there is no Analogy between the Type and the Antitype. This Intercession, a great part of his Priestly Office, could no more have been managed but in Heaven, than the Oblation, the first part of his Office, could have been performed any where but on Earth. Had he therefore remained upon the Earth after the shedding of his blood, he had not fully executed his Office, but had perform'd it by halves; and that which he had performed on Earth had been without strength, without performing the other in Heaven: for then it was, that he was made an high Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck, Heb. 6. 20. and a Minister of the Sanctuary, Heb. 8. 1, 2. He is hence called the High Priest of our profession, Heb. 3. 1. as performing all the Duties, and enjoying all the Priviledges really, which the Legal High Priest did perform, and enjoy figuratively. Without this glorious Translation, he could not really in his own Person have carried his Blood into the Sanctuary, nor appeared in the presence of God for us, nor have opened Heaven for those that are his followers.

* Faucheur in Act. Vol. 1. pag. 111.

[2.] Heaven only was fit to be the residence of so great a Priest. As he was a Priest, it was fit he should have a Sanctuary; as he was the great Priest, it was fit he should have the highest Sanctuary; as he was the Everlasting Priest, it was fit he should have an Everlasting Sanctuary; as he was an undefiled Priest, it was fit he should have an undefiled Sanctuary; as he was a Priest constituted and consecrated in a special manner by God, and not by man as Aaron and his posterity were, it was fit he should have a special Sanctuary, which Aaron and his posterity had not. As he was to appear in the presence of God for us, it was fit it should be in a place where God doth manifest himself in the glory of his Diety: Now no place but Heaven can challenge all those qualities. It was very convenient and necessary that he who was the High Priest according to the order of Melchisedeck, a blessing as well as a sacrificing Priest, distributing spiritual and heavenly blessings to his people, should not be seated in an orb inferior to that place whence those blessings were to receive their original and flow down upon the World. And ſince he was a Prieſt not deſign'd for one particular Nation, nor conſecrated only for ſuch a ſpot of Land as Judæa, but for the whole World, it was neceſſary that he ſhould be in ſuch a place, where all may addreſs themſelves to him, that ſtand in need of the exerciſe of his office, and from whence he may behold all with thoſe compaſſions which are annext to his Prieſthood. It was neceſſary alſo that he that made the Reconciliation for men, ſhould reſide with God, (who had been offended, and now was reconciled) to preſerve it firm and ſtedfaſt, ſince, while the World doth laſt, there are dayly ſo many breaches made to forfeit it.

and

[3.] It was neceſſary for his Kingly Office. It was fit that he that had done ſo great a work, and had merited ſo great a Crown, that was exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, and had received an heavenly authority and power to give Repentance and forgiveneſs of ſins, Acts 8. 31. ſhould alſo be received into Heaven till the time of the reſtitution of all things. Acts 3. 31. till all things be reſtored to their due order.

* Amyraut. in Tim. p. 213.

[1.] It was neceſſary for his Triumph. * Indeed for the beginning of the exerciſe of his prophetical Charge, there was a neceſſity of his reſidence among men for the divulging ſome Truths and Counſels of his Father; and while he was to conflict with his Enemies with ſweat and Bloud, it could not well be but in the field of Battle, wherein the Enemies were; but when he came off with Victory, he could not conveniently Triumph in the place of Battle, or Reign as a King ſutably to his Grandeur upon the Dunghil of the Earth. It was fit he ſhould ſit in Triumph at the right hand of his Father, to end and compleat the fruits of his Victory; Pſal. 110. 1. Sit thou at my Right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footſtool. As he had not been in a capacity to Reign had he continued as a ſubject under the dominion of Death, ſo he could not exerciſe the office of a King ſo commendably as upon the Throne of his Father. Heaven only was a Palace fit for the reſidence of the King of Kings.

[2.] It was neceſſary for his Government. As Heaven is the Fountain of Providence, ſo it was fit that the King into whoſe hands God committed all judgment, the Power and Government of the World, ſhould ſit upon a Throne in Heaven; and it was not congruous that he that was made the head of Principalities and Powers, the Governor of the Angelical Spirits, ſhould have a meaner dwelling than the greateſt of his Subjects, and as low as the vileſt of his Vaſſals. * The Wiſdom of God hath diſpoſed all cauſes in an order ſuperior to thoſe effects which depend upon them; the Heavens are above the Earth, becauſe the Earth is influenced by them, and the Sun above the Earth, becauſe the Earth is enlightned by it; it was no leſs neceſſary according to the order of Gods Wiſdom, that he who was made by God his Viceroy both in Heaven and Earth, and had the management of all things conferred upon him, ſhould be lodged in a place ſuperior to thoſe things he was to Govern, from whence he might ſend forth his directions to all his ſubjects. And though he had by his death given his enemies a mortal wound, and ſtript the Devil of the right he had acquir'd by the ſin of Man, yet in the order of Divine Wiſdom the poſſeſſion he had of the World was not to be taken away, and men reduc'd to the Scepter of this great King, but in a way convenient to the nature of man; thoſe gifts therefore which were neceſſary for the reduction of him, could only be diſpenſed from Heaven; it was therefore neceſſary for Chriſt in perſon to Aſcend thither to give out his Commiſſion, and enable his ſervants with gifts, whereby to wound the head of his Enemy, Pſal. 68. 18, 21. It was fit that an eternal King ſhould have an everlaſting Palace; that a King conſtituted in a ſpecial manner by God, ſhould have a Palace not made with hands; that he who was put into the poſſeſſion of all Nations, Pſal. 2. 8. and had a grant of all the Kingdoms of the World to be his own, Revel. 11. 15. that was not to rule in a corner of the Earth and ſway his Scepter in places that could be included in a Map, ſhould have his Throne fixed in any part of the World but the glorious Heaven. An Earth defiled by that ſin he hated, and an Earth yet too much filled with thoſe Enemies he had conquered, was not a place convenient for the perpetual reſidence of ſo great a Monarch. It was moſt fit alſo that he who was ordained the Judge of the whole World, and confirm'd in that office by his being raised from the dead, Acts 17. 31. should be taken up into that soveraign Court of Heaven, and come in Majesty from thence to execute that charge. All the ends of his Government and triumph could not have been answer'd without this glory, he could not have raign'd in the midst of his Enemies unless he had been placed above them, nor conducted his Church to an happy immortality unless he had had a possession of that Heaven, he was to conduct them to.

3. As this glory was necessary on the account of God and on the account of Christ so it was necessary on our account, also,

(1.) That Gods choice acceptance of his sacrifice for us might be manifested. The acceptance of it by God was in part manifested by his Resurrection, but the infinite pleasure he took in it, and the fragrancy of that savour he smelt from it, had not been testified to the World, had he given him only the recompence of an earthly Life and Glory. Indeed his Resurrection is an attestation of the truth and fullness of his satisfaction, for he rose again for our Justification, Rom. 4. 24. He cannot be considered as our propitiation, but in the state of his Resurrection: No man is freed legally and justly from Prison, till he hath paid his debts: So then the Resurrection of Christ is an argument that his payment was commensurate to the debt; but the glorious Exaltation of Christ is an argument of the high acceptablens of it to God. Who can doubt of his satisfaction after his Resurrection? And who can doubt of the infinite content God took in his obedience, after he hath crown'd him with so immense a glory, and established him a Prince and a Priest for ever at his right hand? God hath not only declared himself satisfied, but satisfied with an incomparable pleasure. God made a diligent search into him to see whether he was without spot, and perfect in his person and works, Dan. 7. 13. And they brought him near before him, i. e. the Son of man before the antient of days; as persons and things are brought near to be tryed and diligently inspected, so was Christ brought near to God in a judicial way, that God might pass a judgement upon him and his work, and upon a strict view he was so ravisht with his obedience, that he conferr'd upon him a Dominion, Glory, Kingdom, that all People, Nations and Languages should serve him, an everlasting Dominion, a Dominion that passes not away, &c. verse 14. such a multitude of expressions used in this donation do signifie the mighty pleasure of God in him, as if, (to speak after the manner of men) God had been grieved that there was not more to conferre upon him. As by the Resurrection of Christ God declared himself by the Title of a God of peace, Heb. 13. 20. So in the Ascension of Christ he declared himself a God of all Grace to us, 1 Pet. 5. 10. He declared himself reconciled to us by raising Christ from the dead, and he hath declared himself a God of all Grace, in calling us to an Eternal Glory by Christ, because the Glory Christ hath, is a pledge of that Glory Believers shall have, as a fruit of Gods high acceptance of him. This is the cordial Christ gives his Disciples, and assures them they had reason to rejoyce in the midst of their worldly calamities at his going to his Father, if they well understood it, John 14. 28. 'Tis indeed a clear evidence that God hath an unconceivable pleasure in him, he would not otherwise have suffered him to enter Heaven, but would have thrust him back again upon the Earth. In his death there is a satisfaction, and in his Glory the highest testimony of it. Without a glorious entrance into Heaven, his Resurrection with his continuance upon Earth had not been so clear a witness of Gods high value of his sufferings; but now by his glorified state it must be concluded, that his death was not the common fate of mankind, but highly meritorious, since God hath rewarded him with so great an honour as the government of Men and Angels; I say it must be concluded, not only that it was a death proportionable to what the justice of God required, but an infinite purchase of whatsoever happiness the creature wanted.

(2.) That the spirit might have a ground to Comfort us. Since the end of the Spirits coming is to comfort us, and the principal argument whereby he comforts us, is the high value of his Death with God, and the acceptance he meets with in Heaven; there had been little or no ground for him to build his comfort upon without out the Aſcenſion of Chriſt to glory. How doth the Spirit demonſtrate the ſufficiency of Chriſts Righteouſneſs? Not becauſe he was raiſed, but becauſe he goes to his Father, and is ſeen no more here, Joh. 16. 10. He ſhall convince the world of Righteouſneſs, becauſe I go to the Father and you ſee me no more. His Reſurrection is the firſt corner ſtone of Comfort, becauſe it was a neceſſary Antecedent to his Glory. But had he been only raiſed to an earthly Life, our Joy had been but a twilight mixt with darkneſs, and the arguings of the Spirit for our chearing, been ſomewhat diſputable, and wanted much of that efficacy which now they have. This going to the Father, which includes a glory, was the Spring whence the Spirit was to draw thoſe Waters of Conſolations he was to pour into our Souls. Had Chriſt remained upon the Earth, the Spirit had not come; but if he had, the breaſts of Conſolations had been very lank, and little could have been drawn out by us. Some Jealouſies would have remained, we could not have fully anſwered the Accuſations of our ſins, our own Conſciences would have had ſome Racks, and we ſhould have felt ſometimes ſome griping doubts. If God had appeared reconciled by the raiſing him, yet he would not have appeared highly pleaſed with us without his glorious Tranſlation. We might have had ſome comfort in peace with him, but ſeen no appearance of Favourable and gracious ſmiles in his Countenance. Our Saviour lays a ſtreſs upon that, of ſeeing him no more here, viz. in that ſtate wherein he was before, or in a ſtate without a Glory. This in his account was a ſufficient Argument of the value of his death with God. Could we behold him here in the fleſh, we might diſcard all our hopes of ſtanding before God in a glorious Eternity as vain Imaginations; but when you ſhall ſee me go to my Father, and maintain my intereſt in his favour, you may conclude, that God is not only pacified, but hath lofty thoughts of Grace towards you. Without this his going to the Father the Cordials of the Spirit would have wanted their due Temper, and had not found any reliſh in our guilty Conſciences.

(3.) That there might be an irreſiſtible ground of Faith. If the Spirit had wanted a ground of Comfort, our Faith had wanted a ground of Reliance. * As Faith reſpects the Perſon of Chriſt, it had been ſubject to ſtaggering; it could have had no aſſurance, that he had truly the dignity of the Son of God, if he had remain'd in the Condition of a man upon the Earth. As Faith reſpects the Death of Chriſt, though it might have concluded an expiation of the Crimes, yet not a fulneſs of Merit to procure a compleat felicity, if he had had no other ſphere but the rude Earth to ſpend his Immortal Life in. And leſs confidence ſtill had belonged to Faith as it reſpects the Word and Promiſe of Chriſt; for how could we imagine he could prepare Manſions for us in Heaven, if he had never ſtept from the Earth? or reſtore us to Paradiſe, a place of Bliſs, that could not find the way back to that Heaven, from whence he ſaid he deſcended to redeem us? We could not have concluded that his Death had been a Ranſom, if his Word had been falſe; and his Word had had no Credit with us, if he had not returned to that Heaven to which he affirmed he always had a Right. He could never bring us to that place to which he could not reſtore himſelf. Had he not riſen, we ſhould have thought him no higher than a meer Man; nay an Impoſtor, and his Death a puniſhment of his own Crime: Had he not riſen, we ſhould have regarded him as no other than a Conquered Captive of Death, among the reſt of Mankind; and had he after his Reſurrection reſided in the corrupted Earth with our Fleſh, could we have imagin'd it to be the Fleſh of God, any more than we could have conceived it ſo, had it remain'd under the power of Death? His glory hath given Aſſurance and Courage to our Faith, which had been very languiſhing, or rather nothing at all, had he ſtaid on Earth. Nor could we have had any hopes ever to have attained the happy Viſion of God in Heaven; had the Redeemer abode on this ſide that place of Glory, we had been without a pledge of ſo great a Felicity. Nor could our ſouls have been carried out with thoſe noble Affections, ſutable to the extraction of them. Our Love to Chriſt had been directed by a knowledge of him after the fleſh, 1 Cor. 5. 16. and therefore had mounted no higher than a carnal Affection. We ſhould have had no ground for thoſe refin'd and ſpiritual Affections, and lifting our Hearts to Heaven, which are the ennoblement of our Spiritual Natures. Without this this Entrance into Glory, there had been no Foundation for the ſuperſtructure, and Exerciſe of any grace in a lively and delightful manner; and without it, and the acknowledgment of it, all falls to the Ground.

But now there is a ground for all, ſince,

[1.] Satisfaction is declared to be full. The validity of the price is not to be ſcrupled, ſince we are aſſured of the weight of his Glory. Shall we doubt of the ſufficiency of that, after the Aſſurance of ſo many Jewels in his Crown? What is all his Glory but a return of his Bloud, and an approbation of the value of it, for the ends for which it was ſhed? His appearance in Heaven could not have been glorious, had not his oblation on Earth been ſatisfactory. For our ſins being in the nature of Debts, Mat. 6. 12. and the Juſtice of God in the Law in the nature of a Creditor, to which we are reſponſable, Gal. 3. 10. His Death was the payment, his Reſurrection the Acquittance, but his Glory the fulleſt Teſtimony that God can give that he is ſatisfied, and remains ſo. So that there is no room for any doubt of Eternal Redemption purchaſed, ſince his entrance into the holy place, with the bloud of his ſacrifice, Heb. 9. 12. His Exaltation aſſures man that he hath appeaſed God.

[2.] And therefore all Enemies are removed out of the way. His Triumph had not been juſt, if his Victory had not been full. The Law would have reſiſted his Elevation, and ſtopt his way to the Throne, if it had any thing to object againſt him. This Glory manifeſts that all the Enemies which ſtood with drawn weapons between him and his Throne, are removed out of the way, the Obligation againſt us Cancelled, the Devil diſarmed by the taking away ſin, upon which his power was founded; Principalities and Powers ſpoil'd of their Prey, Col. 2. 14, 15. Juſtice appeaſed, the Law fulfilled, Sin expiated, Death vanquiſhed, all thoſe are ſealed to us by his entrance into glory, and Gods hanging the Keys of death and hell at his girdle, Rev. 1. 18.

[3.] Heaven is aſſured. As our bond againſt us is evidenced to be Cancelled, ſo God hath entered into a bond by this Act towards Chriſt, whereby he doth acknowledge, that he as it were owes Heaven to every Believer upon the account of the Surety, and hath manifeſted his reality by beginning the payment of it in the Glory of his Perſon. For in ſetting Chriſt at his right hand in heavenly places, all Believers were virtually ſet there, Eph. 2. 6. As his Reſurrection aſſures us of the fulneſs of the payment of our debt, ſo his Glory aſſures us of the fulneſs of the Merit of our Happineſs. Had he lain in the Grave, our hopes had remain'd wrap't up with him, and mouldred to duſt with his body; or after his Reſurrection, had he remained on the Earth, our hopes had aſpired no higher than the place of his Reſidence *. But when we do not only ſee him riſing victoriouſly from the Horrors and Corruptions of the Grave, but mounted into an incorruptible Glory, we have Reaſon to believe we ſhall by his Power enjoy that Glory we Believers breathe after. For as he did not riſe to live for himſelf, and expoſe his Members to a perpetual Captivity under death; ſo he hath not received his Glory to Reign for himſelf, and leave his Members groveling in the Mire of the Earth; but both the intention of God in conferring it, and the deſign of Chriſt in receiving it, was, that all united to him in Grace, might be joyned with him in Glory, to ſee and enjoy according to their Meaſures, the Glory God hath given him, Joh. 17. 24. Now had Chriſt ſtayed in a miſerable World, though he had not lain in a corrupting Grave, we could not have concluded our debt to have been paid to Divine Juſtice, nor expected the Benefits he had promiſed, nor upon any ground elevated our Hopes, Hearts or Affections to Heaven, there had not been thoſe Comfortable Encouragements to Duty, nor thoſe delightful motives to any Acts of Religion. But now his admiſſion into Glory ſpirits our Faith, erects our Hopes, expels our Fears, ſtifles our Jealouſies and Doubts, and fixes wings to a Spiritual Love, by giving us not only a demonſtration of the fulneſs of his Satisfaction, but the overflowing redundancy of his Merits for our happineſs, and a pledge of an Eternal and Glorious Life.

* Faucheur in Act. Vol. 1. p. 62.

To Sum up all, and in that, the whole Scheme of the Chriſtian Religion and Doctrine in ſhort, let us conſider, Since it was the common condition of the Sons of Adam, to have rebell'd againſt God; and after that Revolt, were no more able to ſtand in the preſence of Gods conſuming Juſtice, than ſtraw and ſtubble before the fury of a Flame, there was a neceſſity for ſome other Perſon to make way for our return by appeaſing that Juſtice which was exaſperated againſt us. Though this Perſon were found out, and kindly and couragiouſly undertook, and as faithfully, and to a full content of Juſtice, performed it in the moſt perfect manner; yet there could be no aſſurance of it, without ſome ſignal Teſtimony of the Gratefulneſs of the Perſon, and the accompliſhment of the Undertaking. His continuance in the World would have nouriſhed rather ſome Jealouſies of the imperfection of his Perſon and Paſſion, than aſſurances of their Acceptation with God. His Exaltation therefore was a neceſſary ſign, that he had fulfilled Righteouſneſs, and diſarm'd Juſtice, conquered Death and Hell, and opened the Gates of Heaven, ſince he ſuffered as our Surety, his Glory would manifeſtly be conferred on him, becauſe he ſo ſuffered, and therefore it would reſpect our intereſt; and though by the efficacy of his Death, had he only riſen again, we had been freed from thoſe Torments that remain after Death; yet had he not been glorified in Heaven, we could not have been reſtored to the Happineſs of that Paradiſe we had loſt, no more than our bodies could have been delivered from the darkneſs of the Grave, had he himſelf remained under the Chaines of Death. We ſhould have wandered about the Earth without a ſupream Felicity, though without a ſmarting puniſhment. But by his Glory we have a certain evidence, that we are not only freed from the dominion of Death, but made Heirs of Life, and have a pledge in our hands that we ſhall enjoy it. If we have a union with him by Faith, and a Communion with him in the Power of his Death, there is no doubt but we ſhall have a communion with him in the Felicities of his heavenly Glory: and to ſuch a confirmation of our Faith and Hope, was an entrance into his Glory neceſſary. This Doctrine is the higheſt Comfort in the Chriſtian Religion; and without this and a ſhare in it, what Comfort can we expect in the deplorable, and I may ſay, ſtupifying diſpenſation we are now under?

Second Thing. The Nature of this Glory. It was a great Glory. As he was filled with the Spirit without meaſure, above all the Prophets, for the performing his Mediatory Function; ſo he was inſtated in a Glory without ſtint, above all the Angels for the Application of the Fruits of his Mediation. As great a Glory as a Creature united to the Perſon of the Son of God was capable of receiving. As he had the Spirit without meaſure, ſo he had a Glory without End. God did ſuper-exalt him, as the word ſignifies, Phil. 2. 9. ὑπερύψωσεν, as he was ſet at the right hand of God, which was granted to no mere Creature, and had a name above every Name. Chriſt conſiſted of two Natures Divine and Humane, let us ſee how theſe were glorified.

1. His Deity was glorified.

(1.) This could not properly have any addition of intrinſical Glory. To enter into Glory doth ſuppoſe a temporary excluſion or abſence from Glory, as to be advanced ſuppoſeth ſome meaner ſtate as the term from whence that advancement is. Now the Deity was never empty of any Eſſential Glory; nor could that be advanced, becauſe it being Infinite, was not capable of any higher degree, but was above all alteration. The ſubſtance and properties of that Nature, which always remain the ſame, are uncapable of abaſement and elevation. We may as well conclude a diminution of the Eſſence of God, as a decreaſe of the eſſential glory of God. The Divine Nature cannot aſcend, any more than it can deſcend, becauſe of its filling all places by its immenſity; ſo neither can it be humbled or exalted; but the perſon that conſiſts of both Natures, may be ſaid to deſcend and aſcend, to be humbled and exalted, becauſe that Perſon which was glorious in Heaven, manifeſted himſelf on Earth by the Aſſumption of our Nature; and aſcended to manifeſt himſelf in Heaven in our Nature, which he had aſſumed on Earth. The Deity then had no new Glory by the entrance of Chriſt into Heaven, as it had no eſſential diſgrace by his Humiliation on Earth; for that nature is immutable and Infinite, free from any change. If the Divine Nature might be eſſentially leſs than it was, it might wholly ceaſe to be what it was; all diminution is a degree of deſtruction.

(2.) There

(2.) There was a manifestation of the Glory of his Divine Nature of Christ. The Divine Nature while it was wrapt up in the rags of our infirm Flesh, wanted that reputation which was due to it from man, and in this respect Christ is said to empty himself, as the word ἐκένωσεν which we render, made himself of no reputation signifies, Phil. 2. 7 he that was Soveraign became a subject, as the seed of the Woman, to the Law of Nature, subject as an Israelite to the Law of Moses, subject as a man and our surety to the penal infirmities belonging to the humane Nature as weariness, hunger, thirst, death. And as the Divine Nature seem'd to be humbled in being obscur'd under the vail of our Flesh, so it is glorified in breaking out with most resplendent rays in the Son. As he was humbled under the form of a servant, so he was exalted in appearing in the form of God. [* In the same sense that we say Christ as God was humbled, in the same sense we may say Christ as God is glorified, but it is certain that Christ who was equal in regard of his Deity with his Father, did empty himself to the form of a servant] Phil. 2. 7, 8. As the Divine Nature may be said to be humbled by suffering an Eclipse, so it may be said to be glorified by emerging out of it, as the Sun may in a sort be said to enter into a glory, or reassume its glory when it scatters a dark cloud which mufled it, and strikes its warm and clear beams through the Air; there is nothing here of a glory added to the Sun, but a glory exerted by the Sun which before lay in obscurity under a thick mist; and when God is said to be glorified by men, we must not conceive any addition of intrinsick glory to God, but an acknowledgment of that glory he displays in his works of Creation, Providence and Redemption. So the Exaltation of Christ was not the conferring a new glory upon the Divine Nature, but the outshinings of it in the sacred vessel of his humanity, and surmounting those mists wherewith before it had been clouded. It was then a manifestation of him as the Son of God, and a discovery of that relation he had to the Father from Eternity, which was not only clouded in the days of his flesh, but all the time of the Old Testament, and was not known, at least in such a measure and clearness, as in the discovery of the Gospel; therefore he prays, John 17. 1. Father glorifie thy son, discover this prerogative of sonship, that I am the only begotten of the Father, of the same essence with thee, and not a meer man as the World accounts me. Therefore the Resurrection of Christ which was the first step to his glory, is called a new Nativity of him as the son of God in regard of his manifestation, Acts 3. 33. In that he hath raised Christ from the dead, as it is also written in the second Psalm, thou art my son this day have I begotten thee, as his Resurrection was a confirmation of his Eternal Generation and consequently of his Deity; and therefore Christ adds in his prayer, John 17. 5. Glorifie me with thy own self, i. e. in a way of equality with thy self. As the Father did not in the time of his humiliation treat him as a son, but as a servant, as a sinner, as one he was angry with, he was exposed to the violences of men, as if he had been utterly neglected, and abandoned by his Father, he desires therefore that he might have that glory he had with God before the World was, that he might be treated and declared to be the son of God, equal to the Father in Power and Majesty, and that this might be manifested both in Heaven and Earth, in Heaven to the Angels, and in Earth to Jews and Gentiles. And thus he sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high as the brightness of the Fathers Glory, and the express Image of his person *, all which is not an addition of glory, but a manifestation of Glory; for Christ, John 17. 1. desires the Father to glorifie himself as his son, that he might glorifie him as his Father; now the glory Christ brought to God, was not a new accession of any glory to the Nature of God, but a displaying the glorious perfections of his Nature to the sons of men. So the glory of Christs Deity is the springing of it out of that obscurity wherewith it was maskt, and a breaking out from under the Cloud of his humanity in a glorious lustre. And after he was cloathed with a vesture dipt in blood, his name was manifested to be the Word of God; Revel. 19. 13. i. e. he was manifested to be the Word of God, after and upon the account of his Death, and his glory was sensible as the glory of the only begotten son of God.

(3.) There was a manifestation of the glory of his Deity in and through his humanity. As it had been obscured in the humanity while he was humbled, so it breaks out in the Humanity when that Nature is glorified, as a Candle in a dark Lanthorn doth through the tranſparent Horn or Chryſtal, when the obſcuring plate is drawn aſide. This Glory he prayed for, John 17. 5. Glorify me with the Glory I had with thee before the World was. The Glory he had as God before the World was, was not impair'd, and therefore is not that which he here deſires; his Humanity was not glorified before the World was, that had no exiſtence, till it was formed in the Womb of a Virgin. We muſt therefore underſtand it of the Glory of his Deity, to be extended to his Humanity, to capacitate it for thoſe Offices which were to be performed in it. He was to be the Guardian of his Church as Mediator, and the Judge of the World; But his Humanity could not know the names of all his People he was to guide, unleſs inform'd by his Divinity. As Man, he is to execute Judgment, John 5. 27. which he could not do, unleſs he knew the inwards of Men, and viewed their Thoughts; nor could his Humanity do this, unleſs inſtructed by his Divinity. This Knowledge is not originally from the Humane Nature, but by revelation from the Divine; the Government of the World, of Angels, and Men, could not be managed by him as the Son of Man, unleſs his Humanity were enliven'd, and thoroughly influenced by the Divinity as he was the Son of God; ſo that Chriſt here deſires another manner of Glory in regard of manifeſtation than was before; a derivation of that Glory to his Humanity. He doth not ſay, Glorifie me with that Glory, which my Humanity had with thee before the World was; but which I, my Divine Perſon had with thee: That that Glory which I had with thee from Eternity, according to my Divine Nature, may be derived upon the Humane Nature, to faſhion it for thoſe great ends for which it is deſign'd. I ſee no reaſon to underſtand it of the Glory of his Humanity, which he had before the World was, by the predeſtinating Decree of God, for then there would be no peculiarity in Chriſts Prayer to himſelf, for every aſſur'd Believer may pray the ſame, Lord, Give me that Glory which I had with thee before the World was; viz. in thy Decree. But no ſuch expreſſion fell from the lips of Moſes, David, Paul, or any of thoſe moſt triumphant in the aſſurances of Everlaſting Happineſs. It muſt be ſome expreſſion of Glory peculiar to the Son of God, and therefore a manifeſtation of the Glory of the Deity in his Humanity in another manner than before, ſince that perſon that was the Son of God, was now alſo the Son of Man. Now this was no addition of Glory to his Deity, but a new mode of manifeſting that Glory which the Divine Nature had before the World was, which never was exerted in ſuch a manner before. It was a real addition of Glory to his Humanity, but a new way, or manner of manifeſtation of his Divinity.

2. His Humanity was really and intrinſically glorified: There was a Glory confer'd upon his Humanity by the Grace of Union with the ſecond Perſon in the Bleſſed Trinity; this was at the firſt conception in the Womb of the Bleſſed Virgin. A greater Glory than this can no Creature have, to be called the Son of God, Luk. 1. 35. There was alſo a Glory beſtowed upon it by the communication of unmatchable perfections to his Soul, a fulneſs of the Spirit, a ſpotleſs Sanctification, and an infallible knowledge of God, and of thoſe Truths he was to reveal. But now his Humanity did aſcend up where his perſon was before, and our Nature was carryed up to ſit with him in the ſame Court, where he had been glorious before in his Deity. He aſcended far above the higheſt Heavens, Eph. 4. 10. into that place where God repreſents himſelf in the greateſt Majeſty to Angels and glorified Spirits. He deſcended to aſſume our Nature, he aſcended to glorifie our Nature. The Humanity was taken into perpetual ſociety and conjunction with the Deity at the firſt aſſumption of it; but by his Exaltation the Eternal ſubſiſtence of it in the Deity was confirmed, and by the tranſlating it to Heaven, aſſurance was given that it ſhould never be laid aſide, but be for ever preſerved in that Marriage knot with the Divinity. It was ſo enlarged and ſpiritualiz'd, as to be a convenient Habitation for the fulneſs of his Deity to reſide in, and exert its proper Operations, Col. 2. 9. In him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead Bodily, not dwelling as if impriſoned, but to break forth in all its Glories and Graces, not formerly dwelling in it, but now dwells. There is a way of the preſence of the Deity with the Humanity above all thoſe manners of the preſence of God with Angels and Men: it dwells in it, and acts in it as a Soul in its own Body 'tis clothed with, so that the Humanity is the Humanity of the Son of God, and heightned to be the sacred Vessel of the fulness of the Godhead: That Nature wherein the person of the Son of God was made lower than the Angels, was crowned with Glory and Honour. Heb. 2.7. That Nature wherein he was raised, was set at Gods right hand in heavenly places; Ephes. 1. 20. and in that Nature, as well as in the Divine, the person of the Son of God had a Soveraign Authority granted to him: Thus the Humanity was glorified above all the reach of any Humane Understanding. The Glory of the Saints is not to be fathom'd by the conceptions of Men, much less the Glory of Christ, the Exemplar of all the Glory they are to have.

The Humanity of Christ consisting of two principal parts, Body, and Soul both were glorified.

(1.) His Body, As his Sufferings were in order to his Glory, so the Part wherein he suffered was to enjoy a Glory; enter into his Glory, i. e. a Glory due to him for his sufferings, therefore due to every part wherein he suffered. This being an Essential part of the Humane Nature, is not laid aside, the knot betweenthis and his Deity remains for ever indissoluble; it remains still as to its substance, though inricht with new qualities, being stript of the mutability, and mortality to which it was subject on Earth: As in his descent the Deity was emptied of the manifestation of its Glory, so in his Exaltation, his Body of its Natural Infirmities. The Image of the first Adam, except the substance, was razedout, and was actually framed in the second Adam: There was not a destruction of the Body, but a transfiguration of it; and his Body is no more changed in regard of the substance by its translation into Heaven, than it was in his transfiguration on the Mount; nor changed in its lineaments, but in its qualities, Mat. 17. 2. His face did shine as the Sun, the substance remained, but changed into a glorious appearance; he had the same lineaments in Tabor, as he had at the foot of the Mount. Peter could not else have distinguisht him from Moses, and Elias: Had he not been stript of his Infirmities, he had still even in Heaven been in some sort lower than the Angels, which he was designed to be only for a time, Heb. 2. 7. βραχύ τι, a little while, a short space, in the time of his Humiliation.

[1.] His Body is therefore of a Spiritual Nature, in opposition to infirm flesh. Flesh in Scripture is sometimes taken so, Psal. 78.39. He remembred that they were but flesh; i. e. infirm and perishing flesh. The Natural Bodies of the Saints shall at the Resurrection be changed into Spiritual, 1 Cor. 15. 44. much more is the Body of Christ in Glory, since it is the pattern according to which the Body of the Saints shall be copyed and fashioned, Phil. 3. 21. His state in the World is called the day of his flesh, Heb. 5. 7. His State above is a Spiritual State, as being free from the infirmities and clogs of the flesh. Flesh he hath still, but more suted to that Heaven, which was his Original; an Heavenly, no longer an Earthly Image, 1 Cor. 15. 48, 49. like Turf, or Wood, that loses its drossy and foggy qualities, when heightned into a pure flame, or Minerals heightned into Spirits. His Body was spiritual after his Resurrection, it could pass in a short moment from one place to another, Luk. 24. 31. As his Body rose, so it ascended, and remains a Spiritual Body, or as one calls it organiz'd light.

[2.] 'Tis therefore bright and glorious. If the Righteous are to shine as the Sun in the Kingdom of their Father, Mat. 13. 43. the Head of the Righteous shines with a splendour above that of the Sun, for he hath a Glory upon his Body, not only from the Glory of his Soul, (as the Saints shall have) but from the Glory of his Divinity, in conjunction with it. The Glory of his Divinity redounds upon his Humanity, like a beam of the Sun that conveys a dazling brightness to a piece of Chrystal. There was an interruption of this Glory while he was in the World, though the Humane Nature then was united with the Divine: But this interruption was necessary for those acts which he was to perform in our stead, for the satisfaction of God, and the discharge of his Office. Had the Glory of the Divinity broke out upon his Body, he had not been capable of suffering. What Mortal could have stood before him, much less, laid hands on him? What Mortal durst have accounted him a Blasphemer, an Impostor, and have exercised any violence against him, had his Divinity so fashioned his Humanity? But now it is, as it was in his transfiguration, on; Matthew 17. 2. the Glory he had then in tranſitu wrought an alteration not only in his Body, but in his Garments, which could not be of the moſt ſplendid, as not ſuting his preſent ſtate of Humiliation, yet they became ſhining, exceeding white as ſnow, ſo as no fuller upon Earth can white them. Mark 9. 3. much more muſt that firm and perpetual Glory in Heaven have the ſame influence upon his refin'd Body, that hath caſt off thoſe corruptible qualities which hung upon it on Earth, and doth more excel in Glory that Body he had on Earth, than the Glory of the Sun ſurpaſſeth that of a Glow-worm: 'Tis ſuch a Glory as would dazle Mortals to behold it; for if his Glory upon Mount Tabor caſt Peter into an extaſy, what effect would his Glory upon his Throne work upon a Mortal Nature? Whence it follows, that there muſt be a mighty change of the Bodies of the Glorified Saints to capacitate them for the beholding this Glory of Chriſt, the intent views whereof are part of their Happineſs. John 17. 24.

[3.] His Body is Immortal. His Body now lives, and ſhall live for evermore. Rev. 1. 18. I am he that lives and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; which is confirmed by him with a ſolemn Amen. A corruptible Body is not fit to be admitted to ſit down upon the Throne of the Father in Heaven. The promiſe that ſecur'd to him in the State of his Humiliation a ſpeedy Reſurrection from the Grave, and an impoſſibility of ſeeing corruption, Pſal. 16. 10. is as valid as ever. That Body that was not diſſolved to duſt by the power of the Grave, cannot ſink into nothing in the Glories of Heaven. The Union of the Godhead to it preſerved it here, and the perpetual confirmation of that Union preſerves it for ever above. His Body lives an indiſſoluble Life, Death ſhall never more lay hands on it, he hath no more ſufferings to endure, or ſatisfactions to make to the demands of the Law, Men and Devils cannot touch him in his Perſon, though they do in his Myſtical Body. He is above the reach of all Temptations, all Wrath from his Father, all Violences from Men, and therefore his Glorious Body is not in ſuch a ſtate as to be ground between the Teeth of Communicants, or eaten by Rats and Mice, or in any part of it dropt upon the ground, and buried again in the duſt or mire, as the Bread in the Supper may: if that were really the Body of Chriſt, the Body of Chriſt would be then ſo treated, as conſiſted not with the Glory it is now poſſeſſed of.

(2.) As his Body, ſo his Soul, the principal part of the Humanity was glorified. That ſuffered in Agonies and Sorrows, His Soul was ſorrowful, even to the Death, Mat. 26. 38. that alſo enters into Glory, and indeed the Body cannot be rightly glorified without the Glory of the Soul; for the Glory of the Body is but the Reflection of the Glory of the Soul in any Creature.

[1.] He hath an unſpeakable joy in his Soul. Pſal. 16. 11. Thou wilt ſhow me the path of Life, in thy preſence is fulneſs of Joy, at thy right hand are pleaſures for ever more. 'Tis Chriſt's triumphing in the conſideration of his Exaltation, and taking pleaſure in the Fruits of his Sufferings; thou wilt ſhew me the paths of Life. God hath now opened the way to Paradiſe, which was ſtopt up by a Flaming Sword, and made the path plain by admitting into Heaven the Head of the believing World. This is a part of the Joy of the Soul of Chriſt, he hath now a fulneſs of Joy, a ſatisfying delight inſtead of an over-whelming ſorrow; a fulneſs of Joy, not only ſome ſparks and drops, as he had now and then in his debaſed Condition; and that in the preſence of his Father. His Soul is fed and nouriſhed with a perpetual Viſion of God, in whoſe Face he beholds no more frowns, no more deſigns of treating him as a Servant, but ſuch ſmiles that ſhall give a perpetual ſucceſſion of Joy to him, and fill his Soul with freſh and pure flames, Pleaſures they are, Pleaſantneſs in compariſon whereof the greateſt Joys in this Life are Anguiſh and Horrors. His Soul hath Joys without mixture, Pleaſures without number, a Fulneſs without want, a Conſtancy without interruption, and a Perpetuity without end: And having a fulneſs of Joy, he hath a fullneſs of Knowledge in his Soul; he increaſed in Wiſdom in his Soul, as he did in Stature, and that as really in the one as he did in the Other, Luk. 2. 40. his Humanity had not the knowledge of all things in his Humiliation, his Soul had one thing revealed to it after another. But in his Exaltation his Soul is endow'd with all the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge. He knows now the time of Judgment, ſince he is conſtituted the Judge of the World, whereof his Reſurrection was an aſſurance to Men, and no less an assurance to himself, Act. 17.31. since by his Resurrection, the first step of his Exaltation, God judged him a Righteous Person, and acknowledged him his Son with Power that had redeem'd a World, whereby there was an evidence also, that by him he would judge the World: Among other Infirmities of his Nature, his Soul hath put off that of Ignorance. Nothing that is a treasure of knowledge is concealed from it; he hath the knowledge of Gods Decrees concerning his People; Revel. 1. 1. God gave the Revelation of all to him; no other person opens the Book, or is acquainted with the Councel of it, Rev. 5. 5, 6, 7. this Knowledge he hath in his Humanity, as he is the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, and the Root of David. This Revelation is to him as Mediator, in his Humane Nature, distinct from that Knowledge he had as God. As his Mediatory Glory is distinct from that Essential Glory he had as God, so there is a revealed Knowledge to him, distinct from that Knowledge he had as God. There was a necessity that Christ in his Humane Nature should understand the secrets of God, since he was in that Nature to be the Executor of the Councels of God; and this is another part of the Glory of his Soul.

and

(3.) His Person was glorified. His Divine Nature being glorified in a manifestation, and a new manner of manifestation; and his Humane Nature being glorified by an accession of new qualities to it, his Person then was glorified. As his person was the prime subject of Humiliation, in taking upon him the form of a Servant, so it was the prime subject of Exaltation and Glory: His Person was the subjectum quod, and his Humane Nature the subjectum quo; In regard of his Person he is glorified, as in regard of his Person he was humbled; the same Person that was rich, became poor, 2 Cor. 8. 9. He that was rich, and he that was poor, was one, and the same Person; howsoever, Riches, and Poverty were distinct Conditions, and Divinity, and Humanity were distinct Natures; yet they were the Conditions, and they were the Natures of one and the same Person, who is both rich and poor in regard of different states, as well as Immortal and Mortal, existing from Eternity, and born in Time, in regard of different Natures; Eternal as God, and Born as Man; above all suffering and violence, as God; expos'd to suffering and violence, as Man; the Person that was crucified, was the Lord of Glory, 1 Cor. 2. 8. The Person that was crucified and suffered, enter'd into Glory; it was the Person of Christ therefore wherein this glorious Exaltation did terminate; as the Deity was not emptied, nor could be, but obscur'd in the assuming our Flesh, and invesling himself in the form of a Servant for the performance of those Mediatory Acts in his Humiliation, which were necessary for our Redemption; so the Deity could not be Exalted, but by displaying it self, and discharging that disguise of Infirmities wherewith it was clouded: Nor could the Exaltation of his Humane Nature simply considered, be for the Happiness and Comfort of his People; for as Man barely considered he could not be the King of Angels, and Governour of the Church; he could not as Man barely consider'd, direct the Angels in their needful Messages, or relieve the Church in her great distresses; for the Humanity was neither Omniscient, nor Omnipotent, nor could be. 'Tis impossible Humanity can become a Deity, and a Creature inherit the incommunicable perfections of the Creator. But as the Deity is in Conjunction with the Humanity, and doth make use of the Humanity, and act in and by it, he is capable of performing those things which were necessary, as Lord of the World, and Head of the Church: The Actions Christ doth perform, as sitting at the Right Hand of God, are the Acts of him as Man; but the principle of those Acts are his Divine Nature as he is God; the glorious Exaltation of Christ is therefore the Exaltation of his Person, for those ends which were necessary for the good of the believing World.

4. This Glory which Christ entred into, was a Mediatory Glory. The Glory Christ was advanced to, was not the Essential Glory of God, for this he always possessed, this was communicated to him in the Communication of the Essence, and inseparable from him: As being God, he had all the Prerogatives of God; But it was a Mediatory Glory conferr'd upon his Person, as the first born of every Creature; such a Glory, as the Humanity so dignified by the Divine Natures assumption of it, was capable of. The Humanity being a Creature, was not capable of a Divine and Uncreated Glory; the Glory Christ hath as God, is the same with the Glory of the the Father, but the Glory Christ hath as Mediator, is peculiar to him as a person consisting of a Divine, and a Humane Nature; therefore it is in the Text called His Glory, in a way of peculiarity belonging to him as a Sufferer: For the Divine Nature was not capable of an addition of Glory, nor the Humane Nature capable of the infinite perfections of the Divine. In regard of his Essential Glory, he was the Son begotten; in regard of his Mediatory Glory, he was the Heir appointed: Heb. 1. 2. He is appointed Heir in order after his sufferings, as he was appointed Mediator in order to his sufferings. Heb. 3. 2. He was Mediator by a voluntary designation, so he was Heir by a voluntary donation. His Glory was given to him upon condition of suffering, and confer'd upon him after his suffering; but he was from Eternity the Lord of Glory, and Son of God by a Natural Generation; the one belong'd to him by Birth, the Mediatory by Office; the one is natural to his Person, the other is the reward of his sufferings, Phil. 2. 8, 9. Wherefore God hath exalted him, viz. because of his Obedience to Death. In the Essential Glory he is one with the Father; in his Mediatory Glory he is lower than the Father, as being his Deputy and Substitute; his Essential Glory is absolute, his Mediatory Glory is delegated, Judgment is committed to him, John 5. 22. The Essential Glory is altogether free, and hath no Obligation upon it; the Mediatory Glory hath a charge annexed to it, (for he is ascended far above the Heavens, that he may fill all things. Ephes. 4. 10.) an Office of Priesthood to intercede, and a Royal Office to gather and govern those that are given to him by his Father. His Essential Glory he would have enjoyed, if he had never undertaken to be our ransome; yet without his sufferings for us, he had never had the glorious Title of the Redeemer of the World. As God had been essentially glorious in himself, if he had never created a World, but he had not then been so manifest under the Title of Creator. * This Glory was nevertheless properly neither Divine, nor Humane; not Divine, because considered as Man, was a Creature, and a Divine Glory is incommunicable to any Creature; considered as God, there could be no addition of Glory to him, this is said to be given him as that which he had not before: Not a Humane Glory, for as Man only he was below it, and was not a Subject capable of it. A meer Man was unable to govern and Judge the World. To be Head of the Church, and Judge of the Universe, are Titles that belong only to God, and none else. But it was a Mediatory Glory, proper to the Person of Christ, and both Natures as join'd by the Grace of Union for the Work of Mediation. Now though Christ in regard of his Divine Nature was equal with his Father, Phil. 2. 6. yet in the state of Mediator and Surety for Man, his Father was greater than he; John 14. 28. and in this state he was capable of a Gift and Glory from the Father, as from one that was Superior to him in that condition; as it hath been recorded in History, that a King Equal, nay Superior to another Prince, hath put himself under the Ensigns of that Prince inferiour to him, and received his pay; as he puts himself in such a Military state, he is Inferiour to that Prince he serves as his General; and what Military Honour may be confer'd upon him for his Valour and Service, is an Honour distinct from that Royal Dignity he had before as a Soveraign in his own Territories; so is this Name given to Christ above every Name: Phil. 2. 9. i. e. A Glory surpassing that of all Creatures, the Potentates of the Earth, or Seraphims of Heaven; which was a distinct Glory from that which he had, as one with the Father, before his Incarnation and Passion, and had possest, if he had never suffered: but this Glory mentioned by the Apostle, was given him upon his sufferings. It was not therefore a Name in regard of his Eternal Generation, as some interpret it * for the particle wherefore, in the beginning of v. 9. puts a bar to any such Interpretation, it referring this Glory as a consequent upon his Humiliation to the death of the Cross. It was therefore a Mediatory Glory, whereby the Authority of God was confer'd upon him, not absolutely and formally, as though he were then made God; But as to the exercise of it as Mediator in that Humane Nature, which he had so obediently subjected to the Cross, for the Glory of the Father, and the good of the Creature:

(5.) This Mediatory Glory consisted in a power over all Creatures; for it was such a name as was above every name, so that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the Glory of God the Father, Phil.

Phil. 2. 10. 11. He had the ſame power committed to him, which the Father hath; his Throne is the higheſt, being the ſame with that whereon the Father ſat, Rev. 3. 21. A throne of Government and Dominion. His Commiſſion is extenſive, a power as large as the confines of Heaven and Earth, Matth. 28. 18. All power is given me both in Heaven and Earth. A power over Hell is alſo put into the Patent, Revel. 1. 18. And have the keys of Hell and Death. His right to this was conditionally conferr'd upon him, at the firſt ſtriking of the agreement between the Father and himſelf, Iſaiah 53. 10, 12. he promiſed upon his oblation for ſin, to divide him a portion with the great, and he ſhould divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong; this was acknowledged due to him upon his Reſurrection, which being an owning of the validity of his performance, was an acknowledgement of the juſtice of his claim; and to this that in Matth. 28.18. refers, all power is given to me. But the ſolemn inveſtiture was not given him till his Aſcenſion. God put the Scepter in his hands, when he uſed that form of words, Pſal. 110. 1. Sit thou at my right hand, till I make thy Enemies thy footſtool; for in the Apoſtles ſenſe, to ſit at the right hand of God and to reign, are one and the ſame; for what is ſitting at the right hand of God till his Enemies be made his footſtool, is reigning till all Enemies be put under his feet, 1 Cor. 15. 25. At his Reſurrection he was ſtript of his ſervile garb, at his Aſcenſion he put on his Royal Robes, at his ſeſſion on the right hand of God, he was crown'd, and began the exerciſe of his Royal dignity.

[1.] He hath all power in Heaven. Power in the Treaſures of heaven, Power over the inhabitants of heaven.

(1.) Power in the treaſures of heaven, of ſending the Comforter, John 15. 26. The comforter whom I will ſend, which was ſent in his name, Joh. 14.26. His power was firſt in heaven, then in earth; his power on earth could not have been manifeſted without a power firſt in heaven; by his power in heaven he gathereth his people on Earth. When God had given us the greateſt gift, his ſon for the honour of his Mercy, he gives the greateſt gift next to him, viz. That of the ſpirit, for the honour of his ſons Mediation. As Chriſt in the Evangeliek Oeconomy acted for the honour of the Father, ſo doth the ſpirit in the ſame Oeconomy for the honour of Chriſt, John 16. 14. He ſhall glorifie me. He is therefore called the ſpirit of Chriſt. He is alſo ſaid to have the ſeven ſpirits of God, Revel, 3. 1. Seven is a Scriptural number of perfection; he hath the full power of the gifts and graces of the ſpirit to beſtow upon the Church, and fill his myſtical body with. By this it was evident, that as Mediator he had a mighty power with God, ſince the firſt fruits of his Exaltation was the effuſion of a Comforter for us, a ſecond Advocate on Earth. This being the fruit of his Mediation, and given to him as Mediator, was a full confirmation not only of the virtue of his Death, but the powerful continuance of it ſtill in heaven, not only that it was accepted for us, but that the vertues and fruits of it ſhould be perpetually diſtributed to us. This power of the ſpirit was given to Chriſt immediately upon his Aſcenſion, as the purchaſe of his ſufferings, and the reward of his Conqueſts, Pſal. 68. 18. Thou haſt aſcended on high, thou haſt led captivity captive, thou haſt received gifts for men. By his ſolemn inveſtiture he was ſetled in a power over the treaſures of God, and gave out that in abundance, which before was communicated in ſome few drops; the heavens are opened and a golden ſhower comes down upon the World. In a ſenſible and apparent manner he received this ſpirit before for himſelf, for he had it without meaſure, he received it before when he entred upon his office to fit him for his mediation; he now receives this power as mediator upon his Aſcenſion, and as a ſteward for his people to diſtribute this rich revenue of God for the greatning of his Church; upon his Aſcenſion he received it to give out to thoſe he had left behind him in the World, Pſal. 68. 18. Received. Eph. 4. 8. Gifts for men; it was then the donative of the Father to Chriſt, that it might be Chriſts donative to us. By the way, we may take notice of another argument for the neceſſity of the Exaltation of Chriſt in heaven, ſince the ſpirit being an heavenly gift it was not fit he ſhould be ſent by a perſon that was not poſſeſſed of heaven, and it being the purchaſe of the Mediator, and to be ſent in his name, it was convenient the Mediator ſhould be in heaven, and have a more glorious residence than in the earth before the mission of so great a gift.

(2.) Power over the inhabitants of Heaven. In his incarnation, in the days of his Flesh, he was lower than the Angels; in his Ascension he is made higher by the shoulders than the loftiest of them; and this in regard of his Office as Mediator; for as God he had an Essential superiority above them before; the superiority over them as he was God, he had by nature; the superiority over them after his humiliation, he had upon the execution of his Mediatory Office. The Angels that had their Residence in heaven, were to bow to him, yield obedience to him as he was God-man, for so he was exalted, as Jesus, as one that had suffered death, Phil. 2. 9. They were to give him an adoration which pertained to God, and according to this Divine order they pay him actual Adorations before his throne as the Lamb of God, Revel. 5. 11, 12, 13. and they are put in subjection to him as their head, not only for a time but for ever, in this World, and that which is to come, Eph. 1. 21. to order direct and commission them for the ends of his Mediation according to that compassionate sense he hath in his glory, of the infirmities and distresses of his people. He is Lord of all of them to this purpose; one hath not the priviledge to stand before God, and another subject to run upon his errands in the World, but all are subjected to the Scepter of Christ to be used by him at his pleasure in his service. And in this respect he received all power, first in heaven, then in earth, things in heaven are first gathered, after that things on earth, Eph. 1. 10. The holy Angels were all subjected to him upon his Exaltation by one intire donation, the promise of making him their head was fully accomplisht; whereas there is to be a revolution of time to the end of the World, before things in earth shall be gathered to him, before all his Elect shall submit to his Scepter, and his Enemies be debased to his footstool. But upon his advancement, as there was an actual donation of them by his Father, so there was an intire submission of them in one body to him, the whole Corporation of those blessed spirits waited upon him in his entrance into heaven to his Coronation according to the Will of their God, and his God, who had given them a precept to worship him, Psal. 68. 17, 18. and that in a military posture as their General, noted by the word Chariots, which were used chiefly in War and warlike Triumphs.

[2.] Power in earth over all creatures. There is nothing left that is not put under him, Heb. 2. 8. All things are given him by God, to be in subjection either voluntary or constrained *, he is Lord of all the Creatures, as God-man, because all the Creatures were made for man, and Christ being the Lord of all mankind is also the Lord of all the Creatures that were made for the use and benefit of man. He is therefore the first-born of every Creature, Colos. 1. 15. the right of primogeniture is confer'd upon him, and so he became Lord of all, as Adam in regard of his Dominion over all earthly Creatures might be said to be the first born of them, though himself is created after them. His power upon Earth consisteth in this, that all the worship of God is to be done in his name, our supplications for the supply of our wants, our acknowledgments for the receit of his blessings must be presented in his name, John 16. 26. Eph. 5. 20. he is made a Priest to offer our sacrifices and incense of Prayers, he is the channel through which God conveys all the marks of his kindness to us, he hath power as a Prince to give Repentance as the means, and Remission of sin as the priviledge of those that are given to him, Acts 5. 31. He hath a name above every name in the Earth, no person was ever so famous, none ever was ador'd by so many worshippers, none worshipped with so much fervency, none ever had so many lives sacrificed for his glory, and acknowledgement of his Mediation and Person. His Glory hath extended one time or other over the whole World. 'Tis a power that hath given check to the power of Kings, and silenc'd the Reason of Philosophers; it hath put to flight the Armies of Hell, and been celebrated by the Songs of Angels; no name was ever so glorious, no power ever so great.

* Sabund Tit. 263. 550.

The Third thing, I should come to is,

III. The end of his Glory. As his sufferings were necessary for us, so was his Glory, as it was needful he should dye to redeem us, so it was needful he should enter

enter into glory to bless us. There are two great things accrue to us by Christ, Acquisition of Redemption, and Application of Redemption, the one is wrought by his death, the other by his Life, the one by his elevation on the Cross, the other by his advancement on his Throne. 'Tis there he hears us, and from thence he purifies us, had not Christ entered into glory, we had wanted the application of the fruits of his death, and so his Incarnation and passion had been fruitless.

I shall name only two, one consequent upon the other.

1. The sending the Spirit. Indeed since there could be no Grace and sanctification without the spirit, we must suppose that the spirit was given before the coming of Christ. In the old World the spirit did strive with men, and the spirit of God was in, and upon the Prophets, and the holy men in the Old Testament; but it was communicated in weaker measures, scanty drops, not in that abundance, till the installment of Christ, it was then shed abundantly through Jesus Christ, Tit. 3. 6. whence our Saviour is said after his Ascension, not to drop upon persons, but to fill all things, viz. by his spirit, Ephes. 4. 10. The spirit was in the World before, as light was upon the face of the Creation the three first days, but not so sparkling and darting out full beams till the fourth day of the Creation of the World. The full effusion of the Holy Ghost was reserved for the time, and honour of Christ; he was communicated to the Jews anciently for working miracles and uttering Prophesies; but the Jews tell us that after the death of Zachary and Malachy, the spirit of God departed from Israel and went up. So that afterwards Miracles were very rare among them, and therefore when the Disciples at Ephesus of the Jewish race, Acts 9. 2. Said they, Had not heard whether there were any Holy Ghost or no, 'tis not to be understood that they had not heard that there was such a person, for that they believed, but they knew not whether the Holy Ghost which departed away after the death of Malachy, was restored again in the gift of Prophesie and Miracles. The golden shower of the spirit for Grace and gifts was not to be rain'd down upon the World in so full and sensible a manner till the Coronation of Christ, as only at some publick solemnities of Princes, the Conduits use to run with Wine. Hence Christ flatly tells his Disciples, that it was expedient for him to go that the Comforter might come, which was not to come till after his departure, and particularly by his mission, John 16. 7. Nevertheless I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send him unto you, and this he avers as a certain Truth. Indeed Christ received the spirit for himself at the first inauguration and entrance into the exercise of his Office at his Baptism, but not fully to convey it to his people, but upon his Coronation, and full investiture with all Power. Then he received the promise of the spirit, Acts 2. 33. i. e. he obtain'd the full execution of the promise in the full effusion of the Holy Ghost, when he had enter'd into the Sanctuary not made with hands. The purchase of it was a fruit of his death, but the mission of it was consequent upon his Exaltation; by his death in satisfying the Justice of God he removed that bar which had been upon those Treasures, and broke the seal from the Fountain, that the waters of divine grace might be poured out upon men; by his death he merited it, by his glory he possessed it, and then made the effusion of it, and that for the good of his people * 'Tis expedient for you, it was not only for his honour that he went to heaven, but for our advantage, that our Faith might be perfected, our hope elevated, and every Grace strengthned and refin'd. Now the spirit was sent to this end to carry on the work of Christ in the World, and to apply the Redemption he had wrought. He was to bring things to remembrance whatsoever Christ had said to them, John 14. 26. he was not to speak of himself, John 16. 13. He was not to be the Author of a new doctrine in the Church, but to impress upon men what Christ had taught, and what he had wrought by his passion. He is therefore called the spirit of Truth, i. e. Teaching and clearing up to the minds of men, that Truth which Christ had taught and confirmed by his bloud, and to raise the superstructure upon that foundation Christ had already laid. He was to declare only what he heard, John 16. 13, 14. to act the part of a Minister to Christ, as Christ had acted the part of a Minister to his Father; to glorifie Christ's i. e. to manifest the fulness of his merit, and the benefits of his purchase, for he was to receive of

* Pont. part. 5. Medit. 17. p. 324.

Christs, i. e. The things of Christ, his Truth and Grace, and manifest them to their Souls, and imprint upon them the comfort of both. This Spirit being then a fruit of the Glory of Christ, is an abiding Spirit for those ends for which he was first sent: John 14. 16. The Permanency of the Spirit is as durable as his Glory. Christ must be degraded from his Exaltation, before the Spirit shall cease from performing the Acts of a Comforter, and Advocate on Earth.

2. Consequent upon this was the communication of gifts for the propagation, and preservation of the Gospel. Christ was to raise a Gospel Church among the Gentiles, to apply the Fruits of his Death; this he could not do without receiving gifts to bestow upon Men; these gifts were not to be received by him, till his finishing his work, and this work could not be declared to be compleatly finished without his advancement to the right hand of his Father; Psal. 68. 18. He received them with one hand, and distributed them with the other; he handed them to the World, as they were conveyed to him by his Father in his Glory. He ascended up far above all Heavens, that he might fill all things; Eph. 4. 10. all the World with the knowledge of himself, all kinds of Men with gifts; Officers with Abilities; private Christians with Graces. His Glory is the Foundation of all Christianity; by those gifts of the Spirit to Men, he rescues Men from a Spiritual Death, and plants them as Living Trees in the Garden of God; by those we find our hearts linkt to him in love, panting after him with desires, and aspiring to the happiness of Heaven where he is: All the Channels through which he pours the Waters of Life upon the World, were cut and framed by his hands: The Spirit is called the seven Spirits in the hand of Christ, and joyned with the seven Stars, Revel. 3. 1. as being distributed by him in the seven States, and Periods of the Church, to the end of the World.

There might be more named, but they may come in in the Use, to which we may now proceed.

IV. USE.

I. Of Information.

1. How groundless is the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, [and to enter into his Glory after his suffering] Had there been such a thing as his dayly descent to Earth in the sacrifice of the Mass, it had been a very proper season to have intimated such a notion to his Disciples in this discourse; he might have had a very fair occasion to say, wonder not at the sufferings of your Redeemer; he ought not only to suffer those things, but you shall see him every day a sufferer in the Sacramental Wafer, as often as a Priest shall be the Consecrator, you shall crush his Body between your Teeth, and see him suffer a thousand times not by the hands of violent Men, but between the Teeth, and in the Stomacks of impure Creatures. No such thing is here spoken of, 'tis enter into his Glory: He was to be a sufferer but once, and then be received into Glory; his Glory was to follow his sufferings. By this Doctrine his dayly sufferings would follow his Glory, would be together with his Glory: He would be a sufferer on Earth, while he were glorified in Heaven; and while he sits at the right hand of his Father, his Body would be corrupted in the foul stomacks of some Men as bad as Devils at one and the same time. Is this a Glory his Humane Body entred into, to be frequently degraded to a lodging in an impure Stomack, among the dregs of the last nourishment which was taken in, to pass from thence to the draught, and be condemn'd to the dungeon of a putrifying Jakes? Would not this be worse than his sufferings on the Cross, which were but temporary, and more loathsome and ignominious than all the reproaches he suffer'd on Earth? This is a dealing with the Mediator, as the Heathens did with God, in changing his Glory into a corruptible Image. This is inconsistent with that Glory he is enter'd into after his sufferings; there is a repugnancy between his sitting upon a Throne, and being subject to the accidents of material things on Earth. As Christ was silent in any such Doctrine; so were the Angels at his Ascension (Acts 1. 10, 11. This same Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as you have seen him taken up into Heaven) when they had a fit occasion to mention it; especially, when they mention his coming so again for the comfort of the Disciples that were Spectators of it. They mention not a coming every day in Body and Soul in the Wafer, into their

their mouths, but only of a Viſible and Glorious coming again in the ſame manner as he Aſcended. As he hath enter'd into Glory, ſo the Heavens receive him, and contain him, till the time of the reſtitution of all things: His Body is too glorious to paſs into the Mouths and Stomacks of Man, and undergo thoſe various changes with their nouriſhments.

2. How greatly is our Nature dignified! He is enter'd into Glory with our Nature, and hath lifted up our Fleſh above the Heavens; and hath in this glorified our very duſt. In that Nature wherein he ſuffered, in the ſame Nature he hath aſcended into the moſt glorious part of the Creation of God above the higheſt Heavens. The Humanity of Chriſt, and in that our Nature was not taken up for a time, but for ever. It was debaſed for a ſhort ſpace, Heb. 2. 7. Thou madeſt him a little lower than the Angels; or, thou haſt made him lower than the Angels for a ſhort time; but he is advanced for ever: Thou haſt crowned him with Glory and Honour; the Redeemer is always to wear our Nature, 'tis never to be out of faſhion with him. How glorious is this for us, that the Son of God ſhould take our Nature, our duſty Humanity, all our Infirmities, except ſinful, to clear our Natures from all penal infirmities, to tranſform our Clay (if I may ſo ſay) into Virgins Wax, and wear it as a pledge, that the Members of his Body ſhall at length be brought to him? Our Nature now hath by Chriſt's aſſumption of it, an affinity with the Divine, which that of the glorious Angels hath not in ſuch a manner. Our Nature, not theirs was aſſumed, and remains united to the perſon of the Son of God. 'Tis advanced to the Right Hand of God, ſits upon the Throne with God. The Angelical Nature is below the Throne, ſtands about it, but is not advanced to ſit upon it. Our Nature hath not only now a Dominion over the Beaſts as at the firſt Creation, but a principality above and over the Angels. Eph. 1. 21. By creation we were made a little lower than the Angels, by this Union of the Divine, and the Exaltation of the Humane Nature of the Son of God, our Nature is mounted above theirs. It was then made as low as Earth, 'tis now advanced as high as Heaven, yea, above the Heavens; our Nature was before at the Foot of the World, the World is now at the foot of our Nature.

3. How pleaſing to God is the Redemption of Man? Chriſt's glorious advancement ſpeaks a fragrancy in his ſatisfaction to God, as well as a fulneſs of merit for Men. There was a good pleaſure in his Miſſion, there was a ſweet ſavour in his paſſion; for ſince he is crown'd with Glory upon a Throne, that ſo lately ſuffered ignominiouſly upon a Croſs; what can the conſequence be, but that his Obedience to death was highly agreeable to the mind of God, and afforded him a raviſhing delight? For without his receiving an infinite content by it, 'tis not poſſible to imagine he ſhould beſtow ſo glorious a recompence for it. We have his word for a teſtimony of his delight in the ſervice he deſign'd: Iſa. 42. 1. Behold my ſervant, in whom my Soul delights. We have his deed for an Evidence of the pleaſure he took, in the ſervice he performed, by putting the Government into the hands of the Mediator, and giving him power over the Angels, and ſetting him at his Right hand as his Son. He hath teſtified what a raviſhing ſence he hath of the Redemption he wrought, and of that Death whereby he compleated it. He took more pleaſure in him as the Redeemer, than in all the Angels in Heaven. The Apoſtle challengeth all to produce any one Angel, to whom God ſpake ſo magnificent a word, Sit thou at my right hand, till I make thy Enemies thy foot-ſtool. Heb. 1. 13. To which of the Angels ſaid he ſo at any time. He is proclaimed to the Angels as an Object of Worſhip, as he is brought into the World, Heb. 1. 6. as he is the Heir appointed; as well as he is the Heir begotten; as he hath by Inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they; he hath now a glorious Empire over the Angels, as Mediator in his Humanity, which he had before in his Deity, as God bleſſed for ever: He enters into Glory, as Adam into the poſſeſſion of the World, with a Dominion over all the works of God. Had not every part of his work in the World adminiſtred a mighty pleaſure to God, there had not been a hand reached out to have lifted him to Glory; but he went up with a ſhout, Pſal. 47. 5. with the applauſe of God, and acclamations of Angels. No ſhouting had been in Heaven, no Chariot ſent from thence to fetch him; no Attribute of God had bid him welcome, had any been disgraced by him. There had been a gloominess, and disorder, instead of a Jubilee; nor could he ever have sat down upon the Throne of the divine Holiness, had not the Holiness of God, the most Estimable perfection of his Nature, been highly glorified by him.

4. How terrible should the consideration of the Glory of Christ be to the unregenerate, and unbelievers? The greatness of Gods pleasure in the Redemption performed by our Saviour, testified by this his Exaltation, argues a Wrath as terrible against those that lightly esteem him. What greater provocation, than to set our Judgement against the Judgement of God, and to think him not worth glory, by our disesteem, who hath deservedly enter'd into a Glory above all Creatures? 'Tis far worse to despise a Saviour in his Robes, than to crucifie him in his Rags. An affront is more criminal to a Prince upon his Throne, than when he is disguised like a Subject, and maskt in the Cloaths of his Servant. Christ is enter'd into Glory after his sufferings; All that are his Enemies must enter into misery after their prosperity. As there is the greatest contrariety in their Affections, so there will be the greatest distance in their conditions; such cannot be with him where he is in Glory, because they are contrary to him. What Prince upon his Throne, and in his Majesty would admit into his presence base and unworthy Criminals, but to punish them, not to cherish them? Impure persons are not fit to stand before a Princes Throne. The Sight of Christ in Glory is the happiness of Believers, not to be communicated to the Wicked. Those that will not bow to him, must bend under him: If they will not bend to him in his Glory, they must fall under his Wrath, and be parts of his conquest in his anger, if they will not surrender to him upon his Summons from his Throne of Grace. What a folly is it to kick against that person before whom, one time or other, all knees must bow, either voluntarily, or by constraint; and render him an active, or a passive Honour? Phil. 2. 10, 11. Since he had a power join'd with his Glory, that power will as much be exercised against his Enemies, as for his Friends. As the one are to sit upon his Throne, so the other are to be made his Foot stool, and whosoever will not be ruled by his Golden Scepter, shall be crusht by his Iron Rod.

2. Use is of Comfort. The great ground of almost all discomfort, is a wrong and imperfect notion of the Death, and especially of the Exaltation of Christ, and his sitting at the right hand of God: Sorrow fil'd the Disciples hearts, because they apprehended not the reason and ends of Christ's departure from them, John 16. 5, 6. had they considered whither he was to go, and for what, they would not have been dejected.

(1.) By his Glory the justification of Believers is secured. As all Believers did make a satisfaction to God in the Death of Christ, so they are all discharged by God in the Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ: Christ having a full discharge by his entering into Glory as a common person, all those whose sins he bore, have a fundamental discharge in that security of his person from any more suffering. As he bore the sins of many as a common person in the offering himself, and thereby satisfied for their Guilt; so he receives an Absolution as a common Head for all those whose guilt he bore in his sufferings. The Glory he enter'd into, secures him from any further lying under the burden of our sins, or enduring any more the penalties of the Law for them; for as he suffered, so he was acquitted, and entered into Glory as our Surety and Representative: Heb. 9. 27. As it is appointed unto all men once to dye, and after that, the judgment, so Christ was once offered for the sins of many; and unto them that look for him, shall he appear without sin unto Salvation. As Judgment is appointed for all Men, as well as Death, and they receive their final and irreversible Judgment after Death; so Christ by his Exaltation is judged perfect, fully answering the Will, and Ends of God; and shall not appear any more as a Sacrifice in a weak and mangled Body, but in a glorious Body, as a manifestation of his Justification, fitted for the comfort of those that look for him. Upon the score of this Judgment passed upon him by God in our behalf, he is to appear at length for Salvation. If he suffered for us, his sufferings are imputed to us; and if his Exaltation be an approbation of his sufferings for us, then the validity of his sufferings for our Justification, is acknowledged by Gods receiving him into Glory; for as in his Death all Believers were vertually crucified, so in his Justification, (whereof his Exaltation is an assurance) all Believers have a fundamental Justification. It was for the purging not his own, but our sins, that he sat down at the right hand of the Throne of the Majesty on high; Heb. 1. 3. and therefore he sat down as justified for us; the reason of his advancement was the expiation perform'd by him. As long therefore as the Glory of Christ holds, the reason of that Glory holds; i. e. the stability of his Expiation, and consequently the security of our Justification upon Faith. The Glory Christ is dignified with, adds no value to his sufferings, but declares the value of them, as the Stamp on Bullion declares it to be of such a currant value, but adds no intrinsick value to what it had before. In Christ's Death the Nature of his Sacrifice is declared, in his Resurrection the validity and perfection of his Sacrifice is manifested, in his glorious Ascension, the Everlasting virtue of that Sacrifice is testified. All three eyed by Faith in conjunction, secure our Justification, and render a perpetual repose to the Conscience. His Throne being for ever and ever, the virtue of his Sacrifice, upon the account of which he was placed in that Throne, is incorruptible, and therefore there is no room for dejection and jealousies of the sufficiency of the ransom after so illustrious a recompence received by him. Had he not indeed enter'd into Glory, we had had but a weak assurance of a discharge from the Judge.

an

(2.) Hence there is a perpetual bar against the charge our sins and Satan may bring against us. As Christ suffered for us, so he enter'd into Glory for us; he suffered in the notion of a Redeemer, and he is ascended up into Heaven under the notion of an Advocate: He sits not there as a useless Spectator, but as an industrious and powerful Intercessor. The end of his being with the Father, is to be an Advocate; 1 John 2.1. We have an Advocate with the Father; and the Office of an Advocate is to plead the cause of a Client against a false, and unjust Suit. He drew up the answer upon the Cross to the Bill sin had put in against us; and in his Glory he pleads, and makes good that Answer. He merited on the Cross, and improves that merit on his Throne; and diffuseth his Righteousness to shame the accusations of Sin. It was through the Blood of the Covenant he rose: It was through, and with the Blood of the Covenant he enter'd into the holy place, to carry the merit of his Death as a standing Monument into Heaven. He fixes the sight of it always in the Eye of God, and the savour of it is in his Nostrils; so that as the World, after the savour of Noah's Sacrifice should no more sink under the Deluge, so a Believer in Christ should no more groan under the Curses of the Law, though he may smart in this World under the correction of a Father. We have great Enemies, the Devil tempts us, and corruptions haunt us, and both accuse us; to whom do they present their accusations, but to that Majesty, at whose right hand the Redeemer hath his residence? Whence must the vengeance they call for, ensue, but from that Majesty, upon whose Throne a suffering Saviour sits in Triumph, to answer the charge, and stop the revenge? Since he suffered to tear the Indictment, hath he enter'd into Glory to have it piec'd together again, and renewed? As he bowed down his head upon the Cross to expiate our sins, so he hath lifted it up upon the Throne to obviate any charge they can bring against us. This is a mighty comfort to a good and clear Conscience in the midst of Infirmities, that Christ is ascended into Heaven, and is on the right hand of God; Angels, Authorities, and Powers, evil ones, as well as good being made subject to him; evil ones by force, and good ones voluntarily; and therefore secures those from any charge of the evil Angels, that are baptiz'd into his death, and have the stipulation of a good conscience towards God, which is the Apostles reasoning. 1 Pet. 3. 21, 22.

(3.) The destruction of sin in a perfect sanctification is hereby assured: Since his Glory is a pledge of the Glory of Believers, 'tis an earnest also of all the preparations necessary to the enjoyment of that Glory; but a perfect holiness is the only high way to happiness. A Redeemer in Glory will at length present to himself a glorious Church; Ephes. 5. 27. Glorious without spot, smooth without wrinkles, sound without blemish, like to himself. The Resurrection of Christ, the beginning of his Exaltation, is the foundation of the Sanctification of every Believer. The power which raised him, and sat him in Heaven, was an earnest of the power that was to be exerted to raise and work in those that were to be his Members, and fix them in the like condition:

Ephes.

Epheſ. 1. 19, 20. Chriſt being riſen and exalted for their Juſtification, was an aſſurance that the ſame power ſhould be employed for doing all works neceſſary in a juſtified perſon. As in his Death they were crucified with him, and by virtue of his Reſurrection raiſed from their Spiritual Death; ſo by virtue of his Exaltation, they ſhall at laſt caſt off their grave Clothes, and like Elijah, be wholly ſeparated from a duſty Mantle. All that are choſen by God, ſhall paſs into a conformity to the Image of his Son: Rom. 8. 29. What did Chriſt enter into Glory for, and receive a power, but to deſtroy the ſtrength of that in the Heart, the guilt whereof he expiated by his Blood; that as he appeaſed the Anger of God, and vindicated the honour of the Law by removing the Guilt, he may fully content the Holineſs of God, by cleanſing away the Filth? As he had a Body prepared him to accompliſh the one, ſo he hath a glory confer'd upon him to perfect the other; that as there is no guilt ſhall be left to provoke the Juſtice of God, ſo there ſhall be no defilement left to offend his Holineſs. The firſt fruits of this Glory therefore was the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe proper Title is a ſpirit of holineſs, in regard of his Operation, as well as his Nature; and whoſe proper work is to quicken the Soul to a newneſs of Life, and mortifie by his Grace the Enemies of our Nature, He is not entered into Glory to be unfaithful in his Office, unmindful of his Honour, negligent of improving the virtue of his Blood, in purging the Souls that need it, and deſire it. No doubt, but Father ſanctifie them through thy truth, ſounds as loud from his Lips upon his illuſtrious Throne, as it did upon Earth, when he was approaching towards the confines of it: John 17.17, He did not utter thoſe words upon the borders of his Kingdom, to forget them when he was inſtated in it. What he prayed for in his Humiliation, he hath power to act in his Exaltation; and therefore ſince his deſires for the Sanctification of his people were ſo ſtrong then, his purſuit of thoſe deſires, and his diligence to obtain them, will not languiſh now in his preſent ſtate. His peremptory deſire John 17. 24. that all his people might be with him, implies a deſire for the perfection of that Grace which may fit them to be with him.

(4.) An aſſurance from hence of an holy aſſiſtance in, and an honourable ſucceſs of all Afflictions and Temptations. He entred into Glory, but after his ſuffering; and therefore went not into Glory without a ſence of his ſufferings. He enter'd into Glory in the ſame relation as he ſuffered; he was a ſufferer for us, and therefore aſcended into Heaven for us; he hath therefore a ſence of what ſufferings he endured for us, as well as of what Glory he injoys for us. The ſence he bears in him ſtill is therefore for our ſakes. 'Tis that Humane Nature wherein the Expiation was made on Earth, that is now crowned with Glory in Heaven; that Humane Nature, with all the Compaſſions inherent in it, with the ſame Affections wherewith he endured the Croſs, and deſpiſed the ſhame; with the ſame earneſtneſs to relieve us, as he had to dye for us; with the ſame deſire to ſupply our wants, as he had to redeem our perſons. He forgets not in his Glory what he was in his Humiliation, nor is unmindful of them in their Miſery, whom he intends to bring to Glory. He remembers his own ſufferings, and for what he ſuffered, and how he hath left a ſuffering people behind him. He cannot mark out a Manſion in Heaven for any one remaining upon Earth, but he remembers what condition he left them in, and what preſent miſery attends them; to that end he went to Heaven to prepare a place, and order the Manſions for reception. John 14. 2. His head is not more gloriouſly crowned, than his heart is gloriouſly compaſſionate. His paſſion was temporary, but his compaſſions are as durable as his Glory: While he left the Infirmities of his Body behind him, he took his pitying Nature with him to wear upon his Throne. He is touched with a feeling of our Infirmities: Heb. 4. 15. Indeed he cannot but be touched with them, becauſe before his glorious entrance he felt them. To think there is a glorified Head in heaven, is a refreſhment to every ſuffering Member on Earth; and ſuch a glorified Head, that can as ſoon forget his own Glory, as any part of his ſuffering Body. And as to temptation from the Devil, this Glory gives an aſſurance of a compleat Victory over him at laſt. That Devil that was repulſed by him in the Wilderneſs, wounded by him on the Croſs, chained by him at his Reſurrection, and triumphed over at his Aſcenſion, cannot expect to prevail; he that could not over-power our Head, while he was covered with the Infirmities of the Flesh, cannot master him, since all power is delivered to him in Heaven and Earth; and while the Head is in Glory, it will protect and conduct the Members. He that wanted not wisdom and strength in the form of a Servant to defeat him, doth not want it upon the Throne of a Conqueror to outwit and crush him: He can, and will in due season as well silence the storms of Hell, as in the days of his infirm Flesh he did the Waves of the Sea, and the Winds of the Air: The Members cannot be drowned while the Head is above Water.

(5.) An assurance of the making good all the promises of the Covenant accrues from hence. If he suffered Death to confirm them, he will not enjoy his Glory but to perform them. The sure Mercies of David were established at his Resurrection; and at his Ascension put into his hands to be distributed by him; by those (though his Resurrection is only named as being the beginning of his Exaltation) God assures us, that he shall dye no more, but live to dispense those Blessings he hath purchased, and accomplish those Covenant promises in his Glory, which he sealed by his Blood; which are sure Mercies, declared sure by his Seal, and by his possession. The end of his Exaltation is not cross, but pursuant to the end of his Passion. 'Tis upon the account of his being a faithful Witness, that he is the Prince of the Kings of the Earth; Rev. 1. 5 'Tis a strong argument that he will be exact in his glorious condition to honour the truth of God in the performance of his promises, since he hath been so exact in the ignominious part of his work, to remove that which barr'd the way to the accomplishment of them, viz. satisfying that Justice which protected the Covenant of Works, that Mercy might act by a Covenant of Grace towards Men.

(6.) Hence there is an assurance of the Resurrection of our Bodies: He began to enter into Glory when he was raised, and his Resurrection was in order to his further Glorification. He was exalted to bring Death among the rest of his Enemies under his feet; and therefore his entrance into Glory, compleats the conquest of it: 1 Cor. 15. 25, 26. 'Tis not so much an Enemy to his person now, since he hath surmounted it, but an Enemy to his Mystical Body, and therefore is to be conquer'd in it. As Adam in his fall was the spring of Death to all that descend from him; So Christ in his advancement is the Fountain of Life to all that believe in him. Hence is he called a quickning Spirit, 1 Cor. 15. 45. so that he hath the same efficacy to give Life, as Adam had to transmit death to his posterity. v. 20, 21, 22. As it was not only the Soul of Christ, but the Body was exalted, so our Bodies shall be raised since they are sanctified by Christ, as well as our Souls. He redeemed not one part of us, but our Persons, which consist both of Body and Soul. There is no ground to imagine that when the Head is raised, the Members should always remain crumbled to dust, and covered with grave Cloths. He rose as our Head, otherwise we could not be said by the Apostle to rise with him. Colos. 2. 12. The glorious Resurrection of Christ indeed is not the meritorious cause of our Resurrection (for all the merit pertains to his Humiliation) but the seal and earnest and infallible argument of it. He did not only rise for himself, but for his Members, and their Justification, Rom. 4. 25. and therefore for their Resurrection; for there is no reason Death the punishment should remain, if guilt the meritorious cause of it be removed. He rose for our Justification declaratively, i. e. his Resurrection was a declaration of our Fundamental Justification, because Justice was thereby declared to be satisfied, which would else have shut us in the Grave, and lockt the chains of Death for ever upon us. 'Tis by this the first step of his entrance into Glory, we have an assurance that the Graves shall open, bodies stand up, and Death be swallowed up in Victory.

(7.) Hence ariseth an assurance of a perfect glorification of every Believer. The Heavens receive him till, and therefore in order to the restitution of all things, Acts 3. 21. the full restauration of all things into due order, and therefore a full freedom of the Regenerate Man from sin and misery. As the Apostle argues in the case of the Resurrection, if Christ be risen, we shall rise; 1 Cor. 15. 13. so it may upon the same reason be concluded, that if Christ enter'd into Glory, Believers shall enter into Glory; for as from the fulness of his Grace we receive Grace for Grace, so from the fulness of his Glory, we shall receive Glory for Glory; and the reason is, because he enter'd into Glory as the Head, to take livery, and seizin of it for every one that belongs to him: He entered as a fore-runner, to prepare a place for those that were to follow him, and was crowned with Glory as he is the Captain of Salvation; Heb. 2. 9. ſo that this Glory was not poſſeſſed by him meerly for himſelf; (for he was glorious in his Deity before) but to communicate to our Nature which he bore in his Exaltation. As Immortality was given to Adam, not only for himſelf, but to derive to his poſterity, had he perſiſted in a ſtate of Innocence; ſo the ſecond Adam is clothed with a glorious Immortality, as the communicative principle to all Believers. As God in creating Adam the root of mankind, did virtually create us all, ſo in raiſing and glorifying Chriſt the root of ſpiritual Generation, he did virtually raiſe and glorifie all that were his ſeed, though their actual appearance in the World either as Men, or Believers, were afterwards. As the Reſurrection of Chriſt was an Acquittance of the principal Debtors in their ſurety, ſo the advancement of Chriſt was the glorification of his ſeed in the root. When the Head is crowned with a triumphant Lawrel, the whole Body partakes of the honour of the Head; and a whole Kingdom has a ſhare in a new ſucceſſion of honour to the Prince. As thoſe that believe in Chriſt ſhall ſit with him upon his Throne, Rev. 3. 21. ſo they ſhall be crowned with his Glory; not that they ſhall poſſeſs the ſame Glory that Chriſt hath, (for his perſonal Glory as the Son of God, and his Mediatory Glory as the Head of the Church are incommunicable, it hath an authority to govern joined with it, which the higheſt Believer is uncapable of) but they ſhall partake of his Glory according to their capacity, which he ſignifies by his deſire and will, Joh. 17. 24. That they may be with him where he is, and behold his Glory; not only with him where he is, for ſo in a ſence Devils are, becauſe as God, he is every where; but in a fellowſhip, and communion with him in Glory. He is exalted as our Head, whereby we have an aſſurance upon Faith of being glorified with him. Had he ſtaid upon Earth, we could have had no higher hopes, than of an Earthly Felicity; but his advancement to Heaven is a pledge that his Members ſhall mount to the ſame place, and follow their Captain; in which ſence, his people are ſaid to ſit together with him. Epheſ. 2. 6. And herein is the difference between the tranſlation of Enoch into Heaven, the rapture of Elias in a fiery Chariot, and the Aſcenſion of Chriſt; they were taken as ſingle perſons, he as a common perſon: Thoſe tranſlations might give men occaſion to aſpire to the ſame Felicity, and ſome hopes to attain it upon an holy Life, but no aſſurance to enjoy it upon Faith, as the Aſcenſion of Chriſt affords to his Members. And further, The Glory of Chriſt ſeems not to be compleat, till the glorification of his Members: His abſolute Will is not perfectly contented, till his deſire of having his people with him be ſatisfyed. John 17. 24. The departed Saints are happy, yet they have their deſires as well as fruitions; they long for the full perfection of that part of the Family which is upon Earth. Chriſt himſelf is happy in his Glory, yet the ſame deſires he had upon Earth to ſee his believing people with him in Glory, very probably do mount up in his ſoul in Heaven; and though he fills all in all, and hath himſelf a fulneſs of the beatifick Viſion, yet there is the fulneſs of the Body Myſtical, which he ſtill wants, and ſtill deſires. The Church, which is his Body, is called his Fulneſs. Epheſ. 1. 23. 'Tis then his Glory is in a Meridian height, when he comes to be glorified in all his Saints about him. 2 Theſ. 1. 10. The elevation then of the Head is a pledge of the advancement of Believers in their perſons; and a tranſporting them from this Vale of Miſery, to the Heavenly Sanctuary. His Death opened Heaven, and his Exaltation prepares a Manſion in it: His Death purchaſed the Right, and his Glory aſſures the Poſſeſſion.

Of Exhortation.

Meditate upon the Glory of Chriſt: Without a due and frequent Reflection upon it, we can never have a Spirit of thankfulneſs for our great Redemption; becauſe we cannot elſe have ſound impreſſions of the magnificent Grace of God in Chriſt. 'Tis the leaſt we can do, to give him a room in our Thoughts, who hath been a forerunner in Glory, to make room for us in an happy World.* As the antient Iſraelites linkt their Devotion to the Temple and Ark at Jeruſalem, the viſible ſign God had given them of his preſence, ought we not alſo to fix our Eyes and Hearts on the Holy place which contains our Ark, the Body of the Lord Jeſus?]

* Daille viat ſanct. P. 443.

The

The meditation on this Glory will keep us in acts of Faith on him, obedience to him, a lively hope of enjoying bleſſedneſs by him. 1 Pet. 1. 21. If we did believe him dignified with power at the right hand of his Father, it would be the ſtrongeſt motive to encourage and quicken our obedience, and fill us with hopes of being with him, ſince he is gone up in Triumph as our Head: It would make us highly bleſs God for the Glory of Chriſt, ſince it is the day of our Triumph, and the aſſurance of our Liberty.

(1.) It will eſtabliſh our Faith. We ſhall eſteem Chriſt fit to be rely'd upon, and never queſtion that Righteouſneſs, which hath ſo great an advancement to bear witneſs to the ſufficiency of it. Since his Obedience to Death was to præcede the poſſeſſion of his Glory; that being now confer'd, evidenceth his Obedience to be unblemiſht. It gives us alſo a proſpect of that Glory which ſhall follow our ſufferings for him, which is very neceſſary for the ſupport and perfection of our Faith.

(2.) It will inſpire us not only with a patience, but a courage in ſuffering for the Goſpel. By this the Apoſtle encourageth Timothy to endure hardneſs; 2 Tim. 2. 8. Remember that Jeſus Chriſt, of the ſeed of David, was raiſed from the dead. The Elevation of Chriſt is a full confirmation of the Goſpel, and all the Doctrines contained therein. Who can faint under ſufferings for that, that ſeriouſly reflects, and ſees the ignominy of the Croſs turn'd into the Honour of a Crown. If his Humiliation was ſucceeded by an Exaltation, the Members may expect the ſame methods God uſed to the Head. What ſhame can it be to confeſs, yea, and dye for one that is ſo highly advanced, eſpecially when in that advancement we have a communion with him? A conformity to him in ſuffering, will iſſue in an honour in the ſame place. If he entred as a forerunner, then all that are to follow him, muſt go the ſame way, to mount to a like honour.

(3.) It will incourage us in Prayer. From this Topick, Chriſt himſelf raiſed the Diſciples hopes of ſpeeding in their Petitions. John 14. 12, 13. Becauſe I go to the Father, whatſoever you ask in my name, that will I do; for ſo ſome join the words: He was glorified as a Prieſt; not only becauſe he was one, but that he might be in a better capacity to exerciſe the remaining part of his Office. The perpetuity of his Prieſthood is a great part of his Glory, and it is a part of this Office to receive and preſent the Prayers of his people. Rev. 8. 3. How chearfully may we come to him, who is entred into the Holy of Holies for us, if we had ſenſible apprehenſions of his preſent ſtate? A dull frame is neither fit for that God that hath glorified Chriſt, nor fit for that Chriſt that is glorified by him.

(4.) It would form us to Obedience. Since the Humanity is in Authority next to the Deity, it would engage our Obedience to him, to whom the Angels are ſubject: The Angels in beholding his Glory eye him to receive his Commands; and we in meditation on it ſhould be fram'd to the ſame poſture. Chriſt by his Death acquired over us a right of Lordſhip, and hath laid upon us the ſtrongeſt Obligation to ſerve him: He made himſelf a Sacrifice, that we might perform a ſervice to him: Rom. 14. 9. He both dyed, and roſe, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the Dead and Living. By his reviving to a new ſtate and condition of Life, his right to our obedience is ſtrengthned. There is no Creature exempt from his Authority, and therefore no Creature can be exempt from Obedience to him. Who would not be Loyal to him, who hath already received a power to protect them, and a Glory to reward them?

(5.) It would alienate our affections from the World, and pitch them upon Heaven. The thoughts of his Glory, would put our low and ſordid ſouls to the bluſh, and ſhame our baſe and unworthy affections, ſo unſutable to the Glory of our Head. If we looked upon Chriſt in Heaven, our Converſation would be more there; Phil. 3. 20, 21. our hearts would ſeek more the things which are above, Coloſ. 3. 1. we ſhould loath every thing where we do not find him, and think on that Heaven, where only we can fully injoy him. It would make us have Heavenly pantings after the Glory of another World, and diſjoint our affections from the mud and durt of this. This would elevate our hearts from the Croſs to the Throne, from the Grave to his Glory, from his Winding-ſheet to his Robes. If we think on him mounted to Heaven, why ſhould we have affections groveling upon the Earth? 'Tis not fit our Hearts ſhould be where Christ would not vouchsafe to reside himself after his work was done. If he would have had our Souls tyed to the Earth, he would have made Earth his Habitation; but going up to the higher World, he taught us that we should follow him in heart, till he fetcht our Souls and Bodies thither to be with him in person.

(6.) It would quicken our desires to be with Christ. How did the Apostle long to be a stranger to the body, that he might be in the arms of his triumphant Lord? Phil. 1. 23. How did Jacob ardently desire to see Joseph, when he heard he was not only living, but in Honour in Egypt? And should not we upon the meditation of this Glory be inflam'd with a longing to behold it, since we have the prayer of Christ himself to encourage our belief that it shall be so? What Spouse would not desire to be with her Husband in that Glory she hears he is in? What loving Member hath not an appetite to be joined to the Head? There is a Natural Appetite in the several parts of some Animals, as Serpents, &c. to join themselves together again: No Nature so strongly desirous to join the several parts, as the same Spirit of Glory in Christ, and of Grace in his Members, is to joyn Head and Members together. The thoughts of his Glory would blow up desires for this conjunction, that we may be free from that sin which hinders his full Communications to us, and by pure Chrystal Glasses receive the Reflections of his Glory upon us.

(7.) It would incourage those at a distance from him, to come to him, and believe in him. What need we fear, since he is entered into Glory, and sat down upon a Throne of Grace? If our sins are great, shall we despair, if we do believe in him, and endeavour to obey him? This is not only to set light by his Blood, but to think him unworthy of the Glory he is possessed of, in imagining any Guilt so great that it cannot be expiated, or any stain so deep that it cannot be purified by him. A Nation should run to him because he is glorified. Isa. 55.5. The most condescending Affections that ever he discover'd, the most gracious invitations that ever he made, were at those times when he had a sence of this Glory in a particular manner, to shew his intention in his possessing it. When he spake of all things delivered to him by his Father, an invitation of men to come unto him is the use he makes of it. Mat. 11. 27, 28. If this be the use he makes of his Glory, to invite us; it should be the use we should make of the thoughts of it, to accept his proffer. Well then, let us be frequent in the believing reviews of it. When Elisha fixt his Eyes upon his Master Elijah ascending into Heaven, he had a double portion of his Spirit: If we would exercise our understandings by Faith on the Ascension and Glory of the Redeemer, and our Hearts accompany him in his sitting down upon the Throne of his Father, we might receive from him fuller showers, be reviv'd with more fresh and vigorous Communications of the Spirit; for thus he bestows Grace and Gifts upon men.

A DISCOURSE OF CHRISTS INTERCESSION.

I JOHN II. I.

My little children, these things I write unto you, that ye sin not; if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous.

THE Apostle having in the latter verses of the former Chapter spoken of the extensiveness of pardon, v. 7, 9. subjoyns v. 8, 10. that yet the reliques of sin do remain in Gods people. But though all sin that was pardoned, was pardon'd upon the account of the Blood of Christ, which had a property to cleanse from all sin, and that confession of sin was a means to attain this forgiveness purchased by our Saviours Blood; yet, men might suck in the poysonous Doctrine of licentiousness, believing that upon their confession they should presently have forgiveness, though they walked on in the ways of their own Hearts: And on the other side, many good men might be dejected at the consideration of the reliques of sin in them, which the Apostle asserts, 1 John 1.8,10. That no man was free from in this Life. In this verse therefore the Apostle prevents those two mistakes which men might infer from the former Doctrine, that we may not presume by the news of Grace, nor despond by a reflection on our sin.

I. Presumption on the one hand, in these words, My little Children, these things write I unto you that you sin not: Though I have told you that forgiveness of sin is to be had upon Confession, yet the intent of my writing is not to incourage a voluntary Commission.

II. Dejection and Despair, in these words, If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father: If you do commit sin, you must not be so much cast down, as if the door of mercy were clapt against you; no, there is an agent above to keep it open for every one that repents and believes. Here then the Apostle treats of the remedy God had provided for the sins of Believers; viz. the Advocacy of Christ, who having having laid the Foundation of our Redemption in the ſatisfaction made to God by his Blood, reſides in Heaven as an Advocate to plead it on our behalf. This ſaith * Ferus in loc. one * is the ſumme and ſcope of the whole Goſpel; he that believes this, can never deſpair; he that believes it not, is ignorant of Chriſt, though he hath the whole Doctrine of the Goſpel in his memory. The word παράκλητος ſignifies an Advocate, Comforter, or Exhorter; 'tis only in this place uſed of Chriſt, but of the Spirit it is uſed, Joh. 14. 16. Joh. 16. 7. and in both places rendred Comforter. And παράκλησις, a word of affinity to this from the ſame root, is render'd 1 Theſ. 2. 3. Exhortation.

* Mede fragment. ſacra. p. 104. * Camero. p. 179. * Some tell us, that becauſe the Advocates among the Romans and Greeks were the moſt Eloquent Orators, therefore the Jews commonly called the moſt eminent Doctors among them Paracletes. * The word is uſed by the Jews, who derived it from the Greeks, for one that intercedes with a Prince, either to introduce, or reſtore a perſon to his favour. The Syriack uſes the ſame word פַּרְקְלִיטָא derived from the Greek word, though it ſeems to have ſome affinity with the word פָּרַק which ſignifies to redeem or deliver. The word is uſed to expreſs an Advocate by another Author, * where he tells us, that it is neceſſary for him that would be conſecrated to the Father of the World, to make uſe of his Son the moſt perfect Advocate, both for the remiſſion of our ſins, and the communication of happineſs to us; where the word παράκλητος cannot be taken for a Comforter, but an Advocate, or Solicitor; becauſe the Son of God procures the not remembring of ſins, as well as the ſupplying of us with all good. * And the ſame Author in another place aſcribes the purging of ſin to the λόγος θεῖος, a term whereby Chriſt is ſignified in Scripture. The ſame word which when ſerving to expreſs the Holy Ghoſt, is tranſlated Comforter, is here, when uſed of Chriſt, tranſlated Advocate. The Spirit is a perſwaſive Advocate for God among men, as Chriſt is an Eloquent Advocate by the Rhetorick of his Wounds with God for men. Chriſt is both an Advocate and a Comforter; He owns himſelf a Comforter, as well as the Spirit. John 14. 16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter; Implying that he was a Comforter as well as the Spirit; He is a Comforter of man in the name of God, and Advocate with God in the behalf of man.

* Philo Judæ. vitâ Moſis.

* Critica p. 158. Chriſtus λόγος.

Let us conſider the words diſtinctly; We, We Apoſtles, We Believers.

1. Not only we Apoſtles. The interceſſion of Chriſt is not ſo narrow'd; he ſits not in Heaven only to plead the cauſe of twelve men; he doth indeed manage their concern; and if they which are ſpecially commiſſioned by him, and are to judge the World, need him in this Relation, much more do others.

2. But we Believers; 'tis the ſame we he ſpeaks of in the firſt Chapter, we that have our ſins pardon'd, we that have fellowſhip with God, we, as diſtinguiſht from all the World, v. 2. Who is a propitiation for our ſins, and not for ours only, but for the ſins of the whole World: Where the We (the Apoſtles ſpeaks of) that have an Intereſt in this Advocate, are differenced from the World; his propitiation belongs in ſome ſort to the World, his Interceſſion to his Church; to thoſe that are Children new begotten by the Spirit. Upon the Croſs as a man he pray'd for his Murderers, but in his Mediatory Prayer, John 17. 9. he prays not for the World, but thoſe given him out of it.

3. We in particular. Every one who hath the like precious Faith, hath the like powerful Advocate; he means the Children he writes to, and every one of them. It had not been any preſervative againſt dejection, had not this Advocate belonged to them, and every one of them. If any man ſin, let him be what he will, rich, or poor, high or low, one as well as another belongs to this Advocate; every Believer is his Client; he makes interceſſion for them that come unto God by him, Heb. 7. 25. and therefore for every one of thoſe comers.

We have, not had, as if it were only a thing paſt, nor ſhall have as if it were a thing to come, and expected, but have ἔχομεν in the preſent Tenſe, which notes duration and a continued act. We have an Advocate, i. e. we conſtantly have; we have him as long as his life endures. And another Apoſtle tells us he ever lives to make Interceſſion He is at preſent an Advocate, always an Advocate; and in particular, for every one that comes to God by him; and for every one of them, he is an Advocate as long as he lives, which is for ever; we have him not to ſeek, but we have him this instant in the Court with the Judge before the Tribunal where we are to be tryed.

An Advocate.] Tis a Metaphor taken from the Romans and Greeks. * The proper Office of an Advocate is to defend the Innocency of an accused person against his Adversary: In that notion doth the Apostle take it here, he mentions Christ as an Advocate in the cause of sin, which is a charge of the Law. An Advocate stands in opposition to an Accuser, and his work is in opposition to the charge of the Accuser: Satan is the Accuser, Sin the charge. Christ stands by to answer the Accusation, and wipe off the charge, by way of Plea, as the Office of an Advocate is to do.

* Tertullian Apolog. Cap. 2. p. 23.

Advocate.] It is not Advocates. It seems John was ignorant of the Intercession of Saints and Angels; this was a Doctrine unknown in the Primitive Time: John knew but one, but the Romanists have made a new discovery of many more, multitudes of Saints and Angels in this Office for them, and they never canonize a Saint, but they give him his Commission for an Advocate, as if they mistrusted themselves since their Apostacy, or fear'd the affection or the skill of him the Primitive Christians trusted their cause to. It had been as easie a matter for the Apostle to have wrote Advocates, as Advocate; it had been but the change of a letter or two, and the cause had been carryed. This Apostle, to whose care Christ bequeathed the Blessed Virgin when he was upon the Cross, would not have wav'd her right, had there been a just claim for her. We find them urging the distinction of Mediators of Redemption, and Mediators of Intercession; they acknowledge the sole honour of the first to belong to Christ, but link Collegues with him in the second. The Holy Ghost here nulls any Title but his to either, since the same person who is called our Advocate in the Text, is called our propitiation in the next verse, as there is but one Redeemer, so there is but one Intercessor; and the right of his Intercessory power flows from the sufficiency of his propitiatory Passion. The intercession of this one Advocate, Jesus Christ, brought all the glorified Saints to Heaven; and he can by the same Office secure every Believer to the end of the World, without needing the interposition of any that he hath introduced before them. He is not yet tyred in his Office, nor are the multitudes of his Clients too numerous for his memory to carry, so that he should need to turn any of them over to weaker heads.

With the Father.] As the first person in order, and the Conservator of the rights of the Deity: Not only with God, where God is, but with God as the Object of his Intercession, and with God as a Father. With the Father.

(1.) Not with an Enemy.] Little hopes then that he should succeed in his suit. An Enemy may lay aside his anger, and he may retain it; the pressing an Enemy with importunities many times makes his fury seven times hotter. But it is with the Father, one reconcil'd to us by the price of the Redeemers Blood. No, nor with a Judg, a term as affrighting, as that of a Father is refreshing. Thus Christ phrased it before his departure. John 14. 16. I will pray the Father; not I will pray the Judge: The Apostle puts it in the same term Christ had done before him.

(2.) 'Tis not said with his Father. 'Tis no mean advantage for the Son of an offended Prince, to espouse the suit of a Rebel; the Affection of the Father might encourage the solicitation of the Son, but this had not been a sufficient Cordial; the relation of a Son might make him acceptable to his Father for himself, but not for the Criminal: Christ might have been dear to God in the place of a Son, but we might have still been hateful to him upon the account of our Rebellions.

(3.) Nor is it said, with your Father. Had God been only our Father, and an angry Father, and standing in no such relation to the Advocate, we might have had reason to hang the Wing: The Title of a Father is often without the Bowels of a Father.

(4.) But with the Father: A Father both to the Advocate and Client: To the Advocate, by an unspeakable Generation; to the Client, by an Evangelical Creation; a Father in all respects, not only by general Creation, but special Adoption and Spiritual Regeneration; one of paternal tenderness as well as Title, and possessing the Compassions, as well as the Relation of a Father. The Father respects both; as Christ ascended to God as his Father and our Father, John 20. 17. so he intercedes with him as standing in such a capacity both to him and us. Christ treats not with him him as a Judge only, but as a Father: As a Judge, Gods Juſtice was ſatisfyed by the Death of Chriſt, but the end of his Advocacy is upon the account of this ſatisfaction, to excite the paternal Bowels of God towards his people. The Object of the Oblation was God as a Judge or Governour; the Object of Interceſſion is God as a Father, an Advocate with the Father: The firſt was a payment to Juſtice, and the other is the ſolicitation of Mercy. This Title of Father aſſures us of the ſucceſs of his Interceſſion.

Δίκαιον Δικαιοσύνη. צַדִּיק צֶדֶק

Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous.] Now he ſpecifies this Advocate together with his neceſſary qualification. The words Righteous, and Righteouſneſs, both in the Hebrew and Greek are ſometimes taken for Mercy and Charitableneſs: The words following may favour the Interpretation of Righteous in this ſenſe, for it was the Compaſſion of Chriſt that mov'd him to be our propitiation, and his charitable temper is not diminiſht by the things that he ſuffer'd; but I would rather take δίκαιος in the proper ſence for juſt. Mercy without Righteouſneſs in the World is but a fooliſh pity, and may ſupport a world of Unrighteouſneſs. The Honeſty and Righteouſneſs of an Advocate upon Earth, is of more value and efficacy for his Client with a juſt Judge, than all his Compaſſion. In this ſenſe of Holy or Righteous, doth Peter uſe the word, Acts 3. 14. You have denied the holy one, and the juſt; where juſt is oppoſite to an Unrighteous Murderer; and 1 Pet. 3. 18. Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered for ſin, the juſt for the unjuſt; where the Righteouſneſs of the ſurety is oppoſed to the Unrighteouſneſs of the Criminal for whom he ſuffered. This is the comfort, that he is as Righteous for an Advocate, as the Father is for a Judge; that he is as Holy, as we are Unholy: Our Sin render'd us hateful, but the Righteouſneſs of the Advocate renders him ſuch as it became him to be for us, whoſe Advocate he is. Heb. 7. 26.

He may be ſaid to be Righteous.

(1.) In regard of his admiſſion to this Office. He was Righteouſly ſetled in it: Every Man cannot thruſt himſelf into a Court to be an Advocate in anothers cauſe; 'tis not enough to be entertain'd by the Client, but there muſt be a legal admiſſion to that ſtation in the Court. Chriſt was legally admitted into this Office, he had Gods order for it. Pſal. 2. 8. Ask of me.

(2.) In regard of the ground of his admiſſion, which was his loving Righteouſneſs: Heb. 1. 9. Thou haſt loved Righteouſneſs, &c. therefore God, even thy God, thy God, and thy Father, whom thou didſt ſerve, and rely upon in the Office of Mediation hath anointed thee, or inaugurated thee in the chief Office of truſt above thy fellows. Unction was a ſolemn Inveſtiture of the High Prieſts among the Jews in that Honour and Function. This anointing of Chriſt to the perpetual Office of High Prieſt (whereof this of his Interceſſion is a conſiderable part, and the top-ſtone) was upon the account of the vindicating the Rights of God, the Honour of his Law by his Death; he loved Righteouſneſs above his Fellows, and therefore is advanced to the higheſt Office above his Fellows; he is ſuch an one who hath made a compleat ſatisfaction, and hath upon that account been entertain'd by God, and ſetled an High Prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedeck. He was anointed as being moſt Holy in finiſhing Tranſgreſſion, making Reconciliation for iniquity, and bringing in Everlaſting Righteouſneſs: Dan. 9. 24. His Holineſs manifeſted in all theſe, præceded his Unction to that unchangeable Prieſthood which is exerciſed in Heaven ſolely in his Interceſſion. Heb. 7. 24, 25, 28.

(3.) In regard of his Perſon. No exception againſt his Perſon, or his Carriage, to weaken any motion he ſhould make. The known Unrighteouſneſs of an Earthly Advocate, is rather a ruine, than ſupport to the Clients cauſe manag'd by him. Chriſt is righteous, therefore the Father cannot be jealous of his intruding upon his Honour, or preſenting any unbecoming ſuit to him. And becauſe Righteous, therefore fit to be truſted by us with our concerns; he can neither wrong the Father, nor his People; Righteous towards God in preſerving his Honour, Righteous towards us in managing our Cauſe: And this Righteouſneſs was manifeſted in his being a propitiation for Sin, whereby the Righteouſneſs of God was glorified, and the Righteouſneſs of the Creature reſtor'd. This being without ſin render'd him fit to be a Sacrifice; 1 John 3. 5. which alſo renders him fit to be an Interceſſor. A guilty person is not a proper Advocate for a Criminal, nor can he well sue for another, who needs one to sue for himself.

(4.) In respect of the cause he pleads, viz. the pardon of sin. Which upon the account of his being a propitiation for sin, he may rightly lay claim to. 'Tis a just thing for him to plead, and a just thing for God to grant: 1 John 1. 9. He is just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Remission and Sanctification, the great matters of Christ's Plea, are Righteous Suits: He hath a sufficient price with him, whereby he may claim what he desires; and a price so large, that it is not only a sufficient compensation to God for what he doth desire for his people, but is equivalent to a world of sins.

(5.) Upon the account of his Righteousness in all these respects, he must needs prevail with God. This the Apostle implies, he represents him as an Advocate, and as righteous for the comfort of Believers that through a temptation fall into sin, which could be none at all, if the efficacy of his Intercession were not included in this of his Righteousness: Because he is Righteous in his Admission, in the Foundation of his Office, in his Person, and the matter of his plea; he is worthy to be heard by God in his Pleas, and since he wants nothing to qualifie him for this Office, he will not want entertainment with the Father in any suit he makes; and since his propitiation is sufficient for the sins of the whole World, we need not question the prevalency of his Intercession for them that believe: If it hath a sufficiency for such multitudes, it must have an efficacy for those few that do comply with the terms of enjoying the benefit of it. The Righteousness of the person of our Advocate renders his Intercession grateful to God, and successful for us.

The Foundation of this Discourse, or the reason of it is v. 2. He is the propitiation for our sins, not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole World. He hath expiated our sins, and appeased the Wrath of God which flamed against us.

[1.] Not only for our sins who now live, but the sins of all Believers in the past, and succeeding ages of the World, as well as the present; his propitiation in the virtue and efficacy of it looks back upon all Believers, in every age since the Foundation of the World; and looks forward to every Believer, to the last period of time. The Apostles following Discourse in this chapter evinceth, that he restrains the Efficacy of this expiation to Believers that manifest their Faith by their Holiness, and walk in his commands.

[2.] Or he is the propitiation, not only for the sins of us Jews, but for the Gentiles also.

[3.] Or, He is a propitiation for the whole world in point of sufficiency the of the Sacrifice, and infinite value of his Blood. The malignity of them that refuse it doth not diminish the value of the price, nor the bounty and grace that offers to them the benefits of it upon believing.

We may now thus paraphrase the whole:

These things I write to you, not that you should sin upon a presumption of pardon, after the confession of your crimes, and from Gods readiness to forgive, imagine you have a grant of liberty to offend him with the greater security: No, But that you should out of an ingenuous principle, fly from all occasions of offending a God of such boundless Mercy; yet, if any of you that walk in communion with God, do fall through the Infirmities of the Flesh, and the strength of a Temptation, be not so dejected as to despair, no, though the sin may happen to be very hainous; but let them consider, that they have a gracious and righteous Advocate with the Father in Heaven, even with that Father whom they have offended, to plead their cause, and sue out a pardon for them; and remember also, that this Advocate is the very same person, who in the days of his Flesh did expiate sin, and reconcile God by his bloody Passion, and made so full an atonement, as that it was sufficient not only for the sins of the present age, but of the whole World; and hath been efficacious for the blotting out the sins of all former Believers before his coming. And to this Advocate you must address your selves by faith, for you must know him, i. e. believe in him, which is implyed in verse the 3d.

We ſee here a deſcription of the Office of Chriſt in Heaven.

1. The Office it ſelf, an Office of Advocacy.

2. The Officer, Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous, deſcribed

1. In his Perſon and Inauguration, Jeſus Chriſt the Meſſiah, the anointed to this, as well as any other part of his work.

2. Qualification, Righteous: Righteous in his Perſon, Office, Actions, Cauſe.

3. The Court wherein he exerciſeth this Office, in Heaven, with the Father; his Father, our Father, a Father by Affection as well as Creation.

4. The Perſons for whom, We, Us Believers, Us Sinners after believing, every one of us, if any man ſin.

5. The Plea it ſelf, Propitiation.

6. The efficacy of this Plea, from the extenſiveneſs of this propitiation, for the whole World.

Several Obſervations may be drawn hence.

1. The Doctrine of the Goſpel indulgeth no liberty to ſin: Theſe things write I unto you, that you ſin not. Not that ſin ſhould not raign in you, but that ſin ſhould not be committed by you. Some underſtand, that not the Act of ſin, but the Dominion of ſin is here chiefly intended by the Apoſtle; * but the contrary is manifeſt, the term ſin muſt be taken in the ſame ſence in the whole ſentence: But when he ſaith, if any man ſin, he means it of an act of Sin, or a fall into Sin; and therefore the former words I write unto you that you ſin not, muſt be underſtood in the ſame ſence; for if any man be under the Empire of ſin, and gives the Reins to the luſts of his own Heart, he is not the ſubject of Chriſt's Interceſſion. Chriſt is an Advocate for none but thoſe that are in communion with him, and walk in the Light, as appears by the connexion of this with the former Chapter; if any ſuch perſon fall into a ſin, Chriſt is an Advocate for him; if any man ſin, i.e. any man of theſe I have before deſcribed. 1 Joh. 1. 7. No ſin muſt be indulged, 'tis the breath of the Devil, the filth of the Man. One ſin brought Death upon Mankind, violated the Divine Law, deform'd the face of the Creation, wrackt the Soul, inflam'd the Wrath of God; every ſin is of this Nature, and therefore muſt not be practiſed by us: Not to hate ſin, not to reſolve againſt it, not to exerciſe our ſelves in an endeavour to avoid every act of it, is inconſiſtent with a Believer; 'tis not to receive, but to abuſe and prophane the Goſpel.

* Meſtrezat 1 Jean 2. 1, 2. p. 237.

2. Believers while in the World, are lyable to acts of ſin, If any man, he ſuppoſeth that Grace may be ſo weak, Temptation ſo ſtrong, that a Believer may fall into a grievous ſin. While Men are in the fleſh, there are indwelling Sins, and invading Temptations; there is a Body of Death within them, and ſnares about them. The Apoſtle excludes not himſelf, for putting himſelf by the term We, into the number of thoſe that want the remedy, he ſuppoſeth himſelf lyable to the diſeaſe, We have an Advocate with the Father.

3. Though Believers do through the ſtrength of the Fleſh, ſubtlety of the Tempter, power of a Temptation, and weakneſs of Grace fall into ſin, yet they ſhould not deſpair of ſuccour and pardon. If any man ſin, we have an Advocate. Such a total deſpondency would utterly ruine them; Deſpair would bind their ſins upon them. Be not only caſt down under the conſideration of the curſes and threatnings of the Law, but be erected by the promiſes of the Goſpel, and the ſtanding Office of Chriſt in Heaven.

4. Faith in Chriſt muſt be exerciſed as often as we ſin. If any man ſin, we have an Advocate: What is it to us that there is an Advocate, unleſs we will put our Cauſe into his hand; though we have a faithful Attourney in our worldly Affairs, yet upon any emergency we muſt entertain him, let him know our Cauſe, if we expect relief. Though Chriſt being Omniſcient, knows, and compaſſionates our caſe, yet he will be ſolicited; as, though God knows our wants, he will be ſupplicated to for the ſupplies of our neceſſities; though he underſtands our Caſe, he would have us underſtand it too, that we may value his Office. Faith ought therefore to be exercis'd, becauſe, by reaſon of our dayly ſins, we ſtand in need of a dayly Interceſſion. If any man ſin, it implies that every man ought to make reflections on his Conſcience, lament his Condition, turn his Eye to his great Advocate, acquaint him with his State, and entertain him afreſh in his Cauſe. Though he lives for ever to make

In-

Intercession, it is only for those that come to God by him as their Agent and Solicitor, for those that come to the Judge, but first come to him as their Attourny.

5. Christ is not an Advocate for all men, but only for them that believe, and strive, and watch against sin: For those that are invaded by it, not for those that are affected to it; for those that slip and stumble into sin, not for those that lye wallowing in the mire. He doth not say simply, If any man sin, as folding up in that expression every man in the World: But, And if any man sin, by that copulative particle linking the present sentence with the former Chapter, signifying that he intends not this comfort for all, but for those that are in fellowship with God, and strive against Temptation. Intercession being the application of the propitiation, implies the accepting the propitiation first. Christ in his mediatory Prayer excludes all Unbelievers. John 17. 9. I pray for them, I pray not for the World; for them, for whom? for those that have believed that thou didst send me, v. 8. He lives for ever to make Intercession for those that come to God by him; so that the coming to God by him is previous to the Intercession he makes for them.

6. The proper intendment of this Office of Christ, is for sins after a state of Faith. He was a Priest in his propitiation, to bring God and Man together; he is a Priest in his Intercession, to keep God and Man together: His propitiation is the foundation of his Intercession, but his Intercession is an act distinct from the other; that was done by his Death, this is managed in his Life; his Death was for our reconciliation, but his Life is for the perpetuating that reconciliation. Rom. 5. 10. If any man sin, we have an Advocate: If any man sin that hath entred into a state of communion with God, let him know that this Office was erected in Heaven to keep him right in the favour of the Judge of all the World. We should quickly marr all, and be as miserable the next minute after Regeneration and Justification as before, if provision were not in this way made for us. In the first Acts faith eyes the propitiation of Christ, and pitches upon his Death: Christ as dying, is the great support of a Soul new come out of the gulf of Misery, and Terrors of Conscience: In after acts it eyes the Life of Christ as well as the Death, taking in both his propitiation and intercession together.

7. No man can possibly be justified by his own works. We have an Advocate Jesus Christ the righteous. He directs them not to any pleas from their former walking in the light. If our Justification be not continued by virtue of our own works after Conversion; (for though they are works proceeding from renewed principles, and are the fruits of the operation of the Holy-Ghost, spring from a root of Faith and Love, and are directed in the aim of them to the glory of God; yet one flaw spoils the efficacy of all in the matter of Justification:) I say, if our Justification be not continued by works after Conversion, which have so rich a tincture on them, much less is it procur'd by works before Conversion, wherein there is not a mite of Grace. Our Justification in the first sentence of it, and also in the securing and perpetuating our standing before God, depends not in the least upon our selves, but upon the mediation of Christ for us. If Justification and Pardon owe their continuance to Christ, they much more own their first grant solely to the mediation of Christ.

8. Therefore observe further, That nothing of our own Righteousness, or Graces, or Priviledges are to be set up by us, as joint Advocates with Christ before the tribunal of God in case of sin. The Apostle saith not, if any man sin, let him plead his former Obedience, let him plead his habitual Grace, let him plead his Adoption, and by that challenge the renewing of Gods paternal Affection; let him plead his present Repentance; he strikes off our hands from all these, by that one word, We have an Advocate, Jesus Christ the Righteous. We must enter no plea but what Christ doth enter, and that is only his propitiation. The Apostle hints not any matter of the plea of this Advocate, but this one. Those that set up their own satisfactions, penitential acts, their humiliation, remorses, or their other glittering graces, mightily intrench upon the honour of Christ, and his standing Office in Heaven. They may be of some use in the accusations of our own Consciences, but not before God's Tribunal. 'Tis certain our own Righteousness sticks as close to us, as our enmity to God; nay, a secret confidence in it, is the great Citadel, and chiefest Fort and ſtrength wherein our enmity againſt God, and his Righteouſneſs lies; there is no man but is more willing to part with his Sin, than to part with his Righteouſneſs; and there is nothing we find more ſtarting up in us in the actings of Grace, than the motions of Spiritual pride: We would be eaking out the merits of Chriſt, and be our own Advocates: We would not let him manage the cauſe upon his own account, and by this we ſpiritually injure Chriſt in the work of Mediation, as much as the Papiſts do in ſetting up glorified Saints and Angels with him; may I not ſay, worſe, ſince an unſpotted Angel, and a perfected Saint is a more meet mate for him than a ſpotted Righteouſneſs and Grace.

9. Chriſt is a perſon in the God-head diſtinct from the Father; Advocate with the Father: The Father and the Advocate are here diſtinct: A Judge and an Advocate are different perſons, have different Offices, are exerciſed in different acts. The Father is conſidered as the Governour, and the Advocate as a Pleader.

10. How Divine is the Goſpel! Sin not, if any man ſin. It gives us comfort againſt the demerit of ſin, without encouraging the acts of ſin; it teaches us an exact conformity to God in Holineſs, and provides for our full ſecurity in Chriſt a powerful Advocate. No Religion is ſo pure for the Honour of God, nor any ſo cordial for the Refreſhment of the Creature.

The Doctrinee I ſhall handle is this, Chriſt is an Advocate with the Father in Heaven, continually managing the concerns of Believers, and effectually prevailing ſo their full Remiſſion and Salvation upon the account of the propitiation made by his Death. We ſhall ſee

1. That Chriſt is an Advocate, in ſome general propoſitions.
2. What kind of Advocate he is.
3. How he doth manage this Advocacy, and Interceſſion.
4. That he doth perpetually manage it.
5. That he doth effectually manage it.
6. That he doth manage it for every Believer.
7. The USE.

I. In General, Chriſt is as much an Advocate, as he is a Sacrifice, as God is as much a Governour, as he was a Creator. As we ſay of Providence, it is a continued Creation, ſo of Interceſſion, it is a continued Oblation; as Providence is a maintaining the Creation, ſo this Interceſſion is a maintaining the Expiation, and therefore is by ſome called a preſentative Oblation. The Heathens had ſome notice of the neceſſity of ſome Mediator or Interceſſor, either by tradition from Adam, from whom the notion of a Mediator might as well be tranſmitted, as the notion of expiation of guilt by bloody Sacrifices; but while they retain'd the Carcaſs, they loſt the Spirit of it; and while they preſerved the ſentiment of the neceſſity of an Advocate, they framed many wrong and unſerviceable ones: They dub'd their Heroes, and men that had been Benefactors to them in the World with this Title after their Death, and elevated them to be intermediate powers between God and them: * Some of thoſe Dæmons are fancyed to carry up their Prayers to God, and back their Prayers with new Supplications: Others brought gifts from God; ſome handed their Petitions and pleaded for them, others brought the anſwers of their Prayers and relieved them, which the Apoſtle alludes to 1 Cor. 8. 5, 6. For though there be that are called Gods, as there be Gods many, and Lords many; but to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him. As they had many Gods, ſo they had many Mediators between themſelves, and thoſe particular Gods; but ſaith, he to us, there is but one God the principal cauſe, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the procuring cauſe of all things, by whoſe ſuit we are what we are, and enjoy what we have. This Interceſſion of Chriſt was antient; 'tis as ancient as his firſt undertaking our ſuretyſhip, by virtue of which, the vengeance the ſinner had merited, was defer'd: He upholds all things by the word of his power, Heb. 1. 3. or his powerful, or prevailing word, when they were ready to ſink; not only as God by the word of Providence, but as Mediator by his word of Interceſſion, that the guilty ſinner might not be dealt with by the rigours of Juſtice, but in the tenderneſs of Mercy. As he was fore-ordain'd a Sacrifice, ſo he was fore-ordain'd an Advocate; as he was a Lamb slain, so he was an Advocate entertain'd from the Foundation of the World. His Sacrifice though not perform'd, could not have a credit with God as it had, but his pleas upon the credit of that Sacrifice must be admitted also. Thus were believers of old sav'd by him, and redeem'd in his pity, as he was the Angel of of the presence of God; Isa. 63. 9. i. e. in the phrase of the New Testament, appearing in the presence of God for them, Heb. 9. 24. noting the manner of his Intercession, He did as an undertaker for them, interpose for their Salvation he bare them, and carryed them all the days of old, alluding, I guess, to Aaron the High Priest, bearing the names of the twelve Tribes in the Breast-plate of Judgment upon his heart, when he went into the Holy place to intercede for the people. Exod. 28. 29. He was an Advocate for them to whom the credit of his propitiation did extend; but that did extend to those that believed before his coming in the Flesh, to them therefore his Intercession extended also. It was then indeed an Intercession upon credit, 'tis now an intercession by demand, since the actual offering himself a victim.

1. This Office of Advocacy belongs to him as a Priest, and it is a part of his Priestly Office. The High Priest was not only to slay and offer the Sacrifice in the outer part of the Tabernacle on the anniversary day of Expiation, but to enter with the fresh Blood into the Sanctuary, and sprinkle it seven times, to show the perfection of that expiating Blood which was figured by it, Levit. 16. 14. In the blood was the expiatory virtue, Levit. 17. 11. 'Tis the blood that makes an atonement for the Soul; yet, the High Priest did not perform his Office compleat, till he had sprinkled the Blood of the Sacrifice with his finger on the Mercy Seat. He was also to bring a censer full of burning coals from off the Altar, and incense in his hands, and put it upon the Fire before the Lord, within the Vail, that the cloud in the incense might cover the Mercy Seat. Levit. 16. 12, 13. As the High Priest going into the Holy of Holies after the Sacrifice, was a Type of Christ's Ascension after his Passion on the Cross; so the Blood he was to sprinkle, was a Type of that Blood, * and the Incense he was to kindle, a Figure of the Prayers of Christ after his entring into Heaven. Incense in Scripture frequently signifies Prayer, and Prayer is compared to Incense: As the High Priests Office was to enter into the Sanctuary with this Blood and Incense to intercede for the People, and obtain a blessing for them; so it pertained to the Office of Christ as a Priest, not only to enter with his own Blood, but with the Incense of his Prayers, as a Cloud about the Mercy Seat, to preserve by his Life the Salvation he had merited by his Death. Christ entred into Heaven as a Priest, and in that capacity sat down on the right hand of the Throne of the Majesty in the Heavens, Heb. 8. 1. and was settled an High Priest for ever, by a solemn Oath. Psal. 110. 4. There is therefore some Priestly act, which he hath a capacity and an obligation by virtue of his Office to perform for ever all the time he stays in Heaven, till his second appearing, (as the High Priest all the time he was in the Holy of Holies, was performing a Sacerdotal Act) which is not the Act of Sacrificing, that was done by him on Earth, (as the Sacrifice was slain without the vail) nothing but Intercession can answer to that Type which is called an appearing for us as a Proxy or Attourney in the presence of God; Heb. 9. 24. otherwise there is no Priestly act for him to do, and so his being a Priest would be an empty Title, a Name without an Office: Gods Oath would be insignificant, if there were not some Priestly act to be perform'd by him, as well as a Priestly Office vested in him: Being a Priest therefore he must have something to offer, even in Heaven; which cannot be a new Sacrifice, for that was but once to be done; it must be therefore the presenting his old, his Body wounded, which is nothing else but this which we call Intercession; a presenting to God this Sacrifice of himself, and pleading the virtue of it in every time of need. The Apostle tells us, our Salvation depends upon his Intercession, and his Intereession upon his Priesthood; Heb. 7. 24, 25. Our Salvation depends not simply upon his living for ever, for that he had done, if he had never come upon the Earth to redeem us; but upon his living for ever in an unchangeable Priesthood; the end of which Unchangeable and Everlasting Priesthood is Intercession. As our Salvation depends not upon Gods living for ever, for God had lived for ever had we been damn'd; but upon Gods living for ever as a reconcil'd God, and entred into Covenant. As he was a Priest upon the Cross to make an Expiation piation for us, ſo he is our Prieſt in the Court of Heaven, to plead this atonement both before the Tribunal of Juſtice, and the Throne of Mercy againſt the Curſes of the Law, the Accuſations of Satan, the Indictments of ſin, and to keep off the puniſhment which our guilt hath merited.

2. This therefore was the end of his aſcenſion, and ſitting down at the right hand of God. In his Incarnation he came from the Father to acquaint us with his gracious purpoſes, and how far he had agreed with God on our behalf; and at his Aſcenſion he went from us to the Father, to ſue out the benefits he had ſo dearly purchaſed. He drew up an anſwer upon the Croſs to the Bill, that ſin by virtue of the Law had drawn againſt us, and aſcended to Heaven as an Advocate to plead that anſwer upon his Throne, and rejoyn to all the replyes againſt it. When his Offering was accepted, he went to Heaven to the ſupream Judge to improve this acceptation of his Sacrifice, by a negotiation which holds and continues to this day; Heb. 9. 24. Chriſt is entred into Heaven; for what end? To appear in the preſence of God for us; but may he not appear for us at firſt, and afterwards ceaſe from it? No: Now to appear for us: He entred into heaven long ſince, but he appears for us this inſtant; Now, as if the Apoſtle ſhould have ſaid, while I am writing, and you are reading, in this, in that inſtant Νῦν is he appearing for us as a publick perſon: Though there be a change in his condition from a ſtate of Humiliation, to a ſtate of Exaltation, yet there is no change in his Office, Heb. 8. 1, 2. He is ſet down as a Prieſt on the Right Hand of God, a Miniſter of the Sanctuary, or of Holy things, λειτουργὸς τῶν ἁγίων as a performer of a Divine Office for Men. As Moſes forty days after his conducting the Iſraelites out of Egypt (the Type of our Redemption) aſcended the Mount, while his redeemed people were in a conflict with Amalek, to pray for them as a Type of Chriſt; ſo Chriſt himſelf forty days after his Reſurrection, which was an evidence of our deliverance from Spiritual ſlavery, aſcended up into Heaven to lift up his head there as our Advocate for aſſiſtance to be granted to us againſt our Spiritual Enemies. And this Interceſſion is the true deſign of his Eternal Life as a Prieſt; and ſince the Apoſtle lays it down as a manifeſt truth, witneſt by all the Prophets Act. 3. 21. that there is to be a reſtitution of all things, and that the Heavens receive Chriſt till that reſtitution: It will follow that he ſits there in order to that reſtitution; not as an idle Spectator, but a promoter of it by the efficacy of his Mediation; and no other order did he receive from his Father after his Reſurrection, being declared the begotten Son by his Reſurrection, but to ask, for that follows juſt upon the declaration of being his Son, Pſal. 2. 7, 8. which is interpreted in the New Teſtament of his Reſurrection. Asking was all required of him for the enjoying his reward, of which the advantage of his people in injoying the fruits of his Death, is none of the meaneſt part in his own account, ſince it was the joy ſet before him. His Mediation kept the World from ruine after mans fall, and his Interceſſion promotes the Worlds reſtauration after his own paſſion.

3. This Advocacy is founded upon his Oblation. He is our Advocate, becauſe he was our propitiation; the efficacy of his plea depends upon the value and purity of his Sacrifice: He is an Interceſſour in the virtue of his Blood. The Apoſtle therefore ſpeaking of his Interceſſion, Heb. 7. 24. conſiders it with a reſpect to his Sacrifice; v. 27. he could not have interceded as a Prieſt, if he had not offered. As the High Prieſt could not enter into the Holy of Holies, till by the ſlaying of the Sacrifice he had blood to carry with him, ſo the true High Prieſt was not to be admitted to ſolicit at the Throne of Grace, till he had ſatisfyed the Tribunal of Juſtice; ſo that a propitiation and his advocacy are not one and the ſame thing, (as the Socinians affirm,) but diſtinct; the one is the payment, the other the plea; one was made on Earth, the other is managed in Heaven; the one was by his Death, the other by his Life; the one was done but once, the other performed perpetually; the firſt is the foundation of the ſecond: Becauſe he paid the Debt as our ſurety, he was fit to plead the payment as our Attourney; what he finiſhed on Earth, he continually preſents in Heaven: By ſhedding his Blood he makes Expiation, by preſenting his Blood he makes Interceſſion; in the one he prepares the remedy, and in the other he applyes it. They are not the ſame acts, but the firſt act is the foundation of the ſecond, and the ſecond hath a connexion with the firſt.

4. The

4. The Nature of this Advocacy differs from that Intercession or Advocacy which is ascribed to the Spirit. The Spirit is said to make Intercession for us, Rom. 8. 26. and he is in a way of excellency called the Comforter, which, we heard, is the same word in the Greek with this word, which is here translated Advocate. Christ is an Advocate with God for us, and the Spirit is an Advocate with God in us. John 14. 17. Christ is our Advocate, pleading for us in his own Name; the Spirit is an Advocate assisting us to plead for our selves in Christ's Name: Christ pleads for us in the presence of God, the Spirit directs us to such arguments as may be used for pleas for our selves. The Spirit doth not groan himself, but excites in us strong groans, by affecting us with our Condition, and putting an edge upon our Petitions, and strengthning us in the inward man; Eph. 3. 16. The Spirit is an Advocate to indite our Petitions, and Christ is an Advocate to present them: Some distinguish them, that Christ is an Advocate by way of Office, and the Spirit by way of Assistance; but certainly the Spirit is an Advocate by way of Office to counsel us, as Christ is an Advocate by way of Office to plead for us, and the Spirit is as much sent to do the one in our Hearts, as Christ was called back to Heaven to do the other for our persons. The Spirit is an Intercessor on Earth, and Christ is an Intercessor in Heaven. Again, As there are two Courts we are summon'd to appear in, the Court of the supream Judge, and the Court of the Judges Deputy, our own Consciences; Christ clears us by his plea at Gods Bar, and sets us right with the offended Father; the Spirit as Christ's Deputy, being sent in his Name, clears us at the Bar of our own Consciences; Christ answers the charge of the Law in the Court of Gods Justice, and the Spirit answers the accusations of sin in the Court of Gods Deputy; the one pleads for our discharge above, the other pleads for our peace below, and the voice of God's Spirit is as mighty in us, as the voice of Christ's Blood is mighty for us.

II. Thing. What kind of Advocate Christ is.

1. An Authoritative Advocate. He intercedes not without a Commission and without a Command. God owns himself as the cause of his drawing near, and approach to him. Jer. 30. 21. I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me, both in his first Mediation and his following intercessions. He manages not an Intercession meerly in a way of Charity, but in a way of Authority, as a person entrusted by God, and dignifyed to this end; not only as our Friend, but as a Divine Officer; as an Attourney may manage the Suit of his Kinsman, but not only as being related to his Client, but as being admitted by the Court into such an Office. Christ is not only admitted as one of kin to us, but commissioned as Mediator for us. This was promised that he should be a Priest upon his Throne; Zach. 6. 13. The Commission takes date from the day of his Resurrection; when he was declar'd to be the begotten Son of God, he had an order to ask: Psal. 2. 8. This charge was given him at his solemn Inauguration, and was to præcede all the magnificent fruits of it. * God settles Christ a Priest and Intercessor, while he commands him to ask the Heathen for his Inheritance; which connexion the Apostle confirms. Heb. 5. 5. Christ glorified not himself to be made an High Priest, but he that said unto him, thou art my Son: But the Priesthood doth not appear to be setled upon Christ by any other expression than this, Ask of me. The Psalm speaks of his investiture in his Kingly Office; the Apostle refers this to his Priesthood, his Commission for both took date at the same time; both bestowed, both confirm'd by the same Authority; the Office of asking is grounded upon the same Authority, as the Honour of King. Ruling belong'd to his Royal Office, asking to his Priestly. After his Resurrection the Father gives him a Power and Command of asking, and obligeth himself to a grant of what he should ask; the same power that admits him to be an Advocate, assures him he should be a prevailing one; the Obligation to give is as strong as his order to ask. As his Death was the end of his Incarnation, so his Intercession was the end of his Ascension; his dignity in Heaven was given him for the exercise of this particular Office. Heb. 7. 25. As he had his Life from God, so he had it for this end, to make Intercession. He had a Command to be a Sufferer, and a Body prepared him for that purpose; so he had likewise a Command to be an Advocate, and a Life given him, and a Throne prepared for him at the Right Hand of God to that end.

* River. in Ps. 2. 8.

The

The like commiſſion is mentioned, Pſal. 89. 26. He ſhall cry unto me, thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my Salvation, and this after his exaltation, verſe 24, 25. yet for the full compleating of it, verſe 27. the matter of his plea is there mentioned, thou art the rock of my Salvation, the foundation, the firſt cauſe of all thy Salvation I have wrought in the World, being the firſt mover of it, and promiſing the acceptance of me, in the performance of what was neceſſary for it. As he hath authority to cry to God, ſo he hath an aſſurance of the prevalency of his cry, in regard of the ſtability of the Covenant, the Covenant of Mediation which ſhall ſtand faſt with him, or be faithful to him, and my mercy I will keep for him for evermore, verſe 27. the treaſures of my mercy are reſerved onely to be opened and diſpenſed by him; and the enjoying of his ſpiritual ſeed for ever, and the eſtabliſhing of his own throne thereby, is the promiſed fruit of this cry, verſe 28. Chriſt indeed was a ſurety by authority, but by a greater right an Advocate; that he was accepted in the capacity of a ſurety was pure mercy; it was at Gods liberty whether he would accept a ſurety for us, or accept Chriſt for our ſurety; but after he had accepted him, upon the doing of his part in the work of Redemption he hath a right to the application of Redemption, and conſequently to the office of Advocate, to ſee right done us, to ſee our debts diſcharged, and to put juſtice in mind of the full payment he hath made. He hath a right to it, a Commiſſion for it, a command to diſcharge it, he is as much bound to intercede as he was to ſacrifice, for it is as much belonging to his Prieſtly office as the other.

2. He is a wiſe and skilful Advocate. Every Advocate muſt underſtand the Law of the State, and the cauſe of his Client that he may manage it to the beſt advantage. This Advocate hath an infinite knowledge as God, and a full and ſufficient knowledge as man. His Deity communicates the knowledge of our cauſe to his humanity, and excites the compaſſions of his Nature; he knows the ſincerity of his Clients hearts, their inward groans, and breathings which cannot be expreſt; he knows our cauſe better than we do our ſelves, he needs not the repreſenting our own cauſe from our ſelves, he needs not that any ſhould teſtifie of man, he knows what is in man, John 2. 25. he underſtands the beſt, and the worſt of our cauſe, he hath a clear view of all the flaws in it better than they are viſible to our ſelves. If he had no more skill and knowledge of us than what our outward expreſſions might furniſh him with, he might miſtake the buſineſs of a ſtammering ſpirit, and on the other ſide be impoſed upon by the voluble expreſſions and flouriſhing gifts of others; he might be cheated by the hypocriſie of ſome, and miſtake the concerns of his own people who ſo often miſtake themſelves, and are not able to expreſs their own wants; but it cannot be ſo with him, He knows all things, he knows thoſe that love him and thoſe that hate him, John 21. 17. He underſtands our cauſe, he underſtands the Law according to which he is to plead, the articles of agreement between the Father and himſelf, and he underſtands the fullneſs and redundancy of his own merit. He uſes arguments proper to the cauſe he pleads, and drawn from the nature of the perſon he applies himſelf to. When he meets with the Church in weakneſs and diſtreſs by potent adverſaries, and would have the Jews delivered, and the Temple rebuilt, he ſolicites God as the Lord of Hoſts, Zach. 1. 12. When he finds his people in danger of Sin and Temptation, he petitions God under the title of Holy, John 17. 11. When he would have promiſes performed to them, he appeals to the righteouſneſs of the Father, John 17. 25. it being part of his Righteouſneſs, to fulfill that word which he hath paſſed, and make good the grant which ſo great a Redeemer merited. He pleads the reſpects he had to the divine Will in the exerciſe of every part of his office both of Prieſt and Prophet, Pſal. 40. 9, 10. a prophetick Pſalm of Chriſt. I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart, I have declared thy faithfulneſs, and thy Salvation, I have not concealed thy loving kindneſs, and thy truth from the great Congregation; the adding thy to every one of them is emphatical, it was thy Righteouſneſs I had commiſſion to declare, thy Faithfulneſs I had order to proclaim, thy Mercy I had a charge to publiſh, thou wert as much intereſted in all that I did as I my ſelf was. I ſhall be counted falſe and a lyar, thou wilt be counted unjuſt and cruel, if all be not fulfilled as I have ſpoken; ſince it was thy rule I obſerved, and thy glory I aimed at in declaring it, diſgrace not thy ſelf and me in refusing the petition of such a supplicant, who believes in my word which I gave out by thy Authority. Surely as Christ observed the will of God upon Earth, so he is wise to intercede for nothing but according to those rules he observed in his humiliation, which was whatsoever might honour and manifest the Righteousness, Faithfulness, Salvation, Truth, and Loving-kindness of the Father. This is a part of his Wisdom, to plead for nothing, but for what he hath the nature of God to subscribe to his petitions, and back him in them. 'Tis not for the honour of an Advocate to undertake a cause he cannot bring to pass, nor will any wise man ingage in a suit which he hath not some strong probability to effect. Our Lord, in whom are hid all the Treasures of Wisdom and knowledge, stands more upon his honour than to undertake a cause he cannot accomplish.

3. He is a Righteous and faithful Advocate. He is as Righteous in his Advocacy as he was in his suffering. His being without sin rendered him fit to bear our sins on the Cross, 1 John 3. 5. he was manifested to take away our sins, and in him is no sin; and it renders him fit to plead for the pardon of our sins upon his Throne as he was manifested to destroy the works of the Devil, so he is exalted to perfect the conquest by his intercession. If he had sin, he could not be in Heaven, much less a pleader there. God tryed him and found him faithful in all his house, in all his own concerns, and the concerns of his people which are his spiritual Temple. The Altar of Incense, which was overlaid with pure gold all about the sides of it, Exod. 37. 26. and set before the Ark of the Testimony, Exod. 40. 5. signified the purity of his soul, and his freedom from any kind of corruption in those pleas he makes in the Holy of Holies above, where he ever lives to make intercession for those that come to God, Heb. 7. 25. But in what state, verse 26. An High Priest, Holy, Harmless, Undefiled, separate from sinners; he lives in heaven, a pure person, fitted by his purity to such an Office. The words refer not to Christs life in the World *, but to his Life in heaven, separate from sinners in regard of communion in their sins, but not in regard of compassion to their miseries. He hath nothing of his own concerns to divert him from our business; as he had no sin of his own to suffer for in the World, so he had no sin of his own to sollicit the pardon of in heaven. He having an incomparably Righteous Nature, will be exactly Righteous in his Office. After Christs Resurrection, when he had finished his work on Earth, and was to begin it in heaven, God saluted him with a great deal of kindness, Psal. 2. 7. This day have I begotten thee * God regarded him as his only begotten Son, of the same holy and righteous Nature with himself; Justified him as his righteous servant, and thereupon gives him a power of asking, so that the prevalency of his Interoession depends upon the Righteousness of his person, and the righteousness of his cause; he pleadeth his own Righteousness, which carries with it a necessity of having sin pardoned which the Righteousness of God is as ready to remit, as the Righteousness of Christ was to purchase the remission of it. Whatsoever Christ intercedes for, is Righteous; if it were unrighteous, it were not fit to be moved to God, this would be to endeavour to perswade him to an unworthy act, contrary to his Nature. If any proposal of his were unrighteous, Christ would be false to God, and his own principles in making and defending such a motion. This would be to destroy all the ends of his coming, and design of his death, which was to declare the Righteousness of God, advance it in the World, and in the souls of men. If Christ should undertake an unrighteous cause, what ground of confidence, and security could any Righteous man have in him?

4. He is a compassionate Advocate. His compassion to us is joyned with his faithfulness to God in his Priestly Office, Heb. 2. 17. So that if he be not tender to believers in misery, he is not faithful to God in the exercise of his Office. His intercession springs from the same tenderness towards us as his oblation, and both are but the displaying of his excessive Charity. His compassion to us was a lesson he learn'd, together with obedience to God, by his sufferings Heb. 5. 8. He learn'd how necessary obedience was to God, and how grievous the misery of man was, and being instructed in one as well as the other, his pity to us had as deep an impression, as his sense of obedience to the divine Will: and since one part of his obedience was to make way for the opening the Treasures of his mercy, he cannot be obedient to his Father, without being merciful to us. He was expoſed to ſuch a condition as wreſted from him ſtrong cryes for himſelf, that he might ſend up ſtrong cryes for us in our Miſery. He was a Man of Sorrows that he might be a man of Compaſſions: He indeed had pity of old; for with ſuch an affection he redeemed the Iſraelites, Iſa. 63. 9. His compaſſions are not leſſened by an aſſumption of our Humanity, but an experimental compaſſion gain'd in his Humane Nature, which the Divine was not capable of, becauſe of the perfection of impaſſibility. By a reflection upon his own condition in the World, he is able to move our cauſe with ſuch a tender feeling of it, as if he had the ſmart of it preſent in his own heart and bowels. The greateſt pity muſt reſide in him, ſince the greateſt miſery was endured by him in our Nature; what he had a real feeling of on Earth, he muſt have a memorative feeling of in Heaven: He cannot forget above what he experimented below; ſince one part of his Prieſtly Office in ſuffering, was to fit him for a more faithful and merciful exerciſe of the other part in his Interceſſion; not an affliction was laid upon him, but was intended to compoſe his heart to a ſympathizing frame with his people; Heb. 4. 15. We have not an high Prieſt which cannot be touched: (Two negatives affirm it ſtrongly) Not a taſt of bitterneſs in any temptation he endured, but was more deeply to engrave in his heart a tenderneſs to us; nor can thoſe compaſſions in him be equal'd by any Creature; no Angel nor man can be touched with ſuch a ſence as he is, becauſe no Angel nor man ever ſmarted under ſuch extremity as he did. Our pity to our ſelves cannot enter into compariſon with his pity to us. With what a ſence of his Diſciples condition did he pray for them upon Earth? John 17. The Glory of heaven hath made no change in his Judgment and Affections; he hath the ſame Will in heaven that he had on Earth; the ſame humane Will, and therefore the ſame humane Compaſſions in league with his Divine: He was God-Man on Earth, Man to ſuffer for us, and God to render that ſuffering valuable; he is God-Man in heaven, Man to pity us, and God to render that compaſſion efficacious for us. This fits him for a zealous proſecution of our cauſe in heaven. His Interceſſion receives a ſharper edge from the things which he ſuffer'd; the taſt that he had of the infirmities of men, and the wrath they are obnoxious unto, warms his heart, and ſtrengthens his pleas, and makes him a more zealous Solicitor at the Throne of Divine Grace; as an Earthly Advocate that had drank deep of the ſame Cup, and had had the ſame ſuit for himſelf, as he hath for his Client, better underſtands the cauſe, and is able to manage it with a deeper ſence, than if he had never felt the like miſery. Our Advocate was framed in the ſame Mould with us in regard of his Nature, and was caſt into the ſame Furnace of wrath which we had merited; and thus knowing the miſeries of man not by a bare report, but experience of the heavineſs of the burthen, is more careful to ſolicit the Liberty and abſolution of every comer to God by him from the ſentence that hangs over them; and the greater their miſeries are, the more are his compaſſions exercis'd. The more deplorable the miſery is, the greater object of pity the perſon is that feels it; and to exerciſe compaſſion when the object ſtands moſt in need of it, is very agreeable to a compaſſionate Nature, ſuch as Chriſt's is; and therefore if he had ſo much pity to procure the Redemption of the Iſraelites from a temporal and bodily Captivity; much more will he be careful to free Believers from the ſpiritual captivity they groan under, ſince in that condition they are more ſutable objects of compaſſion, than any man can be under a meer bodily and temporal affliction. And therefore when ever the knowledge of our condition comes to his humanity by the aſſiſtance of his Divinity, we cannot have a more powerful Solicitor than the experimental ſence he hath in his own Breaſt and Bowels. To conclude, he is a compaſſionate Interceſſor, becauſe he was a great Sufferer, as compaſſionate to us as he is valuable with God; his merit for us is not greater than his pity to us.

5. He is Ready, and Diligent; He is never out of the way when the cauſe ſhould be heard, he always ſits at the right hand of the Father, who is the Judge of the World, and is never out of his preſence. When Stephen Acts 7. 55. ſaw the Heavens opened, he ſaw Chriſt ſtanding at the right hand of God, in the poſture of an Advocate and Protector, as fitting is the poſture of a Prince and a Judge. He times his Interceſſion for the Church according to the providential ſtate of the World; Zach. 1. 11, 12.

1. 11, 12. he had sent out his Messengers to view the state of the Earth, who upon their return brought him word that it was in peace and rest; upon which news he petitions for the restoring of Jerusalem; he would not let slip the opportunity of such an Argument, that the Church, the seat of the Divine Glory on Earth should be in Misery, when the World wherein God did less concern himself, flourisht in peace and prosperity: Shall the Enemies of the Church be in a better condition than the people thou hast intrusted with thy Law? His Messengers brought him an exact account of things, and he is diligent to take hold of the first occasion to solicit the security or restoration of his people: Now that the Princes of the Earth have nothing of War to hinder them, put it into their hearts to deliver thy people, and rebuild thy Temple. 'Tis one property of Christ to be of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord, Isa. 11. 3. to be sensible of any thing that may promote the Honour and Worship of God, or may obstruct and lessen it; his sence is as quick as his understanding, and readily interposeth for whatsoever may conduce to the manifestation of the Attributes of God, which is the foundation of his fear in the World. He is ready to put in a plea for us to the Father, and is more studious of our welfare, and to bring us off, than we are our selves. In the midst of his dolours he gave us an evidence of it; though his Disciples were so careless, and senceless of his present condition that they fell asleep, when they had most need to watch both for him and themselves; yet after his reproof for their negligence, he frames an excuse for them from the consideration of their weakness, before they could apologize for themselves: Mat. 26. 41. The Spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak. He lays it upon the infirmities of their flesh, though it was also the security of their Spirits, as appears by his reproof; is he not as ready to plead the same for us in his Glory? He is always ready at the Throne of Grace, to give out Grace and Mercy in a time of need; Heb. 4. 16. we have no reason to fear his absence from that Throne of Grace we solicit in our necessities; he is passed into the Heaven, seated there in a perpetual exercise of this Office, to entertain all comers at all times, and can no more be sleepy than he can be cruel; no more cease to be diligent, than he can be bereaved of his Compassions.

6. He is an earnest and pressing Advocate. When an Advocate hath much business for himself, it will cool him in the Affairs of his Clyent: Christ hath once offered up himself, and being thereupon advanced, has no need to offer up himself again; he is secure from any further suffering in his person; he hath nothing to do for himself, but all his ardency is employed for his people, which is the reason render'd why he lives to make Intercession for the comers to God by him. Heb. 7. 25. compared with verse 27. He needeth not dayly, as those High Priests to offer up Sacrifice first for his own sin, and then for the peoples, for this he did once, when he offered up himself. He needs not any solicitousness for himself as before the time of his Death; he hath nothing now to blemish his Happiness, and divert his affections from the concerns of his people. He hath no strong cryes now to put up for himself, all his Affections run in another Channel, his whole Soul is put to pawn in the business, as the word signifies in Jer. 30. 21. He hath engaged his heart to approach unto me, saith the Lord: He hath undertaken it with the greatest Cordialness of Spirit. His Expostulation speaks his earnestness of old; Zach. 1. 12. Oh Lord of Hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem? Like an expression we use, when we would rouze a drowsie person in a time of danger, and snatch him out of the fire; as if Christ thought the mercy of God too sleepy, and earnestly joggs it to awaken it, and spurs it on to manifest it self: how long wilt Thou, Thou who hast an Affection to the Captives, an Affection to me their Solicitor, thou who hast Mercy to pity them, and Power to rescue them; thou, who knowest that the set time of their captivity is at an end, and hast faithfulness to be as good as thy word? The Seventeenth of John is a Map of his carriage in Heaven, how he presses his Father for his people. When he pray'd for himself, 'tis, Father, If it be thy will, let this cup pass from me; 'tis then not as I will, but as thou wilt; but for his Disciples Glory and Salvation: 'Tis I will, v. 24. as though he were more a Judge than an Advocate; and had more a right to a Soveraign Dominion, than that of a Plea. * What did the Censer full of burning coals of fire from the Altar, which the High Priest was to carry carry within the vail into the Holy of Holies Levit. 16. 12, 13. repreſent; but the ardency of the Affections in the Soul of Chriſt, when he preſents the incenſe of our Prayers to his Father in Heaven? The Names of the Tribes of Iſrael were to be not only upon the High Prieſts Shoulders, Exod. 28. 12. but alſo upon his Breaſt-plate; v. 29 near his heart, when his face is towards them, and as near his heart, when in deſertion his back is turn'd upon them: They are next his Heart all the time he is in the Holy of Holies. Great Affections cannot be without earneſtneſs in their cauſe. He deſired not more earneſtly to be baptiz'd with his bloody Baptiſm on Earth, than to compleat all the fruits of it in Heaven: He was not more vehement to ſhed his Blood, than he is to plead it. No man is more ſolicitous to increaſe the Honour and Grandeur of his Family, than Chriſt is to ſecure the Happineſs of his People. Our Prayers for our ſelves, when tinctur'd with the greateſt Affection, cannot be ſo fervent as his pleas for our Souls are at the right hand of his Father; for to what purpoſe did he carry up thoſe Humane Affections to Heaven, but to expreſs and act them in their livelineſs and vigour for us, and to us?

7. He is a joyful and chearful Advocate: He hath not a ſowr kind of earneſtneſs, as is common among men, but an earneſtneſs with a joy, as being the delight of his heart. When he prayed in the Garden for himſelf, he was in an Agony; but in his Mediatory Prayer, a Model of his Interceſſion in Heaven, he was in a chearful frame, John 17. for it was his prayer after the moſt comfortable Sermon he ever preached to his Diſciples, wherein he had heaped up all the conſiderations that might be capable to elevate their hearts, and he makes this uſe of it in the end. John 16. 33. That they ſhould be of good chear at his victory, becauſe he hath overcome the World. And in this frame he puts up this Mediatory prayer immediately, to ſignifie to them both the matter and manner of his Interceſſions in heaven for them, and that he doth rejoyce in putting up theſe requeſts above, as well as he did when he preſented them at times before, as is intimated v. 13. Theſe things I ſpeak in the World, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themſelves; that they might have ſuch a joy in the conſiderations of it, and in the receiving thy favour, as I have in the petitioning for them. Certainly he doth as well rejoyce in the habitable parts of the Earth, ſince he hath laid ſo great an obligation upon it, as he did formerly in the proſpect of what he was to do for it. His Death was ſweet to him after his Reſurrection, the very remembrance of it was a pleaſure; in which ſence ſome underſtand that Jer. 31. 25, 26. I have ſatiated the weary Soul, and I have repleniſhed every ſorrowful Soul. Upon this I awakt and beheld and my ſleep was ſweet unto me. 'Tis certain ſome paſſages in that Chapter are applyed to Chriſt's time, as v. 15. the weeping at Ramah was a prædiction of the ſlaying of Infants by Herod. Mat. 2. 17, 18. And v. 22. the creating a new thing in the Earth, a Woman ſhall compaſs a Man, is generally underſtood of the Conception and Incarnation of Chriſt; and the expreſſion in v. 25. ſeems to be too magnificent to be underſtood of any other Prophet, than that in whom the weary find reſt; and the conſideration of the ſucceſs of his Incarnation and Paſſion make his ſleep, i. e. his Death pleaſant to him, at his awaking, or Reſurrection. His pleading therefore for the fruit of his Death cannot be bitter, or diſtaſtful to him; he delights as much in the exerciſe of this Office, as he did in the firſt undertaking of it, and conſecration to it; ſince he accounted his Prieſthood an honour, when God called him to it, he will not think it diſgraceful when his people own it, and deſire the exerciſe of it in their behalf.

8. He is an acceptable Advocate: He hath an active joy in his Interceſſion, a paſſive joy in his Acceptation. He is the favourite of the Court wherein he pleads, acceptable to the Judge in his perſon, acceptable to him in his Office, acceptable to him in the ſuits he manages: His Interceſſion is nothing elſe, but the preſenting to God the Sacrifice which reſtor'd to him the pleaſure of his Creation, gave him a reſt, and continues it. The ſavour of that Sacrifice in Heaven which was offered on Earth, is grateful to the Judge of the World; 'tis as ſweet to God as the Levitical Incenſe, the Type of it, can be to man, mention'd Exod. 30. 34, 35, 36. and reſerved for the ſervice of the Temple, a compoſition of the ſweeteſt and moſt aromatick ſimples. How much ſweeter is the Advocacy of Chriſt to God, than the moſt fragrant ſcents can be to us? In the preſence of God he meets with a fulneſs of joy, Pſal. 16. 11. Thou wilt ſhew me the paths of Life, and ſhew me in thy preſence a fulneſs of joy, and pleaſures at thy right hand for evermore. So Cocceius reads it. 'Tis to be underſtood of his Mediatory pleaſure; he hath in his being in the preſence of God, or appearing in the preſence of God for us Heb. 9. 24. You know that Pſalm is to beunderſtood of Chriſt, which is evidenced by v. 10. applyed to him Act. 2. 31. Act. 13. 35. Thou wilt ſhew me the path of Life, thou wilt bring me into Glory, as the Saviour of Man, and the Head of the believing World, of thoſe Saints, and excellent ones in whom my delight hath been; in this preſence I ſhall have fulneſs of Joy in the reflections upon my Obedience, and the plentiful effuſions of thy Grace upon the account of it. Pleaſures flow with a full and perpetual Torrent from the Right Hand of God, by the Mediation of Chriſt: 'Tis as if he ſhould have ſaid, I ſhall have a fulneſs of Joy after my bitter paſſion, in the contemplation of thy pleaſed countenance to the Sons of Men, and thy Right Hand ſhall communicate Spiritual Bleſſings upon the account of this Paſſion, which ſhall be the delight of my Soul; all this thou wilt ſhew me after my Reſurrection, to teſtifie how acceptable my Mediation hath been to thee. Since God conſtituted him a Prieſt by an irreverſible Oath, an Oath he would never repent of, Heb. 7. 21. and thereby confirmed him in an unchangeable Prieſthood, v. 24. as he hath an unchangeable Office, ſo he hath an endleſs acceptation; He that never will repent of fixing him in it, will never repent of his exerciſing of it. As God is infinitely pleaſed with this Office, ſo he is infinitely pleaſed with the execution of the charge; and the preſenting his Death for any Soul is unexpreſſibly grateful to the reconciled Judge. His Deity adds a value and efficacy to his Interceſſions in Heaven, as it did to his Paſſion on Earth.

9. He is the ſole Advocate. Thoſe of Rome diſtinguiſh between Mediators of Redemption, and Mediators of Interceſſion; the firſt they appropriate to Chriſt, in the other they make Angels and Saints his Companions, and thereby ſnatch the Glory from Chriſt to confer it upon a Creature: But ſince our High Prieſt alone hath the honour to ſit at the right hand of God, he alone hath the honour of this Office of Advocacy. To which of the Angels or Saints did he at any time ſay, ask of me, and I will give thee the Heathen for thine Inheritance? The Office and Power of asking belongs to him, who is the begotten Son. Since Chriſt trod the Wine-preſs alone, he ſolicits our cauſe alone, Interceſſion being founded upon propitiation; he therefore that is the ſole Propitiator, is the ſole Interceſſor: He only hath the right to plead for us, who had the right to purchaſe us. As God never gave any Commiſſion to redeem us to any other, ſo he never gave a Commiſſion to any other to appear for us in that Court. The entring into the Holy of Holies with the perfuming incenſe, was annex'd to the honour of the chief Prieſthood, which had any of the inferiour Prieſts, or any Soul alive uſurpt, they had incur'd the pains of Death. 'Tis a diſparagement to Chriſt to intereſt any Creature in it, as though he wanted ſome other Favourite to give him a full credit with the Father, and ſome Monitors to excite his Affections to us; or as though the ſuits he had to manage were ſo numerous, that he wanted a multitude of Clerks to draw up for him the Petitions he had to preſent. 'Tis our Saviours prerogative to be the firſt and the laſt; Revel. 1. 11. as he was the firſt that ſtept up to keep the World from periſhing by the hand of Juſtice, ſo he will be the laſt in ſecuring it; as he was the firſt in purchaſing, ſo he will be the laſt in compleating, that the whole work of Redemption may be aſcribed to him alone: As he is the ſole Author of it by his Paſſion, ſo he will be the ſole finiſher of it by his Interceſſion.

III. Thing. How Chriſt doth manage this Advocacy and Interceſſion.

In General. Chriſt as God eſſentially conſider'd, doth not intercede in Heaven. He that intercedes by way of Petition, wants the Bleſſing of that perſon he intercedes with, and in that reſpect, is inferiour to him. He nomore intercedes in Heaven as God, than he prayed on Earth as God. His Interceſſion as well as his Paſſion belongs indeed to his Perſon; and as his Deity is in perſonal Union with his Humanity, ſo his Prayers and Interceſſions may be called the Interceſſions of God, as well as his Blood was called the Blood of God. As the Humane Nature ſuffered, and the Divine Nature made it valuable, ſo the Humane Nature intercedes by way of Motion, and the Divine Nature makes it prevalent. The Perſon of the Son of God ſuffer'd, but only in the Humane Nature, the Divine not being paſſible; ſo may we not ſay the perſon of the Son of God intercedes, but the Humane Nature only ſupplicates? He is our Advocate as he was our propitiation.

may

1. Chriſt is not an Advocate in Heaven in ſuch a ſupplicating manner as he prayed in the World. This ſervile way of praying as they call it, becauſe it was perform'd by Chriſt in the form of a Servant, is not agreeable to his preſent glorious Eſtate. 'Tis as unſutable to his ſtate in Heaven, as his prayers with ſtrong cryes were ſutable to his condition on Earth: Such Prayers and Supplications, with ſtrong cryes and tears belong only to the days of his fleſh; Heb. 5. 7. i. e. his ſtate of Humiliation, wherein he was incompaſſed with the Infirmities of the Fleſh; but ſuch a poſture becomes him not in Heaven, where he is ſtript of all thoſe Natural Infirmities and marks of indigence. Though ſuch a kind of petitioning is not inconſiſtent with his Humanity as joined to his Divinity, and making one perſon, (if it were, he could not then have ſupplicated in the World as he did in the Garden; for his Humanity was joyned to his Divinity in that humbled, as well as in his exalted ſtate: He was God in the days of his Fleſh when he lived amongſt mortals, as well as now in the days of his Glory;) yet his praying with ſo deep a Humiliation as he did in this lower Region of the Earth, is inconſiſtent with his glorified ſtate in Heaven; for if the Glory of Heaven wipes tears from the eyes of the Members, it doth certainly from the eyes of the Head: Nor is it a ſupplication in the geſture of kneeling, for he is an Advocate at the right hand of God, where he is always expreſt as ſitting, and but once (as I remember) as ſtanding, and that was in the caſe of Stephen, Acts 7. 55. This ſome of the Fathers and others call a ſervile manner of praying, and ſay that it was not convenient for the Father to require it of Chriſt in his elevated ſtate, nor for the Son to perform it.

2. Yet it may be a kind of a Petition, an expreſſing his deſires in a ſupplicatory manner. Though he be a King upon his Throne, yet being ſetled in that Royal Authority by the Father, as his Delegate, he is in regard of that inferiour to the Father; and likewiſe in the Oeconomy of Mediator: And alſo as his Humane Nature is a Creature, he may be a Petitioner without any debaſement to himſelf, to that power, by whoſe Authority he is ſetled in his Dignity, conſtituted in his Mediatory Office, and was both made, and continues a Creature. Though God hath put all things under him, yet he did not put himſelf under him, but remains in his full Authority, 1 Cor. 15. 27. His Divine Nature in union with his Humane, is no argument againſt it, for then he ſhould not have petitioned on Earth: He was then the ſame perſon in his Diſguiſe that he is now in Glory. There are promiſes made to him which are not yet accompliſht, Enemies to be made his Foot-ſtool, which are not yet brought into that loweſt degree of ſubjection: Divine promiſes are to be turn'd into Petitions; The Heathen are promiſed to be his Inheritance, but asking, was order'd to præcede the performance. Pſal. 2. 8. שְׁאַל ſignifies to deſire and wiſh, as well as to ask. There are ſome things ſtill of want, though not in Chriſt perſonal, yet in Chriſt myſtical, till the Church be fully compleated. He is an High Prieſt in Heaven, and it is the Office of a High Prieſt to pray for thoſe for whom he hath offer'd the Sacrifice. Why ſhould asking by way of deſire or Petition, be more uncomely when there is yet ſomething of indigence, than praiſing after ſupplies which Chriſt doth in heaven; if we underſtand thoſe words of Chriſt, Pſal. 69. 30. I will praiſe the name of God with a ſong, and will magnifie him with thanksgiving, after he ſhould be ſet on high? and Pſal. 22. 25. My praiſe ſhall be of thee in the great Congregation, and I will pay my vows before them that fear him. Both which Pſalms, upon the peruſal you will find prophetick of Chriſt. And himſelf expreſſeth, that what he was to do in heaven for the accompliſhment of the promiſe of the Spirit which he had made to them, was to be by way of prayer; John 14. 16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter: He ſpeaks of an asking or praying, (for the word ſignifies both the one and other) not in this life, but after his Aſcenſion, for the firſt and neceſſary fruit of his Death, viz. the Comforter. He evidenceth hereby, that his Glory ſhould not cloud his Mercy, and the cares of their concerns; his Love ſhould be ſtronger than Death or Glory, and he would not reſt, till he had obtained of infinite goodneſs what was neceſſary for them: this he would do by way of asking, which inclines to a petitionary way when a boon is deſired.

3. 'Tis

3. 'Tis such a Petition as is in the nature of a claim and demand. 'Tis not a Petition for that which is at the liberty of the petitioned person to grant or refuse, but for that which the petitioner hath a right to by way of purchase, and the person petitioned to cannot in justice deny. An Advocate is an Officer in a Court of Judicature, demanding audience and sentence in a judicial way; so that this Intercession of Christ is not a bare precarious Intercession; * for as when he was in the World, he taught as one having Authority, and not as the Scribes; Mat. 7. 29. so in heaven he intercedes as one having Authority by virtue of his Mediatory power, and not as an ordinary Supplicant. He hath a right to demand; on Earth indeed he had only promises of assistance to put in suit, but in Heaven he pleads the conditions perform'd on his part, upon which the promises made to Christ become due to him. 'Tis now, Father, I have glorified thee upon the Earth, now glorifie me with thy own self; John 17. 4, 5. He pleads for his people as they are the gift of his Father, and as they have received his words, v. 8. he pleads his own Commission as one sent, v. 23. he minds the Father of the Covenant between them both, as God gave him a command what he should do in the World, which was no other but an injunction to perform those conditions which had been agreed upon, and that will of God expresst in the Covenant of Redemption, which is called the will of God. Heb. 10. 7. Christ having done this will, mediates for the performance of the conditions, God was bound to by this Covenant, and claimes the performance of them jure pacti, as a Debt due to his meritorious obedience on the Cross; so that it is not a desire only in a way of Charity, but a claim in a way of Justice, by virtue of meriting, and a demand of the performance of the promise. There were promises made by God to Christ as our Head and Representative before the World began; Tit. 1. 1, 2. and 2 Tim. 1. 9. when he was fore-ordained to suffering, 1 Pet. 1. 20. Eternal Life was promised before the World began; to whom could this promise of so long a date be made? not to any Creature, since it was before any Creature had a being; therefore to Christ, not for himself who was the Eternal Son of God. This Promise, and this Grace given us in Christ, he sues out by his Intercession as a Feoffee in trust for us; and it being added which God that cannot lye promised, gives us an intimation of the manner of Christ's pleading, in calling the Truth of God to witness the validity of the promise which he pleads. It seems to be in an expostulatory manner, as we find it before his Incarnation; Zach. 1. 12. How long Lord? which was upon the account of his future Incarnation; for which reason he that is called the Angel, v. 12. who was the Angel of the Covenant, is called the man, v. 10. So the expostulation of Elias with God is called particularly Intercession. Rom. 11. 2. And Revel. 3. 5. intimates it by way of claim, He that overcomes, I will confess his name before my Father, I will confess him plainly and clearly, and claim him as one that belongs to me. His Advocacy for us is a confession of our interest in him, our owning of him; by virtue of which confession or claim we are set right in the Court of God, as those for whom he hath shed his Blood.

* Maref. contra Volkel lib. 3. Cap. 38. p. 378.

ἐξομολογήσομαι.

4. This Intercessory demand or asking is accompanied with a presenting the memorials of his Death. 'Tis a commemoration of the Sacrifice which he offered on Earth for our expiation, and the whole power of Intercession with the prevalency of it is wholly upon this foundation: 'tis a presenting the efficacy of his Death, the virtue of his Blood, the pleasure of God in the Sacrifice offered by him. 'Tis by the displaying the whole merit of his passion that he doth solicit for us. Intercession is not properly a sacerdotal act without respect to the Sacrifice: It was with the Blood of the Sacrifice that the High Priest was to enter into the Holy of Holies, and sprinkle it there: The same Blood that had been shed without on the day of Expiation, was to be carryed within the vail: What was done typically, Christ doth really; first give himself a Sacrifice, and then present himself as the Sacrifice for us. The Apostle shows us the manner of it, Heb. 12. 24. the Blood of Christ is a speaking Blood, as well as the blood of Abel; * It speaks in the same manner as Abels blood did, though not for the same end. As the Blood of Abel presenting it self before the eyes of God, was as powerful to draw down the vengeance of God, as if it had utter'd a cry as loud as to reach to Heaven; so the Blood of Christ being presented before the Throne of God, powerfully excites the favour of God by the loudness of its cry. He speaks by

* Daille sur le desert d' Esprit Sirm. 1. 462.

by his Blood, and his Blood ſpeaks by its merit: The petitions of his Lips had done us no good without the voice of his Blood. He ſtands as a Lamb ſlain, when he preſents the prayers of the Saints, Revel. 5.6,8. with his bleeding wounds open as ſo many mouths full of pleas for us, and every one of them is the memorial and mark of the things which he ſuffered, and for what end he ſuffered them; as the wounds of a Souldier received in the defence, and for the honour of his Country, diſplayed to perſons ſenſible of them, are the loudeſt and beſt pleas for the grant of his requeſt. If the party colour'd Rainbow being looked upon by God, minds him of his Covenant not to deſtroy the World again by a Deluge; Gen. 9. 14, 15, 16. much more are the Wounds which Chriſt bears both in his hands, feet, and ſide, remembrancers to him of the Covenant of Grace made with repenting and believing ſinners. The look of God upon thoſe Wounds whereby ſo great an Oblation is remembred, doth as efficaciouſly move him to look kindly upon us, as the look upon the Rainbow diſpoſeth him to the continuance of the World. If our Saviour had not a mouth to ſpeak, he hath blood to plead, and his blood cryes louder in Heaven for us, than his voice did in any of the prayers he uttered upon Earth; for by this his performance of the Articles on his part is manifeſted, and the performance of the promiſes on Gods part ſolicited; when he ſees what the Redeemer hath done, he reflects upon what himſelf is to do; the blood of Chriſt ſpeaks the tenor of the Covenant of Redemption made with Chriſt on the behalf of ſinners.

5. 'Tis a preſenting our Perſons to God together with his blood in an affectionate manner: As the High Prieſt when he went into the Holy of Holies was to bear the names of the Children of Iſrael in the Breaſt-plate of Judgment upon his heart; Exod. 28. 29. to which the Church alludes in her deſire that ſhe might be ſet as a ſeal upon the heart of her Beloved, Cant. 8.6. and perhaps an alluſion may be alſo in Revel. 3. 5. confeſſing the names of the victorious ſufferers before his Father, bearing their names viſibly before him. The perſons of Believers are his Jewels lockt up in the Cabinet of his own Breaſt, and ſhew'd to his Father in the exerciſe of his Prieſtly Office.

IV. The Fourth thing. That Chriſt doth perpetually manage this Office.

The firſt evidence is in the Text, we have an Advocate, we have at this preſent, we have an Advocate actually remembring us in his thoughts, and preſenting us to his Father; we in this Age, we in all Ages, till the Diſſolution of the World; without any faintneſs in the degrees of his Interceſſion, without any interruption in time; he never ceaſes the exerciſe of this Office, ſo far as it is agreeable to that high and elevated ſtate wherein he is. As there are continual ſins of Believers in all ages of the World, ſo there are conſtant pleas of the Advocate. This Epiſtle was written many years after the Aſcenſion of Chriſt; ſome think in the time of John's Baniſhment in the Iſle of Patmos, ſome think after; yet at that time he owns himſelf to have a ſhare in the benefit of this Interceſſion. The term we is incluſive of himſelf; Chriſt is an Interceſſor for us in the whole courſe of our Pilgrimage, all the time that we have any need of him; his voice is the ſame ſtill, I will that they behold my Glory which thou haſt given me, till they are wafted from hence to a full viſion of it. This is the true end of his heavenly life, and his living for ever there; Heb. 7. 25. Seeing he ever lives to make Interceſſion for them; he lives ſolely to this purpoſe to diſcharge this part of his Prieſthood for us. His Advocacy is like his life without end; as he dyed once to merit our Redemption, ſo he lives always to make application of Redemption. He would not anſwer the end of his Life, if he did not exerciſe the Office of his Prieſthood. It would not be a love like that of a God, if he did not bear his people continually upon his heart. He was the Author of our Faith by enduring the Croſs, and the finiſher of our Faith, by ſitting down at the right hand of God. Heb. 12. 2. He will be exercis'd in it as long as there is any Faith to be finiſhed and compleated in the World. His Oblation was a tranſient act, but his appearance in heaven for us is a permanent act, and continues for ever. His Mediatory Glory is not conſummate, though his perſonal be: He hath yet a myſtical ſelf to be perfected, a fulneſs to be inriched with; he cannot be intent upon this without minding the concerns of, and putting up pleas for his people, people, for they are one with him, the fulness of him that fills all in all, Eph. 1. 23. There can be no cessation of his work, till his Enemies be conquered, and his whole mystical body wrapt up in glory. If he had finished this part of his function, we should have had him here again before this time with all his train of Angels, to put an end to the present state of things; as the high priest staid no longer in the Holy of Holies than was necessary for the atoning their sins, expecting the felicity of an acceptation, that he might bring the welcom news of it to the people that waited without. As soon as he hath reduced all the Elect to an happy state, he will come again, for the Heavens receive him only till the restitution of all things is compleated, Acts 3. 21. and then he shall come with a shout, 1 Thess. 4. 16. all the Angels in heaven triumphing and applauding the accomplishment of Redemption.

'Tis necessary it should be so.

1. Because 'tis founded upon his death. As his oblation is of eternal efficacy, so his Advocacy hath an Everlasting virtue. 'Tis an Eternal Redemption, Heb. 9. 12. and therefore an Eternal Intercession. This the Apostle signifies in the Text by arguing from his propitiation to his Advocacy: He is at present an Advocate with an uninterrupted plea, because he is at present a propitiation in the efficacy of his passion. There was an end of his actual suffering when he expir'd, but no end of the vertue of his sacrifice, and therefore no end of his Intercession, which depended not upon his death simply considered, but upon the value of it: 'tis in the vertue of this he pleads; since the vertue of his bloud is perpetual, the plea grounded upon that vertue, and which is nothing but the voice of his bloud, is of the same duration. There can be no end of the Intercession of his person, till there be an exhausting of the merits of his death, the one must fail in its strength before the other cease in its plea: His blood must be a speechless bloud before he can be a silent Advocate. As the continual sacrifice Typified the continual vertue of the Redeemers death, so the perpetual burning incense signified the perpetuity of his Intercession; and no less was signified by the sprinkling the bloud of the sacrifice upon the Mercy-Seat, which was not wipt off but stuck there, as a visible mark, and remained as a continual sollicitor for the continuance of grace and favour to the people.

2. The exercise of this office must be as durable as the office it self. His Priesthood is for ever, therefore the act belonging to his Priesthood is for ever. He was more particularly constituted an high Priest after the order of Melchisedeck, when he entered into heaven as a forerunner for us, Heb. 6. 20. where he abides an high Priest continually Heb. 7. 3. made so not after the Law of a carnal command, or a command to be abrogated, but after the power of endless Life, verse 15, 16. and confirmed by the oath of God a Priest for ever, ver. 21. and therefore exerciseth his function of a Priest for ever: Not of sacrificing himself, because he lives for ever, and cannot dye again, but of interceding, since no other act belonging to the Priesthood can be exercised in that glorious and endless state he hath in heaven, but this of intercession, which must be without intermission, because 'tis the only act of that office which he can perform. 'Tis not said he is a man for ever, but a Priest for ever, which is a name of an office, and implies an exercise of the office. He is not called a Priest for ever in regard of his Life, but in regard of his function for which he lives: His mouth cannot be stopt by God, because he was constituted by the irreversible oath of God. God cannot deny himself, and destroy his own solemn act. He is a Priest for ever without Repentance on Gods part he must therefore perpetually mind his office, the neglect of it else would cause Repentance in God for exalting him to so high a dignity, and be a reflection upon divine wisdom, to settle one in this excellent place that were too weak for it, or too careless in it, that should bear only the title and neglect the work; it would be a cause of Repentance in God at the expending so much grace to no purpose. This Advocate as he bears the name of Priest, so he appeared clothed with a Priestly Robe. Rev. 1. 13. He had a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle, which was the habit of the High Priest under the Law. As he is an everlasting Priest, so he manages an everliving intercession; he was too faithful in discharging his part on Earth to be negligent of performing his office in heaven; he did not imbrace so great an honour to be idle in it, and neglect the work and duty that his place call'd for.

3. This was both the reason and end of his advancement. The intercession he made for transgressors was one reason why God would divide him a portion with the great, Isaiah 53. 12. because he made intercession for the transgressors; this is alledged as one reason [among others there mentioned] of his glorious exaltation, which intercession is most evident to us in his last prayer, John 17. wherein he prays for all that should believe on him; and also upon the Cross when he prays for his murderers, Father forgive them for they know not what they do, Luke 23. 34. An act so pleasing to God, as to be the motive to give him the division of the spoil of the strong, cannot but be perpetual. Will Christ who always did what was pleasing to God on Earth, discontinue that which is so delightful to the bowels of his Mercy? He cannot look upon his own glory, the Robe he wears, the Throne he sits on, the Enemies prostrate at his feet, but he must reflect upon the reason of his present state, and be excited to a redoubling his solicitations for his people. He would be no longer glorious than he were an Advocate. The superstructure cannot stand when the foundation moulders. Since he was anointed with the Oyl of gladness above his fellows, because he loved Righteousness and hated iniquity, he cannot be unmindful of promoting the destruction of the one, and the perfection of the other. A perpetual action will be the result of these perpetual qualities; and being anointed a Priest for these qualities, he will act as a Priest for the glory of them, which can be no other way but by intercession. It was the end of his advancement, Heb. 10. 12. But this man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God. The Antithesis is made between him and the legal Priests, they stood at the Altar every day offering the same sacrifices, but this, not man as it is in our Translation, but rather to be supplyed with Priest, this Priest having finished his part on Earth, sat down for ever, viz. as a Priest on the right hand of God, and never leaves the place: Other priests stood as not having finished their sacrificing work, but were to repeat it again. This priest sits as having finished his sacrificing function, and having attained the glory due to his person. His sitting down is not mentioned only as a point of honour, but of office; he sat down as one that had offer'd a compleat sacrifice in the nature of a priest, and sat down for ever to exercise his priesthood at the right hand of God; this verse compar'd with the other would not else have a full sense; and the words following second it, verse 13. he sat down expecting till his enemies be made his foot stool, expecting the full fruits of that sacrifice in the compleat subjection of his Enemies, and consequently the full felicity of himself and his Friends; and all this time of expectation he is suing out the promise of God to him, asking that inheritance which was assured him in the Covenant between them, Psal. 2. 8. This is the reason of his sitting down for ever to exercise his Priesthood for ever in the presence of the King and Judge of all the Earth. He is always in the presence of his Father in the dignity of his person, and fulness of his merit, continually spreading every part of his meritorious sacrifice in the view of God. The high Priest entered into the Holy of Holies but once a year, but this high Priest sits for ever in the Court in a perpetual exercise of his function, both as a Priest and a sacrifice. And since his own sacrifice for sins offer'd on Earth was sufficient, he hath nothing to do perpetually in heaven, but to sprinkle the bloud of that sacrifice upon the Mercy-Seat. He is never out of the presence of God, and the infiniteness of his compassions may hinder us from imagining a silence in him, when any accusations are brought in against us. The accusations might succeed well were he out of the way; but being always present, he is always active in his sollicitations; no clamour can come against us, but he hears it, as being on the right hand of his Father, and appears as our Attorney there in the presence of God to answer it, as the high Priest appear'd in the Holy of Holies for all the people.

V. Thing is, the efficacy of this Intercession. The efficacy of it is implyed in the text, both in the person of our Advocate Jesus Christ, in his quality, Righteous, in regard of the work he had wrought on Earth Propitiation, in the object of his intercession, tercession, and the place with the Father; he is an Advocate to the Father, not only to him at a distance, but with him; the constant presence of a favourite with a King, of a Princely Son with a Royal Father is a means to make his intercessions of force with him; he is an Advocate, and he is constantly with the Father in that capacity. A Letter from a Friend is not so successful as a personal appearance for gaining a suit. If his death were meritorious, his prayer must be so too, as being put up in the virtue of his meritorious bloud; and though we are reconcil'd by his death, yet we are saved by his Life, with a much more, Rom. 5. 10. not formally in regard of merit, for that was the effect of his death, but in regard of application of that merit, the end for which he lives, to render it efficacious to us, as it had been in his passion valuable for us. If he separated himself to death to procure it, he will employ the authority and dignity of his Life to finish and apply it. As none offered so noble a sacrifice, so none lives a more powerful Life. As when he was on Earth never man spake as he spake; so now he is in Heaven, never did any man or Angel plead as he pleads. If whatsoever we ask in his name, we shall receive, John 16. 23. surely whatsoever he asks in his own name, will not be refus'd.

1. This was Typified *. The strength of his Mediation was signified by the horns, ordered by a special precept to be made upon the four corners of the Altar of Burnt-offerings, Exod. 27. 2. and also upon the Altar of innocence, Exod. 30. 2. As the brazen Altar signified the strength of his death, so the golden Altar signified the excellency of his Intercession, horns in Scripture being an emblem of strength, power and dignity. And perhaps his feet of brass wherewith he is described, Revel. 1. 15. when he appears to John in a Priestly garb, signifies his irresistible standing before God in the exercise of that office. Much more may it be said of him as it was of Jacob, Gen. 32. 28. as a Prince he hath power with God, by his death and Intercession, as well as power with men by his Spirit, and prevailes in all when he pleases.

* Lightfoot Temple cap. 34. p. 198, 199.

2. 'Twas Propheſied of Christ, Psal. 21. 2. Thou hast given him his hearts desire, and hast not withholden the request of his Lips. This Psalm seems to be a Comment upon part of the second Psalm, or rather a Dialogue between Christ and the Father, Christ speaking verse 1. and the Father promising him a full victory, verse. 8. which is a prophetical Triumph of the Church after the victory gained by the passion of Christ. And of the Messiah the Chaldee, and some of the Jews understand it. The expressions in the Psalm are many of them too illustrious to be meant of David, as verse 4. length of days for ever and ever, which cannot be understood of David in his Royalty as a mortal man. God had given Christ the right of asking, and grants him whatsoever he asks, he bestows upon him whatsoever he desires, and refuseth nothing that he sues for. The good of his people is the desire of his heart, and the request of his lips, and nothing is refused that his heart wishes, and his lips move for. This of the efficacy of his Intercession is the Salvation he rejoyces in, the pleasing and favourable countenance of God is that which makes him exceeding glad. He would have little content in the rest of his glory without this power of prevalency with his Father. Since his Intercession for his Church is for his own mystical Glory, it must be successful, or his own Glory would be in part defective, since it is linkt with that of his Church which is yet behind. As Christ glorified the Father, so the Father is reciprocally to Glorifie the Son, John 17. 4, 5. which is by giving him a power of asking and engaging himself to a facility of granting. A promise of granting was annext to the command of asking. Psal. 2. 8. I will give; he should not be so ready to request as the Father would be liberal to bestow. He was promised a mighty encouragement, till he had set judgment in the Earth, and wrought a perfect deliverance for his people, Isaiah 42. 4. It is to this Contrite Person, that he would look perpetually favourably, Isaiah 66. 1, 2. 'Tis that person by whom the Ceremonial Law was to be torn in pieces to whom God promised to look.

3. God never denyed him any request which he put up upon the Earth for the Divine Glory, and his peoples good, and Christ himself acknowledges it, Joh. 11. 42. I know that thou hearest me always. He did but groan in his Spirit without moving his Lips; v. 38. and how soon did his groans rise into Hallelujahs, v. 41. Father, I thank thee thee that thou haſt heard me; as ſoon as ever he ſighed he had an occaſion of praiſe. He was heard in all his Petitions in the World, Heb. 5. 7. εἰσακουσθείς, heard to purpoſe, while he was in the days of his fleſh encompaſſed and preſſed with the Infirmities of our Nature; much more will he be heard in the days of his Glory. He was not indeed heard for himſelf at the time of his ſuffering, ſo as to have what he beg'd formally granted; for in that prophetick Pſalm, Pſal. 22. 3. he complains that he had cryed all the day, and God heard him not; his prayer that the Cup might paſs from him was in ſpecie denyed him; that prayer proceeded from a natural fear and horrour of an accurſed death as he was Man, and is therefore ſaid to be in the days of his fleſh, when he had our natural Infirmities about him; which was not alſo an abſolute deſire, but conditional, if it were poſſible, i. e. if it were not prejudicial to the Glory of God, and the Salvation of his people; yet in this alſo he was heard; for though he was not delivered from Death, he was ſupported in it; the Death was to be ſuffered, and yet to be conquered; and afterwards his bloody Paſſion was changed into a Spiritual and Glorious Life by a Reſurrection. He was heard ἀπὸ εὐλαβείας, a deliverance from his fears and horrors was granted that he might with courage proceed on in his ſuffering. Chriſt ſometimes prayed as Mediator, and for things in order to his Mediatory work; as when he prayed for the raiſing of Lazarus, that by ſo great a miracle his Doctrine might be propagated, and the Faith of his Diſciples ſtrengthned: John 11. 40, 42. It was for the Glory of God and that they might believe that God had ſent him. In this Chriſt was never in the leaſt denyed, and to this, that ſpeech of his ſucceſs, Thou heareſt me always, refers. He utters this confidence and aſſurance in the hearing of the people, that they may believe that thou haſt ſent me. Thou heareſt me always, when what I deſire tends to the propagation of the Goſpel Doctrine, and the faith and advantage of that people to whom, and for whom thou haſt ſent me. But in thoſe prayers he puts up from humane affections, and the innocent inclinations of Nature, as that in the Garden which he put up from a humane ſence, yet with a condition; and that upon the Croſs, which he puts up as a man ſubject to the laws of charity, though he was not formally anſwered, yet he was not abſolutely denyed, becauſe he did not abſolutely beg, but with a condition expreſt, or implyed. It was not poſſible that Cup ſhould paſs away from him according to the determination of things, and the predictions of the Prophets, without a manifeſt alteration of purpoſe in God, breach of his Word, and the utter ruin and devaſtation of mankind. And for that prayer upon the Croſs, Luke 23. 34. Father forgive them, they know not what they do; a condition is implyed, viz. if they did repent and believe. It cannot be ſuppos'd that he prayed for their Pardon without their Repentance, whither they repented and believed, or no; and indeed the motive that he urgeth implies a condition, They know not what they do, implying that when they came to be ſenſible, and to know with an inward penitent practical knowledge what they had done, that they had crucified the Lord of Life, God would pardon them; which without doubt he would, according to the tenor of his own promiſe: But to conſider rightly that petition of his in the Garden, the refuſing his requeſt upon the account of the impoſſibility of the paſſing away of the Cup, doth ſtrongly conclude the efficacy of his Interceſſion in heaven. The reaſon why he was not anſwer'd, was, becauſe ſuch a grant had been inconſiſtent with the redemption of his people; and upon the ſame reaſon he will be anſwer'd in every ſuit in heaven, becauſe he doth every thing purſuant to the redemption, and full felicity of Believers. He intercedes not there as he prayed ſometimes on Earth, as a Man, but as a Mediator: If any thing were denyed him on Earth, becauſe the refuſal conduc'd to the advantage of his Elect, it neceſſarily follows, that he will have all things granted him in heaven, which are for the Glory of God, the Happineſs of his people, and the fulneſs of their Redemption. The ſame reaſon God hath now to allow his pleas, which before he had to refuſe them. The neceſſity of his Death for Redemption was the cauſe of the refuſal; the accompliſhment of Redemption, which is that he now intercedes for, cannot be denyed him upon the ſame account, but he will always carry the cauſe he ſues for. As to that petition upon the Croſs he was anſwered in it; many of thoſe whoſe hands were red with his Blood, had their hearts afterwards filled with repentance, and their heads crown'd with pardon; and if his prayer upon the Croſs was ſo efficacious for ſome of his bloody Perſecutors, ſhall it have leſs force in Heaven for his affectionate friends, ſince it is for thoſe that believe, and not for the World that he there intercedes? Joh. 17.9. If he were heard always as himſelf aſſerts, before he had offered that Sacrifice; much more in Heaven, ſince he hath compleated it, and is now ſueing out his own right, after he hath paid God his. If his Prayers were ſo prevalent here, before he had accompliſht his task of ſuffering; his interceſſion is much more prevalent above, ſince his ſufferings are at an end which are the ground of his Interceſſion.

and

Now this Interceſſion muſt needs be efficacious, If you conſider

(1.) His Perſon.

[1.] The greatneſs of it, a Perſon in the form of God, infinitely more excellent than all the Tribes of Angels; a Perſon ſo great, that all the Creatures in Heaven and Earth, and Millions of Worlds cannot equal him, they being leſs to him than a grain of ſand to the glorious Sun. It cannot be ſaid of all Creatures that ever were made, or of all that ever God can make, that in them all dwells the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily; as it is ſaid of Chriſt. Coloſ. 2. 9. He is not as the higheſt Angel that muſt cover his face, and ſtand before the Throne, but the man, Gods fellow, ſitting upon the Throne with him. Zach. 13. 7. Applyed to Chriſt, Mat. 26. 31. He is equal with God, and therefore cannot be refuſed by God. As his Divine Nature gave value to his ſatisfaction, ſo it gives efficacy to his interceſſion. His agonies in the Garden, and his gaſpings upon the Croſs were rendred by the greatneſs of his Perſon mighty to reconcile us, and by the ſame, his pleas in heaven are rendred ſucceſsful to ſave us. His Humanity being in conjunction with his Divinity, is the Inſtrument that receives all its virtue from the Deity. Though he doth not intercede with God, as himſelf is God, becauſe in that reſpect he is equal with God, but as Mediator in his humane Nature, yet his Interceſſion as Man receives a Power and Dignity from him as God, which cauſes the prevalency of it. What there was of Humility and Supplication in his Prayers upon Earth, proceeded from his humane Nature: What there was of Authority and Efficacy in his Mediatory interpoſitions, proceeded from his Divine Nature. He was bound to dye as he was Man, taking upon him our ſins; he had a right to have his Death accepted, as he was God aſſuming and ſuſtaining our Nature. 'Tis a priviledge due to the greatneſs of his perſon to have his ſuit granted, as it is his duty as the High Prieſt of his Church to preſent it in the Holy of Holies. The infinite worth of his Prayers reſults from his Divine Nature, as well as the infinite worth of his Paſſion, and being the interceſſions of a Divine Perſon, they are as powerful, as his ſufferings were meritorious. In regard of this greatneſs of his perſon, God ſeems to ſtand in an admiring poſture, at the approach of Chriſt to him, Jer. 30. 21. Who is this that hath engaged his heart to approach unto me! and preſently the decree paſſes out for the confirming the fruits of his mediation in the fulleſt manner, v. 22. and ye ſhall be my people, and I will be your God, taking them as his own propriety, and giving himſelf to them as their portion: Nothing can be denyed to ſo great a perſon. We know the ſuits of Princes meet with greater ſucceſs than thoſe of Peaſants. In the ſame capacity that Chriſt performed his Oblation, he manages his Interceſſion; it was through the Eternal Spirit, the ſtrength of his Deity he offered up himſelf to God; and ſo through the Eternal Spirit, the ſtrength of his Deity he preſents his ſupplications to God.

2. His near relation to the Father. As there was to be a reſpect to him in regard of the greatneſs of his perſon, ſo there was an affection due to him in regard of the nearneſs of his Relation. 'Tis againſt the rules of Juſtice to deny him his requeſts, becauſe of his Obedience, and againſt the rules of Goodneſs to deny him his reſpects becauſe of his allyance. As he was from Eternity begotten by the Father and his particular delight, his perſon cannot but be very acceptable to God. 'Tis upon this Relation his Conſecration to his Eternal Prieſthood is founded, which he exerciſeth in this adminiſtration. Heb. 7. 28. The word of the Oath makes the Son, i. e. Prieſt, who is conſecrated for evermore. Upon the account of this relation he had the power of asking, and the priviledge of obtaining Pſal. 2. 7, 8. Thou art my Son, ask of me, 'tis this relation enters thee into this Honour and Glory; this prerogative had not been granted but as thou art my Son; and when he went into Heaven to appear in the preſence of God for us, he was entertain'd as a Son-Prieſt; not only as a Prieſt in relation to us, but as a Son in relation to his Father; Heb. 4. 14. We have a great High Prieſt that is paſſed into the Heavens, Jeſus the Son of God; and the Text implies that he manages his Advocacy in Heaven with God as a Father, rather than with God as a Judge, Advocate with the Father. He appeals to God in Heaven under the Title of a Father, as God conſidered him in all his expreſſions to him in the World as his Son; This is my Son in whom I am well pleaſed, this is my Son, hear him; carrying himſelf in all ways of paternal tenderneſs to him while he was upon Earth, which cannot but be as ſtrong now he is in Heaven; he always conſidered him in the capacity of his Son, as well as our Surety. As Chriſt was placed in this Office as a Son, ſo he doth manage it as a Son, in the ſame capacity he was placed in this Function, he doth exerciſe this Office. Now what can render his interceſſion more efficacious than his relation? If Moſes a man could ſcreen a people from Divine anger, and cool the Wrath of a provoked God by interpoſing between God and the Offenders; ſo that God ſhould ſay to him, Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot againſt this people, and I may conſume them at once. Exod. 32. 10. and when Moſes would not ſilence his cry, God at length would ſilence his wrath, v. 14. If Moſes, who was dignified only with a glorious Title of his Friend, with whom he ſpake face to face, had ſo great a power, how forcible muſt be the interpoſition of that perſon, who hath the more Illuſtrious Title of that of his Son? What ſuit can be caſt out of the Court that is preſented by a beloved Son, of whom he hath ſignally pronounced that in him he is well pleaſed, and well pleaſed with whatſoever he doth? Denyals would be an argument of diſpleaſure, not of a well pleaſedneſs; it would then be a Son with whom I am diſpleaſed, if any plea he makes be rejected as invalid. To whom ſhould he grant any thing if he refuſed his Son, and his Son upon the ſame Throne with himſelf, and put a ſlur upon him in the face of the whole hoſt of Heaven? If an Earthly Father knows how to give good gifts to his Children that ask him, a Heavenly Father doth much more, and moſt of all to an only begotten, and only beloved Son, for whoſe ſake he loves all his other Children, 'Tis a conſideration that diſcovers the ſincerity and tenderneſs of Divine Mercy. Had not God intended to hear him in all his requeſts for us, he would never have appointed one ſo nearly allyed to him to plead our cauſe; one that he could not deny without ſome diſhonour to ſo near a relation, and a reflection upon his own affection, as he might have done to ſome inferiour perſon: God would not love his Son according to his own greatneſs, if he did not expreſs it in the moſt ſignal marks of his favour.

[3.] The ſpecial love God bears to his perſon for what he hath done in the Earth, and doth yet in Heaven. Could there have been any increaſe of the Fatherly affections to him, his perſon had been more endear'd to God after he had perform'd ſo exact an Obedience; after he had triumphed over the Enemies of his Fathers honour, he might challenge as a reward the moſt ſpritely ſparklings of his Fathers affection. What could hinder the grant of his Suit, when the flames of that wrath in his Fathers Breaſt, which was an hindrance to any requeſt, were quencht? Since Juſtice was ſilenced, no other voice could be heard but that of tenderneſs and love, which was the ſpring of that power he gave him after his conflict, power in Heaven, as well as in Earth, Matth. 28. 18: which may comprehend a power with God, as well as a power over Angels; a power with God, not over God. Though the relation of a Son be endearing, yet, when the quality of Obedience is added to the dearneſs of that relation, it enlarges and inflames paternal affection, and renders the Father more inclinable to grant any requeſt that is made to him by ſuch a perſon; as a King will liſten more to the petitions of a Son who hath done him ſignal ſervice, and brought by his atchievements a renown and honour to his Name and Government, than to a Son barely in the relation of a Child, without teſtifying the ſame Affection and Obedience in ſuch eminent enterpriſes. If the Father had ſo ſpecial a care of Chriſt in the management of his Office in the World, as to uphold him in his arms, * and ſupport him in the depth of his Miſery; much more de-delight hath he in him now in heaven, since he hath brought that honour to him, that no created Men or Angels were ever capable to offer him. He will not be insensible of so great an obedience, or stain that glory he hath given him for it, by denying any thing he presents to him. How can God express a greater affection to him, than by committing the government of the World, into his hands? And as the Apostle argues in our case, Rom. 8, 32. from his delivery of his Son up for us to an assurance of the free gift of all things else, so it may in this, since he hath put the Scepter for a time, into his hands, and from a boundless affection invested him in the Government of the World, how shall he refuse him any thing in the confines of it; since he hath during this state of things committed all judgment and power or rule to him? John 5. 22. If his Intercession upon Earth for Transgressors was a motive to God to clothe him with so great a glory, as hath been before mentioned from Isaiah 53. 12. his Intercession in heaven (every way as delightful to him) would excite him to confer a greater glory on him, were it possible for him to be elevated to a Throne of a higher pitch. The one hath as mighty an influence upon his affections as the other, and there is the same reason of both. There is an intimate union and an affectionate communion between the Father and the Son in heaven in regard of this Advocacy. Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father in me, John 14. 11. which he speaks upon a discourse of his Ascension, verse 2, 3. and to encourage them, to ask in his name after his going to the Father, verse 13. Believers have not only an Advocate with the Father for them, but the person that was offended is now united to them in their Advocate by an indissoluble league and communion and unalterable affection. And as whatsoever we ask in his name, should be that the Father might be glorifyed in the Son, verse 13. So whatsoever Christ sues for is for the same end, which must needs in the very act of it fix him more strongly in that affection, which was due to him upon the account of his Eternal Allyance and his unspotted obedience.

2. It must needs be efficacious in regard of the pleas themselves, the matter of them.

1. The matter of his plea is Holy. 'Tis as was said, that the Father might be glorifyed in the Son in regard of his Holiness and Righteousness, and 'tis included in the Text, by the Epithete Righteous, Jesus Christ the Righteous, Righteous in his person, Righteous in his Office as an Advocate, both in the pleas he makes, and the manner of managing them. He is holy, and harmless, and undefiled as an High Priest, Heb. 7. 26. All his petitions are as himself, unspotted, his suit is as holy as his Nature; if there be no guile in his mouth, there can be no iniquity in his plea. Our prayers are of themselves rejected because of their impurity, Christs Intercession is accepted because of its perfection. If a sinful Jacob prevail'd with God, much more must a perfectly holy Jesus, presenting nothing to God but what is becoming the purity and mercifulness of his own Nature to grant. If his blood were without blemish, 1 Pet. 1. 19. his Intercession must be without spot, because the one is the sole Foundation of the other.

[2.] 'Tis nothing but what he hath merited. He doth not desire as a bare supplicant, but pleads in a way of Right and Justice. What he sues for is due to him from Gods Truth because of his promise, and from Gods Righteousness because of his merit. So that his suit is put up ratione meriti, ratione juris, he intercedes for no more than he hath purchased, and may demand as a due debt. 'Tis necessary God should render what he owes unto that person that hath merited of him, he would be unrighteous if he did not, or put a note of insufficiency upon the sufferings of his Son. What he pleads for in Heaven, is nothing but what he sued for on Earth, John 17. 4, 5. upon the account of his glorifying his Father, i. e., rendring to him what was due by agreement between them; no doubt but the same argument is used by him in Heaven, the matter of his plea is what he hath merited, viz. pardon of sin, sanctification, continuance of Justification, all which he sued for in that chapter. The Father hath acknowledged it already a just demand, for by his raising him from the dead, he hath given his approbation of all the acts of his life, not only to his death whereby he merited, but to his prayers whereby he supplicated for those things which he now solicites for in heaven upon the account of the glory he did by his incarnation and paſſion bring to God. No plea can prevail againſt him, ſince he hath conquered his Enemies, wipt out the guilt of ſin by his ſacrifice, condemned ſin in the Fleſh, led Captivity Captive, and all this not by a meer ſtrength but by a legal right, having ſatisfyed the rigors of the Law, prevail'd at the Tribunal of Juſtice, (which was the ſharpeſt tug and hardeſt conqueſt) all which God hath ſubſcribed to, by ſetting him at his right hand far above Principalities and Powers, Eph. 4. 8. Yet in as legal a way as he merited it, he might ſue out the fruits of his merit. Shall he not much more prevail at the Throne of Grace by his Interceſſion, ſince the mouth of Juſtice, which gave Life and Strength to all ſuits againſt us, is perfectly ſtopt by the merit of his death? It hath nothing to except againſt the iſſues of mercy upon the perpetual pleading of that merit; what he doth ſue for is rather ſhort of, than outweighs his merit. An infinite merit deſerves infinite bleſſings, but all the bleſſings he ſolicites for are finite in themſelves though proceeding from infinite grace, and purchaſed by a payment of infinite value. God cannot be unjuſt to detain the Goods and the price paid for them; Chriſt muſt have his death and ſufferings given back again and uneffected, which is impoſſible, or elſe have the fruits of his death given to him and to thoſe for whom he ſuffered.

[3.] Whatſoever he pleads for is agreeable to the will of his Father. The will of Chriſt whereby he intercedes, is the ſame with the will of the Father with whom he intercedes; and when the will of an Eternal Mercy, and the will of an infinite merit meet together, what will not be the fruit of ſuch a glorious conjunction? As on Earth he did nothing but what he ſaw the Father do, John 5. 19, 20. ſo he intercedes for nothing but what he knows the Father wills. What he did on Earth was not without, but with his Fathers will, what he doth in heaven hath the ſame rule. As they were joynt in the counſel of Reconciliation and peace, which was between them both, Zach. 6. 13. ſo they are joynt in the counſel of Advocacy and Interceſſion, which is between them both, the one as the Director the other as the ſolicitor. Their wills are in the higheſt manner conformable to one another, and the will of the Father as much known by the Soul of Chriſt in heaven, as it was on Earth. He aſks nothing but he firſt reads in the Copy of his Fathers inſtructions, and conſiders what his will was. He reads over the Annals of his Fathers Decrees and Records, he doth nothing but what he ſees the Father do, he takes the Copy of all from his Father, and whatſoever Chriſt doth, the ſame doth the Father alſo. They have but one will in the whole current of Redemption, ſo that he can plead nothing in regard of the perſons for whom he appears, and the good things he deſires for them, but tis according to the will of God. When he came into the World, he came to do his own will, i. e. only his own will, but the will of him that ſent him; and when he returned he went up not to do his own will, but the will of him that accepted him. The perſons were given him by God for the ends which he intercedes for, the words Chriſt gave them, were firſt given him by God, and this will of God, and his people's receiving his words, he urgeth all along as an argument for the grant of his prayer, John 17. 8, 9. his Interceſſion is in ſome ſort a part of his obedience as well as his paſſion; by his obedient ſuffering he learned a further act of obedience, Heb. 5. 8. which could not be practiſed here but in heaven. The Apoſtle ſeems to refer this obedience to that part of his Office as High Prieſt in heaven after the order of Melchiſedek which he diſcourſeth of in that chapter. His whole Advocacy is but purſuant to that command given him by his Father, of loſing none of thoſe that God had given him, but raiſing them up at the laſt day, John 6. 39. What he doth in Heaven is in a way of obedience to this obligation, and conducing to this end. There is not an anſwer of Prayer which is the fruit of his Advocacy, but the deſign of it is that the Father may be glorifyed in the Son, John 14. 13. As he glorified his Father on Earth by his ſuffering, ſo he glorifies the ſame Attributes by his Interceſſion in heaven; 'tis for the glory of divine grace that the one purpos'd, and the other acted, Eph. 1. 5, 6. If he gives bleſſings for the glory of his Father, he then in his ſuit urgeth the glory of his Father as an argument to obtain them. God muſt then be an Enemy to his own Glory, if he be deaf to his ſons ſuit; and ſince the the Advocates plea is suitable to the Fathers will, he cannot reject the will of his Son without offering violence to his own will. They are both one in will, and one in affection. His humane will cannot desire any thing in opposition to the divine: Though he desired the passing away of the cup here, which was not agreeable to the divine will, yet it was without any sin, because with submission to the divine will; but since he is stript of our infirmities, and hath no furnace of wrath any more to suffer in, there cannot in his Intercessions be so much as a conditional dissent from the Divine will. What Christ acts now, is upon that foundation which he laid here according to Gods instructions. Christ had not come had not God sent him, the World had not been reconciled had not God imploy'd him upon that errand; the whole plot was laid by him, it was his own purpose: should God deny any thing which was founded upon this his will, he would be mutable and deny himself, deny his own act and deed in denying the fruits of that work, which was designed and cut out by himself. The Intercession of Christ concurring with the Eternal design of God, with his will, with the good pleasure of it, and being for the Glory of his Grace, he must be beloved in, and for that very act of Mediation, and consequently prevalent in it. To conclude, it was Gods will to make any of you Children, and he took a pleasure in purposing and effecting it, Eph. 1. 5. and will he stop his ears, when the wants of those Children are presented to him for supplies by their mighty Advocate, who acts nothing but what is agreeable to the Eternal pleasure of his Fathers will?

(3.) In regard of the foundation of his Intercession, his death. His Intercession must be as powerful as his satisfaction. As he was a mighty surety for the discharge of mens debts, so he is a mighty Intercessor for the Salvation of mens Souls; because his Intercession is in the vertue of his satisfaction: He is an Advocate, but by his propitiation, both are linkt together in the Text. His Intercession being founded upon his Death, his Death may as soon want its vertue as his Intercession its efficacy. If his blood is incorruptible, which must be concluded from the Antithesis, 1 Pet. 1. 18. We are not redeemed with corruptible things, but with the precious Blood of Christ; If his Blood be incorruptible as being pretious in the eyes of God, his Intercessions are undenyable as having an equal value in Gods account. If his Blood hath the same vertue now, which it had when it was first presented to God, his pleas must have the same vertue with his Blood; as the one was own'd, the other cannot be refused. There is a necessary connexion between the perfection of the one, and prevalency of the other. If his sacrifice be perfect, his plea upon it must be prevalent; if his plea be not prevalent, it must conclude the imperfection of his sacrifice. A Fiat must be set upon all his Petitions, since he hath finished his passive obedience. What greater Rhetorick can there be in the Tongues of Men and Angels than in the Tongue of Christ? Yet all his Eloquence cannot be so powerful, as that of his gaping wounds. His Blood hath the same efficacy in Heaven that it had on Earth, it speaks the same things, and must meet with the same success. His merit must be deficient before his Intercession can be successless, and his Blood will not want a voice while his death retains a satisfactory sufficiency. Having by his bloody Obedience silenced Justice, that it cannot put in any exception, he hath nothing to do but to solicit Mercy, prone enough to bestow all good upon those that love him and believe in him.

(4.) In regard of the persons he intercedes for. They are those that are the special gift of God to him, as dear to the Father as to Christ, John 17. 9. They are thine, Thine as well as mine, thine before they were mine, thine in purpose, mine by donation. There is a likeness in the Love the Father bears to his People, to that Love which he bears to Christ. 'Tis the argument Christ himself uses for the grant of what he desired in that Intercessory model, John 17. 23. That the World may know that thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me, not that the Father might have a rise for his Affection, but an occasion for the manifestation of his Affection in the view of the World. And though Christ doth pray the Father, yet he intimates how easily his prayer for them would be igranted, because, saith he, the Father himself loves you, John 16. 26, 27. At that day you shall ask in my name, and I say not unto you that I will pray the Father for you, for the Father himself loves you, because you have loved me.

Do not think the Father is ſo full of revenge that he muſt be earneſtly preſſed to be merciful to you, I do not ſay I will pray the Father for you, he of himſelf is inclinable to imbrace you with the tendereſt Affection; he hath for your Love to me a particular kindneſs for you. Tis as if a favourite ſhould ſay, I will intreat the King for you, but I need not; for he bears you ſuch an Affection becauſe you are my Friend, and belong to me, that he will from his own inclination be ready to do you all good. Chriſt doth not here deny his Interceſſion for them, which before he had promiſed them, but would have them in their dependance conſider not only his ſuing for them, but fix their mind upon the Fathers Love to them, and aſſure themſelves there is nothing but they may expect from his immenſe bounty and infinite Affection. The Father himſelf loves you, in the greatneſs of his Majeſty: He hath as deep a ſtamp of a Affection to you as I my ſelf have, and as you know I have manifeſted to you. The perſons he intercedes for are thoſe whom the Father Loves, thoſe whom the Father hath given him, thoſe whom God hath Juſtified, thoſe for whom himſelf is a propitiation, thoſe for whom he dyed and roſe again for, Rom. 8. 33, 34. Since they were the perſons for whom he was intended as a ſacrifice, and for whoſe good his Glorious Reſurrection and Exaltation were deſigned; there is no doubt but his Interceſſion ſhall be accepted for them. When the Love of the Father to the Advocate, and his Love to his Clients meet together, what a glorious ſucceſs muſt be expected from ſuch an Interceſſion!

[1.] Before his Sacrifice. The Text intimates it; as he was a propitiation for the whole World, i. e. for all ages of the World, ſo he is an Advocate in all ages of the World. How could the execution of Gods vengeance upon the World for ſin at the firſt Commiſſion of it have been prevented, but by the interpoſition of the Son of God? He interpoſed then by vertue of a promiſe to offer himſelf a ſacrifice, he interpoſeth now by vertue of his actual performance. If it were ſo prevalent as to ſupport the World for ſo many ages, in the midſt of that abundance of mire and dirt which ſhould overflow it, and to ſave thoſe that ſhould believe in a promiſed Meſſiah; 'tis much more powerful to ſave thoſe that believe in a ſacrificed and conquering Meſſiah. For as he was a Lamb ſlain from the Foundation of the World, ſo by the ſame Reaſon he was an Advocate pleading from the foundation of the World. The credit of his plea is the ſame with that of his paſſion; as he was a ſufferer by promiſe from the Foundation of the World, ſo he was an Interceſſor by vertue of that promiſe*: There is the ſame reaſon of his Interceſſion upon the credit of his future ſuffering, as there was for the pardon of ſin upon the credit of his future paſſion. Thoſe that were ſaved before, were ſaved upon the account of his Life as well as we; as they were reconciled by his death as well as we. For God made not ſeveral ways of Salvation, one for him, and another for us, Acts 15. 8. 9, 11. They were ſaved by Faith, by the ſame Grace, by the ſame Grace of Chriſt: And his future death being a ſufficient ground from the Foundation of the World for the pardon and Salvation of thoſe that believed in him (becauſe it was not poſſible in regard of the Greatneſs of his Perſon, and Faithfulneſs to his Truſt, that he could fail in the performance of the condition required of him, and God knew he could not; and beſides his own ſtedfaſt reſolution, and his ability to accompliſh his undertaking, God having given him promiſes of his omnipotent aſſiſtance; upon thoſe Accounts, Chriſt might with confidence be, even before his coming, a powerful Advocate for thoſe that laid hold upon the promiſe by Faith. Though he was not actually inſtalled in all his Offices, yet he exerciſed them (if I may ſo ſpeak) as a Candidate; as a King he rul'd his Church, as an Angel he guided his Iſrael, as a Prophet he ſent the Prophets of the Old Teſtament, and revealed his will to them. So though he was not a perfect Prieſt, till he was a propitiation for ſin by the oblation of himſelf as a grateful victim to God, (becauſe propitiation could not be made without bloud,) yet upon the account of the promiſe of his ſuffering he did exerciſe that part of his Prieſt-hood, whereupon the ſins of many were pardoned. God was then a pardoning God, and a Godblotting out iniquity; And when ever Chriſt interpoſed himſelf for his people, he was anſwered with comfortable fortable words. Zach. 1. 13. And though it be said that Christ upon his Ascension went to appear in the presence of God for us; Heb. 9. 24. this excludes not his former intercession in Heaven. He tells the Disciples that he went to Heaven to prepare a place for them, yet the place is said to be prepared before the foundation of the World. Mat. 25. 34. He interceded before as a Promiser, he intercedes now as a Performer; and if his Intercession then was graciously answered with comfortable words, his Intercession now hath a ground to meet with a no less acceptable entertainment.

[2.] After his Sacrifice, in the first fruit of it, the mission of the Holy Ghost. God gave a full proof and publick testimony of the vigour of his interposition in that abundance of the Spirit, which he poured forth upon the Apostles at the day of Pentecost, and in sending the same Spirit to dwell in the hearts of Believers, and the gratious operations of this Spirit in the hearts of men are infallible evidences that his Intercession is still of the same force and efficacy. He had acquainted his Disciples before, that he would pray the Father, and he should give them another Comforter, John 14. 16. We find not any prayer of Christ for the Spirit upon record, while he remain'd upon the Earth; he prayed for this Spirit after he went to Heaven, for he seems to speak of it, as that which was to be acted by him after his going from them; and, saith he, The Father will send the Comforter in my name, v. 26. i. e. as a fruit, and a manifestation of the great interest I have in him. This was so great a pledge of the prevalency of his Advocacy, that a greater could not be given. As soon as ever he was at Gods Right Hand, and had put up his petition for it, before he could be well warm in his Throne, he received the promise of the Holy Ghost, Act. 2. 23. i. e. that Holy Ghost which had been promis'd, the richest gift next to that of his Son, that could be presented to man. As the Apostles had but little hopes after his Death of his being a Redeemer, till they saw the truth of his Resurrection; so they might have as little expectations of his mighty power in Heaven after his Ascension, till he gave them this token of it in the mission of his Spirit. The Spirit indeed was in some measure sent before, when he was an Advocate design'd. (The live-coal, which seems to be an Emblem of the Spirit, was taken from the Altar a Type of Christ; Isa. 6. 6.) but much more richly poured out when he was an Advocate instal'd. The Old Testament had some drops, and the New Testament full effusions and showers. Though all the Blessings of the New Covenant are the fruits of Christ's Death and Intercession, yet the first fruit of it was the Holy Ghost, as the person, who by Office was to convey to us, and work in us the Blessings of the Covenant sealed and setled by the Blood of the Redeemer; and therefore the promise of the Spirit is the first promise of the New Covenant. Ezek. 36. 25, 26, 27. I will sprinkle clean water upon you, a new Spirit will I put within you, and I will put my Spirit within you. This was the first thing Christ solicited for, when he came to Heaven, as the first blessing of the New Covenant; and though he gave his Disciples in his prayer John 17. an essay, whereby they might well imagine what should be the substance of his petitions in his state of Glory, yet he tells them not positively of any particular thing, but of this of the Comforter: I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter. This was the first boon he beg'd after his Ascension; this was granted him, and with this the Riches of Heaven, and the Blessings of Eternity to pour down upon us; which the Apostle notes Tit. 3. 6. when he speaks of the shedding of the Holy Ghost abundantly and richly by the Father, but through Jesus Christ, our Saviour, as the choicest witness of the irreversible validity of our Saviours Intercession with the Father; so that we may as well conclude in this case, as the Apostle doth in a like case of the love of God. Rom. 8. 32. He that spared not his own Son, but deliver'd him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? So since the Intercession of Christ hath been so efficacious for a gift of so great a value as the Holy Ghost, wherein the gift of whatsoever was great in Heaven, was virtually contain'd, should it not be a warrant of assurance to us, that nothing will be denyed to the solicitation of one, that in his very first request hath been so unexpressibly successful?

(6.) Thing is, The particularity of this Intercession. Christ is an Advocate for Believers only, and for every one in particular.

[1.] For Believers only: 'Tis their peculiar priviledge. 'Tis not every name he takes into his lips, Psal. 16. 4. the names of those that hasten after another God, that own another God, and another Mediator; he would not offer their Drink Offerings or back them by any solicitation of his own for acceptance, he would deny them, and not assert them for his Clients; nor be an High Priest for them to offer any of their Sacrifices; for those that believe not in him as Mediator, disown that God by whom he was sent for the redemption of the World; and therefore he disowns in his Mediatory prayer the whole unbelieving impenitent World: Joh. 17. 9. I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; 'tis not agreeable to his wisdom to intercede for those that reject him. He is an Advocate, but only for those that entertain him: He manages no mans cause that is not desirous to put it into his hands. Advocates manage the business only of those that enter themselves their Clients. As he pray'd not for the World on Earth, so much less doth he in Heaven. No person hath an interest in his Intercession, but he that by Faith hath an interest in his satisfaction. Though his Death was the remedy of our evils in a way of satisfaction to Divine Justice, yet the application of this remedy by the act of his Priesthood in Heaven, is only to those that repent and believe; in the Text, We have an Advocate with the Father, We that walk in Communion with God; though he be a propitiation for the World, if any should take it extensively, yet he is not an Advocate for the whole World, but for those that separate themselves from the World by believing on him.

2. For every Believer particularly. The Text intimates we have an Advocate, every one of us. If any man sin; sin is a particular act of a person, and this Advocacy is for every particular sin, that the Accuser can charge the Criminal with. Advocates answer every particular charge against every particular person that is in the Roll of their Clients.

There is indeed an intercession for the Church in general, in the time of its sufferings; so he interceded for Mercy on Jerusalem, and the Cities of Judah in the time of the Babylonish Captivity. Zach. 1. 12. What the High Priest did in a shadow, that doth our High Priest in the substance; when he went into the Holy place, he bore the name of all the Tribes of Israel upon his Breast; Exod. 28. 29. and when our Saviour was preparing to sacrifice himself, and afterwards to ascend into the heavenly Sanctuary; he prayed not only for those that were then with him, the whole Church at that time, but the whole lump, even to the end of the World, were then presented to God by him; John 17. 20. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; comprehending them all in one Mass, in that Intercessory Prayer. And though he did not particularly name every one of them, yet since his Divine Understanding was furnisht with Omniscience, he knew them all distinctly in their successive appearances, and varieties of conditions in the World. But his pleas in Heaven are particular, according to the particular persons he solicits for, and the particular necessities wherewith they are incumbred. It was for Peters person in particular he prayed when he was on Earth, and for preservation of that particular Grace of Faith, to recover from under the temptation that was ready to invade him. Luk. 22. 31, 32. But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. Thee, his person, and thy faith, his case. He is an High Priest over the house of God; Heb. 10. 21. and therefore over every member of the House and Family; upon which the Apostle founds his exhortation to every one to draw near with a true heart, and in full assurance of Faith. Men pray in particular for themselves and others, and Christ hears in particular, 1 John 5. 14. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he hears us: The Son of God, of whom he was speaking, hears us in particular, what we request in particular, and as he hears us, he pleads for us, he offers the prayers of all Saints, Rev. 8. 3. and therefore of every Saint upon every occasion with a particular plea and incense of his own; there is not one, but he keeps in his remembrance, nor one request, but he presents to his Father, though not by an oral expression of every mans name and cause, yet by some distinct way of representation of them, and their wants to God, not so easily conceivable by us in this state of obscurity and darkness. As the Devil is an

Ac-

Accuser in particular, and cannot well be supposed to accuse all in the gross; so Christ stands particularly to excuse them, and frustrate the Indictment. They were given to him in particular, and he pleads for them as given to him, and as they were the propriety of his Father, John 17. 6, 9, 10, 11. God knows all his own in particular, and Christ hath a care of them in particular: Christ hath a charge of every ones person, he is to raise every one of them at the last day; he is to give an account of every ones case: Again, he intercedes for those that come to God by him, Heb. 7. 25. but those that believe, come not in the gross to God by Christ, but by a particular act of Faith in every one; and for every such comer, Christ lives ever to make Intercession for them. As he lives every comer to God by him in particular, so he doth particularly use the means of Salvation for them, i. e. his Intercession. He hath his Life for ever, and his standing Office of Advocacy for ever, to make a distinct suit for every one upon his application to God by him, in the methods of that Court where he exerciseth this Function. And as every Believer owns Christ in particular, so Christ will confess them by name plainly and clearly, Revel. 3. 5. I will confess his name before my Father; every individual person will be nam'd by him at last in his final sentence, and every individual person is named by him in his Intercessory Office; the Name is owned, the Grace own'd, and the merit of the Redeemer pleaded by him as an Advocate before his Father. He is entred into the Holy of Holies, with all the names of those that belong to him upon his Breast.

7. Thirdly, What doth Christ intercede for. In General, his Intercession for Believers is as large as the intent of his Death for them. Whatsoever priviledge he purchased for them upon the Cross, he sues for upon his Throne. His Intercession is the plea upon the account of his satisfaction, which was the payment.

He intercedes for the Church in all its states and conditions. As soon as ever the news of the state of the World, and the condition of his Church in it is brought to him by the Angels his Messengers, Zach. 1. 11, 12. and the seventy years of Captivity in Babylon were expired, he presently expostulates with God for the withdrawing his hand, and restoring their freedom. There is not any Weapon form'd against the Church, blunted, any design hatch'd against his people, abortive, any seasonable rescue, any discovery and defeat of clandestine and hellish works of darkness, but they are fruits of the diligence and industry of our Advocate, and the benefits of his Intercession. Let the prophane World look upon them as products of chance; let natural Religion regard them as works of common Providence; let us look upon them in their true Spring, and their proper Channel. Since God grants all things upon the account, and acts all things by the hands of a Mediator; all things flow to us through the Intercession of Christ. Since all things were purchased for us by the Sacrifice of Christ, he is an Advocate to sue out what he merited for us as a surety; and since the mission of the Spirit was the first fruit of this Office after his taking possession of Heaven, it must needs follow, that all the works which the Spirit began, and doth accomplish in the Soul, are fruits of it also. Therefore Christ said John 16. 14. He shall receive of mine, and shew it unto you: He shall take of mine, what is mine by purchase, what is mine by plea, what is mine by possession, and shew it unto you. The casting out the accusations of Satan from the Court of Justice, the casting them out of our own Consciences, the pardon of our Transgressions, the healing of our Natures, our support against Temptations, perseverance in that Grace any have, and perfection of that Grace any want, and at last, the perpetual residence of our Souls with him, are procur'd by him as an Advocate, as well as purchased by him as our surety.

[1.] Justification.

(1.) He is an Advocate in opposition to an Accuser.

(1.) In the matter of Justification, the Scripture represents God as a Judge, and Christ as an Advocate, pleading his Blood and Death; and when we come for Justification, we come to God as the Judge of all, listning to the voice of that Blood of Jesus, the Mediator of the new Covenant. Heb. 12. 23, 24. Ye are come to God the Judge of all, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaks better things than the blood of Abel. We come to God as a Judge,

Judge, and also to the blood of sprinkling, whereby he was appeased, of which the Spirits of just men made perfect are a full Testimony. To this Blood we come, as it is a Blood of sprinkling, in regard of its imputation to us; and as it is a speaking Blood, in regard of its solicitation for us. Our triumphant Justification by God, the Apostle places upon this as the top stone in the Foundations, he first lays it upon the Death of Christ, next, with a rather, on the Resurrection of Christ, and lastly, with an also upon his Intercession. Rom. 8. 33, 34. 'Tis God that justifies, who is he that condemns? 'Tis Christ that dyed, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also makes Intercession for us. Justification by God as opposed to Condemnation, is ascribed to Christ, and to his Intercession, as compleating it, and putting the last hand to it. * In the Title of an Advocate, there is respect to judicial proceedings; in the method of this proceeding, God is considered as the Judge, Man as the arraigned Criminal; Satan is the Accuser; Rev. 12. 10. The accuser of the brethren, who brings in the Indictments of sin, pleads the righteousness of the Law, solicits for judgment upon his Accusation, and the Execution of the curse due to the Crime; our own Consciences may be considered as the Witness, and the Law as the Rule both of the Accusation brought in, and of the Judgment demanded. Christ is consider'd as an Advocate in opposition to Satan the Accuser, pleading the efficacy of his merit against the greatness of our crimes, and his satisfaction to Justice by the Blood of his Cross, against the demands of the Law, whereby the sentence of Condemnation due to us, as considered in our selves, is averted, and a sentence of absolution upon the merit and plea of our Advocate is pronounced, and Satan cast out; and this upon an universal rule of Righteousness, which suffers not that which is either a Criminal, or pecuniary Debt to be twice paid. And in the Text wherein it is said, We have an Advocate with the Father; in case of sin, the Father is implyed to be the Soveraign Judge, Sin to be the Crime, and Satan, though not mentioned, to be the Accuser: And this Advocacy is there expresst to be, not for preventing sin, to which Satan excites us, but the pardoning sins committed, for which Satan accuses us, procuring an acquitting sentence for us from the Judge of all the Earth, and indemnity from the punishment merited by our crimes, but stopt by his plea. As Christ appeared as an Advocate against Satan when he would be Peters winnower; Luk. 22. 31, 32. I have pray'd for thee: So he appears as an Advocate against Satan, when he steps up as our Accuser. Now the Intercession of Christ being opposite to the accusations of the Devil, as the one would reduce us under the actual execution of the legal sentence, so the other hath a contrary effect, pleading for our Justification by the application of his Righteousness to us, and the acceptation of it for us, that we may stand clear before the Tribunal of God.

* Mares contra Volkel lib. 5. cap. 4. p. 8, 9.

(2.) Besides, Christ's Blood speaks contrary, or puts up contrary demands to what Abels Blood laid claim to. The Blood of Abel pierced Heaven with its cryes, and solicited a condemning vengeance on the head of Cain; the Blood of Christ on the contrary must then cry for justifying Grace on the person of every Believer, otherwise it would not speak better things than Abels Blood did, but the same things; that called for punishment, this for pardon; that desired the death of the Murtherer, and this sues out the life of the Rebel.

(3.) And further consider, Since this blood is a speaking blood, it shows that the Intercession of Christ is managed in the virtue of his blood. The same thing therefore which was the end of the effusion of his Blood, is the end of the solicitation or elocution of his Blood; his Blood was shed for the expiation of sin, and bringing in an Everlasting Righteousness, that Sinners might not be condemn'd; Dan. 9. 24. his intercession is for the application of this propitiation, that Believers might be justified. Christ pleads the propitiation made by his Blood, and accepted according to the rule of application by the faith of the repenting sinner.

(4.) Again, If Christ prayed for this on Earth, when he prayed for his Glory, he solicits for it also in Heaven, when he prays for his Glory, John 17. 1. Father, glorifie thy Son; he prays for his Resurrection, Ascension, sitting at the Right Hand of God; not only as it was his own personal concern, but as it was terminative for his believing people; as v. 2. intimates; and v. 10. he expresses himself to be glorified in them. Now as he dyed for the pardon of our sins, so he rose again for our Justification; as he therefore desired his Resurrection, so he desired it for the same end for which it was intended and promised, viz. our Justification, and therefore virtually begs our Justification in the petition for his Glory. Now since he hath gained the request as to his own person, and as to a fundamental Justification in his Resurrection, and Exaltation in Heaven; yet it not being perfectly accomplisht in all the ends of it, he moves still by his Intercession for the actual Justification of every one that comes, furnisht with the Gospel condition, to God by him.

Upon the whole we must consider, that though the propitiation made on the Cross by the Blood of Christ be the meritorious cause of our Justification, yet the Intercession upon the Throne made by the same Blood of Christ, as a speaking blood, is the immediate moving cause, or the causa applicans * of our Justification. The propitiation Christ made on the Cross, made God capable of Justifying us in an honourable way; but the Intercession of Christ as pleading that propitiation for us, procures our actual Justification. The Death of Christ accepted made Justification possible, and the Death of Christ pleaded by him, makes Justification actual: Righteousness to justifie was brought in by him on the Cross, and Righteousness justifying is applyed by him on his Throne. Our Justification was merited of God by his Death, the merit of it acknowledged by God at his Resurrection, and is confer'd on us, when we believe, by his Intercession. When a Soul believes, Christ recommends him to God as a performer of the condition of the new Covenant, and thereupon pleads his Death for him, and demands his actual admission into that favour which was purchased; and thus by him as our living Advocate, exercising his Priesthood in Heaven, we receive the atonement, Rom. 5. 10, 11.

* As Illyricus phraseth it.

(2.) Dayly pardon. This is principally intended in the Text, If any man sin, if any one of those that walk in the Light, in Communion with God and Christ, which cannot be without Justification. If any man sin, we have an Advocate, i. e. in case of sin after Justification. We contract dayly debts by committing dayly sins, and there is not a day but we merit the total removal of justifying Grace, that God should revive the memory of his former justice, and cancel the grants of his lately conferr'd mercy; and how could we avoid it, if Christ did not renue the memory of his propitiation before his Father, which first procur'd our Admission, and is only able to maintain our standing? Every sin brings in its own Nature an Obligation to punishment, that is guilt; sin and guilt are inseparable: That which hath no guilt, is no transgression. This Intercession of Christ answers the Obligation which every sin brings upon us, as well as it did answer all the Obligations at our first coming into the presence of God. 'Tis upon every sin he doth exercise this Office, and by his interposition procures our pardon thousands of times, and preserves us from coming short of the full fruits of reconciliation at first obtained by him, and accepted by us. He that had been stung a second time by the fiery Serpent, must have had a fresh influence of the brazen one for his cure, as well as the first time he was wounded. As Sin dayly accuseth us by virtue of the Law, so Christ dayly pleads for us by virtue of his Cross; sin charges us before the Tribunal of Justice, and Christ by his Intercession procures our discharge from the Chancery of Mercy.

[3.] Sanctification. As he is a Priest set on the Right Hand of the Throne of the Majesty on high, he preserves the stability of the better Covenant, the New Covenant, and perpetuates the fruits of it; Justification in blotting out the memory of our sins, and Sanctification in writing the Law in our hearts. Heb. 8. 1, 6, 10, 12. He is the Author of our first Sanctification by his Intercession, as the first fruits of it was the sending that Spirit, by whose powerful operations the Soul is reformed according to the Divine Image; and he is the Author of our repeated Sanctification by the exercise of his Advocacy. He is an Advocate in case of sin, in regard of the guilt, that it should not remain upon our Persons; in regard of the power, that the contagion of it should not seize upon our Vitals; in regard of the filth, that it might not remain, to unfit us for a fellowship with the Father and himself. His Intercession in Heaven is a continuation of that Intercession on Earth, whereby he testified his desire, that we might be kept from the evil, while we resided in an infectious fectious World, John 17. 19. Keep them from the evil, and sanctifyed through his Truth, while we are upon an Earth full of lying vanities, verse 17. The end of his Intercession is not for sharpness of wit, a pompous Wealth, a luxurious prosperity, or a lazy peace; such things may be hurtful; but for Faith, Holiness, growth, wherein we can never be culpable. His Intercession is not employed for low things, but for such as may fit us for an honour in another World. Mortification of sin, and Holiness of Conversation are therefore called things above where Christ sits at the right hand of God, Colos. 3. 1. compared with verse 5. &c. Things which come from above by vertue of that session of Christ at the right hand of God, and the Office he doth there exercise, which the Apostle explains to be a Mortification of our members which are upon the Earth, and since the great Reason of his Exaltation, is his hating Iniquity and loving Righteousness, the end of his Exaltation and of his Intercession in that state, is to manifest the same disposition in the perfect expulsion of Sin, and the full implantation of Righteousness in us. The same dispositions which animated him to a dying on the Cross here, do animate him to his Intercession above, which is nothing else but a presenting his Death, and a presenting not only his Death, but all the motives which moved him to it, and the ends he aimed at in it. He is manifested to take away sin, 1 John 3. 5. manifested in his humiliation on Earth, manifested in his Exaltation in Heaven to take away sin; sin in the filth as well as sin in the guilt. What he designed in the one, he designs in the other; the same end he aimed at in dying, he aims at in interceding. Since he is an Advocate in the vertue of his Blood, he is an Advocate for the ends of his Blood. He will not let sin continue in his Members, which he came to wash off by his Blood. As long as his Love to Righteousness, and his aversion from sin continues in him, so long will he be acting in Heaven, till he hath in the highest manner manifested to the full his Affections to the one, and disaffection to the other, by utterly dispossessing out of the Hearts of his people what he hates both root and branch, and perfecting what he Loves in all the dimensions of it. He doth not only sue out our pardon, but sue out a grant of those Graces which are necessary preparatories and concomitants of pardon. The end of his Intercession is no doubt the same with that of his Exaltation, which is not only for forgiveness of Sin, but Repentance, Acts 5. 31. which includes the whole of Sanctification. All the Holiness Believers have here, is a fruit of this Advocacy; the Communication of that Power which subdues corruption flows from it. Christ by his Intercession receives all from his Father, that as a King he may convey all necessary supplies to us. But we must consider, that though Christ doth intercede for the Sanctification of his People, yet it will not follow that any of them are at present perfect and totally free from the Reliques of corruption. This is not intended by him in this Life, any more than when he prayed for Peter, he desired not that he should be kept wholly from falling, but that his Faith should be kept from totally failing. Sin is likewise suffered to continue in the best here, that men should not think, that the acceptation of their persons doth arise from their own works and Holiness, but from the sweet savour of the Mediators Sacrifice continually presented in Heaven. Yet perfection in Grace will be the final issue of this Advocacy. If Grace should never be perfected, Christ would never be fully answered in his Intercession, and so this Office of his in Heaven would want a manifestation of its true power and value.

[4.] Strength against Temptation. We have an Enemy industrious to intrap us, and we have an Advocate as industrious to protect us, who will either solicit for a reasonable strength to resist his invasion, or strength to improve it to our spiritual advantage, if he suffers the Temptation to meet with some success in its attempt. Satan desires to sift us, Luke 22. 31. ἐξῃτήσατο he hath desired, or askt and begg'd with earnestness, for so ἐξ being added to αἰτέω signifies, and our Advocate is ready to stop the full proceedings of so fierce a solicitor. The seed of the Woman, the mystical seed, shall overcome their Enemies by the Blood of the Lamb, Revel. 12. 11. By his Blood shed upon the Cross, by his Blood presented in Heaven, which cryes for vengeance against the great seducer of mankind, and prevails to the casting him down. If strength against Temptations were not procur'd by it, Christs Office of Advocacy would lose a great part of its end. It was in kindness to us he was so

advanc'd, not an Advocate for himself personal, but for himself Mystical, i. e. for Believers; in the Text we have an Advocate. It were little kindness to us, if we should lye groveling in the dust, upon every inroad our Enemy makes against us, and sink under every shot that comes from the mount of his battery. 'Tis this Intercession that renders us either immovable against his assaults, or after a foyl victorious in the issue of the combat. Christ doth not sollicite for such a strength whereby a Temptation may be wholly successless, but whereby it may not be wholly victorious. He prayed for Peter against Satan that his Faith might not fail, but he did not pray positively that the Temptation might wholly fail. He implies by that expression, Luke 22. 32. When thou art Converted, strengthen thy Brethren, that he should fall so fouly as that not a grain of Grace should be visible in him, but he should appear like one in an unregenerate state, so that his return should be as a new Conversion: So that though he prayed not for a prevention of his fall, yet he pray'd for a recovery of him after his fall, by implying that he should be Converted. His Intercession is not always for keeping off a Temptation from us, for he many times suffers fierce ones to invade us for gracious ends, both for his own Glory and our good; but he sollicites that a Temptation may not utterly sink us, and mortifie our Grace. So that according to that model in the case of Peter, Christ sues not so much against a Temptation, as for your Faith; for if that keep up, a Temptation will fall like a bullet against a brazen Wall. He is content we should be in an Evil World, but not satisfyed unless we be preserved from the evil, or rescued from it after it hath assaulted us. And therefore a Beleivers courage hath a support in the greatest Temptation. Christ opposes his petition against the demands of Satan; the first-born of every Creature sets himself against the head of the wicked World; the Seed of the Woman against the Seed of the Serpent, and the Serpent himself, as he defends us against his Accusations before God, so he succours us in his Temptations of our own persons.

[5.] Perseverance in Grace. This follows upon the other. His Prayer for the not failing of Peters Faith, is an earnest that the same Petition is continually put up by him for all that believe in him. For since the Scripture is written for our comfort, this part of it would be little for our Comfort, if he were not as well concern'd in the standing of every Believer as of Peter, Why should he wish him when he was Converted to strengthen his Brethren, if he had not intended it for a standing example of Comfort to his Church? The Objection, that Christ did not intend to Pray for the perseverance of any but Peter, would have split all the Arguments Peter could have used from this carriage of Christ to him for the strengthening of others. How could he strengthen his Brethren in Faith, if they had not been his Brethren in Christs prayer, for their perseverance as well as he in his Faith? 'Tis principally for the continuance of our standing that his Intercession is intended, if we may judg of what he doth in Heaven by that Prayer on Earth, which was the model of his Intercession in Heaven, in which this Petition for his Fathers keeping us through his own name, and keeping us from the evil, and furthering our progress in Sanctification takes up much of the time, John 17. 11, &c. Certainly he hath the same Language in Heaven as he had then on Earth, he would else leave out a main head in his Petitions above, which this Prayer below was intended to present us with a pattern of, and so there would be no Agreement between his carriage in Heaven, and the pledge he gave us on Earth. It would have been but a fawning and dissembling Affection to desire this in his Disciples hearing, and never solicite the same cause when he went out of their kenn. No, our Saviour hath given evidence of a choicer and more durable Affection than to give occation to any to think, that he should be regardless of that in his Glory, which he was so mindful of at the time of his approaching misery. What he was earnest for then, he is as desirous not to be defeated of now, and for him to desire that his people should be kept from evil, and yet that they should sink under the greatest evil of a totall Apostacy, would argue the small credit his suit hath with the Father, and would shew that his Advocacy is as impotent to secure us, as our inability to preserve our selves. Since Christ doth therefore concern himself for the perseverance of his own, his Intercession is as powerful in that as in any other thing. If it meet with a failure in any one part, we are not sure of its successfulness in any at all. If his merit be of an infinite value, his Advocacy is of a soveraign efficacy. There is no question to be made, but those for whom he formerly merited, and those for whom he at present solicites, shall endure to the end, the gates of Hell are as unable to prevail against the latter as they were to weaken the power of the former. Did he by his propitiation procure our admission into Gods favour in spight of the Enemies of our Salvation? And shall he not by his Intercession maintain our standing, in that favour in spight of the enviers of our first admission? This is a choice fruit of the Intercession of Christ. Upon this score he lays Peters preservation from a total and final Apostacy, I have prayed for thee, that thy Faith fail not, Luke 22.32. he doth not say, Peter there is such a principle in thee that is able to stand, thy own free-will and the strength of thy Grace shall bring thee off, and preserve thee from that precipice. No, I have prayed, there lies our security. The least grain of true Grace, though as small as a Mustard-seed, stands better settled by the support of Christs Intercession against the most boistrous Winds of Satan, than the strongest Grace can of it self by the Power of Free-will against the least puff of Hell. The instability of our minds would shake it, and the reliques of our corruption extinguish it without this.

6. Acceptation of our services. As this Advocate preserves our Graces, so he presents our services, and by his Intercession maintains Life in the one and procures credit for the other. He is as powerful a solicitor for the acceptance of our duties, as he was a grateful sacrifice for the expiation of our sins, and a mighty Redeemer for the Liberty of our persons. Our Prayers are both imperfect and blemisht, but his merit applyed by his Intercession both purifies and perfects them. Our Advocate by his skill puts them into Form and Language acceeding to the methods of the Court of Heaven, as an Attorney doth the Petition and Cause of his Client, and by his interest procures a speedy hearing. Our works are no more the Cause of the Recording our Petitions, than they are of the Justification of our persons. Though our Prayers are not entertain'd without some Holiness in them, yet they are not entertain'd without a greater Holiness than ours to present them. When Christ tells his Disciples that he had ordain'd them to bring forth Fruit, he adds a clause to prevent their imaginations of meriting the answer of their Prayers by the present of their Fruits, that whatsoever they askt, they must expect only to obtain in his Name, John 15. 16. As they are ours, though attended with never so much Fruit, they may be rejected; as he makes them his by his Intercession, they cannot be non-suited. He is the Altar upon which our sacrifices ascend with a grateful fume before the God of the whole World, Isaiah 56. 7. They shall be accepted upon my Altar. He is the Altar that hath much incense to add or bestow upon the Prayers of the Saints, Revel. 8. 3. i. e. a mighty quantity of merit and power of Intercession to give a sweet savour to our spiritual Sacrifices that they may be acceptable to God, not by themselves but by Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. 2. 5. alluding to the Office of the High Priest under the Law, who after he had offered the Sacrifice without the vail, took both his hands full of those Aromatick Drugs, of which the incense was composed without the vail, and put them in a Censer of Gold full of Fire, and covered the propitiatory or Mercy-seat with the fume of it. Nothing that we can offer, is agreeable to God, without it comes through the hands, and with the recommendation of our powerful Advocate so beloved by him. The Fire he fetches from the Golden Altar makes them to fume up, and render a pleasing sent before the Mercy-seat. He is our Aaron in this part of his Priesthood in Heaven, bearing the iniquity of our Holy things, Exod. 28. 38. when he presents himself in the Sanctuary on high for the interest of his People. This he implies in the prophetick Psalm, Psalm 16. 4. when he declares he will not offer the offerings of those that hasten after another God, nor take their names into his mouth; he intimates thereby that he doth present the offerings of those that believe in him, as the only Mediator, and pronounces their names with a recommendation of them before God, as such as are parts of his mystical Body, such as have own'd him, and perform'd the condition of Faith, such persons in whom is all his delight. 'Tis from this consideration of Christs being passed into the Heavens as a High Priest, that the Apostle exhorts the Hebrews not only to hold fast their profession, but to come boldly to the

Throne

Throne of Grace, with an assurance of acceptance and obtaining Grace in their necessity, Heb. 4. 14, 16. And indeed having such a Leiger in Heaven we may boldly venture to that Throne, which his propitiation on Earth, and his appearance in Heaven render a Throne of Grace.

(7.) Salvation. This is the main end of his Intercession, Heb. 7. 25. He saves us to the uttermost, or, to all kind of perfection, noting the kind of Salvation as well as the perpetuity of time; And this by interceding; thus the Apostles argument runs, he is able to save, because the end of his Life is to intercede, and the end of his Intercession is to save. The immediate end of his Death was satisfaction respecting God, the immediate end of his Intercession is Salvation respecting us. He lives there, to sue out for us the possession of that which he dyed here to purchase. We are therefore said to be saved by his Life, as we are said to be reconcil'd by his Death, Rom. 5. 10. not simply by his Life, for no man is said to preserve another meerly as he is a living man, but as his Life is active for another in managing some means of preservation for him. Christ saves us by his Life, i. e. by that Life which he lives which is a life of Intercession. As he did not reconcile us simply by his Death, but by his Death as a Sacrifice, so he doth not save us simply by his Life, but by his Life as an accepted Advocate. The expiation of our sins was made by him on the Cross, and the happiness of our Souls is perfected by him on his Throne. He took our Nature that he might dye for us, and possesses a Throne above that he might live to save us. This part he managed in that model of his Intercession on Earth, John 17. after he had prayed for what was necessary for them during the length of their Pilgrimage, viz. Sanctifying Grace, and preservation from evil, he puts forward in the upshot for the happy entertainment of them in Heaven, verse 24. Father I will that they be with me where I am. When he comes to this period he demands it in a way of more Authority than what he had sued for before, to show that his desire would be utterly unsatisfyed without the grant of this. All that which he had sued for before, was with respect to this topstone of Salvation and Glory. After this demand he concludes his Prayer, as having no more after the compleating of their happiness to beg for them. As after he had finished the task of his Humiliation, and had Ascended to Heaven, he had no more need to Pray for himself, so when he hath brought all his People to the possession of that happiness with him, he leaves off any further pleading for them, because they are in the fullest Ocean of felicity. Christ would be an unsuccessful Advocate, and consequently an impotent propitiator, if any Believer after all his wading through the mire of this World, should fall short of a comfortable reception and Mansion above.

USE.

I. Of Information.

(1.) Here is an Argument for the Deity of Christ. If he be a prevailing Advocate for such multitudes of Believers, preserving them in the favour of God by his Intercession, it evidenceth his person to be infinitely valued by God, which would not be, if his person were not worthy of an infinite Love, and he could not be worthy of an infinite Love, were not his passion of an infinite value, and his passion could not mount to so high a value, were not his person infinitely valuable, for the worth of his Death depends upon the eminency of his person.

Besides, as an Advocate he presents every mans cause before the Father, and puts in for every one a memorial of his death to preserve them in a justified state, and maintain that Grace which would else be destroyed by a Deluge of Corruption. He must needs be God, that knows every person in that multitude of those that sincerely believe in him, that hears all their Petitions, and understands all their more numerous griefs and burdens, inward and outward sins, those inward Agonies of Spirit, those mental as well as oral Prayers, and all those in those distant places where every one of those persons reside; and knows whither their supplications be in sincerity or hypocrisie. He that knows all those is indued with Omniscience, and must needs be God. He could not be a sufficient Advocate, if he did not understand every mans cause to present it before the Judge of the World, and without Omniscience he could understand little or nothing: He could only understand what is outwardly declared, not what really the cause is. He must depend upon the declaration of his Client, as Advocates do, and so be often deluded by false representations as they are. He could not without Omniscience take care of all his Clients; to have so many Clients whose cases to present every day would be his burden and perplexity, and render Heaven a place of trouble to him, not of Glory. Were he a meer man, it could not be conceiv'd how it were possible for him; but how easie is all this to one possessed of a Deity!

(2.) Hence is a ground to conclude the efficacy of his Death: His Intercession is an argument for the perfection of his Sacrifice. The virtue of his passion is the ground of his plea, and therefore if he had not perfectly satisfied God, he must have offered himself again (Heb. 10. 14. By once offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified) and repeated the Sacrifice before he could have began his Advocacy. Had his Death been destitute of merit, there had been no room for his appearance as a justifier of our cause at the Throne of Grace: He could not have been a prevailing pleader, if he had not first been an appeasing propitiator. His standing up as a Solicitor for us had been of little efficacy, if the attonement he made on the Cross, had not been first judged sufficient. The High Priest must be punctual to the prescriptions of the Law in the Sacrifice without, before he could enter with the blood of it into the Holy of Holies. If our Faith be shaken at any time, with the doubt of the validity of his Death, let us settle it by a reflecting upon his Advocacy. This verifies the virtue of his passion more than all miracles that can be wrought in his name.

(3.) See the infinite love of God and Christ: Of God, that he should appoint an Advocate for us. If we were left to our selves, and our own pleas, our least sins would ruine us. There are dayly sins would sink us to Hell, were it not for this dayly Intercession. And this love is further enhanc'd in appointing not an Angel, or one of the highest Cherubims most dear to him, but his own Son, the best and noblest person he had in all the World, to this Office of Advocacy for a Company of Worms; one that is equal with himself in Glory, and is equal with himself in the distinct knowledge of all our cases, better acquainted with them than we our selves; and one equal to us in our Nature, experimentally acquainted with all our burdens and grievances. How great also is the love of Christ, who when he was properly our Judge, takes upon him to be our Advocate, when he hath a Mouth to condemn us, and a Wrath to consume us, he binds the arms of his Wrath, and imploys his Tongue to solicit our cause, and procure our mercy! He is not only an Advocate for himself, and the Glory promised him, but for an unworthy sinner, for those penitents he hath yet left behind him in the World; he remembers them as well as himself. As Satan never appears before God, but he hath some to accuse, so Christ never appears before God, but he hath some to defend.

(4.) How little ground is there to dream of such a thing as perfection in this Life? If we stand in need of a perpetual Intercession of Christ in this Life, we have not then a perfection in this Life: Intercession supposeth imperfection. Those that pretend to a state here totally free from sin, conclude themselves mounted above the need of any to interpose for them. 'Tis in the case of sin that this Advocacy is appointed; not in the case of sin unjustly, but justly charged; for it is not if any man be accused of sin, but if any man sin really. The interposition of an Advocate always implies a charge against the Client, but in the Text it implies a charge that hath a true, and not a mistaken foundation. Sin is as durable as this World, because Christs Intercession endures to the end of the World; He ever lives to make intercession i. e. till the end of this state of things. If Believers did not sin after they were united to Christ, and justified, an Advocacy for them would be of no necessity. The setling Christ in this Office implies that God had no intention to render men perfect in this Life. If we were arriv'd to such a state, we had no more need of Christ's further mediating for us, than the blessed Angels have. After the restitution of all things, and the consummation of the Elect, Christ no longer acts the part of a Mediator, but God shall be all in all. Nor can it be said, that some may be perfect in this Life, though all are not; and for those that are short of such a state, indeed the the Advocacy of Christ is necessary. There is little probability for this from the Text. The Apostle puts himself in the number, If any man sin, we have an Advocate; not you, as excluding himself from having any need of it. The consideration of what Apostle it was that speaks thus, would damp any presumptions of perfection. Was it not he that had the Honour to lye in his Masters Bosom, and to be dieted with the greatest share in the Redeemers affections? That Disciple whom he appointed to be the Host and Guardian of his own Mother, the dearest thing to him as Man he left behind him in the World; and the Apostle to whom he was resolved, and afterwards make known the various revolutions in the Church to the end of the world in the book of the Revelations? If any could be supposed to be setled in a sinless and perfect state in this Life, he might; but he disowns any such eminency, and looks upon himself in that state, as to have need of entertaining this common Advocate in his cause.

(5.) Hence it follows, That the Church is as durable, as the World. We have, is the time present, but it takes in the future ages; He ever lives to make intercession for those that come to God by him; there will always then, as long as the World doth indure, be some comers to God. If his Intercession run parallel with the duration of the World, there will always be some in the World, whose necessities are to be represented by him to his Father.

(6.) If Christ be an Advocate, the contempt or abuse of his Intercession is very unworthy. 'Tis an abuse of it, when men presume upon it, to sin wilfully against knowledge, and then to run to him to interpose for their pardon. This is a prophanation of the Holiness of this Advocate, as though he were setled in this Office to beg a licence for our crimes, to sue for impunity to impenitence; when indeed they are Sins of infirmity, not sins of contempt, without remorse, that he interposeth for; If any man sin; and his interposition is to comfort us under our burdens, not to encourage us in our Iniquities.

Unbelief is also a denyal of the sufficiency or necessity of his Intercession, since it is a slighting of that propitiation which is the ground of it.

A total neglect of prayer is also a contempt of it. If there should be no service, he would have no matter to perfume by his Obedience: We should frustrate that part of his Priesthood which consists in Intercession, and render him an empty-handed Priest, to be full of merit to no purpose. An unreasonable dejectedness in good men is no honouring of it: To walk disconsolately, as though there were none in the upper Region to take care of us, and mind our cause. Hath Christ lost his Power, his Eloquence, his Interest in his Father, is the value of his sufferings abated? The Market fallen? Hath God utterly discarded the Righteousness of his Son? Hath God repented of sending his Son to suffer? Are our Saviours pleas distasteful to him? Is Christ that was carryed triumphantly to Heaven, now of no account there? Or hath the Redeemer thrown off all thoughts of us, all care for us? One would think some of those things are happened, since Christians walk so feebly, with heads hanging down, as if no person concern'd himself above in their affairs: At least a stranger would admire to hear them talk of an Advocate, and walk as dejectedly, as if there were none at all. 'Tis a dishonour also to it, when men after sin betake themselves to vows or alms for their Solicitors, and not to the Sacrifice and Advocacy of Christ.

(7.) If Christ be our Advocate, 'tis a dishonourable thing to joke Saints as Mediators of Intercession with him. The Romanists tell us that Christ is the Mediator of Redemption, but the Saints are also Mediators of Intercession. Though to give them their due, they say, that the prayers of Saints and Angels for them, prevail not by the sole virtue of their own merit, but receive their spiritual validity from the merit of Christ. What need then of invocating Saints, since their Intercessions for us will do us no good, without the intercession of Christ, and his pleading his merit for us? None had Authority to offer the incense upon the Altar of Gold, but he that offered the Sacrifice upon the Altar of Brass. When the High Priest went to burn incense in the Holy place, he was attended with none of the people, nor any of the Priests: not a Man nor Angel appears with Christ in Heaven as an Intercessor to present the services of any. As they shed none of their blood for us, so have they no blood to sprinkle in Heaven. Those that have no merit to purchase for themselves, ſelves, have no merit to apply to others. He only that hath ſatisfied for us, hath the Authority to intercede for us. Chriſt only that is our Redeemer, can be our Advocate. The glorified Saints have been brought into Heaven by his Grace; not to receive our ſervices, but rejoyce in his Salvation: They are Co-Heirs with him in his Inheritance, not Co-Officers with him in his Function. To yoke him with Saints, is to apprehend him very unmindful of his Office, or laſie in his ſolicitations, that he needs a ſpur from thoſe that are about him: 'Tis to ſtrip him of his Prieſtly Garments, and put them upon his inferiours; and it is as great a Sacriledge to rob him of the honour of his Advocacy, as to deny him the Glory of his Death.

The Text ſtrikes off mens hands from ſuch an invaſion; it intimates that the right of interceſſion belongs only to him who hath made the propitiation; but that was made by Chriſt alone, without any Saints to tread the Wine-preſs with him; and therefore the Advocacy is managed by Chriſt alone, without any Saints to aſſiſt with him at the Throne of Grace. Since they ſhed no blood to pacifie the wrath of God for our ſins, they have no right to preſent our prayers for acceptance at his Throne. The Apoſtle Heb. 13.7. when he ſpeaks to them to follow their faith, had a fair occaſion, had he had a knowledge of the truth of it, to mention it; he adviſeth them to imitate the Saints, not to invocate them: He propoſeth their example to them on Earth, when he might as well have added alſo their interceſſions in Heaven: He had had as good a ground to wiſh them to preſent their prayers to them, which were glorified, if thoſe Spirits had been in a capacity to do them ſuch a kindneſs: He would not have been guilty of ſuch an omiſſion, as not to have minded them of their duty, and increaſt their comfort, had ſuch a thing been known to him. And whence the aſſertors of this Doctrine had the Revelation, we may eaſily conclude, ſince thoſe that were enlightned from Heaven, never mention'd a ſyllable of any thing ſo diſhonourable to the Redeemer.

(8.) If Chriſt be our Advocate, how miſerable are thoſe that have no intereſt in him? He is an Advocate for all that walk in Communion with God, that walk in the light; thoſe that walk otherwiſe, are under the condemnation of the Law, not under the propitiation and interceſſion of Chriſt; they have the injur'd Attributes of God, and ſlighted Blood of Chriſt to plead againſt them, not for them. If Chriſt did not pray for the World here, he will not plead for the World in Heaven: John 17. 9. He is introduc'd in thoſe prophetick Pſalms, praying that thoſe that wiſh him evil, may be confounded, and put to ſhame; Pſal. 40. 14. and that the indignation of God might be poured out upon them, and his wrathful anger take hold of them; Pſal. 69. 21, 24, and indeed at his firſt ſettlement in this Office, the power of asking was confer'd upon him, as well for the ruine of his Enemies, as for the ſecurity of his believing Friends. Pſal. 2. 8, 9. Ask of me, and I ſhall give thee the Heathen for thine Inheritance; and what follows? Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of Iron. Breaking his Enemies is a fruit of his asking. Impenitent men are ſo far from having an intereſt in his Interceſſions for Mercy, that they have a terrible ſhare in his pleas for wrath. And himſelf doth ſolemnly publiſh in his ſpeech to his Father, Pſal. 16. 4. that he will not take their names into his lips, that haſten after another God, by idolatrous ſervices. If it be a miſery to want the prayers of a Noah, Daniel, Job, or a Jeremy; Jer. 11.14. What a horrible miſery it is to want the prayers of the Saviour of the World, and to have the pleas of Chriſt directed againſt them? As the Blood of Chriſt ſpeaks better things than the Blood of Abel for thoſe on whom it is ſprinkled, ſo it ſpeaks bitterer things for all ſuch as by unbelief and impenitence trample upon it. 'Tis a mighty miſery to want ſo powerful a patronage.

2. Uſe is of Comfort. His deſign in uttering his prayer on earth, the Model of his Interceſſion, was for the joy of his people, Joh. 17.13. Theſe things ſpeak I in the World, that they may have my joy fulfilled in themſelves, that they might have a joy in his abſence, in the aſſurance of his faithful managing their cauſe above, by remembring how earneſt he was for them below, that this joy might be fulfilled in them, i. e. that they might have a full and permanent joy, as much joy proportionably in having me their Advocate, as I have in undertaking and managing the Office for them. We ſhould draw forth the comfort of this Function he exerciſeth. As a propitiation he turn'd the Court of Juſtice into a Court of Mercy; and as an Advocate he keeps it firm in that change he made by his passion. To this we may ascribe the firmness of the Divine Reconciliation, and the fruit of it the non-imputation of our dayly sins: 'Tis the top of our comfort that he is in Heaven a Pleader, as it was the foundation of our comfort, that he was once on Earth a Sufferer. There is not the meanest begger that is a Believer, but he hath a greater favourite to manage his cause with God, than any man can have with an Earthly Prince. 'Tis a thousand times more comfort that he is an Advocate in Heaven, than if he were a King visibly upon Earth. He is above to prevent all evils which can there only receive their Commission, to procure all blessings which there only find their spring. What reason of discouragement, when we have one in Heaven to be our Advocate, one so acceptable to the Father, one that hath given such proofs of his affections to us, one that is both faithful and earnest in our cause, and one that it is no disparagement for the Father to listen to? What could comfort it self (saith one*) wish more for her Children, had she been our Mother, than to have so great a person our perpetual Advocate at the right hand of God? His Death is not such a ground of assurance as this, because that is past; but when we consider how the merit of his Death lives continually in his intercession; all the weights of doubts and despondency lose their heavines, Faith finds in it an unquestionable support. * Dr. Jackson.

(1.) There is comfort in the perpetuity of this Intercession. He is as much a perpetual Advocate, as he is a perpetual propitiation. Till there be a failure in the merits of the one, there can be no interruption in the pleas of the other. The Blood that was sprinkled on the Mercy Seat in the Holy of Holies, was not to be wipt off, but to remain there as a visible mark of the atonement. As the High Priest went not into the Holy of Holies to look about him, and feast his eyes with the rarities of the place, but to perform an Office for the people that staid without all the time he remained before the Mercy Seat; so is Christ enter'd to appear in the presence of God for us, Heb. 9. 24. to appear all the time of his residence there. He is not silent, but is always pleading in the strength of his Sacrifice for the benefits purchased by it. He hath (that I may so say) little else to do where he is, but to intercede. When he was in the World, and had a Glory due to him to petition for he doth it not without intermixing more suits for his people than for himself. John 17. His Love is not coold by his being in Heaven. There is little of his own Glory behind to solicit for. His zeal and earnestnes runs in one Channel for his people, and is more united. He was dead, but his love did not dye with him; he now lives, and his affections live with him; and he lives for evermore. Revel. 1. 18. I am he that lives and was dead; and behold I live for evermore. His Life had been little comfort without the end of his life. He lives in that nature wherein he dyed, he lives for ever, as well as he dyed once in the Office of a Redeemer. He interceded for all Believers when he was alive, John 17. 19. If it be a great comfort to have a stock of prayers going for us among our friends; 'tis a greater to have Christ praying for us, and to consider he prayed 1600 years ago, and hath never left pleading one moment since he sat down on his Throne. Christ's Power cannot be weakned, his Eloquence cannot grow dull and flat, his interest is not decayed, the Righteousnes of God endures for ever, he repents not of his contrivances for mans Salvation, he is to this day pleased with the interposure of his Son on our behalf; the Laws of Heaven are unchangeable, our Advocate is in high esteem there, and his thoughts of us the same as ever they were.

(2.) There is Comfort in the prevalency of it; the perpetuity assures us of the prevalency of it. If the appearance of the Rainbow in the Cloud be a memorial to God to withhold his hand from ever drowning the World, as he promised Noah, Gen. 9. 16. the suffering person of his Son being perpetually before him every moment of an endless Eternity, will not suffer him to be forgetful of the Covenant of Grace, seal'd by the blood of so great a Person. He that remembred Abraham in the case of Lot, sometime after Abraham had done praying, Gen. 19. 29. cannot be unmindful of those for whom he hath a perpetual Solicitor before his Eyes. Can any man lose his cause that hath so powerful an Advocate as a deserving Son with a gra-gracious Father, who hath Affection to us to edge his plea, and interest enough in the Father to prevail for our good? His prayers above are not less, but rather more prevalent (if any difference may be supposed) than they were here below. As there were no sinful infirmities in his Nature, so there were none in his prayers on Earth, but there were natural infirmities, as Hunger, Thirst, Sleep, which might give some interruption to the constancy of actual prayer; but there can be none in his Intercession, since all his natural infirmities were dropt at his Resurrection. He is the Watch-man and Advocate of Israel that never slumbers nor sleeps. He pleads not as Moses for the Israelites, or as an Israelite for himself, but as the Angel and Head of the Covenant. As by his Sacrifice, so by his plea, he frees them from a state of Condemnation, Rom. 8. 34. Who is he that condemns? 'tis Christ that dyed, yea rather that makes intercession for us. No blessing he pleads for, but we shall obtain: The Father can refuse him nothing; we cannot want help, till the Father has discarded all affection to his Son, and declares himself mistaken in the Judgement he discovered of the greatness of his merit at his Resurrection and Ascension. Certainly if we shall have whatsoever we ask in his name for our selves, John 16. 23. He will obtain whatsoever he asks in his own name for us.

(3.) Hence ariseth Comfort to us in our Prayers. We cannot doubt of success, as long as Christ hath faithfulness. The Office of the Priests under the Law was to receive every mans Sacrifice that was capable of presenting one, and refuse none. Christ as an Advocate hath it incumbent upon him to receive our spiritual Sacrifices and he doth receive them, and present them with more Mercy, because he transcends them in Faithfulness and Compassion.

We are many times dejected at the remembrance of our Prayers; but the concern that Christ hath in them is a ground to raise us. We have an Advocate that knows how to separate the impertinencies and follies which fall from the mouths of his Clients; he knows how to rectifie and purifie our bills of requests, and present them otherwise than we do. How happy a thing is it to have one to offer up our Prayers in his golden Censer, and perfume our weak performances by applying his merit to them! Satan distracts our Prayers, but cannot blemish Christs Intercession. When we cannot present our own case by reason of Diseases and Indispositions, we have one to present our cause for us, that can never be distempered, who is more quick to present our groans than we are to utter them. Besides, all prayer put up in his name shall be successful, John 16. 23. The arguments we use from Christs merits are the same fundamentally upon which the plea of Christ in Heaven is grounded, and if God should deny us it were to deny his Son, and cast off that delight he expresst himself to have in the merit of his death; but God loves that Mediation of his Son, and that this work of his should be Honoured and Acknowledged: And though we had no promise to have our own prayers heard, yet there is no doubt but he will hear the prayers of Christ for us, for them he hears always, John 11. 42.

(4.) Hence ariseth Comfort against all the Attempts and Accusations of Satan and the Rebellion of our own Corruption. He foresees all the Ambushments of Satan, searcheth into his intention, understands his Stratagems, and is as ready to speak to the Father for us, as he was to turn his back and look Peter into a recovery at the crowing of the Cock. The Devil accuseth us when we fall, but he hath not so much on his side as we have. All his strength lies in our sinful acts, but the strength of our Advocate lies in his own infinite merit. Satan hath no merit of his own to enter as plea for vengeance. When he pleads against us with our sins, Christ pleads for us by his sufferings, and if our adversary never cease to Accuse us, our Advocate never ceaseth to defend us. How comfortable is it to have one, day and night, before the Throne to controul the charge of our Enemy, and the despondencies of our Souls, that Satan can no sooner open his mouth, but he hath one to stop and rebuke him, who hath more favour in the Court than that malitious Spirit, and imployes all his Life and Glory for our spiritual advantage, who will not upon such occasions want a good word for us! And as to our corruptions, he is in Heaven to make up all breaches. His blood hath the same design in his plea, that it had in the sacrifice, which was to purifie us, Tit. 2. 4. The difficulty of any cause doth not discourage him, but honours both his skill in bringing us off, and the merit of his blood which is the cause of our restoration. Upon every occasion he steps in to plead with the Holiness of God, and pacifie the Justice of God for our greater as well as lighter crimes. While therefore we feelingly groan under our spiritual burdens, let us not be so dejected by them, as cheared by the Advocacy of our Saviour.

not

III. USE of Exhortation.

(1.) Endeavour for an interest in this Advocacy. 'Tis natural for men to look after some Intercessor with God for them. When the Israelites were sensible of their sin in speaking against God, they desired Moses to be their Mediator, Numb. 21. 7. Pray unto the Lord for us. Behold here a greater than Moses to be the Patron of our cause.

To this purpose.

[1.] We must have a sincere Faith. This is absolutely necessary for an interest in Christs Priesthood, Heb. 7. 24. 'Tis only for those that come to God by him. He hath not a moral ability to save, or intercede for any but such; that is clearly implied; If able to save those that come unto God by him, seeing he ever lives to make Intercession for them, then able to save none else; 'tis restrain'd only to such. 'Tis a foolish imagination to think Christ Prays for unbelievers, because he pray'd on the Cross for those that murder'd him *, There is a great difference between his prayer then, and his Intercession in Heaven. That upon the Cross was as he was a Holy man, and would both shew his own Charity to his Enemies, and set us a pattern of it to ours; but in his Mediatory Prayer put up by him as God-man, John 17. a Copy of what he doth to this day in Heaven, he doth not pray for the World, but for those that believe on him, verse 19, 20. and therefore it is plain that he doth not pray for them that will not believe on him. Faith only gives an interest in the Prayers Christ made on Earth, or suits he urgeth in Heaven.

* Camero de Ecclesia p. 229.

[2.] We must have a sincere resolution of obedience. Such are the subjects of Christs Intercession. The Apostle had prefaced it so in the chapter before the Text, and applies the cordial to such only as wallowed not in a course of gross sins; those that walk in darkness he excludes from any fellowship with him in any of his Offices, 1 John 1. 6. 'tis a fellowship with the Son as well as with the Father, that he understands it of, verse 3. The comfort of this Intercession belongs not to those that wilfully defile themselves, but to those that abhor sin, and yet may fall through the violence of a surprizing Temptation. And after he had laid down this comfortable Doctrine in the Text, he closes it with a limitation, to strike off the hands of any bold and undue claim to it, verse 3. Hereby do we know, that we, know him, if we keep his Commandements; hereby we know that we know him to be both our propitiation and our Advocate, if we bear a sincere respect to all the discoveries of his Will. Christ did not offer himself as a Sacrifice, nor stand up as an Advocate to countenance our sins, and free us from the debt of obedience, but to excite and encourage us the more; and that in a comfortable way, assuring us of pardon for our defects through him. Trust in him, and Obedience to him, are the sole fee he requires of us for his care and pains.

(2.) Have a daily recourse to this Advocate and Advocacy. 'Tis necessary, because of our dayly infirmities, and our imperfect services. We know not how to plead our own cause, nor do we understand the aggravations of those Accusations that may be brought in against us. 'Tis necessary that we should fly to one who always is present in the Court to appear for us. Every man is ready to ingage any person that hath the ear and interest of the Judge on his side. Every man is to lift up his Eye to this Advocate; If any man sin we have an Advocate, the having is little without employing. The more we exercise Faith in his Intercession, the more Communion we have with the Advocate, and the more Sanctification will increase in us, John 17. 17. Sanctifie them through thy Truth, his prayer there for Sanctification, cation, is a ſtanding notice to us whence Sanctification is to be fetched, viz. from Heaven by vertue of this Interceſſion. In our ſhorteſt Ejaculations, as well as our extended Petitions, let us implore him under this title. No man under the Law was to offer the meaneſt offering, though a Pigeon, by his own hand, but the hand of the Prieſt appointed to it by Divine order. In all diſtreſſes, infirmities and darkneſs in this World, we ſhould get up to that Mountain of Myrrhe, and to the Hill of Frankincenſe, *Cant.*4.6. (Which is as ſome underſtand it, a ſpeech of the Church,) to the Paſſion of Chriſt which was bitter like Myrrh, to the Interceſſion of Chriſt which is ſweet like Incenſe. Our whole Life, till everlaſting Glory be ready to receive us, ſhould be a Life of Faith in his Death and Interceſſion.

(3.) Let our Affections be in Heaven with our Advocate. Though the people of Iſrael were barr'd from entring in to the Holy of Holies with the High Prieſt, when he went to ſprinkle the blood on the Mercy-ſeat, yet they attended him with their Hearts, continued their wiſhes for his ſucceſs, and expected his return with the notice of his acceptation. Since Chriſt is entred into the Holy place, and acts our buſineſs in the midſt of his Glory, we ſhould raiſe our Hearts to him where he is, and link our Spirits with him; and rejoyce in the aſſured ſucceſs of his negotiation. Though a man be not perſonally preſent with his Advocate in the Court, yet his Heart and Soul is with him; the Heart is where the chief buſineſs is; let us not keep our Hearts from him, who employes himſelf in ſo great a concern for us.

(4.) Glorifie and Love this Advocate. If Chriſt preſents our Perſons and Prayers, in Heaven, 'tis reaſon we ſhould live to his Glory upon Earth. If he carries our names on his Breaſt near his Heart as a ſignal of his Affection to us, we ſhould carry his name upon our Hearts in a way of ingenuous return. We ſhould empty our ſelves of all unworthy Affections, be enflamed with an ardent Love to him, and behave our ſelves towards him as the moſt amiable object. This is but due to him as he is our Advocate.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE OBJECT OF FAITH.

JOHN XIV. 1.

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

OUR Saviour in the foregoing Chapter having diſcourſed of his Death by the treachery of Judas, and upon his interruption by Peters vaunt of his Affection to him, having prædicted his Cowardize, could not but poſſeſs the hearts of his Diſciple with a wonderful trouble: What could be the firſt reflection upon this alarum, but a fear of the conſequences of ſo ſad a ſeparation, and a diſtruſt of themſelves? Their Maſter would be remov'd from them by the treaſon of one of their own Colledge, John 13.21. and to a place whither they could not at preſent follow him; v. 36. They muſt loſe that raviſhing converſe they had ſo long a time enjoyed with him; they ſaw themſelves ready to be expos'd to the fury of his, and their ill-willers in Judea; they ſhould want the ſupport they had in his preſence; they could not imagine how they ſhould bear up againſt Temptations, ſince the fall and Apoſtacy of Peter, one of the moſt clear-ſighted, and reſolute of their Aſſociates, was in ſuch plain words foretold in their hearing, v. 38. The Cock ſhall not crow till thou haſt denyed me thrice. Chriſt knowing the agitation of their Spirits, propoſeth remedies both to calm their preſent fears, and arm them againſt future troubles; and in this Chapter mixes ſeveral Cordials together, ſuted to their preſent and future condition. The grand remedy is preſcribed to them in the Text, which is both a Preface and a Theſis, which he ſtrengthens in his following diſcourſe, Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe alſo in me. I know what troubles thoſe Diſcourſes have rais'd in your ſpirits; give not way to them, there is a remedy as great as the Diſtemper, and far greater than the cauſe of your fears; Faith will quell all; you think you have cauſe to be troubled, but if you rightly underſtood the whole Affair, you would find cauſe of confidence and rejoycing; you have a remedy in your truſt in God, a truſt which your Fathers have ſucceſsfully practiſed, and your ſelves have been religiouſly bred in; you believe in the power, goodneſs and faithfulneſs of God; keep that hold ſtill, but take with you alſo an additional ſupport. Believe alſo in me as the perſon deſign'd in all the promiſes from the firſt to Adam, to the laſt in the Prophets; as that perſon in whom you ſhall ſee the evidences of the Power, Mercy and Goodneſs of that God, you, and your Fathers have hitherto relyed upon.

Let not your heart be troubled.] The word ſignifies properly a commotion of water, which rages, ſwells, and flings up mud and ſlime from the bottom; or the diſturbance of an Army when it is out of rank and order; and thence tranſlated to ταραχθω. ſignifie perturbations and fear in the heart of man, when the reſt and quietneſs of the mind is interrupted.

Be not troubled.] Entertain no rage or fear in your Spirits, do not think I have deceived you, let not your hearts ſwell with any diſdain of me, becauſe your carnal expectations are fruſtrated. We find in many places that they expected their Maſters erection of a worldly Empire, wherein they hoped to be his Favourites, and ſetled in ſome great imployments, as Miniſters of ſtate; and now at the upſhot finding him to prædict nothing but his own Death, his leaving of them behind him to endure ſufferings and perſecution, and all their grand expectations in a moment defeated; they might have an occaſion to find ſtorms in their ſpirits, raking up all the mire and durt to fling in his face, as if he had been ſome Impoſtor; well, ſaith he, Let not your heart be troubled, believe in me as firmly as you have believed in God, and in the iſſue you will find, I have not deceived you, but acted according to the directions of that God in whom you believe; your Faith in me ſhall no more make you aſham'd, than your Faith in God hath done.

Obſerve,

1. The beſt of Gods people are apt to be overwhelm'd with an ungrounded ſorrow. A ſorrow for ſin never wants ground, but a ſorrow for other things often doth: Ignorance and heedleſneſs is frequently the cauſe of commotions in the minds of good men. Theſe had heard in the whole courſe of Chriſt's miniſtry, enough to waylay their fears, and prepare them for this hour; they had heard him more than once ſpeaking of his Death, yet a fond conceit of obtaining an earthly grandeur by him, made them little to regard it. They had ſeen the power of God ſhielding him from the power of his Enemies, and illuſtrious in the miracles he had wrought before their eyes, and might have fortified themſelves with conſiderations againſt any dejection, till they had ſeen the iſſue. But their inadvertency, regardleſneſs, and ignorance, not only gave way to, but fomented their inward ſtorms.

2. How apt is man to be troubled oftentimes at that which conduceth to his Happineſs! They are troubled at Chriſt's death and departure, which in themſelves were the only means appointed by God for their felicity; that which was to render them happy, did in their own account render them miſerable; had they known the deſign of it, it had rather been matter of joy to ſee their ſins expiated, and an incenſed God reconcil'd to them upon the ſureſt and moſt irreverſible terms, and to be aſſur'd that Manſions ſhould be prepar'd for them in Heaven; but ſhort-ſighted men perceive not the ſecrets of Divine Wiſdom in its paths in the World, which are double to what they apprehend. Job 11. 6.

3. How tender is Chriſt to remedy the troubles of his people! In his dying poſture he ſeeketh not their aſſiſtance of him, but neglects himſelf to chear up them; he gives them ſome drops of thoſe comforts here, whereof they were to have flouds hereafter: He ſhows them now what he was to do in Heaven, to order Affairs in ſuch a manner, as to expel their troubles; what he was ſo ready to do, when his calamitous condition might have excus'd him from ſo friendly an Office, he will be more ready to do, ſince he hath nothing to obſtruct him; what was his Office on Earth, is ſtill his Office in Heaven; let not your hearts be troubled, is his Language from the place of his Glory, and while he retains his compaſſions, he will iſſue out his conſolations.

is

4. How gratious is our Redeemer to take occaſion from unbelieving diſtruſts to pour out his choiceſt Cordials! Nothing ſo admirable was ever publiſht to the World, as the Doctrine that had dropt from his lips to his followers; he had acquainted them that Redemption was the deſign of his coming; he had again and again aſſur'd them of his Fathers, and his own love to them; yet you ſee their corruption ſhoots up its head above their Grace; their unbelieving fears ſeem to give the lye to all he had formerly acquainted them with; yet he doth not manifeſt any marks of indignation, and ſtrike them down at his foot, as he did ſhortly after thoſe that came to apprehend him, but comforts them without checking them; and, which is more aſtoniſhing, takes occaſion from hence to utter ſomething more magnificent and cordial than he had ever done before; he takes occaſion from the workings of Hell in them, to give them a clearer appearance of Heaven, and opens that place of Glory for them, which was quickly after opened for himſelf. His diſcourſes after this, in this, and the following Chapters, bear a general eminency, and are more full of refreſhments than any before; he now raines down Manna upon them, and gives them that incomparable promiſe of the Spirit to be their Comforter; after this evidence of their diſtruſtful fear, he ſeems to open all the repoſitories in Heaven to make a Cordial for them. What could be done more to quell fear, and encourage Faith, unleſs he had wafted them immediately to Glory, and exchanged their Faith for that eternally triumphant affection of love which ſhall reign in Heaven?

5. Chriſt doth not remove the Croſs from his people, but comforts them under it. He doth not retract any thing he had ſaid before, which gave Life to their fear and ſorrow, as many tender perſons do, when they ſee others ſtartled and grieved at their reſolves; but he bears up their Spirits, while he holds the Croſs upon their ſhoulders, and is as forward in comforting them, as the matter he had treated of was apt to diſquiet them. That which he uſeth to repel their fears, is, ye believe in God, believe alſo in me. The word πιστευετε in our Tranſlation is in the firſt place in the Indicative Mood, in the latter in the Imperative. But the Text is read various ways. Some read it

1. You believe in God, you do alſo believe in me; both in the Indicative Mood, as much as to ſay, ſince you do believe in us both, this your faith in God, and in me, will be a ſufficient Bulwark againſt all your fears. Others read it, * Eraſm. in loc.

2. Believe in God, believe alſo in me; both in the Imperative commanding this act upon thoſe two objects. Others read it,

3. Believe in God, and you do then alſo believe in me; the firſt in the Imperative, the ſecond in the Indicative; i. e. If you believe in God rightly, you cannot but believe in me; for there is no true Faith and truſt in God, but in, and through the Mediator.

The matter is not great which way we read it, either thus, Believe in God, believe alſo in me, as ordering both, or you do believe in God, believe alſo in me; as allowing the firſt by way of conceſſion, and ordering the latter; both do ſuit the occaſion of his Diſcourſe.

You believe in God.]

You believe in God as the Creator, Preſerver, and Governour of all things; * This is natural to all to acknowledge God, to own him one way or other as an object of truſt in extremity, which is evidenced by the common approach to him, and calling upon him in caſes of exigence; but this is not all that is meant here: But further, you believe the promiſes of God in Moſes, the Pſalms and Prophets; you believe all that is ſpoken of the Meſſiah by whom he hath promiſed to juſtifie and ſave his people; thus you have the ſame Faith your Fathers had before you, and you do not only believe the Authority of God ſpeaking, by an act of your underſtanding, but you do imbrace thoſe promiſes by a conſent of will, and rely upon him for the performance of them, that he will bring forth the Meſſiah for thoſe great ends and purpoſes for which he is promiſed. * Grot.

Believe alſo in me.]

I do not go about to turn you from your confidence in God, but to eſtabliſh it; you you must besides this, repose your selves in me; you believe God to be true and merciful, and you believe the promises he hath made of the Messiah, you must believe in me also; you must believe that I am the person design'd in all those promises, to be that Messiah; you must believe that I am he, as he expresseth it, Joh. 13. 19. that very seed of the Woman that was to bruise the Serpents head, and rest your selves in me as that Messiah; and that fear which hath reigned in the hearts of men from the first moment of Adams fall, will expire in the Spirits of all those that have a true and sincere faith in me; for in me they will behold their restoration. If you believe God making those promises, you must also believe me to be the matter of them. I am the person which was the center of them, that person by whom your Enemies are to be destroyed, your Judge to be pacified, your Pardon to be purchased. Before, a general Faith in the promise of God, that there should be a Messiah, was sufficient for you; this you have, and this your Fathers had; and you believe in God, promising this Messiah, and rest upon him for the accomplishment of this promise; but now since this promise is accomplisht, and the Messiah is come, your Faith must be more particular, you must believe me to be an all-sufficient Saviour, and must believe in me for the remission of Sin, and the Eternal Mansions, which I am going to prepare for you; You must firmly believe that I am the person sent by God in that capacity and Office; whatsoever storms you shall see rais'd against me, and whatsoever black Clouds you shall see me wrapt in.

Believing here notes not only an assent, but a recumbency, Believe in me: You do not only believe God, but believe in him; i. e. rely upon him for what he hath promised: You must not only believe me to be the Messiah, but rely upon me for those things God hath promised to be done by the Messiah. Believe in me] i. e. Believe in me as Mediator, and rely upon me for all the fruits of my Mediation.

Believe in me.] As you believe God is constant in his promises, so believe also that I will not forsake you, though I be absent from you. So that Christ brings them here to himself as Mediator, as well as to God the fountain of Salvation; and proposeth himself here as an object of Faith in conjunction with the supream Deity. Nothing would make the poor Disciples so dejected, as to see him hanging on a Cross, whom they expected upon a Throne; and nothing but a consideration of him to be the Messiah, and a great faith in him, could support them under so unexpected a disaster.

Observe,

I. By way of Caution, That this Scripture is no argument against the Deity of Christ, because our Saviour doth here distinguish God from himself.

By God here is meant the Father, and by calling the Father God, the Son is no more excluded from the Deity, than when Christ is called God, as he is Rom. 9. 5. Christ who is over all, God blessed for ever, the Father is excluded. Christ doth here assert his own Deity in the substance of the command, in making himself an Object of Faith in conjunction with God, and as necessary for the support of the Soul, as God himself: He orders Faith in himself in the same manner as he orders it in God. John 5. 17. My Father works, and I work; as my Father works, so I work, because of the Unity of Essence, so as you believe in God the Father, believe in me also the Son.

2. Tis necessary to believe Christ to be the Messiah. This is the first thing to be believed in the Christian Religion, that Jesus is the Christ, the Saviour of the World. The Apostles directed their discourses generally to prove this, Acts 2. 36. Act. 9. 22. Acts 18. 5. and the great Medium to prove it by, was his Resurrection after his Death; and for not believing this, the Jews are pronounced by Paul judgers of themselves, as unworthy of Eternal Life. Acts. 13. 46. Cornelius before he heard Peter, believed that there would be a Messiah; but after the hearing of Peter's declaration of Christ's Death and Resurrection, he was to exercise a particular Faith in him; and if he had not, his former Faith had stood him in no stead, because he would have despis'd the Revelation of God: How can he be said to believe God in his promise, that believes him not in his performance? I am afraid there is too much unbelief of this amongst us; we are brought up in the profession of Christ, and our Faith in him is of no better a stamp than an Education-Faith; we underſtand not upon good grounds, that this Chriſt is the Meſſiah, promiſed from the foundation of the World.

3. Only Faith in God through the Mediator, can bear up the heart in troubles. This is the ballaſt that can keep the ſoul ſteady in a ſtormy Sea. Fear not, but believe ſaid Chriſt, as the proper remedy; Luk. 8. 50. Faith makes not aſhamed, it doth elevate the heart above all that would depreſs it. It breeds a great and couragious Spirit, and makes men willing to want the ſatisfactions of the Fleſh for the delights of Heaven. To come believingly, is to come boldly in a time of need. Heb. 4. 16. Faith is dignified with a Title of Confidence, and with that of a full aſſurance; Heb. 10. 22. This was that whereby God diſpel'd the Cloud of fear from Abraham: Gen. 15. 1. Fear not, Abraham, the wrath due to ſin upon the revolt of man: I am ſufficient to bring forth the promiſed ſeed; I will be thy ſhield againſt the terrors of wrath, and I will be the reward of thy Faith and Obedience in a glorious Salvation. It was not a carnal fear, or a fear of ſome Temporal evil; for this ſpeech was after his victory over the Kings that had conquered and plundred Sodom; after he had been bleſſed by ſo great a Type of Chriſt as Melchiſedech was; the fear of Abraham was occaſioned by his want of a Child, and a ſeed wherein the Nations of the Earth were to be bleſſed; as appears by his anſwer, v. 2. that promiſed ſeed, that was to change the curſe of ſin into a bleſſing; this ſeed is promiſed him, v. 4, 5. and then Abraham believed, i. e. all his fears vaniſhed, and he relyed upon God for the performance of this.

4. All our comforts are fetcht from above. Chriſt ſends them not here to the Waters of the Earth to quench the heat of their troubles; he directs not their Eyes downwards, but upwards to God and himſelf; 'tis a ſcanty relief that is fetched from a mans ſelf, and from the uncertainty of the World in ſhaking troubles; one God in the one Mediator outballanceth all thoſe things whence men commonly gather their ſupports. 'Tis as much as if he had ſaid, you have fancyed great things to your ſelves, you thought to have had great employments under that Earthly Royalty you imagin'd I ſhould be poſſeſſed with; and no doubt but I ſhould have had a regard to ſuch friends as you are, that have followed me in my perplext condition, had ſuch a Kingdom been deſign'd me; but I would not have your Souls ſo mean and low; take a higher flight, nouriſh your ſelves with hopes of a purer Glory, and more durable Manſions which I am going to prepare for you; a temporal Grandeur will only ſtupifie your fears, not ſtab them to the heart; but the conſideration of what I propoſe to you, will perfectly diſpatch them.

In the Text you ſee

1. An Act: Believe in God.
2. The Object: In God, In me.
3. The Fruit and Effect of it, [Let not your heart be troubled.

I ſhall ſpeak of the Object, and the Doctrine reſulting thence will be,

Doctrine. God and Chriſt are in conjunction, the true and proper Object of Faith. Read it which way you will, this is the reſult of it; he doth not diſcourage their Faith in God, but encourageth that, together with Faith in himſelf. Every act hath ſomething about which it is exerciſed; Faith is an act of the Soul, it muſt therefore have an Object upon which it is terminated. God is the Object of Faith according to his preſent diſpenſation, which is the manifeſtation of himſelf as a reconcil'd God through a Mediator. As he is a God of Grace and Peace, he is an Object of Faith, and Truſt, and Joy; but Grace and Peace are not manifeſted, not given forth, not multiplyed ſimply by the knowledge of God, but alſo of Jeſus our Lord; 2 Pet. 1. 2. Grace and peace be multiplyed unto you through the knowledge of God, and Jeſus our Lord: Not by the knowledge of God alone, nor by the knowledge of Chriſt alone, but of God in the Mediator Chriſt, in whom only he is known to be our God in the Covenant of Grace, the ſpring of all our Comfort; the knowledge of God, and Jeſus our Lord; i. e. the knowledge of God in Jeſus our Lord Ἐν διὰ δυοῖν; as Rom. 1. 5. Grace and Apoſtleſhip, i. e. Grace of Apoſtleſhip.

God is not the Object of Faith now as Creator; he was ſo in the ſtate of mans rectitude, and could not be conſider'd by the Creature in any other notion; but in our lapſed ſtate God is not only conſider'd as Creator, but as the offended Majeſty, and consequently as Judge,and we cannot behold him,but incompast with scorching flames about his Throne; he that exerciseth Faith in God meerly as Creator, understands not the present condition of Humane Nature, the malignity of his own provocations, nor the glorious perfections of Righteousness, Veracity, Justice, which are essential to the Deity. Though the fall of man did not null the relation of God as Creator, which stands irreversible, yet it added another relation to him, that of a Judge, and crackt in pieces all grounds and props of a trust in him for the expressions of kindness, and set up only the expectation of a mighty revenge, according to his threatning. You find no other sentiments in Adam after his Rebellion; not the least mite of a trust in God, though he had newly come out of the hands of God, and the relation of a Creator was fresh and flourishing; and why any of his posterity should have other sentiments than he had, in this single relation I cannot conceive any ground from the revelation of God; he beats the hands of the Creature off from expecting any Salvation from him upon that account. Isa. 27. 11. 'Tis a people of no understanding, therefore he that made them, will have no mercy on them, and he that formed them, will shew them no favour. 'Tis spoken upon the wasting of Jerusalem, and laying it desolate; yet, he adds for their comfort, that in that day he would gather them, and they should worship the Lord in the Holy Mount at Jerusalem. As he was their Creator, or under the notion of a Creator, they must expect nothing from him, since they were a people of no understanding, as all men in Adam are; who being in honour, and understanding not, i. e. not walking according to the knowledge they had, became like the Beasts that perish: But what they were to expect from him, was, as he was God Redeemer, expresst by the worship of him in the Holy Mount at Jerusalem,alluding to the Ceremonial worship,a Type of Christ,the way whereby men were to come to God,and Blessings to be convey'd from God to them; he would not be the Object of their expecting Faith, nor of their Religious Worship as Creator, but as God Redeemer: And though Peter speaks of committing of Souls to God, as unto a faithful Creator, 1 Pet. 4. 19. 'tis not to be understood of God in the first Creation, but the second; and the attribute faithful annext to Creator, evinceth it; for though faithfulness be a perfection of the Deity, yet it is not apparent in the Act of Creation; in relation to that Act, 'tis the powerful, wise, good Creator, but faithfulness respects the promise and Covenant of Grace; As Righteousness is a fit Attribute for a Judge, and so God is called, when he is spoken of under that Title, 2 Tim. 4. 8. so powerful is a fit Attribute of the Creator, as consider'd in the first material Creation of the World. How had God ingag'd himself in Creation to preserve the Soul of man, but in a way of Obedience? Suffering was not to be expected in a state of Innocence, and it is the committing of our Soul to God in a suffering state, that the Apostle speaks of; his engagements to this purpose are in his promises made pursuant to the Covenant of Grace; but he is called Creator here, in regard of the new Creation, as he is called the Creator of Israel, and their King; Isa. 43. 15. as he is their Holy One, sanctifying them through his Grace; he is no more the Creator of Israel in a way of appropriation, if you consider him so in the first Creation, than he is of the fallen Angels, and the Beasts of the Earth; but as he form'd them into a Church, he was peculiarly their Creator; but this Creation respected the Messiah, and so doth this in Peter respect Christ, in whom all the promises wherein Gods faithfulness lyes at pawn, are Yea, and Amen. He is the Creator of Believers, as they are sons of the promise; and therefore Calvin inclines to interpret the Word translated Creator here as Possessor; and the word doth sometimes in Heathen Authors, though rarely,signifie preserver or restorer. * Yet is not the Title of God as Creator excluded from an object of trust; for since Christ hath restor'd in part the Soul to the Image of God, which it had by Creation, it may expect from God as Creator, a faithfulness to his own image, and his service, but not singly as Creator, but in conjunction with the Redeemer.

* Stephanus in Verbo Κτίζω

I shall lay down some propositions for the clearing of this.

1. God is the Object of Faith.

I. God is the principal Object of Faith and Trust. The whole Revelation in Scripture tends to the knowledge of God; why did God create, but that he might be known known to be omnipotent and good? why did God send Christ, but that he might be known to be merciful and gratious? Whatsoever is revealed in the Word, and concerning Christ in particular, hath a direct tendency to God, and the knowledge of him, and this practical duty which follows thereupon. John 17. 3. This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

1. God in his Attributes. He is an Object of Faith as made known to us, but he is made known to us in some perfections of his Nature, as encouragements to approach to him, and ground our hopes in him; and he is an Object of Faith in every one of his distinct Attributes, in his Power, Wisdom, Goodness, and Righteousness, according to our several occasions and circumstances; for he is the Object of Faith, as he is a God in Covenant, Our God; and he is our God in every Attribute, which makes up that glorious Nature; and those perfections of his Nature were made known in Christ, that he might be known not only speculatively, but fiducially; the name of God was in him, Exod. 23. 21. in that Angel of the Covenant. Whatsoever was knowable of God, was unvail'd in Christ, as the exact and perfect medium wherein we may have a prospect of God; there was more of Wisdom, and more of power discovered in uniting the God-head to the Man-hood; more of Goodness, Grace, Righteousness, Holiness, which are all attractives to seek God, and lay hold upon him, than made known any other way; and all were discovered to promote that great Doctrine of Faith preacht by Christ and the Apostles.

2. Particularly the veracity of God is the first Object, or ground of Faith. He is not the first Object of Faith in any Attribute, but his veracity. As God creates the World as powerful, and punisheth the wicked as he is just, and pardons sin as he is merciful, and provides for all as he is good; so he is believed on as true in the first motion of the Soul to him. The first act of Faith considers God as true in his promise, and powerful to accomplish it: This is life eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent; John 17. 3, Ἀληθινὸς, signifies verax, as well as verus; not only true in thy Nature, but true in thy Word; the only true God in Jesus Christ, in whom there was the performance of the first and greatest promise made in Paradise; by the same figure spoken of before ἐν δυσὶ δυοῖν. As in loving God, we have his goodness for the immediate Object, in hoping in him, we center in his power, so in our first assent to him, we fix our eye upon his truth. * For when any declaration is proposed as from God, the first act is an inquiry whether it be from God, or no; when the result of that inquiry is this, that God speaks and declares this, the assent to it is moved by the consideration of the truth of God; for to a belief of any thing that is offer'd, there is necessary first an evidence, that the declarer is not deceived, and that he will not willingly deceive others; in the believing that God cannot be deceived, Faith respects the certainty of his knowledge; in believing that he will not deceive, and so making his word the object of our relyance, Faith respects the certainty of his faithfulness and veracity. The promise is the object of trust, the reason why I trust the promiser, is his fidelity and constancy to his word. That is not Faith, which respects not either a command, promise, or threatning, in all which, the faithfulness and veracity of the person urging the præcept, or uttering the threatning, or making the promise, comes first into consideration. But justifying Faith respects chiefly the promise; hence Believers are called the children of the promise; Rom. 9. 8. Gal. 4. 28. because by Faith they entertain the promise; and as it is an assent, it hath for its object the unerring truth of God; and as it is a consent and relyance, it still principally eyes the same for the accomplishment of what he hath ingag'd to do for us in his word, and the first language of Faith in receiving the testimony of Christ, is a testifying, or setting to the seal that God is true; John 3. 33. that he hath been as good as his word, and makes good what he promised to our first Parents, and repeated several times since in other language.

* Suarez. vol. 8. p. 65.

3. But Faith doth ultimately center in the Deity. God himself in his glorious Nature is the ultimate object whereinto our Faith is resolv'd. The promise simply consider'd, is not the Object of trust, but God in the promise; and from the consideration of that we ascend to the Deity, and cast our Anchor there: Hope in the Word is the first act, but succeeded by hoping in the Lord; Psal. 130. 5, 7. In his word do I hope, that is not all, but let Israel hope in the Lord; that is the ultimate object of Faith, wherein the essence of our happiness consists, and that is God; God himself is the true and full portion of the Soul. If it be askt * why we believe God? the answer is, because he is true. If it be askt why God is true? the answer is, because he is God, and cannot be God, unless he were true; no further answer can be given; in this the Soul doth acquiesce as a full resolution; so that though Faith in the first act respects the Truth of God, yet it is ultimately resolved into the Deity it self.

* Suarez. vol. 3. p. 64.

4. It particularly centers in the Deity, as the Author of Redemption. (Psal. 130. 7, 8. Let Israel hope in the Lord, for with him is plenteous redemption, and he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities) and takes away all the oppressive and provoking guilt of the Soul by that Redemption, which like a vast Ocean knows no bounds. As God was the first in forming the design of Creation, so he was the first in laying the platform of Redemption, and appointing Christ to be a Sacrifice for the Expiation of our sins, and Ransom of our Souls. As our Thanksgivings are to be directed to him as he is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Ephes. 1. 3. so is our Faith: this was the Title he assum'd, and he is the Father of Glory, in being the God of our Lord Jesus Christ. v. 17. He was the orderer of all those glorious acts Christ did, and that purchase he made. He is the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, not in regard of his Divine Nature, wherein there is not a superiority of power, though a priority of Order, Christ in regard of his Divine Nature not being inferiour to, but equal with God: But in regard of his Mediatory Office, as he was the Embassador of God, and his righteous Servant acting by his Commission and Authority according to his particular instructions; and in regard of the Covenant between them. He is said to be the God of Christ, as he is said to be the God of Abraham, not in regard of his creating him, but in a more special manner, as being in Covenant with him. Now Faith looks through the Embassador to the Prince that imploys him, and through the Servant, to the Lord that sends him, and to the person that first propos'd the terms of the Covenant, and reveal'd his Everlasting purpose of saving sinners by Christ. Faith looks beyond the time of Christs conversing in the Flesh, and sealing the Covenant by his Blood; it looks to the everlasting platform of it in the bosom of the Deity, beyond the beam of it in the Incarnation and Death of Christ, beyond the first promise of it in Paradise. Habb. 1. 13. Art thou not from Everlasting, O Lord, my God, my Holy One? The Prophet looks back to the Everlasting Springs of it in the heart of the Deity, and pierceth to the first point of the resolve, and thence concludes we shall not dye: It was not barely the Eternity of God he considers there; for that simply consider'd, might be an argument for the restoration and the sanctification of Devils, as well as Israel. But God from Everlasting, as his God, and his Holy one, as resolving upon a Covenant of Grace, and to be a Sanctifier of his people, and from thence his Faith draws a conclusion of an impossibility of dying, and a certain assurance of enjoying Life. And the Apostles Faith looked to Christ as the medium, by whom are all things, but to the Father of whom, by whose Authority all things are: 1 Cor. 8. 6. Faith doth not stick only in Christ, but mounts up to the Deity, as the Fountain and Spring of all; He that believes on me, believes not on me saith Christ, but on him that sent me. John 12. 44. Not on me chiefly, not on me solely; it must pierce through the vail to the Original Wisdom that contriv'd, and the Original Authority that enacted, and the Grace which inspir'd every action of the Mediator. God is the ultimate Object of Faith in all our considerations of Christ; to this purpose he was raised, that our faith and hope might be in God; 1 Pet. 1. 21. that it might not stick immoveably in Christ, Rom. 4. 24. but be as a Ladder to get up, and clasp about the highest and the antient of days. In Christ we see first the smiles of God, in him we hear the tender voice of his Bowels, in him we feel the lively and affectionate motions of his heart; when we have fixed on Christ, Faith rests not there, but ascends ultimately to God as the great promoter of this design, by whose Authority all was transacted, and before whom all is to be finished, as to him who set out this propitiation for sin, and keeps in his own hand the royalty of pardoning Iniquity.

2. Christ

2. Christ is the object of Faith. God alone was the object of truſt in the ſtate of innocence, and under the Covenant of Works; the Covenant do this and live, being eſtabliſhed between God and Man without a Mediator, none could be the object of Truſt for the performance of the promiſe upon condition of obedience, but God in the ſimplicity of his own being without any other relation. But under the Covenant of Grace which is ſetled in a Mediator, Believe this and Live, Chriſt the Mediator is an object of Faith, though God be ſtill the ultimate object; becauſe we believe in him, that he will give us Life and Salvation for the merit of this Mediator in whom we believe firſt.

1. Therefore Chriſt is the immediate Object of Faith: As he by whom all the Councels of Redemption were executed, as he who aſſum'd our Nature, to ſuffer in it for the ſatisfaction of Divine Juſtice, and was raiſed again to tranſact our affairs and manifeſt the value, and infinite fulneſs of that ſatisfaction. We cannot look upon God under any other notion than that of an incenſed Governour and Judge, if we well apprehend the condition of lapſed man; unleſs we behold him in and through a Mediator, the terrors of his Majeſty would confound us, we dare not look him in the face becauſe of our vileneſs as Sinners, we muſt firſt therefore faſten our eyes upon the Mediator, and then upon God. The Mercy of God in pardoning Sin is that which Faith exerciſeth it ſelf about, the ſatisfactory death of Chriſt upon the account of ſin to be pardoned, muſt be the firſt and immediate object of this Faith; Chriſt muſt firſt be known, becauſe the riches of Divine Grace are knowable and manifeſted only in him; God ſpeaks not a word of Mercy out of this propitiatory: Faith being an applying the Reconciliation and Mercy obtain'd, it muſt conſider and beleive the ſatisfaction of Divine Juſtice whereby it was obtain'd. Before any man can think to ſtand before the face of Gods Juſtice, and be admitted into the ſecret delights of his Mercy, and Riches of his Grace, he muſt conſider this Mediator as appeaſing God, and conſider the voice of God proclaiming himſelf appeaſed in his Son, Matth. 3. 17. We are firſt to believe and reſt upon the ſtrength and value of this ſacrifice, and with this in the hands of our Faith go to God with a further act of Faith, for an application to us of what was purchaſed for us. Tis by him we believe in God, 1 Pet. 1. 21. we muſt firſt therefore believe in him; the Faith therefore that juſtifies, is called the Faith of Chriſt, Gal. 2. 16. and in other places 'tis called a coming to God by Chriſt, Heb. 7. 24. Tis therefore firſt a coming to Chriſt to bring us to God. We cannot come to the Father but by him, as he ſpeaks in the ſame chapter where the Text is verſe 6. purſuant to the Doctrine he had laid down in the firſt verſe, and muſt firſt therefore come to him as the Way, the Truth, and the Life. 'Tis in him, and by the Faith of him, that we have acceſs with confidence. Eph. 3. 12. There muſt firſt be a coming to him to be inſpir'd with confidence; he that will come to the Holy of Holies, muſt paſs through the vail: thus Chriſt is brought in in the Prophet proclaiming himſelf the object of Faith, Iſaiah 45. 22. Look to me and be you ſaved, all the ends of the Earth; 'tis that perſon is introduced ſpeaking, to whom every knee ſhould bow, that perſon in whom we have Righteouſneſs and Strength, that perſon in whom all the Seed of Iſrael ſhould be juſtified, verſe 23, 24, 25. Tis in him we can find all things neceſſary for our deliverance from the ruine ſin hath brought upon us, whatſoever is neceſſary to reſtore us to the happineſs we have loſt. In him is Righteouſneſs, to remove our variance with God, and Sanctification to clear us from what may be offenſive to the eyes of his Holineſs; and therefore the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. 1. 1. calls Chriſt our hope, i. e. the object of our hope, as God is called the fear of Iſaac. Gen. 31. 53. The Iſraelites Worſhip was directed towards the Tabernacle and Temple where the Ark was placed, their thoughts were to be fixed on that; ſo all the motions of our ſouls muſt be directed to Chriſt, and in and by him to God. And therefore Faith in regard of this immediateneſs of it is appropriated to Chriſt as the proper and proxim object, and called Faith in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in regard of his Mediating and reconciling us; whereas Repentance reſpects God immediately who hath been offended by us, and therefore called Repentance towards God, Acts 20. 21.

2. Chriſt was always in the times of the Patriarchs the object of Faith, and the immediate object, though not ſo diſtinct as now.

1. He was the immediate object of their Faith. As he is the object of Faith now, as actually deſtroying the works of the Devil, ſo he was the object of Faith then, as potentially bruiſing the head of the Serpent; the object was always the ſame, though diverſifyed; they beleived in the Meſſiah to be incarnate, thoſe that lived in the days of his Fleſh believed in his preſent incarnation and paſſion, thoſe that lived after believed in him as dying and riſing; the Faith was the ſame for ſubſtance, the ſame for object, only differenced in point of time, future, preſent, paſt.

1. Tis clear of David, Pſal. 110. 1. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, he calls him his Lord, that was his Son, Luke 22. 44. Obſerve, when he ſpeaks of God, or the Father, or the Deity ſingly conſidered, 'tis the Lord; but when of Chriſt, 'tis my Lord, a more particular application and appropriation of the one than of the other.

2. 'Tis as clear of Moſes, Heb. 11. 26. Eſteeming the reproaches of Chriſt greater riches, than the treaſures of Ægypt; what eſteem could he have of the reproach of Chriſt, if he never knew or believed any thing of him? Upon what account ſhould he refuſe ſo great an earthly honour to be treated as the Son of Pharaohs Daughter, but upon ſome higher account than the hopes of injoying an earthly Canaan, not a better Land in it ſelf than Ægypt which was counted the fruitfulleſt ſpot in the World? It was certainly the promiſe of the ſeed wherein all Nations ſhould be bleſſed, and which he might be twitted with by the Ægyptians.

3. 'Tis plain of Abraham. The Goſpel was preached to him in that promiſe, in thee ſhall all the Nations of the Earth be bleſſed, Gal. 3. 8. Abraham in ſome ſort underſtood it as God preached it; it cannot be thought God ſhould preach the Goſpel to him and he underſtand nothing of Goſpel in it; and as it was preached to him to raiſe his Faith, ſo it was entertained by him with a ſutable act of Faith, he eyed the Mediator in it, who was to bleſs all Nations, and remove the curſe which Adam had brought upon his poſterity. He is called the Father of us all in regard of his believing, Rom. 4. 16. The Father of us all, of all the Believers among the Romans, who were not all of Jewiſh extraction; ſo the Apoſtle underſtands that promiſe made unto him, thou ſhalt be the Father of many Nations, i. e. of many Believers among many Nations, he ſhould be a copy and pattern of their Faith, which could not well be, if he had not the ſame object of Faith that they were afterwards to have, and had not for ſubſtance the ſame proſpect of Chriſt. He did ſee the day of Chriſt in that promiſe and was glad, John 8. 56. that which was the matter of his joy, muſt be the object of his Faith; if he rejoyc'd in the day of his appearing, he believ'd in the perſon who was to appear in that day, Joy is ſo far from being without a belief, that it is a branch that ſprings from that root.

4. Enoch pleaſed God by Faith, and walked with him. Two cannot walk together unleſs they be agreed. But there was no agreement between God and lapſed man but in the reconciling Mediator, for God out of the promiſed ſeed was as terrible then, as God out of Chriſt is now.

5. By Faith Abel offered a Sacrifice, Heb. 11. 4. It muſt be a belief in the perſon ſignified by that ſacrifice. God was not the object of his Faith barely as Creator, the firſt threatning of death, which he could not well be unacquainted with, put a bar to that; but it muſt be a Faith in God as a promiſer, and ſo had the matter of the promiſe, the ſeed, for its object; it was ſuch a Faith whereby he believed God to be a Rewarder, verſe 6. which he could have no proſpect of but in the redeeming declaration. It was ſuch a Faith upon which God pronounc'd him Righteous, which could not be as he ſtood upon his natural corrupted bottom; he looked for a Righteouſneſs in and by that which was repreſented by his Sacrifice, and he obtain'd a witneſs from Heaven that he was Righteous. 'Tis very likely his ſacrifice was accompanyed with petitions for the haſtning the appearance of that ſeed, and thankſgivings to God for making that gratious promiſe, and performing thoſe acts of Grace after the fall, which neceſſary attendants were neglected by Cain. It cannot be ſuppoſed that Abel could be ignorant of the promiſe, unleſs we can ſuppoſe Adam ſo forgetful of it, as never to mention that which could be his only ſupport in his removal from Paradiſe; he that knew the delights of his original ſtate, cannot be imagined to ſlight a cordial ſo neceſſary to keep up his Spirits in his exil'd condition; the reflection upon his former ſtate muſt needs fill his mind with a ſence of the curſe he at the preſent lay under; and this would by conſequence mind him of the remedy God had provided for it; and with what pleaſing eye could he look upon his children whom he had brought into that miſery, without putting (as I may ſpeak) like a tender Nurſe ſome of the Cordial into their mouths.

6. That Adam exerciſ'd a Faith immediately upon this object, the promiſed ſeed, is not difficult to repreſent to you from Gen. 3. 20. And Adam called his wives name Eve, becauſe ſhe was the mother of all living; חַיָּה of all living, in the ſingular number, or the Mother of him, that was to enliven all that were to be enlivened, of that latter Adam, who was to be made a quickning Spirit, of that perſon who was to communicate Life to the World; or if we underſtand it of all living in the plural number, he includes himſelf then. But ſhe could not be the Mother of him according to an Animal Life, but as one to be ſpiritually quickned and reſtor'd by the ſeed of the Woman; he gave this name to his Wife juſt after the ſentence of Death, and returning to duſt, pronounced upon him, v. 19. and had he been poſſeſſed only with an horrour of that ſentence, he would rather have called her the Mother of all dying, than of all living; and the name Eve ſignifying Life, ſhows that he did not ſo much in this name reſpect her as a Mother, but that Life which was to be brought forth into the World by her ſeed, that reſtoration promiſed; and giving her this name juſt after the ſentence of returning to duſt, he doth evidence his Faith in that ſeed, whereby man that was ſentenced to Death ſhould live again; the Holy Ghoſt placing this impoſition of a new name upon her (who was before called Iſha woman) juſt after the ſentence of Death, is not without an intimation that Adam looked beyond the ſentence of Death, to the promiſe made before of bruiſing that Enemy, whoſe ſubtlety had brought upon him that Judgment, and laid hold on that promiſe to ſupport him againſt the ſentence of returning to duſt. Such a relation to the promiſe it muſt have; we can hardly think that Adam in the ſtate of his fall, and under ſo gratious a word of deliverance, ſhould be guilty of ſo great a pride, as in a vaunt and contempt of the Divine ſentence, to call her the Mother of all living, who had brought Death upon the World. How could he call her the Mother of all living, when he had juſt before heard that he was to return to duſt, if he had not reſpected a better, and a higher Life than that ſhort one he was to paſs in the World, and reſpected alſo the cauſe of it? Had he reſpected only an Animal Life, he might as well have called himſelf the Father of all living, ſince we find the name of Abraham and Sarah changed upon the giving the promiſe. But without queſtion, he had reſpect in this to the Meſſiah, who was to be the ſeed of the Woman in appropriating this Title to her.* And ſhe might be called the Mother of all living, in regard of her Faith, as Sarah is called the Mother of all Believing Women; 1 Pet. 3. 6. becauſe the promiſe mentioning only the ſeed of the Woman, and not of the Man, might give her occaſion firſt to exerciſe a faith in it before Adam did. Beſides, that particle And, And Adam called his Wife Eve, &c. linking it with what went before v. 20. wherein Death was pronounced, ſhows that he conſidered the promiſe of reſtoration as his ſupport in that ſtate; ſo that the Meſſiah in the promiſe, or the ſeed of the Womvn to bruiſe the Serpents head, was the immediate Object of his faith.

7. Eve alſo expreſſeth her Faith in this ſeed. Gen. 4. 1. When Eve bare Cain, ſhe ſaid, I have gotten a man from the Lord. 'Tis true, the word אֵת is ſometimes the note of other caſes, as well as the accuſative, as Exod. 1. 1. with Jacob, where it is the ſame particle אֵת and Gen. 5. 22. Enoch walked with God אֵת; and ſome interpret it from the Lord, i. e. by Gods gift and favour: Others, with the Lord: Others, A Man, the Lord. It doth not ſeem to be any ſtraining of the Text, to render it a Man, the Lord, as reſpecting the promiſed ſeed in her Son the firſt ſeed God was pleaſed to give her, giving him the name Cain, * as if he were the perſon that were to repoſſeſs them again of Paradiſe, and reſtore them to their happy Eſtate. As a little before Adam had manifeſted his Faith in the name Eve, which he gave to his Wife, and the reaſon of it, ſo in the Birth of Cain there might be as fit an occaſion for manifeſting the Faith of Eve; and it is very probable there might be ſomething more in it, than barely an acknowledgement of a meer child child from God, and ſome regard to the promiſe; ſince we find no ſpecial remark upon any name preſently after, but what did refer to that promiſe, as that upon Noah, of whom Lamech ſaid, Gen. 5. 29. This ſame ſhall comfort us concerning our work and toyl of our hands, becauſe of the ground which the Lord hath curſed, for the return of the Sons of men, (adds Jonathan;) which doth evidently point to that promiſed ſeed, whereby he expected the curſe to be taken off the ground; and though they both err'd in their conception of the perſons, yet it was a ſign they bore a ſence of the promiſe in their minds, and that Eve bore Chriſt in the womb of her Faith, though Cain, whom ſhe bore in the Womb of her Body, was not that ſpecial ſeed. This particle אֵת, between two Nowns, Grammarians ſay, doth ſpecifie the perſon, or thing ſpoken of; as Ezek. 34. 23. I will ſet one ſhepherd over them, even David my Servant. And it is to be conſidered that an antient Paraphraſt, [Jonathan ben Uzziel] who beſt underſtood the idiom of the Hebrew Language, explains it ſo; A man the Lord. And the objection againſt this interpretation, that Eve err'd in her imagination of the birth of the promiſed ſeed to be like the birth of other men, ſignifies not much; ſo did Lamech in the birth of Noah; yet his ſpeech cannot be denyed to have ſome reſpect to the promiſe; and why may not both their errors be very well aſcribed to the vehemency of their longing, (which argued the greatneſs of their Faith) and the obſcurity of the revelation? That there ſhould be ſuch a ſeed, was manifeſt to them from the truth of God: But the manner how this ſeed ſhould be brought forth into the World, whether of a Virgin, was hid from them, and not revealed till many ages after. I do not ſee any inconvenience in thus interpreting this place; as if Eve ſhould have ſaid, I have gaind that very Man, the Lord; that Divine perſon promiſed to be the Conqueror of the Serpent, that hath been the cauſe of bringing this miſery upon us.

8. All thoſe that believed under the Law, had their Faith pitcht upon the Meſſiah. We may eaſily perceive by the whole 11. ch. to the Hebr. that the ſubſtance of Faith was always the ſame, and therefore the object of Faith was in the groſs, confuſedly, or diſtinctly, the ſame; upon this account * all Believers from the beginning of the World may be called Chriſtians. Whatſoever the Ceremonies of the Church might be, their Faith had the ſame foundation, was of the ſame tenure, upon the promiſed ſeed it was pitched, and the bruiſing of the Serpent, and removing of the curſe by it was longed for; the whole myſtery of propheſie was deſign'd for the encouragement, and ſupport of this Faith. Eating and Drinking are Metaphors to ſignifie Faith in its applicatory act; this the Antients are ſaid to do, They eat Chriſt in the Manna, and drank Chriſt in the Rock. 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4. They came to God as a Rewarder; that was as neceſſary to be conſidered by them, as the exiſtence of a God to be believed by them. Heb. 11. 6. Not as a Rewarder in a way of Nature; they could not but know Adams fall to be a diſcouragement to ſuch expectations: But in a way of Grace, according to the promiſe made to Adam after the fall. This Meſſiah the Church perpetually held under all the corruptions of Ages, and the abuſes of the Watchmen, and would not let him go. Cant. 3. 4. They had the ſame fruits of Faith under the Law, and therefore the ſame ſubſtantial Object of Faith as we have under the Goſpel; all that were juſtified and ſaved, had the ſentence of Juſtification pronounced upon them, on no other account, than we have; which Paul labours to evidence in ſeveral places; eſpecially, Rom. 4. throughout the whole Chapter in the examples of Abraham and David. Their Juſtification was by Faith, which Faith was imputed to them for righteouſneſs; and what that Faith was, the Apoſtle plainly decyphers; v. 23, 24. It was written for us, to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead. If his Faith were of another kind, and had another object, God alone, and not God in Chriſt; it could not have been ſo poſitively ſaid, it was written for our ſakes. It is a Faith in God through Chriſt that is imputed to us under the Goſpel for Juſtification. It was a Faith in God through the Meſſiah that was imputed to them. It was imputed to them, it ſhall be imputed to us; the ſame Faith pitcht upon the ſame Object; it would not be any ſtrong arguing in the Apoſtle, that Abraham and we ſhould be alike juſtified by Faith, if our Faith and his were not the ſame, and imbraced not the ſame Object. All that were ſanctified, were perfected by Christ. Heb. 10. 14. If any came to the Father, they came by him; because no man comes to the Father, but by that true, and living way; John 14. 6. they antiently embraced the promises, Heb. 11. 13. what? With the neglect of the first and root-promise, to which all the other promises were but Appendixes, or Comments upon it? Could they embrace the Comments, and act Faith upon nothing of the Text? It was an Heavenly Inheritance they expected, For they confest themselves Strangers and Pilgrims on the Earth. And v. 10. They looked for a City, whose builder and maker is God: A City having Foundations, i. e. an immutable State, which they could not do, if they had not exercis'd their Faith about that first promise, which took off the execution of the first threatning, and promis'd the ruine of that Enemy which had ruin'd their health they had in the first Creation; and could all this be without a Faith in that Messiah, who was to be the worker of those glorious things, who was indeed the Author and Finisher of Faith; the Author of it, or the Foundation of it in the antient Israelites, in the Types and Figures; and the finisher and compleater of it in his appearance in the Flesh, and bloody passion, wherein he laid the top-stone.

This may be further cleared, if we consider

1. Sacrifices in themselves could be no content and satisfaction to them, nor the proper object of their Faith. They could not but be sensible of too great a burden to be taken off from them, and supported by the weakness of a Lamb; they could not but be sensible of too deep a stain to be washed off from them by the Blood of a little Kid, or a greater quantity of it in a Heifer. Could they possibly imagine that brutish blood could open the Gates of Heaven, and eat through those Bars that Justice had fixed upon them? Or the smoak of the Carkass of a slain beast could sweeten the stench of their sins? 'Tis an injury to the Faith of those worthies so highly celebrated Heb. 11. to think that it fell so flat, and was drown'd in the blood and bowels of Beasts, and mounted no higher than the smoak of their Entrails; that they expected no higher Expiation, and no higher contentment as the issue of these things. Though some of those worthies wandred about in Sheep-skins, and Goat-skins, Heb. 11. 37. yet their Faith was not wrapped up in the skins of Lambs, or Hides of Heifers, since they had so often heard by the Prophets, that those things were not pleasing to God in themselves, that he did not eat the flesh of Bulls, and drink the blood of Goats. Psal. 50. 13. Though they knew God true to perform his promise, and merciful to pity their miseries, yet they knew him to be of a pure and spiritual Nature, above any delight in a ceremonious pomp, and too just to be appeas'd by an herd of consecrated Animals. The groans, and repeated desires of the antient Saints for the consolation of Israel, that the salvation of Israel would come out of Sion, their hungry waitings for Gods Salvation, manifested that those things were thought too weak by them to ease them of their burdens, to procure the good things they felt the need of. If their Faith had been confin'd to those Sacrifices, if it had here taken its rest, and laid its head at ease upon a pillow of Beasts skins, what ground was there for those groans, those ardent desires for another kind of Salvation, even when they were in the most prosperous, and flourishing condition; tasting every day of the Milk and Hony of Canaan, and setled in a ceremonious worship of Gods institution? Surely their Faith ascended above the blood and smoak of the Sacrifices, to the Throne of the Messiah; Sacrifices were the Gospel in a rough draught, not with the perfect lineaments.

2. They could not but apprehend some mystery in these Ceremonies, and use them as assistances of their Faith, and as means to conduct it to the right object. They could not but apprehend them to be rather the representations of the true object of Faith, than to be the proper Object themselves. It can hardly be imagin'd, that all the Israelites stuck in the shell of Sacrifices and Ceremonies; that their Eyes were terminated to the outward Pomp, and bloody Offerings, without any respect to some mystery in them; they could not but conjecture that those Types were significant of some great work to be done; * it could never enter into the understanding of rational men, that all that corporeal Worship was injoyn'd for it self, and that those multitudes of Ceremonies were without a signification of something to them; when there were such perpetual orders about the

Ta-

Tabernacle, the meaneſt Utenſils of it, the Ark, and propitiatory, the Cherubims to overſhadow it, the ſhew-bread, the Sacrifices, the Scape-goat, it was known to them, that all thoſe had a reſpect to the expiation of ſin, and therefore muſt repreſent ſome other greater thing, which might be ſufficient for the expiation, ſince they could not but judge thoſe things too feeble to attain ſo great an end of themſelves, or elſe they muſt have very unworthy, and unbecoming notions of God, and very ſlight imaginations of the deep taint original ſin had left upon their Natures; with which we cannot imagine that the minds of believers could be poſſeſſed. They knew that God was infinitely wiſe, that in every thing that he did and ordered, there was ſomething to be underſtood by them: Could they think that the paſſage through the Red-Sea was intended only to deliver them, and had no further aim, ſince God could have delivered them many other ways, ſtruck the Enemy dead upon their march, or inabled the Iſraelites to overcome them in a plain fight? The wiſer at leaſt might well think that the Manna, Rock, the Serpent lifted up in the Wilderneſs for the healing of the people, and many other actions of God among them, had ſomething myſterious in them, though they could not diſcern every lineament of that myſtery. Did they not all tend to the encouragement of their Faith, purſuant to the firſt promiſe; and was the deſign of them altogether unknown to thoſe for whoſe ſake they were appointed? If they were all baptiz'd in the Red-Sea, can we think that all were ignorant of ſomething of the ſpiritul meaning of it: 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2, 3, 4. Did they eat Chriſt in the Manna, and drink Chriſt in the Rock? Did they eat the ſpiritual meat, and drink the ſpiritual drink, (for that is the Apoſtles aſſertion) and did all of them eat and drink it unſpiritually, without any underſtanding of the general ſpiritual ſignification of it? Our Fathers, ſaith the Apoſtle, ſpeaking to the Gentile Corinthians; the Iſraelites were not the Corinthians Fathers according to the Fleſh, but their Fathers in Faith; the Faith then the Iſraelites had in the Type, muſt reſpect the Antitype, Chriſt; upon whom only the Faith of the Corinthians was pitched. That could not be the ſame Faith that had two different objects, as diſtant from one another, as Heaven from Earth; can a Faith in the Meſſiah, and a Faith terminated only in corporeal Manna, and the liquid waters of a Rock, be accounted a Faith equally great, and of the ſame kind? The Nature of Faith, as well as any other act of the Soul or Body, is quite changed by the object about which it is converſant: The myſtery of thoſe things could not be altogether unknown to ſo many thouſands. Would God not hide from Abraham the thing which he would do about Sodom, ſince Abraham ſhould become a mighty Nation, and that God knew that he would command his Children, and his Houſhold after him to keep the way of the Lord? Gen. 18. 17, 18, 19. And would God totally hide the myſtery vaild under thoſe things from Moſes, whom he had appointed the conductor of this people under him; one who had an excellency above all Prophets, to be known by God face to face? Deut. 34. 10. i.e. ſaith Maimonides. to have an apprehenſion of things beſtowed upon him above what any of the Prophets which followed him in Iſrael had, and one that the Spirit of God in the Hiſtory aſſociates with God himſelf as the Object of the Iſraelites Faith after the deliverance at the Red Sea, as a Type of Chriſt. * Exod. 14. ult. They feared the Lord, and believed in the Lord, and in his ſervant Moſes: For ſo the words run in the Hebrew, believed in the Lord, and in Moſes, as implying a myſtery: Can we think the myſtery was wholly obſcur'd from him? was not his mind enlightned to ſome apprehenſions of what was coucht under all thoſe things? Surely it was, and he would not conceal it to himſelf, and vail it from all the people. The Goſpel was preacht to the Iſraelites while they were in the Wilderneſs: Heb. 4. 2. Unto us was the Goſpel preached, as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. They had the word preached to them, and that word was the Goſpel; Chriſt therefore that is the ſubſtance and marrow of the Goſpel, was preached to them, preacht to them in the Types, Manna, and the Rock and the Serpent lifted up; preacht to them in the promiſe of Canaan; and who were thoſe it was preacht to? The Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs: It was to them to whom God ſware, that they ſhould not enter in his reſt; to them who had grieved him forty years, and whoſe carcaſes fell in the Wilderneſs. And why did they not enter into his reſt? Becauſe cauſe they believed not, Heb. 3. 17, 18, 19. and what was that which they did not believe? That we may not think it was only the promiſe of entring into the Land of Canaan that they thus diſcredited, he tells us that it was the Goſpel that they did not believe, the Goſpel they rejected by their murmuring againſt Manna and Canaan: Thoſe therefore that did believe among them, believed the Goſpel, pitched upon Chriſt who is the marrow of the Goſpel, they ſaw Chriſt in the Manna, and Chriſt in the pleaſant Land promiſed them, Chriſt in the Blood of the Sacrifices; the whole was the Chriſtian Religion in its rough-draught: If the Goſpel were thus preached to them, Chriſt was the object of Faith; would God preach the Goſpel to them wholly in vain, ſo that no act of an Evangelical Faith ſhould be exerciſed by any of them? Would he be at ſuch pains to ſend forth a vain ſound, ſo many ages one after another to people, to whom he would give no underſtanding, not to a man of them, in ſome meaſure of what he meant by it? It cannot be ſuppoſed that the Goſpel ſhould be preacht to them in all thoſe figures, without a Goſpel Faith exerciſed by ſome of them upon that which was repreſented by thoſe ſhadows; they had elſe been in vain and to no purpoſe to them.

3. The object of their Hope and Truſt under all that diſpenſation was the Meſſiah, and their Faith was expreſt by waiting and truſting. Jacob upon his death-bed, breathes out his ſoul in longing for Gods Salvation, or Gods Jeſus, Gen. 49. 18. I have waited for thy Salvation O Lord, and that in a very remarkable manne. Our Interpreters referre it to a prediction of Sampſon, who was of the Tribe of Dan, who was afterwards a deliverer of the Iſraelites, and ſay that Jacobs prophetick foreſight of the Dangers of that Tribe, made him break out into ſuch a pathetick expreſſion. But did not the other Tribes conflict with dangers as well as Dan? Why ſhould Jacob have ſuch an eruption of ſoul in his ſpeaking of this Tribe more than of any other which were more conſiderable, and were to undergo as great ſufferings as this. Beſides, Jacob ſpeaks not of Dan as afflicted, but as victorious, verſe 16, 17. he ſhould Judge his people, and as a Serpent overthrow the Rider. Jacob had certainly an higher conſideration. And therefore ſome of the ancient Rabbins * thus paraphraſe the words; When Jacob foreſaw Gideon and Sampſon to be the deliverers of his poſterity, he ſaith, I do not ſo much expect the Salvation by Gideon, nor the deliverance by Sampſon, which are Temporal and Created Salvations, but I expect that Redemption which thou haſt promiſed in thy word to come to Iſrael, that Salvation which ſhall be for ever. The occaſion of this ſudden ejaculation of Jacob will eaſily clear the thing. He had been ſpeaking of Dan, verſe 16, 17. and likens him to a ſerpent by the way, an Adder in the path, that bites the horſe heels ſo that his rider ſhould fall backwards; probably the ſpeaking of Dan, as a Serpent, and his ſubtilty, minded him of the trick the Serpent plaid our firſt Parents who is deſcribed Gen. 3. 1. by the quality of the ſubtileſt of all the Beaſts of the Field; and then breaks forth into an high expreſſion of Faith in that Salvation which God had promiſed againſt that Serpent. If this were not the occaſion of it, why did he not utter the ſame expreſſion upon a very fit occaſion when he had ſpoken before of the Tribe of Judah, and of Shiloes coming of that Tribe? verſe 10. But upon this occaſion only, and no other, in his whole Propheſie, doth he breath out his ſoul in ſuch an expreſſion: He kept this promiſe of the ſeed of the woman, and Salvation by him as a depoſitum in his Heart, fed upon it all his days, and makes a ſolemn confeſſion of his Faith in him in his dying poſture. The Pſalmiſt ardently expected it, as thoſe that watch for the morning, tired with a gloomy and tedious night; Pſal. 130. 6. My Soul waites for the Lord, more than they that wait for the morning, I ſay, more than they that watch for the morning. The repetition ſpeaks the vehemency of his Faith; it was after he had ſpoken of forgiveneſs of Sin being with God, verſe 4. he expreſſeth his waiting, verſe 5. I waited for the Lord, my Soul waits for the Lord, becauſe 'tis a Soul Mercy I deſire, in his word do I hope; in that firſt promiſe of the Meſſiah, and all the promiſes of pardon, and propitiation, built upon that foundation. I wait more than they that watch for the morning, when the Sacrifices are to be continued in the Temple *, my Soul waits for that Meſſiah who is to bring forth a plenteous Redemption, that Lord who is to Redeem Iſrael from all his iniquities. I wait for him in theſe Sacrifices more than thoſe do for the morning, wherein they are appointed to offer their Sacrifices. The object of their waiting was the same with that of Simeon, Luke 2. 25. The Consolation of Israel; and that Consolation was the Lord Christ, verse 26. It was the promise made to the Fathers that they hoped in; that hope of the promise, for which Paul was accused and set before a Tribunal, which was his hope in Christ, Acts 26. 6, 7. waiting and hope are the words whereby Faith is expresst in the old Testament; Faith respects things present, or past, hope respects things future, and to be exhibited; they believed the promise of the Messiah, and hoped for the accomplishment of it. Since Christ was the object of their Hope, he was also the object of their Faith. Since Faith is the root of Hope, nothing can be waited for, but what is believed to be certainly and infallibly to come to pass. Their Salvation, Propitiation of their Sins, Redemption of their Souls, they expected from Christ, and therefore their Faith must be pitched upon him before he came.

* Jonathan Ben Uzziel and Targum Hieroſolymit in loc.

* Chaldee Paraphr. in loc.

2. The second part of the proposition was, that though Christ was the immediate object of the Faith of the Antients, yet he was not so distinct an object as now.

1. They could not have a distinct knowledge, because the Revelation was dark; both in the obscurity of the Prophesies wherein it was signified, and the shadiness of the Ceremonies wherein it was represented; and from this obscurity they had many extravagant imaginations of an earthly Messiah, not in the contemptible form of a servant, but in the Royal posture of a Prince with a magnificent attendance to break the Roman Yoke; because, as the spiritual Glory of the Messiah was signifyed, so it was obscur'd also by those earthly terms; and indeed they could not well have understood those spiritual mysteries without the expressions of them in terms suted to their sence.

2. The mercy of God and the Incarnation of the Messiah they had a knowledge of, but not so clear of his death. The mercy of God was the distinct object of their Faith, that was fully revealed to secure them against the fears of Justice, and revealed to be brought about in and through the Messiah; their Faith in that was distinct, as appears Ps. 130. 3, 4. and the Publicans address was supported by the simple consideration of the Mercy of God, Luke 18. 3. but the particular methods of the discovery of this Mercy, in and by the Messiah, they were ignorant of. Yet a Messiah incarnate they were clear in, and as such he was represented as a distinct object of their Faith, and thus they considered his person, and glory and their hearts long'd for him*. They knew by the first promise, that he would be an extraordinary person, and by the Titles God had given him of his Righteous Servant, that he should be an holy Person, that he should be in high favour with God, because he was stil'd the branch, and the branch of righteousness, Zach, 6. 12. and 3. 8. Jer. 33. 15. That he was to be a King upon a glorious Throne, and a Priest of a more excellent order than Aaron, even according to the order of Melchizedeck, they could not be ignorant of, and a Prophet whose words they were not to refuse upon the peril of their Soules; such Oracles of him were plainly delivered. But what was the Religion he should settle by vertue of his Propketick Office, or the Conquests he should make, or the Government he should establish as a King, or the Sacrifices he should offer as a Priest, they did not clearly understand. Christ in all those Offices was wrapped up in Types, they had only the rough draught of a picture, the light and colours were not yet added, the vertue of all lay hid in a dispensation of shadows; though they trusted in God for a Mediator, yet they understood not the manner of the Administration of this Office, only they expected a clearness of knowledge, a firm peace, and a Salvation by him. They had a Faith in the gross, embraced the promise, saluted the things promised afar off, and rested upon the Wisdom of God to clear up all in time, and bring all about that his Grace had assur'd them of. We are not certain, that any thing besides his incarnation, and some kind of suffering was revealed to Adam; his Incarnation in his being called the Seed of the Woman, and his suffering in the bruising of his heel by the Serpent, Gen. 3. 15. but whether he understood that he was to redeem them by Death, from that expression of his bruised heel, or did collect it from the Sacrifices instituted as a representation of this way of Redemption, and a support to his Faith in it, we have no assurance. But that he did understand a Salvation, and Redemption of him and his posterity to be wrought by that seed, is evident by the promise. God doth not usually make a promise to People, but he gives gives them ſome underſtanding of that promiſe which may conduce to their refreſhment, the promiſe would be otherwiſe uſeleſs; had not Adam had ſome underſtanding of the intent of the promiſe, his deſpair could not have been remedyed, he could not with any heart have performed Worſhip to God which conſiſts in Prayer, and Thankſgiving; nor have taught his poſterity to Worſhip, if he had not underſtood ſomething of the intent of the promiſe, which he did as appears by Abels ſacrifice; and we cannot think that he omitted the Worſhip of God till the time of Seth, when the Scripture ſpeaks of it again, which was about a hundred years; and that he had no Children between is eaſily gathered from Gen. 4. 25. wherein Eve calls him a Seed inſtead of Abel. But yet the repreſentations he and his poſterity had, were at the beſt but like a bright Cloud which kept off the heat of Divine Wrath, and ſhed ſome rays upon them, not a clear Sun-ſhine; the Glory of Chriſt was in the bud, and not ſo viſible, as the Glory of a flower is hid in the bud till it comes openly to diſplay it ſelf. and then it refreſheth every ſenſe. They could not have ſuch a diſtinct view, and therefore their Faith could not ſo diſtinctly exerciſe it ſelf about every part of this Meſſiah as ours may. They ſaw the Meſſiah as we do a man at a diſtance, or in a diſguiſe; we ſee him to be a man, but know not what man, we diſcern not his diſtinct features and lineaments; they ſaw him as the Iſraelites ſaw Moſes his face through the vail, not in all its ſplendor and Glory. This indiſtinct Faith being cauſed by an imperfect Revelation did not prejudice their intereſt in the ſaving Grace of the Meſſiah, for God is ſo righteous as not to require a Faith, but what is proportion'd to the Revelation he vouchſafes. They were Members of Chriſt with their Faith in the groſs under Moſes, as well as we with our more particular Faith under Paul and the Apoſtles.

3. Our Faith muſt be more diſtinct. While the Revelation was in the groſs, a Faith in the groſs was ſufficient. But for us who have a clearer Revelation, a more diſtinct Faith is required, proportioned to the meaſure and circumſtances of the diſcovery. When they ſaw the throats of the ſacrifices cut by the Prieſt, they might know that they were Typical; but how exactly in every part they anſwered to the Antitype, neither did they know then, nor we now; but ſince we are not under Types but clear manifeſtations, ſince the fulneſs of time is come, and the vail is rent in twain, ſince Chriſt hath paſs'd through the vail of the ſhadow of death to his Throne of Glory, a confus'd Faith will not ſerve our turn. God in regard of his Veracity, Mercy and Goodneſs, was the diſtinct object of their Faith, Chriſt a more obſcure one; now one, is as diſtinct as the other. Therefore Chriſt ſays believe alſo in me, in the ſame manner, and as diſtinctly as you did believe in the Mercy and Truth of God. The former Revelation was not intended to draw out a Faith from them as explicit as ours ought to be, but was intended to confirm us who ſhould live in and after the fulneſs of time, that by the conſideration of the antient predictions, and comparing them with the after tranſactions we ſhould have our Faith ſtrengthned by them. This is clearly expreſt by Peter, 1 Pet. 1. 12. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themſelves, but unto us they did miniſter the things which are now reported unto you. By all theſe obſcure Revelations anciently, we have certain evidence of the Truth of thoſe things declar'd to us in the Goſpel.

3. Chriſt is the immediate object of Faith in his Perſon. Believe alſo in me, that I am the great perſon appointed by God for the Redemption of the World. Chriſt in this ſpeech directs them to himſelf, not to a promiſe; 'tis not believe in this or that promiſe, but in me. As Faith in God centers in the Deity, ſo Faith in Chriſt centers in his perſon. Promiſes may be a ground, yet they are not the object of a juſtifying Faith, nor are they in any ſort objects of Faith in themſelves; but in regard of the good things promiſed in them; as they contain in them the Grace of God, and the bleſſings of the Mediation of Chriſt they direct us to Chriſt; as the proclamation and promiſe of a Prince, directs and encourageth the Rebels to come in to his preſence, and ſupplicate his pardon. Faith is called a coming to Chriſt, Matth. 11. 28. which rather notes his perſon than his Doctrine. 'Tis not a Faith ſimply in his Godhead that is required by him, for ſo he is the object of Faith in the ſame manner as the Deity is; nor ſimply in his Manhood, for ſo he is no more the object of faith than another man may be; But Chriſt in his Perſon God-man. Chriſt muſt be believed in, as God gives him; God gives his Perſon firſt and then his benefits; the benefits beſtowed upon us are conſequential to the gift of his Perſon to us, Rom. 8. 32. He firſt delivered him for us, and then with him gives us all things. The bleſſings expected are not the object of our faith, but Chriſt by whom thoſe benefits were purchaſed, and by whom they are conveyed to us. God gave him as his only begotten Son, a Perſon, not a Doctrine; though he did not give him without giving him orders what Doctrine to publiſh: As God gave him, ſo we are to believe in him; believe in him, and believe on the Son, John 3. 16, 36. We can never apply our ſelves to him as the Son of God without a conſideration of his Perſon; we are ſanctified by faith that is in him, Acts 26.18. not faith in his Word ſevered from his Perſon; and indeed there can be no true faith in Chriſt, if he be not conſidered in the excellency of his Perſon; the Apoſtle therefore in the beginning of the Hebrews, an Epiſtle written to draw off the Jews from their Ceremonies to the Meſſiah, propoſeth him, Heb. 1. in his Dignity and Grandeur. As the Deity in its excellency is the ultimate object, ſo Chriſt in his eminency is the immediate object of faith. Faith reſpects Chriſt dying and meriting by his death, which it cannot do, unleſs it conſiders him in the excellency of his Perſon above that of a ſimple Man, even the Son of God ſanctified for us. His merit, had it been finite, would have been inſufficient for the weight of our ſouls, and the burden of our ſins, without the greatneſs of his Perſon. He is not only Man, then he might have fallen as the firſt Adam did, and left us in the ſame or a worſe condition: He is not only God, then he could have performed no obedience to the Law, as being not concern'd in it as a ſubject, but as a Law-giver, nor could he have offered any ſatisfaction to God as being uncapable of ſuffering in the Deity; but God and Man, fit to repair the honour of God and the fallen ſtate of the Creature. Since Chriſt as Crucified is the object of faith, what ſignificancy would his ſufferings have without the conſideration of the other, which puts ſo high a value upon his Paſſion, and communicates ſo rich an efficacy to it? We are to believe in Chriſt for the Remiſſion of ſin, which is obtain'd not ſo much by the ſacrifice, as by the quality of the ſacrifice. The Jews ſearched for their expiation in the Bowels of Beaſts, uncapable to make an atonement for them. The nature of the ſacrifice muſt be firſt conſidered, and that we cannot have a proſpect of, in the value and merit of it, till we fix the eye of our faith upon the greatneſs of his Perſon, who was thus made a ſacrifice for us. Indeed to conſider Chriſt barely in his Perſon attracts our Love more than our recumbency; to conſider him barely in his Paſſion without the excellency of his Perſon would excite neither faith nor love, but grief and horrour; to conſider him as ſuffering for us would attract our love in a way of gratitude, but to conſider him as ſuffering for us without conſidering the ability of his Perſon to relieve us by that ſuffering, would be too weak to elevate our faith to him. Reliance always reſpects ability as well as goodneſs, and affection; faith therefore reſpects the Perſon of Chriſt immediately but not abſolutely in himſelf, but as he ſtands in relation to the Father, as his Son, and his Servant.

4. Therefore Chriſt as ſent by God is the object of Faith, as ſent to ſuch an end as Redemption. Faith reſts upon Chriſt as a gift, upon God as the Donor. There is little comfort in all that Chriſt did and ſuffered, unleſs we reſpect him as one ſent by his Father; 'tis this faſtens our faith on him, and poſſeſſes our ſouls with a confidence in him; this is the magnifying Emphaſis he himſelf ſets upon his Diſciples faith, in his ſolemn pleas in heaven, if we may Judge of them by the pattern of them he gave us on Earth, John 17. 8. They have believed that thou didſt ſend me. Chriſt as ſent is the object of faith, ſince the love God in ſending Chriſt is urged as the encouragement to faith, John 3. 16. Though faith pitcheth upon Chriſts propitiating blood, yet it is under this conſideration, that he was ſet forth by God for ſuch an end, Rom. 3.25. Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through Faith in his Blood, this is neceſſary to the formal condition of faith in its cloſing and juſtifying act, without which it would be a lifeleſs and comfortleſs thing; for faith juſtifies us before God as a Judge; but can any thing be confidently and comfortably pleaded by a criminal, who doubts the Judges approbation of it? The allowance of God as a Judge upon the propitiation of Christ heartens faith in its act; it would wholly droop, nay, not go a step, if it did not see God's Authority in Christ's Action and Passion; it considers Christ not only as a Redeemer, but a Redeemer by Commission; and carries God's commission to Christ in its hand in every address to the Throne of Grace for justifying mercy. If a pardon be proclaim'd to those that shall come to such an inferiour Magistrate, no man would come, but upon the strength of the declaration of the supream Authority which made that proclamation, and can only make it valid for a Rebels safety. This is so necessary a part of the object of faith, that no true grounded and well-built faith can be without it; when our eyes have respect to the Holy One of Israel, we must look to our maker. Isa. 17. 7. I question whether if an Israelite bitten by a fiery Serpent had looked upon the brazen one, lifted up on the pole, only to contemplate the figure, and the ingenuity of the Artificer, without considering the end for which Moses had set it up in relation to his cure, and the divine appointment of it, he would have found from it any remedy for his Distemper; natural influence it had none, and moral influence supposeth a sutable apprehension in the spectator: I am sure an Antient so paraphraseth, Numb. 21. 8, 9. When he looks upon it, he shall live: * He shall live, if his heart be directed to the name of the word of the Lord: and so v. 9. When he looked upon the Brazen Serpent, and his heart was intent upon the name of the Word of the Lord, he did live; his look was to be not only to the elevated Serpent, but to the Divine Authority that ordered it.

* Jonathan Targumin loc.

5. Christ in all his Offices: Believe also in me; without any limitation, or restriction to this, or that particular Office. If Faith pitch upon the person of Christ, and the person of Christ as authorized by God; it imbraceth Christ with all his Offices, because his person is invested with them, and the same Authority which setled him in one, confer'd upon him the rest. True Faith rests upon his person as commission'd, and receives him in the extent of his Commission, and therefore in every Office distinctly, to be given up to his rule, sit under his instructions, and eat and drink of his Sacrifice; his person is not separated from his Offices, nor his Offices from one another; nor is there a distinct commission for each of them As Faith takes God with all his perfections, so it takes Christ with all his dignities; as when we believe in God, we believe in him with all his Attributes, so when we believe in Christ, we believe in him with all his excellencies; as you believe in God, believe also in me; you do not take God to be your God, only in his Power, or Mercy, Goodness, or Faithfulness, or Wisdom, but in all; so you must not take me to be Messiah, anointed for you to a Priesthood only, but to a Kingly, and Prophetical Office. Christ is proposed whole, and therefore must be taken whole; God doth not offer him in pieces, but intire; he is not a Priest without being a King, nor a Prophet without being a King, and a Priest. As Faith is exercis'd for Justification, Christ is considered as a Priest; as it is exercised for an Understanding of God, he is considered as a Prophet; as it is exercis'd for Sanctification to put down the dominion of sin, and reliques of corruption, he is considered as a King, advanced to put all Enemies under his feet. Our necessities require such acts of faith upon his distinct Offices; we are full of guilt and filth, and we must have Christ as our Priest to secure us by his Sacrifice from the merit of our guilt, and wash us by his blood from the defilements of our filth; we are beset, and inlaid with darkness, and we must have Christ by his wisdom to show us the way, and conduct us in saving paths; we are possessed with a stubbornness and impotency, and we must believe in Christ as a King to quell our enmity, and strengthen our weakness by his power. The ingenuity of Faith speaks this language; since Christ is a Priest to Sacrifice for me, 'tis but reasonable he should be my Prophet to teach me, and my King to govern me; that as I live by his Blood, I should walk by his Rule; receive every ray of light, suck in every spiritual direction, as well as feed upon the juyce of his Sacrifice.

6. Yet, Christ as crucified is the more immediate Object of Faith. He had spoke of his Death in the foregoing Chapter, which was the occasion of their sorrow; and now he speaks of their believing in him: You believe in God as a living God, believe also in me as a dying Saviour. We are to receive Christ as God doth offer him to us, as a Redeemer from Eternal Death, and the Purchaser of Eternal Life; and this

this he doth in the quality of a Sacrifice ſatisfying for our ſin, and meriting our Life. Rom. 3. 25. He is ſet out as a propitiation; as one in whom God is well pleaſed. 'Tis faith therefore in his Blood that juſtifies, v. 24. not faith in his præcept, nor faith in his miracles, nor abſtractedly faith in his perſon, but faith in him as bath'd in his own Blood, and rowling in his own gore. The other parts are but Conductors of faith to this Bath, wherein it waſhes the Soul; to this Throne, whereon faith ſits triumphantly, and never ſparkles with ſuch a Life, as in this. Faith in the latitude of it, extends to all parts of Scripture, and as it is a general faith, is exerciſed about præcepts, promiſes, and threatnings; but in its acts about thoſe Objects, it is not a juſtifying faith, but only as it reſpects Chriſt, and Chriſt too in the very act of expiating ſin by his ſatisfactory Death on the Croſs; as the Soul of a man doth exerciſe it ſelf in vegetation and ſence, yet a man is not ſaid to be a rational Creature by thoſe acts, or by thoſe powers of the Soul, but by the Soul, as it is rational.

(1.) This was propos'd as the formal object in the firſt promiſe. Gen. 3. 15. As having his heel bruis'd by the Devil, as well as bruiſing the Devils head: this promiſe was the great Charter of our Redemption, and the foundation of the faith of Adams poſterity for ſeveral ages. It was indeed ſpoke to the Serpent, but for the ſake of Man; a threatning to the tempter, and a promiſe to the tempted; and an argument of terrour to the firſt, and ſupport to the latter; Chriſt is here propos'd for mens comfort under the notion of a Conqueror, but yet under the notion of a Sufferer: His paſſion in his heel was to præcede his breaking his Enemies head; ſo his ſufferings are firſt to be ey'd by faith, before his Victory. The Devil could not be overcome, and ſtript of his power, but by a ſatisfaction to the broken Law; which could not be only by obſerving the præcept, without ſuffering the penalty. The Devils Authority was built upon the curſe of the Law, which muſt be endur'd before the Devil could be turned out of his palace. It was upon the Croſs that Principalities and Powers were ſtript of their Dominion, and expos'd in Triumph; Col. 2. 15. And in this promiſe, though the ſeed of the Woman be propoſed to their Faith as one to be bruis'd, yet not as one to be conquered, but as prevalent and triumphant, bruiſing the Enemy in the head and vital part, while himſelf is only bruiſed in the heel; a part remote from the Heart, and more remote from the Head. The Antients therefore in ſucking the ſweet juyce of this gratious word, could not but conſider Chriſt as combating, as well as conquering; the Meſſiah ſuffering ſomething from the Serpent, as well as defeating, and ſurviving him.

(2.) Chriſt under this notion was propos'd in all the Jewiſh Sacrifices. As the promiſe was a publication of Chriſt to faith in a ſuffering condition; ſo the Sacrifices were a publication of Chriſt to ſence in the kind of his ſufferings, in a dying poſture. It was more than once expreſt to the Iſraelites, that Sacrifices were appointed for the atonement of ſin; they muſt be exceeding blind, if they could perſwade themſelves that any ſuch expiation of ſin could be wrought by any value in the blood of a Beaſt, that that could bear a proportion to the injur'd honour of God, and the broken Tables of the Law; they could not but conceive ſomething myſterious in them; and the more inquiſitive it is like, perceiv'd ſome analogy between the Type, and the thing ſignified by it; they might read ſomething of a ſuffering Meſſiah in them for the atonement of their ſins; but they could never be inſtructed by the dying groans, and heart-blood of Beaſts to fancy ſuch a triumphant Meſſiah as they did, without being expos'd to a calamitous condition. 'Tis certain, Chriſt as a Sacrifice was propos'd in all thoſe ſin-offerings; they were all but legal ſhadows of the good things to come by the great Sacrifice. Heb. 10. 1. Our faith ought not leſs to pitch upon Chriſt as a crucified Sacrifice offered to God, than theirs was to look to him under that conſideration in every Beaſt, in every Lamb ſlain, and offered upon the Altar. He was not ſhadowed in thoſe Sacrifices in the Glories of his Perſon, the Miracle of his Reſurrection, the triumphs of his Aſcenſion, and his honours at the right hand of God; but in the agonies of his bitter paſſion repreſented by the ſtruglings and dying gaſps of the ſlain victim; theſe Sacrifices had no Analogy, but with his Death.

(3.) This was propos'd by the Apoſtles in their preaching. It was Paul's practice among the Corinthians. 1 Cor. 2. 2. He determined to know nothing among them; i. e. to make known nothing as the object of the Faith he invited them to, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified. His deſign was to manifeſt Chriſt in the Glory of his Perſon, in the excellency of his Natures, in the end of his coming; but more eſpecially as crucified; being under that conſideration, the fountain of their Salvation; and moſt proper for the exerciſe of their Faith. And when he heard of the Galatians departure from the Truth, he wonders at it, ſince Chriſt had been evidently ſet forth crucifyed among them. Gal. 3. 1. It was an aſtoniſhment to him, that they ſhould imagine to find a Remedy for their Guilt, a Sanctuary for their Souls, a ſcreen againſt the Juſtice of God any where elſe but in the Croſs of Chriſt. Chriſt as crucified was in all their preaching propos'd as the Object of Faith, ſecurity from puniſhment, and way to Happineſs. Believing in Chriſt, is called eating of the Altar; Heb. 13. 10. i. e. of the Sacrifice which had been offer'd on the Altar; the Apoſtle ſpeaking in legal terms; in ſome Sacrifices part was burn'd upon the Altar, and part reſerved for a Feaſt for the offerer and his friends, they eat it in the relation of a Sacrifice; and Chriſt can be fed on by Faith only under the conſideration of a Sacrifice, as a dying Sacrifice, before he be conſidered as a living Saviour.

(4.) Under this conſideration will the Faith of the Jews pitch upon him, when God ſhall be pleaſed to convert them. Chriſt as pierc'd, is to be be looked upon; Zach. 12. 10, 11. They ſhall look upon him whom they have pierced. They that did actually pierce him, ſhall ſo look upon him with an eye of faith, planted in them by the Spirit of Grace; and he that was pierced for their ſins, ſhall be ſeen and own'd by them; 'tis a look of belief, not a bodily look; they ſhall look upon him ſo as to reſt in him; they ſhall look upon him as pierc'd, as their Predeceſſors did look upon the ſerpent lifted up in the Wilderneſs, with a relyance on the promiſe of God, that they ſhould have the reſtoration of their health, and the expulſion of their venom by it. He will be acknowledged in the great intent of his Death, which was to take away ſin.

(5.) That is the object of our Faith, which is Gods object in juſtifying a ſinner. But God in his juſtifying act particularly looks upon this blood; Rom. 5. 9. Being now juſtified by his blood. He ſpeaks of Gods act of juſtifying, as he doth in the expreſſion of Gods act in ſaving us; in the act of Juſtification, God looks upon the ſinner as bedew'd, and ſprinkled with this Blood; he croſſes not one of our debts without firſt dipping his pen in this blood: Chriſt therefore as dying, and paying the price of his pretious blood for our Redemption, is the immediate object of Faith. Chriſt as riſen is an object of Faith ſucceſſively to this: The payment of a Debt is really the ground of the Juſtification and ſecurity of him for whom that debt is paid: The Acquittance is only the declaration of the payment, if the Debtor ſhould be queſtion'd afterwards. It was this Sacrifice God took the ſole pleaſure in, Hebrews 10. 8. Offerings for ſin thou wouldſt not, neither hadſt pleaſure therein; not in any offer'd by the Law, which the Apoſtle adds in a parentheſis; intimating thereby, that this great Offering was the only delight of his Soul, and in this offering of the Body of Chriſt his whole will for our ſanctification center'd, as it follows, v. 9, 10. Our Faith muſt therefore beare ſome parallel with the pleaſure and will of God, and wrap it ſelf up in the ſame Object. The Blood of Chriſt is that whereby we are juſtified; for we are pronounced juſtified by God upon the account of a righteouſneſs anſwering the Law; but Chriſt as a King, and Chriſt as a Prophet did not anſwer either the precept or penalty of the Law, but Chriſt as a Prieſt. This therefore whereby God juſtifieth, is conſidered by faith in its going out for juſtification; this only can expel fears, and be a ground of the greateſt conſolation; this was that, Gods heart was chiefly ſet upon; this was that he call'd him out to perform; he had never been a King, nor a Prophet, had he not acted the part of a Prieſt, nor had God juſtified any, but upon that account of his ſacrifice: It was in this Office God confirm'd him for ever with ſo much delight, as to engage himſelf by Oath to the perpetuating of it; he was not ſo ſolemnly by Oath inveſted in the other two.

(6.) No-

(6.) Nothing elſe of Chriſt can be the immediate and primary object of our Faith, but his Death. Nothing elſe but the Prieſtly Office of Chriſt, and his propitiation and atonement he hath made for ſin, (and thereby delivered us from the wrath to come) can be the formal object of Faith in its firſt application. There are many things in Chriſt that Faith afterwards conſiders, and that are worthy of our deepeſt Enquiries and Meditations; but this only is conſidered in the firſt application. What did the poor ſtung Iſraelites conſider in their looking upon the Brazen Serpent? Did they conſider it only as the figure of a Serpent, or let their minds run out upon the excellency of the figure, the skill of the Artificer, and the curioſity of the Workmanſhip? Theſe indeed to a ſound man would have been a delightful employment; but as ſoon as ever he had been bitten, he would have laid aſide all ſuch thoughts, and caſt his eye upon it, according to the intent of its elevation on the Pole for the cure of his diſeaſe. What did the poor Malefactor conſider in his diſtreſs, when he ran to the horns of the Altar? He conſider'd it only as a place of refuge, and not as a place of worſhip. A man in the firſt act of Faith conſiders himſelf guilty before God, and in danger of Eternal Fire, under the dreadful diſpleaſure of God, by reaſon of his tranſgreſſion of the Law; he conſiders himſelf a breaker of that Law, and conſequently under the threatning and curſe of it; and wiſhes for ſecurity from that fire, his Conſcience by virtue of a violated Law, flaſheth in his face. That therefore which prompts a man in this condition to go to Chriſt, is the belief and hope of a ſure deliverance by him; his great intendment is Juſtification, freedom, and deliverance; and therefore he eyes Chriſt as a deliverer, and in that poſture and method wherein he was a Deliverer; i. e. as hanging upon the Croſs. Indeed afterwards, when the Soul comes to conſider its own ignorance and pollution, and longs for ſanctification; then its Faith goes out to Chriſt as a Prophet to inſtruct him, and as a King to defeat his Enemies in him. But to a ſoul ſenſible of the guilt of ſin, and rackt by the horrours of Conſcience, what is moſt convenient to be propos'd? Would you ſet forth Chriſt in his Glories; as a King that muſt be obeyed? This ſtrikes the ſoul dead: what would his anſwer be? The more able to damn me for my diſobedience; a King ſay you to be obeyed? What is this to me that have diſobeyed him, that find no power in my ſelf to obey him; and if I could, I cannot upon a diligent ſcrutiny find any merit in that obedience? But if there were, how can I wipe off my former ſcores? and pacifie God for my manifold paſt errors, and pleaſe his offended Holineſs? Would you propoſe Chriſt as a Prophet to teach him his duty? What's this to the curſe? How ſhall I be rid of my Guilt? How ſhall I eſcape puniſhment? But propoſe Chriſt as a Prieſt and Sacrifice; ſet him forth in his Prieſtly attire with the ſtreams of blood iſſuing from him for the expiation of guilt: This will make a ſoul that hath all the flames of Hell about his Ears, liſten: Here is an offer of Chriſt in a ſutable capacity to the preſent ſtate and wants of a ſinner. What is the Language of a poor ſoul at firſt? How can I endure Wrath? How can I ſatisfie Juſtice? The propoſal of Chriſt as having undertaken this work for him, and becoming ſin in his ſtead, is the only proportionable remedy. Tis then, and not till then that the ſoul claſps about him; here I find the ſatisfaction of my ſoul, where God found the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice; this contents me under the charge of a violated Law, the dread of an incenſed God, the tortures of an enrag'd Conſcience; here I find a ſurety ſatisfying my debts, bearing my puniſhment, and interpoſing his ſhoulders between me, and the the wrath merited by me; here I find that which pacifies God, and pacifies me. This gives reſt to the ſoul. The day of atonement among the Iſraelites, which typified this great ſaving expiation by the Death of the Meſſiah, is called not Gods Sabbath, but your Sabbath. Levit. 23. 32. Here, and here alone is the reſt that Faith finds in its firſt ſearch. Chriſt as a King, and Chriſt as a Prophet did not merit, and therefore Chriſt as a King, and Chriſt as a Prophet are not conſidered in the firſt act of ſeeking after Juſtification, but Chriſt as meriting, and therefore Chriſt as a Prieſt, and a Sacrifice; as a King he rules, as a Prophet he inſtructs, as a Prieſt he merits; Chriſt doth not profit us but as dying, and all the benefits we have by him were radically in his Death; hereby he ſatisfied the curſe of the Law, which was the only bar to our reſtoration to Happineſs; this was the main thing he was to do

do by Articles drawn between the Father and himself; so that upon this account this death, or Christ as dying is the main object of Faith.

(7.) Nothing can continue and keep Life in Faith afterwards, but Christ considered as Dying. Since there are slips and new pollutions, faith in all its acts for continuance of Justification, and repeated pardons, goes afresh to the embraces of the Cross, and pleads the merits of Christs Wounds and Agonies; it looks upon the Lamb of God as taking away the sins of the World, and begs the favour of God for the merits of Christ.

As Christ dying is the object of the first act of faith, so he is the encouragement to a continuance in faith; for he hath in so high a manner evidenc'd himself Merciful and Faithful in this, that there is no doubt of his Mercifulness and Faithfulness in every thing that concerns us after; he hath declar'd himself worthy of our most fixed reliance on him, and that he will not stick at lesser things, since he hath undertaken and finished so great a task as that of suffering. From his Priesthood faith takes Spirit and Heart to go to him as King and Prophet, which it could never do if it did not first receive encouragements from hence, and first pitched upon it; for (as I said before) as all the after benefits of Christ are radically in his death, so all the after acts of faith upon Christ in any other condition, are radically in this first act of faith upon Christ as a sacrifice, which first act gives Life to all the exercises of faith upon Christ in another capacity afterwards.

To conclude, The death of Christ as it is satisfactory to God is the object of Faith, as it is of infinite efficacy and perpetual force it is the object of a triumphant Faith and Hope. The Righteousness of Christ in his death is to be considered in all this; if we take him as a sacrifice, we must take him as a spotless sacrifice. If as a Priest, as an undefiled one separate from sinners, as well as for sinners. We cannot believe in Christ without taking in his Righteousness, as we cannot behold the Sun without beholding its light.

7. Christ as risen and exalted is the object of Faith. He is the immediate object of Faith as Dying, the triumphant object of Faith as Rising. His sacrifice was in his Death, but the value and vertue of that sacrifice was manifest by his Resurrection. Had Christ left his body in the Grave, and had sins committed before been pardoned upon the atonement he made by his death; yet the sacrifice ceasing and corrupting, it had not been of everlasting efficacy. If God as raising Christ from the dead is the object of Faith, Rom. 4. 24, 25. If we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our Justification; then Christ as rais'd by God is the object of faith also; he was raised from the Grave for our Justification, as well as delivered to the Cross for our Offences. As in his death in our stead he bore the Curse of the Law, so in his Resurrection as a common Person we received our acquital from the hands of the Judge. Though his Resurrection was not meritorious of our Justification, yet it was a declaration of the efficacy of his death, and consequently of our discharge. Faith must eye that whereby we are justified; now though we are justified by Christs death as the meritorious cause, yet we are justified by his Resurrection, as the perficient cause. Had his death been supposed to be fully meritorious without a Resurrection, it had freed us from death by cancelling the bond; but his Resurrection instates us in Life by Gods gratious acceptation, and makes the Redemption compleat, which else had been but a partial one, nay none at all. To the one we owe our freedom from death, to the other our investiture with Eternal Life and Glory: To the one we owe our Righteousness, to the other our Son-ship. Tis by his Resurrection from the dead we are begotten to a lively Hope, 1 Pet. 1. 3. 'tis upon him therefore as rais'd that our faith must be settled. Had he not risen, we had been still in our sins, not a mite of our debts had ever appeared to have been paid, 1 Cor. 15.17. his death had been insufficient for our happiness, without his Resurrection. His Resurrection was an evidence that he could save others, since he was delivered himself, and that his Father would save the Members since he had rais'd the head. Had he not been raised, Faith in his Death had had no ground, it had been an unaccountable thing to believe in him that lay under the power of Death, and had not sufficient strength to shake off the bands of it. This is the Key that unlocks to us the whole deſign, end, and ſufficiency of his death, and renders faith in him as Crucifyed more eaſie. Every thing in Chriſt, every thing promiſed by him is very credible, nothing can be matter of any difficulty to faith, ſince this of his Reſurrection is perfected. Faith is therefore called the faith of the operation of God, Col. 2. 12. noting the object of faith, and not the efficient cauſe of it. (Not becauſe God workes it in us, though that be true yet it is not the ſenſe of the place.) But a faith of that energy and mighty power God put forth, in the raiſing Chriſt from the dead; it was by this act whereby he fulfilled his paſt promiſes, that he gives us ſecurity for the performance of future ones. For as concerning that he rais'd him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he ſaith on this wiſe, I will give you the ſure mercies of David, Acts 13. 34. What were thoſe ſure Mercies of David, given in this? The fulfilling of the promiſe made to the Fathers, verſe 32. 33. The promiſe of an everlaſting Covenant, Iſaiah 55. 3. whence this is cited. That grand promiſe God made to Adam, and in him to all his poſterity, was fulfilled in this act of Chriſts Reſurrection; the bruiſing the Serpents head, the bleſſing all Nations in the ſeed of Abraham, the bringing in an Everlaſting Righteouſneſs were declared thereby to be fulfilled. Hereby was the efficacy of his Death cleared to all the World, in his being eas'd of the burden of our ſins, which bow'd down his head upon the Croſs; hereby it was manifeſt that his blood was the blood of the everlaſting Covenant, Heb. 13. 20. A blood eſtabliſhing and ſettling the Covenant of Grace for ever, and making it truly everlaſting. As our Redemption was not in its Meridian Glory till his Reſurrection, ſo neither is our faith in its full ſtrength and vigor, but as eying this together with his death.

USE. I. If God and Chriſt in Conjunction be the proper object of Faith, here is an argument for the Deity of Chriſt. If he be a meer Creature, how can he aſſert himſelf an object of faith in Conjunction with the Eternal God? It would be the higheſt invaſion of the right and authority, and affront to the perfection and ſufficiency of God, to make himſelf equal with God as the object of our faith, if he were not equal with God in the dignity of his Nature. He doth every where propoſe himſelf in this conſideration to us, John 6. 29. This is the work of God that you believe on him whom he hath ſent. 'Tis not a Belief of Chriſt, but a Belief in Chriſt or on Chriſt; to Believe a perſon is one thing, and to believe on him is another; we believe Paul and Peter, but are never ſaid to believe in Paul or in Peter; the Devils cannot but believe what Chriſt ſaith to be true, but they do not believe in him. To be believed in or relyed upon for Salvation and pardon, is proper only to the Deity and a flower of his Crown: If Chriſt were a meer man, though in the higheſt Throne of excellency and Holineſs as a Creature, as indeed he is; yet he could not be an object of our truſt and faith without an offence to God, a violation of his precept, and contracting his curſe; he doth expreſly threaten to lay his curſe upon every one that makes fleſh his arm, or confides in man, becauſe that is a departure from the Lord, Jer. 17. 5. and promiſeth a bleſſings to them that Truſt in the Lord and make him their hope, verſe 7. If he be lyable to the Curſe, that puts his truſt in man ſolely for worldly advantage, much more he that puts his truſt in a meer man for an Eternal Salvation; he pronounceth a Curſe on them that put their truſt in man, but a Bleſſing on them that put their truſt in his Son the Meſſiah, Pſal. 2. 12. Bleſſed are all they that put their Truſt in him. If Chriſt were a meer man, we are Curſed by God for Truſting in him; if bleſſed for puting a confidence in him, then he is more than a man, the True God. He that was obedient to his Father, would never have ordered ſuch an act wherein we ſhould be accurſed by the Father. God would never have backed this propoſition of Faith in Chriſt, aſſerted by Chriſt himſelf, and preached by the Apoſtles, with the ſeal of ſo many miracles, and Juſtified that which he had Curſed before: He would never have caſt the Crown from his own head, or made another Partner with him, had he not a dignity in his own Nature equal with God. If God our Saviour and Jeſus Chriſt be the joynt objects of Hope, 1 Tim. 1. 1. If thoſe that beleive in him ſhall not be aſhamed, Rom. 9. 33. 'tis a Blaſphemy to ſay he is a meer man, a meer Creature and not God, ſince a ſoveraign prerogative of God is aſcrib'd to him; we ſhould otherwiſe meet with a Curſe rather than a Bleſſing by relying on him.

2. The difference between the Law and the Gospel. The Law orders a Truſt in God, but utters not a ſyllable of a reſtoring Mediator upon the entrance of ſin, and therefore exacts not from us ſuch a kind of Faith as this, which is neceſſary for our happineſs ſince we are fallen. The Law cannot order ſuch an act but it muſt alſo preſent the object of that act, it ſpeaks nothing of the latter and therefore enjoyns nothing of the former. It repreſented God as a Soveraign and Judge, not as a Merciful pardoner, as a revenger upon Tranſgreſſion, not as a Redeemer and Reſtorer. The Law is therefore inſufficient to ſave us; our happineſs is wrapped up ſolely in the Goſpel; we have no ſafety but in the Arms of a Mediator, Faith is wholly a Goſpel Grace and a new Covenant duty.

3. Comfort. Believe alſo in me. What doth this ſignifie, but that our faith in Chriſt will be as effectual for our good as our faith in God? He was too faithful to his Father to invade his rights, and too merciful to us to put us upon a fruitleſs act; his joining himſelf with God as the object of faith, ſhows that our faith in him will be as prevalent as our faith in God, and our happineſs be as Mount Sion not to be ſhaken, for he that believes in him ſhall not be aſham'd, Rom. 9.33. He had never commanded us to believe in him as we do in God, if he had not had an Office to releive us: it intimates, that both God and the Mediator are in conjunction for our Salvation and felicity. Do we believe God to be Merciful, Powerful, Gracious? The Mediator alſo hath as tender a Compaſſion to pity us, and as Soveraign a Grace to heal us, he hath as ardent a Love to Bleſs us, and as infinite a power to reſcue us; he hath as overflowing a peace to quiet us, and as everflowing a goodneſs to relieve and perfect us. If they are joyntly to be reſpected by our Faith, they are joynt alſo in the anſwering the expectations of our Faith, John 10. 30. I and my Father are one. One in ſaving, one in preſerving, one in perfecting, for it is ſpoken in relation to the perpetual preſervation of his people to Salvation, none ſhall pluck them out of my hand, none ſhall pluck them out of my Fathers hand, we graſp them both by faith, and they graſp one anothers hand for our ſafety; we lay hold both on the Father and the Son by an act of Faith, and both Father and Son lay hold on us by an act of particular Affection; as we own them, ſo they will prove in the end joynt Saviours to our faith. As they are one in Power, ſo they are one in the Cares of the Flock. Chriſt would never elſe have ordered us to pitch our faith as ſtrongly and fully upon him as upon the Father.

Again, Believe alſo in me. He requires a true faith, as true in him, as in God, but not an equal meaſure of faith in all. If we have not a faith of ſuch a ſtature and growth, as that of Paul or the other Apoſtles, yet if it have the ſame meen and lineaments, it will not be ineffectual. The Serpent was to be looked upon, but not by all with an equal clearneſs of ſight, ſome eyes were dimmer, ſome clearer; a look was ſufficient, though but a weak one: A blear eyed Leah might have been cur'd by a look as well as a ſharp ſighted Rachel. Beleive in me, cloſe with me, though your hands may not be equally ſtrong to hold faſt as others are. No ones ſpirit is always in an equal degree of Health, and an even complexion, the wheels do not always move with an equal ſwiftneſs; reflections on a ſtate of ſin, and the blackneſs of tranſgreſſions ſometimes make us ſhrink and tremble; the wonderful greatneſs of Gods Mercy, like the light of the Sun, ſometimes dazles and blinds our eye. Yet if we believe in him with all theſe palſyes, it will go well with us. 'Tis Believe in me, not ordering all faith to be of the ſame elevation.

4. Let us examine our faith by the object. Many will ſpeak carelefly, and many will boaſt confidently of their Faith and Truſt in God, and ſcarce ever think or ſpeak of Chriſt, ſeparating that which God hath joyned. What warrant have we to Truſt in God ſingly conſidered without a Mediator? As it is Eternal Life to know him, not in the ſimplicity of his own being, but as he makes himſelf viſible in a Mediator, John 17. 3. So it is to believe in him in the ſame manner: As our Knowledge of God with our ignorance of Chriſt, ſo our faith in God, with an unbelief in Chriſt, will never intitle to an Eternity of happineſs. No act of Faith is right, that doth not vertually and implicitly take in Chriſt, together with God. Our Saviour ſpeaks it here in relation to the troubles of his Diſciples Hearts for their outward condition, and the miſery they expected by his departure from them; you have been educated in a relyance on God, and the expectations of a Messiah: Believe me to be the Person, and believe in me as the great under-taker and accomplisher of your happiness. We have a prospect of troubles, soon we may feel the smart of them, we believe in God as the Soveraign of the World, let us see whether we eye at the same time Christ as the King set upon the Holy Hill of Sion, for the protection as well as the Government of the Church. We have a great deal of ignorance, we believe in God as the Father of Lights; do we also believe in Christ as a Prophet to instruct us, and a Sun of Righteousness to inlighten and heal us with his wings? We believe in God as infinitely Merciful, do we also believe in Christ as a Priest settled for ever to make an atonement by his sacrifice, and perpetuate the application of it by his Intercession? We have no warrant to exert one act of Faith on the one without the other: by Faith in God singly without a Mediator, we neither obey God nor secure our selves. Since the object of faith is Christ as dying, true faith must eye the motive which perswaded Christ to dye, and have the same motive in it self, viz. The hatred of Sin and the Love of Righteousness, the hatred both of guilt and filth, and a desire to vindicate the Righteousness of God: The hatred of Sin is therefore necessary in our complyance with Christ, and therefore Believers are called his Fellows, Heb. 1. 9. not only fellows in his Glory, but in his disposition; in the integrity of it, not in the degrees of it. Faith fastens upon Christ as the gift, upon God as the Donor; it considers the greatness of the gift, and with ravishments ascends to a confidence in the Giver; it reads Gods heart in Christ, sees the Glory of God in the face of Christ, and mounts up to clasp about him, who hath issued out the knowledge of himself in such a full spring of Mercy and Grace. It looks upon Christ as a propitiator, and upon God as a Father. Faith hath recourse to the atoning blood of Christ, and by that blood to God. The goodness of Faith consists chiefly in the object it is plac'd upon; as all acts receive their goodness from the object, as well as from the principle end, and circumstances.

5. Exhortation. Let us observe his order. We do believe in God, that is taken for granted: there is indeed a natural confidence that all men have explicitly or implicitly in God, He is the confidence of all the ends of the Earth, Psal. 65. 5. This is not sufficient; a Faith in Christ as Mediator, a belief of it, a reliance on him in that capacity, together with a walking according to the Rules of his prophetick office, is the whole of the Christian Religion; this is every mans duty, as much his duty to believe in Christ as to believe in God, 'tis enjoyned with the same authority Believe also in me, 'tis a command as well as an invitation. Not believe if you will, but you must believe, in me as well as in God, if ever you have a security against troubles here or hereafter; to believe is not only our priviledge but our duty; not to believe, is not only our misery but our sin, 'tis not a matter of indifferency. Christ had a command from God to dye for us, and we have a command from himself to believe in him. God will have every one confess to the Glory of the Father, that Jesus is the Lord, Phil. 2. 11. God in him hath discovered the wonders of his Mercy, Justice, and Wisdom, and without believing in him we disown God in the Glory of those discovered perfections. He that honours not the Son, honours not the Father that hath sent him, John 5. 22, 23. He that Believes not in the Son, Believes not in the Father, whatever vain imaginations he wraps himself in; he that Believes not in Christ satisfying, believes not in the Father satisfied. As God goes out to us in him, our return must be by him to God. God was the Judge, Christ the Mediator, we must first go to the Mediator to be conducted to the Judge for our sentence of absolution; we have offended the Soveraign Lawgiver, we must first believe in him who is the repairer of the honour of the Law. Our standing is not secure by absolute Mercy; Mercy through Christ only saves us; it breaths in no other Air; We must first lay hold of the strength of God before we can be at peace with him, Isaiah 27. 5. Take hold of Christ who is the power as well as the wisdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24.

1. All our Salvation comes in by believing in Christ. We can have no satisfaction but in this way, we cannot answer the Terms of the Law but by our surety, nor the demands of the Gospel but by our faith in him. Do not our own Hearts often disquiet us? Doth not the perfect Law amaze us? Doth the Devil never accuse us? Do our own Consciences never charge us? Where can we find a peace for our ſelves, a diſcharge againſt the Law, and an anſwer to Satan but by faith in him who hathvindicated the Law, conquered our Enemy, and hath blood enough to beſprinkle our Conſciences with an Eternal peace? Paul had tryed all other ways that were of vogue in the Jewiſh Church, but met with nothing that could have a juſt pretence to be a Competitor with Chriſt. With what joy did Andrew meet Peter with the news, We have found the Meſſiah? John 1. 41. Nothing can contribute ſuch a meaſure of Peace and Joy to the Soul as Faith in Chriſt: There is not indeed an Ear to be gleaned any where elſe; all is laid up in that Garner: God cannot now ſave us in a way of abſolute Mercy, ſince he hath ſettled the method of our Salvation by Faith in his Son; it would be againſt his Truth, his Wiſdom, and alſo againſt the honour of his obedient ſon; if he would ſave one by abſolute Mercy, why not more, why not all? What need then of his ſons ſufferings to make the purchaſe?

2. We cannot believe any promiſe without believing in Chriſt. As the promiſes are confirm'd and conveyed to us, ſo muſt our faith be exerciſed about them; there is not a promiſe that is Yea and Amen, i. e. firm and irreverſible but in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 1. 20. 'Tis in Chriſt; 'tis in Chriſt that our faith muſt be exerciſed in every promiſe, upon the promiſe in Chriſt, upon Chriſt in the promiſe, we elſe believe and depend upon them without their confirmation. No man will depend upon a deed and conveyance without the Seal; look firſt to the, Seal and then, and not till then will the promiſe pour out comfort to the ſoul.

3. He only is fit to be the immediate object of our Faith. As he is the mighty God and the Prince of Peace as well as a Son given, Iſaiah 9. 6. as he made a ſutable compenſation for the offenders in regard of the humane Nature, which had committed the Treſpaſs and as he made a ſufficient compenſation in regard of the divine Nature, which had been injur'd by ſin. Infinite Juſtice was ſatisfied by an infinite perſon. He only is fit to be the immediate object of our Faith whoſe ſhoulders bore the weightieſt burdens, whoſe head bow'd under the ſharpeſt curſes, whoſe Soul drunk down the bittereſt potions in our ſtead. He had all the fitneſs to anſwer the demands of God, and all the fulneſs to anſwer the indigencies of man; he hath an Office and himſelf furniſht both with ability and compaſſion for the execution of it; he hath a Wiſdom not to be ignorant of what he is to do, and an integrity not to be falſe in it. Let us therefore according to his own order believe in him in conjunction with God.

1. Solely. [In me,] without joyning any created thing with me. We muſt ſtrike off our hands from all other purchaſes but that of the pearl. 'Tis not believe in me and your own Righteouſneſs though it appear in the utmoſt Glory; not believe in me and your own hearts, though they ſmile upon you never ſo kindly. You believe in God. It doth not follow believe in me and your own Righteouſneſs, Believe in me and Saints, in Abraham, Jacob, David, or Elijah; but believe in me alone without the conjunction of any thing leſs than a Deity. No other Lamb but this was ſlain from the Foundation of the World: This is the only ſeed of the Woman that was wrapt up in the promiſe: None elſe was the Center of the Propheſies the ſubject of the promiſes, the Truth of the Types; none in conjunction with him, none in ſubordination to him in the work of mediation and ſatisfaction: He only is the firſt-born among many brethren. As the eye ſeeks for no other light than that of the Sun, and joyns no Candles with it to diſhonour the ſufficiency of its beams, ſo no created thing muſt be joyn'd with Chriſt as an object of Faith; this is a diſhonour to the ſtrength of this Rock which is our onely foundation, this is to undervalue the greatneſs of the gift, and the Wiſdom of the giver. 'Tis a folly to ſeek for ſecurity any where elſe. Who would joyn the weakneſs of a Bulruſh with the ſtrength of a Rock for his protection? Who would fetch water from a muddy Pond to make a pure fountain in his own Garden more pleaſant? All other things are broken reeds under the moſt ſplendid appearances: Addreſs your ſelves only to him, to find a medicine for your miſeries, and counſel in your troubles. Believe in him as the power of God under the weight of your guilt. Believe in him as the Wiſdom of God under the darkneſs of your ignorance. He alone is ſufficient for our Redemption by the allowance of God, and therefore the ſole object of Faith in conjunction with God. Let us live a life of Faith only in him as Paul did, Galat. 2. 20. This is the vital juyce and nouriſhment of Faith, it languiſheth when it applies to any thing elſe. We cannot truſt him too much, nor our ſelves too little. God truſted him alone, therefore ſhould we; he puts no truſt in his Saints, Job 15. 15. Not in the higheſt Glory of their Saintſhip. No thing elſe comes up to the exactneſs of the Law, nor beares proportion with the holineſs of Gods Nature.

2. Believe in me Wholly. Not in a part or piece of me, not in any one particular action of Chriſt. Nothing of Chriſt can be well ſpared by us; he is full and rich, and not any of his fulneſs or riches but are of uſe to us: He is neceſſary in every capacity; the Merchant would have his whole Pearl, not a part; nothing of Chriſt is vain and fruitleſs. God hath given us nothing in the Creation but what we may uſe for his Glory; he hath ſtored Chriſt as a Redeemer with nothing but what we may uſe for our comfort. We muſt take whole Chriſt, in his ſufferings as well as Chriſt in his Glory; Chriſt with his Scepter as well as Chriſt with his Salvation. True Faith will lay hold on every word, on every promiſe, on every particle of Chriſt, as the Vine will upon every ſtick in the ſupport which is ſet for it.

3. Conſtantly believe in me. Not for a time and a ſpurt, by fits and ſtarts; as you always believe in God, ſo always believe in me; as you do not caſt God off from being your confidence, ſo do not in the leaſt wave me from being your hope. Upon all occaſions when Storms ariſe in the World, believe in me as your Protector, as your Conductor; when racks appear to be ſet up in your Conſciences, believe in me as your Peace-Maker; when corruptions creep up and defile you, believe in me as a Refiner. The Woman of Canaan would not leave her Faith in him, though he ſpoke a word ſowr enough to make her turn her back in ſorrow upon him. Let not an act of Faith be exerciſed in God, but let there be a mixture of an equal quantity of Faith in the Mediator; the Word ſpoken to us doth not profit us unleſs mix'd with Faith, nor do any of our returns to God pleaſe him unleſs mixed with Faith in the Redeemer. When ever we exert a particular act of Faith in God, let us exert a particular act of Faith in Chriſt too; not look upon the one without the other, nor embrace the one without the other. We are as conſtantly to honour the Son as to honour the Father.

Let us therefore frequently meditate on this object of Faith, view every wound of a dying Saviour; it will increaſe our Faith in him, add a new Life to our Faith in God. Our Faith is feeble, and our ſouls languiſh under ſpiritual burdens, becauſe we do not look to him as lifted up upon the Croſs; our addreſſes to God are faint, fearful and diſturbed, becauſe our eye is not fixed upon the Mediator, who hath changed God from the frightful garb of a Judge to the pleaſing aſpect of a Father. By ſuch acts upon this object our Faith will receive a new ſpirit, a freſh boldneſs, a pleaſant livelineſs.

Let us Conſider him in his Perſon, in his Promiſes, in his Offices, in his Mediation, in his ſacrifice and in the Righteouſneſs of all, and we ſhall find what is here ſpoken by way of Command, to be exemplified in a powerful operation in our hearts, which will make us Eccho back again, our hearts are not troubled, O Lord, ſince we believe in God, and believe alſo in thee.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE Cleanſing Vertue OF CHRIST'S BLOOD.

1 JOHN I. VII.

And the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.

THE Apoſtle in the beginning of the Chapter puts the Saints, to whom he writes, in mind of the Goſpel he had writ, wherein he had declar'd to them that word of Life which had been with the Father, and was manifeſted to the World; and which he now declares again, that they might have a fellowſhip with the Apoſtles in the truth, and not with the falſe teachers in their errors: And for an incentive, aſſures them that the fellowſhip of thoſe that kept the truth, as it is in Jeſus, was with the Father, and with the Son. v. 3. That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that you alſo may have fellowſhip with us, and truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son, Jeſus Chriſt. With the Father, as the ſource and ſpring of Eternal Life and Happineſs; with the ſon as Mediator, who hath opened the way to us, removed the bars, and given us an acceſs to, and a communion with the Father. For by ſin we were alienated from God, our ſin had caus'd Juſtice to lock up the Gates of Paradiſe, and forbid ſuch guilty and polluted offenders to approach to the pure Majeſty of God. The Apoſtle ſtle to encourage them to cleave to the Goſpel, propoſeth to them a fellowſhip with God by the means of Jeſus Chriſt, his Son, and our Mediator, as the chief Happineſs and Felicity of man, and that which can only afford them a full and compleat joy. And afterwards, v. 5. This then is the meſſage which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him there is no darkneſs at all; he preſcribes to them the means whereby they may keep up a Communion with God, which he infers from the tranſcendent excellency of the Divine Nature, who is Light; Light in regard of the clearneſs of his knowledge, Light in regard of his unſtain'd purity, not tainted with the leaſt ſpot, or duſt of Evil; not having any thing unworthy in his Nature, nor doing any thing unbecoming in his actions. If therefore our Converſations be in darkneſs, if we wallow in the mire of any untam'd, unmortifyed Luſt; Whatſoever our Evangelical profeſſions may be, or howſoever we may fancy our ſelves enter'd into a fellowſhip with the Father by the means of the Mediator, 'tis but a lying imagination; for how can there be a Communion between two Natures ſo different? Between Light and Darkneſs, Purity, and Impurity; Heaven, and Hell; God, and the Devil? But if our Converſation be agreeable to Goſpel Precepts, we have then a fellowſhip with him; v. 7. If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowſhip one with another. i. e. God hath a fellowſhip with us in affection and delight, and we have a fellowſhip with God in Salvation and Happineſs: God gives himſelf to us, and we give our ſelves to God. He beſtows Grace and Pardon on us, and we reſign up our hearts and affections to him. And this is a certain proof, that we are intereſted in the expiatory virtue of the blood of Chriſt. Or elſe thoſe latter words may be a prevention of an objection, which might reſult from the apprehenſion of the reliques of corruption in the beſt man in this Life. Since God is infinitely pure light without darkneſs, and we have ſo much darkneſs mixt with our beſt light, we muſt for ever deſpair of having any fellowſhip with God; the infinite diſtance, by reaſon of our indwelling corruption, will put us out of all hopes of ever attaining ſuch a ſoveraign felicity. But this reply is prevented by this clauſe of the Apoſtle: And the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, his Son, cleanſeth us from all ſin. Let not the ſence of your dayly infirmities animate any deſponding fears. If you ſquare your Hears and Lives in all ſincerity, according to the Goſpel-rule, there is a proviſion made for your ſecurity in the blood of Chriſt. God will wipe off the guilt of your defects by the vertue of that precious blood which hath been ſhed for your reparation. The Apoſtle here ſuppoſeth remainders of ſin in thoſe that have the priviledge of walking with God, and intereſt in the bleſſings of the Covenant.

The Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.] By this is meant the laſt act in the Tragedy of his Life, his Blood being the ranſome of our Souls, the price of our Redemption, and the expiation of our ſin. The ſhedding his Blood was the higheſt, and moſt excellent part of his Obedience, Phil. 2. 8. His whole Life was a continual ſuffering, but his Death was the top and complement of his Obedience; for in that he manifeſted the greateſt Love to God, and the higheſt Charity to man. The Expiatory ſacrifices under the Law were always bloody; Death was to be endur'd for ſin, and Blood was the Life of the Creature; the Blood or Death of Chriſt is the cauſe of our Juſtification.

His Son] His Sonſhip makes his Blood valuable. 'Tis Blood, and ſo, agreeable to the Law in the penalty: 'Tis the Blood of the Son of God, and therefore acceptable to the Law-giver in its value. Though it was the Blood of the Humanity, yet the merit of it was deriv'd from the Divinity. 'Tis not his Blood as he was the Son of the Virgin, but his Blood as he was the Son of God, which had this ſoveraign virtue. 'Tis no wonder therefore that it ſhould have ſuch a mighty efficacy to cleanſe the Believers in it in all ages of the World, from ſuch vaſt heaps of guilt, ſince it is the Blood of Chriſt, who was God; and valuable, not ſo much for the greatneſs of the puniſhment whereby it was ſhed, as the dignity of the perſon from whom it flowed. One Son of God weighs more than Millions of worlds of Angels.

Cleanſeth] Cleanſing and Purging are Terms us'd in Scripture for juſtifying, as well as ſanctifying. The Apoſtle interprets waſhing, of both thoſe acts: 1 Cor. 6. 11. But you are waſhed, but you are ſanctified, but you are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God. The latter words are exegetical of the former; they both are the fruits of the merit of the Blood of Chriſt. The one is the act of the Father as a Judge appeas'd by that Blood, the other the act of the Spirit, as a ſanctifier purchaſed by that Blood. And ſo the waſhing of us in the blood of Chriſt, ſpoken of, Rev. 1. 5. is to be underſtood of Juſtification; Sanctification is expreſt, v. 6. by making us Kings and Prieſts to God, giving us Royal and Holy Natures to offer up ſpiritual Sacrifices unto God; and ſeveral times the word כִּפֶּר which ſignifies to expiate, appeaſe, is tranſlated to ſanctifie, Exod. 29. 33, 36. and to cleanſe, v. 37. and a word that ſignifies cleanſing, is ſometimes put for juſtifying; as in the Third Commandment, Exod. 20. 7. The Lord will not hold him guiltleſs that takes his name in vain, לֹא יְנַקֶּה will not cleanſe or purge them. But it muſt be underſtood of cleanſing from guilt, becauſe it refers to the penalty of the Law. 'Tis here uſed in this ſence; 'tis ſpoken to them that are ſanctified, and have a fellowſhip with God; that if they walk in the light, God will impute to them the Blood of his Son for their abſolution from the guilt of all their infirmities.

The Blood of Chriſt cleanſeth.

1. It hath a vertue to cleanſe. It doth not actually cleanſe all, but only thoſe that believe: Nor doth it cleanſe them from new ſins, but upon renewed acts of Faith: There is a ſufficiency in it to cleanſe all, and there is an efficacy in it to cleanſe thoſe that have recourſe to it. As when we ſay, a Medicine purgeth ſuch a Humour, we underſtand it of the virtue and quality of the Medicine, not that it purgeth, unleſs it be taken in, or otherwiſe applyed to the diſtemper'd perſon.

2. The Blood of Chriſt cleanſeth: Not hath cleanſed, or ſhall cleanſe. This notes a continued act. There is a perpetual pleading of it for us, a continual flowing of it to us. 'Tis a Fountain ſet open for ſin. Zach. 13. 1. There is a conſtant ſtreaming of virtue from this Blood, as there is of corruption from our Nature: It was ſhed but once, 'tis applyed often, and the virtue of it is as durable as the perſon whoſe Blood it is.

3. The Blood of Chriſt cleanſeth. The Apoſtle joyns nothing with this Blood. It hath the ſole, and the ſoveraign virtue. There is no need of tainted merits, unbloody ſacrifices, and terrifying purgatories. The whole of cleanſing is aſcrib'd to this Blood, not any thing to our own Righteouſneſs, or works: It admits no partner with it, not the Blood of Martyrs, nor the interceſſions of Saints.

(4.) The Blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin. 'Tis an Univerſal Remedy. Whatſoever hath the Nature of ſin, ſins againſt the Law, and ſins againſt the Goſpel. It abſolves from the guilt of ſin, and ſhelters from the Wrath of God. The diſtinction of venial and mortal ſins hath no footing here, no ſin but is mortal without it, no ſin ſo venial, but needs it. This Blood purgeth not ſome ſort of ſins, and leaves the reſt to be expiated by a Purgatory fire. This expreſſion of the Apoſtle [Of all ſin] is water enough to quench all the flames of Purgatory that Rome hath kindled; what ſins are not expiated by it, are left not to a temporary, but an Eternal Death; not to a refining, but a conſuming fire. So that we ſee theſe words are an Antidote againſt fears ariſing by reaſon of our infirmities, a Cordial againſt faintings, an encouragement to a holy walk with God. 'Tis a ſhort, but a full Panegyrick of the virtue of the Blood of Chriſt.

1. In regard of the Effect, cleanſing.

2. In regard of the cauſe of its efficacy. 'Tis the Blood of Jeſus, a Saviour. The Blood of Chriſt one appointed, anointed by God to be a Jeſus; the Blood of the Son of God, of one in a ſpecial relation to the Father, as his only begotten, beloved Son.

3. In regard of the extenſiveneſs of it: All ſin. No guilt ſo high, but it can maſter: No ſtain ſo deep, but it can purge, being the Blood of the Son of God, and therefore of infinite virtue, it hath as much force to demoliſh Mountains of Guilt, as level Mole-Hills of Iniquity.

The words are a plain Doctrine in themſelves, Doctrine. The Blood of Chriſt hath a perpetual virtue, and doth actually and perfectly cleanſe Believers from all guilt. This Blood is the expiation of our ſin, and the unlocking our chains, The price of our Liberty, and of the purity of our Souls.

The Redemption we have through it, is expreſly called the forgiveneſs of ſin. Eph. 1. 7. In whom we have Redemption through his Blood, the forgiveneſs of ſin: By a Metonymy of the effect for the cauſe; Remiſſion was an effect of Redemption.

* Illyricus de juſtificat. p. 179.

* When the Apoſtle, Heb. 10. 14. tells, That by once offering, he hath for ever perfected them that are ſanctifyed; he placeth this perfection in the remiſſion of ſin: v. 17, 18. He did in the offering himſelf ſo tranſact our Affairs, and ſettle our concerns with God, that there was no need of any other offerings to eek it out, or patch it up. As the blood of the Typical Sacrifices purified from ceremonial, ſo the blood of the Antitypical Offering purifies from moral uncleanneſs. The Scripture places remiſſion wholly in this blood of the Redeemer. When Chriſt makes his Will, and inſtitutes his Supper, he commends this as our Righteouſneſs, Mat. 26. 28. This is my blood of the new Teſtament, which is ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins, according to the title and end given it in the Prophet, Zach. 9. 11. By this blood of the Covenant the Priſoners are delivered from the pit of corruption, wherein there was no water; No water to quench our thirſt, no water to cleanſe our Souls, but mud and mire to defile them. This was the deſign of his Death; as himſelf ſpeaks, Luk. 24. 46, 47. That repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached in his name amongſt all Nations. And Peter in his Diſcourſe at Cornelius his houſe, comprizeth in this the intent of the whole Scripture; To him give all the Prophets witneſs, that through his name whoſoever believes in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins. Act. 10. 43. As this was the juſtifying Blood in the time of the Prophets, ſo it will be the juſtifying Blood to the end of the World. By this blood only the robes of any are made white. Revel. 7. 14. By this Blood the accuſer of the Brethren is overcome, and caſt in his ſuit. Revel. 12. 10, 11: The maintaining of Juſtification by this Blood ſeems to be the great conteſt between the true Church, and the Antichriſtian State.

1. The blood of Chriſt is to be conſidered morally in this act. The natural end of blood in the veins is a reparation of the ſubſtance of the Body, by a converſion of the blood into it. And the proper uſe of blood is not to cleanſe, for it defiles, and beſpots any thing whereon it is dropped; but morally conſider'd, as the ſhedding of blood implies loſs of Life, and puniſhment for a crime, ſo blood is an expiation of the Crime, and a ſatisfaction to the Law for the offence committed againſt it. As the ſhedding innocent Blood doth morally pollute a Land, ſo the ſhedding the blood of the Malefactor and Murderer, doth morally cleanſe a Land. Numb. 35. 33. Blood defiles the Land, and the Land cannot be cleanſed of the blood that is ſhed therein, but by the blood of him that ſhed it. Had not this Blood of Chriſt been ſhed, our ſins had not been pardoned, our Souls had not been ſecur'd, our chains had continued, and our terrors had been encreaſed; the ſtroaks of Juſtice had been felt, and the face of mercy had been vail'd; we had wholly been the Vaſſalsof the one, and Forreiners to the other.

2. The cleanſing is to be doubly conſider'd: There is a cleanſing from guilt, and a cleanſing from filth, both are the fruits of this blood: The guilt is removed by remiſſion, the filth by purification. Chriſt doth both, he cleanſeth us from our guilt as he is our Righteouſneſs, from our ſpot as he is our Sanctification; for he is both to us 1 Cor. 1. 30. The one upon the account of his merit, the other by his efficacy, which he exerts by his Spirit. The proper intendment of the blood of Chriſt was to take off the curſe of the Law, and free us from our guilt; the waſhing off our ſtains is the proper work of the Spirit, upon that account ſignified to us by water in the Prophets. The Blood and Water flowing from the ſide of Chriſt upon the Croſs were diſtinct; John 19. 34, 35. as appears by the great ſeriouſneſs, wherewith John affirms the relation, He that ſaw it bare record, and his record is true, and he knows that he ſaith true. Theſe two liquors flow'd from his ſide diſtinctly, and did not mingle in their ſtreams; and this ſeems to be ſo diſpos'd by the providence of God, to ſignifie that from the death of Chriſt there flow two ſorts of benefits of a different Nature, and which ought to be differently conſidered, viz. Sanctification repreſented by water deſtin'd to waſhing; and Juſtification, which ariſeth from ſatisfaction, repreſented by the blood, ſhed for remiſſion of ſin. Theſe both ſpring up from the Death of Chriſt, yet they belong to two diſtinct offices of Chriſt: He juſtifies us as a ſurety, a Sacrifice by ſuffering, as a Prieſt by merit. But he ſanctifies us as a King, by sending his Spirit to work efficaciously in our Hearts. When we consider the blood of Christ, we consider Christ as a Sacrifice, and Sacrifices were called Purifications, καθαρσια; not in regard of washing away the filth, but expiating the guilt of sin; yet indeed the justifying virtue of this blood is never exerted without a sanctifying virtue accompanying it. As blood and water flowed out of the side of Christ together, so blood and water flow into the heart of a sinner together. The Typical blood of the Covenant when sprinkled by Moses upon the book and people, was mixt with water, *Heb.*9.19,20. to signifie that Holiness signified by water, accompanies the application of propitiation signifyed by blood. All the force of sin consisted in condemnation, to which it had subjected men as it was a transgression of the Law, and in conjunction therewith it had defil'd the Soul as it was loathsome and filthy. Now Christ shed his blood to make an expiation of sin, and sent his Spirit to make a destruction of sin: By virtue of his Death there is no condemnation for sin: *Rom.*8.1,3. By virtue of the Grace of his Spirit there is no dominion of sin. *Rom.*6.4,14.

3. This cleansing from guilt may be considered as meritorious, or applicative. As the blood of Christ was offered to God, this purification was meritoriously wrought, as particularly pleaded for a person, it is actually wrought; as sprinkled upon the Conscience, 'tis sensibly wrought. The first merits the removal of Guilt, the second solicits it, the third ensures it: The one was wrought upon the Cross, the other is acted upon his Throne, and the third pronounc'd in the Conscience. The first is expresst Rom. 3.25. His blood render'd God propitious. The second, Heb. 9.12. As he is entred into the Holy of Holies. The third, Heb. 9.14. Christ justifies as a Sacrifice in a way of merit, and when this is pleaded, God justifies as a Judge in a way of Authority. Christ laid the foundation of a discharge from all guilt upon the Cross, and procures an actual discharge upon the first look of a sincere faith towards him; and when this blood is sprinkled upon the Conscience, it purgeth it from dead works. Heb. 9.14. from the guilt of Death we contracted by sinful works, and from the sentence of Death which the Law pronounced by reason of those works; that thereby we may have a liberty to appear before God, and be fit to serve him. The sprinkling the Tabernacle, and the Vessels of the Sanctuary, and the person officiating in it, was the applying of the propitiation made by the Sacrifice to those things, for the special consecration of them unto God. No blood was sprinkled, but the blood of the victim, solemnly offer'd unto God upon the Altar, according to his own appointment; no blood applyed to the Conscience can cleanse it, but the blood of this great Sacrifice, which is peculiarly called the blood of sprinkling, as it is the Blood of the Covenant. Heb. 12.24. The virtue of it conveyed as sprinkled, is from the propitiation it made as shed. A Not guilty is entred into the Court of God when this blood is pleaded, and a Not-guilty inscrib'd upon the roll of Conscience, when this blood is sprinkled. It appeaseth God's Justice, and quencheth wrath: As it is pleaded before his Tribunal, it silenceth the accusations of sin; and quells tumults in a wrangling Conscience, as it is sprinkled upon the Soul.

2. The evidence of this truth well appears.

1. From the credit it had for the expiation and cleansing of Guilt, before it was actually shed, and the relyance of Believers in all ages on it. The Blood of Christ was applyed from the foundation of the World, though it was not shed till the fulness of time. They had the benefit of the promise of Redemption, before the accomplishment of the Sacrifice for Redemption. The cleansing we have now is upon the account of the blood of Christ already shed, the cleansing they had then was upon the account of the blood of Christ in time to be shed; the one respects it as past, the other as future. * We must distinguish the virtue of Redemption from the work of Redemption: The work was appointed in a certain time, but the virtue was not restrain'd to a certain time, but was communicated to Believers from the foundation of the World, as well as extended to the last ages of the World.

* Zanch. Tom. 7. *Part.*1. *p.*236.

Several Considerations will clear this.

(1.) The Scripture speaks but of one person design'd for this great work. John Baptist speaks of the Lamb of God, pointing to one Lamb appointed to take away the sins of the world. John 1.29. The world is to be understood κενικῶς for all ages, all times of the World: as the same is meant, 1 John 2.2. He is a propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole World; And He, and only He, is the propitiation by once offering of himſelf: Not for the ſins of us only that live in the dregs of time, and the declining age of the World, but of thoſe that went before in all ages of the World from its youth, till his appearance in the fleſh, and expiring upon the Croſs. Chriſt is ſaid to be the one Mediator in the ſame ſence that God is ſaid to be the one God, 1 Tim. 2. 5. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Chriſt Jeſus. As there is but one Creator of man, ſo there is but one Mediator for men. As God is the God of all that dyed before Chriſt came, as well as of thoſe that liv'd after; ſo Chriſt is the Mediator of all that dyed before his coming, as well as of thoſe that ſaw his day. They had Chriſt for their Mediator, or ſome other; ſome other they could not have, becauſe there is but one: They might as well have had another Creator beſides God, as another Mediator beſides the Man Chriſt Jeſus. In regard of the antiquity of his Mediation from the foundation of the World, he is repreſented, when he walks as Mediator in the midſt of the ſeven Golden Candleſticks with hair as white as wool, a character of Age: Revel. 1. 14. As God is deſcrib'd ſo in regard of his Eternity. Dan. 7. 9. There is but one God from Eternity; but one Mediator, whoſe Mediation hath the ſame date as the foundation of the World, and runs paralled with it. But one Captain of Salvation alſo for many Sons Heb. 2. 10. that were brought to glory. All that were brought to Glory, were brought into that happy ſtate by this Captain of Salvation, as made perfect by ſufferings; ſo that either none were brought to Glory before the ſufferings of Chriſt, which is not true; or they were brought to Glory by virtue of the ſufferings of that Captain of Salvation. If that one Captain were not a perfect head of Salvation but by ſhedding his blood, then thoſe that were under his conduct from the beginning of the world could not be perfect, but upon the account of his paſſion. For they had no perfection, but in, and by their head; the ſame way that he was juſtifyed for them, they were juſtifyed by him.

(2.) This one Mediator was ſet forth ever ſince the fall of man, as the foundation of pardon and recovery. The Covenant of Grace commencing from the time of the fall of man, the virtue of this blood, which is the blood of the Covenant, bore the ſame date; and indeed the blood of the Redeemer as the way of procuring reſtauration was ſignified in that firſt promiſe, which was the firſt dawning of the Covenant of Grace after that black night of obſcurity, the revolt of man had drawn upon the world. Gen. 3. 15. The recovery of man from that gulf of miſery, the head, or ſubtle brains of the Serpent had caſt them into, is promiſed there to be by a man (for that muſt be ſignified by the ſeed of the Woman) and ſome great and worthy perſon able for ſo great an undertaking; and to be effected by ſuffering, intimated by bruiſing his heel; which could not be without ſomething of blood in the caſe; Satan would not ceaſe, but expreſs his enmity againſt the diſſolver of his works, and the deliverer of his Captives. It muſt alſo ſignifie a deliverance from that which he was reduc'd to by the ſubtlety of the Serpent, and that was ſin and deſtruction. It could not be meant of a freedom from a bodily death, becauſe this promiſe being made before the pronouncing the ſentence of a bodily Death, which was not till v. 19. was a bar to any ſuch thought; for it had been a mockery, a falſity in God to promiſe Adam a redemption from that, and afterward overturn his promiſe, by threatning that which he had promis'd before to redeem him from. This bruiſe therefore that the ſeed of the Woman was to receive from the Devil, at what time ſoever it ſhould be inflicted, was to extend in the virtue of it to Adam, and his believing poſterity that ſhould come upon, and go off the ſtage of the World before the revolution of that time wherein it was to be tranſacted; otherwiſe, the making of this promiſe to him, which ſhould not diſtill any gracious dews upon him, had been to feed him with meer ſmoke, a thing unbecoming the Creator of the World; beſides, it was declared in Types and Figures. As the Ceremonial uncleaneſs which the legal Sacrifices were appointed to purge, was an image of the moral impurity which needed expiation; ſo the blood of Beaſts ſhed for the cleanſing of it, was a ſhadow of that blood which was deſign'd in the fulneſs of time for the expiation of the other. Nay, there were not only Types of it, but plain propheſies concerning it. The Righteouſneſs whereby all Believers are juſtifyed, is witneſt in the whole current of Scripture, both by the Law and the Prophets to be without the works of the Law; Even that Righteouſneſs of God, which is by Faith of Jeſus Chriſt: Rom. 3. 21, 21. And therefore when there was a conference between Moſes and Elias on the one part, and Chriſt on the other, the ſubject of it is not any thing but that of his deceaſe. Luk. 9.31. The declaration of that being the chief intent of the Types of the Law, inſtituted by the miniſtry of Moſes; and of the Prophets, whereof Elias was the chief, though not in the publiſhing of the Mediator, yet in the peculiar mark of the favour of God in his tranſlation to Heaven. But Eſay is the plaineſt and moſt illuſtrious in the proclamations of the coming, the deſign and methods of the Redeemer: * And particularly the pardon of ſin by virtue of his ſuffering is diſcovered Iſa. 43. 24, 25. Thou haſt made me to ſerve with thy ſins, thou haſt wearied me with thine iniquities. Then it follows, I, even I am he that blotteth out thy Tranſgreſſion for my own ſake. Chriſt is ſaid to ſerve with their ſins; and Iſay 53. is a comment upon this, ſhowing what kind of ſervitude it was that the Redeemer endur'd, and what that wearineſs was which he ſuſtain'd for our iniquity, viz. That he was wounded, bruiſed, and offer'd up. The whole ſcope of the Chapter proves this, for it is ſpent in numbring up the benefits by the Meſſiah, the calling of the Gentiles, and gathering a Church from all parts of the world, v. 5, 6, &c. and v. 19, 20. And in the laſt part deſcribes the chiefeſt benefit by the Meſſiah, viz. propitiation, and remiſſion of ſin; and to ſhow that pardon was wholly free, he removes all falſe cauſes of pardon, humane merit, and legal Sacrifices, v. 22,23. Thou haſt not called upon me, thou haſt not filled me with the fat of thy Sacrifices: And then publiſheth the merit of the Meſſiah, ſerving with, or in their ſins, upon which account out of meer grace the ſins of men are blotted out; v. 24, 25. as much as to ſay, Not thou O Jacob, by thy duties and offerings haſt merited the blotting out of thy ſins: That Glory is only due to me who ſerv'd with thy ſins in dying and ſuffering, and paid the price of Redemption, that by this means, without thy merit, thy ſins might be wipt out, and v. 27, 28. He declares the rejection of the Jewiſh Church, the giving Jacob to a curſe, and Iſrael to reproach, for their refuſal of this way of Redemption.

* Gawer de ſatisfact. p. 74, &c.

3. Though theſe Promiſes and Propheſies of the expiation and cleanſing of ſin were ſomething obſcure to them, and tho' they did not exactly know the method, how it would be accompliſht, yet that ſin ſhould be pardon'd, was fully reveal'd, and ſomething of the method of it might be known unto them.

[1.] That ſin ſhould be pardon'd, was fully reveal'd to them, and their faith had ſomething clear for their ſupport. It was ſufficient that he had publiſht a time wherein, and a ſeed whereby Satans head ſhould be bruis'd; and afterwards had proclaim'd his name in Text Letters, to be a God pardoning iniquities, tranſgreſſions, and ſins. Exod. 34. 6. How could Jacob without the knowledge of this ſay at his expiring hour, that he had waited for God's ſalvation? Gen. 49. 18. How could David elſe ſo earneſtly have begg'd for a purging hyſſop? How could he be confident that there was a Grace to make him as white as the unſpotted Snow, and his bloody Soul as pure as unſtain'd wool? Pſal. 51. 7. How could Manaſſeh have with ſo much confidence laid himſelf at the feet of God in his Priſon, had he looked upon him only as a revenging, and not a pitying God? The promiſe of God's being their God, was often inculcated to them, aſſuring them thereby that the thing ſhould be done, that nothing of pardon, and the fruit of it ſhould be wanting to them, though the manner was not declar'd in that promiſe; for the promiſe of God's being their God, included all ſpiritual bleſſings; particularly this of cleanſing from ſin, without which, he could not be their God in a way of Grace, but their Judge in a way of wrath.

[2.] They might know ſomething of the method and manner of it. The mercy of God was reveal'd, the pardon of ſin aſſur'd, and Sacrifices inſtituted among the Jews to keep up their Faith in the expectation of this promiſed Expiation: But the manner how, and the merit whereby, was not ſo clearly drawn out to their view, which is fully open'd to us in the Goſpel. Eph. 3. 5. The Types indeed were obſcure, 'tis a hard matter to underſtand them now, ſince the revelation of the Goſpel; much harharder to ſpell them out by that Moon-light before the Sun was riſen. Yet the Believers then could not be ignorant, but there was ſome excellent thing wrapped up in them; that they were not appointed for any excellency they had in themſelves, or any power to propitiate God, and appeaſe his anger; which Gods diſdainful ſpeaking of them many times, when they reſted upon their external Sacrifices, might inform them of. They might collect from thence, that they all had reference to ſome richer blood, and were images of ſome nobler Sacrifice; beſides what the foundation-promiſe would mind them of, that ſome great perſon in our Nature was deſign'd for the bruiſing the Serpents head, by ſuffering the bruiſing of his heel by the force of the Serpent. They could not read that glorious and comfortable name of God; Ex. 34. 6. but that clauſe, v. 7. that he would by no means clear the guilty, (which belongs to his name, as well as the other of pardoning, and is utter'd with the ſame breath) might ſtartle them, and would ſeem to be an exception to daſh out the comfort of all the foregoing Titles: How they could reconcile ſuch diſtant terms of a God pardoning, and yet not clearing the guilty, without a reflection upon ſome grand expiatory Sacrifice, which might render to juſtice what was due for their crimes, and draw forth from mercy what was neceſſary for their miſery, I underſtand not. No doubt, but ſome of them ſaw ſomething of the Meſſiahs work wrapt up in the Typical Sacrifices and Ceremonies; for it is not likely that they ſhould all be wholly ignorant of the intendment of them. 'Tis very likely that Job, who was not a Jew, but an Edomite, and, as ſome think, dyed that year the Iſraelites came out of Ægypt, had the knowledge of Redemption by the Meſſiah; and why might not the Iſraelites alſo have ſome knowledge of it as early? No queſtion but they had; the place in Job is remarkable, Job 19. 25. I know that my Redeemer lives, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the Earth. Moſt, both of Proteſtants and Papiſts, underſtand it of Chriſt. The word is גֹּאֲלִי a Redeemer by right of affinity, as Chriſt was, being our brother, by the aſſumption of our Nature; and he ſeems to ſpeak not only of one that was a Redeemer in act, but a Redeemer by Office; and his appearance to be in the latter day, referreth to his incarnation in the latter age of the world; whom himſelf alſo ſhould behold with his eyes at the reſurrection. 'Tis ſome extraordinary and remarkable thing that he would have ſo noted, for v. 23, 24. He ſpeaks, Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book, that they were graven with an iron pen, and lead in the rock for ever. He would have it perpetually preſerv'd and markt; and the comfort he took in the conſideration of this his Redeemer to be incarnate, ſo poſſeſſes him, that it is obſerved that he doth not utter ſuch heavy complaints to the end of the book, as he had done before. Chriſt was as much Job's Redeemer before his Incarnation and paſſion, as ours ſince: Yet as to the manner how he was to redeem, the price he was to pay, there was a vail upon him, till it was cleared up by the Prophets upon a nearer approach of the dawning of the fulneſs of time: For though they had ſome Revelation of the Meſſiah as a great perſon, a great Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, a great King, a ſpecial Favourite of God; yet how he was to cleanſe ſin, they were ignorant of: As they did not know what new Doctrines he would reveal as a Prophet, or what kind of Kingdom he ſhould have as a Monarch, ſo they did not fully know what kind of Sacrifice he ſhould offer as a Prieſt: They had ſome kind of knowledge, but not a diſtinct one.

(4.) The ancient Patriarchs had Faith, and were actually pardon'd. They had the ſame Spirit of Faith as thoſe had which lived in the times of the Goſpel. 2 Cor. 4. 13. Noah is ſaid to be a juſt man, and perfect in his generations, Gen. 6. 9. * When he was young, and when he was old: But how? He found grace in the eyes of the Lord, v. 8. He denyed his own Righteouſneſs, and fled to the Grace of God; which could not be exhibited to him but in Chriſt. For no Grace without contented Juſtice. The ground of all the comfort, and joy Abraham had, was the ſight of the appearance of this bleeding Redeemer, though afar off: John 8. 56. To what purpoſe was that ſight without a benefit redounding to him from it? And that great Patriarch was juſtifyed by faith in him, which the Apoſtle diſcourſeth of Rom. 4. and hereupon he was called the Father of the faithful, as being the firſt expreſs pattern of Juſtification ſet down in Scripture. * For he was not the Father of the faithful by carnal procreation, but upon the account of Religion; The Father, as he was the Teacher by his Example, the name of Fathers being given to inſtructors. If he were not therefore cleanſed, and counted righteous upon the account of this blood, he could not be ſet forth as a pattern of Juſtification unto others, the pattern being wrote one way, and the Copies another. It was the ſole promiſe of the bleſſed ſeed, which was the cauſe of his Juſtification, not Sacrifices or Circumciſion. The ſame Righteouſneſs is imputed to the Father, as is to the Children; and the ſame to the Children that was to the Father. He, and we have the ſame Faith, the ſame Object of Faith: And by what we are juſtifyed, by the ſame he was juſtifyed: It was the ſame bleſſedneſs he and we have, the ſame Goſpel he and we heard, Galat. 3. 8. The Grace confer'd upon David was from Chriſt, how could his ſin elſe have been remitted, for which no Sacrifice was appointed under the Law? Pſal. 51. 16, 17. Thou deſiredſt not Sacrifice, elſe would I give it. Suppoſing the legal Sacrifices were ſufficient, without any relation to ſomething elſe to expiate the ſin for which they were appointed, how ſhould thoſe ſins of preſumption which David was guilty of, be expiated, ſince there was no inſtitution of any legal victim for them? Surely the Iſraelites were not left deſtitute of help in this caſe. And God by providing no Sacrifice for thoſe ſins, intimated that there was a nobler Sacrifice yet behind. The Meſſiah as a Prieſt was in David's eye, whom he calls his Lord, though he was to proceed out of his loins. Pſal. 110. 1, 4. Davids Lord by another right than as God; For he doth diſtinguiſh him from the Father as Lord, and therefore David's Lord by another right, a right of Redemption. The Jews had a ſufficient account that the Sacrifices of the Law could not purge ſin, in the ſacrifice of the red Heifer, Numb. 19. 2. which could not expiate their ſins. If it had a virtue to this purpoſe, why ſhould the Prieſt who ſacrificed her, and ſprinkled the blood before the Tabernacle, and the perſon that burnt her, and the perſon that gathered up the Aſhes waſh their cloaths afterwards, and be unclean till the evening, v. 7, 8, 9. who were more likely than the reſt to be expiated by it? Their ſins were pardon'd, but impoſſible to be ſo by the blood of Bulls and Goats; Heb. 10. 4. yet not without the interpoſition of a bloody Sacrifice; for without blood, there is no remiſſion; Heb. 9. 22. whereby the Apoſtle proves the neceſſity of the ſacrifice of Chriſt: And could ſin be pardon'd without a Sacrifice, the Apoſtles argument to evince the unpardonableneſs of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, or of thoſe that refus'd the Sacrifice of Chriſt, would be invalid; for his reaſon to prove it unpardonable, is, becauſe there is no more Sacrifice for it. All which ſuppoſeth the neceſſity of a ſatisfaction to Juſtice by blood, to open the way to the Throne of Grace, and put any man into the favour of God. It was this blood therefore ſhed upon the Croſs, whereby the tranſgreſſions under the firſt Teſtament were purg'd: And upon the account of which, the promis'd Inheritance was receiv'd; Heb. 9. 15. Chriſt could not elſe have pronounc'd a bleſſedneſs upon Faith without the Viſion of him: As he doth, John. 20. 19. Bleſſed are they that have believed, and have not ſeen; meaning thoſe that dyed in Faith in the time of the Law. And the Apoſtle is expreſs in it, that Chriſt by that one offering perfected for ever them that are ſanctified; Heb. 10. 14. Underſtanding thoſe that were ſanctifyed, or cleans'd, or pardon'd before the actual offering, as appears by the ground of this his inference, which was the inſufficiency of all other Sacrifices to take away ſin. There was never but one God that juſtifies, never but one way of Juſtification, and that by Faith; as the Apoſtle argues, Rom. 3. 30. and therefore but one cauſe of the Juſtification of all them that went before, becauſe but one Object of Faith, the blood of the Meſſiah, the Redeemer of the world: In him only all things were gather'd and ſum'd up into bleſſedneſs, Eph. 1. 12. and men are bleſſed in him. Pſal. 72. 17. In his merit, ſaith the Chaldee Paraphraſe, underſtanding it of the Meſſiah.

(5.) And this might well be upon the account of the compact between the Father the Judge, and the Son the Redeemer. Had he not promiſed the ſhedding of his blood, Juſtice had diſlodged the ſinner from the world. All hopes of regaining Paradiſe had been loſt, without it the Authority of the Law had not been preſerved, the ſacredneſs of Divine Truth had been violated, and the rectitude of his Government laid in the duſt by an eaſie indulgence, and paſſing over the ſin. Chriſt therefore fore ſtood up, and promiſed his ſoul as a ſacrifice for ſin. He was before Abraham was. Joh. 8. 58. Before Abraham was, I am; I am, I was what I am now, a Mediator; by promiſe, by conſtitution, by acceptation; and therefore Abraham ſaw my day, and was glad, as it is before, v. 56. I was a Lamb ſlain, accepted as a Lamb ſlain, as Mediator upon credit. His Office was of a more ancient date than his incarnation. And he was the ſame in the function of a Mediator before, as he was after his taking our fleſh; the ſame for them in his compact as he was for us in the performance. A man may be freed from priſon, upon the promiſe of a ſurety worthy of credit, though the debt be not actually paid till ſome time after, according to agreement; and the poſſeſſion of a purchaſe may be delivered, though a time afterwards be ſet for the payment of the price. The payment of the ranſome is not of abſolute neceſſity before the deliverance of the captive. Many were delivered from their bonds by God, before the payment made by Chriſt, but not before the payment promiſed by him. The blood of this Sacrifice as ſhed, reaches us, though ſixteen hundred years ſince it was poured out; but the blood of this ſacrifice promis'd by the Redeemer, and receiving credit with God, reached Adam Four thouſand years before it was ſhed. God imparted the vertue before Chriſt actually mertied, and free'd the Captive before the ranſom was paid; yet upon the account of the promiſed merit, and contracted ranſome, Natural cauſes muſt be before the effect; Moral cauſes may be after the effect. The blood of Chriſt cleanſeth, not as a Natural, but as a Moral cauſe. He was in this reſpect a Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the World, Revel. 13. 8. ſlain fœderally, though not actually; Imputatively, though not really; ſententially in the acceptation of the Judge, though not executively in the enduring the paſſion; and therefore he was a Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world efficaciouſly; by whoſe blood the ancient Believers were ſprinkled, as well as thoſe of a later date: And tho' ſome refer thoſe words from the foundation of the World not to the word ſlain, but to the writing of the names in the book of Life of the Lamb, whoſe names were written from the foundation of the World in the book of the Lamb ſlain, it will not much alter the thing. The ſlaying of the Lamb was agreed, as well as the writing the names in the book: And it will alſo follow, that no man had any place in the book, but had alſo an intereſt in the Lamb ſlain, and the benefits he enjoyed by virtue of the regiſter were to flow to him through the blood of the Covenanting Redeemer, and their names were writ there upon the credit of the Lamb to be ſlain; for in him was the choice made before the foundation of the world. Eph. 1. 4. and through him were the bleſſings of pardon given out from the foundation of the World. Had not this Lamb offered himſelf to be ſlain, man had been caſt into Everlaſting chains as well as the Devils, who had no Mediator, no Lamb to be ſlain for them. Well then, it follows from hence, That the Blood of Chriſt is of a full credit with God. Chriſt was the ſame to the Patriarchs, as to the Apoſtles, Heb. 13. 8. He was the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever: Yeſterday, to Adam, four thouſand years ſince. Yeſterday in the Hebrew phraſe often ſignifies all the time paſt. To day, now in the time of his appearance. For ever, to the Generations that follow; not only in regard of his Perſon and Deity, but in regard of his Office and Benefits: Tis not meant of his Deity, but of his Mediation, as will appear by the following verſe, where the Apoſtle deſigns the alienating their judgments from too high an opinion of the Ceremonial Rites and Sacrifices. They never purg'd ſin, but Chriſt was the cauſe of the purgation of them under the Law, as well as under the Goſpel, though he were not ſo diſtinctly known by them, as by us. The Blood of Chriſt extended to Believers in all ages: He was a ſeed for Abraham, as well as Abraham's ſeed. Gen. 21. 12. In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be call'd. זֶרַע לְךָ A ſeed for thee; it may be render'd, a ſeed for thy good and eternal deliverance: Not only a ſeed out of his loins, but a ſeed for his benefit. As a flaſh of Lightning out of a Cloud in the night enlightens all things both before and behind it, ſo the Righteouſneſs and blood of Chriſt is imputed not only to men that come after him, but to thoſe that went before him. If the credit of it were ſo great then, the merit of it is as great now, ſince the actual effuſion of the Blood. Tis therefore rightly a blood that cleanſeth from all ſin.

2. This was the true and sole end of his Incarnation and Death. All the ends mentioned by the Angel Gabriel to Daniel, center in this and refer to it, Dan. 9. 24. To finish the Transgression, make an end of sin, and make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting Righteousness, and thereby should all the Visions and Prophesies concerning the Messiah and his work be fulfilled. And to this purpose would the most holy be anointed as the cause and foundation of all that removal of sin mentioned before. All the words which signifie sin, and contain in them all sorts of sin are here expresst, to show the compleatness of the design in regard of the Subject the Messiah was to remove out of the way. The word Translated to finish, כָּלָא signifies also to shut up, or restrain. And the word Translated to make an end, חָתַם signifies to seal up, sin was to be restrain'd from ravaging about at pleasure like a devouring monster, or shut up and stopt from being an accuser to condemnation; and sealed up, not for confirmation of sin, but for concealment of it, as things sealed are not to be lookt into but by persons authorised thereunto: 'Tis a breach of Trust, and an invasion of anothers right to do it. So God is said to cover sin, and Christ here to seal up sin by his blood, and for ever hide it from the face of God, and to make Reconciliation for iniquity or expiate it. Since it was sin only that was the cause of the enmity, and which separated us from Communion with God, wherein the happiness of a Creature is placed, there was a necessity, for our rescue from misery, to remove our guilt, that that which tore us might be muzzled; that that which accused us might be silenc'd; that that which was a bar to our happiness might be demolisht, that so the misery we endur'd might fly from us, and the blessings we wanted might flow down to us. For this cause the Messiah was anointed, and for this end he undertook his employment on Earth, to remove the obstacle which hindred our access to God. Hence we find that the Covenant of Grace, when spoken of in the Old Testament to be fully revealed in the latter days, contains chiefly those promises of blotting out Transgressions, and remembring sin no more.

(1.) This is the fundamental Doctrine of the Gospel. The Apostle therefore with a particular Emphasis, tells them this is a thing to be known and acknowledged by all that own Christianity, 1 John 3. 5. And you know that he was manifested to take away our sins. You know nothing of Christianity, if you know not and believe not this, that Christ appeared to take away the guilt of sin by a non-imputation, and to quell the power of sin by a mortification of it; to remove the punishment it had merited, and the corruption it had establisht in the hearts of men. Sin therefore will perfectly be cleansed both by remission and sanctification, else Christ would fall short of the end of his manifestation. This was the Doctrine the Apostles were first charged to publish, both as the reason of Christs suffering and of his Resurrection, that Remission of Sins might be preacht in his name among all Nations, Luke 24. 46, 47. Remission of sin as purchased by his Death, and assur'd by his Resurrection. The foundation of pardon was in his passion, and the manifestation of the efficacy of his passion was by his Resurrection. Both of them therefore were to be declar'd in order to this end. And though Paul was not then present at this first Commission, (as being one born out of due time, and summon'd into the office of Apostleship afterward) yet his instructions were of the same Nature, and observed by him in the same order, 1 Cor. 15. 3. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, viz. first How that Christ dyed for our sins according to the Scriptures. Set aside this end, what attractive can there be in a Crucified man, one made the derision and reproach of his Nation, to cause any to believe in him? Faith particularly pitches upon the Death of Christ, and particularly eyes in that passion the intent both of the sender and of him that is sent. The first thing himself publisht when he exercised his office, was this Jubilee, Luke 4. 18, 19. The acceptable year of the Lord, wherein Captives were to be delivered, debts to be remitted and bonds to be cancelled. That was the main end of his coming to dye, which when done was the sole reason of his advancement: The purging sin, and our sin, was the ground of his glorious sitting at the right hand of God, Heb. 1. 3.

(2.) There could be no other end of his shedding his blood, but this. Since his death is called a Sacrifice, Eph. 5. 2. A propitiation, 1 Joh. 2. 2. Rom. 3. 25. it can be for no other end but the cleansing of sin. For this was the reason of the institution of sacrifices. Blood shed in a sacrifice-way implyed blood criminal, and deserving to be shed. Had he come upon the Earth in a stately grandeur to rout Armies of men, batter down the Walls of Cities and demolish Empires; the rooting out of Tyranny and Monsters might have been thought his design. But this was no way for the expiation of sin, but the destruction of the sinner. But coming to shed his Blood, to be a Sacrifice, to be the reproach of men, and to be Gods servant in this Office, which he was not by Nature, what end can be imagin'd, but somewhat in relation to sin, and that both to the expiation and destruction of it? For dying and shedding his blood for it was not the way to maintain sin, but to abolish it; not a means to render iniquity lovely, but odious. If this were not the issue of his Death, it would be useless, his blood would be shed in vain. His Death being a punishment, and by way of Sacrifice, must be for some end: It could not be for any thing relating to himself, or to merit any thing for himself; for being God, there could be no accession of Happiness to him, he needed not to merit any thing, because he wanted nothing. All merit is a desert of something which is not at present possessed, but desired to be possessed. He had not, nor could commit any sin for which he should become a Sacrifice. The Deity is uncapable of Unrighteousness and Crime. The punishment was not therefore upon any account of his own. No Crime was committed by him in his Humanity that might merit the infliction of such a punishment; this was impossible, for whatsoever Crime had been committed in his Humanity, had been the Crime of his Person, and so had been a spot upon his Deity, united in one person with his Humanity. Besides, he took Humane Nature to suffer in it: His incarnation had an ought to suffer linkt to it, so that his shedding his blood was resolv'd on before any Crime could be committed, if it were to be suppos'd that in his Humanity he were capable of any error or miscarriage. His blood must be shed for some other, and the punishment inflicted upon him, which was merited by some other persons: It could not be for the Holy Angels, they were innocent, and not criminally indebted, and therefore obnoxious to no penalty. It being for the taking away of sin, the word sin excludes the good Angels who never sin'd, but always obey'd God: Psal. 103. 21. Nor could it be for the evil Angels, for the Scripture excludes them from any Redemption, and binds them for ever in chains of darkness to bear the punishment in their own persons. Besides that, this punishment could not properly be born in any other Nature specifically distinct from their sinning Nature, as it was. It must be for the sin of men, or for nothing: And consequently the Death of Christ would be an insignificant thing; but 'tis utterly inconsistent with the Wisdom and Holiness of God to appoint, and the Wisdom and Honour of Christ to agree to a task for nothing, and to no purpose. * Now since Christ offer'd his Life to God (which he did not owe upon his own account,) a reward was due to him upon the account of Justice, which must consist in remitting something which he ow'd, or imparting something which he wanted; no Debt for himself could he be charged with, no Indigency could be in his Humanity upon his own account, since all Happiness was due to that, by vertue of its Union with the Deity: Nothing could be bestowed upon him for himself, because he wanted nothing; nothing could be remitted to him, because he owed nothing. Since therefore he so deeply humbled himself, not for himself, but for others; and that there was a merit on his part, and consequently a just retribution on God's part due; it was necessary it should be given to some others upon his account, that what they owed might be remitted, and what they wanted, might be bestowed. These could be no other than men, whom he came to justifie, and to whom the Debt owing to God might be discounted upon the account of Christ's payment.

* Sabund Tit. 260.

3. This cleansing sin is wrought solely by his own worth, as he is the Son of God. 'Tis therefore said in the Text the blood, not only of Jesus Christ, but of the Son of God. The blood of Jesus received its value from his Sonship, the Eternal Relation he stood in to his Father. Since sin is an infinite evil, as being committed against an infinite God, no meer Creature can satisfie for it, nor can all the holy works of all the Creatures be a compensation for one act of sin, because the vastest heap of all the holy actions of Men and Angels would never amount to an infinite goodness, neſs which is neceſſary for the ſatisfaction of an infinite wrong. One ſin * containing in it an infinite malice, is greater in the rank of evils, than all good works heapt togecher, can be in the rank of goods. But this blood was not only the blood of Jeſus, a Man, but the blood of that perſon that was the Son of God; of him who was our ſurety as the Son of God, before he was our ſurety as the Son of Man; who interpoſed as a ſurety four thouſand years before his Incarnation and ſhedding his blood, though he could not act the part of a ſurety without his Incarnation and ſhedding his blood. Either we had no ſurety before he was Incarnate, or elſe the Son of God in his own perſon was our ſurety. The ſhedding his blood was purſuant to that interpoſition he made as the Son of God in our ſtead, before he was the Son of Man; and it was truly the blood of that perſon who had offer'd himſelf to be our ſurety, and been accepted in that relation ſo many ages, before a created Nature was aſſum'd by him; ſo that though his Humanity was a Creature, and was neceſſary as a ſubject wherein the ſatisfaction was to be performed, yet it added no worth to the ſatisfaction of it ſelf. The value which his Blood had, was from his Deity, his being the Son of God, in which condition he enter'd into his relation of a Mediator for us. It was the ſame perſon that was the brightneſs of God's Glory, and the expreſs Image of his Perſon; the ſame Perſon that upheld all things by the word of his power, who did by Himſelf, in that Glorious Perſon purge our ſins. Heb. 1. 3. The Prieſts under the Law purg'd the ſins of the people by the Sacrifices of Beaſts: This was an infinitely nobler victim, a beam of brightneſs ſtreaming from the Eternal Father while he was purging our ſins in his Eclipſe: The expreſs Image of his perſon, while he was made a curſe upon the Croſs, upholding all things by the word of his power, while he bowed his Head under the weight of his ſufferings: He was all this while making an atonement for our ſins, whence redounded an unconceivable efficacy to his Blood. The Nature of man dyed, but he had another Nature as immortal as the Perſon whoſe brightneſs he was, that liv'd to add value to his ſufferings. This Divine Perſon by his own ſtrength, and in this Glorious relation wreſtled with the flames of Wrath, and took hold of the Tribunal of Juſtice, and by the value of his ſufferings, ſmoothed the face of a frowning God, aſſwaged the tempeſts of a provoked Juſtice, and placed before the Tribunal of Judgment a ſtrong and everlaſting Righteouſneſs of his own compoſure, as a vail between the piercing Eye of Divine Holineſs, and the guilty and filthy ſtate of a ſinner; ſo great a Perſon, one equal with God, was neceſſary for the reſtoring his Honour, and ſanctifying his Name; ſo great a Perſon was neceſſary for the purging the fallen Creature from his guilt and filth.

* Saith Leſſius.

4. Hence it follows that ſin is perfectly cleanſed by this Blood. Since it expiated the ſins of former Ages, ſince it was the end of his coming, ſince he did what he did by his own worth, ſin muſt be perfectly cleanſed, elſe the end of his coming is not attained, and his worth would appear to be but of a finite value. All cleanſing is the fruit of this Blood, the cleanſing from guilt is wrought immediately by it, the purging from filth is mediately by his Spirit, but as it was the purchaſe of his Blood.

(1.) The Blood of Chriſt doth not perfectly cleanſe us here from ſin, in regard of the ſenſe of it. Some ſparks of the fiery Law will ſometimes flaſh in our Conſciences, and the Peace of the Goſpel be put under a Vail. The ſmiles of Gods Countenance ſeem to be chang'd into Frowns, and the Blood of Chriſt appears, as if it ran low. Evidences may be blurr'd, and guilt reviv'd. Satan may accuſe, and Conſcience knows not how to anſwer him. The ſore may run freſh in the night, and the Soul have not only Comfort hid from it, but refuſe Comfort when it ſtands at the door. There will be ſtartlings of Unbelief, diſtruſts of God, and miſty ſteams from the miry Lake of Nature. But it hath laid a perfect Foundation, and the top ſtone of a full Sence and Comfort will be laid at laſt. Peace ſhall be as an illuſtrious Sun-ſhine without a Cloud, a Triumphant breaking out of Love, without any Arrows of Wrath ſticking faſt in the Conſcience; a ſweet Calm without any whiſper of a bluſtring Tempeſt; the guilt of ſin ſhall be for ever wipt out of the Conscience, as well as blotted out of Gods Book. The Accuser shall no more accuse us, either to God or our selves; no new Inditement shall be form'd by him at the Bar of Conscience; nay, Conscience it self shall be for ever purg'd, and sing an uninterrupted Requiem, and Hymn of peace, shall not hiss the least Accusation of a crime. As Gods Justice shall read nothing for condemnation; so Conscience shall read nothing for Accusation. The Blood of Christ will be perfect in the effects of it. As it rent the Vail between God and us, it will rend the Vail between Conscience and us; no more frowns from the one, nor any more janglings in the other. As Christ said, when he was giving up the Ghost, 'Tis finished, viz. The sence and sufferings under a guilty State: 'Tis then, a Believer may say his fears are finished, when he is breathing forth his Soul into the Armes of his Sacrific'd Saviour. Iniquities shall never more appear in their guilty charge to draw Blood from the soul of a penitent Believer. The soul shall be without fault before the Throne of God. Rev. 14. 5.

(2.) The Blood of Christ doth not perfectly Cleanse us here from sin, in regard of the stirrings of it. The Old Serpent will be sometimes stinging us, and sometimes foyling us. The righteous soul will be vext with corruptions within it, as well as the abominations of others without it. The Canaanite is in the Land; and therefore the vertue of the blood of Christ is expresst in our power of Wrestling, not yet in the Glory of a Triumph. It doth not here perfectly free us from the remainders of sin, that we may be still sensible that we are fallen Creatures, and have every day fresh notices, and experiments of its powerful vertue; and that his love might meet with dayly Valuations in a dayly sence of our misery. But this blood shall perfect what it hath begun, and the troubled sea of corruption that sends forth mire and dirt, shall be totally remov'd: Then shall the soul be as pure as unstain'd Wool; as spotless as the Dew from the Womb of the Morning; no wrinkles upon the face, no bubblings up of corruption in the soul: The Blood of Christ shall still the Waves, and expel the filth, and Crown the soul with an Everlasting Victory. The Spirits of just men are then made perfect, Heb. 12. 23.

(3.) But the Blood of Christ perfectly Cleanseth us from sin here, in regard of Condemnation and Punishment. Thus it blots it out of the book of Gods Justice; 'tis no more to be remember'd in a way of legal and judicial sentence against the sinner. Though the nature of sin doth not cease to be sinful, yet the power of sin ceaseth to be condemning. The sentence of the Law is revok't, the right to condemn is removed, and sin is not imputed to them, 1 Cor. 5. 19. Where the Crime is not imputed, the Punishment ought not to be inflicted: 'Tis inconsistent with the Righteousness of God to be an appeas'd, and yet a revenging Judge. When the cause of his Anger is remov'd, the effects of his Anger are extinguisht: Where there is a cleansing from the Guilt, there necessarily follows a removal of the Punishment. What is the Debt we owe upon sin? Is it not the Debt of Punishment, which is Righteously exacted for the fault committed? When the blood of Christ therefore purifies any from their guilt, it rescues them from the punishment due to that guilt. Herein doth the pardon of sin properly consist, in a remission of Punishment. The Crime cannot be remitted, but only in regard of Punishment merited by it. If God should punish a man that is sprinkled with the blood of Christ, and pleaded for by the blood of Christ, it would be contrary both to his Justice and Mercy: To his Justice, because he hath accepted of the satisfaction made by Christ, who paid the Debt, and acquitted the Criminal, when he bore his sin in his own Body upon the Tree: It would be contrary to his Mercy, for it would be Cruelty to adjudge a person to Punishment, who is Legally discharg'd, and put into the state of an innocent person, by the imputation of the Righteousness of the Redeemer. Though the acts of sin are formally the same that they were, yet the state of a cleansed sinner is not Legally the same that it was; for being free from the charge of the Law, he is no longer obnoxious to the severity of the Law. There is no Condemnation to them that are in Christ, Rom. 8. 1. No matter left, that shall actually condemn, since Christ for sin, or as a Sacrifice for sin, condemned sin in the Flesh. v. 3.

* Turretin. de satisfact. p. 330.

(4.) The Effect of this Blood shall appear perfect at the last in the final Sentence. It cleanseth us initially here, compleatly hereafter. It cleanseth us here in Law.

Its

Its Vertue shall be manifest by a final Sentence. He that believes not, is condemn'd already, Joh. 3. 18. Condemn'd by the Threatning, but not by the pronounced Sentence. So he that believes is justified by the Plea of this Blood, justified in the promise of the Gospel, but not yet by publick Sentence, which is reserved till the last day. After Death the Judgment. Heb. 9. 27. As Christ was justified after he had presented his Blood, was owned to be Gods Righteous Servant, by a publick Declaration in his Exaltation. 1 Tim. 2. 16. So those that have an interest in this Blood, have a sentential Justification at their Dissolution, by God as a Judge; and fully compleat, when their persons shall be pronounced just, at the reunion of the Soul and Body at the Resurrection: Whence this time is called the day of Refreshment, Act. 3. 19. when sins shall be blotted out, * when God shall no more Correct, and Conscience shall no more reproach for guilt. Sin is cleansed now, but said to be blotted out then, because then all the parts of Salvation shall be compleat. Election was an Act of Eternity, but then it shall be declar'd in the separation of them for ever from the rest of the World, to be with him in Glory. Redemption was purchased by the death of Christ, offered in the Gospel, and conferr'd upon the Believer, but then it will be compleat in a deliverance from all Enemies, and the last Enemy, Death; And therefore called the day of Redemption, Eph. 4. 30. There shall then be an endless Repose from all Sorrow within, and Trouble without. Sanctification is begun to be wrought here by the Spirit, but sin is not aboliſht; all Earthly Affections are not compleatly put off. So it will be with our Justification, as it consists in pardon of sin; sins are blotted out now, but then in a more excellent, full, and visible manner. We need a dayly pardon upon dayly sin, but then God will absolve us once for all, from all our faults committed in our whole lives, and no more will be committed to need a pardon. There is here a secret grant passed in our Consciences; There, a solemn publication of it before Men and Angels. Here every one receives a pardon in particular, as they come to him; As those under the Law had a particular expiation by the means of the Sacrifices presented by them, but in the annual day of expiation there was a general propitiation for the sins of the people, and all their iniquities together were carried into the Desert. So the pardon that was granted to particular Believers shall then resolve into one entire absolution of the whole Body; when Christ shall pronounce them all Righteous, and present them unblameable, and without spot to his Father. Justification is compleat in this World, in regard that the guilt of sin shall never return, and a person counted Righteous shall never be counted Unrighteous; but not so compleat that the sence of sin shall never return. But then neither Davids Murther shall rise up against him, nor Peters Denyal of his Master ever stare him in the Face: No need of fresh looks upon the Brazen Serpent for cure, because there shall be no bitings by the fiery ones to grieve and trouble.

* Faucheur in loc. Vol. 2. p. 163. &c.

(5.) Hence, It Cleanseth from all sin Universally. For since it was the Blood of so great a person as the Son of God, it is as powerful to Cleanse us from the greatest as the least. Had it been the Blood of a sinful Creature, it had been so far from expiation, that it would rather have been for pollution. Had it been the Blood of an Angel, though Holy, (supposing they had any to shed) yet it had been the Blood of a Creature, and therefore incapable of mounting to an infinite value. But since it is the Blood of the Son of God, it is both the Blood of a Holy and of an Uncreated, and Infinite person: Is it not therefore able to exceed all the bulk of finite sins, and to equal in dignity the infiniteness of the injury in every Transgression? The particle All is but a rational consequent upon the mention of so rich a treasure of Blood. The nature of the sins, and the blackness of them is not regarded, when this Blood is set in opposition to them. God only looks what the sinners are, whether they repent and believe. He was delivered for our Offences, Rom. 4. 25. not for some few offences, but for all; and as he was deliver'd for them, so he is accepted for them. The effect therefore of it is a Cleansing of all, both the Original and Additional Transgressions; the Omissions of that good, God hath Righteously commanded, and the Commissions of that evil he hath Holyly prohibited. Men have different sins, according to their various Dispositions or Constitutions. Every man hath his own way. And the iniquity of all those various sins

ſins of a different ſtamp, and a contrary nature, in regard of the Acts and Objects, God hath made to meet at the Croſs of Chriſt, and laid them all upon him, Iſa. 53. 6. The ſins of all believing perſons, in all parts, in all Ages of the World, from the firſt Moment of mans ſinning, to the laſt ſin committed on the Earth. In regard of this Extenſive Vertue, the ſcape-goat was a Type of him; for though there were not particular Sacrifices under the Law, appointed for ſome ſins, yet in that Anniverſary one, all the ſins of the people were laid upon the head of that devoted Goat, to be carried into the Wilderneſs. Lev. 16. 21. עֲוֹנוֹת חַטֹּאתָם פִּשְׁעֵיהֶם And and ſame ſeveral words ſignifying all ſorts of ſins are there uſed, as God uſes, Exod. 34. 7. when he Proclaims himſelf a God forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin. And the firſt ſin we read of, cleans'd by this Blood, after it was ſhed, was the moſt prodigious wickedneſs that ever was committed in the face of the Sun, even the Murder of the Son of God, Acts 2. 36, 38. So that ſuppoſe, a man were able to pull Heaven and Earth to pieces, Murder all the reſt of Mankind, deſtroy the Angels, thoſe ſuperlative parts of the Creation; he would not contract ſo monſtrous a guilt, as thoſe did in the Crucifying the Son of God, whoſe perſon was Infinitely Superiour to the whole Creation. God then hereby gave an Experiment of the ineſtimable value of Chriſts Blood, and the inexhauſtible vertue of it. Well might the Apoſtle ſay, The Blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin.

III. Thing; How Chriſts Blood cleanſeth from ſin. God the Father doth actually and efficiently juſtifie; Chriſts Blood doth Meritoriouſly juſtifie. God the Father is conſider'd as Judge, Chriſt is conſider'd as Prieſt and Sacrifice. He was a Prieſt in things pertaining to God, Heb. 2. 17. to make Reconciliation for the ſins of the People. He is the Fountain, ſet open for ſin, and for uncleanneſs, Zach. 13. 1. And forgiveneſs of ſin is a fruit of Redemption, through his Blood, Col. 1. 14.

This is done,

1. By taking ſin upon himſelf. God Collected all the ſins from all parts of the VVorld, in all Ages of the VVorld, bound them up together, and laid them upon Chriſts Shoulders, Iſa. 53. 6. Alluding to the manner of transferring the ſins of the people, by Aarons laying his hands upon the head of the Sacrifice: So that as the ſcape-goat purg'd the people, Chriſt cleanſeth or juſtifies men by bearing their iniquities, Iſa. 53. 11. Not by bearing the pollution of them inherently, but the guilt of them, or the curſe which the ſinner had merited: For our ſins could no more be tranſmitted to him in the filth and defilement of them, than the iniquities of the Iſraelites could be infus'd into the ſcape-Goat, but only in their Curſe and Guilt. A Beaſt was not capable of ſpiritual pollution, becauſe it wanted an intellectual Nature; nor Chriſt, becauſe of the excellency of his Perſon. Chriſt took our ſins upon him, not thereby to become ſinful, but to become devoted in a judicial manner, as a curſe; and therefore his being ſaid to be made ſin in one place, that we might be made the Righteouſneſs of God in him; 2 Cor. 5. 21. is to be interpreted by Gal. 3. 13. wherein he is ſaid to be made a curſe to redeem us from the curſe of the Law, i. e. a perſon expos'd to the vengeance of God, to procure impunity for the Offenders, that they might be abſolv'd, and treated as if they had never been criminal. He is the Lamb of God that takes away the ſins of the World. Joh. 1. 29. αἴρων The word ſignifies to take up, as well as to take away. He took the guilt upon his Shoulders, that he might for ever take it away from ours. * As we are made Righteouſneſs in him, ſo he was made ſin for us: Now we are not Righteous before God by an inherent, but by an imputed Righteouſneſs, nor was Chriſt made ſin by inherent, but imputed guilt. The ſame way that his Righteouſneſs is Communicated to us, our ſin was Communicated to him. Righteouſneſs was inherent in him, but imputed to us; ſin was inherent in us, but imputed to him: He receiv'd our evils to beſtow his good; and ſubmitted to our curſe to impart to us his Bleſſings; ſuſtain'd the extremity of that wrath we had deſerv'd, to conferr upon us the Grace he had purchaſed. The ſin in us, which he was free from, was by Divine Eſtimation transferr'd upon him, as if he were guilty; that the Righteouſneſs he hath, which we were deſtitute of, might be transferr'd upon us, as if we were innocent. He was made ſin, as if he had ſinn'd all the ſins of men, and we are made Righteouſneſs, as if we had not ſinn'd at all.

2. By accounting the righteousness and sufficiency of his sufferings to us. If we stand upon our own bottom, we are lost; our own rags cannot cover us, nor our own imperfections relieve us. The whole World lyes in wickedness; 1 John 5.19. God is a consuming fire, and we are combustible matter; the Holiness of God, and the Soul of the most righteous fallen Creature, cannot meet without abhorrency on the part of God, and terror on the part of Man. Divine Holiness cannot but hate us, Divine Justice cannot but consume us, if we have no other Righteousness than our own imperfect one to please the one, and be a bar to the other. There is no Justification by the Law, but upon a perfect Righteousness, and we must be justifyed by the performance of the Law, or we can never be justifyed; for the Law of God was not abrogated upon the fall of man; 'tis the Authority of the Law-giver, and not the offence of the Malefactor, which doth abolish a Law. But we cannot perform the Law our selves. Alas, All have sinned and come short of the Glory of God. Rom. 3.23. of that Righteousness which glorifies God; and having once broken the Law, we can never be said perfectly to keep it; for if we had grace given us to perform it for the future, it nulls not the breach of it for the time past. Since the Law is not abrogated, it must be exactly obeyed, the honour of it must be preserved; it cannot be observ'd by us, it was Christ only who kept it, and never broke it, and indur'd the penalty of it for us, not for himself: For the Law requires Obedience of a Creature, but demands not punishment but upon default of Obedience. The punishment was not inflicted on him for himself, but for us; the virtue of that must be transfer'd to us, which cannot be any other way than by imputation, or reckoning it ours, as we are one body with him. Besides, Justification cannot be by any thing inherent in us; for we are ungodly, before the first instant of Justification; Rom. 5.5. and Sinners, and Enemies: Rom. 5.10. Since there is nothing but unrighteousness in us, a Righteousness must be fetcht from something without us; If it be without us, 'tis not inhærent in us. What Righteousness is in us after Justification, cannot be the cause of the Justification which præceded that Righteousness. The Effect never præcedes the cause. If the Righteousness whereby we are justifyed be not inhærent in us, but in another, how can it be our Righteousness, but by some way of counting it to us. God intended Christ's suffering as the way of bearing iniquity for us, and accepted him as one that bore our Iniquities, and made this bearing Iniquity the ground of the Justification of many; Isa. 53. 11. By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justifie many, for he shall bear their Iniquities. In his bearing our Iniquities, there was the imputation of our sins: In our Justification there must be the imputation of his suffering. The counting another's Righteousness to us is as reasonable, and easie to conceive, as the counting our sins to another. Without this way of reckoning it to us, we cannot conceive of the intercession of Christ, or what pleas he can use. He is an Advocate by vertue of his propitiation, and his Righteousness in it. 1 Joh. 2. 1, 2. The plea then must be of this Nature, Father, I took flesh by thy order, and suffered Death according to thy pleasure: I gave my Soul a ransome for many, and the shedding of my blood was a sweet smelling Sacrifice. Thou would'st have me be made a curse to free others from the curse, and to receive wounds, that others might receive health: Let those therefore that plead the merit of my suffering, be absolv'd from their guilt. I have born their sins, their iniquities thou didst cause to meet on me, condemn them not to bear those iniquities I have born already. To what purpose did I bear them, if they must bear them to? And to what purpose should they believe in me, if they must sink under the same condemnation with those that refuse me? How this plea can be made without accepting those sufferings for us, and counting the righteousness of them to us, is not to be understood. Some compare this way of imputation to the Sun shining upon the Wall, through a green or blew glass, whereby the true colour of the Wall is indiscernable while the colour communicated by the Glass is upon it; yet this colour is not the colour of the Wall, but the colour of the glass, and inhærent in the Glass, only reflected upon the wall; so the righteousness whereby we are justifyed, and which covers our Iniquities from the sight of God, is inherent in Christ, but transferr'd to us. The ground of this imputation is community of Nature. Because he took not the nature of Angels, 'tis not reckon'd to them.

Heb.

ſins of a different ſtamp, and a contrary nature, in regard of the Acts and Objects, God hath made to meet at the Croſs of Chriſt, and laid them all upon him, Iſa. 53. 6. The ſins of all believing perſons, in all parts, in all Ages of the World, from the firſt Moment of mans ſinning, to the laſt ſin committed on the Earth. In regard of this Extenſive Vertue, the ſcape-goat was a Type of him; for though there were not particular Sacrifices under the Law, appointed for ſome ſins, yet in that Anniverſary one, all the ſins of the people were laid upon the head of that devoted Goat, to be carried into the Wilderneſs. Lev. 16. 21. עֲוֹנוֹת חַטֹּאתָם פִּשְׁעֵיהֶם And and ſame ſeveral words ſignifying all ſorts of ſins are there uſed, as God uſes, Exod. 34. 7. when he Proclaims himſelf a God forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin. And the firſt ſin we read of, cleans'd by this Blood, after it was ſhed, was the moſt prodigious wickedneſs that ever was committed in the face of the Sun, even the Murder of the Son of God, Acts 2. 36, 38. So that ſuppoſe, a man were able to pull Heaven and Earth to pieces, Murder all the reſt of Mankind, deſtroy the Angels, thoſe ſuperlative parts of the Creation; he would not contract ſo monſtrous a guilt, as thoſe did in the Crucifying the Son of God, whoſe perſon was Infinitely Superiour to the whole Creation. God then hereby gave an Experiment of the ineſtimable value of Chriſts Blood, and the inexhauſtible vertue of it. Well might the Apoſtle ſay, The Blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin.

III. Thing; How Chriſts Blood cleanſeth from ſin. God the Father doth actually and efficiently juſtifie; Chriſts Blood doth Meritoriouſly juſtifie. God the Father is conſider'd as Judge, Chriſt is conſider'd as Prieſt and Sacrifice. He was a Prieſt in things pertaining to God, Heb. 2. 17. to make Reconciliation for the ſins of the People. He is the Fountain, ſet open for ſin, and for uncleanneſs, Zach. 13. 1. And forgiveneſs of ſin is a fruit of Redemption, through his Blood, Col. 1. 14.

This is done,

1. By taking ſin upon himſelf. God Collected all the ſins from all parts of the World, in all Ages of the World, bound them up together, and laid them upon Chriſts Shoulders, Iſa. 53. 6. Alluding to the manner of transferring the ſins of the people, by Aarons laying his hands upon the head of the Sacrifice: So that as the ſcape-goat purg'd the people, Chriſt cleanſeth or juſtifies men by bearing their iniquities, Iſa. 53. 11. Not by bearing the pollution of them inherently, but the guilt of them, or the curſe which the ſinner had merited: For our ſins could no more be tranſmitted to him in the filth and defilement of them, than the iniquities of the Iſraelites could be infus'd into the ſcape-Goat, but only in their Curſe and Guilt. A Beaſt was not capable of ſpiritual pollution, becauſe it wanted an intellectual Nature; nor Chriſt, becauſe of the excellency of his Perſon. Chriſt took our ſins upon him, not thereby to become ſinful, but to become devoted in a judicial manner, as a curſe; and therefore his being ſaid to be made ſin in one place, that we might be made the Righteouſneſs of God in him; 2 Cor. 5. 21. is to be interpreted by Gal. 3. 13. wherein he is ſaid to be made a curſe to redeem us from the curſe of the Law, i. e. a perſon expos'd to the vengeance of God, to procure impunity for the Offenders, that they might be abſolv'd, and treated as if they had never been criminal. He is the Lamb of God that takes away the ſins of the World. Joh. 1. 29. αἴρων The word ſignifies to take up, as well as to take away. He took the guilt upon his Shoulders, that he might for ever take it away from ours. * As we are made Righteouſneſs in him, ſo he was made ſin for us: Now we are not Righteous before God by an inherent, but by an imputed Righteouſneſs, nor was Chriſt made ſin by inherent, but imputed guilt. The ſame way that his Righteouſneſs is Communicated to us, our ſin was Communicated to him. Righteouſneſs was inherent in him, but imputed to us; ſin was inherent in us, but imputed to him: He receiv'd our evils to beſtow his good; and ſubmitted to our curſe to impart to us his Bleſſings; ſuſtain'd the extremity of that wrath we had deſerv'd, to conferr upon us the Grace he had purchaſed. 2. By accounting the righteouſneſs and ſufficiency of his ſufferings to us. If we ſtand upon our own bottom, we are loſt; our own rags cannot cover us, nor our own imperfections relieve us. The whole World lyes in wickedneſs; 1 John 5.19. God is a conſuming fire, and we are combuſtible matter; the Holineſs of God, and the Soul of the moſt righteous fallen Creature, cannot meet without abhorrency on the part of God, and terror on the part of Man. Divine Holineſs cannot but hate us, Divine Juſtice cannot but conſume us, if we have no other Righteouſneſs than our own imperfect one to pleaſe the one, and be a bar to the other. There is no Juſtification by the Law, but upon a perfect Righteouſneſs, and we muſt be juſtifyed by the performance of the Law, or we can never be juſtifyed; for the Law of God was not abrogated upon the fall of man; 'tis the Authority of the Lawgiver, and not the offence of the Malefactor, which doth aboliſh a Law. But we cannot perform the Law our ſelves. Alas, All have ſinned and come ſhort of the Glory of God. Rom. 3. 23. of that Righteouſneſs which glorifies God; and having once broken the Law, we can never be ſaid perfectly to keep it; for if we had grace given us to perform it for the future, it nulls not the breach of it for the time paſt. Since the Law is not abrogated, it muſt be exactly obeyed, the honour of it muſt be preſerved; it cannot be obſerv'd by us, it was Chriſt only who kept it, and never broke it, and indur'd the penalty of it for us, not for himſelf: For the Law requires Obedience of a Creature, but demands not puniſhment but upon default of Obedience. The puniſhment was not inflicted on him for himſelf, but for us; the virtue of that muſt be transfer'd to us, which cannot be any other way than by imputation, or reckoning it ours, as we are one body with him. Beſides, Juſtification cannot be by any thing inherent in us; for we are ungodly, before the firſt inſtant of Juſtification; Rom. 5. 5. and Sinners, and Enemies: Rom. 5. 10. Since there is nothing but unrighteouſneſs in us, a Righteouſneſs muſt be fetcht from ſomething without us; If it be without us, 'tis not inhærent in us. What Righteouſneſs is in us after Juſtification, cannot be the cauſe of the Juſtification which præceded that Righteouſneſs. The Effect never præcedes the cauſe. If the Righteouſneſs whereby we are juſtifyed be not inhærent in us, but in another, how can it be our Righteouſneſs, but by ſome way of counting it to us. God intended Chriſt's ſuffering as the way of bearing iniquity for us, and accepted him as one that bore our Iniquities, and made this bearing Iniquity the ground of the Juſtification of many; Iſa. 53. 11. By his knowledge ſhall my righteous Servant juſtifie many, for he ſhall bear their Iniquities. In his bearing our Iniquities, there was the imputation of our ſins: In our Juſtification there muſt be the imputation of his ſuffering. The counting another's Righteouſneſs to us is as reaſonable, and eaſie to conceive, as the counting our ſins to another. Without this way of reckoning it to us, we cannot conceive of the interceſſion of Chriſt, or what pleas he can uſe. He is an Advocate by vertue of his propitiation, and his Righteouſneſs in it. 1 Joh. 2. 1, 2. The plea then muſt be of this Nature, Father, I took fleſh by thy order, and ſuffered Death according to thy pleaſure: I gave my Soul a ranſome for many, and the ſhedding of my blood was a ſweet ſmelling Sacrifice. Thou would'ſt have me be made a curſe to free others from the curſe, and to receive wounds, that others might receive health: Let thoſe therefore that plead the merit of my ſuffering, be abſolv'd from their guilt. I have born their ſins, their iniquities thou didſt cauſe to meet on me, condemn them not to bear thoſe iniquities I have born already. To what purpoſe did I bear them, if they muſt bear them to? And to what purpoſe ſhould they believe in me, if they muſt ſink under the ſame condemnation with thoſe that refuſe me? How this plea can be made without accepting thoſe ſufferings for us, and counting the righteouſneſs of them to us, is not to be underſtood. Some compare this way of imputation to the Sun ſhining upon the Wall, through a green or blew glaſs, whereby the true colour of the Wall is indiſcernable while the colour communicated by the Glaſs is upon it; yet this colour is not the colour of the Wall, but the colour of the glaſs, and inhærent in the Glaſs, only reflected upon the wall; ſo the righteouſneſs whereby we are juſtifyed, and which covers our Iniquities from the ſight of God, is inherent in Chriſt, but transferr'd to us. The ground of this imputation is community of Nature. Becauſe he took not the nature of Angels, 'tis not reckon'd to them. Heb.

Heb. 2. 16, 17. If he had taken the Nature of Angels, it could not have been reckon'd to us, becauſe he had not been akinn to us. Had he taken the Nature of Angels, it could no more have been imputed to us, than the fall of Angels can be imputed to us; which cannot be, becauſe we have not an agreement in the ſame nature with them: And next to that, the ground of it is his Reſurrection from the Grave. Had he lain in the Grave, his righteouſneſs could not have been imputed to us, becauſe it had not been declar'd ſufficient in it ſelf; and the ſufficiency of the price, and the accepting it for a ranſome, muſt præcede the accounting of it to another for his deliverance. That which is the evidence of the perfection, and agreeableneſs of it to the judgment of God, is the ground of the imputation of it to us: But his going to the Father, whereof his Reſurrection was the firſt ſtep, and his aſcenſion the next, is the convincing argument the Comforter makes uſe of to perſwade men of the fullneſs, and exactneſs of it. John 16. 10.

(1.) This cleanſing of us by imputing this blood to us, is by vertue of union, and communion with him. The Apoſtle before the Text ſpeaks of a fellowſhip with God and Chriſt, which implies union with Chriſt, and then the blood of Chriſt cleanſeth from all ſin. What Chriſt did as a common perſon, is accepted for us; but the actual imputation of it to us depends upon our becoming one body with him. If we had not had a union with Adam in Nature, and been ſeminally in him, his ſin could no more have been imputed to us than the ſin of the fallen Angels could be counted ours; ſo if we have not a Union with Chriſt, his Righteouſneſs can no more be reckon'd to us than the Righteouſneſs of the ſtanding Angels can be imputed to us. We muſt therefore be in Chriſt as really as we were in Adam, though not in the ſame manner of reality. We were in Adam ſeminally, we are in Chriſt legally; yet ſo, that it is counted in the judgment of God as much as if there were a ſeminal union. Believers are therefore called the ſeed of Chriſt, Iſa. 53. 10. Pſal. 22. 30. And they are call'd Chriſt, 1 Cor. 12. 12. And the Body of Chriſt, v. 27. 'Tis ſaith one, * not numerically, but legally ſuch. If we had been in him ſeminally as we were in Adam, Righteouſneſs would have been communicated to all deſcending from him: But God hath appointed a higher way of communication by ſpiritual Union. As thoſe who were in Adam by Natural propagation, are made guilty by his tranſgreſſion to condemnation; ſo all that are ſpiritually united to Chriſt, are cleanſed from their many offences to Juſtification. Rom. 5. 16. As there was a neceſſity of his Union with us in our nature for our Redemption, (ſince he could not be the Redeemer of Mankind by Death as he was the Son of God, unleſs he were alſo the Son of man;) ſo there is a neceſſity of our union with him in his Spirit. As there could be no expiation without a ſatisfaction, no ſatisfaction to be made by Chriſt, unleſs there were an imputation of our ſins to him, and no imputation can be ſuppoſ'd, unleſs he were united to us in our Nature; ſo there can be no imputation of any thing in him to us, unleſs there be a ſtrait union, whereby he becomes our Head, and we his Members. What doth the Apoſtle mean in that wiſh of being found in Chriſt, but this Union, whereby he might have a ſhare in his Righteouſneſs? Phil. 3. 9. Not his own Righteouſneſs, but the Righteouſneſs of God communicated through, or by Faith. And where is our compleatneſs, but in him. Coloſ. 2. 10. As we are reckon'd one Lump and Maſs with him, and being join'd to him, are counted one Spirit with him? 1 Cor. 6. 17. Union with him goes firſt in order of Nature before Juſtification: We are firſt united to him as our Sponſor, and being in him, we are counted Righteous. This is the Apoſtles aſſertion, 1 Cor. 1. 30. But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs, &c. And ſo the Righteouſneſs of the Law, Rom. 8. 4. δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου, or the juſt Judgment of the Law is fulfilled in us (ſaith Cocceius.) We are judged to have in him a perfect Obedience, or we are judg'd not out of Chriſt as ſinners, but in Chriſt as his Members.

* Mr. Herle in his Treatiſe of Chriſtian Wiſdom.

* de Fœd. 442.

(2.) This Union is made by Faith; and upon this account we are ſaid to be juſtified by Faith. This is our willingneſs to receive Chriſt upon the terms he is offer'd. Since a Mediator is not a Mediator of one, but ſuppoſeth in the notion of it two parties, there muſt be a conſent on both ſides. God's conſent is manifeſted by giving, our conſent is by receiving; which is a Title given to Faith, John 1. 12.

Gods

Gods conſent in appointing and accepting the atonement, and ours in receiving the atonement, which is all one with receiving forgiveneſs of ſin, Rom. 5. 11. Gods conſent in the Typical Adminiſtration was evident in appointing Sacrifices, and the ſending down fire from Heaven for conſuming them: The ſinners conſent was to be ſignifyed by laying his hands upon the head of the Sacrifice, intimating his Union with that Sacrifice, and ſo by the ſacrificing of it, he was counted as quitted of that guilt for which the Sacrifice was offer'd. We muſt be as willing to accept of this Sacrifice, as Chriſt was to offer this Sacrifice, with a willingneſs of the ſame kind; but alas, what Creature can mount to a willingneſs of the ſame degree? God might have required many ſharp conditions of us, many years troubles and ſorrows: But he requires only a willingneſs of us to receive and acknowledge the depths of his Wiſdom and Grace, and conform to his Will in the New Covenant. This makes up the Marriage-knot between the Sinner and the Redeemer. By this the ſoul empties it ſelf, and claſps about a Saviour; and then Chriſt and the Believer are counted as one perſon legally: Therefore Chriſt dwelling in us, and our having Faith are linkt together as if they were the ſame thing. Eph. 3. 17. By Gods acceptance of this blood we are render'd cleanſable and juſtifiable. By our acceptance of it it is actually imputed to us, and we actually juſtifyed. However, when it was ſhed by Chriſt, and received as a ſweet ſmelling Sacrifice by God, it made us pardonable, yet actual pardon is not beſtowed without believing. His blood avails none but thoſe that he pleads it for, and he pleads it not for thoſe that come to God, but that come to God by him. Heb. 7. 25. thoſe that plead in his name for the benefits which are the purchaſe of his blood; without him we are combuſtible matter before a conſuming fire, and cannot approach to the Throne of God with any ſucceſs. This Faith muſt go in order before cleanſing or Juſtification. The Righteouſneſs of God is only upon them that believe. Rom. 3. 22. We have believed that we might be juſtifyed. Gal. 2. 16. This Faith is not our Righteouſneſs, nor is it ever called ſo, but we have a Righteouſneſs by the means of Faith. By Faith, or through Faith is the Language of the Apoſtle; Rom. 3. 22, 25. Faith in his Blood, Faith reaching out to his blood, embracing his blood, ſucking up his propitiating blood, and pleading it. Though Faith is the Eye and Hand of the Soul, looking up and reaching out to whole Chriſt as offer'd in the promiſe, yet in this act of it to be freed from the guilt of ſin, it graſps Chriſt as a Sacrifice, it hangs upon him as paying a price, and takes this blood as a blood ſhed for the ſoul, and inſiſts upon the ſufficient value of it with God. Faith reſpects the ſubject wherein it is, as guilty; for it is a Grace, deveſting a man of his own Righteouſneſs, and emptying a man of his own ſtrength and ſufficiency, and accuſing the ſoul of guilt; and therefore eyes that which ſtands in direct oppoſition to this guilt, the free Grace of God accepting Chriſt as a propitiation. It eyes that in craving Juſtification, which God eyes in beſtowing it, which is the Redeemers bearing iniquity. Iſa. 53. 11. It hath no efficacy of it ſelf, but as it is the band of our Union with Chriſt. The whole virtue of cleanſing proceeds from Chriſt the Object. We receive the Water with our hands, but the Cleanſing Vertue is not in our hands, but in the Water; yet the water cannot cleanſe us without our receiving it; our receiving it unites the water to us, and is a means whereby we are cleanſed. And therefore it is obſerv'd that our Juſtification by Faith is always expreſt in the paſſive, not in the active; as we are juſtifyed by Faith, not that Faith juſtifies us. The efficacy is in Chriſt's blood, the reception of it in our Faith. Though we are juſtifyed by Faith, yet all our peace, and all thoſe bleſſings which are bundled up in peace with God, come in and through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Rom. 5. 1. Being juſtifyed by Faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

IV. The USE.

If the Blood of Chriſt hath the only and perpetual vertue, and doth actually and perfectly cleanſe Believers from all ſin. Then it affords us

I. A Uſe of Inſtruction.

(1.) Every man unintereſted by Faith in the Blood of Chriſt, is hopeleſs of a freedom from guilt while he continues in that ſtate. Without Faith we are at a diſtance from God, by contracting in our Natural ſtate a guilt, that ſubjected us to the curſes of the Law, and we remain under that Wrath the ſtate of Nature put us into, till we are intereſted by Faith in the expiating blood of the Redeemer. All the Indictments that our own Conſciences, and, which is incomprehenſibly more, the Omniſcience of God can charge upon us, remain in their full force, are unanſwerable by us, and we muſt inevitably ſink under them, till the blood of Chriſt apprehended by Faith, cancel the bond, and raſe out the accuſation. The blood of Chriſt is ſo far from cleanſing an Unbeliever from all ſin, that it rather binds his ſins the faſter on him. Unbelief locks the ſins on more ſtrongly; ſo that the violations of the Law ſtick cloſer to him, and the wrath of God hangs over him. Thoſe that have no communion with Chriſt, have no intereſt in the blood of Chriſt; for they are ſuch as have fellowſhip with the Father, and with his Son, Jeſus Chriſt, to whom John in the Text appropriates this priviledge of being cleanſed from all ſin by the blood of Chriſt. Thoſe that ſlight the blood of Chriſt, render themſelves uncapable of cleanſing, becauſe no other Sacrifice can be offer'd, no other blood can be preſented to God of a value equal to it. No more Sacrifice remains for ſin. Heb. 10. 26. There was but one bloody ſacrifice appointed for expiation, and there can be no leſs required of us for the enjoying the benefit of it, than the receiving the atonement. Rom. 5. 11. 'Tis not conſiſtent with the honour of God, to diſcharge men upon the account of the ſufferings of the ſurety, who will perſiſt in that ſin for which the ſurety ſuffer'd; and make uſe of a Saviour to be freed from ſuffering, but not freed from offending. It would be contrary to the end of our Saviours Death, to ſprinkle that blood upon thoſe that tread it under their feet, which was ſhed for the gathering together the Sons of God. John 11. 52. To let the deſpiſers of it have an equal ſhare in the benefits of it with thoſe that receive it. It cannot be imagin'd that God will ever make it a ſavour of Life, as much to them that will not value it, as to thoſe that do.

(2.) No freedom from the guilt of ſin is to be expected from meer mercy. The figure of this was notable in the legal Oeconomy. The mercy ſeat was not to be approacht by the High Prieſt without blood. Deut. 9. 7 Chriſt himſelf typified by the High Prieſt, expects no mercy for any of his followers, but by the merit of his blood. What reaſon have any then to expect remiſſion upon the account of meer compaſſion without pleading his blood? Mercy is brought to us only by the ſmoke of this Sacrifice. The very title of Juſtification implies not only Mercy, but Juſtice; and more Juſtice than Mercy; for Juſtification is not upon a bare petition, but a propitiation. To be pardon'd indeed, implies Mercy. Pardon is an act of favour, whereby the Criminal is graced and gratifyed; but to be juſtifyed, is to be diſcharg'd in a legal way, or by way of compenſation. A man may be pardon'd as a ſupplicant, but not pronounc'd righteous but upon the merits of his cauſe. He that imploys Mercy, acknowledges guilt, but inſiſts not upon a Righteouſneſs. Juſtification or Pardon is not the act of God as Creator, for then it had been meer Mercy; nor as a Law-giver, according to the terms of the firſt Covenant, for then no man after his revolted ſtate could be juſtifyed; but as a Judge, according to the Laws of Redemption, and that in a way of righteouſneſs and Juſtice. 2 Tim. 4. 8. God is not to be ſought to for this concern, but in Chriſt; nor meer Mercy implor'd without the Redeemers merit, becauſe God doth not forgive our ſins, or reconcile our perſons to himſelf, but for the propitiating blood of his Son. To expect pardon only upon the account of Mercy, is to honour one Attribute with the denyal of, or over-looking the other. Though God be merciful, yet he is juſt; his Mercy is made known in Remiſſion, his Juſtice, manifeſted in Juſtification. Forget not the great demonſtration of his Juſtice when you come to plead for Mercy: Plead both in the blood of Chriſt, God is merciful to none out of Chriſt; he is merciful to none, but to whom he is juſt; merciful to them in regard of themſelves, and their own demerits: Juſt and Righteous to them in regard of the blood and merits of his Son.

(3.) There is no ground for the merits of Saints or a cleanſing Purgatory. The Apoſtle ſaith not, you have a treaſure of the merits of the departed Saints. Or you muſt expect a Purgatory hereafter to cleanſe you from all your ſins. He mentions only the blood of Chriſt as fully ſufficient, and efficacious for this end. To

to set up other Mediations, Atonements, Satisfactions, is a contempt of the Wisdom of God in his Ordination of this only one of his Son; of the Holiness and Justice of God in accepting this, as if God had mistaken himself, when he chearfully received this as compleatly satisfactory to him, and answering his ends; as if notwithstanding his full pleasure with it, it needed some addition from Creatures to eek it out to a compleatness. 'Tis a dishonour to Christ, accusing him of an imperfect satisfaction, of an insufficient and infirm blood; a stripping it of its infinite value. How can that be infinite, which needs a finite thing to strengthen it, and render it efficacious? He that goes to a muddy stream to wash himself, disgraces the pure fountain he hath in his own dwelling. This the Romanists use in the form of absolution. * Let the passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, the merits of the Blessed Virgin, and of all the Saints, and whatsoever good thou hast done, and whatsoever thou hast sustained, be to thee; i. e. accounted to thee, or accepted for thee for the remission of thy Sins, the increase of thy Grace, and the reward of Eternal Life. Nor is Purgatory a small disparagement to the extensive vertue of this cleansing blood. If the blood of Christ cleanseth, what interpretation can common reason and sence make of it, but that the person so cleansed is exempted from any punishment for his Crime? Is the blood of the Son of God of so weak an efficacy, that it needs a cleansing fire in another world, to purge out the reliques of guilt left behind by it in this? If there must be such a pænal satisfaction, where is the uncontroulable vertue of this blood? If this Blood, which is the blood of God, hath not a sufficient vertue, what finite fire can lay claim to it? What in reason can be suppos'd to have it? And if it be perfectly purgative, what need of any thing else that can never deserve the name of satisfaction? Shall that God who is Goodness and Righteousness it self, punish a man for that Crime which he hath remitted upon so great a compensation? If he be pardon'd, with what Justice, can he be punished? If he be punisht by the severity of fire, with what mercy, or by what merit was he pardon'd and justifyed? 'Tis no friendship to the perfection of God's Justice to alledge that he will punish that which he hath remitted; and as little right is done to the perfection of Christ's meritorious blood, to make it of a half validity, a lame propitiation, which requires something to be done or suffer'd by the sinner to render it compleat in the sight of God. With what face could Christ tell Sinners that came believingly to him in the World, that their Faith had sav'd them, and they might go in peace, if a Purgatory satisfaction were to be exacted of them after this Life, and his own passion had been unable to make their peace?

* Cajetan sum. p. 2. The first Head Absolution.

(4.) No meer Creature can cleanse from sin. No finite thing can satisfie an infinite Justice: No finite thing can remit or purchase the Remission of an injury against an Infinite Being. A finite compensation can bear no proportion to an infinite wrong. If pardon as well as Regeneration be a work of Omnipotence, as we have lately heard; No Creature but is as unable to remove guilt from the Soul, as it had been unable to remove deformity from the first Matter and Chaos. A Creature can no more cleanse a Soul, than it can Frame and Govern a World, and Redeem a captiv'd sinner.

(5.) There is no Righteousness of our own, no Services we can do, are sufficient for so great a concern. To depend upon any, or all of them, or any thing in our selves, is injurious to the value and worth of this Blood; 'tis injurious also to our selves: 'Tis like the setting up a Paper Wall to keep off a dreadful Fire, even that consuming one of Gods Justice. The Apostle doth more than once complain of the Seducers that crept into the Galatian Church, and would sow the Tares of Justification by the Law, and their own works; so that they made the death of Christ in vain, Gal. 2. 2. And his work of no effect. Gal. 5. 4. And tells them there plainly, that the expectation of a Justification upon such an account, was a falling from Grace. If we are Justified from our guilt by works, they must be works before Faith, or after Faith: Not before Faith; for the corruption of Nature remaining in its full force, without any amendment, any alteration, or subduing by renewing Grace, will check men that understand any thing of the woful and deplorable, the weak and impotent condition of man by Nature, from such a Thought: And indeed those that hold Justification by works, make Faith in Christ necessary to the acceptance of thoſe works. Nor do works after Faith juſtifie, for then a Believer is not juſtified upon his believing, but upon his working after his believing: So that Faith then is not the juſtifying Grace, but a preparation to thoſe works which juſtifie, which is quite contrary to the ſtrain of the great Apoſtle in his Epiſtles, who aſcribes Juſtification to Faith in the Blood of Chriſt, and to Faith without works. 'Tis by Faith we are united to Chriſt, as the great undertaker for us: By that we receive the Atonement, and accept of the infinite ſatisfaction made by the Redeemer, to the juſtice of God. The acceptance of this, and embracing this as done for us, and accepted by God for us, cannot be an act of our works, but of our Faith. All works are excluded by the Apoſtle, Rom. 4. 5, 6. without reſtraining them to the works of the Law, as he doth ſometimes in other places. Faith alone is oppos'd to works in general, and therefore to all ſorts of works; and works after Grace he doth plainly exclude, Eph. 2. 8. By Grace you are ſaved through Faith, and that not of your ſelves, not of works leſt any man ſhould boaſt. What works are thoſe? works after Regeneration; for they are thoſe works to which they were Created in Jeſus Chriſt; which indeed, ſaith he, God ordain'd that we ſhould walk in them, not that we ſhould be ſaved or juſtified by them. And ſo when he deſires not to be found in his own Righteouſneſs which is of the Law. Phil. 3. 8, 9. Can he underſtand only thoſe works, and that Righteouſneſs which he had before his converſion to Chriſt? As though works after Faith were not more conformable to the Law, than works before Faith; but let them be works flowing from what Principle ſoever, he renounceth them all, accounts them loſs for Chriſt, and places no confidence in them. He did not renounce the priviledges of his Birth, or ſtrip himſelf of a love to Holy works, but of the opinion of any value they had with God of themſelves to Juſtification. Whatſoever might come under the Title of his own Righteouſneſs, he doth caſt away, as to any dependance on it, or pleading of it before God. And may not his works after his giving up his name to Chriſt, be called his own Righteouſneſs, as well as thoſe in a State of Nature? Though the Principle was alter'd, yet the Acts from that Principle, were his own Acts, and his own Righteouſneſs. So Abraham was not juſtified by his works after believing, no more than by thoſe before. Rom. 4. 3. Abraham believ'd God, and it was accounted to him for Righteouſneſs. For thoſe words cited out of Gen. 15. 6. were ſpoken of Abraham, ſeveral years after his call and complyance, with it by Faith; and here ſingled out as the cauſe of his Juſtification, without any concomitancy of his own works, flowing from that Faith, or any mixture of them, or conſideration of them by God, in this juſtifying Act. And David, though he was a great Prophet, yet had not ſo diſtinct a knowledge of the Goſpel, as thoſe that live in the times of the Goſpel, yet under that Legal Adminiſtration, wherein he was born, and bred, and liv'd all his days, had no confidence in his own works, not in thoſe which he wrought as Gods Servant, out of love to him, fear of him, truſt in him, he refuſeth all venturing his Soul upon them, before the Tribunal of God, when he deſires God not to enter into Judgment with him; Pſalm 143. 2. Enter not into Judgment with thy Servant. Anſwer me in thy Righteouſneſs, v. 1. not according to my own. Enter not into Judgment with thy Servant; though I be thy Servant, and mine own Conſcience tells me, I have an upright heart towards thee, yet I dare not enter into a plea with thee upon my ſervice, or ſtand before thy Judgment-Seat in the ſtrength of my works; and the reaſon he renders, ſhows that he underſtood it of Juſtification, and is incluſive of all men that ever drew Breath, for it is as generally expreſt as any thing can be; for in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified; Not an Apoſtle, Martyr, Prophet, can ſtand before God, when he compares his actions with the rule. David was far from any confident ſentiments of his own works, or the ſtrength of the Blood of Legal Sacrifices. How often doth he aggravate his crimes, and debaſe the value of his ſervices, and ſpeak of the Sacrifices, as unable to render a ſatisfaction to God? We ſee the Father of the faithful, the greateſt Type of Chriſt, and he that ſeems the moſt rational among the Apoſtles, diſclaiming any Juſtification by their own works, even by thoſe, wrought by them after they were really liſted in the ſervice of God.

And

And there is good reaſon for it.

[1.] No Righteouſneſs of man is perfect, and therefore no Righteouſneſs of man is juſtifying. Whatſoever works do juſtifie, muſt be in the extent of them, and all the circumſtances fully conform'd unto that Precept that enjoyns them. What man hath a righteouſneſs commenſurate with the rule of the Law, whereby his works are to be tryed? Again, every man, the Moment before his Juſtification is ungodly. Rom. 4. 5. He is in that ſtate juſt before his Juſtification. If he be juſtified by his own works, he is then juſtified by ungodly works, and then a contradiction will follow, that a man is juſtified by his merit of Condemnation, and pronounc'd Righteous upon the account of his Unrighteouſneſs: 'Tis as much as to ſay, a man ſhall be juſtified by his ſinfulneſs, and be judged an Obſerver of the Law by his tranſgreſſing it.

(1.) The mixture of one ſinful act among a multitude of good works, renders a man imperfect, and conſequently uncapable of Juſtification by them. Suppoſe a man had only one ſin, and all his other works clear without a flaw, the Law could not pronounce him Righteous, becauſe he fell ſhort of that Univerſal, and perpetual rectitude which the Law requires in all things. Gal. 3. 10. Curſed is he that continueth not in all things which are written in the Book of the Law, to do them. If he fails but in one thing, and that but once in his whole Life, and that but in the omiſſion of any one circumſtance it requires, he ſinks under the curſe. But ſince a man never perform'd in his whole Life a duty entirely exact, with what face can he expect a Juſtification from that Law, which he never obſerv'd with that exactneſs due to it in any one action that ever he did? Works are debts, unleſs a debt be fully paid, a man cannot be ſaid to be a righteous perſon. If a man ows a thouſand pound, and pays Nine hundred ninety nine pound, nineteen ſhillings, and pays not that one ſhilling, which is as much due as the whole, he is unrighteous in withholding that, and the bond may be put in ſuit againſt him for that if the Creditor pleaſe. What man ever paid the full debt of works he ow'd to God by vertue of the Law? How far is any man from paying all the parts of his debt but one only? Suppoſe we had not only a perfect work, but many perfect works, all perfect works but one; the works might juſtifie themſelves, but not juſtifie the perſon that hath a ſtain upon him in the account of the Law. But the caſe is more deplorable: For if God will contend with man, he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand. Job. 9. 2, 3. * Some of the Jews interpret it thus, That the arguments and pleas men can bring from their own works, for their defence before his tribunal, are ſo weak and trifling, that God in ſcorn would not vouchſafe to give a reply to one plea of theirs among a thouſand. But rather it is to be underſtood, that man cannot render one little reaſon among a thouſand pleas for his own Juſtification, on any one of a thouſand of thoſe charges God can bring againſt him. * Mercer.

(2.) There is not one act a man doth, but there is matter of condemnation in it. As the Scripture excepts every man from doing good, as conſider'd in his Natural Corruption; Rom. 3. 12. So it excepts every man from doing any one pure good Action; Eccleſ. 7. 20. There is not a juſt man upon Earth that doeth good, and ſins not, i. e. He doth not do any good work without a mixture of ſin; And therefore the Scripture pronounceth a mans own Righteouſneſs as filthy raggs. Iſa. 64. 6. Righteouſneſs in the whole extent of it, whatſoever he doth that is Righteous in a way of eminency, is but a filthy ragg, 'tis but a ſhred, and that filthy too: And to think it is able to purge the Soul from ſin, is as much as to think to waſh away one Mudd by another. That which is Condemning, cannot be Juſtifying, that which falls ſhort of the Holineſs of the Law, cannot free us from the Condemning Sentence of the Law: But there is nothing that a man doth but is defective, if compar'd with the Law, which requies an exactneſs of Obedience in every Act, without any ſtain. It requires perfection in the perſon, and perfection in every ſervice. It allowes no blemiſh, nor pronounceth a man righteous, where it doth not find a compleatneſs both for parts and time: 'Tis ſo far therefore from juſtifying, that it muſt needs condemn. For the Righteouſneſs of the Law muſt be fulfilled in every one of us. Rom. 8. 4. Whatſoever plea we can raiſe from our own works, will repreſent us guilty, and that can never be the matter of our Abſolution, which hath ſufficient ficient matter of Condemnation in it. Atainted work is never able to maintain its ſtanding before the infinite Holineſs of God.

(3.) All the works after Grace, fall ſhort of the perfection, required in them by the Law. I do not ſay they fall altogether ſhort of the perfection requir'd in them by the Goſpel, i. e. fall ſhort of that integrity, and ſincerity, which is our Evangelical perfection; but they fall ſhort of that perfection which is requir'd by the Law. There is no Grace in any renewed man in this Life in that perfect degree it ought to be. Corruption of Nature remains in every man, with Regeneration of Nature: 'Tis true, there is a new Principle put in, but not ſo powerful as to aboliſh that principle which poſſeſſed us before, though it doth over-maſter it. There is a Fleſh luſting againſt the Spirit, as well as a Spirit luſting againſt the Fleſh. Gal. 5. 17. And Paul, that was renewed, as much as any man we ever knew renewed, had a Fleſh that ſerv'd the Law of ſin, with a Mind that ſerv'd the Law of God. Rom. 7. 25. No Grace is wrought to its full growth. There is ſtaggering in our faith, and coldneſs in our love, and hardneſs in our melting; And therefore it was a good Speech of Luthers; We can never be ſav'd, if God doth not turn his Eyes from our vertues, as well as from our ſins. * How can that, the unrighteouſneſs whereof was our burden before the Throne of God, be our righteouſneſs before him? How can that heal us, which ſtands in need of cure, and renders us ſick? Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Or the higheſt righteouſneſs out of an unclean newneſs, and an imperfect regeneration? If our duties after grace be ſo corrupt that they need ſomething to render them acceptable, and accepted in the ſight of God; They can never be of that worth, as to render our perſons righteous; for that which needs ſomething to make it ſelf valid, can never make any other thing valid. If our duties want a pardon, and ſomething to cover the defects, and wipe off the blemiſhes of them, they can never upon any bottom of their own, plead themſelves to be a ſufficient Righteouſneſs for a guilty ſinner, guilty in the acting that which is pleaded as a righteouſneſs. No Fleſh can be juſtified in the ſight of God; and nothing that comes from Fleſh can be our righteouſneſs. The beſt man being in part Fleſh, all his works are in part Fleſhly: Where the Nature is wholly corrupt, the Fruit cannot be good: Where the Nature is in part corrupt, the Fruit of the new Nature, muſt be tinctur'd by the ſteams of the old, and therefore is too defective to bottom our Happineſs upon.

* Illyricus.

And conſider but theſe two things.

1. Mens own Conſciences cannot but accuſe them of coming ſhort of the Glory of God, in every thing they do. Can any man upon Earth ſay, he ever did a perfect Action, that he dares venture his Soul upon it, in the preſence of God? There is no mans Conſcience but muſt needs accuſe him of ſin: 1 John 1. 8. He that ſaith he hath no ſin, hath nothing of the Truth in him; And what mans Conſcience ever bore that Teſtimony to him, that he was perfect in all his works? doth it not rather witneſs that he hath numberleſs times violated the Divine Precepts? Who can ſay he did perfectly exert an act of Faith, ſo entire, fixed, ſteady, as might ſute the Divine Holineſs, or that his love had ſuch an intenſe flame in any ſervice he preſented to God? No man yet upon ſerious conſideration did ever judge any one of his works perfect before God. He muſt have very mean thoughts of the Holineſs of God, or be very inconſiderate of his own Actions, and not dive into all the matter and circumſtances of them, if he ſo judg'd. Indeed, Paul ſaith, he knew nothing by himſelf, i. e. of unfaithfulneſs in declaring the Myſteries of God, as to the matter and ſubſtance of them, yet would he not venture his Juſtification upon that bottom. 1 Cor. 4. 4. A ſelf Juſtification in this, would be a ſelf Condemnation. Job 9. 20. If I juſtifie my ſelf, my own mouth ſhall condemn me; If I ſay I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe.

2. But, Suppoſe there be no Accuſations of Conſcience, durſt we ſtand to Gods Tryal of our works? The Omniſcience of God pierceth further than our knowledge; For who can underſtand the errors of his wayes? Pſal. 19. 12. If any Action might be perfect in our account, ſhall we therefore think it ſo in the account of Gods unſpotted Holineſs, who is greater than our hearts, and knows more than our hearts? Who can ſtand before ſo Holy a God? 1 Sam. 6. 20. Job therefore Job. 9. 21. would would not know his own Soul, though he were perfect, he would not approve or boaſt of himſelf in the preſence of God. For he might be ignorant of ſomething in his own Spirit, which never yet reacht his notice, but was not unknown to God that knew all things; he would deſpiſe his Life, i. e. overlook all his upright courſe, and bury it in ſilence, when he comes to appear before God.

(4.) Since therefore all our own Righteouſneſs is of this hue, it would be contrary to the Juſtice and Holineſs of God, to juſtifie a man for imperfect works. His Judgment is alwayes according to Truth. Rom. 2. 2. If he ſhould Judge and accept that for a perfect Righteouſneſs which is notoriouſly imperfect in it ſelf, it would imply a defect in the underſtanding of the Judge, whereby he is chang'd, and judgeth that to be exact Holineſs now, which he judg'd not ſo before: But certainly, if it be an imperfect Righteouſneſs, the Infinite Underſtanding of God can never imagine it perfect, and the Holineſs of God would never deceive it ſelf, in accepting that as perfect, which is not in its own nature ſo. If imperfect works of Grace can juſtifie now, what reaſon can be render'd for the ſtrictneſs God requir'd of the firſt man, in the firſt Covenant, and his ſevere dealing with him upon the Tranſgreſſion of it? The beſt reaſon, and moſt becoming the Majeſty of God, is the Holineſs of his Nature, which is as infinite now, as when he made the firſt Covenant. If that Holineſs can now content it ſelf with an imperfect righteouſneſs, and pronounce us juſtified perſons, without a full Conformity to the Law; it might take a little further ſtep, and pronounce us righteous, without any Conformity at all to it. If he could deny his Holineſs and Truth in one thing, he might upon the ſame account deny it in all, and ſo lay it aſide by degrees, till it came to nothing. If we rightly underſtand the infiniteneſs of Gods Holineſs, we cannot conceive that any thing imperfect can juſtifie us, before ſo exact and ſtrict a Tribunal, where ſits the Omniſcience of God to ſee, the Holineſs of God to hate, and the Juſtice of God to puniſh every defect and deviation from his Law.

[2.] The deſign of God was to juſtifie us in ſuch a way as to ſtrip us of all matter of Glorying in our ſelves, and therefore 'tis not by any righteouſneſs of our own. This the Apoſtle in many places aſſerts. Rom. 3. 26, 27. He juſtifies by the Law of Faith, to exclude boaſting, which would not have been excluded by the Law of works. And Eph. 2. 9 Not of works leaſt any man ſhould boaſt. He had before ſpoken of Salvation or Juſtification by Grace, v. 5. And to ſtrike mens hands off from reſting on any thing in themſelves, and put our own righteouſneſs out of Countenance, he repeats it again, v. 8. By Grace ye are ſaved, and that not of your ſelves; Not of works, becauſe God will have all boaſting excluded; The Apoſtles Argument holds as ſtrong againſt the works of Grace, as thoſe of Nature; the works after the receiving of the Goſpel, as thoſe of the Law; it would elſe be invalid; for if we were juſtified by our own works, wrought by us after the Grace of Redemption Communicated to us, it would but little more exclude boaſting, than the works of Adam, wrought by him in the rectitude of his Nature, which was the gift of God to him: The natural Principle of his actions, as well as the gracious Principle of a Believers, were beſtowed on them by God; that was an act of Gods goodneſs, this of his Grace: And they are our works by Grace, as well as the acts of Adam in innocence, would have been his works by Nature. For though the works of Grace are wrought from a Principle implanted by the Spirit of God, yet they are not the works of that Spirit, no more than Adams works could be ſaid to be the works of God, becauſe they were from a Principle implanted in him by God. The works would have been Adams by the concurrence of God as Creator, and thoſe works are a Believers by the concurrence of God as Redeemer: And if we were juſtified by them, there would be as well matter of boaſting, as there would have been in Adam had he ſtood, and been efficiently juſtified or pronounc'd righteous upon his innocent works. God hates any glorying before him. The Phariſee therefore that diſplayd his righteouſneſs in the Temple before God, with ſome kind of reflection upon his own worth, Luke 18. 10, 11, 12. with ſome kind of exaltation of himſelf, and contempt of the Publican, went away unjuſtified, though he did thankfully acknowledge his eminency in Morality above the Publican, to ſtream to him from from the goodness of God; and no good man in Scripture ever pleaded his own works in Prayer to God for his Justification: Tho' sometimes they have appeal'd to God concerning their Integrity in a particular action. Daniel disowns his own Righteousness: Dan. 9. 18. And the famous Cardinal * and Champion of the Romish Church, upon his Death-Bed would rely on the merits of Christ, though he had disputed for the merit of Works. So sensible are men of the little matter they have to glory of in themselves, when they are ready to stand before the Tribunal of God. God in Justification will have the intire Glory of his Grace to himself; but if any work of ours, though never so gracious, were the cause but in part of our Justification, we had whereof to glory. If we divided it between Christ and our selves, Christ would have but half the Glory, and the other half would be due to us.

* Bellarmine.

To conclude, No man can be justifyed, but by a Covenant of Grace, and by the Righteousness of God, not his own; since all men have been under the corruption of Original sin, no man hath arriv'd to Happiness by any righteousness of his own. Every man being a sinner, is under the curse of the Law, and being accursed by it, cannot be justifyed by it. The Law doth not frown and smile upon a man at one and the same time. It proposeth no recompence, but to those that entirely observe it, and denounceth a curse upon those that in the least do violate it; it accuseth, doth not justifie, and fills the Conscience with darkness and despair, not with comfort and peace.

(6.) We are therefore justifyed by a Righteousness imputed to us. The blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin. 'Tis not inhærent in us, but in the veins of Christ: 'Tis not Physically or corporally applyed to us, but Juridically, in a judicial way, and therefore imputed to us, and that for Justification. Hence we are said to be justifyed by his blood. Rom. 5. 9. if justifyed by his blood, then meritoriously; the merit of that blood must then be imputed to us, and we upon the account of it pronounced righteous by God, since this blood was never inhærent in us. Hence forgiveness of sins, and justification is often ascribed unto it, Rom. 3. 23, 24, 25. Col. 1. 14. As our Iniquities were charg'd upon him, so his Righteousness is deriv'd to us. Our Iniquities were never inhærent in him, but imputed to him: So his blood never was inhærent in us, but imputed to us for the satisfaction of the Law, and so for our Justification from the penalty and curse of it. If it were our Righteousness that were imputed to us, it would be an imputation of Debt, not of Grace. Rom. 4. 4. It cannot be inhærent Righteousness, because it is a Righteousness imputed without works, v. 6. But no inhærent Righteousness is without works. Again, v. 5. The Object of Justification is an ungodly person, one that hath no Righteousness of his own. But since there must be a compleat Righteousness to justifie him, it must be the Righteousness of another; for being ungodly, it cannot be his own. 'Tis therefore by the Righteousness of one man Christ. Rom. 5. 19. As we are made sinners by one mans Disobedience, so we are made Righteous by one mans Obedience. Our being made sinners by one mans disobedience, was no personal act of our own, but a personal act of Adams; so we are made Righteous not by a personal Obedience of our own, but by the perpetual Obedience of Christ, which cannot be of advantage to us, unless some way or other counted to us.

II. Use of Comfort. The comfort of a Believer hath a strong and lasting foundation in the blood of Christ. All our sins met upon Christ as they did upon the scapegoat, and were carryed away with the streams of his blood. A cleansing blood was not the Language of the first Covenant. It requir'd blood to be pour'd out in a way of Revenge, not to be pour'd out, and applyed for the pardon of others. What can relieve us, if this Blood shed by a Holy Saviour, and accepted by a Righteous Judge cannot? This Blood hath remov'd the Curse, purchased our Liberty, and may therefore calm every believing Conscience. What expression can be more stor'd with comfort than this, The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

(1.) The Title is clearing. The Blood of Jesus Christ, his Son: The Titles of the blood of God, and the Righteousness of God, are enough to answer all Objections, and testifie a vertue in it as incomprehensible as that of his Godhead, which elevated ted it to an infinite value. What wounds are ſo deep, that they cannot be heal'd by the Soveraign Balſom of ſo rich a blood? What ſins are too great to be expiated, and what Diſeaſes too deſperate to be cur'd by the Blood of him that created the World? How great is that blood, that muſt have more of value, ſince it is the blood of the Son of God, than all ſins can have of guilt, ſince they are the ſins of the Sons of Men? The Blood of Chriſt is as much above the guilt of our ſins, as the excellency of his perſon is above the meaneſs of ours.

(2.) And who can fathom the comfort that is in the extenſiveneſs of the Object? All ſin. As we are not limited in the Lords Prayer to pray for the forgiveneſs of ſome Debts only, and not for others, but pray for the forgiving of treſpaſſes indefinitely; ſo there is no ſtint ſet to the vertue of this cleanſing blood. All tranſgreſſions to it are like a grain of ſand, or the drop of a Bucket to the Ocean; no more ſeen or diſtinguiſht when it is ſwallowed up by that maſs of Waters. 'Tis a plenteous redemption, ſince it redeems Iſrael, and all the Iſrael of God from all their Iniquities. Pſal. 130.7,8: His blood can cleanſe as many ſins as his God-head can create Worlds, and thoſe are numberleſs: Since there is no limits to his Power, there can be none to his Blood. Though our ſins have weaken'd the Law, and made it unable to ſave us, yet they cannot weaken the Omnipotent ſatisfaction of the Redeemer. The multitude of ſins in the ſinner inhaunce the vaſtneſs of the payment made by the ſurety. Let not any believing Soul be dejected, or any Soul that would cordially believe, and reſign himſelf up to the conduct of Chriſt. That Blood that hath cleanſed ſo many from ſin, and from ſuch multitudes of ſins in their ſeveral capacities, can cleanſe you from all your ſins, were they as great as all thoſe jointly that have been cleanſed by it from the beginning of the World. For what hindrance is there, but that it can do the ſame in one perſon that it hath done in many? When we look upon the multitude of our ſins, our pride, and vain imaginations, our omiſſions of ſervice, our careleſneſs in the ways of God; there cannot but be a hanging down the head, till we lift up our eyes to the Croſs, and ſee all ballanced by the Blood of the Son of God, which cannot be overtopt by the guilt of a believing perſon.

(3.) And doth not the word [cleanſe] deſerve a particular conſideration? What doth that note but

[1.] Perfection. It cleanſeth their guilt ſo, that it ſhall not be found. Jer. 50. 20. What can Juſtice demand more of us, more of our Saviour, than what hath been already paid? The Everlaſting Death of a believing ſinner cannot be challeng'd by it, ſince the blood of a redeeming Saviour hath been ſhed for it. It were injuſtice to put the Creature upon an imperfect ſatisfaction, ſince the ſurety hath given a compleat one; and injuſtice to puniſh him that is no longer guilty of a Crime in the Judgment of the Law of Redemption, ſince by Faith he relyes upon the blood of the Redeemer. Juſtice can no more condemn any that are Objects of Mercy, by receiving the blood of the ſecond Covenant; than meer mercy can ſave any one that remaineth an Object of revenging Juſtice under the firſt Covenant. By this means we do not ſtand before God only as innocent perſons, but as thoſe that have fulfilled the Law, both as to precept and penalty. Rom. 8. 4.

[2.] Continuance of Juſtification. The preſent tenſe implies a continued act. Chriſt's blood is never loſt and congeal'd, as the blood of the legal Sacrifices. His blood is call'd a new way, Heb. 10. 19, 20. πρόσφατος; The word rendred new ſignifies a thing newly ſlain or ſacrificed. His blood is as new and freſh for the work it was appointed to, as when it was ſhed upon the Croſs; as full of vigour, as if it had been ſhed but this moment: 'Tis a blood that was not drunk up by the Earth, but gather'd up again into his body * to be a living, pleading, cleanſing blood in the preſence of God for ever. He did not leave his body and blood putrifying in the Grave, the Sacrifice had then ceaſed and corrupted; it had not been of everlaſting efficacy, as now it is. The Juſtification of a Believer ſtands upon as certain terms as the Juſtification of Chriſt himſelf before God. His was upon the account of ſhedding his blood, ours upon the account of embracing his blood. He was juſtified by God after his bleeding, Iſa. 50. 6, 8. and brought in triumphing, and ſending a challenge to any to condemn him, ſince God had juſtifyed him, v. 9. which words the Apoſtle alludes to) Rom. 8. 33, 34. to ſhow the unrepeatableneſs of Juſtification, and applyes them to Believers, tho' they were ſpoken by Chriſt in his own caſe. Chriſt was juſtifyed by his Reſurrection; 1 Tim. 3.16. Juſtifyed in the Spirit, which is no other than what Peter expreſſeth by being quickned in the Spirit. 1 Pet. 3.18. As Chriſt was juſtifyed by his Reſurrection from all the ſins which met upon him on the Croſs, and that for ever; ſo are Believers cleanſed from all their guilt, and that for ever, by vertue of this blood; the meritorious plea of this blood continuing for ever, is not without the perpetual act of the Righteous Judge, juſtifying thoſe for whom it is pleaded.

* Dr. Jackſon.

Hence will follow ſecurity at the laſt Judgment. His blood cleanſeth from all ſin here, and his voice ſhall abſolve from all ſin hereafter. He that hath been a propitiation for your Guilt, and an Advocate againſt your Accuſers, ſhall never as a Judge, condemn you for your ſins: He doth not indeed Judge as a Prieſt, but as a King: But his Kingly power is but ſubſervient to his Prieſtly Office, ſince he was more ſolemnly confirm'd in that, viz. by an Oath, than in the other; and therefore his Royal Authority ſhall never ruine any, whom his Prieſtly Sacrifice hath reſtored to their loſt inheritance. Let no believing Soul therefore deſpond; let him draw this blood over his fears to ſtifle them, as God hath done over his ſins to cancel them, and drown them in this ſame Ocean into which God hath hurld his Tranſgreſſions.

3. USE. Of Exhortation.

Have recourſe only to this blood upon all occaſions, ſince it only is able to cleanſe us from all our guilt. We have treaſur'd up Wrath, and wounded Conſcience: Nothing can pacifie a ſevere Wrath, and calm a tempeſtuous Conſcience, but this blood. Had we but the guilt of one ſin upon us, we ſtood in need of an expiation by it, as well as if we had Ten thouſand. Every infinite wrong muſt have an infinite ſatisfaction. Entertain no diſparaging and little thoughts of this blood, which the Scripture pronounceth of ſo plenteous, unſearchable, and great a vertue. It was Gods intent to cleanſe ſin by it, when he agreed with the Redeemer about ſhedding his blood. Iſa. 53. 11. My righteous Servant ſhall juſtifie many, for he ſhall bear their Iniquities. It was ſet out by him to this end, when it was ſhed. Zach. 13. 1. In that day a fountain ſhall be opened for the houſe of David, the ſtronger ſpirits, and men moſt according to Gods heart, and for the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the weaker ſort; for all a Fountain to fill every private Ciſtern. Make not the Covenant of God with his Son in vain; ſlight not his Grace by refuſing to drink of his open fountain. The Glory of purging Iniquity was reſerv'd by God for this blood, 'tis committed to no other: The blood of Bulls and Goats never had, never could have the honour of ſo great a work. 'Tis the glorious Title of his blood, to cleanſe from all ſins, as it is the honourable ſignification of his Name Jeſus to ſave from all ſins. We cannot pleaſe God more, than by coming to him for the pardon of our ſins upon the account of this blood he hath ſo delighted to honour. If we do not, we deny it the Glory of its cleanſing vertue: We undervalue the efficacy of it, and would have it without any ſubject to exerciſe its power on. We need not fear to approach to it, ſince God hath manifeſted it highly acceptable to him, and available for us. The unſearchable Riches of it ſhould more encourage us, than the greatneſs of our guilt diſcourage our addreſs. Have recourſe to it by Faith, reſting on the power of this blood as a means appointed by God, and intended by Chriſt for the expiation of ſin. Faith as accepting Chriſt as a King doth not juſtifie, but Faith as accepting Chriſt as a Prieſt and Sacrifice, as ſhedding his blood; for we muſt accept him in that Office, wherein he made the Atonement, and that was not as he was a Prophet, or a King, but as he was a Prieſt, and a Sacrifice; And therefore 'tis called, Faith in his Blood, Rom. 3. 25. tho' indeed a Faith in his Blood is not without receiving him as a King, and ſubmitting to his Precepts, as well as relying on his Sacrifice. He that receives the Blood of Chriſt, as well as he that names the name of Chriſt, muſt depart from iniquity, and avoid thoſe things which break the Covenant. Mingle not any thing with his ſatisfaction: Let no muddy waters of your own be mixed with this Goſpel Wine. If we look for a Juſtification by any thing thing elſe, we forfeit all right of Juſtification by Him. Gal. 5. 2. Behold I Paul ſay unto you, that if you be circumcis'd, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing. Take it for a certain truth, for I as an Apoſtle ſpeak it, that if you have an opinion that you ſhall be juſtifyed by Circumciſion, or any thing of the Law, or of your own works, or would make them partakers with Chriſt in this matter, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing, you had as good never have had a Chriſt made known to you for any vertue you are like to derive from him. As none dyed with him to expiate your Guilt, ſo he will ſuffer none to be joyned with him in juſtifying your perſons. Chriſt bears this blood only in his hand, when he pleads for us; we ſhould carry this blood only in our hearts, when we plead for our ſelves. 'Tis not his blood only as ſhed doth juſtifie, but his blood pleaded in the Court of Heaven by himſelf, and pleaded before the Throne of God by the believing ſinner; without it, we have no more plea than the Apoſtate Angels have, whom God hath caſt out of his favour for ever. And ſince we contract guilt every day, let us dayly apply the Medicine. The pleas of this blood are renewed according to the neceſſity of our perſons. As often as an Iſraelite had been bitten by the fiery Serpents, he muſt have looked up to the Brazen one, if he would not have been deſtitute of a cure; and we upon every ſting of Conſcience muſt look up to him who hath been lifted up upon the Croſs for our remedy. This blood is appointed for ſins after converſion, for thoſe that walk in the Light. Since the fountain is open every day, and we contract guilt every day, let not a day paſs without freſh applications of this blood upon any defects in our walking with him; ſince, if we walk in the light, and are induſtrious to obſerve the will of God, the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.

A DISCOURSE OF OBEDIENCE.

JOHN XV. XIV.

Ye are my Friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

THE words are a part of Christ's Discourse after the Supper he had instituted. The Chapter begins with a parable, wherein Christ likens himself to a Vine, and the Disciples (and consequently all Believers) to branches. The using this parable was occasion'd, as some think, by Christ's passing by some Vineyards, whence he raises a discourse to spiritualize their meditations upon the view of the Creatures. Whether this were so or no, yet the Discourse is excellent, both to show the near union and relation of Christ and Believers, and the way and means of a spiritual growth in sanctification and holiness. Christ was sent into the World to publish a new Religion, but not a lazy, but a fruitful one. God the Father is the Husband-man, who both dresseth the Vine, and purgeth the branches to render them fruitful. Several arguments he useth to engage them to abide in him, and consequently to be fruitful.

(1.) From their misery without it, v. 6. The fire is the portion of unfruitful branches. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is wither'd, and men gather them, and cast them into the fire.

(2.) From the prevalency of their prayers with God, if his words did practically and fruitfully abide in them. v. 7. If you abide in me, and my words abide in you, you shall ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you.

(3.) From the Glory of God, and Honour of Christ which are further'd by it, v. 8. When what you ask is in order to your own fruitfulness, and consequently God's Glory, you need not fear the grant of your requests. Herein is my Father glorified that you bear much fruit, so shall you be my Disciples.

(4.) From gratitude, since he had given them, and was yet further to give them the highest demonstration of his affection to them. v. 9. You have had evidence of my Fathers love to me in his witnessing my mission from Heaven by multitudes of miracles, and such a kind of Love as my Father bears to me, I do, and will bear to you, if you continue to be my Disciples: And all the proof of it I demand of you, is, the continuance in my commands, and the performance of them. v. 10. If you keep my Commandments, you shall abide in my love, as I have kept my Fathers will, and abide in in his love. If you would have ſuch a kind of love from me, as I have had from my Father, you muſt perform ſuch a kind of Obedience to me as I have performed to my Father; you muſt make me a pattern of imitation, and my precept the rule of your actions. And do not think ſaith he, v. 11. that what I have ſpoken of to you, is ſo much out of an Authority, or an imperiouſneſs, as out of an Affection to you and your intereſt; 'tis not that I ſhould have an advantage, but that you ſhould have a joy; that ſuch a joy as you have felt in my preſence with you, and in my redeeming work, may conſtantly remain in you. Now the way to have this joy, is to keep my Commandments; fruitfulneſs will clear up your intereſt in me, and eſpecially the obſervance of that command of a mutual love to one another, v. 12. to which you have the higheſt obligation from my love to you, v. 13. for greater love can no man ſhow, than to lay down his Life for his Friend, and you ſhall ſee I will not be backward to diſcover this higheſt affection to you; and as I diſcover my affection to you in laying down my Life, ſo you can diſcover your affections to me only by obſerving my commands.

So that the verſe lyes between two arguments to urge them to it.

(1.) His own love to them, which was of the higheſt ſtamp. v. 13.

(2.) The revelation he had made to them, which was the fulleſt, v. 15. All things that he had heard of his Father; and the cleareſt, Thoſe he had made known to them; ſo that you have my love to oblige you, and my revelation to direct you; as I have had love to purchaſe what you want, ſo you muſt have love to perform what I order. Ye are my Friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you. He invites them to it by an Honourable Title of Friends. You ſhall be rankt in the number of them, and continue in this dignity, if you keep my commands. I do not preſs this of loving one another that you ſhould perform this only, and neglect the reſt; for you are not my friends in the practice of one of my precepts, unleſs you alſo joyn the practice of other precepts to it.

Ye are my Friends.] Actively, you will declare and manifeſt your ſelves to be my friends in conforming your ſelves to my mind. Paſſively, I will declare my ſelf to you. * I have treated you as Friends, in imparting the counſels of God to you, not known to others. 'Tis fit you ſhould treat me as your Friend, in gratifying me in obedience to my Commands. The dignity of a friend to Chriſt may well ſoften the hardneſs of a command. He doth not ſo call them Friends, as that they ſhould forget that they are his Servants, and he their Lord; for as he mentions friendſhip as their priviledge, ſo he mentions his will by the way of a command to make them ſenſible of their duty; If you do whatſoever I command you. 'Tis a great Honour (ſaith Auſtin) to call thoſe his Friends whom he knows to be his Servants. * Muſcul.

Ye,

1. All of ye. 'Tis Univerſal. Men are too narrow to have many intimates, but the Heart of Chriſt is large enough for all. Friendſhip with Chriſt is the priviledge of every obedient perſon.

2. Ye, though poor, conſider'd as men. Outward diſtreſs is no hindrance to Spiritual relation.

3. Ye Diſciples, Apoſtles employed for God, yet not my Friends, unleſs you obey me. Not gifts, but grace; not the higheſt employment, but exact practice intereſts men in this priviledge.

Are] Not ſhall be. You are doth not exclude the future, but aſſures them of it. They ſhall be, becauſe they are; 'tis not a thing to be waited for, but at preſent poſſeſſed.

If you do whatſoever I command you.] * Adam had a precept, which if he had kept, he had continued in the love of God; and Chriſt hath given us precepts, which if we keep, we ſhall continue in the love of Chriſt. Obedience is neceſſary, not by way of merit, but condition. He ſhows how grateful Obedience is to him, becauſe he dignifies the practiſer of it with ſuch a Title, which how honourable is it for us, and how neceſſary for our wellfare. * Muſcul.

The Text is made up of priviledge and duty, relation and action.

1. Priviledge and Relation. Friends.

2. Duty and Action. If ye do.

Obſerve. 1. How

Obſerve 1. How glorious is the relation of a Holy Soul to Chriſt! He doth not ſay, I love you if you keep my Commandments. A man may love his Servant, or his Beaſt, but admits them not to ſpecial friendſhip; the condition of the one, and incapacity of the other will not ſuffer it. This Title is higher than an aſſurance of a bare love. He loves them as Friends as well as as Servants.

2. How condeſcending is the love of Chriſt! He calls the Worms of the Earth he Friends of God. We cannot be his Servants, unleſs we keep his commands; and by keeping his commands we commence a higher degree than that of Servants, even that of Friends.

3. Chriſts commands, not his deeds, are the object of our obedience. Set not before you what I do, but what I order you to do: Our conformity to Chriſt conſiſts not ſo much in an imitation of what he did, as in an obedience to what he præſcribes; the example of Chriſt is not our rule without the præcept of Chriſt. Some actions of Chriſt are unimitable, but all his commands are obeyable.

4. Priviledge is entail'd only to duty.

That which I intend is only the Nature of Obedience, as deducible from theſe words, If ye do whatſoever I command you.

1. Do]

1. Obedience muſt be poſitive. Not only avoid, what I prohibit. It conſiſts not meerly in not bringing forth bad fruit, but in bringing forth good: 'Tis not enough to forbear the Commiſſions of ſin, if we are guilty of the Omiſſions of Duty. The Fig-tree was not curſt becauſe it brought forth bad fruit, but becauſe it brought forth no fruit. Mat. 21. 19. No Father will be content with his Child in forbearing what he forbids, unleſs he alſo performs what he preſcribes. Many, like the Phariſees, pleaſe themſelves with negatives, I am not prophane, a Drunkard, Swearer; but what Title is procur'd to the priviledge in the Text, if as much cannot be ſpoken of poſitives, as may be of Negatives? We muſt be as careful to do what he wills, as to ſhun what he hates. He never puts off the old man cordially, that hath not alſo put on the new. Coloſ. 3. 8, 10. 'Tis not a true friendſhip to omit what may diſpleaſe a Friend, if we do not alſo what may gratifie him. God would have an Obedience from us ſutable to the Happineſs he promiſeth us. He doth not only free us from Hell and Wrath, but inveſt us with Heaven and Happineſs; ſo he would have us not only delivered from ſin, but created to good works. And you know that our Saviour is not only called Jeſus becauſe he ſaves from ſin, Matth. 1. 21. but Chriſt, becauſe he is appointed by God to govern, fit, and prepare Souls for Heaven.

2. Do it as Friends. Obedience muſt be ſincere. An action may look like a friendly act, when there is nothing of friendſhip and good-will in the Heart. Every præcept requires not only an outward, but an inward conformity; not only a bodily action, but a ſpiritual frame: God would not have the skin of a Sacrifice without the fleſh, and entrailes; nor the Carcaſs of Obedience without truth in the inward parts, Pſal. 51. 6. Chriſt intends not only an outward appearance, but reſpects the forme of every action. Duties are not differenc'd by the outward garb, but inward frame. Waters may have the ſame colour, yet one may be ſweet, and the other brackiſh. Two Apples may have the ſame colour, yet one may be a crab, and the other of a delightful reliſh. A Serpent hath a ſpeckled skin, but an inward poyſon. We muſt look to the rule, that the matter of our actions be ſuted to it, otherwiſe we may commit groſs wickedneſs, as they did, who thought they did God good ſervice by killing his Righteous Servants, Joh. 16. 2. We muſt alſo look to the frame of our hearts, otherwiſe we may be guilty of groſs Hypocriſie. A friendly action cannot come from the heart of an Enemy, no more than good fruit from a corrupt Tree. It may have a ſpecious appearance when the Heart is rank; as a man with a ſtinking breath holding a perfume in his mouth, ſmells ſweet; the ſweetneſs is not from his Breath, but the perfume, which takes not away the foulneſs of his ſtomach, or the corruption of his Lungs. Chriſt cannot count any ſervice from a rotten Heart of any worth. A multitude of them are but as cyphers, ſignifie nothing without a figure in the front. Prov. 10. 20. The Heart of a wicked man is little worth. Sound actions cannot ſpring from a corrupt Heart, no more than ſweet water from a bitter fountain. He that conſiders not how his heart ſtands, whether it were wound up, whether it were in tune, whether it were melted, or whether it were frozen, that doth not care how drowſie and unſavoury his Spirit was, doth not any thing as a Friend to Chriſt.

3. Do as Friends. Obedience muſt be affectionate. It muſt be love out of a pure mind. 1 Tim. 1. 5. In the command of charity, which is the ſpecial command before the Text, the greateſt outward aſſiſtances are of no value without this ingredient, but the leaſt with it, are highly accepted. A cup of cold water, Mat. 10. 42. a little box of Oyntment with an affectionate reſpect to God, are valued and regiſter'd. As mercies are not welcome to a good man without Gods love in them; ſo our ſervices are not welcome to God without our love in them. A little bread and drink with Gods love, is better than great riches with his diſpleaſure. Job's boyls and rags with Gods love were richer than his Enemies robes; and a ſtarving Lazarus better than a rich Epicure. A drop of ſervice with affection to God is more worth than all the works of men without it. 'Tis no argument of friendſhip for a man to ſend a rich Cabinet to another with ſomething in it, to which he knows his friend hath an antipathy: Splendid ſervices to Chriſt without glowing affections are of the ſame Nature. Chriſt would have us imitate him, he gives himſelf with his ſpecial Mercies, and we muſt give our ſelves with our ſpecial Duties. But how often are ſome Duties performed not out of love to Chriſt, but love to our ſelves? Judas his carrying the bag might be one cauſe of Judas his Obedience to Chriſt, that he might get ſome advantage by it; and when he ſaw a greater offer'd by the Phariſees, he deſerted and betrayed him. Fac me Epiſcopum Romanum, ſaith one, & ero Chriſtianus. When men pretend ſervice to God to catch preferments from men; when they make a profeſſion of Religion to cheat more craftily; Ut ſub Chriſtiano nomine lucroſius pereant; this is not to do what Chriſt commands, but what we affect.

4. Doe. Not be conſtrain'd to do, but do willingly, freely. What Paul would not have Servants give to their Maſters Eph. 6. 6. that many men give to God, an Eye-Service. While men have ſome ſerious thoughts of Gods Omniſcience, they may pay him ſome ſervice, as a Servant may work while his Maſters Eye is upon him, or his feet at the door; but make a mock at him when his back is turn'd. Or they may do it out of fear of Judgment; this may be a motive to quicken, but not the ſpring to give the firſt Life to our Obedience. A man may be very free in Obedience, but upon a wrong motive; as School-boys may get their Leſſons well one day, not out of love to their Books, but that they may play the next; or as a Child at play called by his Father to go upon an errand, runs faſter than his Father would have him, puts himſelf all in a ſweat; this might be thought a very free and willing Obedience; but it is not ſo much Obedience to his Father, as a gratifying himſelf in a ſpeedy return to his Game, and purſuance of it without any more diſturbance. Or there may be a readineſs when an Obedience will ſuit to corruption: This is ſuch an Obedience as the Devil is for: He was much for Job's Tryal, which God was alſo for: God orders him to deprive Job of his Eſtate, that thereby his ſincerity might be evidenced to the World; and the Devil conforms himſelf to Gods order out of malice to ruine him, hoping that hypocriſie would iſſue out inſtead of ſincerity.

(1.) There is a freedom as oppos'd to conſtraint. 'Tis not the act it ſelf, but the naturalneſs of it is a ſign of Obedience. A conſtraind Obedience may conſiſt with a Deviliſh Nature, and therefore cannot be a ſign of a friendſhip to Chriſt. The Devil obeys God, but by force; he is forced to a negative obedience, and ſometimes to a poſitive obedience; not by any conſcience of a command, but by a conſtraint by God's power; As Luk. 8. 28. when Chriſt commanded him to come out of his long poſſeſſed habitation. There may be a conſtraint by Education, which is ſcarce ſenſible, when that upon a prophane man is more viſible. As a rugged ſtone will move no further than a ſtrong arm will throw it, ſo a prophane man moves no farther than his Conſcience, or ſome fear of man throws him in any duty of obedience. But a man that hath the advantage of a religious Education, is like a ſtone ſmooth'd into a right figure, that moves upon a plain at the leaſt touch; yet there is conſtraint goes to that motion, though not ſo ſenſible, becauſe the parts are by an outward ſmoothneſs fitted for ſuch a motion; ſo it is with a man that is ſmoothed by Education.

But the obedience Chriſt requires, is to be free; good actions are therefore called fruits of Righteouſneſs, fruits of Holineſs; becauſe as a Tree brings forth fruits naturally, ſo doth a true Chriſtian bring forth Righteouſneſs; the Gardner helps indeed by watering and digging, but doth not conſtrain the Tree: God helps the Man at the firſt converſion, but doth not force the Soul. In Gal. 5. 19, 22. 'tis obſerved that ſins are called works, and Graces called fruits, to ſhow the freedom of a holy, and the ſervile frame of a wicked man. A good man is not put upon a duty meerly by a ſuddain fit and importunity of conſcience; as wicked men naturally lay in proviſion for their luſts, ſo do good men labour to lay in proviſion for their obedience and Graces. The Law like a School-maſter ſcourgeth ſome truant Souls to obedience, but the Goſpel gives a willingneſs of Spirit in the day of power. Pſal. 110. 3. The difference between theſe two powers, is, the Law is a powerful conſtrainer, mixt with ſevere threatnings that drive to fear, and the Goſpel is a powerful conſtraint mixed with kind promiſes which help to love.

(2.) Freedom as oppoſ'd to dulneſs and heavineſs. God's delight in a holy perſon is rendred as one reaſon of his mercy, Pſal. 18. 19. He delivered me, becauſe he delighted in me; and our delight in Chriſt ſhould be the reaſon of our duty. If ye do whatſoever I command you. 'Tis not a lumpiſh and heavy action that Chriſt requires: He requires ſuch an obedience of us as himſelf performed to his Father, Joh. 15. 10. If you keep my commandments, you ſhall abide in my love, as I have kept my Fathers commandments, and abide in his love; that was not a heavy motion; It was his meat and drink to do his Fathers will. Joh. 4. 34. Meat and drink are not only naturally deſired, but delightfully received. Chearfulneſs accompanies election of a thing. Pſal. 119. 173, 174. I have choſen thy precepts, and thy Law is my delight. Lumpiſhneſs is a ſign we never choſe it, but were forced to it. Sin is ſweet to a wicked man, as a dainty to a gluttons palate. Job 10. 12. He accounts duty his burden, and a true Diſciple accounts it his honour. He like the Sun rejoyceth to run, and when he is in ſervice, his heart cryes out with Peter in the Mount, 'tis good to be here: ſuch chearfulneſs in ſervice procures cheerfulneſs in Mercies; Iſa. 64. 5. Thou meeteſt him that rejoyceth and works righteouſneſs: He puts to his hand to help ſuch an one. Chriſt loves not melancholy and phlegmatick ſervice, ſuch a temper in acts of obedience is a diſgrace to God, and to Religion; to God, it betrays us to have jealous thoughts of God, as though he were a hard Maſter; to Religion, it makes others think duties are drudgeries, and not priviledges. Well then, ſo much of chearfulneſs in obedience, ſo much of a Chriſtian temper; ſo much of dulneſs, ſo much of an Antichriſtian frame.

The Diſciples of Chriſt have not this livelyneſs in a conſtant equality: The wings of the Soul drencht in ſin, as well as the wings of a Bird bemyr'd, will flag. A good mans heavineſs is from infirmities and diſtempers. A ſtrong active man may be laid upon his ſick bed, and be loath to be ſtirr'd. But a carnal mans heavineſs is from nature and willingneſs. A wicked mans heavineſs is at his duty, a good mans heavineſs is at his own deficiency, his delight conſiſts in the Spirit, for the Fleſh is weak, and will never in this world be otherwiſe.

5. Do whatſoever, &c. Not lazily. Obedience muſt be diligent. God cares not for a ſlow obedience; he would not therefore have an Aſs offer'd in ſacrifice, Exod. 13. 13. but would have it redeem'd with a Lamb, or the neck of it broke. A true Chriſtian is like a Seraphim, that hath ſix wings to fly upon Gods errands; Iſa. 6. 2. or like the living Creatures Ezek. 1. 14. that ran and returned at the appearance of a flaſh of Lightning, which is the quickeſt motion. Sound Members move at the command of the will, whereas palſie Members muſt be dragg'd along. Man naturally would have a ready God, and not a ready Heart: He would have a God ready to attend his complaints, but would not have a heart ready to attend God's commands. But good men take God at a word of precept, when he hath any work for them to do, as well as at a word of promiſe, when they have any wants for him to ſupply. Hypocrites may be obedient in promiſes, as the Son in the Goſpel, Mat. 21. 29, 30. that promis'd to go into the Vineyard. A good man doth more without open reſolving; another reſolves more without open doing. A Maſter will take it ill if a Servant diſpute ſputes his commands. Paul ſet about the work he was order'd, quickly; Gal. 1. 16. I conſulted not with fleſh and blood; he call'd not fleſh and blood into a Cabinet Councel. What we do for Chriſt, we muſt do without adviſing with corruption, which is an enemy to God and his ways. Such councellors will furniſh us with evaſions to ſlip from our duty, and repreſent things either impoſſible, or unſeaſonable; either that it cannot be done at all, or elſe it may be done better at another time; and as it is ſaid of our own Nation, we loſe more by Treaties than we gain by War: ſo it may be ſaid of our corruption, we loſe more by ſuch Treaties than we gain by an open War againſt it. God would employ Moſes though he had a ſlow ſpeech, but checks him for his ſlow obedience. Abraham was as quick in his obſervance of Gods command, as Moſes was ſlow; Gen. 17. 23. The ſelf-ſame day wherein he had received the command of circumciſion, he put it in practice; he would make no pauſes; leſt carnal reaſon ſhould ſtep in with objections. The readineſs of the Gentiles to obey Chriſt, is expreſt Pſal. 18. 44. As ſoon as they hear of me, they ſhall obey me; like Eliſha, who upon Elijahs, ſpreading his mantle over him, leaves his Father and Oxen, and Plow, and runs after him. The more of fire there is in any thing, the more active it is, the more of a Divine Spirit, the more vigorous.

6. Do whatſoever, &c. Conſtantly, Not do it for a ſpurt, or by fits and ſtarts. Obedience muſt be conſtant; 'tis that which God longs for Deut 5. 29. Oh that there were ſuch a heart in them, that they would keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them; and it will never be well with a man till he doth it.

(1.) In ſinning times it ſhould be moſt conſpicuous. Good men ſhould ſhine as lights in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe Generation. Phil. 2. 15. The ſtars ſhine cleareſt in the darkeſt, if unclouded, nights. Good men are like Fountains, hotteſt in the coldeſt ſeaſons. When did David love and eſteem Gods precepts, but when men had made void his Law? Pſal. 119. 126, 127, 128. He would double his valuation of, and obedience to Gods commands, when he ſaw them moſt violated by others: He brings in a double Therefore, Therefore I love thy Commandments above gold: therefore I eſteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right. The more men deſpis'd them, the more he valued them, becauſe he knew they were moſt dear to God, ſince they were moſt hateful to man. David had been refreſht by God when he was afflicted, and he would moſt pleaſe God when he was diſhonoured. Wiſdom, i. e. Chriſt, juſtifies her Children in the ſight of her Adverſaries, they ſhould therefore juſtifie Wiſdom in the ſight of her Enemies. Chriſt would have his people bear witneſs by their profeſſion and practice againſt the ſins of the times, as well as he will judge and condemn the World at laſt with them by their approbation. Thus Joſeph of Arimathea would go boldly to Pilate to beg the Body of Jeſus, tho' the malice of the age had riſen ſo high as to put him to death, when he was never mention'd in Scripture till that action. Sinful times increaſe the wickedneſs of the wicked, but ſtrengthen the graces of the Godly; for they make them more watchful, and watchfulneſs makes them the more practical. We then declare our ſelves moſt the friends of Chriſt, when we own him among a multitude of Enemies. Oppoſition makes God take notice of our obedience in a ſpecial manner. Probably Judas his repining at Maries kindneſs in anointing Chriſt, was the occaſion that the ſcent of that Ointment was ſpread about the world.

(2.) In ſuffering times. In ſuffering times from God, as in deſertion. Chriſts obedience was eminent, he would obey God when God had forſaken him. A true Diſciple is not like Saul impatient to wait upon God, when he hides his face, and run to a Witch for councel. Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. Job 13. 15. To obey Chriſt when he manifeſts his love, is obedience to our ſelves; to obey him when he vails himſelf, is pure love and obedience to him.

In ſuffering times from men. Many would be obedient to their advantage, but to be obedient to death is the property of a true Diſciple. Revel. 3. 21. as it was of his maſter, Phil. 2. 8. Miſery makes men oftener forget their vertues, than their vices. Many are like the Jews to cry Hoſanna when Chriſt rides in Triumph, and preſently after when he is condemn'd, either fly from him, or vote againſt him, like ſnakes that come out of their holes in a hot day to ſun themſelves, and at night retreat to ſculk in their caverns. Many come to live by Chriſt, but not dye for him. Shame, mocks, ſcoffing did not hinder Chriſt from dying for us; why ſhould ſhame and reproaches hinder us from dying for Chriſt. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of cleaving to that which is good, Rom. 12.9. κολλώμενοι, things glued are not eaſily ſeparated: We ſhould cleave ſo cloſe to him that nothing ſhould part us from him. Wind will not blow a Snail or any other glutinous ſubſtance off a Tree.

Well then, conſtancy is an ingredient in the obedience Chriſt requires. His Trees bring forth fruit in old age, Pſal. 92. 14. Age makes other things decay, but makes a Chriſtian flouriſh. Some are like hot Horſes, mettleſome at the beginning of a journey, and tired a long time before they come to their journeys end. A good Diſciple as he would not have from God a temporary happineſs, ſo he would not give to God a temporary obedience; as he would have his Glory laſt as long as God lives, ſo he would have his Obedience laſt as long as he lives. Judas had a fair beginning, but deſtroyed all in the end by betraying his Maſter.

2. The ſubject of this doing, Ye, it muſt be the whole man. Not do with a part of your ſelves, but your whole ſelves; there muſt be a reſignation of the whole Soul to God. The Tables of the Law were written on both ſides, Exod. 32. 15, 16. ſo muſt obedience be upon every faculty. Ahab, Herod, and the ſtony ground were partial in their obedience, like Ephraim a cake not turned, Hoſ. 7. 8. bak't on one ſide and dough on the other, Intus Nero, foras Cato, ſaith Hierom; but our obedience to Chriſt muſt anſwer our former enmity: As that was ſpread over the whole ſoul, ſo muſt this. There muſt be an enlightned Underſtanding, flexible Will, tender Conſcience, regulated Affections, watchful Members to go upon the errands of God. As the Father ſaid to the Prodigal, all that I have is thine, ſo muſt the Soul to Chriſt, Lord all that I have is thine, Underſtanding, Will, Affections, &c. The Holocauſts among the Iſraelites were wholy burnt, ſo are we wholly to ſacrifice our ſelves.

3. The Object. [Whatſoever] Ὅσα as many things as I command you. Not think it enough to perform one or two, but every one, whatſoever. And ſo he taught the Apoſtles to teach others, Matth. 28. 20. Chriſt performed every command of his Father, and we muſt perform every command of Chriſt. He is not a man after Gods own Heart that doth not fulfil all his will, 'tis Davids commendation that he did ſo, Acts 13. 22. Joſiah hath the ſame character left upon Record, both for the univerſality of the ſubject, and the univerſality of the object, 2 Kings 23. 35. He turned to the Lord with all his ſoul according to all the Law of Moſes. An habitual diſpoſition there muſt be, that muſt paſs in to act, where a particular command, and an opportunity of obſerving it meet together. No command but is ſo good, ſo juſt, ſo holy, that it deſerves our compliance with it in the higheſt pitch, and when we cannot equal it we are to bewail our defects. Obedience is quite out of tune if any one command be ſlighted: The Lute is uncapable of making Muſick if one ſtring, the Treble be broken. When the people went to gather Manna on the Sabbath, and ſo broke the Law, God taxes them with a violation of the whol (Exod. 16. 27, 28. To neglect any one command is diſingenuous. Would we have all our ſins pardoned, and ſhall we not be willing to have all Gods commands perform'd? 'Tis alſo dangerous. If a man be to go ten miles, and only go nine of them, he had as good never have ſet out, he will never come to his journeys end.

(1.) Whatſoever I command you in the true meaning and deſign of it. Not like the Phariſees, who though they do not blot out the Law, yet enervate it by falſe gloſſes and interpretations, and ſo make it inſignificant, taking away the Life and Soul of a command.

(2.) Whatſoever I command you, though it may ſeem mean and low in the eyes of men. As Chriſt did not think any thing too low to do for us, we muſt not think any thing too mean to do for him. Whatſoever is accounted vile that is for the honour of Chriſt, we ſhould endeavour to be more vile in it. We have Davids vote for it, that it was better to be a door keeper in the houſe of God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedneſs. The leaſt duty muſt be performed; art ſhows it ſelf moſt in little works, ſo doth grace its excellency in the performance of the leaſt commands. Natura triumphat in minimis, a Fly ſhows Gods power as well as the World. The leaſt mite in ſincerity is acceptable to God, as well as the greateſt Hecatomb or a Sacrifice of the beaſts upon a thouſand Hills. The leaſt command ſhould be as dear to a gratious Soul as the greateſt. We are not to wave the greateſt becauſe of its difficulty, nor deſpiſe the leaſt becauſe of its littleneſs. A Jewel is not accounted vile becauſe it is little, nor ſhould a command becauſe it is mean. He that breaks the leaſt command ſhall be leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven.

4. The Perſon commanding, [whatſoever I command you.] The Authority of Chriſt muſt be ey'd in all obedience, and his command be made the rule. When we do the matter of the Law, without an eye to the authority that enacts, it is an obedience to the Law, but not to the Lawgiver. Men may perform the matter of a Law, yet deſpiſe the authority of the Lawgiver in their Hearts. We are not ſo much to conſider, ſaith Hierom, imperii quantitatem as imperantis dignitatem. We are not only to obſerve Chriſt as a Friend, but obey him as a Soveraign. He that is the Kings Friend muſt not forget that he is alſo the Kings Subject. What he doth as a Friend in a way of kindneſs, he muſt perform alſo as a Subject in a way of duty. We muſt glorifie Chriſt as Chriſt, i. e. in all the relations wherein he ſtands to us. Now he is not only our Saviour but our King, and we are not only his Friends, but his Servants. What we receive from God ſhould be received as from him, 1 Theſſ. 2. 13. Ye received the Word as the Word of God. What we do to God ſhould be done as to him, ſutable to his Divine greatneſs and Majeſty. Obedience muſt be perform'd becauſe Chriſt commands, and as Chriſt commands it.

'Tis emphatically added.

USE. 1. It informs us of the excellency of the Chriſtian Religion. It demands the greateſt purity, and confers the greateſt priviledge. It brings us to the rule of God, and inveſts us with the Friendſhip of our Creator. No Religion hath ſo much of benefit, and ſo much of duty. Nothing enforceth ſuch exactneſs in the wayes of God. Nothing beſtows ſo much of happineſs upon the Creature. In other Religions ſomething is indulged to gain Proſelytes, and carnal rewards are propoſed to invite them. The precepts of this are Holy and the Rewards high; other Religions conſiſt in negatives, this in poſitives. The Goſpel diſcovers more ſin, and exacts more holineſs. It affords us matter of Love, not Fear, for our principle: Not force to conſtrain, but grace to perſwade. Goſpel Obedience is not the fruit of Bondage, but the fruit of Love and Friendſhip.

2. Obedience is our priviledge as well as our duty. It admits us into the Friendſhip of Chriſt. The bittereſt duty is ſugared with this unſpeakable comfort. Thoſe that ſtand idle in the Market place, meet with no ſuch reward. 'Tis not ſmall honour to be a Kings Friend; how unconceivable is the honour to be a Friend of Chriſt? In keeping his commands there is great reward. This is a reward above the higheſt deſcent. Enoch was deſcended but the ſeventh from Adam, yet this was not his honour but his walking with God. To be a Friend of Chriſt in rags is a greater honour than to be King of the whole World in Purple Robes. Hierom ſpeaking of a Roman Senator, ſaith, he was Noble, not becauſe Conſularis but Chriſtianus. The very act of an Holy Obedience gives a ſweeter reflection, than all the pleaſures of the World. Chriſt indeed calls the Goſpel a Yoke, but an eaſie one: He calls it a Yoke, as natural men think it, not as gratious men find it, for it is a priviledge more than a yoke. Chriſt diſcovers the glory of his Love in the heart, as God did the glory of his preſence in the Temple.

Imperium Dei beneficium eſt. Hierom.

3. How inexcuſable are diſobedient profeſſors? The greater the honour propos'd as an invitation, the greater the ſin in refuſing the terms upon which that honour may be enjoyed. It had been worth the enduring the torments of ſome thouſands of years, to come at laſt to the priviledge of being the Friends of Chriſt. But no ſuch thing is required, 'tis not parting with the firſt-born of our bodies or ſearching out thouſands of Rams or ten thouſands of Rivers of Oyl, 'tis not ſuffering the flames of Hell for a finite multitude of years, no impoſſible or rigid penances are enjoyned, only do whatſoever I command you, and his commands are not grievous in the experience of thoſe that have tryed them, 1 John 5. 3. What an unreaſonable thing is it, not to part with dung for Gold, with rags for Robes, with miſery for happineſs, with Hell for Heaven, with ſin for Chriſt? He that would refuſe to be a Princes Favourite upon the performance of an eaſie task, deſerves without pity to be ſpurn'd out of the Court; and what excuſe can that perſon have that will not exchange the ſlavery of the Devil for the Friendſhip of the Redeemer? Can any blame Chriſt at laſt for refuſing any relation to them, and bidding them depart from him, when they here refus'd his Friendſhip, and would have nothing to do with him?

(4.) How much comfort and encouragement may be drawn from hence under all reproaches? Who would regard the barking of Dogs in the doing of that which hath an excellent honour entaild upon it? The Devil regards not the opinions men have of him; he looks not upon their curſes as his loſs, becauſe he is of an higher nature; he purſues his buſineſs: Shall a Diabolical Nature ſlight that which a Divine Nature ſhall not ſurmount? Shall not curſes here, and torments at the end diſcourage him from venting his malice againſt God, and proſecuting his Deviliſh deſigns; and ſhall reproaches diſcourage any from that obedience which is attended with ſo great an honour? What is it to be reproach'd, and ſcorn'd here a little time, while the favour of God is injoy'd, and after a few nights ſleep we are to be rais'd out of the duſt to Glory, to enjoy his friendſhip for ever, and to be in Glory where he is? This would be a ſupport when the Bullets fly faſt about our ears. 'Tis impoſſible to be faint-hearted with lively thoughts of ſo great an honour: Weigh ſeriouſly this honour, and then weigh the obſtructions, and ſee whether the latter be not over-ballanced by the former. Would a glorifyed Saint incarnate again in the World, decline the practice of Obedience upon ſuch a gallant encouragement becauſe of reproaches? Men might as ſoon perſwade him to fry in Hell, as to part with ſo great an honour upon ſo light an oppoſition. The rouling of a black Cloud over a Travellers head, will not cauſe him to break off a neceſſary journey to Court, to become the Kings Friend, or his Son in Law.

5. What an incentive have we then to an exact obedience? This is the delight of Chriſt, and ſo high a delight to him, that he thinks fit to reward it with no leſs than a ſpecial friendſhip. Chriſt looked upon the young mans morality with an eye of love, much more will he upon an Evangelical Obedience. 'Tis not the pomp of the World, or the gliſtering vanities mans heart runs after, that can lay any claim to this dignity. Obedience though low, if ſincere, is the delight of Chriſt. He loves to go into his Vineyard and look upon the tender grapes, as well as upon the ripe fruit. Cant. 7. 12. Cant. 8. 2. 'Tis by this you ſhow your ſelves the friends of Chriſt; by this you maintain his honour in the World; this is a ſilent conviction upon others, and makes them have ſome veneration for Religion. Men judge uſually of principles by practices, and you never heard any ſpeak againſt the principles of Religion, but they firſt fell upon the practice of the profeſſors of it. 'Tis by this obedience we glorifie God and Chriſt. Mat. 5. 16. i. e. make others ſpeak well of the ways of Religion: Let this honour of being the friends of Chriſt engage us to obedience as the means. 'Tis a ſhame for ſuch that may attain ſuch a priviledge, to purſue any thing lower. An Alexander watches for Kingdoms: 'Tis a poor ſpirited Domitian that loves to catch flies. How many will conform to mens principles, to their will for a ſmall reward, yea, for no reward; and ſhall not we conform to our Redeemers will for ſo glorious a Title? We muſt firſt be Jacobs, ſupplanters of vice, before we be Iſraels, ſeers of God.

Let us cloſe all with a few directions.

(1.) Let us walk as thoſe that have the eye of Chriſt upon us, to ſee whether we act as friends to him, or no. Let us conſider in every action, That it is regiſter'd by Conſcience, laid up in Chriſts remembrance, and will be cenſur'd by him either as the act of a friend, or an Enemy. Men look upon the bark of the action, this may appear fair, and have a gloſs upon it; Chriſt looks upon the inward part, upon the Spirit, to ſee how the heart is conform'd to the command: We may hide our deformities from men, but not from an all-ſeeing-eye. Now I am going to this or that action, I have a watchful eye over me that pierceth into all my thoughts, diſcovers the principles whereby I am conducted, the end for which I move, and ſees how my heart anſwers the command.

(2.) Let us walk as though every action were an inlet to the favour or enmity of Chriſt. What know I, but this action may open a door to the favour of Chriſt, or his endleſs refuſal? What do I know, but at the end of this I may either be in Abrahams boſom, or in a gulf of miſery, and launch into a bleſſed, or miſerable Eternity!

(3.) Let us walk as though the Glory of Chriſt depended upon every action. If our Credit, Eſtates, Relations, Worldly Advantages depended upon one action, how careful and diligent ſhould we be in the doing of it? Let us act as though the honour of Chriſt, and our relation to him depended upon what we go about.

(4.) Let us walk as if we were to give an account immediately of what we have done. Let us ſet before us Chriſt's Tribunal, and imagine our ſelves called to Judgment: I am going about a buſineſs, but if Chriſt ſhould ſend for me at the end of it, what account can I give him of my friendſhip and obedience to him in it? Is this ſuch an action, that when I look Chriſt in the face, I can challenge him upon this promiſe to own me as a friend?

(5.) Let us walk as though Chriſt ſtood before us crucifyed with all the obligations of love on his part; as if we ſaw him with his wounds open, and love and blood diſtilling from his heart upon us, and conſider whether the act we are going about be ſuted to ſuch ineſtimable kindneſs, or a putting him to an open ſhame. Hath not Chriſt had wounds enough, but muſt I increaſe them? Hath not he had miſery enough, but muſt I add more? Shall I break his heart who breaths kindneſs towards me, and behave my ſelf as an Enemy towards him who offers me a favour which cannot be merited by a Creature? Shall I wound him whoſe heart is open for me, and ſtrike him that woes me? Shall I be a Judas to him that would be my friend, and pull him down that would lift me up to the higheſt priviledge of a Creature?

(6.) Let us walk as we think a damn'd Soul would walk, if he were again to live under the knowledge of ſuch a promiſe. How would he obey, and obey heartily? How would he pray, and pray fervently? How buſie might we ſuppoſe him to be in inquiring what thoſe commands were, and how diligent in the performance of them? How would he by violence take all opportunities to purſue his Duty, and attain his priviledge? What if any ſhould ſee a damned Soul ſtand before him when he was going into an unclean Bed, and tell him it was for leſs than this he was judged an Enemy to Chriſt, and a miſerable wretch for ever? Would any mans fear ſuffer him to go on in his intended evil? We have not thoſe objects of fear before our eyes, but we have this promiſe in the word ſuted more to ingenuous Natures; To be accounted the Friends of God and Chriſt, if we do whatſoever he commands us.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF AFFLICTIONS.

Heb. XII. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

And ye have forgotten the exhortation, which ſpeaketh unto you, as unto children, My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. For whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth. If ye indure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with ſons: for what ſon is he whom the father chaſteneth not? But if ye be without chaſtiſement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye baſtards, and not ſons. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the father of ſpirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chaſtened us after their own pleaſure, but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. Now no chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheleſs, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs unto them which are exerciſed thereby.

THE Apoſtle, after having drawn a Catalogue of thoſe Illuſtrious Souls that had manifeſted a choice Faith upon ſeveral occaſions, deſcends in this Chapter to preſs the believing Hebrews to an exerciſe of Patience and Faith under thoſe preſſures they ſhould meet with in their Chriſtian courſe: Where he propoſeth firſt to them, the example of Chriſt, Verſe 2, 3. Next, the exhortation of the Holy Ghoſt, drawn from Prov. 3. 11, 12. My ſon, deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Lord: neither be weary of his correction. For whom the Lord loveth, he corrects, even as a father the ſon in whom he delighteth: which being an inſtruction concerning the Nature and Uſe of Afflictions God ſends upon us, the Apoſtle applies to the particular caſe of the Hebrews; but diſcourſeth in general of the Author, Subjects, and Ends of the Afflictions God exerciſeth his Children with: Have you forgotten the exhortation, which ſpeaks to you as to children? Have you loſt the remembrance of what God

God ſaith in that Exhortion by his Wiſdom? Prov. 3. where he commends his goodneſs, and ſhows the Obligation you have to liſten to him, by vouchſafing you the name of Children; the greateſt glory and the higheſt comfort of a Creature; Have you, ſaith he, forgot this? Have you not the intent of it in your minds and memories, in your hearts and conſiderations? The Apoſtle diſcourſes here of the neceſſity and advantages of Afflictions. In Verſe 5. he orders us not to deſpiſe the chaſtening of the Lord, nor to deſpond under it; faint not when thou art rebuked of him; this he backs with many motives in the following Verſes. Μὴ ὀλιγώρει, do not make a light account of Afflictions.

1. One motive is in the word chaſtening, παιδία, which ſignifies the inſtruction whereby a Child is brought to the knowledg of things profitable for him; which being it is not effected in that Age, ſubject to extravagancy, without ſtripes as well as words, the word is therefore uſed for the diſcipline which attends ſuch inſtruction.

2. Another motive is from the Author of Afflictions, the Lord, deſpiſe not the chaſtning of the Lord.

Obſervations.

1. It muſt be our great care not to make ſlight of Afflictions, nor to be too much dejected under them. The ſmart will keep us from deſpiſing an Affliction in it ſelf; but we make light of it, when we are careleſs of improving it for the ends for which God inflicts it; we may be ſenſible of the pain, when we are not ſenſible of the profit, which may accrue to us by it; God forbids here two extremities, the one an exceſs, the other a want of Courage. Both diſhonour God, the one in his Soveraignty, the other in his goodneſs and love; and both are injurious to the ſufferer, as he rebels againſt the one, and loſeth the ſweetneſs of the other. We ſhould receive the Afflictions God ſends, with a humility without deſpondency, with a Reverence without diſtruſt, and keep our ſelves from either fearing too much, or not fearing God enough; mix Reverence with Confidence, adore the hand which we feel, and reſt in the goodneſs which he promiſeth; this is the way to reap the fruit of Afflictions.

2. All Afflictions, let them be from what immediate cauſes ſo ever, are from the hand of God. Whether they come from man, as loſs of goods, or other calamities; whether they be ſickneſſes, griefs, &c. they are all diſpenſed by the order of God, for one and the ſame deſign, Viz. our inſtruction. Human reaſon doth not believe this; ſome think they come by chance; or look only to ſecond cauſes, and regard them not as wholſome inſtructions from God, and the orders of his Providence.

1. This ſhould ſtop any impatient motions. 'Tis fit we ſhould be of the Pſalmiſts temper, hold our peace, becauſe God hath done it, Pſal. 39. 9. Shall the Clay formed ſay to him that formed it, Why didſt thou thus? We ſhould rather ſay as Eli, 1 Sam. 3. 18. 'Tis the Lord: Let him do what ſeemeth him good. Eſpecially ſince an Infinite Wiſdom is joyned with the Soveraign Authority of God; and when we are not able to underſtand the reaſon of his conduct, we ought to acquieſce in his Will and in his Wiſdom, and ſtop the motion of any Paſſions, by a humiliation under his hand.

2. It teacheth us to whom to have recourſe. That hand that ſtrikes, can only ceaſe ſtriking. When David had ſtill'd impatience, he awakens his prayer, Pſal. 39. 10. Remove thy ſtrokes from me: I am conſumed with the blows of thine hand. If Shimei caſts a ſtone at David, 'tis the Lord that bid him; if the humours of our Bodies riſe againſt us, 'tis God that arms them, and it is he muſt be ſought to for redreſs. He only can disband what force he raiſes. 'Tis our comfort there is a Soveraign Power, to whom we can make our moan, in our Addreſſes, and that our Soveraign that ſtruck us is ready to heal us.

3. How ſweet is God towards his Children groaning under any Affliction! My ſon, deſpiſe not, &c. He calls them his Sons, his Children, ſweetning in the name, whatſoever is rigorous in the ſuffering. He gives them a title whereby he manifeſts, that he doth ſhare in their grief, hath a reſentment of their trouble.

What

What Father is there on Earth, unleſs he hath loſt all Natural Affection, who doth not ſympathiſe in the ſuffering of his Children? All the bowels of Earth, met together in one combined tenderneſs, are not to be compared to the yearning bowels of Heaven. Afflictions are not always ſent by God in anger with his Creatures, but ſent by God as a Father.

(1.) Hence it is eaſy to conceive, that neither the intentions of God, nor the iſſue of a ſuffering, can be any other than happy to thoſe that are the Children of God, ſince he gives the name of Child, and Son, to every one that he doth inſtruct as a Father by correction.

(2.) It will teach us to have a ſence of the ſufferings of others. The Argument to preſs this Exhortation, is taken from the impulſive cauſe, the Love of God; and the word tranſlated chaſten, ſignifies ſuch a chaſtiſement as a Father gives his Son, or a Maſter his Scholar.

Obſervation,

(1.) The Afflictions of believers are effects of divine love. For whom the Lord loves he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth, Rev. 3. 19. As many as I love, I rebuke and chaſten: They are not acts of divine revenge, whereby God would ſatisfy his Juſtice; but of divine affection, whereby he communicates his goodneſs, and draws the Image of his Son with more beauty and glory. They are the acts of God, but not of a ſleepy and careleſs God, but a wiſe and indulgent Father, who takes all the care, both of inſtruction and correction, to train you up to his will and likeneſs. God indeed afflicts other men who are not in the number of his beloved Children; there are ſcarce any among the Sons of men that paſs their life in a continual proſperity, exempt from all kind of affliction: and all theſe evils are from God as the Governor of the World; yet tho there be no difference between the ſufferings of one and the other, and tho the ſufferings of believers are often more ſharp than thoſe of carnal men, in outward appearance; yet there is a vaſt difference in the motives of them; Love makes him ſtrike the believer, and Fury makes him ſtrike the unregenerate man. The deſign of the correction of the one, is their profit, not their ruin; the ſtrokes upon the other are often the firſt fruits of eternal puniſhment.

(1.) Then the World is much miſtaken, in judging the Afflictions of believers to be teſtimonies of Gods anger and hatred. God acts towards the World as a Law giver and Judg, but towards thoſe that he hath renewed and adopted, in the quality of a Father; and who would judg of the hatred of a tender Father by the corrections he inflicts upon a Child that is ſo dear to him? Believers ſuffer by God not ſimply as he is a Judg, but as he is Paternus Judex, there is a combination of Judg and Father. God doth not intend revenge on them; for tho they are afflicted for ſin, yet the principal aim is to prove them, reform them, that they may be worthy of a bleſſed inheritance. Lazarus whom thou loveſt is ſick, was the ſpeech of his Siſter to Chriſt. They were fearing, thinking that Chriſts love was departed with Lazarus his health.

(2.) No man hath then any reaſon to fancy himſelf the object of Gods love, for an outward proſperity, Eccl. 9. 1. No man knows either love or hatred by all that is before him. God doth not always love thoſe whom his Providence preſerves in health and eaſe. Such a conceit proceeds from an ignorance of another life, and too great a valuation of the things of this World. Temporal goods, credit in the World, outward conveniencies, and an uninterrupted health, are effects of Gods Patience and common Goodneſs, but not of his Affection and choiceſt Love. They are the marks of his Affection, when by his Grace they are made means to conduct us to a better Inheritance; But how often are they pernicious to us by reaſon of our corruption and ill uſage of them? How often doth the health of the Body deſtroy that of the Soul; and the proſperity of the Fleſh ruin that of the Spirit? How often do riches and honours link our hearts to the Earth, and expel any thoughts of an Heavenly Paradice? How often doth a portion in this World make many ſlack their endeavours for a portion in Heaven? How often do they hinder our Sanctification, which is the only means to an happy viſion of God?

(3.) How ſhould this move us in our Afflictions, to a carriage pleaſing to God? This is the motive the Apoſtle uſes to preſs his Exhortation in the former Verſe, neither to deſpiſe the chaſtening of God, nor deſpond of his care. Why ſhould we deſpiſe that which is diſpenced by love? Who would not be willing to ſatisfy a Friend in his deſire, which they are aſſured Love is the motive of, tho their prudence is not ſo exact, as that we can abſolutely truſt it? Should we not with greater care conſider the chaſtiſements which the Love of God, both Good and Wiſe, doth ordain by Providence? Is not the Love, the motive of ſuffering, a ſufficient ground to prevent diſtruſt and diſcouragement? Why ſhould any diſtruſt him by whom he knows he is Afflicted? That correction which frights us, is a work of his Love, not of his hatred. Should we not therefore wait with Faith for an happy iſſue of that chaſtiſement which we ſuffer? If we be once thus affected, we ſhall receive Afflictions with a temper anſwerable to God, and improve them for thoſe Holy ends for which God ſends them. We ſhould alſo bear them patiently, ſince they are not for the reparation of the holineſs of the Law, and the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice, but to prove the Soul, and fit it for Heaven. 'Tis not the love of the criminal, but the love of the Laws, which cauſes a Judg to condemn and puniſh him. No wiſe man ever ſaid, that a Prince did puniſh Malefactors becauſe he loved them; or that God makes the wicked ſuffer eternal puniſhment in Hell, becauſe he loves them. It neceſſarily follows, that therefore the chaſtiſements God doth inflict, are not properly puniſhments of the ſame Nature with thoſe God doth ordain for unbelievers. We have reaſon therefore to bear them with patience. 'Tis inexcuſable to murmur at an act of Love. Uſe then a Religious reaſon in the conſideration of this. When the Father ſcourgeth, the Child cries, and then he thinks his Father hates him; 'tis but the error of his childhood; and when he comes to Reaſon he will regard it as a falſe opinion. When a Phyſitian hath lanc'd you, and given you a bitter Potion, you never had any ſuſpition that he hated you; you have received all his Charitable offices, and thought him more worthy of a reward than a rebuke: Why ſhould not our carriage be ſo to God?

2. Obſervation.

No Righteous man in the World is, or ever was, free from ſin. He ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth. Sin is the cauſe of Afflictions; were we free from ſin, we ſhould be free from ſcourges. Afflictions ceaſe not till ſin be quite deſtroyed, which will not be in this World. Juſtice finds enough in every believer in the World to puniſh, and mercy finds enough to pardon.

(1.) 'Tis againſt this then, that we ſhould turn our aim. What Satan would make us vent in impatience againſt God, let us manifeſt in a hatred of that which is the true cauſe of all the evils which in general or particular we ſuffer. Let us ſtrike that, as much as God ſtrikes us; and it is but grateful reaſon, ſince it is the beſt way whereby we can ſhow our love to God, who in his ſtrokes upon us ſhows his Love to us. Let us take no reſt till we have put that to death which God only hates; 'tis the death of ſin, and not the death of the Soul, God deſigns in Afflictions.

(2.) 'Tis, upon this account, an Argument for patience. While our Diſeaſe remains, why ſhould we think ill of the Phyſitian for uſing means for a cure? If he did not uſe the means, tho ſharp, we then ſhould have moſt reaſon to accuſe him of a want of pity. What Father would not be counted very tender, that ſhould lance his Child himſelf when he ſaw there was need for it? Sin puts God upon a neceſſity of ſcourging; his Goodneſs and Wiſdom will not ſuffer him to do any thing but what is neceſſary and expedient. Now Ver. 7. the Apoſtle exhorts them to a patient bearing the hand of God, becauſe he deals with them as a father with his ſons, in a way of reward afterwards; as Parents careſs thoſe Children they ſee quiet after puniſhment; If ye endure chaſtening, God deals with you as ſons. God προσφερεται, offers himſelf to you as a Father to his Sons. Or rather, the Apoſtle doth render the comfort in the former Verſe more efficacious to the Hebrews; and makes Application of what is contained in that truth which he hath cited out of the Proverbs, in the former Verſe: That yet, if they endure chaſtiſement, God treats them as Children; and being men are apt to think that a troubleſome Affliction fliction is inconſiſtent with the Love of God; the Apoſtle contradicts ſuch a thought, by the queſtion, What ſon is there whom the father chaſteneth not? And he goes further, Verſe 8. and draws another concluſion, That we ſhould be ſo far from thinking, that to be Afflicted is a ſign of our not being the Children of God, that on the contrary he affirms, That not to be chaſtiſed is a ſign that a man is not of Gods Family, Verſe 8. If you be without chaſtiſement, whereof all are partakers, then are you baſtards, and not ſons. For if the Lord ſcourgeth every Son whom he receives, 'tis clear, that he whom he leaves without chaſtiſement, is not a true and legitimate Son, but a ſtranger, a baſtard; i. e. one that is not of the Family, but takes only the name and quality, without any right to it.

Obſervation,

1. God in chaſtening Believers, treats them as Children. If, here, is as much as when; If you endure chaſtening; i. e. when you endure chaſtening; as Lev. 19. 5. If you offer a Sacrifice of Peace-Offering; i. e. when you offer a Sacrifice. So John 14. 3. If I go and prepare a place for you; i. e. when I go and prepare a place for you. Since God hath commanded men expreſly in his Word, to chaſtiſe their Children, and hath engraved ſuch a diſpoſition in the hearts of mankind, and Authorized ſuch a carriage by his Law, we muſt not think it ſtrange, that God who is Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Love, ſhould exerciſe in his Family ſuch a juſt, and holy, and wholſom Diſcipline. And as none can ſay, that a tender Father, when he chaſtiſeth his Child, deals with him as with an Enemy; ſo none can affirm the ſame of God. And tho Affliction be an evil in it ſelf, and ſharp to the Child that ſuffers it, yet if you compare it with the good it procures, 'tis not an evil, but an experienced good. Compare the lives of thoſe Children that have not been without the correction of their Parents or ſtrangers, to the lives of thoſe that have been left to themſelves without it, and the advantage of the one, and miſeries of the other will eaſily appear, Prov. 13. 1. A wiſe ſon hears the inſtruction of his father. Hear is not in the Hebrew. A wiſe Son is the inſtruction or chaſtiſment of his Father. The Jews have a Proverb, If you ſee a wiſe Child, be ſure that the Father hath chaſtiſed him. God deals in this manner with his Children, and there is need of it; for tho the Regenerate are freed from the ſlavery of ſin, yet while they are clothed with fleſh, the fleſh will luſt againſt the ſpirit, and God not only chaſtiſes us for our infirmities, but to prevent them. And ſince the Love which he bears us, and the Salvation which he procures by his chaſtiſements, doth infinitely ſurpaſs the Affections of the beſt and tendereſt Fathers, and the beſt fruit we can draw from their Diſcipline; we may well confeſs, that no Father in the World can be ſaid to deal as a Father with his Children, ſo as God doth with the Believer. He offers himſelf to do a Fathers office. He is the Worlds Soveraign; but a Believers Father; as he is the Governour of the World, he treats men Righteouſly in his Judgments; as he is the Father of Believers, he treats them Graciouſly in his Afflictions. Druſius.

Here is a great comfort, if God deal with you as with Children in his ſtriking of you. His Wiſdom and his Goodneſs is Infinite, he doth nothing but what is juſt and reaſonable, and is guided by a Fatherly Affection in all that he doth; his blows are healthful. If David would account it a kindneſs if the righteous would ſmite him, and count his rebukes as an excellent Oil, Pſal. 41. 5. how much more ought we to have the ſame ſentiments of the chaſtiſement of God? Good men may miſtake in their rebukes, God cannot; he is too Wiſe to be deceived, and too Good not to make even his ſtrokes become an excellent Balſom. He doth not aſſault us as Enemies, nor only as Criminals, but as Children; not to puniſh us in his fury, but to refine us; to make us fit for him to take pleaſure in; to make us more like him in the frame and temper of our Souls. This is the end of a tender Fathers chaſtiſing his Children, and this is the end of God. We ſhould receive his corrections therefore, not ſo much as a puniſhment as as a favour, ſince he ſtrikes not as an Enemy to deſtroy, but as a Father to correct; not only as a God of Righteouſneſs, but as a God of tenderneſs.

2. Obſer-

2, Obſervation. No Child of God but is one time or other under his correcting hand. The Apoſtle makes a challenge to all, to ſhow one in that relation priviledgd from it; what ſon is there whom the father chaſtneth not? None of thoſe mentioned among the believing Hebrews in the foregoing Chapter were without their ſmart. Noah had an affliction in a Child, Gen. 12. 10. Abraham and Jacob were afflicted with famine, Iſaac by an Eſau, Moſes fain to fly for his life, Job ſuffered the loſs of his goods. Hezekiah a dangerous ſickneſs. To be under afflictions then is to travel in the road of all that have gone before. And the Apoſtle goes further, v. 8. and affirms, that not to be chaſtiſed, is a certain ſign of no right to a membership of his Family, but if you be without chaſtiſement whereof all are partakers, then are you baſtards and not ſons. This is an argument from the Antitheſis, they are baſtards, and not ſons, who are not corrected. Baſtards, not ſaith Grotius, thoſe whom the father of the family hath begot, but thoſe that an adulterous mother would obtrude upon him as parts of his family, which he rejects from any paternal care of inſtruction and diſcipline, as having no part in his inheritrnce, no right to his goods, not born of his ſeed which is the word. By this the Apoſtle ſignifies,

(1.) That all the true Children of God are under his diſcipline. If they are not, they are no parts of his Family. He that is left without it, is not in the number of thoſe he owns for his Children. Hereby he ſtrengthens what he had ſpoken before, that God deals with thoſe he afflicts as children; whence it follows, that there is no child of his, but he doth one time or another afflict. This is one of the Clauſes of the Covenant God hath made with us in Jeſus, which he doth peculiarly inſert, when he owns himſelf our God, and Father, Pſal. 89. 32. he would viſit them with a rod, but not take away his loving kindneſs. In the New Teſtament God promiſeth ſpiritual Bleſſings. In the Old when he promiſed moſt Temporal Bleſſings, his people were not exempt from his Diſcipline. In the New Teſtament it is more expreſs, that through afflictions we muſt enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; his only Son muſt ſuffer and ſo enter into Glory.

(2.) That thoſe that are not under his diſcipline, are not his Children. Afflictions therefore are ſo far from being diſcouragements, that where there is an evidence of Grace in the heart, they are rather marks of Adoption. We might well doubt of a Relation to him, if he took no care of us; that we were not his Sheep, if he uſed not his Crook to pull us unto him. Let us then receive his Chaſtiſements without regret, ſince he manifeſts his care of us in them, and regards us with the eyes and heart of a Father, If we were wholly ſtrangers, he would abandon us, and leave us as perſons he knew not. His paternal Rod is for his Children, his Rod of Iron for his enemies. But now in the 9th ver. and the following verſes, the Apoſtle exhorts them to a Reverence of God under his chaſtizing hand; the Argument is a minori ad majus, ver. 9. Furthermore we have had fathers of the fleſh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence; ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the father of ſpirits and live? And he urgeth the Exhortation, (1.) From the right of God. He is the Father of Spirits. (2.) From his Intention, which is our ſpiritual profit, v. 10. (3.) From the Iſſue; 'tis as much our advantage in the event, as it was in his intention, v. 11. The Fathers of our Fleſh have corrected us, and we gave them Reverence, how much rather ought we to be ſubject to the Father of ſpirits, who chaſteneth us that we may live? The Two Perſons which the Apoſtle compares together, viz. God and Man have this in common, one and the other is a Father, one and the other chaſteneth, one and the other is carried out to it by love, one and the other deſigns advantage; but as there is this reſemblance, ſo there is a great difference; Man is but the Father of the body, the more ignoble part of our natures, that which we have common with beaſts. God is the Father of our Spirits the more noble part, and that which makes us properly men; More ſubmiſſion is therefore due to him, who confers more upon us, than to them who confer leſs. The love which fathers bear to their children, is a paſſion, and many times is not regulated by reaſon; but the love of God is a a true love, not mingled with any imperfection either of exceſs or defect, and therefore doth nothing but with the juſteſt reaſon. Again, earthly fathers aim at the good of their children, but their ignorance is ſo great that often they miſtake it; but the knowledg of God is as perfect as his love, who always chaſtiſeth his people for their true good, and therefore a greater ſubmiſſion is due to him.

1. How

(1.) How glorious is the condition of a true believer! he is the Child of God, 1 Joh. 3. 1. What manner of love is this that we ſhould be called the ſons of God! 'Tis an argument of great love, to give his people ſo honourable and dear a Title, to call himſelf their Father, as well as their God. 'Tis not ſo ſtrange that he ſhould call all the pure Spirits in Heaven his Children, as that he ſhould call thoſe that have defiled his image by that title; that he ſhould own himſelf a father to them that are by nature children of Wrath, ſlaves to Satan ſold under ſin, that have nothing in them to pleaſe him by nature, but are fit objects of his Wrath and curſe: wonderful love that God ſhould not think it a diſhonour to him to be called our father! And hence it is reaſon we ſhould carry our ſelves to him in all his diſpenſations as children to a father; that we ſhould comfort our ſelves in this relation in all the ſufferings we encounter. If he be our Father, what ſhould we fear? Nothing paſſes in the world without his order, no evil arrives to us, without his Will, every Affliction is the rod of his hand; the very thought that God is our Father, ſhould ſweeten any grief.

(2.) God is the Creator of ſouls. By Spirits are meant the ſouls of men; ſome underſtand it alſo of ſpiritual gifts; the Graces God infuſeth into the ſouls of his people; both are good Motives to that ſubmiſſion unto, and reverence of God, the Apoſtle urgeth. Moſt Interpreters run the firſt way; the Antitheſis requires, that we ſhould underſtand by this expreſſion that God is the Creator of Souls, becauſe it is oppoſed to the fathers of the fleſh. God is called the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, Numb. 16. 22. As by the fleſh the Apoſtle means the body, the material and viſible part of our natures, ſo by the Spirit he means the ſoul, the ſpiritual and inviſible part of our being. As for the body man ingendred it, as for the ſoul God only formed it, as in Eccleſ. 12. 7. Then ſhall the duſt return to the earth, and the ſpirit ſhall return to God that gave it. Where by the duſt is meant the body, and by the Spirit the Soul. The body was formed of the duſt of the ground, Gen. 2. 7. But the Soul was breathed in by God. 'Tis the Spirit that gives life and ſence to the parts of the body, which otherwiſe are without ſence and motion; and God is ſaid to form the ſpirit of man, Zach. 12. 1. and challengeth to himſelf the particular forming of the ſoul, Iſa. 57. 16. the ſoul which I have made. God indeed forms the body too by the hand of nature, by the intervention of ſecond cauſes, which he imploys, but the ſoul he forms without any other cauſe, but his own will. The firſt manner of acting by nature in the production of the body, is not ſufficient to demonſtrate God the Father of it, no more than he can be called the Father of beaſts and plants, which are produced by his powerful Providence, as well as the bodies of men; but the ſecond manner of acting in the production of an immortal and ſpiritual ſubſtance is ſufficient to demonſtrate God the Father of Spirits; as they alſo are called the Children of God, becauſe God immediately created them, and cloathed them with an immortal Nature. The Apoſtle therefore hath good reaſon to call men which have begot us, the fathers of the fleſh, becauſe tho the wiſdom and Power of God in his Providence acts in our conception and generation, yet it is alſo the work of man, who acts as a ſecond cauſe; but the production of the ſoul is purely by the Will and Power of God without the action of any creature. Hence it follows that the ſoul is immortal, for ſince it doth not depend in its original upon matter, it doth not in its ſubſiſtence neither after death hath ſeparated the body from it. It follows alſo, that the reaſonable ſoul is more excellent than the bodies, which we receive from earthly fathers, and therefore we owe more ſubmiſſion and reverence to God and his chaſtiſements, than to thoſe who have been only the fathers of our bodies, which the interrogation intimates, ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the father of ſpirits and live?

3. And live, or that we may live; this is an argument from the reward of a patient ſuffering. The Apoſtle ſeems tacitely to refer to the promiſe of life to children that honour their parents; as a temporal life was promiſed to them, ſo a ſpiritual and eternal life is promiſed to thoſe that are patiently obedient under the hand of God. As in Iſrael thoſe that ſlighted the rebukes of their parents were ſtoned without pity, ſo will God handle thoſe that kick againſt his diſcipline, and make no profit of his rod. Corrections cauſe life, not meritoriouſly, but inſtrumentally. If we therefore own God as a Father, we ought to carry our ſelves to him as our father. If we deſire an happy and eternal life, we muſt ſubject our ſelves to his hand, acknowledg the righteouſneſs of his diſcipline, and by how much the paternity of God is more excellent, our ſubmiſſion ought to be the more reverential. In v. 10. The Apoſtle urgeth the exhortation further, from the manner of Gods proceedings with us different from that of earthly fathers, and from his aim in it; for they for a few days chaſtened us after their own pleaſure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. This he doth by comparing of the heavenly Father, and the earthly father with one another, and acquaints us, that it is the aim of God, in thoſe afflictions which ſeem moſt bitter, to reduce us to that holineſs which we have loſt in Adam.

1. They verily for a few days chaſtned us; either death deprives them of their authority, or the growth of their children exempts them from ſuffering under it. Parents only take care to correct their children during the weakneſs of their childhood, when by ignoranee and unexperience they are uncapable to conduct themſelves; they have therefore need of their parents to form their ſpirits, and make thoſe impreſſioms upon them, whereby they may govern themſelves the reſt of their lives. But when they are arrived to years of diſcretion, they are left to govern themſelves according to their own reaſons, without uſing the rod to ſupply the defect of their underſtanding; ſo that the corrections of earthly parents, are but for few years, a little time.

Obſervation.

1. Hereby appears the advantage of Gods diſcipline above that of earthly parents. God continues his care to us all our lives upon the earth as long as we have need, exerciſeth a greater Providence over us, than earthly parents over their Children.

2. Hereby the Apoſtle comforts us. 'Tis but a little time, that God ſubjects us to chaſtiſements, only that part of our life which we are to paſs on earth, which is but a ſmall time to that eternity wherein we ſhall be exempt from ſuffering, bears infinitely leſs proportion to eternity, than the leaſt inſtant doth to all the time from the creation to the end of the world, ſo that the time of a believers chaſtiſement is ſhorter than that of children under their parents. And herein is the kindneſs and love of God apparent, who deals more favourably with his children in regard of the time of their correction, than the beſt father in the world can do.

2. The motive of, and rule that parents too often follow in their chaſtiſing their children after their own pleaſure. They have often a greater regard to their own paſſions, than their childrens advantage, correct oftener in humor than with reaſon; having no other law but their own will, their judgment is apt to be deceived, whereby it happens that their corrections often injure their children, inſtead of advantaging them, whatſoever their intention may be, and that either by miſtake of the nature of things for which they chaſtize them, or the indiſcreet meaſure and manner of their chaſtening.

(1.) Miſtaking the nature of the things for which they chaſtiſe their children. Fathers endeavour to form their children to that which they judg beſt and moſt profitable for them in this life; but their judgments are often miſtaken; as a covetous Parent that acknowledges no other happineſs than Wealth, will inſtill ſuch inſtructions into his child, to think nothing unjuſt that is profitable and enriching; an Ambitious man will endeavour to imprint the ſentiments of Worldly Honour upon his children; a Superſtitious Parent will correct his child for not conforming himſelf to that Mode of Worſhip he is himſelf addicted to. Thus Parents often uſe their power to extinguiſh good principles in their children, and diſcourage beginnings of Virtue in them.

(2.) Miſtaking the meaſure. How often are good Parents tranſported with choler in the corrections they inflict? Others through a fond indulgence altogether neglect it, and give the reins to the follies of their children. But the chaſtiſements God inflicts, are otherwiſe; he hath a perfect knowledg of all things, is ſubject to no paſſion, never afflicts but when there is need, never chaſtiſeth his own, but for their good. God being infinitely wiſe, cannot err in his judgment of what is convenient for us; he is not biaſſed by weak affections. David acknowledged this

Wiſdom of God, Pſal. 119. 71. 'Tis good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy ſtatutes. He is wiſe, and foreſees an evil we are apt to run into, and prevents it by affliction; ſends Paul a thorn in the fleſh, not ſo much to correct a preſent default, as to preventit, 2*Cor.* 12.7. that he might not be lifted up above meaſure: Sometimes he afflicts to make their graces apparent; God afflicted Job in his goods, in his perſon, that the truth of his faith and patience might be ſeen in the midſt of his ſufferings, to the praiſe of God. He ſends not temptations unleſs there be need, and that the trial of faith may be found to praiſe and honour, 1 Pet. 1. 6, 7. Other Parents uſe their arbitrarineſs often, and not their wiſdom; Gods afflictions are Soveraign acts, but not ſeparated from wiſe and gracious intentions. But the Apoſtle explains the particular profit which God aims at, That we might be partakers of his holineſs; to refine their droſs, and purifie them for himſelf, and render them fit for the place wherein dwells nothing that is unclean. Earthly Parents correct their children, that they may learn uſeful Arts and Manners in the world, an external profit chiefly they aim at; ſometimes they correct, that their Vices may be imitated; God, that his Holineſs may be communicated here, and Bleſſedneſs hereafter. This ſeems to be an expoſition of what he meant by [live] in the former verſe. This preſerves us, and renders us partakers not only of Holineſs, but of his Holineſs, the Holineſs which he approves, which he commands, and hath ſome reſemblance, and conformity to his own. In the ſame ſenſe we are ſaid to be partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1.4. whereby we have a pourtraiture of the Nature and Holineſs of God drawn in our ſouls by the Spirit. 'Tis not that we may poſſeſs the Holineſs of God, but partake of the Holineſs of God. The lineaments of his Image formed in us by the goſpel, and by afflictions, are as the beams and ſparks of his Holineſs; the original is in God, the picture of it in the believer; as light is in the Sun, but ſome ſplendor of it in the glaſs upon which it ſhines. This God works by afflictions, whereby he makes us exerciſe our ſelves more in Repentance, weans us from the fleſh, that would alienate us from God, cleave faſter to Chriſt by faith, who is the ſpring of Holineſs, more earneſtly thirſt to draw of the fountain, and purſue thoſe things that are heavenly. Parents correct their children to bring them to an imitation of their manners. God corrects his to bring them to an imitation of his Holineſs. They chaſtiſe to make their children like them, and God to make his children conform to him.

(1.) Then afflictions are not always puniſhments, they are not inflicted for ſatisfaction for ſin. God aims at our profit; a Judg regards not the profit of a Criminal when he condemns him to puniſhment, but only the Honour of the Law, and to repair the offence done to the Law by the violation of it, and ſatisfie that Juſtice which hath been violated: But God aims at the advantage of the believing ſufferers, and makes them ſmart to make them gracious and glorious; to impart to them the higheſt excellency a creature is capable of.

(2.) A great argument there is from hence to love God even for afflictions. In all things give thanks, ſaith the Apoſtle. In theſe there is great reaſon to give thanks, in regard of their fruit. An earthly Father tranſmits his Inheritance to his Son, but not his internal endowments; but God communicates his Holineſs to his children by theſe means.

3. How patiently ſhould we bear them? The Majeſty of God above earthly Parents, and his gracious aim and wiſe conduct of them, doth oblige us to this duty. He never ſtrikes but with reaſon, never ſtrikes his children but for their good. Happy blows ſhould be received without murmuring. 'Tis a welcome weapon that hath more of Balſome than ſmart; a bleſſed ſword, that breaks the impoſthume. That which is not only profitable, but neceſſary, calls not only for our patience, but our willing embracing when God doth wiſely inflict it; beſides, they are ſhort, they are of no longer duration than this life. There might be reaſon to complain much, if it were an eternal ſmart; but it is only for a little time.

4. We ſhould endeavour to anſwer the intention of God; to form our ſelves to that Holineſs he aims at; to embrace every motion of the Spirit in our afflictions. To that purpoſe the rod hath a voice, the ſpirit hath a voice, both muſt be liſtned to.

And becauſe 'tis a hard matter to be without complaints, the Apoſtle ſtill urgeth it further, and prevents the ground of complaint, which is the ſharpneſs of a

Rod, and ſets the ſmart and fruit in oppoſition one to another, Verſe 11. Now no chaſtening for the preſent ſeems to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheleſs, afterwards it yields the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs to them that are exerciſed thereby. 'Tis confeſt, they are grievous, but 'tis in appearance only; they ſeem ſo, but as a beautiful Face under a frightful Mask; as a bitter potion that gripes, but purgeth. This is an Argument taken from the fruit of correction, and amplified by conceſſion of the Objection; I confeſs ſuffering is grievous, but wholſom. The end and iſſue of it is to be conſidered. A rational Creature in all things ſhould mind the end as well the means. The end makes a vaſt difference between things. Becauſe the trouble and grief which is in every chaſtiſement, makes our fleſh to apprehend it is an evil, the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth betweenwhat is troubleſom and what is deſirable, between the pain and the fruit, and draws an Argument of Patience from the effect.

[1.] All Afflictions are grievous to the fleſh. God doth not expect we ſhould be Stoicks, to be without ſence of grief. Chriſt himſelf hath ſet us a pattern of it, he ſhed Tears for the death of his Friend Lazarus, and ſhed drops of Blood at the approaching of his ſuffering; his ſoul was ſorrowful even to the death; he was tempted in all things like to us, yet without ſin. 'Tis no ſin to grieve under, to complain of ſuffering without murmuring. If we have not a ſenſe of the grief, we can never be capable of the profit of Affliction. Without ſome grief, Affliction would leave us worſe than it finds us. As we ought to hear God when he ſpeaks, ſo we ought to fear God when he ſtrikes. At firſt the trouble of a chaſtiſement doth wholly poſſeſs our ſpirits, it makes us miſtake the end of it, we cannot ſometimes in our preſſures imagine that a root ſo bitter ſhould bear a joyful fruit; as the griping Phyſick afflicts the Patient ſo much ſometimes, that he ſcarce thinks of the good which will iſſue from it. David often is full of complaints while he is under an Affliction, and ſeems often to have no ſenſe of any thing but the preſent trouble; but afterwards he hath no ſentiments but of the gracious fruit. In faithfulneſs thou haſt afflicted me. 'Tis good for me that I have been afflicted. Thy rod doth comfort me. After-experience manifeſts a truth, which the preſent grief will not often give us leave to conſider.

[2.] Tho Afflictions be grievous, the fruit is gracious to a Believer. Experience corrects the falſe judgment we have while we are under a ſtroke. Indeed Afflictions, of themſelves, are rather a means to cool our Affections to holineſs, to extinguiſh in our minds the ſparks of godlineſs, and make us deſpond and diſtruſt the grace of God; but God in his Soveraign Wiſdom doth ſo diſpoſe and manage them, that he makes them end in a happy fruit. By the grace of God they break off thoſe inclinations we have to the World, quicken our prayers, awaken us out of our Lethargies, put us upon a review of our ſelves. The ſtrings of an Inſtrument yield a different ſound, when they are ſtretched, from what they did when they were ſlack. 'Tis a fruit of Righteouſneſs, Holineſs and Sanctification, which he had ſpoken of in the former Verſe; alſo Righteouſneſs which is a peaceable fruit; as when it is ſaid, The incorruptible crown of glory, 1 Pet. 5. 4. 'tis as much as to ſay, The Glory which is a Crown incorruptible; ſo a Righteouſneſs which is the ſpring of peace and ſerenity of Conſcience, Iſa. 23. 17. And the work of righteouſneſs ſhall be peace; and the effect of righteouſneſs, quietneſs and aſſurance for ever. It yields the fruit of Righteouſneſs, as being a means that brings us nearer to God, in communion with whom that peace doth conſiſt. It brings us to ſeek in God and Chriſt, the true remedy of all our evils; and by this means the trouble of our Souls is calmed, and an aſſurance of the grace of God promoted. The Joy of the Holy Ghoſt is often ſtrongeſt in us, when Afflictions are ſharpeſt upon us, 1 Theſſ. 1. 6. having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the holy Ghoſt: And tho it be not always ſo with a believer, yet after the Affliction hath wrought kindly, and done its work, God comes in with comfort and joy; as chearing Cordials follow bitter Phyſick. They bring forth the fruits of Righteouſneſs, not as the efficient cauſe, but the means.

(1.) Let us then make a right judgment of Afflictions. Let us not think God intends to deſtroy when he begins to ſtrike. We are often in the ſame error the Apoſtles were in, when they ſaw Chriſt walking upon the Waves in the dead of the the Night, and terrors of a tempeſt, coming to ſuccour them, they imagined he was a ſpirit coming to miſchief them, Mark 6. 47, 48, 49. The fleſh makes us think God, often, to be our Enemy when he is our Friend. But as Chriſt cried out to them, Fear not, it is I; ſo the Apoſtle doth to believers here; fear not, tho the ſmart be grievous, the fruit is peaceable. If the fleſh ſuffer, it is for the good of the ſpirit. The iſſue will declare, that all things work together for the good of them that love God, Rom. 8. 27.

(2.) Let Patience and Faith have their perfect work. Affliction makes the beginning ſad; Patience will make the ſucceſs glorious. Had the Iſraelites believed Gods Promiſe of deliverance, they had not murmured at the Red Sea. God brought them to the Red Sea to deliver them from the Egyptians, and made all their fears end in joy and triumph. The more we truſt God, the more he is concerned in our welfare; the more we truſt our ſelves, the more he doth to croſs us. The committing our way to the Lord, renders our minds calm and compoſed, Prov. 16.3. Commit thy way to the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed. God hath alway an eye upon them that fear him, Pſal. 33. 18, 19. not to keep diſtreſs and affliction from them, but to quicken them in it, and give them as it were a new life from the dead, new fruit from the Rod. God brings us into ſtraits, that we may have more lively experiments of his tenderneſs and wiſdom. We ſhould ſubmit our way to the guidance of Gods Wiſdom, with an obedience to his Will, and a reliance on his Goodneſs; and then the ſucceſs will be gracious in this life, and glorious in that which is to come; a peaceable fruit of Righteouſneſs in Earth and Heaven. Wait upon God, being he is a God of Judgment, Iſa. 30. 18. for the Lord is a God of judgment. Bleſſed are all thoſe that wait for him: He goes judicially to work, and can beſt time the execution of his Will; God hath as much Wiſdom to bring an affliction to a good iſſue, as he hath Love at firſt to inflict it.

A DISCOURSE OF THE REMOVAL OF THE GOSPEL.

Rev. II. 5.

Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works: or else I will come unto thee quickly, and remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

THESE words are part of the Epistle of Christ, as King and Governour to the Church of Ephesus. And they contain a severe threatning, after a Charge and Indictment brought in against that Church. The Bill is preferred against them by Christ, who is described, Verse 1. to be him that holds the seven stars in his right hand, and walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. He holds the Stars in his hand to show his tenderness; in his right hand to show his Power; and he walks among the Candlesticks to show his care over them, and his love to them. Before he brings the Charge, he takes notice of what was praise-worthy in that Church, and gives them the commendation of their patience under persecution, and zeal for his glory, ver. 2, 3. But, alas! the case was changed, their zeal was cold, and their love was flatted, Verse 4. she had left her first love. Ephesus was a Mart-Town of Asia, famous for Diana's Temple, Acts 19. 28. which brought resort, and consequently Wealth to her, from all parts of Asia and Greece.

I have formerly noted, That the condition of the Church, in the several states of it, is described in these Epistles. Crocius discourseth of them to this purpose *: whence our Dr. Moor might take his rise for that ingenious and rational piece he hath writ upon these Epistles in this sence. The design of this Book is to predict what should happen to the Church in all Ages, till the conclusion of time; and what is spoken here to these seven Churches, seems to be greater than can well suit these places in Asia, while they remained Christian. The Conversion of the Jews seems to be intimated to be brought to pass in the Philadelphian state, to which we, probably, are approaching after a smart trouble, Rev. 3. 5. I will make those that are of the Synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lye; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet: Those that are of the Jewish Synagogue, which he calls the Synagogue of Satan, being blinded by the God of this World, to keep up that worship which God hath hath rejected; which are, indeed, Jews in the fleſh, and by circumciſion, but are not ſo in ſpirit; or it may be meant of ſome people that pretend to be of the Jewiſh race, or practiſing the Jewiſh rites, that ſhall in that ſtate of the Church give up their names to Chriſtianity. And for Laodicea, it is argued, That the Epiſtle cannot be meant of local Laodicea, becauſe that is reported to be ſwallowed up by an Earthquake in the time of Nero, before the writing of this Epiſtle. And it is that ſtate of the Church which ſhall be before the day of Judgment; and therefore fitly put in that term of Laodicea, which ſignifies in the Greek, the peoples judgment, or the judgment of the people. This Church of Epheſus is underſtood by him to be the firſt and Apoſtolical condition of the Church; or, perhaps, not that primo-Primitive, but the ſtate of the Church immediately ſucceeding it. 'Tis true the Primitive Church was fired with Zeal, and ballaſted with Patience; ſhe had a courage to aſſert the truth, and a meekneſs to bear her troubles; and detected thoſe falſe Apoſtles that would joyn works with the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt in juſtification. But after the death of the Apoſtles, yea, and in the life of Paul, there were ſome that made diſturbance, would have blended the Goſpel-Doctrine and Worſhip with legal ceremonies. And when the head of that great founder of the Gentile Church was laid, coldneſs in Chriſtianity, and corruption in Doctrine crept in.

1. Doct. How unwilling is the Nature of man to be guided by the Word of Chriſt? Men will be mixing their own wills and wiſdom, with the Wiſdom and Will of God. Error could not elſe have crept in ſo ſoon, while the memory of the Apoſtles laſted. The Church of Epheſus was the firſt ſtate of the Church next to the Primitive, and this gave ſtrong provocations to God to take away the Goſpel from her.

2. Chriſt takes an account both of the good and evil works of a Church. One makes him not over-look the other; he will not cocker any for their good, or ſpare them in their evil. He ſweetens his reproof here, with a commendation, like Oil that makes way for a ſharp Nail. He reckons their labour, patience, ſence of his diſhonour, their diſcovery of ſeducing ſpirits, the circumſtances of their zeal for his Name, and conſtancy and unweariedneſs in it. He ſees our good grain, and beholds our chaff; he take notices, of our decreaſes and of our decaies

3. Grace doth not priviledg ſin. Tho he takes notice of their worth, yet he charges them with their crime. Chriſt takes more notice of the ſins of his People, than of the ſins of others. Others ſins are enmities, he expects no other from them; their ſins are unkind, and more affect him. Their profeſſions, mercies, covenants, aſſiſtances, priviledges require a ſuitable walk. Judas his betraying Chriſt did not ſo much trouble him, as Peter's denial of him. We do not read that he thought of Judas after he had betrayed him; but he would look back upon Peter whilſt he was expoſed to the danger of his life, and approaching to a conteſt with death and wrath. Chriſt will be terrible in the aſſembly of his Saints: he will not endure the duſtineſs of his Golden Candleſtick.

We may ſee here,

1. The Diſeaſe, Verſe 4. Thou haſt left thy firſt love.
2. The iſſue of it, if it were not cured. The removal of the Candleſtick.
3. The cure: which conſiſts,
   1. In conſideration: Remember.
      1. Of their preſent condition: fallen.
      2. Of the term of their Apoſtacy: whence thou art fallen: reflect upon your preſent condition, and your former ſtate, and compare them one with another.
   2. In contrition: repent.
   3. In Reformation. And do thy firſt work, write after thy former Copy. This method of cure was to be obſerved; otherwiſe Chriſt would take away the Golden Candleſtick.

Do thy firſt work: reduce thy ſelf to the form of Primitive Chriſtianity: away with all mixtures in Worſhip, chilneſs in diſcipline, looſneſs in practice.

Doct.

Doct. Reformations are reductions of things to their Original pattern, and firſt Inſtitution. When Chriſt would reform the abuſes in Marriage, he doth not bring them to the practice of their Fathers, and the practice of their poſterity, but meaſures both that of their own, and that of their Anceſtors by the firſt rule, In the beginning it was not ſo, Matth. 19. 18. We are uſually ſwayed by cuſtoms in Morals, and preſidents in politicals; when cuſtom and preſcription alter not the nature of unrighteouſneſs and unreaſonableneſs. True reformations are reductions of things to Reaſon, and reduction of things to Scripture.

I will remove thy Candleſtick out of his place. I ſhall not trouble you with the different Interpretations of it. There was a Candleſtick within the tabernacle, Heb. 9. 2. which had ſeven branches, wherein Lamps were continually preſented lighted. The Candleſtick repreſented, as a Type, the Goſpel-Church; and the Lamps, the Goſpel in it; and the Oil to ſupply the Lamps, the Gifts of the Spirit for the preſervation and propagation of the Goſpel. An alluſion is made in this place to the Candleſtick in the Ancient Tabernacle. Some think the Candleſtick with the ſeven Golden branches, repreſented the ſeven Planets, but with what reaſon I underſtand not, ſince the branches of the Candleſtick were all equal; but the Planets are of a different light and magnitude. The chief intention of the Ancient Tabernacle was to repreſent and ſignify future things. The ſeven particular Churches allude here to the ſeven branches of that Candleſtick, ſeven particular Churches, or ſeven ſtates of the Church, all parts of the Univerſal. The chief concern of the Candleſtick was the light in it, without which, as the Tabernacles had been a place of darkneſs, ſo is the World without the Goſpel.

By removing the Candleſtick is therefore to be undeſtood the removing of the Goſpel, and ſo an unchurching of them. Candleſtick may be here put for the light in it, by a metonimy of the ſubject for the adjunct.

We might Obſerve,

1. A Nation, People, or Church, that have been eminent for the owning the ways and truths of God, may have great decaies in their Affections, and greatly Apoſtatize.

2. Apoſtacy in a Church is followed with a removal of the Goſpel.

3. The removal of the Goſpel is the ſaddeſt judgment that can happen to a Nation.

We may put the two laſt together, and ſo I ſhall inſiſt on this Doctrine.

Doct. God doth often remove the Goſpel upon provocations, as the ſevereſt Judgment he can inflict upon an unworthy people. Apoſtacies have been very frequent. Every thing under the Sun is ſubject to alteration, and corruption; Faith is not an hereditary thing, like a ſtanding Patrimony. Children do not always tread in the ſteps of their Anceſtors; what they receive only by Education, they will eaſily part with upon ſome carnal intereſt, ſome ſmiling or frowning temptation. Some have obſerved that the purity of the Goſpel hath ſcarce laſted in a City or Province to the Third Generation. The Goſpel in the honour of it may remain longer, but uſually ſome error, ſome mixtures have deformed it. Good Corn is ſcarcely ſown, but the Devil is as ready to ſow his Tares.

I ſhall Premiſe.

1. The Goſpel ſhall not be removed out of the World, while the World endures. Sion, the Univerſal Church, hath a promiſe of ſtability; the Goſpel therefore whereby ſhe is conſtituted a Church, ſhall be perpetually in her. The ſhutting the gate of the ſanctuary, after the Lords entring into it, Ezek. 44. 2. is expounded by ſome, of the everlaſting dwelling of the Lord in the Goſpel-Church, and never departing from it, as he had done from the Temple of Jeruſalem. The Promiſe of Chriſt aſſures it, Matth. 28. 20. I will be with you always, even unto the end of the world: Not with the perſons of the Apoſtles, who were to expire, but with the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, which was to endure; tho the Apoſtles die in their Bodies, yet they live in their Doctrine.

2. The

2. The Goſpel hath been, and ſtill may be removed from particulr places. No particular Church, but may be unchurched, becauſe no particular Church hath a promiſe of ſtability. There is no entail of Gods Favour to any particular Church in the world. The Goſpel is a Candle, and the Church is a Candleſtick, both Candle and Candleſtick are movable Things, not an entailed inheritance. Many Nations have had their day of Grace ſet, and are now benighted. Jeruſalem had a ſeaſon wherein to know the things that concerned her peace, Luk. 19. 42. She finds nothing now, but ſorrow and exile. There is a time when the Spirit ſtrives, and there is a time, when the Spirit turns his back, and ceaſeth any longer wreſtling. Sometimes God doth both unchurch and unnation a people, ſometimes he removes the Goſpel, and continues a Nation in being; but this is rare, to continue providential Mercies, when his moſt excellent Truth is departed. But in ſuch caſes he gives them up to ſtrong deluſions, who would not render themſelves at his ſummons; he continues the ſubſtance, while he removes the efficacy by withdrawing his ſpirit; and then the Goſpel is like a Carcaſe without a Soul, Iſa. 6. 9. 10. They ſhall hear and not underſtand.

I ſhall obſerve this Method in handling this Doctrine. I ſhall ſhew,

1. The Goſpel has been removed, a Nation hath been unchurched.
2. Tis the greateſt judgment.
3. The USE.

I. That a Nation has been unchurched, and the Goſpel has been removed.

1. The Jews are an eminent Inſtance. They had the Goſpel in a Type, while they enjoyed the Ceremonies, they had the Goſpel unvailed while they had the preſence of Chriſt among them. God gave them anciently ſome evidences of the poſſibility of it. The Law was near being quite removed from them, when upon their Idolatry, the Two Tables were broken by Moſes, which a little before had been received from God. When the Ark was put into the Temple, at Solomons Dedication of it, tho it was lodged there without any intention in the People to remove it, yet the ſtaves whereby it was carried were continued in it, 1 King. 18. 9. ſo that it was ready for a removal at any time; to ſhow, ſay ſome, that if the Ark were abuſed and the Teſtimonies ſlighted, it ſhould be taken from them.

(1.) Conſider, They were a people that had the greateſt Titles. They were called by his name, Jer. 2. 2, 3. They were his peculiar treaſure, they were called Gods Son, his firſt-born, his Spouſe, his Portion, Inheritance, his Delight; yet he hath flung this treaſure out of his coffers, diſinherited his firſt born, caſt his children out of his houſe to be fugitives about the world, his Spouſe is divorced from him, and his inheritance laid waſt. No child was more endear'd to a Father; No Wife more to a husband than thoſe people to God. Yet how is that Jeruſalem which was his delight, now a Den of Thieves!

(2.) Conſider The Priviledges they enjoyed. They were a people cheriſhed in his boſom, walled about with Miracles, protected by him in perſon, he marched before them as their General, and conducted their motions, Exod. 13. 21. He was their Lawgiver and pen'd their Statutes, whereby they were to be governed, with his own hand; he ſpake to them from Heaven, (which he did to no other Nation) he was their Carerer and provided Manna for them in their neceſſity, and fed them by Miracle. He was their Biſhop to ſettle them a Church, and their Prince and Magiſtrate to form them into a State: not only their Religion, but their civil Government was the birth of the Wiſdom of Heaven. He puts his Oracles as a Treaſure into their hands, Rom. 3. 2. The Covenant, Ark, Pot of Manna were committed to them, he planted them a noble vine, culled them out from all the nations of the earth, whereby they were made the delights of Heaven, and the admiration of the reſt of the World. He made them his Garden, they coſt him more than all the nations beſide, and he ſeems to have no care of any part of the earth beſides them, Pſal. 147. 19, 20. The World had his alms, and they the inheritance, the reſt of the world were his Iſhmaels, and they his Iſaacs; and (which is obſervable) his firſt thoughts ſeem to be, to have the Goſpel confined only to them in that Covenant which he makes with Chriſt, which is repreſented in the manner of a treaty between the Father and the Son: He ſeems to pitch no further than Iſrael, in whom he would be glorified, Iſa. 49. 3. till Chriſt complains of the narrow limits, and gains a larger portion for himſelf, the terms are then enlarged, v. 6. 'Tis a light thing, that thou ſhouldſt be my ſervant to raiſe up the Tribes of Jacob, and reſtore the preſerved of Iſrael; I will alſo give thee for a light to the Gentiles. The promiſes of the Meſſiah made to Abraham and Jacob were often with an addition of clearneſs renewed to them by the Prophets. He choſe them of all nations, of whom his Son the Saviour of the world ſhould be born, with whom he was firſt to treat, his perſonal Miniſtry was deſigned for them, to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael only he was ſent, that nation he in Perſon ſolicited, over them he wept, and for them he prayed, Mat. 15. 24. Thoſe that were to carry the Goſpel into other parts of the World, were ſelected out of that nation; and tho they uſed him ſo ill, yet he was indulgent to them, ſent his ſpirit upon the Apoſtles firſt at Jeruſalem; ſeem'd to have little care of the Gentiles. How long after was it that Peter ſcrupled to treat with them? But ſince they have proved falſe to God, and forgot the Rock of their Strength, he expoſed them to the fury of a Roman Army, tore up the foundations of their Government, demoliſht their Temple, cauſed the land he had infeoft them in, to ſpew them out, ſcattered them over the face of the world, as a ſpectacle of his Vengeance, and a ſtanding Monument, what the caſe will be of any Nation that walks unworthily of the Goſpel.

(3.) Conſider, The multitude of ſtrange Providences they had. He delivered them to the amazement of all round about them; they were a happy people, in being a people ſaved by the Lord, Deut. 33. 29. They ſaw more of his wonderful Providences than all the world ever ſince hath done, he put himſelf out of the ordinary courſe of Providence in their favour, he ſpred their tables in the wilderneſs and filled their cup; no good thing they could have a mind to, but they had for asking; the Sun muſt ſtand ſtill in Heaven to light them to the gaining a Victory, if Joſhua deſire it; they had upon all occaſions immediate direction from the Ark; What favour did they find from Cyrus after they had been captivated? A 100000. were ſet at liberty by Ptolemy, after they had been enſlaved by his Father. When they proved falſe to God and played the harlot upon every high hill, and under every green tree, how was their Temple and City deſtroyed, and after ſome revolution of time repaired, and that by their enemies, as ſome obſerve, contrary to all the Rules of Policy ſince the reedifying their Temple, and the repairing the Walls of their City might be encouragements to them to rebel, they being a people that had ſo often forced their necks out of the Conquerors yoke. And often when the Temple wanted repairs, God ſtirred up the hearts of their enemies to ſend ſupplies out of the Roman Provinces to beautifie it, that as God had at firſt enricht them by the Jewels of the Egyptians, he would maintain their Wealth by the aſſiſtance of the other Gentiles. And when Pompey entred into their temple, where there was a treaſure in the Veſſels, and Inſtruments of Gold, amounting to about nine millions of money (a ſtrong temptation to a generous Perſon) yet God ſo ordered it, that he could ſee nothing there but a Cloud. They never were conquered (which you know was often) but God raiſed them up ſome Patrons. Yet notwitſtanding all theſe Providences, whereby God ſo miraculouſly owned them, and all the dangers from whence he ſo powerfully delivered them, they are now pulled up by the root, perſecuted by man, abandoned by God, the generation of his wrath, Jer. 7. 29. Of a tender father he is become their enraged enemy, and flings vengeance down upon thoſe heads which before he crowned with Mercy: No ſpiritual dew falls upon theſe Mountains of Gilboa. Thoſe that were as pleaſant to God as the grapes in a wilderneſs to a thirſty traveller, Hoſ. 9. 10. are of as little regard as a bramble. Their names are a deteſtation in nature, and a hiſſing to the Gentiles. God ſometimes embrac'd the Jews without taking the Gentiles, and now hath received the Gentiles with rejecting the Jews,

2. The Seven Churches of Aſia, to whom theſe Epiſtles are written, are another Inſtance. How do their places know them no more, as once they were? Not only their Religion, but their civil politeneſs is exchanged for Barbariſm. They have loſt their ancient beauty, for a Turkiſh deformity. Mahomets Horſe hath ſucceeded in the place of of the Gospel-Dove. The Blasphemies of the Alcoran sound where the name of Christ hath been called upon. The Triumphant banners of an Impostor advanced where the standard of the Gospel had been erected. Christ had a great company of votaries in those places when the ancient Brittains were under the Empire of Satan: but now he seems to have sowed those places with salt, and made them barren. No couragious Athanasius, or silver-tongued Chrysostom, or lofty Nazianzen to be found in those Places. He hath translated the Gospel into other parts, and multiplied Children in those places which before were barren. We might instance also in the Church of Rome, a Church whose faith was spoken of throughout the whole World; and how is the Truth and Purity of Religion discarded, true faith dwindled into implicit, the Righteousnes of Christ changed for impotent and feeble merit, Pilgrimages, Oblations, self chastisements advanced instead of the virtues of the Cross, whole Countries made drunk with the Wine of her Fornication, the glory of the Gospel gone, a meer Eccho only remaining, the end of a voice, and no reality! They are given up to strong delusions to believe a lie.

II. Thing. That the removal of the Gospel and unchurching a Nation is the greatest judgment. Can there be a greater judgment than to have the Word of God removed, to want a Prophet to instruct and warn? when the Law shall perish from the Priest, and Council from the ancient? This God threatens as the greatest, Ezek. 7. 26. And the Church complains of it as the sorest, Psal. 74. 9. We see not our signs, and there is no more any prophet among us. It was the greatest Token of Gods Anger, when his Glory went up from the Cherubims, Ezek. 9. 2. A loco placationis. How much more terrible is the shaking off the dust of the feet of God against a people, than the shaking off the dust of the feet of an Apostle? What greater evidence can there be of a Fathers indignation against a disobedient Son, than not only to disinherit him but disdain to speak to him, or send to him any notice of his mind and will? The misery of the old world was summed up in this, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, Gen. 6. 3. and then are the flood-gates of Heaven opened. The shutting up the book of Mercy, is the opening the book of Justice, the unstopping the vials of Wrath; This, this is the very dregs of Vengeance.

1, The Gospel is the choicest mercy, and therefore the removal of it the sharpest misery. * The Gospel is so much the best of blessings, as God is the best of Beings. This is the Sun that enlighens the mind, this is the rain that waters the heart. Without this we should sink into an heathen, brutish or devillish superstition. By this the quickning Spirit renews the soul, and begins a gracious and spiritual life in order to a glorious and eternal one. 'Tis by this our souls are refined and our lusts consumed. Without it we are without help, and without hope; without it we have no prospect of a World to come, nor any sight of the paths that lead to happiness. This is the foundation of the peace and joy of our spirits here, this is the basis of our hopes of happiness hereafter. This is a pearl of great price, this is the glory and honor of a Church, People, or Person. This only instructs us to save our souls. Your trades may gain and preserve an estate, your bread may nourish your bodies this only can fatten and prop your souls; had we the law only, which yet is the Law of God, we should still find it weak, through the flesh, It cannot now save us, tho the observance of it might have made our Father Adam happy. 'Tis the Gospel only that is strong to save through the Spirit. The Law could bless an innocent man, but the Gospel only restores a guilty man. When the Candlestick, the Gospel, therefore is removed, the light is removed which is able to direct us, the Pearl is removed which is able to enrich us. In the want of this is introduced a spiritual darkness, which ends in an eternal darkness. As the Gospel is compared to Heaven, and so called the kingdom of heaven, and a people in the enjoyment of it, are said to be lifted up to Heaven, Mat. 10. 23. So in the want of it, they are said to be cast down into hell, so that what resemblance there is between heaven and the means of Grace, that there is between the want of them and hell, both are a separation from God by divorce between God and a people.

2. 'Tis made worſe than thoſe judgments, that are accounted the ſevereſt. Plagues, Wars, Famine, are lighter Marks of Divine Anger than this. God upon ſeveral provocations of the Jews, ſent Enemies to waſte their Habitations and ravage their Country, Plagues to diminiſh their Inhabitants, yet they were ſtill his people; but when he takes the Word and Ordinances from them, they are Loammi, not my People, Hoſ. 1. 9. God may take notice of a People under the ſmarteſt Afflictions, but when he takes away his Word, he knows a people no longer. A Father may ſcourge a Child, and yet love him; but when he takes away his Treaſure, his food from his child, he can no longer be ſaid to love him, he breaks the Bands of all Relation and natural Affection. This Judgment is compared to, and yet made worſe than a Famine of Bread. What more terrible than Famine, that hath forced Parents againſt the tyes of natural Affection to devour their children, and children to feed upon the lean fleſh of their Parents? What more terrible than Famine, that hath rendred Carrion, Dung, Rats, Serpents, the refuſe of Nature a delicious Food in that extream neceſſity? What more dreadful than this, that brutifies the nature of man, and neceſſitates them to horrid and abominable actions? Yet this is made a light thing in compariſon of the other, Amos 8. 11. Behold, the days come ſaith the Lord, that I will ſend a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirſt for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord. In what bitter Gall doth God here dip his pen? I will not ſend ſo light a judgment, I have a worſe ſcourge for them. When God ſent the Jews into captivity, he ſent Prophets to attend them while they were under the Chaldean power. The remains of them in the Land had Jeremy, and Baruch. The Captives in Babylon had Daniel, Ezekiel, Eſdras; after the Captivity they had Zachary, Haggai, Malachi; but in this judgment threatned againſt Iſrael none at all; they were to be without a Prince, or a Prieſt, Hoſ. 3. 4. (for the word ſignifies both) without a Sacrifice, without Ephod and Teraphim. As the Soul ſurpaſſes the body in excellency, ſo a ſoul-famine exceeds a bodily-famine. The want of ſpiritual is more dreadful than the want of corporeal food; this makes us weak, and that makes us wicked; this pines away the ſtrength of the body, that drives out the health of the Soul; this may be a means to make us ſeek the Lord, but that leaves us groping in the dark. We may live in our ſouls by the influence of the Word, when we have not bread to convey ſtrength to our bodies; but how muſt the ſoul languiſh when it is deprived of ſpiritual food to nouriſh her? Iſa. 30. 20. how doleful would it be to have the ground parcht by the Sun, the Sky emptied of clouds, or the bottles of Heaven ſtopt cloſe without venting a drop of refreſhing rain? But how much more deplorable is this judgment, than the withholding the Clouds from dropping upon our earth, or the Sun from ſhining upon our fruits?

3. When the Goſpel departs, all other bleſſings depart with it. When the great Charter is taken away, all the Priviledges depending upon it are ſnatcht away together with it. When God departs, Judgments ſucceed. When the Glory of God was gone up from the firſt Cherub to the threſhold of the houſe, Ezek. 9. 3. the Angels are commanded to execute the deſtructive ſentence againſt the city, v. 4 5.

(2.) The ſtrength of a Nation departs. The Ordinances of God are the Towers of Sion. The Temple was not only a place of Worſhip, but a Bulwark too. The Ark was often carried with the Iſraelites into their Camp, becauſe there their ſtrength lay; and when David was chaſed away by his Son Abſolom, he takes the Ark of the Tabernacle as his greateſt ſtrength againſt the defection of his Son and Subjects. When the Goſpel goes, God continues no longer the Protector of a people. When a man hath packt up his Wares, and removed them, he cares not much what becomes of the houſe he hath left, which while he is in it, he will defend to the utmoſt. When the Ark was taken by the Philiſtines, what a rout is there among the Iſraelites, 30000. of them ſlain, Eli the High Prieſt breaks his neck, his ſons fall in the battel, and the ſtrength and glory were departed from Iſrael!

rael. 1 Sam. 4. The flouriſhing condition of the Seven Churches wither'd, when the Candleſtick was remov'd. When the things of Jeruſalem's peace were hid from their eyes, the deſtruction of their City followed, ſo that one ſtone was not left upon another, becauſe they knew not the time of their viſitation, Luke 19.42,44. Then the Roman Eagles clapt their wings in judgment upon them; then did the Armies of the Enemies bring deſolation upon the points of their ſwords; then was the Temple filled with the blood of the Worſhippers, which had been formerly conſecrated in a way of mercy by the blood of Sacrifices; then were carcaſſes heaped one upon another, and the Survivors led in chains to a miſerable captivity, or a diſgraceful death. What a waſted Wilderneſs is that Land now, deprived of that ancient fruitfulneſs whereby it afforded maintenance to ſuch multitudes, which in David's time were about 130000. fighting men, yet thought by ſome not much bigger than Yorkſhire! When the Goſpel of peace removes, eternal peace goes with it, temporal peace flyes after it; and whatſoever is ſafe, profitable, proſperous, takes wings and attends it.

4. God hath no other intention in the removing the Goſpel, and unchurching a Nation, but the utter ruine and deſtruction of that Nation. Other Judgments may be Medicinal, this is killing: Other Judgments may lance and let out the corrupt matter, this opens a paſſage for life, ſoul, and happineſs: Other Judgments are but Scourges, this is a deadly Wound. In other Judgments God may continue a Father, in this he is no other than an Enemy and a Deſtroyer. Other Judgments are upon our backs, but this is in our bowels. Other Judgments may be for converſion, this takes away the means of converſion. The torments of Hell are not inflicted for the converſion of the damned, nor the ſetting of the Goſpel-Sun for the converſion of a Nation. Other Judgments may be nubecula cito tranſitura, as the Father's ſpeech was of the ſtorm in Julian's time: but this is a covering the Heavens with blackneſs, a pulling the Sun out of the firmament. A Deluge of other Judgments may lift the Ark higher, but this overthrows it. Other Judgments may have their period, this is hardly reverſed. Not one of the Seven Churches reſtor'd to their former beauty to this day. This is an abſolute ſhutting the gates of Heaven againſt a people, and entailing upon them death and curſes.

5. This Judgment is accompanied with ſpiritual Judgments, which are the ſoreſt. The pounding of the Jewel is far worſe, and of greater loſs than the breaking the Casket. The Judgment of being given up to our hearts luſts, to ſenſuality, pride, hardneſs of heart, deluſions to believe a lye, are the ſoreſt Judgments; they are like poyſon in the ſoul, that will never leave till it hath eaten out the Vitals. There ſhall then be no divorce between men and their idols, Hoſ. 4. 11. Your Daughters ſhall commit whoredome, and your Spouſes ſhall commit adultery, i. e. Spiritual Adultery and Idolatry. When the check of Idolatry is gone, the fury of that Luſt will rage.

USE.

Doth God often remove the goſpel upon provocations, as the ſevereſt Judgment he can inflict upon an unworthy people? Then

1. Be afraid of this judgment. How do we know but that God hath limited the preaching of the Goſpel, and the ſtanding of the Candleſtick in this and that place, only for a time; and when that is expired, it may be carried to another place? We ſee it hath been ſo with others. If he hath not ſpared the Natural branches, nor the Church next the primitive, nay thoſe Churches where the Goſpel was plantedby the Apoſtles, what reaſon have we to think he ſhould ſpare us, who have long ago diſcarded primitive Diſcipline, and are in a fair way to throw away primitive Doctrine after it? Is England better than Jeruſalem and Epheſus? Are the Priviledges we enjoy a bar to the removal of it? Are our Priviledges greater than thoſe Churches which were planted by the Apoſtles had? Yet the hand of God hath ſhaken them off. Did not the Jews oppoſe their deſcent from Abraham, to whom the promiſes were made, and the glory of their Temples, as an invincible ſhield againſt all the threatnings of deſtruction by the Prophets, as tho God had been ſhut up in their Temple, and ſo enamoured on the beauty of that Structure, that he could not have the heart to leave them? But are they not rejected, and the Gentiles received in their room? Is not that which was once the glory of their Nation, and the wonder of the World, many an Age ſince fallen to the ground, and mouldred to duſt? What tho the Goſpel be not yet gone? That ſin may lye at the door which is meritorious of its departure. Gods patience doth ſtill laſt, but will it always laſt? The Goſpel may ſhine bright one day, and be eclipſed the next hour. The Jews might ſay with confidence, Our Temple yet ſtands, till they heard the report of the Roman Eagles marching towards them. The Sun ſhone very bright that day Sodom was burned. The preaching the Goſpel in a plentiful manner, is a ſign of Judgment where there is unfruitfulneſs under it. Was not the Goſpel preacht to Jeruſalem by the beſt Preachers of it that ever were, the Son of God, and the Apoſtles after him, not many years before the deſtruction of that City? God is quick in his judgments when the Goſpel is contemned. The black, red, and pale Horſe, Plague, War, and Famine, followed juſt upon the white Horſe, to cut off ſuch as would not be conquered by him that ſate on him, Rev. 6.2, &c. The Sun ſhines brighteſt many times when it is neareſt ſetting. I muſt confeſs I am of the opinion, That the Goſpel will never be perfectly and totally taken away from theſe Weſtern parts of the World. It hath born up its head for many Ages within the ſcent of Rome, in thoſe of Piemont, notwithſtanding all endeavours to extinguiſh it. The ſlaying of the Witneſſes, or the two Prophets, which perhaps is not far off, is not a corporal, but a political death. Their dead bodies would not then be ſuffered to lye in the ſtreets three years and a half (which we muſt underſtand by the three days and a half, Rev. 11.9.) and the reſurrection of them, the returning of the ſpirit of life into them, is not to be meant of the reſurrection of their bodies, but the reſurrection of their Offices; which political ſlaying is to be not long before the fall of the tenth part of the City, i. e. Rome; that City being the tenth part in greatneſs now of what it was anciently. And before the Fall of Babylon the everlaſting Goſpel ſhall be publiſht with more efficacy than in many years before, v. 13. And therefore I think the Goſpel will never totally depart, tho it may for a while be much obſcured. And I cannot but mind you of an obſervation a Jewiſh Writer hath of the Lamps in the Temple *, That tho ſome of them went out in the night, yet the Weſtern Lamp was always found burning. The Lamps were repreſentations of the Goſpel, and this might ſignifie the perpetuity of the Goſpel in the Weſtern parts of the world, when we ſee it is extinguiſht, or at leaſt burns very dim in moſt of the Eaſtern parts. Yet a great Eclips I fear; the interpoſition of a black Moon between us and the Sun, an Antichriſtian ſmoke out of the bottomleſs pit to darken the Sun and the Air. In the deſcription of the Sardian Church, Rev. 3.1,2,3. which is the ſtate of the Church where we are, Chriſt ſpeaks of decays coming on them, with ſome ſharp ſcourge, but doth not threaten the removal of the Candleſtick. And may we not have juſt reaſon to fear it? to fear, I ſay, a Judgment like this of removing the Goſpel, the removal of it in part? Bethel, when Jacob laid his head there, was a place where Angels went up and down in viſion; afterwards it was changed into Bethaven, where Calves and Devils were worſhipped, when Jeroboam ſway'd the Scepter.

* Kimchi in 1 Sam. 3. ited by Lightfoot Temple Chap. 14. S. 4. p. 83.

(1.) Is not our prophaneſs a juſt ground of our fear? Is there not more wickedneſs found amongſt us where the glorious Goſpel hath ſhined, than among them that live under the fogs of the Turkiſh Alchoran? Have not our fruits been grapes of Sodom, and cluſters of Gomorrah? Have not many that have been lifted up to Heaven by the preſence of the Goſpel, walked as if they had the ſeal of Hell in their foreheads? A fulneſs of iniquity makes the Harveſt ripe, and fit for the Sickle, Joel 3. 13. Why may we not fear the clouding of the Goſpel, as well as we have heard of Moſes his breaking of the Tables of the Law when he found a people given to luxury, ſenſuality, and idolatry? When Eli the Prieſt is remiſs, and Phineas his Son is prophane, when there is little care of the true Worſhip of God, and no cenſures for prophaneſs of life, is not the fruit of this an Ichabod, the departure of the glory from Iſrael? 1 Sam. 4. 21. What can be expected, when the puniſhment of prophaneſs is neglected, and the practice of piety hath been diſcouraged? When the Jewiſh Vineyard brought forth wild grapes, God commanded the clouds to rain no more upon it, Iſa. 5.6.

(2.) Is not the ſlighting of the means of grace a juſt ground of this fear? When reformations have not anſwered calls, nor improvement anſwered mercies conferred; when we have fought againſt God with his own gifts, and contemned that rich mercy we cannot want without ruine. Doth not every mans obſervation witneſs, that this contempt of the Goſpel hath been a National ſin in thoſe frequent and repeated endeavours to ſuppreſs the purity of it, and tire out the profeſſors thereof; and as a great man ſaith, they had rather part with the goſpel, than part with a rag. And is it not to be obſerved, that in many of thoſe places where the Goſpel was powerfully preached in our memories, the very ſence of it ſeems to be worn out? What can be expected, when children throw a precious commodity in the dirt, but that the Parents ſhould take it away, and lay it in another place, and laſh them too for their vanity? God will not obtrude the Goſpel long againſt mens wills. When the Gadarens deſired Chriſt to depart from their coaſts, Chriſt granted their wiſh, and turned his back. When there is no delight in the Word, Sabbath, Goſpel, then comes a Famine of the Word, Amos 8. 5. After Chriſt had pronounced a Wo upon Bethſaida, Mat. 11. 21. tho he came afterwards to the Town, and had the opportunity of curing a blind man, he would not do it in the Town, and commanded him after he was reſtored, not to go into the town, nor tell it to any inhabitants of it, Mark 8. 22, 26. He would ſpill no water upon that ground he had curs'd. We ſhall know God, if we follow on to know the Lord. If we then neglect the knowledg of God, which is the end of the Goſpel, to what purpoſe ſhould means of knowledg continue among us? God will not ſuffer the waters of life to run there, where he ſees they will altogether run waſte: The Goſpel hath too much worth, and the Honour of God is too much intereſted in it, to leave it expoſed to the injuries of men, without revenging it.

(3.) And what ſhall I ſay of the barrenneſs of the Churches Womb? How few real converts are there brought forth of the Churches Womb, and nurſt upon the Churches Knees? God ſeems to have written barrenneſs upon her Womb, and drineſs upon her Breaſts. Doth not ignorance ſway where before the Goſpel triumphed? When the ground yields but a faint increaſe, and anſwers not the coſt and labour of the husbandman, he lays it fallow. The abatement of the powerful workings of the ſpirit is a Preſage of a removal or dimming the light in the Candleſtick. When God withdraws gifts from his Miniſters, and the Spirit from the hearers, 'tis a ſign he will take away that lamp into which he will pour no more Oyl.

May we not add to this, the Apoſtacy of the Age. Where is the old Primitive Spirit, I had almoſt ſaid Puritan Spirit, that ſincere love to all the Truths of the Goſpel, that valuation of all its Ordinances? What generous deſigns are taken up to glorifie and propogate it? Here is pride, and worldlineſs, like Pharaohs lean kine devour the fat ones of ſpiritual duties. How ſeldom have we a ſence of God, an Eſtimation of Chriſt, when we ſpeak of him?

(4.) And may not the errors in the Nation, ſtep in as the occaſion of our fears? Not little petty errors, but errors about the foundation, when the Doctrine of Juſtification is not only denied, but ſcoft at, a doctrine which as it was owned or oppoſed, was deſervedly accounted in the firſt times of the reformation, Articulus ſtantis & cadentis Eccleſiæ.

(5.) What ſhould I ſpeak of the diviſions amongſt us? Theſe preceded the ruin of the Jews, and made way for the Fall of the ſeven Churches of Aſia. By theſe did Rome grow to that height, as to put a vail upon the Goſpel, and in moſt places to extinguiſh it. The Concord of the ancient Chriſtians was the cauſe of the Flouriſhing progreſs and increaſe of the goſpel; when they began to ſcuffle, their feuds roſe to ſuch a height, as threw down the candle which gave them light; and ruined that which the Union of the former Chriſtians had ſtrongly built. *When Children fall out and fight about the Candle, the Parents come and take it away, and leave them to divide their differences in the dark. We may juſtly fear God will take away that light which we quarrel by, inſtead of walking and working by. * Fuller.

6. May

(6.) May we not conſider alſo the death of the ableſt Miniſters as a ſad prognoſtick? Sometimes indeed the removal of ſignal Inſtruments portends a nearneſs of ſome great appearance of God. When the People were upon the skirts of Canaan, firſt Aaron, and then Moſes are ſnatcht away; But there were others to ſucceed in their room, a zealous Phineas was left behind Aaron, and a believing and couragious Joſhua ſucceeded Moſes. Many good men may do things offenſive to God, and the work of their Generation; for which cauſe God will not let them live to ſee the bleſſings he is bringing upon a People. But, alas! it is oftner a ſign of an approaching Judgment. When the Lord gives out his word, great is the company of them that publiſh it, Pſ.68.11. When the Lord will remove his Word, ſmall is the company of them that publiſh it, till at laſt not one labourer may be left, becauſe God will not have a Harveſt to gather in, but leave the place as a wild field to ravenous Beaſts, and the Fowls of the Air. Methuſalem is taken away juſt before the deluge. And Ambroſe his head was ſcarce cold in his Grave before the Goths invaded and waſted Italy. It was obſerved by the Jews, That while they were in Gods favour, before the Sun of one Righteous man ſet, the Sun of another Righteous man did ariſe. Before Moſes his Sun ſet, Joſhua's Sun aroſe; Before Eli's Sun ſet, Samuel's Sun aroſe; and this, they ſay, is the meaning of that place, 1 Sam. 3. 9. That before the lamp of God went out, the Spirit of Prophecy came upon Samuel. Is it thus with us? Doth a new Spring equal the old Stock that are gone? How few do poſſeſs a Prophets Spirit among them that wear a Prophets Garment?

We may well therefore fear an Eclipſe of the Goſpel; and many eyes may not ſee the emerging of it out of that Eclipſe. 'Tis worth our conſideration, That when the ſpies that were ſent to Canaan returned, and gave a good report of the Land, the common multitude would not believe them, they would return back to Egypt; and tho they had been laſht for their murmuring, yet after this provocation, and the ſlighting the good Land, and the perfection of the deliverance in the poſſeſſing of Canaan, God ſwore the deſtruction of that Generation, Numb. 14. 21, 22, 23. (tho becauſe of the Word paſt, he did not deprive their Poſterity of the enjoyment of the Promiſed Land;) and God never left, till he had ſwept away that Generation, before the People came to Canaan.

2. USE.

If the removal of the Goſpel be ſo great a judgment, we have reaſon to bleſs God for its continuance ſo long among us. What a grace is it, that God hath drawn us out of the depths of error and folly, wherein other Nations have been plunged ſo long a time! How mercifully hath God indulged us that, which Thouſands of Heathens have wanted, and do to this day! Many in the World never enjoyed it, and many that have had it, have now loſt it. We have been like Gideon's fleece, wet, while moſt of the World have been dry. He hath nouriſhed us with Heavenly Manna, making it to fall every day at our gates, without putting us to much labour to gather it. That ever God ſhould vouchſafe a Light to direct us, who are deſcended from a race of firſt Pagan, and then Popiſh Idolaters, plunged in ſuperſtition! How criminal will our ingratitude be, if we have not lively reſentments of his immenſe Goodneſs! God hath yet Rained upon us, and not upon many of our Neighbours, who are under the thickneſs of Popiſh Fogs. We are yet in the way where his bleſſings be, and where his Heavenly Manna often falls. How deplorable would our caſe have been, if we had been ſtarved for want of Food? Had the Sun been extinguiſht, and the Stars put out, and our reſidence had been in a gloomy and doleſom World, ignorance might have be-miſted our minds, and an implicit faith, we know not in what, have hood-winkt us to damnation; our Bibles might have been as ſealed Books, and a crime as bad as Atheiſm ſo much as to peer into the Word of God. Traditions might have been mingled with the Oracles of God, whereby the Wiſdom of God would have been blemiſht; the Merits of Chriſt might have been mated with the merits of men, whereby the grace of God would have been dim'd; and worſhip given to Idols and Images, whereby the Glory of God would have been rifled. What a raviſhing mercy is it, that our brains have not been knockt out by St. Peter's

St. Peter's ſucceſſor? That God hath hitherto continued our preſervation, when the Seal of the fiſher had ratified our deſtruction? Anti Chriſtianiſm leaves men in thick darkneſs. 'Tis the Goſpel diſpels our ignorance, and diſperſeth the beams of ſaving knowledg. 'Tis this which reſcues you from deſpair, by ſhowing you the Doctrine of Juſtification, which Heathens could never attain to, and Anti-Chriſtianiſm would fain expunge out of the World. 'Tis the Goſpel acquaints you with the fulneſs of the ſatisfaction of Chriſt; whereas Anti Chriſtianiſm would fright you with a pretended fire of Purgatory, to empty your Purſes, and defeat your Heirs. The Goſpel teaches you to worſhip God only, whereas Anti-Chriſtianiſm would divert your prayers to Saints, perhaps to St. Garnet, and St. Faux, ſaints of a new ſtamp, and ſaints of ſo bad a hew, that a ſober man would never admit to be his ſervants. 'Tis the Goſpel that fills you with peace, that ſettles you upon the baſis of an infinite ſatisfaction of the Redeemer, that elevates you in a ſincere belief, not only above the fears of a pretended Purgatory, but of a real Hell. 'Tis the Goſpel that puts you upon a real ſanctification, a mortification of luſt by the Power of Chriſts death, and the grace of his Spirit, not by bodily torturings whereby the Soul may be rendred unfit for its proper function in worſhip. 'Tis the Goſpel that directs us in an inward holineſs of heart, and frees us from being painted Tombs and gilded Sepulchres. How much ought we to bleſs God for the continuance of this Goſpel among us!

3. It ſhould teach us to improve the Goſpel while we enjoy it. The time of the Goſpel Revelation is the time of working. Good entertainment, and good improvement invites the Goſpel to ſtay; ill uſage drives it out of doors. * God hath allowed us his Goſpel, and ſet his Candleſtick among us, but not left it to our diſcretion to do with it what we pleaſe. He hath given it to us, as he did the Angel to the Iſraelites, to comfort and conduct them, Exod. 23. 20, 21. but with a caution not to deſpiſe and provoke him, becauſe his Name was in him. Let us improve the Goſpel-diſpenſation to the getting a Goſpel-Nature. 'Tis not enough to be within the viſible Ark, ſo was a curſed Cham. Let us not receive the Grace of God in vain, but adorn the Goſpel by a Goſpel ſpirit and a Goſpel-practice, and walk as Children of Light. Let us not trample it under our feet, but put our Souls under the efficacy of it, and get from it the fore-taſtes of a Heavenly and Everlaſting Life. Let us not loiter while the Sun ſhines, leſt we be be-nighted, be-wildred, and miſled into quagmires and puddles by ſome Ignis fatuus. We cannot command the Sun to ſtand ſtill and attend our pleaſure: It will go its courſe according to the Word of its Governour, and liſtens not to the follies of men, nor ſtays for their loiterings. Let not an Anti-Chriſtian principle reign in your hearts: Implicite Faith is againſt the improvement of the Goſpel. There is as much of it in practiſe in England, as there is of principle in Rome. How many believe as their Church, or Church-men believe, without being able to render a reaſon why they do ſo? The Goſpel was given for every man to ſtudy and embrace; to embrace knowingly, not blindly. If we do not increaſe in knowledg and grace by it, we anticipate the Judgment of God; we remove that from us voluntarily, which God accounts the removal of judicially to be the moſt deplorable miſery. If we do not improve and hold faſt what we have received and heard, the coming of Chriſt in a way of revenge will be ſudden, like a Thief in the Night, and we ſhall not know what hour he will come upon us till we feel the ſtroke. I mean not by death, but ſome ſore ſcourge; for ſo he ſpeaks to the Church of Sardis, the ſtate wherein the Church is at this day, Rev. 3. 3.

* Claud de nopces. pag. 179.

4. Let us prevent by repentance and prayer the Removal or Eclipſe of the Goſpel. The loſs of your Eſtates, the maſſacring of your Children, the chains of Captivity, are a thouſand times more deſirable than this deplorable Calamity. Eſtates may be recovered, new Children raiſed, Fetters may be knocked off, new Houſes may be reared upon the aſhes of the conſumed ones, the poſſeſſion of a Country regained; but it is ſeldom the Goſpel returns when carried away upon the wings of the wind. God indeed is intereſted in the preſervation of Religion and a Church, but not in this or that particular Church, not among this or that particular people: rather than want one, he will raiſe up ſtones to be Children to Abraham. As he will not have his Bleſſings abuſed, ſo he will not have his Goſpel extinguiſht in all parts of the World, or all parts of this Weſtern World. But doth this ſecure us from any great Eclipſe? What if God will not remove his Goſpel? may he not ſuffer many to be infected with Popery? May not many of your Friends, Children, be tainted with this Leproſy, that may prove incurable in them? What if there be a likelihood that it will not endure long? If it ſhall enter upon the Stage, muſt we not therefore endeavour to prevent it? Prophecy is the rule of our fore-ſight, precept is the rule of our duty. What if God will not remove the Goſpel? may he not bring a ſharp perſecution? Is not the Enemy at our door? The Rod ſhaken over our heads? Have we not gathered the twigs of it our ſelves, and formed a ſcourge for our own backs? Did we not firſt let in the Serpents head? and what ſhould we expect but that he will get in his whole Body? What can we expect, but that God ſhould begin his Judgments at his own Houſe, and ſcrape the ſides of his Sanctuary that have been defiled with ſo much filthineſs? Let us therefore meet God in an humble reforming poſture, and lay hold on his ſtrength; conſider where we left him, and do our firſt work, whence we are fallen, and fallen by our own fault and peeviſhneſs, fallen from a zeal for God, a national endeavour for the propagation of the Goſpel. Let us deſire him, as the Diſciples that were going to Emmaus did Chriſt, Luke 24. 29. Lord abide with us, for the evening begins to come, and the day is far ſpent. Our Saviour did ſo, and gave them his Bleſſing before he vaniſhed again out of their ſight. God may deal ſo with us, and leave ſome notable Bleſſing with us, till he comes again to pitch his Sanctuary in the midſt of us for evermore, as the Promiſe is, Ezek. 37. 28.

Abraham

Let us therefore ſeek to him, chiefly to him, only to him, he only can remove the Candleſtick, he only can put his Hand as a bar upon the Light. Men may be inſtrumental, but it is Chriſt only removes the Candleſtick, and he only can maintain it againſt the puffs of Men and Devils. He hath the Enemies in a chain, and the full command of their breath. Place no confidence in men; ſome may have ſome power to give ſome relief, and will not. Others may have Will to help, and cannot. If we maintain our feud with God, he will bid the Goſpel Go, and it ſhall go. If we make our peace with him, he will bid the Goſpel ſtay, and it ſhall ſtay. As he hath Angels to bring, ſo he hath Angels to carry away the Everlaſting Goſpel. Remember the threatning in the Text is not abſolute; there is an elſe, and an except, to mitigate it. Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy firſt works, or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and remove thy candleſtick out of his place, except thou repent.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF MERCY RECEIVED.

Pſal. LVI. 12, 13.

Thy vows are upon me, O God: I will render praiſe unto thee. For thou haſt delivered my ſoul from death: wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?

THIS Pſalm was pen'd by David when he was in a notable Affliction, when the Philiſtines took him in Gath. David had fled from the fury of Saul to Abimelech, otherwiſe Achiſh, King of Gath, a City of the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. 21. 10, 12, 13. where he changed his behaviour. Whether this was pen'd at the ſame time that the 34 Pſalm was; or before, is uncertain. Perhaps before: for it is ſaid, When they took him in Gath. Tho David fled thither for the preſervation of his life, yet being known to be that famous Perſon who had been celebrated in the Songs of the Iſraelites, as ſlaying his ten thouſands in the ſlaughter of Goliah, 1 Sam. 21. 11. he might perhaps be apprehended as a ſuſpected perſon, coming thither upon deſign; or elſe from deſire to revenge themſelves upon him for the ſlaughter of Goliah, who was their Country-man and Citizen; for he was of Gath, 1 Sam. 17. 23. And ſome appearance there is that it was this, by Achiſh his ſpeech to his ſervants, 1 Sam. 21. 14. Lo, you ſee the man is mad: wherefore have you brought him to me? Howſoever it was, he was in ſome trouble; Yet ſtill keeps his Faith and Hope as an Anchor fixed on God, Verſe 3. What time I am afraid, I will truſt in thee. And his aſſurance of deliverance upon his prayer, Verſe 9. When I cry unto thee, then ſhall mine enemies turn back: this I know, for God is for me. In God will I praiſe his word: in the Lord I will praiſe his word. In God have I put my truſt: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me: and ſtirs up himſelf to thankfulneſs upon the remembrance of former Mercies, Verſe 12. Thy vows, &c. and to confidence for future, Verſe 13. For thou haſt delivered, &c.

You have here,

1. The Commemoration of former Mercies: Thou haſt delivered.
2. The confidence of future. Wilt not thou?
3. The end of all: to walk before God in the Light of the living.

Vows. Thy vows are upon me, O God. Paſſively, Vows made to God, not by God; or the Obligations of thoſe Vows and Prayers which I have made, and upon which I have received Anſwers. Sacrifices of Thankſgiving were called Vows, as having been vowed to God upon the want, and to be paid upon the receit of Mercy, Lev. 1. 0. If the ſacrifice that is offered be a vow. Thy Vows are upon me; the fruit of my Vows, ſo that I ſtand indebted to God for the return of praiſe.

Thou haſt delivered. He underſtands ſome great danger, wherein he had ſunk, had not God ſtood by him. And from a greater mercy, the deliverance of his Soul from death, argues for a leſs, the keeping his feet from falling.

That I may walk before God in the light of the living. By light of the living is meant life, which is called a being enlightned with the light of the living, Job 33. 30. Sometimes Eternal life in Heaven, John 8. 12. he that follows me ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ſhall have the light of life.

To walk before God. To walk obediently in the ſight of God, with a reſpect to his preſence; a walking unto all well-pleaſing. This is the laſt argument in the Pſalm, whereon he builds his ſtrongeſt plea, as if he knew not what to urge if this ſhould fail him; as if he ſhould have ſaid, Lord, I have had experience of thy Wiſdom in contriving, thy Power in effecting, thy Mercy in beſtowing deliverance upon me, thy Goodneſs in anſwering my Vows and Prayers. Thou haſt delivered from death, a danger as great and unavoidable as death it ſelf. Oh Lord, art thou not the ſame that thou wert? Art thou not ſtill as wiſe to deſign, and as gracious to confer further Mercy? Wilt thou not as certainly alſo deliver my feet from falling? The one contains his experience, the other the inference or concluſion he draws from it.

2. Mercies received are encouragements to ask, and ſtrong grounds to hope for the mercies we want.

For the Firſt, Mercies received are in a ſpecial manner to be remembred. This has been the method of Gods people. David entitles Pſalm 38. a Pſalm to bring to remembrance his afflictions; much more then his comforts, Pſal. 77. 10, 11. I will remember the years of the right hand of the moſt High: I will remember the works of the Lord. Paul remembred a manifeſtation of God to him fourteen years before, 2 Cor. 12. 1. If God treaſures up our tears, much more ſhould we treaſure up his Mercies: As Lovers keep the Love-tokens of thoſe they affect. God hath a file forour prayers, we ſhould have the like for his anſwers. He hath a book of remembrance to record our afflictions, and believing diſcourſes of him, Mal. 3. 16. Why ſhould not we then have a Regiſter for his gracious communications to us? Remembrance is the chief work of a Chriſtian; remembrance of ſin to cauſe a ſelf-abhorrency, Ezek. 20. 43. There ſhall you remember your ways, and loathe your ſelves; the remembrance of God for a deep humility, Pſal. 77. 3. I remembred God and was troubled. Remembrance of his Name for keeping his Law, Pſal. 119. 55. Remembrance of his Judgments of old for comfort in afflictions, Pſal. 119. 52. and remembrance of Mercy for the eſtabliſhment of faith, Iſa. 57. 11. Of whom haſt thou been afraid, and haſt not remembred me? 'Tis obſerved by ſome, that Shuſhan the Royal Seat of the Perſian, was pictured upon the Eaſt-gate of the Temple, to mind them of the wonder of Purims, Eſth. 9. 26. the deliverance they had in that place from Haman by Gods ordering Mordecai's advancement. Jacob changed the Name of Luz into Bethel, that the new Name might be a memorial of Gods comfortable Apparition to him, both to himſelf and his poſterity, Gen. 28. 19.

They are to be remembred, becauſe

1. They are the mercies of God: They are diſpenc'd out of the Treaſury of his Goodneſs, wrought by the Art of his Wiſdom, effected by the Arm of his Power: Chriſt

Chriſt evidenced this by praying to his Father for the mercies he wanted, by bleſſing him as the Fountain of any mercy received. The great dominion Chriſt hath, is from God; 'tis firſt, Aſk of me, Pſal. 2. 8. Yea, tho wrought by means. The woman doth touch the hem of Chriſts garment, but the healing virtue ſprings from Chriſt. Men may ſpread their Nets, toil and labour nights, and days, and years, and catch nothing, unleſs Chriſt ſends the fiſh into the net, Luke 5. 5, 6. Our works are in the hands of God, Eccleſ. 9. 5. Tho our works, yet in Gods hand, he pours forth his bleſſing, he gives ſucceſs. The firſt link of the Chain of Mercy is in Gods hand. If we do not then remember them and him in them, we deny his Providence and Goodneſs, and pay that to the ſervant, which is due to the Lord. We ſhould remember his love more than wine, Cant. 1. 4. His Love in Mercies more than the choiceſt delights of earth. No gift ſo ſmall, but is a meſſenger from the great God, and hath the badge of his name upon it.

2. Mercies purchaſed by Chriſt. Mercies dear bought by the beſt blood that ever was in the world. The print of Chriſts Nails are upon every one of his bleſſings, the leaſt as well as the greateſt. Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price, Cor. 6. 19. You and your bodies, and the preſervation of your bodies, you and what you have, you and your mercies, and your comforts, are all purchaſed by another, and freely conferred upon you; worthy therefore of remembrance.

3. Mercies beneficial to us. We ſhould certainly remember thoſe things whereof we carry the ſenſible marks upon us.

2. How we ſhould remember them.

(1.) Admiringly and thankfully. We ſhould obſerve Gods Mercies, not only as works but as wonders, Pſal. 77. 11. I will remember the works of the Lord, ſurely I will remember his wonders of old, to admire them and the Author. Old antedated Mercies, as well as freſh, ſhould fill us with new aſtoniſhments; not a ſpeculative but an elevating remembrance, to cry out with raiſed ſpirits, how great God is v. 13. who is ſo great a God as our God! Paul never looked back upon Gods Mercies in his converſion without a new admiration, 1 Tim. 1. 12. I thank Jeſus Chriſt our Lord who hath enabled me. This was not enough, it was a peg too low for ſo great a Mercy, till he riſes up into an high Doxology, v. 17, Now unto the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, the only wiſe God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. What an Heaven ſparkles here in Pauls language ſo like that of Glory! Shall we not have thankful frames in the remembrance of them, when we ſhould ſtand ready with praiſe to meet every mercy in its firſt motion, Pſal. 65. 1. Praiſe waits for thee in Sion. Mercy in its firſt ſtep ſhould not find us a minute without a thankful frame. As God waits for an opportunity to be gracious, we ſhould wait with praiſe in our mouths to be thankful to him; a volly of praiſe ſhould ſtand ready to meet a ſhower of mercy. They did not think amiſs, that aſſerted a main part of Religion to conſiſt in Admiration; this had been the work in innocency. Many other duties have been introduced by a fallen ſtate, this is an entrance into a ſtate of innocency by reaſſuming the duty of that ſtate, an entrance into the ſtate of heaven by beginning the work of it; this is the eternal Religion. Not a Bullock nor a Goat was to be killed for a mans own table in the Wilderneſs, but they were to bring it to to the door of the tabernacle, and offer an offering to the Lord, if not, they were accounted murtherers, Lev. 17. 3, 4. God muſt be acknowledged in all.

(2.) Affectionately. What a deep print of love did the kindneſs of Chriſt ſtamp upon many whoſe Diſeaſes he cured upon the earth! We then rightly remember them, when they raiſe choice affections to God in us. It was Gods promiſe, Hoſ. 13. 4. Yet I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, thou ſhalt know no other God but me: Love no God, acknowledg no God but me, becauſe I have brought you out of the Land of Egypt, and maintained you by a conſtant ſucceſſion of merciful ſtreams of Benefits. We begin to love God by the knowledg Faith gives us of him; but the experience of his Mercy renders him more amiable, and the conſideration of it ſhould render our love more lively. Our very common Mercies ſhould not be thought of without affection, much leſs our ſpiritual. The deliverance of our bodies from death, deſerves a return of love; much more the redemption of our ſouls; Remember them warmly, ſo as to kindle a flame of love: That is not properly remembred, that works not a ſutable impreſſion in the review of it; he rather forgets his ſin, that remembers it without a diſaffection to it; and he his Mercies, that thinks of them without being raiſed in affection to God by them.

3. Obediently and fruitfully. David upon the remembrance of it, would walk before God in the land of the living. They are given to encourage us in his ſervice, and ſhould be therefore remembred to that end. Rain deſcends upon the earth, not that it might be more barren, but more fertile. We are but Stewards, the Mercies we enjoy, are not our own, and therefore to be improved for our Maſters Service. Great Mercies ſhould engage to great Obedience. God begins the Decalogue with a memorial of that Mercy in bringing the Iſraelites out of Egypt, Exod. 20. 2. I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt. How affectionately doth the Pſalmiſt own his relation to God as his Servant, when he conſidered how God had looſed his bonds! Pſal. 116. 16. Oh Lord, truly I am thy ſervant, I am thy ſervant, thou haſt looſed my bonds; the remembrance of thy Mercy ſhall make me know no relation but that of a Servant to thee. When we remember what wages we have from God, we muſt withal remember that we owe more ſervice, and more livelineſs in ſervice to him. Duty is but the ingenuous conſequent of Mercy. 'Tis irrational to encourage our ſelves in our way to Hell by a remembrance of heaven, to foſter a liberty in ſin by a conſideration of Gods Bounty. When we remember all that we have or are, is the gift of Gods liberality, we ſhould think our ſelves obliged to honour him with all that we have, for he is to have honour from all his Gifts. 'Tis a ſign we aimed at Gods Glory in the begging Mercy, when we alſo aim at Gods Glory in the enjoying of it. 'Tis a ſign love breathed the remembrance of a Mercy into our hearts, when at the ſame time it breaths a revolution into us to improve it. 'Tis not our Tongues, but our Lives muſt praiſe him; Mercies are not given to one member, but the whole man. Thanks without Obedience is but Flattery, 'tis but Hail Maſter, while we crown him with Thorns.

(4.) Humbly. Remembrance of free Mercies ſhould not be attended with a forgetfulneſs of our own ſinfulneſs; nor encreaſe our Pride, but our humiliation. When Peter ſaw ſo great a ſtock of Fiſh driven into the Net, he had the loweſt thoughts of himſelf, Luk. 5. 8. He fell down at Jeſus Knees, ſaying, I am a ſinful man, O Lord. What a gracious frame is that, when the remembrance of Mercy brings us upon our knees to a humble confeſſion of Sin? Kindneſs makes wicked men more proud, and good men more broken. We are uſually as Lead melted in the fire of affliction, and hardned in the freſh air of Proſperity, and grow unactive; but let it be otherwiſe.

(5.) In the Circumſtances. As Circumſtances adorn our actions, ſo they beautifie Gods Mercies, the manner, the time, &c. Every line in Mercy owns God as the Author as well as the whole maſs. Mercy beaten to pieces, as ſpice, will yield a ſweeter ſcent than in the lump. Remember what miſery præceded the Mercy; as it made the Mercy the Sweeter, ſo it will make the remembrance of it more ſavory, Hoſ. 2. 15, I will give her her vineyard from thence, that is, from the Wilderneſs; then ſhall ſhe ſing as in the day of her youth. Thy heart ſhall meditate terror, Iſa. 33. 18. Thou ſhalt conſider what thy troubles were, and what the frame of thy heart was, and what thy vows and reſolutions were in thy diſtreſs. 'Tis good to call to mind what deſires, what ferveney in prayer there was before the Mercy came, and upon the remembrance of the Mercy to act the ſame fervor over again.

6. Argumentatively and Fiducially. But this leads to the next Obſervation.

Doct. 2. That Mercies received are encouragements to ask, and ground to hope for the mercies we want. In ſpiritual Bleſſings it certainly holds; they are earneſts of other Bleſſings of the ſame kind, and as it were obligations wherein God binds himſelf to beſtow greater bleſſings hereafter. They are but further confirmations of his promiſe for encouragement of our Faith. As whatſoever is written in Scripture, is for our comfort and our hope, Rom. 15. 4. ſo as much as God hath performed of Scripture to us, is for the ſame end:

In

In Temporal Mercies. God intends them to his people as means to ſettle their faith faſter on him, and make them truſt him in future exigencies. When God commands Jacob to remove to another place, he puts him in mind how he was with him, when he fled from the face of his brother Eſau, Gen. 35. 1. It is an argument Moſes uſed to God, when he was in a great anger againſt the Iſraelites, Numb. 14. 19. Thou haſt forgiven this people from Egypt until now. i. e. Thou haſt preſerved them, notwithſtanding their murmurings. Upon this argument, tho Moſes had uſed others before, God preſently anſwers, I have pardoned according to thy Word. How ready was God to yield to motions of Mercy, when his former kindneſs to them was pleaded? Paul doth thus act faith on God, 2 Cor. 1. 10. Who hath delivered us from ſo great a death, and doth deliver; what is the conſequence? in whom we truſt that he will yet deliver. And the Pſalmiſt makes this a Medium to tie his two petitions together, Pſal. 4. 1. Hear me when I call, thou haſt enlarged me when I was in diſtreſs, have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer, and expreſſeth his confidence from his experience of former deliverances, that he ſhould have a quick anſwer at any time. v. 3. The Lord will hear me, when I call upon him.

For,

1. There is as great an ability in God when we are in need of new mercies, as there was when he gave former ones. Nay as much as there was from eternity. He is not a God whoſe arm is ſhortned, that is not what he was, or ſhall ever ceaſe to be what he is, Iſa. 59. 2. Is my hand ſhortned at all that I cannot redeem, or have I no power to deliver? He is always I am that I am. There is no diminution of light in the Sun, no more than there was at the firſt moment of its Creation, and the laſt man upon the earth ſhall enjoy as much of it as we do now. No more doth the Father of lights loſe by imparting it to others. Thus we light many Candles at a Torch, yet it burns never the dimmer. Standing waters may be drawn dry, but a Fountain cannot. God is a ſpring, this day and to morrow Jehovah unchangeable. The God of Iſaac is not like Iſaac that had one bleſſing and no more, he hath as much now as he had the firſt moment that mercy ſtreamed from him to his creature, and the ſame for as many as ſhall believe in Chriſt to the end of the world. Nay, the more we receive from God in a way of faith, the more God hath for us. A believers harveſt for preſent mercies is his ſeed-time for more. The more Mercies he reaps, the more hopes of future mercy he hath. Gods mercies when full blown, ſeed again and come up thicker. Can the Creature want more than the everlaſting fountain can ſupply? Can the Creatures indigency be greater than Gods ſufficiency? What an irrational way of arguing was that Pſal. 78. 20. He ſmote the rock, that the waters guſhed out; can he give bread alſo, can he provide for his people? As if he that filled their cup, could not ſpread their table, as if he that had a hidden cellar for their drink, had not a ſecret and as full a cupboard for their meat. Do we want mercies for ſoul and body? Look to the rock whence former mercies were hewen; the ſame fulneſs can ſupply again.

2. There is as much tenderneſs in God as there was before. His Power is more unqueſtionable with us, than his Goodneſs. We think his compaſſions come ſhort of his ability. We queſtion more his will, than his ſtrength, Mat. 8. 2. If thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean. If thou wilt, thou canſt give me mercy as well as before. You may be ſure Chriſt will ſpeak ſtill the ſame language, I will. I will give thee ſpirituals and temporals, ſo far as are good for thee. His bowels can no more be ſtraitned, than his arm is ſhortned; his compaſſions fail not, Lam. 3. 22. All his Attributes are alike eſſential to him: As he cannot but be God, ſo he cannot but be Powerful; he cannot but be true; his Truth lies in pawn for the conſtancy of his good will to them that truſt in him. Let your condition be what it will, there is ſome promiſe to ſuit it; there is a foundation for Faith to beg; and his Truth is engaged to make good one promiſe as well as another: He is a Father, tender Father, ſurpaſſing in tenderneſs all natural affections; no kind Father doth ever tell his child, I will do no more for you; the Heavenly Father will not, who delights more in giving than we do in receiving: Gods love is not as ours, a ſudden paſſion, but a Reſolve of Eternity.

3. There is the ſame ground to beg and believe for mercies we want, as there was for the mercies we have received. We are under the ſame Covenant, the influence of of the ſame Mediator. Should not our faith be more abundant, ſince we have more evidences of the graciouſneſs of God, the prevalency of the Mediator, and ſtability of the Covenant? Was it not upon this account you did plead with God for what you had before? Were not your arguments drawn from Gods Name, his Covenant, his Son? They are arguments that can never want a force while God is God; they are as unanſwerable as ever. Will God diſown his Name, deny his Promiſe, overlook his Son? Doth the Covenant reach only to thoſe mercies we have received? Did Chriſt purchaſe no more? Then indeed our expectations may dolefully flag, we may take our leaves of ever hoping for mercy from him. But his promiſe is for this life, all the parts of it, and for that which is to come. It hath been tried millions of times, and always found ſound, Pſal. 12.6. The word of the Lord is as ſilver tried in a furnace of earth, purified ſeven times: ſeven times, multitudes of times; Seven being a number of perfection: It hath been tried in many furnaces of affliction. 'Tis an everlaſting covenant, Gods Name is his Self, and endures for ever. The blood of Chriſt is of infinite value; the Mediator is the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever; the ſame in his affection to his people; the ſame in his prevalency with God; the plea therefore upon this account, is as firm for all mercies, and for all times; Chriſts blood was fain to pay for the mercies you have received; the mercies we expect to eternity are conveyed to us this way, ſo are the mercies we expect in time. The believers of old had what they had upon theſe accounts: Theſe arguments have always been uſed, and have been of force to prevail; the ſame arguments ſhall always be uſed, and have the ſame efficacy: The covenant, the blood of the covenant, reacheth far beyond what we have, tho it be never ſo great in this world.

4. One mercy in ſpirituals is to no purpoſe without further mercies. God would not lay a foundation, and not build upon it; he is not light and uncertain in his actions: He knew before he gave the firſt ſpiritual mercy, what charge you would be to him; he ſate down and counted all; and he cannot be diſappointed, ſince nothing can happen but what he did foreſee: To what purpoſe ſhould one forgive a debtor a part of the debt, and lay him in priſon for the remainder? To what purpoſe ſhould God begin to heal a leprous ſoul, and take away a part of the Diſeaſe, if he did not intend to maſter all, and expel the fomes of it? To what purpoſe hath God given Chriſt to any, if he did not intend freely to give all things neceſſary with him? Rom. 8. 32. All temporals are but droſs and dung in compariſon of him. Has God been at ſo much charge for you, at the expence of his Sons blood, and did he not ſtick there? What then can limit the mercy of God? Upon theſe accounts then, former mercies, eſpecially ſpiritual, are good arguments to plead with God, and good grounds of hope and truſt in him for future ones.

USE.

1. Take heed of forgetting mercies received. Keep a Catalogue of mercies to quicken your love, wind up your thankfulneſs and encourage your faith. We can remember our ſelves, when we pray for mercy, and forget God, when we receive it, and the mercy it ſelf not long after. We cannot profit by mercies, unleſs we thankfully remember them; direct rays convey not ſo much warmth without reflecting back upon the ſun. God remembers the kindneſs of our youth to him, Jer. 2. 2. Why ſhould not we remember the tenderneſs of his grace to us? Great comforts muſt be eſpecially remembred, they come but ſeldom, Paul had but one ſpecial rapture in fourteen years. Let every new mercy call the old to mind. The mercy of the Lamb put them in mind of of his mercy to Moſes, and the Iſraelites, Rev. 15. 3. Bleſs the Lord from the fountain of Iſrael, Pſal. 68. 26. i.e. from the very firſt mercy. Remember alſo the impreſſions God makes upon your ſouls under the firſt influence of your mercies. Keep them alive and freſh, 'tis a way to procure more from God, when he beholds ſuch valuations of them.

Let us obſerve therefore Gods motions to us in mercy, and ſee how he walks with us, and our motions to God in duty, to ſee how we walk with him, eſpecially in the mercies which are fruits of prayer. Hannah called her ſon, which ſhe had received as an anſwer of prayer, Samuel, that in the hearing the name, ſhe might remember Gods kindneſs.

(1.) Without

(1.) Without a remembrance of them we ſhall be very apt to diſtruſt God, and abate in our love. The death of our experiences is the reſurrection of our diſtruſt. When we write mercies in the ſand, the next wind makes the letters inviſible, and our fears terrible. When the Iſraelites forgot that power that had provided for them, their corruption took heart to expreſs it ſelf in murmuring, Pſal. 79. 19. Can he ſpread a table in the Wilderneſs? If you remember the time when you were caſt down in ſorrow, and found God raiſing you up and embracing you in the arms of a tender love, ſuch a remembrance would not eaſily admit Jealouſies of him into the Room with it; unleſs you have ceaſed to be his followers and given him cauſe to withdraw his care. God breaks not with us till we break with him. When David had drawn a Catalogue of Gods former mercies towards him, he concludes it with a ſurely goodneſs and mercy ſhould follow me all the days of my life, and takes up reſolutions to ſtick to God in holy affections, and I will dwell in the houſe of the Lord for ever, Pſal. 23. 6.

(2.) Without a remembrance of them we cannot ſo well improve them. If we do not remember what talents of mercy we have, how can we imploy them? what account can we give to the ſupreme Lord of whom we received them? An account there muſt be, for God cannot be conceived in reaſon to be careleſs whether his bleſſings were improved, and regardleſs whether the fruit of his mercy loſt or not We are accountable for the mercies received by our Anceſtors, that we have the knowledg of, much more for our own. God brings an Indictment againſt Eli for ſinning againſt the firſt mercy to Aaron, 1 Sam. 2. 17. Did I plainly appear to the houſe of thy fathers, when they were in Egypt in Pharaohs houſe? The debt due from our fathers muſt be payed by the heirs; as we enjoy the profit of them, it is fit we ſhould pay our great Creditor; much more for thoſe immediately beſtowed upon us, ſuperadded to what is derived by ſucceſſion. How can we do either without remembrance? If we forget them, we muſt needs forget the hand that gave them and the gratitude we owe for them, and hereby not only become falſe to our Creator our ſelves, but make his mercies prove falſe to the end for which he ſent them. The end of every mercy is to glorifie God, Pſal. 50. 15. I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me; what glorifying God with forgetfulneſs of what he wrought for us?

(3.) Without a remembrance of them we ſhall not ſo eaſily reſiſt temptations. An ingenuous Spirit under a ſenſe of mercy could not eaſily lend an ear to an enticing temptation, and be drawn to do wickedneſs and ſin againſt the Author of his mercy. Shall I thus requite the Lord, who hath made and eſtabliſht me? Moſes intimates the forgetting this to be the ground of their unworthy uſage of God, Deut. 32. 6. Have I thus learned Chriſt, did mercy drop any ſuch inſtruction into me to ſin? If I had not been a ſubject of his Mercy, I had not now lived to be tempted; and ſhall I live by that mercy to embrace a temptation? Since thou haſt given us ſuch a deliverance as this, ſhall we again break thy commandments? ſaith good Ezra. c. 9. 13, The goodneſs of God is to lead us to repentance, how would the remembrance of it ſtrengthen us againſt a Temptation?

USE.

2. Make uſe of former mercies to encourage your truſt for the future. Was it Gods end in giving us mercies to encourage our jealouſies of his faithfulneſs, or our hopes of his Goodneſs? 'Tis fit we ſhould truſt God upon his bare Word, much more upon a trial of him. If we can ſay, God hath delivered, and therefore he will deliver, why may we not with as good reaſon ſay, we have truſted God, and will truſt him ſtill? We have not only heard, how faithful and good he is, but we have alſo ſeen, known it, found him to be ſo. If after the knowledg of his name we truſt him not, we have a frame contrary to that which ſhould be in all believers, Pſal. 9. 10. they that know thy name will put their truſt in thee. If we truſt him not after mercies received, he may well reproach us for our jealouſie; What? did I ever fail you, did you ſeek my face in vain, have you found me falſe to you; Nay, have I not been good to you above your expectations? What iniquity then is there in me, that you ſhould have any ſuſpicious thoughts of my goodneſs? With what haſt doth David catch at Goliahs ſword, when Abimelech told him there was none but that in the Tabernacle? 1 Sam. 21.

there is none like that, give it me, as having experienced Gods former kindneſs by it. Moſes would ſhew the Rod of God, the Rod whereby he had wrought wonders, when he prayed for the diſcomfiture of Amalek, Exod. 17. 9. as if no mercy could be denied him, when the Rod in his hand pleaded the power and kindneſs of God ſo many times manifeſted by it. And Jehoſhaphats prayer is all made up of pleas from ancient Mercy and promiſes. If we do not improve Mercies this way.

1. God loſeth his glory by us. 'Tis an unreaſonable thing if we will not believe him for his word, yet not to believe him for the works ſake, Joh. 14. 11. believe me for the very works ſake. God muſt be of very low eſteem with us, if he cannot be truſted for his Word, and Deed too. Has God given us many a mercy, and ſhall we have ſuch diſhonourable thoughts as not to truſt him? What excuſe is there for diſtruſt againſt the conſtant ſtream of his care?

2. We loſe the ſweetneſs of mercy. Every mercy looks two ways, it ſatisfieth our preſent want, and is a pledg of a future ſtore. Every flower of the field, every paſſage of Providence in the whole courſe of our lives may yield honey and ſweetneſs. David could never conſider how God had been his help, but he had a new frame of joy in God, Pſal. 63.7. Becauſe thou haſt been my help, therefore in the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoyce.

When ever we find our ſouls dejected, let us remember Gods dealing with us, and with the Pſalmiſt check them, Pſal. 43. 11. Why art thou caſt down, oh my ſoul? What, Oh my ſoul, that haſt had ſo many rich mercies out of the ſtore-houſe of Gods free grace and favour, why art thou diſquieted within me? hope thou in God, for I will yet praiſe him who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

Mortification.

Rom. VIII. 13.

For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall dye; but if ye through the Spirit do mortifie the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

THE Apostle having before spoken of Justification by Christ, and showed the necessity of Sanctification, whereby we indeed resemble the holiness of God, which he shows to be wrought by the Spirit of God, which is the band of Communion between Saints and Christ, who raises them both from sin here, and the grave hereafter; and that we are not debtors to the flesh, that we should follow the suggestions of that; but to the Spirit, to observe his inspirations. He then in the Text backs his Exhortations with a threatning and a promise; A threatning to excite our industry, and a promise to prevent our dejection: You must not imagine you shall be justified without being sanctified; for if you live after the flesh, you shall fall under that eternal death which is due to sin; but if you follow the motions of the Spirit, and endeavour to quench the first sparks of sin, the death of your Bodies shall be an entrance into the happy life of your Soul.

Flesh. Some by flesh understand the state under the Law; others more properly, corrupted Nature; Ye shall die, without hopes of a better life; But if you mortifie the deeds of the body, the deeds of the body of sin, which is elsewhere called the body of death; the first motions to sin, and passionate compliances with sin, which are the springs of corrupt actions. Corrupt Nature is called a body here, Morally, not Physically; it consisting of divers vices, as a body of divers members. Ye shall live; ye shall live more spiritually and comfortably here, and eternally hereafter.

In the words we may observe,

1. A threatning: If ye live after the flesh, you shall die.
2. A Promise: If you through the Spirit do mortifie the deeds of the body, ye shall live. In the promise there is, (1.) The condition. (2.) The reward.

In the condition,

[1.] The Act: mortifie.

[2.] The Object: the deeds of the body. 1. The cause: the body. 2. The effects: the deeds.

[3.] The Agents: ye, and the ſpirit; the principal, the ſpirit; the leſs principal, ye; both conjoyned in the work: ye cannot do it without the Spirit, and the Spirit will not do it without your concurrence with him, and your induſtry in following his motions.

From the Act we may obſerve,

1. Sin is active in the Soul of an unregenerate man. His heart is ſins territory, 'tis there as in its Throne, before the Spirit comes; Mortification ſuppoſes life before in the part mortified; we call not a ſtone dead, becauſe it never had life. Juſtification ſuppoſeth guilt; Sanctification filth; Mortification life preceding thoſe acts.

2. Nothing but the death of ſin muſt content a renewed Soul. The ſentence is irreverſible, die it muſt; no indulgence to be ſhown to it, no lighter puniſhment than death; not the loſs of a member, but the loſs of its life; the Ax muſt be laid to the Root, and the Knife muſt be held to the Throat. The Devils are reſtrained by the Power of God from many ſins, which cannot therefore be ſaid to be mortified. As nothing but the death of Chriſt would ſatisfy the Juſtice of God, ſo nothing but the death of ſin muſt ſatisfy the juſtice of the Soul.

3. Do mortifie; The time preſent. Whence obſerve, as ſin muſt have no pardon, ſo it muſt have no reprieve. No ſuch mercy muſt be extended to it, as to give it a moments breathing. Dangerous Enemies muſt be handled with a quick ſeverity. If we do not preſently kill ſin, it may ſuddenly ſuck out the blood of our Soul.

4. Do mortifie; it notes a continued act; it muſt be a quick and an uninterrupted ſeverity; the Knife muſt ſtill ſtick in the Throat of ſin, till it fall down perfectly dead. Sin muſt be kept down, tho it will rage the more, as a Beaſt with the pangs of death is more deſperate.

2. From the Object obſerve,

1. Mortification muſt be univerſal; not one deed, but deeds; little and great muſt fall under the edg: the brats muſt be daſhed againſt the Wall. Tho the main Battel be routed, yet the wings of an Army may get the victory. There are evil diſpoſitions, depraved habits, corrupt affections; we ſhould not ſpare a neſt of Vipers when we find them, being all equally injurious.

2. All actual ſins are but the ſproutings of Original. The body ſignifies corrupt Nature, deeds are the products of it; all the ſparks iſſue from the Furnace within; the body gives nouriſhment to the members, and the members bring ſupplies to the body. There are outward and inward deeds, acts of the mind, which tho not acts of the natural body, yet are acts of the body of ſin, Gal. 5. 19, 20. hatred, envyings, acts which the Soul may perform, ſeparate from the body.

3. The greateſt object of our revenge is within us. Our Enemies are thoſe of our own Houſe, inbred, domeſtick adverſaries; our anger is then a ſanctified anger when ſet againſt our own ſins. Our Enemy has got poſſeſſion of our Souls, which makes the work more difficult. An Enemy may better be kept out, than caſt out, when he has got poſſeſſion. Sin is within us, and is always preſent with us, Rom. 7. 21. it lies in ambuſh for us in the beſt duties, and ſtarts out upon every occaſions when we would do good, it would cut off all correſpondencies with Heaven; 'tis in our reaſon, in our affections; it encamps in us, round about us, and eaſily beſets us, Heb. 12. 1.

3. From the Agents, ye, the Spirit, obſerve,

1. Man muſt be an agent in this work. We have brought this rebel into our Souls; and God would have us make as it were ſome recompence, by endeavouring to caſt it out: As in the Law, the Father was to fling the firſt ſtone againſt a blaſphemous Son. We muſt not be neuters in this work, nor lookers on; it will not be done without, tho it cannot be done ſimply by us; it will not be done without our concurrence, tho it cannot be done without a ſupernatural operation.

2. Ye

2. Ye, all of ye; 'tis a universal duty for the Subject as well as the Object.

1. Ye carnal men; there is no precept given to you to sin, and therefore it is not your duty to sin. The life of sin is your misery, and the mortification of sin is your happiness, as well as your duty.

2. Ye renewed and justified persons. Regeneration doth not priviledg sin, or exempt from the mortifying work. Election, and consequently the fruits of it, is to holiness, not from it, Ephes. 2. 4. Vocation and Sanctification, whereof mortification is the first step, are perspective Glasses, to see to the top of Election. Tho you have mortified, yet still do it.

3. Through the Spirit. 1. Mortification is not the work of Nature, 'tis a spiritual work. Every man ought to be an Agent in it, yet not by his own strength; we must ingage in the Duel, but it is the strength of the Spirit only can render us victorious. The duty is ours, but the success is from God; every Believer is principium activum, but the Spirit is principium effectivum. We can sin of our selves, but not overcome sin by our selves; we know how to be slaves, but are unable of our selves to be Conquerors. As God made us first free, so he only can restore us to that freedom we have lost, and doth it by his Spirit, which is a Spirit of liberty.

2. The difficulty of this work is hereby declared; the difficulty is manifested by the necessity of the Spirits efficacy. Not all the powers on Earth, nor the strength of Ordinances can do it; Omnipotency must have the main share in the work. The implantation of grace in the heart is called Creation, the perfection of grace is called a victory, both belonging to an Almighty Power.

2. From the Promise observe,

1. Heaven is a place for Conquerors only, Rev. 3. 21. To him that overcomes, will I grant to sit with me on my throne. He that will be sins friend, cannot be Gods favourite. The way to eternal life is through conflicts, inward with sin, outward with the world. There must be a Combat before a Victory, and a Victory before a Triumph.

2. The more perfect our Mortification, the clearer our assurance of Glory; The more sin dies, the more the soul lives; the sounder our lives are, the more sensible we are that we do live. The more the Enemy flies, the more certainty of an approaching Victory.

3. Mortification is a sure sign of saving grace. 'Tis a sign of the Spirits indwelling and powerful acting, a sign of an approach to Heaven.

Doct. The Doctrine to be hence insisted on is this, Mortification of sin is an universal duty, and the work of the Spirit in the soul of a Believer, without which there can be no well grounded expectations of eternal life and happiness.

I do not intend a full discourse of Mortification, but in pursuance of a former Exhortation of resemblance to the holiness of God, to which this work is necessary: We cannot resemble God, till that which is the hinderance to this resemblance be taken away; and as our deformity is pared off, we come nearer to our Original pattern; and therefore I shall only show in short what this Mortification is, and how we may Judg of our selves, whether we are Mortified or no; and that without it there can be no hope of Heaven.

1. What Mortification is.

1. 'Tis a breaking the League we naturally hold with sin. Since we were upon ill terms with God, we have kept a constant correspondence with his Enemy; and the union between sin and the soul is as strait as that between the flesh and the bones, or the flesh and the blood; blood being in every part of the flesh, and sin in every part of the soul. In regard of this union, sin is called flesh, because of its incorporation with flesh. The union between sin and the soul is naturally as great as the union between Christ and a Believer, and expresst by the similitudes of Marriage, Rom. 7. Body and members, root and branches, as well as the other; 'tis political too, as between King and Subjects. Sin is therefore said to have Dominion, to make Laws; whence we read of the Law of the members. In regard of this, Mortification is expreſt by the term of having no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, Epheſ. 5. 11. A breaking of the conjugal knot. The acquaintance and familiar correſpondence with ſin are broken off, the communion between ſin and the ſoul is at an end, the common intereſt wherein they were linkt together, is divided; Res tuas tibi habeto, the form of the Ancient divorce is all the welcome ſin hath, Iſa. 30. 32. thou ſhalt ſay unto it, Get thee hence. Or with Ephraim, What have I to do any more with Idols? Hoſ. 14. 8. It looks now upon its former favourite as an Enemy; ſins yoke that was light, is now burthenſom; nothing ſo much deſired as the ſhaking it off; and that is the Object of our Antipathy, which before had been the Object of the choiceſt favour. In this regard 'tis called a denying of luſt, Tit. 2. 12. a ſtopping the ears againſt the importunities of it, and refuſing all commerce and cohabitation with it.

2. A declaration of open Hoſtility. As Leagues between Princes are not broken, but a War enſues. The ways of ſin are rejected, the dominion of ſin oppoſed, the throne of ſin aſſaulted. The ſoul is in Arms to chaſe out this uſurper, and free it ſelf from its tyranny; and ſin up in Arms to reduce its ſubject to its ancient obedience. And here behold that irreconcilable and tedious War, without a poſſibility of renewing the ancient freindſhip, and which ends not but with a total conqueſt of ſin. This Hoſtility begins in a bridling corrupt affections, laying a yoke upon any thing that would take part with the Enemy; it cuts off all the ſupplies of ſin, ſtops all the avenues to it; which the Apoſtle expreſſeth, by making proviſion for the fleſh, Rom. 13. 14, &c. a turning the ſtream which fed ſin, another way. As anger is a degree of murther, and he that hates his Brother is a manſlayer, ſo he that hates ſin and proclaims a War againſt it, hath kill'd it affectu, tho not actu; He hath attained one degree of Mortification, when his anger againſt it is irreconcilable, like the anger of thoſe that quarrel about a Crown, which cannot be ended but by the death of one of the pretenders.

3. A ſtrong and powerful reſiſtance; By uſing all the ſpiritual weapons againſt ſin, which the Chriſtian Armory will afford, the Liſt of which Magazine we have, Epheſ. 6. 13, 14, &c. at the hearing of the word, ſetting his ſin in the front, that the Arrows of God may pierce it to the heart, and the two-edged Sword may cut the ſinews of it aſunder; Improving Baptiſm, which is a burial with Chriſt, to which end the Apoſtle mentions it, Rom. 6. 2, 3. ſending up ſtrong cries for the aſſiſtance of Heaven; As Paul did when he had that thorn in the fleſh, 2 Cor. 12. 7. redoubling his meſſages to Heaven for a quick ſupply.

The Apoſtle expreſſeth this reluctancy againſt ſin by two emphatical words, 1 Cor. 9. 27. I keep under my body, and bring it into ſubjection: ὑπωπιάζω, δουλαγωγῶ, I keep under, the word ſignifies, to take hold of, or to gripe an Adverſary, as wreſtlers do when they would give their Antagoniſt a fall, and lay him flat with the Earth; or to beat and pound, as wreſtlers anciently did with their Plummets of Led; whence ὑπώπια, a word derived from this in the Text, ſignifies putrified wounds: And the other word, δουλαγωγῶ, ſignifies to lead captive, to ſubject the body to ſerve God, not luſts; to lead it as a ſlave, not to endure it as a maſter; a bringing the affections into order, that they may not contradict and diſobey the motions of the Spirit, and Sanctified Reaſon.

4. A killing of ſin. Expreſt in the Text by mortifying or putting to death; and Col. 3. 5. by νεκρώσατε, mortifie: but the word ſignifies to reduce to a carcaſs; that tho, like a carcaſs, it may retain the ſhape, lineaments and members, that it had living, yet it hath not the life, ſtrength and motion it had before. And 'tis called a crucifying, Gal. 5. 24. which comprehends all the acts that preceded the Crucifying of Chriſt, which was done with the greateſt ſpite, as much as could be; the ſame meaſures, the ſame proportions, the ſame eagerneſs of Spirit are obſerved; a total deafneſs to the cries and complaints of ſin, as that of the Jews to the groans of the Lord of Life, a Crucifying it notwithſtanding all it would give in exchange. 'Tis called in Scripture by the name of revenge, which ends not without the deſtruction of the hated perſon, and ſometimes not with it. Every day there is to be a driving a new Nail into the body of death, a breaking ſome limb or other of it, till it doth expire.

II. The

II. The second thing is, How we may judg of our Mortification.

1. Negatively.

(1.) All cessation from some particular sin, is not a Mortification. A non-commission of a particular sin is not an evidence of the Mortification of the root of it. Indeed a man cannot commit all kinds of sin at a time, nor in many years; the commands of sin are contrary; and many Masters commanding contrary things cannot be served at one and the same time; Pride commands to lavish, and Covetousness to hoard; all sins have their times of reigning in a wicked man, as all graces have their particular seasons of acting according to the opportunities God gives. Hazael abhorred the thoughts of that cruelty the Prophet fore-told that he should act, What am I a dog? 2 King. 8. 12, 13. yet that sin lay hid by him, as Joash by Jehojada, hoping for the time to play its part and act Hazael as a slave to it. The cessation of a member from motion at present, is no Argument either of the death of the body, or the Mortification of that member.

[1.] A cessation from one sin may be but an exchange; it may be a divorce from a sin odious to the World, and an imbracing another that hath more specious pretences; as a man may forsake one Harlot and fall in League with another. Some sins do not so much affright the Conscience, and those may be entertained, when a frowning Conscience scares a man from some more abominable. Lusts are divers, Tit. 3. 3. A man may cast off the service of one Master, and list himself in the service of another; he changes his Lord, without changing his servility. A man cannot be said to be clean, because he has risen out of one sink to drench himself in another.

[2.] This cessation may be from some outward gross acts only, not from want of will to sin, did not some log lie in the way. There may be speculative pride, ambition, covetousness, uncleanness, when they are not externally acted; which is more dangerous, as infectious Diseases are, when they are hindred by cold from a kindly eruption, and strike inward to the heart, and so prove mortal. The pollutions of the World may be escaped, when the pollutions of the heart remain. A man may be a fine, garnisht, and swept House, and yet an habitation for seven Devils worse, than reigned there before. The Apostles command for cleansing reaches to the filthiness of the spirit, as well as that of the flesh, 2 Cor. 7. 1. we say of the soul, Anima est ubi amat, non ubi animat; so we may of sin; the byas of the Soul may run strongly to that sin in affection and pleasure, from the outward acts of which it abstains. 'Tis most dangerous for the House when the fire burns inward. A man may be sooner cured of an outward scald, than an inward heat, which when it comes to a Hectick Fever, is incurable.

[3.] It may be a cessation from a sin meerly because of the alteration of the constitution. Every Age hath particular sins which it inclines men to; some sins are more proper to young men, which the Apostle calls therefore youthful lusts, 2 Tim. 2. 22. Lust reigns in young men, but its empire decays in an old withered body; some Plants which grow in hot Countries, will die in colder Climates. Ambition decaies in Age when strength is wasted, but sprouts up in a young man who hath hopes to live many years, and make a flourish in the World. A present sickness may make an Epicure nauseate the dainties, which he would before rake even in the Sea to procure. There is a cessation from acts of sin, not out of a sense of sin, but a change of the temper of his body.

[4.] A cessation from acts of sin may be forced, by some fore-thoughts of death, some pang of Conscience, apprehension of Hell, present sense of some Scripture-threatning, or some sharp and smarting Affliction, some signal judgment of God inflicted upon one or other of the companions in sin, which are all of themselves but a kind of force, they being the scourges wherewith God sometimes lasheth a man from the present act of sin. As a present pain in one part of the body may take away a mans stomach to his Food, but when the pain is removed, his Appetite returns to him. So while a man is upon the rack, and God accusing him, he takes no pleasure, tastes no sweetness in sin, but after these horrors are off, he feeds as heartily as before; nay, sometimes hath a greater stomach; as men after a fit of sickness eat more plentifully, to recover the strength which before they lost by the distemper.

[5.] A ceſſation from acts of ſin, may be for want of an occaſion, for want of time, place and materials. A mans will is not againſt ſin, but he wants an opportunity: this is not from mortifying grace within, but from a providential operation of God, in withholding the materials neceſſary for the commiſſion of ſin. Who will ſay the ſins of drunkenneſs, gluttony, and oppreſſion, committed by men on earth, are mortified in them, when they are in Hell? They want materials, not a nature, nor an affection, to commit the ſame, were they again upon earth. Grace lies idle many times for want of objects to exerciſe it ſelf about; ſo doth luſt in the heart, like a Snake ſtarved with cold, till heated by a temptation. A mans condition in the world is not a ſign of this Mortification, there may be graſping and ambitious thoughts in a Cottage; Prodigality may be in a poor man's wiſhes, tho not in his power; yea, and ſometimes there is more prodigality in a poor mans unneceſſary expence of a penny, than in another's throwing away a pound.

(2.) Reſtraints from ſin are not mortification of it. Men may be curb'd, when they are not changed; and there is no man in the world, but God doth reſtrain him from more ſins which he hath a nature to commit, than what he doth actually commit; he often hedgeth up the way with thorns, when he doth not alter the heart by grace; and doth by his providence hinder the execution of the ſinful motions, when he doth not root out the wickedneſs that lies ſecretly in the nature. It was an act of Gods Providence to reſtrain Abimelech, Gen. 20. 6. I withheld thee from ſinning againſt me. Theſe reſtraints are mercies God would have us bleſs him for, but not evidences of mortifying grace.

[1.] Mortification is always from an inward principle in the heart, reſtraints from an outward. A reſtraint is meerly a pull-back, as a man is hinder'd from doing a miſchief by a ſtronger power. But Mortification is from a ſtrength given, a new mettle put into the ſoul, both a courage and ſtrength to reſiſt it; there is a ſtrength in the inward man, Eph. 3. 16. In a renewed man there is ſomething beſide bare conſiderations to withhold him, ſomething of antipathy which heightens and improves thoſe conſiderations, whereby the ſoul is glad of them, becauſe the edg and dint of them is againſt ſin; whereas a man barely reſtrain'd, would fain ſtop the entrance of ſuch thoughts; or when they are entred, would turn them out of doors again; they are things meerly put into him, that have no welcome, neither do they change the will, but put a little ſtop, to alter the method of proceedings. Mortifying grace finds ſomething in the nature, as there is in the nature of a Fountain, to work out the mud, when dirt is caſt in to infect it.

(2.) True mortification proceeds from an anger with, & a hatred of ſin, whereas reſtraints are from a fear of the conſequents of ſin; as a man may love the wine, which is as yet too hot for his lips. But Mortification proceeds from an anger, a deſire of revenge: Hence ſin is called an abomination to a good man, as well as to God; which ſignifies an intenſe and well-heated anger: tis not only a paſſionateneſs, which upon ſome diſappointment in ſin, or a taſting the bitterneſs of it, may be vented againſt it, which is ſhort-liv'd, and quickly allay'd, as the Sea after a ſtorm; but it is a rooted Revenge, which is the ſweeteſt paſſion, and accompliſht by many projects and contrivances. A man taſts a ſweetneſs in giving blow after blow to ſin, as before he took a pleaſure in, and had friendſhip with it.

(3.) Mortification is a voluntary, rational work of the ſoul; Reſtraints are not ſo. The Devil hath nothing of his nature alter'd, but hath as ſtrong an inclination to ſin as ever, tho the act he intends is often hindred by God: As in the caſe of Job, his malice was as great before to do him a miſchief; but God puts a bar upon him, and refuſes him a licenſe, Job 1. 10. Now if that grace which hinders, be no more than what a Devil hath, it no more argues a man mortified, than the Devils forbearance of ſin argues him mortified, and recovering his Angelical ſtate.

2. We may judg of our mortification poſitively.

(1.) When upon a temptation that did uſually excite the beloved luſt, it doth not ſtir, it is a ſign of a mortified ſtate. As it is a ſign of the clearneſs of a Fountain, when when after the ſtirring of the water the mud doth not appear. Peter's ſin ſeems to be ſelf-confidence, but it was a ſign of a greater mortification of it, that when Chriſt preſſed him to declare his love in that demand, John 21. 15. Loveſt thou me more than theſe? he would not vaunt his love to Chriſt to be greater than the reſt of his brethren's; his anſwer goes no further than, yea, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee, without adding more than theſe. As it is with a man that is ſick, ſet the moſt ſavory meat before him, which before he had a value for, if he cannot taſte it, and his appetite be not provoked by the ſight, it is an argument of the ſtrength of his diſtemper, and where it is laſting, of his approaching death; ſo when a man hath a temptation to ſin, deckt and garniſht with all the allurements the Devil can dreſs it with, and he hath no ſtomach to cloſe with it, 'tis a ſign of a mortified frame. 'Tis a ſign of the power of ſin, when upon the fair offer it makes, and the alluring baits it lays, the affections to it are preſently ſtirred; 'tis an evidence of a connaturality and a mighty agreement between that ſin, and the heart, when upon every ſpark it takes fire; 'tis a ſign a man was filled with all unrighteouſneſs, and had not only a few looſe corns about him; ſo on the contrary, when upon the leaſt motion of temptation, that was wont to have the Gates open for it, the affections riſe againſt it, and upon the leaſt alarum, all run to the walls to defend them, and forbid the entrance; 'tis an evidence of the weakneſs of that luſt that kept before a correſpondence with ſuch temptations; and the greater evidence it is, when the temptation is high, and yet vigorouſly reſiſted; as when a ſpring-tide is high, and blown in with the wind, 'tis an argument of the ſtrength and firmneſs of the bank, to keep it out from entring upon the ground; whereas, when a man is carried away by every temptation, as Mariſh Ground is drowned at every Tide, 'tis a ſign that there is no mortifying grace at all, but a great friendlineſs between ſin and the heart. None will queſtion the deadneſs of that Tree at the root, which doth not budd upon the return of the Spring Sun; nor need we queſtion the weakneſs of that corruption, which doth not ſtir upon the preſenting a ſuitable temptation.

(2.) When we meet with few interruptions in duties of Worſhip. The multitude of ſuch diverſions, and an eaſineſs to comply with them, is a ſign of an unmortified frame; as it is the ſign of much weakneſs in a Perſon, and the ſtrength of his diſtemper, when he is not able to hold faſt any thing, or when the leaſt blow or jogg makes him let go his hold. In duty we are to lay faſt hold on God, Heb. 6. 18. and joyn our ſelves to the Lord, Iſa. 55. 3. 'tis a weak Union when every puff of wind is able to ſeparate us. When the ſtarting of ſin in us, doth eaſily turn us from our courſe, it argues either our credulity to believe its enticements, or our affection to love its allurements; and alſo the force and ſtrength of ſin, as the frequent ſtarting of an enemy from Woods, and faſtneſſes to obſtruct our paſſage, is a ſign of ſome ſtrength remaining, and of more than ſome few ſcattered troops, rather ſome well bodied Army. The more there is of a mans ſelf, fleſh, unſpiritualneſs in any ſervice, the more there is of an unmortified Temper. The ſprouting up of ſuch fruits argues much juice and ſap at the root; eſpecially when the eruptions of ſins are more numerous and vigorous than the reſiſtances of them. But when the heart can run its race in a ſervice with ſome freedom, and the interruptions from the fleſh are few, and languiſhing, it is a ſign it hath met with a weakning wound; they are rather gaſps of corruption, than any ſtrong attempts.

(3.) When we bring forth the fruits of the contrary graces, 'tis a Sign ſin is mortified. 'Tis to this end that ſin is killed by the Spirit, that Fruit may be brought forth to God; the more ſweet and full Fruit a Tree bears, the more evidence there is of the weakneſs of thoſe ſuckers which are about the root, to hinder its generous productions. Believers are called Vines, and Olives planted in a fair ſoyl, and God the Husbandman, who waters and dreſſeth, prunes, and cuts off the luxuriant branches that he may have fruit, and fruit meet for him, John 15. 1, 2. The more fruit is brought forth, the greater ſign that the ſoul is purged, and whatſoever is an enemy to that fruit, is cut off and weakned. The more nature ture doth rise to the exercise of acts proper to it, the more the strength of the disease that oppressed it, is wasted. Every exercise of grace is both a discovery of the weakness of sin, and a fresh blow given to it, for the wounding of it.

III. The Reasons why there can be no expectation of Eternal Life without Mortification, are,

1. An unmortified frame is unsuitable to a state of Glory. There must be a meetness for a state of Glory before there be an entrance into it, Col. 2. 12. Vessels of glory must be first seasoned with Grace. Conformity to Christ is to fit us for heaven. He descended to the grave, and there laid his infirmities, before he ascended into heaven; so our sins must die before our souls can mount. 'Tis very unsuitable for sins drudges to have a Saints portion. A fleshly state is unfit for a spiritual life. All men are under the power of the Devil, or under the Power of Christ the world lies ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ under the Power of the Devil, 1 Joh. 5. 19. He that hath the wicked spirit ruling in him, and not cast out, with all his accomplices, by the Spirit of God, cannot hope to have a friends Privilege, but an enemies punishment. A fleshly palate cannot relish an heavenly life, Mat. 16. 23. Thou savourest not the things that be of God. Where there is no savour of God in this world, but only of what is contrary to God, there cannot be a savour of him in another world. Every vessel must be emptied of its foul water, before it can receive that which is clean. No man pours rich wine into old casks.

Camero.

2. God cannot in any wise delight in an unmortified soul. To delight in such would be to have no delight in himself and his own nature; the less the degrees of our Mortification, the less God doth delight in us: He hath no pleasure in wickedness; the more maims, diseases, sottishness, any have, the less pleasure there is. Sin is a mire, the more miry we are, the less can God embrace us, Psal. 5. 4. 'Tis a Plague, the more it spreads, the less will he be conversant with us. The more of a swinish, viperous, serpentine nature, the less of Gods Affections. Sin represents us more monstrous in Gods eyes than the filthiest things in the world can do in mans; to keep sin alive is to defend it against the will of God, and to challenge the combat with our Maker.

3. Unmortified Sin is against the whole design of the Gospel, and death of Christ. As tho the death of Christ were intended to indulge us in sin, and not to redeem us from it. That sin should die, was the end of Christs Death; rather than sin should not die, Christ would die himself; 'Tis an high disesteem of Christ, to preserve the life of sin in spite of the death of the Redeemer; and if we defend what he died to conquer, how can we expect to enjoy what he died to purchase? 'Tis a contempt of his death, not to look after that mortifying Grace, which was the purchase of so deep a passion. The Grace of the Gospel of God doth more especially teach this Lesson, Tit. 12. 4. to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts. Grace in God was the motive to him, not to account the blood of Christ too dear for us, and therefore should teach us not to account the Blood of our sins too dear for him. The Tenor of the Gospel is, that a man without Mortification has no interest in Christ, and therefore no right to Glory, Psal. 5. 4. 'Tis an inseparable Character of them that are Christs, that they have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. i. e. They are Christs that are under the Power of his death, not they that only hold the Opinion of his Death; or they are Christs, that are truly planted into the likeness of his Death, Rom. 6. 5.

IV. The USE of Exhortation.

Let us labour to mortifie sin. If we will not be the death of sin, sin will be the death of our souls. Tho the allurements of sin may be pleasant, the Propositions seemingly fair, yet the end of all is death, Rom. 5. 21. Death was threatned by God, and executed upon Adam; Death must be executed upon our sins in order to the restoration of the eternal life of our souls. Love to everlasting life should provoke us, Fear of everlasting death should excite us to this, the two most solemn and fundamental Passions that put us upon action. Why will you die? was Gods Expostulation, Exek. 11. why shouldst thou, Oh my Soul, for a short vanishing pleasure, venture an eternal death? should be our expostulation with our selves. This would be a curing our disease, bringing our soul into that order in part, which was broken by the fall; by this the power of that Tyrant that first headed and maintained the Faction against God, would be removed, and the soul recover that liberty and life it lost by disobeying of God. This would conduce to our peace; we have then a sprouting assurance, when we are most victorious over our lusts; after every victory God gives us a taste of the hidden Manna, Rev. 2.17. Unmortified lusts do only raise storms and tempests in the soul; less pains are required to the mortification of them, than to the satisfaction of them. Sin is a hard Task-master; there must be a pleasure in destroying so cruel an Inmate. Gratitude engages us: Gods Holiness and Justice bruised Christ for us, and shall not we kill sin for him? An infinite Love parted with a dear Son, and shall not our shallow finite love part with destroying lusts? We cannot love our sins so much as God loved his Son; he loved him infinitely: If God parted with him for us, shall not we part with our sins for him? He would have us kill it, because it hurts us; the very command discovers affection, as well as Soveraignty; and minds us of it as our priviledg as well as our duty. And to engage us to it, he hath sent as great a Person to help us, as to redeem us, viz. His Spirit; he sent one to merit it, and the other to assist us in it, and work it in us, who is to bring back the creature to God, by conquering that in it, which hath so long detained it captive. And therefore to this purpose,

in

1. Implore the help of the Spirit. When ever we set seriously upon this work at any time, let us apply our selves to the Spirit of God, as one in office to this end, as being a Spirit of holiness not only in his Nature, but in his Operations, Eph. 1. 13. Rom. 1. 4. The Father and the Son are not so often called Holy as the Spirit, who is called the holy Spirit, and the holy Ghost; not that he is more holy than the other Persons, but in regard of his Office to work holiness in the hearts of men. As Jehoshaphat, upon the assault from the Enemy, cried unto God for deliverance, so upon any arming of our corruptions we should cry to the Spirit for assistance; he doth as much delight to be our Auxiliary on Earth, as Christ doth to be our Advocate in Heaven. The neglects of Application to him are the cause of our miscarriages; we are half perswaded to a sin, before we beg strength against it.

2. Listen to the convictions of the Holy Spirit. The work of the Spirit is to convince by shaking the Soul out of its carnal Lethargy. As the Spirit gives a strong alarm at the first conversion, whereby the Soul sees the strength of its Enemy, and the greatness of its danger, its own impotency and inability to contest with it; so upon carrying on the degrees of Mortification there are various alarms to put us upon a holy watchfulness against the projects of sin. Listen to these convictions which come in by the word, which is the Ministration of the Spirit, and in respect to the spiritual Energy of it, is called spirit, John 6. 63.

3. Plead the death of Christ. The end of his death was to triumph over sin. As to take away the guilt of sin, he was the righteousness of God; so to take away the dominion of sin, he is the power of God; his expiation of sin, and his condemnation of it, were twisted together in his Sacrifice, Rom. 3. 8. For sin, or as a Sacrifice for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; and the consideration of his death, and the end of it, would enflame us to desire not to be under the power of a condemned malefactor. A consideration of his death, and that sin had its hands imbrewed in his blood, would awaken our love to him, and an indignation against his Enemy.

4. Let us often think of Divine Precepts. The frequent Meditation on the Law of God, would excite our endeavours after a principle more conformable to the purity of that Law. Gods Commands establish not mens humours, neither do they gratify mens lusts, but are suited to the Holy Nature of God, a conformity to which ought to be our aim in Mortification.

5. Let us be jealous of our own hearts. Venture not to breathe in corrupt Air for fear of infection. There is a principle in the heart naturally disposed to take fire upon the spark of a temptation. A strict Watch in a City hinders Forreign Correspondence, and intestine Treachery.

6. Let us often think deeply of the corruption of our Natures, how loathsom it is to God; and this will make it loathsom to us. The more it is abominated, the more it is mortified; the supplies of it are cut off, its attempts discovered.

vered. When Paul conſidered his miſery by the body of death, it ſtrengthened his reſolution of ſerving God with the Law of his mind, Rom. 17. 24. 25. which muſt needs be accompanied with a ſtrong reſiſtance of the Law of his members.

7. Let us bleſs God for whatſoever mortifying grace we have received, tho never ſo little. When we pay him in praiſe what we receive of him, 'tis the way to have more from him. David grew hot againſt Nabal after he had received his churliſh anſwer, 1 Sam. 25. and reſolved the murther of the whole Family, which he had no Authority to do; but God prevents him by Abigals interceſſion; he bleſſes God for the ſucceſs of it, in hindering his intentions; and as God prevented his ſin, ſo after his Thankſgiving he took away the occaſion of his evil reſolution, by calling Nabal ten days after into another World, Verſe 38. and gives him further occaſion of praiſe, Verſe 39. A little ſtrength owned as the Gift of God, ſhall be backed with more. Praiſing God for what we receive, as well as praying for what we want, is a means to promote the mortification of our ſins in order to Eternal Life.

A

WEAK GRACE VICTORIOUS.

Matth. XII. 20.

A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break, and ſmoking flax ſhall he not quench, till he ſend forth judgment unto victory.

WE need not take our riſe higher than Verſe 17. where the quotation out of Iſa. 42. begins, where you find God like a Herauld proclaiming his Son to the World, under the name of his ſervant, Matth. 12. 18. Behold, my ſervant whom I have choſen, my beloved in whom my ſoul is well pleaſed: I will put my ſpirit upon him, and he ſhall ſhew judgment to the Gentiles. It contains, (1.) His Election of him, God choſe, called him to his Mediatory office. (2.) The agreeableneſs of the perſon to God, he did wholly acquieſce in him, and depoſite in his hand the concerns of his Glory. (3.) The ability and aſſiſtance God gave him, I will put my ſpirit upon him. (4.) The work he ſhould do: he ſhall ſhow judgment to the Gentiles. Verſe 19. his coming is ſet down: Not with pomp, or noiſe, he ſhall not ſtrive, nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets. The meekneſs and tenderneſs of his carriage, he ſhall not cry. Palum noluit fieri hominum vitia, as Grotius; he ſhall not be contentious with the people; of which a ſign is, an immoderate raiſing of the voice, and clamor againſt them.

Take notice here of,

1. The Object.

(1.) A bruiſed reed. Hierom takes it for a Muſical Inſtrument made of a Reed, which Shepherds uſed to have, which when bruiſed, ſounds ill, and is flung away by the Muſitian, as diſdaining to ſpend his breath upon ſuch a vile Inſtrument that emits no pleaſant ſound. But Chriſt will not caſt off poor Souls that cannot make ſo good Muſick in Gods ears as others, and anſwer not the breathings of the Spirit with that life and vigor, but he will take pains with them to mend them. Bruiſed Reeds, ſuch as are convinced of their own weakneſs, vanity, and emptineſs.

2. The ſmoking flax of the wick of a Candle, wherein there is not only no profit, but ſome trouble and noiſomneſs. Tho the Soul is noiſom by reaſon of the ſtench of its corruptions, yet he will not blow out that expiring fire, but blow it up and cheriſh it; he will not rigidly oppreſs and throw off thoſe that are weak in Grace, and Faith, and Hope, but he will heal them, nouriſh them, inflame them. Maldonat interprets it, That tho he walk in the way where bruiſed Reeds lie, he will ſtep over them and not break them more; he will not tread upon a little ſmoking Flax that lies languiſhing upon the ground, and ſo put it out with his foot, tho it hurts the Eyes with its ſmoke, and offends the Noſtrils with its ſtench. Smoking ſouls that have ſome weak deſires, and fumings towards Heaven, ſome ſmall evaporations of their ſpirits towards God, he ſhall not quench them. The Chaldee Paraphraſe, Thoſe meek or gracious ones which are like a bruiſed Reed, ſhall not be broken by him.

2. The Act. He ſhall not break; not quench, litotes, or meioſis; he ſhall mightily cheriſh, ſupport the Reed, enflame the flax.

3. The continuance of it; till he ſends forth Judgment unto victory. In Iſaiah it is, Till he bring forth judgment unto truth; vere judicabit, ſo Menochius, ſo the Septuagint hath it; but Matthew alters it, and inſtead of Truth, puts Victory.

Judgment is taken ſeveral ways. For,

1. Wiſdom, Iſa. 30. 18. the Lord will wait that he may be gracious, for the Lord is a God of Judgment: i. e. of Wiſdom to give in the moſt convenient ſeaſon.

2. Righteouſneſs, Iſa. 59. 9. judgment is far from us, neither doth juſtice overtake us: i. e. there is no holineſs in us.

3. Overthrow of a Chriſtians Enemy, John 12. 31. Now is the judgment of this world, now ſhall the prince of this world be caſt out, now ſhall the Devil be conquered; Iſa. 42. 3. he ſhall bring forth judgment unto truth: i.e. he ſhall govern in righteouſneſs. Now Chriſts Government being chiefly in the Souls of men, he ſhall aſſiſt and encourage that which is the better; as Governors ought to be encouragers of the good, and diſcouragers of the bad. Matthew explains this, and ſhows the conſequence of this Government, if it be in Truth, it will make the better part victorious. Some by Judgment underſtand the Goſpel, the New Evangelical Law, Verſe 4. the iſles ſhall wait for his Law; ſo Chriſt will not reſt till he makes the Goſpel glorious, and advances it in the World above the Luſts and Idolatries of men, which then overflowed the World. Some by Judgment underſtand Grace, which is the Draught and Copy of the Goſpel drawn in the Soul; and both thoſe ſenſes the words will bear; the words in Iſaiah ſeem to bear the firſt ſenſe, the iſles ſhall wait for his law. The other ſeems moſt conſonant to Matthew, and in his Name ſhall the Gentiles truſt; i. e. he will make their Faith victorious, the effect of this Judgment, or Evangelical Law ſhould be the victorioufneſs of Grace and Faith. Implanting grace in the heart is the main deſign of the Goſpel; and grace is nothing elſe but a moulding the Soul into the form of that Law and Doctrine of Chriſt; as Chriſt will make the Goſpel glorious, above all the carnal reaſonings of men, ſo he will make grace, which is the end of the Goſpel, victorious above all the corruptions of men. In this latter ſenſe we ſhall now handle it, Chriſt ſhall make thoſe beginnings of grace and infuſed habits, to obtain a perfect conqueſt. By his governing of it, he ſhall make the conqueſt over corruption perfect; or if νεῖκος be taken as the Phyſitians uſe it, for the νεῖκος of a Diſeaſe, he ſhall make the νεῖκος end in victory, and Nature the conqueror over the Diſeaſe.

Doctrine. True, tho weak Grace, ſhall be preſerved, and in the end prove victorious.

Seeds of grace, tho mixed with a maſs of corruption, cannot be overcome by it: as Gold cannot be altered in its nature by the droſs, or transformed into the nature of the rubbiſh in which it lies. Grace is ſurely weakeſt at the firſt infuſion, when it is newly landed in the heart from Heaven, when the Devil and wickedneſs of mans nature have taken the alarm, and drawn together all the Armies of Hell to hinder der its progreſs; yet tho it be thus, in ſo weak a condition, indiſpoſed to make a ſtout reſiſtance, having got but little footing in the heart, and a mans own inclinations not well reconciled to it, nor his evil apprehenſions and notions fully exterminated, and the predominant corruptions that held the Empire before, having received but their firſt wound, and being much unmortified, and grace alſo as yet but in a ſtrange ſoil, not naturalized at all; yet is grace then ſo ſtrong, that all the Legions of Hell cannot totally worſt it; tho it be like a grain of Muſtard-ſeed newly ſown, yet it ſprings up into a mighty Tree: for as the weakneſs of God is ſtronger than men, ſo is the weakneſs of grace ſtronger than ſin in the event and iſſue. The meaneſt grace is above the higheſt intellectual parts, as the ſmile of a Sun-beam is more powerful to chaſe away the grim and ſower darkneſs of the night, than the ſparkling of a Diamond. According to the degrees of its growth, its effects are wonderful; as a ſmall ſpark by a breath of wind growing into a flame, may fire and conſume a ſpacious and ſtately building. The weakeſt grace by degrees ſhall have ſtrength, Zac. 12. 8. which is meant of the Jews ſtrength at their converſion, He that is feeble ſhall be as David, who was a mighty man of valour, and when a ſtripling, laid Goliah in the duſt; but in the ſtrength of Chriſt: for the Houſe of David ſhall be as God, as the Angel of the Lord before him, i. e. Chriſt that deſcended from David. In the Text you ſee God aſſures us, that Chriſt ſhall perform this; therefore let us ſee what engagements are on Gods part, and what alſo on Chriſts part to effect this buſineſs, which will be ſufficient demonſtrations of this Truth.

In general. Grace hath great Allyes; the greateſt Power that ever yet acted upon the ſtage of the world, had a hand in the birth of it: Should we ſee all the States of the world engaged in bringing a perſon to a Kingdom, and maintaining him there in his Right, we could not rationally think that there were any likelihood they ſhould be baffled in it.

The Trinity ſat in Conſultation about Grace; for if there were ſuch a ſolemn Convention held about the firſt creating of Man, Gen. 1. 26. much more about the new and better creating of him, and raiſing him ſomewhat above the State of a man. The Father decrees it, Chriſt purchaſeth it, the Spirit infuſeth it, the Father appoints the garriſon, what Grace ſhall be in every Soul, Chriſt raiſeth this force, and the Spirit conducts it. The Trinity have an hand in maintaining it; the Father purgeth out corruption, the Son waſhes, and the Holy Ghoſt ſanctifies; all this is but the carrying on the new Creature, Tit. 3. 4, 5, 6. But after the kindneſs and love of God our Saviour appear'd, not by works of righteouſneſs, &c. but according to his mercy he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, which he ſhed on us abundantly through Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour. God our Saviour, i. e. God the Father, the Father is the Author of Salvation from ſin, Chriſt the purchaſer, the Spirit the conveyer. There is a ſpecial Relation between the Trinity and Grace; the Father is ſaid to beget us, Joh. 1. 13. And we are ſaid to be the ſeed of Chriſt, Iſa. 53. 10. and born of the ſpirit, Joh. 3. 6. that therefore which hath ſo ſtrong a Relation, cannot periſh.

1. The Father, who is the firſt root of Grace in his good will and pleaſure. Tho Chriſt merited the fruits of Election, yet he did not merit Election it ſelf, for Chriſt himſelf is a fruit of that firſt Election.

(1.) In reſpect of his Attributes. Grace will ingage Gods aſſiſtance. Every Grace is part of the Divine nature, becauſe it is an imitation of one or other of the Divine Attributes, and exemplifies the Divine perfections in its operations, 1 Pet. 2. 9. But you are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that you may ſhow forth the praiſes of him who hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light. Shew forth the praiſe of God, ἀρετὰς, the virtues of God. Grace in all the parts of it doth glorifie one or other Attribute of God; Humility his Power, Contentedneſs his Sufficiency, Watchfulneſs his Omniſcience, Prayer his Soveraignty, Repentance and Sorrow for Sin his Juſtice, Faith his Love and Truth; a Fiduciary reliance on his Word, his Wiſdom, &c.

[1.] The love of God is ingaged in it. The riches of his Grace was the motive to work Grace in the heart. Goodneſs made him bring Light into the World, and it is the ſame motive makes him bring Grace into the Soul. 'Tis called Gods Workmanſhip, his Poem, Eph. 2. 10. ποίημα, about which he ſpent more skill than about

about all other things. As uſually men are more lofty in a Poem than in Proſe, and inrich it with the ſublimeſt fancies, and diligenly obſerve their numbers and meaſures; ſo is God exact in the Production of the new Creature, which is rather his ποίημα than ἔργον, as if it were not ſo much the work of his hands, as the work of his heart; for as verſ. 18. his Soul was pleaſed in Chriſt, ſo in all things which make to the Glory of Chriſt. His Soul, It notes an high joy which we find not expreſſed of the Creation; and therefore his heart is chiefly ſet upon Grace, as that which he chiefly deſign'd Chriſt to purchaſe, and Chriſt to implant.

Well then, Did Gods love give his Son to dye for thee, to puchaſe that Grace? And will not the ſame Love engage his Power to preſerve and perfect that Grace? Shall his common Love to his Creature cauſe him to provide for Sparrows, and will he neglect his Children? Shall he provide for his Children, and not ſtand by to ſecond that which gives them the Denomination of Children? Shall their hairs be numbred, and not one fall to the ground without the Will of God? Hairs, I ſay, which are inconſiderable, of which there is no miſs, no endangering of life by their fall; and ſhall Grace be thrown to the ground by corruption, which brings down with it the life and happineſs of a Chriſtian and the Glory of God? No, the weakeſt Grace hath a certain intereſt in the Love of God, becauſe the weakeſt is the birth of that Love; as the Child that is crying in the Cradle, is as much related to the Father, as the Son ſtoutly working in the Shop.

[2.] The Power of God. 'Tis not in a bare Moral, but Phyſical way, that Grace is brought into the Soul. If power muſt be imploy'd in raiſing the Body, leſs ſurely will not ſerve the turn to raiſe the Soul, which is a far more noble and excellent Work. Can it be poſſibly thought, that when Satan, the ſtrong man had poſſeſſion of the Soul, well provided for Defence, had a great intereſt in the affections and love of a man, making no laws, enjoining no commands but what were ſutable and pleaſant to fleſh and blood, that ever grace of it ſelf could have diſpoſſeſſed him, and wreſted this Empire out of his hands? Surely it muſt be the power of God that did it, elſe ſo ſtrong an enemy, ſo mighty a Prince could never have been overcome, ſo well beloved a Governour could never have been overthrown. God is the ſtrength of the ſoul; all the contrivances and ſtratagems againſt the fleſh are from him, 2 Cor. 3. 5. Our ſufficiency is of God: We are not ſufficient of our ſelves, λογίσασθαι, to think, i.e. to come to ſome certain reſolution, as men do when they ſum up their particular accounts, or ſtate our own affairs; and when this is done, we cannot will it, or put it in execution without him; therefore Phil. 2. 13. He works in us both to will and to do, and that of his good pleaſure, εὐδοκίας, Love and Power is put together. It would be derogatory to God, if that ſhould be totally overcome, which his immediate Power is the cauſe of, put on by his ſpecial Love; for it would either argue a want of love, or a want of ſufficiency to maintain it: But it is not thus; for the ſame Power which brought us to God, keeps us from being drawn from him, 1 Pet. 1. 5. If kept by the power of God through faith, then that Faith is alſo kept by the Power of God; that Faith whereby we overcome the invaſions of Satan, and repel his fiery darts; that Faith whereby the corruptions of the heart are reſiſted and expelled by its purifying act; for Faith purifies the heart inſtrumentally, Acts 15. 9.

3. The Holineſs of God. Men are ſaid to be like God, not in Power, Infiniteneſs, Omniſcience, &c. but in Holineſs, which is the Attribute moſt cryed up in Heaven, Iſa. 6. 3. an Attribute which God doth moſt magnifie, as ſwearing by it, Pſal. 89. 35. which he doth not particularly and expreſly by any other Attribute; an Attribute which he is ſo tender of: For what is the cauſe of that Juſtice which employs his Power in puniſhing offenders, but his Holineſs and hatred of ſin? Grace hath its print from God, and is conformity to the Holineſs of God, as appearing in his law. 'Tis the Image of God, there is an harmony and proportion of all Graces in the ſoul to thoſe perfections of holineſs which are in God, as there is of the members of the body of a Child to its Father; in reſpect of this likeneſs men are ſaid to be the Children of God. It may better be ſaid of grace, than it was ſaid of the ſoul by the Heathen, that it was Scintilla Divinæ Eſ- ſentiæ, or as the Jews ſay, ſouls were the ſhavings or chips of the Throne of Glory. Graces are the drops of Gods perfections, they are ſo exact an image of him. In reſpect of this likeneſs to Gods holineſs, gracious ſouls that have eſcaped the corruptions of the world through luſt, do partake of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. 'Tis called a bearing the image of the heavenly, 1 Cor. 15. 48. Not that God beſtows any thing of the Divine Eſſence upon the Soul, but an image and repreſentation of himſelf, juſt as a golden Seal conveys to the Wax the Image engraven on it, but not the leaſt particle of its matter, the Wax remaining Wax, tho under another Form and Figure. This likeneſs is a likeneſs to God in his higheſt perfection, viz. his Holineſs, which runs through all, and may be applied to all the Attributes, as holy power, &c. and herein grace excels the perfections of the whole Creation put together, for all the Creatures are not ſo like to God as grace makes the ſoul. And how can we imagine any thing, wherein we can be more like to God, than in that which is the higheſt Excellency, and Perfection of God? Now ſeeing grace hath ſo near a relation to God, and God doth ſo delight to ſee this in his people, that all his end is to make them like him, in a compleating of holineſs in them in Heaven, and that this is that which Chriſt muſt do at the laſt, preſent them holy and blameleſs without any ſpot; will he neglect that which is ſo dear and like to him? and ſuffer his own image to be wholly cruſht under feet by corruption his baſeſt enemy?

[4.] The Wiſdom of God. The weakeſt Grace is the Birth of his Eternal Counſel, Epheſ. 1. 4. choſen us that we might be holy. If thou haſt any Grace, tho never ſo mean, thou wert from Eternity given by God to Chriſt, and Chriſt purchaſed this Grace for thee, elſe the Spirit would never have infuſed it into thee, for the Spirit receives of Chriſt and ſhows it unto you; there was a decree paſt in heaven for all that Grace thou haſt. Therefore that which made God at firſt reſolve upon it, and made him ſend ſuch a force and brigade into thy ſoul, will cauſe him to perfect it to a compleat victory, Phil. 1. 6. being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you, will perform it until the day of Jeſus Chriſt. The Apoſtle was confident that becauſe God had begun it, he would perfect it; What ground ſhould he have for this confidence, if weak Grace could be totally overcome? God being unchangeable in his Counſels and Decrees, if any Saint whom he hath purpoſed to ſave, ſhould be totally drawn from him, it would argue God changeable, that his will was altered, or weak, that his power was extinguiſht, or unwiſe that his Counſel was raſhly undertaken. But ſurely his love being founded upon his Counſel, admits of no change. Beſides, God doth infuſe Grace into thoſe ſouls which are naturally and morally moſt uncapable of it: The moſt rugged pieces he ſmooths, the darkeſt ſouls he enlightens, the greateſt enemies he makes friends, and would he begin this work to have it preſently ſpoiled? God before he meddled with any ſoul, foreſaw what conteſts and conflicts of ſin and the Devil there would be againſt him; He counted all the coſt and charges, and all the pains he was to take. And it doth not conſiſt with the Wiſdom of God to lay aſide his undertaking, nor with the Patience of God not to endure the brunt when he foreſaw every ſtratagem of the Devil againſt ſuch a ſoul when he firſt ſet up the ſtandard in it. The Goſpel is called the manifold Wiſdom of God, Epheſ. 3. 10. And ſurely all the effects of it, and this of Grace in the heart, which is the chief effect and deſign of it, is an act of Gods Wiſdom; and ſhould this which is the birth of his manifold Wiſdom be ſuppreſt?

[5.] The Glory of God. Gods end in every thing is his Glory, and that which grace aims at is the glory of God. As God minds himſelf and wills himſelf the chief good, ſo doth grace mind, and will God as the choiceſt and ſupreme happineſs. Thoſe Graces which maintain the hotteſt fight againſt Corruption, and are the ſtrongeſt and moſt active Legion, have a peculiar objective Relation to God, as Love to him, Faith in him, Deſire for him; thoſe graces which are exerciſed about man, and the duties of the ſecond Table, have not ſo great an Intereſt in this quarrel. Now is it for the honour of God, to let that which is his beſt Friend in the world be totally ſuppreſt? Would not his honour ſuffer in it? The Two Siſters thought it a good Argument to prevail with Chriſt to come and help Lazarus when they ſent him word, He whom thou loveſt is ſick; and Chriſt himſelf took an argument argument from his friendſhip to raiſe him, Our friend Lazarus ſleeps. And is it not as good an argument with God to come in for relief of languiſhing grace, when you ſend him word how hard it is beſet?

(2.) Chriſt is engaged in this work. The Promiſe in the Text manifeſts that Chriſt was ordered by his Father to it, his Father having promiſed it upon his proclaiming him his choſen ſervant.

Chriſt is engaged as,

[1.] A Purchaſer. He died to redeem us from all iniquity, and to purifie unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Inward works as well as outward, Tit. 2. 14. He gave himſelf that we might be without filth, and at laſt without ſpot, wrinkle, or blemiſh, Eph. 5. 25, 26, 27. Chriſt loved the Church, and gave himſelf for it, that he might ſanctifie, and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water by the word, that he might preſent it to himſelf a glorious Church, not an imperfect Church; not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; any thing like them; but that it ſhould be holy, and without blemiſh. To ſanctifie or cleanſe by degrees, to perfect it by wiping out all the ſpots, and ſmoothing the wrinkles, and making it highly beautiful, fit to be preſented to himſelf as his eternal Spouſe. If theſe ſpots and blemiſhes ſhould keep their ſtanding, it would argue, that it was not Chriſts purpoſe in the giving himſelf to remove them; or that this gift was not equivalent to ſo great an end, and ſufficient to attain it; or elſe that he hath ſince repented of his intent; but none of thoſe will hold; this Scripture aſſures us, he gave himſelf for this purpoſe; the Father hath exalted him at his right hand for it, and his compaſſions work powerfully in his bowels even in Heaven; he was of the ſame mind after his Aſcenſion, when Paul writ this Epiſtle. Therefore he is ſaid, by one offering to perfect for ever, them that are ſanctified, Heb. 10. 14. that is, That one offering was of ſuch Infinite Value, that it perfectly purchaſed the taking away of ſin, both in the guilt, filth and power, and was a ſufficient price for all the grace believers ſhould need for their perfect Sanctification to the end of the World. There was the Satisfaction of his blood for the removal of our guilt, and a Treaſure of Merit for the ſupply of our grace. Tho Glory was due to him, even from the moment of his incarnation, as he was the Son of God, yet he would not enter into it, and ſit down at the Right hand of the Majeſty on high, till he had purchaſed grace and all the meaſures of it for his people, and that by himſelf, by the laying down his life as the price for it, Heb. 1. 3. When he had by himſelf purged our ſins, ſat down at the right hand of the Majeſty on high. Sat down, When? Not till he had purged, i.e. made atonement for our ſins, and paid for whatſoever holineſs or purging grace his people ſhould want. His blood was ſo valuable, that the treaſures of God were dealt out to believers before his coming upon the credit of his bond, much more will they be ſo after his coming upon Gods actual receipt of the Price, and our Saviour's ſitting down at the right of God to ſee the grace he purchaſed, given out. Upon this account Chriſt hath a care of the weakeſt Saint as well as of the moſt glorious Angel, becauſe he died to purchaſe the weakeſt believer, not the higheſt Angel, who ſtood in no need of it; If Chriſt bought us, we belong to the purchaſer, which is the Apoſtles Inference, 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20. Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price. Not our own Governors, not our own keepers. The Poſſeſſion the Holy Ghoſt hath of us making us his Temples, is by vertue of this price. If Chriſt died, that his people might have grace, and that it might be powerful, ſhall luſt trample upon that which Chriſt hath ſo dearly bought? Was it a light thing, for which he endured all the Torments upon the Croſs, and will he now make no matter of it? If he purchaſed us, and grace for us when we were enemies, will he not preſerve it in us, ſince we are his friends? Shall he be at the expence of his richeſt blood to buy it, and ſpare his power to ſecure it? Is the right of his purchaſe of ſo low a value with him, as to ſuffer it to be uſurped by his greateſt enemy?

[2.] An actual proprietor and poſſeſſor by way of,

(1.) Donation from his Father. Every Believer is Gods Gift to Chriſt as Mediator, for this end, to give Eternal Life to them, and every one of them, John 17. 2. that I ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given me; which eternal life, is the knowledg of God, which includes all grace. And they were given ven to him that they might be perfect; One, as the Father and the Son are, John 17. 11. keep through thy own name, thoſe whom thou haſt given me, that they may be one, as we are. He gave them with an intent that they ſhould be one in as high a manner as the Creature is capable of; this was the end both of Gods giving and Chriſts keeping; for the Particle ἵνα may refer to keep, or to given. If they be not at laſt one, the end of Gods giving muſt be fruſtrate, and the Petition of Chriſt not heard. Chriſt will not undervalue his Fathers Gift. We prize even ſmall tokens from a friend we love. Becauſe our Redeemer valued this gift, he accepted of it, andtook it into his own poſſeſſion. And becauſe he loves his Father, he will anſwer the ends of this Donation. Chriſt calls thoſe his ſheep by virtue of this Donation, John 10. 16. Our being his Sheep, by virtue of this gift, will be as much a reaſon to preſerve us in Faith, as it was at firſt to confer it on us. The ſame reaſon is as valid for preſerving as for firſt conferring, and that is the Fathers gift.

(2.) He is proprietor and poſſeſſor by the conqueſt of every gracious perſon, and whatſoever was contrary to grace. As our Reedeemer was to purchaſe us by his death at the hand of Gods Juſtice, ſo he was to reſcue us by his Power from the fury of our helliſh oppreſſor. As he was to appeaſe the Juſtice of God, ſo he was to deface the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 5. He was manifeſted to take away our ſins, Verſe 8. For this purpoſe was the ſon of God manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the Devil. As Gods Juſtice is ſo perfectly pacified as never to renew the curſes of the Law againſt a Believer, ſo is the Devil ſo thoroughly ſubdued as never to repair the ruines of his works. Did Chriſt riſe as a Conqueror out of the grave to let ſin and Satan run away with the fruits of his Victory? Shall he overcome the Powers of Hell, and triumph over them, to let the Devil rob him of the honour of his Atchievements by regaining his loſs? Shall that man of his right hand, whom God hath made ſtrong for himſelf, that we might not go back from him, Pſal. 80. 17. be made weak again by mans own corruptions and the Devils repoſſeſſion? Should grace truckle under the Devils works, and the Standard which was ſet up in the Soul when it was firſt ſnatcht from the power of darkneſs, be pull'd down, what would become of the glory of our Redeemers death, and the honour of his victory? What a diſparagement would it be, to have that which he paid ſo great a price for, which was the ſpecial gift of his Father, the acquiſt of the travel and ſweat of his Soul, wreſted out of his hand by an Enemy he hath ſubdued, condemned upon the Croſs, and triumph'd over at his Aſcenſion! No; this will never be. Chriſt and the Father are One in Operation; and whom God delivers from the power of darkneſs, he tranſlates into the kingdom of his dear ſon; Not to return under the government of a hated Devil; and makes them meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light, Coloſſ. 1. 12, 12. not to be partakers of the inheritance of the Devils in darkneſs. Neither the Father nor the Son will loſe the fruit of their pains.

(3.) By mutual conſent and agreement. He hath poſſeſſion of them by Gods Gift, and their own choice, John 10. 27, 28. My ſheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. And I give unto them eternal life, and they ſhall never periſh, neither ſhall any man pluck them out of my hand. Believers are his ſheep in his hand, he knows them with a knowledg of Affection, and therefore will be careful of their feeding, growth and ſafety. On the other ſide, they hear his voice, anſwer his call, and believe in him, and own him for their Lord and proprietor. They follow him, he calls them; they hear his voice, he knows them; they follow him, he gives unto them eternal life; a life never to periſh, either by their own wills, or the wolves violence. Againſt both thoſe, Chriſt in this Promiſe as their owner, ſecures them. Againſt their corruptions, they ſhall not periſh, Viz. By a corruptive principle in themſelves: here he removes from them all inward cauſes of deſtruction. Againſt outward violence, neither ſhall any man, no nor Devil, pluck them out of my hands, &c. By this promiſe he holds us ſafe in his own poſſeſſion againſt the encroachments of our luſts and the rapine of the Devil. They choſe him for their Guardian, and caſt all their care upon him, and follow his conduct; and he takes care of them to give them eternal life, and to mind the weakeſt as well as the ſtrongeſt of his Sheep. He hath them in his hand. They apprehend him, and are apprehended by him, that they may attain the ſame end of the race with him, the Reſurrection of the dead, Viz. a ſtate of perfection, Phil. 3. 12. If by any means I may attain unto the reſurrection of the dead, not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect; but I follow after, if that I may (καταλάβω) lay hold of that for which [for which end] I am apprehended of Chriſt Jeſus. Apprehended, or laid hold on by Chriſt, a Metaphor from thoſe that run a race, that take hold of another to draw him after to win a prize as well as themſelves. Chriſt lays hold on believers, and they follow him. Will Chriſt be eaſily perſuaded to let go the hold of his own right? will he throw them out of his hand? That would be changeableneſs, and unfaithfulneſs after his promiſe. Shall any pluck them out of his hand? That would be weakneſs. Faith cleaves to Chriſt, and Chriſt to Faith. Faith hands Chriſt into the heart, and gives him poſſeſſion; Chriſt takes the heart as his own propriety Eph. 3. 12. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith. And engageth himſelf by Promiſe that both he and his Father ſhall abide there, John 14. 23. Will any gracious heart caſt Chriſt out of his lodging? He that knows the ſweetneſs of their company, can never deſire to have their room. Doth Chriſt dwell in the heart to let ſin pull his Houſe down about his ears? Will he ſuffer the Devil to bring in Hell-fire to burn up his dwelling? 'Tis his own Houſe, the Church and every member of it, Heb. 3. 6. Will he not hinder the decaies of it, and repair the Beams and Walls? Yea, the very Tiles and Pins? Shall he not bruſh down the Cobwebs, and ſweep out the duſt? The heart is his field; will he not gather in his Wheat, and burn up the Tares at laſt?

[3.] Chriſt is a Steward and Officer, appointed by God to this purpoſe, to take care of every Believer and his grace. How is he the ſurety of the covenant, and of a better teſtament? Heb. 7. 22. How can it be a better Teſtament, if it may be broken, and prove as weak as the firſt? He is bound for the performance of the Articles of it, whereof thoſe are the two ſtanding parts of this Agreement, Jer. 32. 40. I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me: That God will not turn away from us to do us good, and that we ſhall never depart from him; and our perpetual cleaving to him doth depend upon his putting his fear into our hearts, and is the end of it. This never departing is the end why God puts his fear into our hearts: And Chriſt being a ſurety of this Teſtament, is to look to both parts of it, that both what concerns Gods part, and what concerns ours, may be made good.

Here it is to be conſidered, That,

(1) Chriſt had a charge from the Father to this purpoſe.

[1.] He had charge concerning what he was to do for them. He had a charge to redeem them, and a charge to govern them; He hath a charge to relieve them, and acharge to perfect them.

1. He had a charge to redeem them. The Copy of it you may ſee, Iſa. 49. 9. That thou mayeſt ſay to the priſoners, Go forth: to them that are in darkneſs, Shew your ſelves: He was to call them out of their Priſons, knock off their Fetters, bring them out of Darkneſs into a marvellous Light.

2. To be their Governour, was as much in his Commiſſion, as to be their Redeemer; for, Verſe 10. They ſhall not hunger nor thirſt, neither ſhall the heat nor ſun ſmite them: for he that hath mercy on them ſhall lead them, even by the ſprings of waters ſhall he guide them. So alſo in Iſa. 4. 6. where by heat, &c. is meant all troubles and inconveniencies in a Chriſtian life. They ſhould not be waſted by fiery temptations, nor left in a forlorn condition. And the reaſon is, becauſe that Chriſt, that Holy One, to whom God ſpeaks, Ver. 7. that Redeemer that called them out of a ſtate of darkneſs and captivity, was to lead them in his hand, and have his eye upon them, and guide them by the ſprings of Water, that they might have a fulneſs of the ſpirit, and all refreſhings and ſupplies of grace neceſſary for their preſent condition. By water alluding to the River out of the Rock, which followed the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs; and by the Heat and Sun, to the fiery Serpents, and the Plague at that time. Chriſt here had the conduct of thoſe Redeemed Captives committed to him, and was not to reſt ſatisfied with conferring the the firſt grace in the Converſion of them, but to provide all things for their future ſecurity as well as their preſent freedom. And Iſa. 42.3. when God proclaimed him his ſervant, this was in his Commiſſion, To have a ſpecial care of the bruiſed as well as the ſtanding Reed; of the ſmoking as well as the flaming Flax; of the Infant grace as well as the Adult; and indeed the charge is chiefly for them.

3. He hath a charge to receive them, John 6.37. All that the Father gives me, ſhall come to me; and him that comes to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out. Verſe 38. For I came down from heaven, not to do my own will, but the will of him that ſent me. He was in no wiſe to caſt them out; it is a Meioſis, he was affectionately to entertain and welcome them. And that he might make it as firm as poſſible could be, He tells us it was not only his Will, but his Office, and that he was under a neceſſary as well as voluntary Obedience to his Father in this caſe. It was a part of Gods Will and Charge to him upon the ſending him into the World, to receive very kindly any that come to him, tho the moſt feeble and crippled believers, that came upon crutches. As he was to receive kindly thoſe that came, ſo it implies, that he ſhould receive them as often as they came; and that in any exerciſes of Faith they ſhould find freſh welcomes. Tho their Faith were very feeble, it ſhould not be denied entertainment, but be highly careſſed. So that Chriſt was ordered here to entertain every comer, as well as to die for them; and charged upon his obedience not to diſcountenance any that come, come when they will, and as often as they will.

4. He hath a charge alſo to perfect them; Not to loſe one of thoſe God hath given him, John 6. 39. τῦτο δὲ τὸ θέλημα τῦ πεμψαντός με πατρὸς; that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould loſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it up again at the laſt day. This is my Fathers abſolute and immutable Will, and he hath ſent me to perform this Will, that of every perſon he hath given, μὴ ἀπολέσω ἐξ ἀυτῦ, loſe nothing of it, not the meaneſt, weakeſt perſon, not one mite or grain of grace ſhould be loſt, but I ſhould raiſe it up all at the laſt day. It was not the bare raiſing up, that was the charge God gave unto Chriſt, but the raiſing up to eternal life, Verſe 40. With that perfection of holineſs and grace which God expects as the end of all his diſpenſations; otherwiſe it cannot be a raiſing up to eternal life in ſuch a compleatneſs as God intended in his Charge. This Charge not to loſe any, but to raiſe them up fit to be preſented unto God, without blemiſh, doth include all means and methods in ſubſerviency to this end. And in this Charge they are all implied to be looked after by Chriſt. Chriſt would be no Friend to his Father, ſhould he ſlight his Fathers orders. If he ſhould fail of being a perfect Saviour, where would be his Love and Obedience to God? 'Tis as impoſſible for an elect perſon to periſh, as it is for Chriſt, who is one with the Father, to act contrary to his Fathers Will. For ſince they are given to him, and that on purpoſe to receive eternal life by him, they muſt be preſerved; and all that which prepares them to be veſſels of glory, muſt be ſecured from a total and final miſcarriage, or elſe Chriſt breaks his truſt, diſobeys his Father, and fruſtrates his expectations of a reſt and ſatisfaction in him.

(2.) A Charge which Chriſt muſt give an account of. Officers are to give an account of the management of the truſt repoſed in them; ſo is Chriſt of every believers ſoul. Our Saviour is in ſeveral places called Gods Servant; Servants are to give an account to thoſe that employ them; and it is part of the faithfulneſs of a Servant ſo to do; and Chriſts faithfulneſs is to be glorified. He is a merciful and faithful high prieſt, Heb. 2. 17. faithful to God, as well as merciful to us, and faithful to God in being merciful to us; And by giving account of his mercy to us, he gives an account of his faithfulneſs to God. God expects all to be returned to him in that perfection and conformity to Chriſt, which he deſign'd, when he firſt made the Deed of Gift of them to Chriſt. He will ſee whether a man be loſt, by comparing the number of his ſanctified Ones with the names written in the Book of Life. Some Model of this account we have, Heb. 2. 13. Here am I, and the children which thou haſt given me. When he ſhall deliver up his Charge, and all be numbred, he will tell his Father of the faith of his people, as he did John 17. 6, 8. Thou gaveſt them me; and they have kept thy word. They have received the words which thou gaveſt me, and they have believed that thou didſt ſend me.

me. This is the confeſſion he will make of men before God and his Angels, when he delivers up the Kingdom to his Father. Will Chriſt be found tardy in his accounts? What could he anſwer, if any one, given to him, ſhould be miſſing? How could he ſay, He hath kept them in his Fathers Name, and loſt none, if any ſhould miſcarry? as he did John 17. 12. which is a Copy of what will be ſaid at the laſt.

[2.] As he hath a Charge, ſo there is a Power conferred on him to perform that Charge.

(1.) A Power of Authority. He hath a Power over Death and Hell to this end, Rev. 1. 17, 18. Fear not, I am he that lives; and was dead: and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen, and have the keys of hell and death. The giving the Key is a mark of Authority, and is a ceremony uſed in inveſtitures into office. Chriſt hath the Keys of Death and Hell delivered to him by God, and he hath them to prevent the fears and unbelief of his people; for ſuch a uſe he makes of them here, Fear not. By hell and death are meant all kind of evils which were the bitter conſequents of ſin. Sin opened the mouth of Death, and the gates of Hell; they are the only things which can poſſibly prevail againſt a believer to hurt him. Will not Chriſt keep thoſe faſt lockt up, never to ſend them out upon a believer for his deſtruction? And if Chriſt hath the Keys of Hell and Death, he hath alſo Power to keep his people from that ſtate which will neceſſarily run them into Hell and Death. All the Power Chriſt hath given him over all fleſh, is in ſubſerviency to the performing this charge, John 17. 2. As thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him, ὅσους. Not only a power over thoſe given to him, to give them Eternal Life, but a power over all fleſh, all the corruptions of Men and Devils, in order to this end of giving eternal life to every believer, to as many as God hath given him; ſo that there is not one believer, no not the weakeſt, but all the Power God hath put into the hands of Chriſt over all fleſh, is with a deſign that it ſhould be uſed for his ſecurity. As if God ſhould ſay, Son look to it; If any one that I have given to thee, miſs of eternal life, ſince I have given thee Power over all fleſh for their ſakes, If any ſinful or natural fleſh deprive them of this life, it is for want of thy exerciſing the Power I have granted thee to this purpoſe. Will Chriſt be unfaithful not to exerciſe his Power to the right end? No, Much leſs will he abuſe his Power over all fleſh to an end quite contrary to that for which it was given him. And Chriſt doth ſo exerciſe his Power; for thoſe Righteous Judgments and Juſt reproofs of men in the World, they are for the ſakes of the meek of the Earth, Iſa. 11. 4. With righteouſneſs ſhall he judg the poor, and reprove with equity, for the meek of the earth.

(2.) Power of Ability. Chriſt had the Spirit upon him, to bring forth Judgment to the Gentiles, and Judgment unto truth, or unto victory, Iſa. 42. 4. This rich depoſitum, his Jewels, laid up in the hand of Chriſt, are more highly valued by God than to be intruſted with a weak and feeble keeper.

Ability in reſpect of,

(1.) Strength to lay the foundation of our ſecurity. God made him ſtrong for himſelf for attaining the ends he propoſed, Pſal. 80. 17. Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand: upon the ſon of man whom thou madeſt ſtrong for thy ſelf. So will not we go back from thee: The Death and Mediation of Chriſt is the ſtrongeſt preſervation againſt Apoſtacy: God made Chriſt ſtrong for his own glory, to purchaſe a people that ſhould keep their ſtanding with him, and not fall as Adam did. The effect of the hand of God being upon Chriſt, and the ſtrength he had to go through in his Work, was to keep his peoples wills and hearts cloſe to God. This is the iſſue and inference the Pſalmiſt makes of it. What might in Adam's or Angels hands miſcarry, never ſhall in his.

2. Aſſiſtance in this buſineſs to hold his people ſecure. Tho God gave them to Chriſt as his charge, yet not wholly to leave them in Chriſts hand, and take no care of them himſelf. Tho they were ſafe enough in Chriſts hands, yet the Father to ſhew his care of them, and tenderneſs towards them, would have the keeping of them too; and would have faſt hold as well as his Son, to aſſiſt his Son in it, Joh. 10. 29, 30. My Father which gave them me, is greater than all (greater than Chriſt in his Office of Mediation) and no man is able to pluck them out of my hand. I and my Father are one: God would have his hand upon them to aſſiſt Chriſt in it, to give him the higheſt ſecurity for their happineſs: I and my Father are one; one in Reſolution, Affection, Power, Ability and Conſent in this buſineſs; one in holding of my ſheep; we both have our hands upon them. 'Tis ſtrange that any ſhould periſh, that are graſpt both by the Father and the Son. What Power is able to do it, ſince the Father is greater than all, all men and Devils, corruptions and temptations, and falls in with his greateſt Aſſiſtance to enable Chriſt in this buſineſs?

3. Of knowledg and Wiſdom. He is the Wiſdom of the Father; In him are hid all Treaſures of wiſdom and knowledg, for the advantage of thoſe perſons deſign'd in his commiſſion. The All-wiſe God would never have put ſo great a concern as his own glory in his peoples ſecurity, into unskilful hands, and have diſparaged his own wiſdom in the choice of an unfit Steward. He hath the Book of Gods Decrees delivered to him, therefore called the Lambs book of life, and there he finds every name written, Rev. 21. 27. and he hath their names written in heaven before him: Heb. 12. 23. To the general aſſembly and Church of the firſt-born which are written in heaven. There is a commerce between Chriſt and his Spirit, ſo that by the Spirit he knows the ſtate of every believer; their Offices depend one upon another; Chriſt is the Treaſurer of grace, the Spirit the conveyer of it; He receives of Chriſts, and ſhows it unto us; Chriſt knows what goes out, and he knows to whom the Spirit hands it; knows the mind of the Spirit; he ſearches and liſtens to know the Spirit's mind, what it would have, what is fit to give to the ſoul. The Spirit intercedes in us, Chriſt intercedes for us; Chriſt knows the voice and mind of his own Spirit, and the Spirit knows the will of our Redeemer; for he makes interceſſions for us according to the will of God, Rom. 8. 27. So he cannot but know our ſtate, becauſe he hath a faithful intelligencer, the ſame that is our faithful comforter, and watcheth over us to take care of us. The Catalogue of the gifts he had is reckoned up, Iſa. 11. 2. And the Spirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, the ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, the ſpirit of counſel and might, the ſpirit of knowledg and of the fear of the Lord. All his wiſdom, and knowledg, and counſel, and underſtanding, are managed by the fear of the Lord, which is put laſt, as that which is the end of all the reſt, viz. faithfulneſs to God. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom in us, and the top of wiſdom in Chriſt: His wiſdom and knowledg is to fit him for his faithfulneſs, as ver. 2. and ſhall make him of quick underſtanding in the fear of the Lord, in all the methods of obedience to his charge; and God gave him the tongue of the learned, that he ſhould know how to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to them that are weary, Iſa. 50. 4. i. e. that are weary under ſin, and apprehenſions of wrath, and power of corruptions. The wiſdom God gives him is principally for this end.

4. The ſufficiency of treaſure for it. Chriſt hath a miniſterial fulneſs to this end; it pleaſed the Father that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell, Col. 1. 16. The iſſues of this fulneſs are our reconciliation to God, and the preſenting us holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in Gods ſight, i. e. In ſuch a ſtate that his infinitely pure eye ſhall find no fault in us, v. 20, 21, 22. Theſe are the effects of this fulneſs, and therefore are the end. Tho the condition be put in, v. 23. if you continue in the faith grounded and ſetled, it doth not ſignifie that our continuance in faith depends upon our own wills. 'Tis frequent in Scripture to put into Promiſes thoſe conditions which in other places are promiſed to be wrought in us: So that all thoſe promiſes of life upon our continuing and holding out to the end, do not weaken this, That our preſervation is the effect of this fulneſs, becauſe thoſe conditions are promiſed in other places, and are parts of the Covenant of Grace, for the performance of which this fulneſs was given to our Saviour. Our compleatneſs and perfection doth depend upon that fulneſs of the Godhead which dwells in him bodily, Col. 2. 9, 10. For in him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily. 'Tis a Miniſterial fulneſs, whereby he is made ſanctification to us as well as righteouſneſs, 1 Cor. 1. 30. He is made to us ſanctification, and as much ſanctification, and as perfect ſanctification, as righteouſneſs, or wiſdom, or redemption; ſo that if any of thoſe be perfect, as our righteouſneſs and redemption, our ſanctification alſo ſhall be perfect, tho it be never ſo weak at preſent. The oyl firſt poured upon Chriſts head, as well as that upon Aaron the type, runs down to the skirts of his garments, and anoints all the other members; God poured out this grace firſt upon Chriſt, and through him upon all believers. There is as much a dependance of the grace in our hearts, not only in its birth, but in its continuance, upon this fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, as there is of light in the Moon or Air upon that in the Sun; and there is a conſtant efflux of it from him to expel the darkneſs of ſin, as there is of light from the Sun to conquer the darkneſs in the Air. And indeed were it not maintained by a conſtant influence of Chriſts fulneſs, we ſhould quickly have no more grace left, than Adam juſt after his fall, and ſhould prove as very Bankrupts as the worſt of ſinners. The Sun is not able to dry up a drop of Sea-water that lyes in the midſt of the Sand, which the Sea every minute rouls upon, and preſerves; neither can the fleſh the leaſt grace, while the fulneſs of Chriſt flows out upon it to ſupply it.

5. The perpetuity of this Office. The continuance of Chriſt for ever in an unchangeable Prieſthood, makes him able to ſave to the utmoſt in ſpite of all men and devils, Heb. 7. 24, 25. But this becauſe he continueth for ever, hath an unchangeable prieſthood: wherefore he is able, &c. If he continues for ever in this Office, he will then be for ever able to perform the buſineſs pertaining to the Office, which is to ſave to the utmoſt, εἰς τὸ παντελὲς, perfectly, both in reſpect of the terminus a quo, from which he ſaves; and the terminus ad quem, to which ſalvation tends; from all kind of ſins and corruptions, tho never ſo powerful: but it continues for ever; none can deprive him of his Office, becauſe none can deprive him of his life. God neither can nor will, becauſe he hath conſecrated him by an Oath to be a Prieſt or Officer upon this account for ever: And this Office being conferr'd upon him on purpoſe for the ſalvation of Believers, the ends and effects of this Office are of as long a continuance as the Office it ſelf: For if Chriſt did not perform the end of his Office, it would be but an empty title: and this life which is for ever, Chriſt doth intend to uſe for the ſtanding and perfection of the weakeſt grace; ſo that as long as that endures, the grace and happineſs of a Chriſtian ſtands immovable, Joh. 14. 19. Becauſe I live, you ſhall live alſo; you ſhall live a ſpiritual life here, and an eternal life hereafter; all my life ſhall be employed for you, to communicate a gracious life to you, and preſerve it in you, till it come to be ſwallowed up in a life of glory with me for ever. If the Spring of Chriſts life fail, then and not till then may the ſtream of ours; grace cannot be deſtroyed while Chriſts life is continued, which will be for ever, Rev. 1. 18. I live for evermore. A creature under the full beams of the Sun, cannot be cold, till the light and heat of the Sun be extinguiſhed.

6. Honour. By this God encourageth Chriſt in this buſineſs; Chriſt hath his Honour to this end. Places of Truſt among men, are Places of Honour. Will Chriſt be careleſs of his own happineſs and glory? He was exalted to give repentance and forgiveneſs of ſin, Act. 5. 41. The grace of repentance is only mentioned, but by conſequence all the reſt which accompany remiſſion of ſins, are intended. What was the reaſon he had ſo great a glory conferred upon him? Becauſe he loved righteouſneſs, and hated iniquity, Heb. 1. 9. Pſal. 45. 7. Becauſe he manifeſted this love and hatred, by vindicating the righteouſneſs of God, and ſetting up an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and taking away iniquity. Now this diſpoſition of loving righteouſneſs, and hating iniquity, muſt needs be as powerful in him in Heaven, as it was before: nay he muſt needs love this diſpoſition the better, which was the cauſe of ſo great an exaltation. And if this diſpoſition was the reaſon of his advancement, ſhould this diſpoſition languiſh in him, his very advancement would decay with it. If it were the reaſon why he was exalted, it muſt then follow, that he was exalted that he might ſtill love righteouſneſs, and hate iniquity; and διὰ τοῦτο may imply ſo much; for this end, for the exerciſe of this he was anointed with the oyl of gladneſs above his fellows. Since therefore this affection continues in him, is it poſſible he ſhould endure to ſee that iniquity which he hates, prevail over that righteouſneſs which he loves, after he hath planted one in the heart, and ſubdued the other? The Apoſtle prays, 2 Theſ. 1. 11, 12. That God would fulfil the work of faith with power. That the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt may be glorified in you. The name of Christ is glorified in a believer, when the work of faith is fulfilled with power. It makes his Crown shine the brighter. What hopes then have the Devil and corruption, of ever regaining their former standing in a believing soul? None, Till the Glory of Christ become vile in his own eyes.

(3.) As there is a Charge and Office given by God to Christ, and an Ability to perform, so there is a compliance of Christ with it; which appears,

(1.) In his Faithfulness in the discharge of it to this end. He promiseth this; he promised it to his Father in their agreement, else he had never been sent. He promises it to us. In John 6. 39. there is Gods charge to him, that he should lose nothing of what he had given to him, but raise it up. In v. 40. there is his one absolute promise, I will raise them up at the last day i. e. every believer; where he engageth himself to be faithful in the performance of Gods Will. He hath given a full evidence of it already, in finishing the work God gave him to do upon the earth, Joh. 17. 4. I have glorified thee on earth, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. For he appeals to God for his faithfulness in this particular. And he will be no less faithful in finishing the work, which is to be yet done by him in heaven, in the behalf of his people, and their graces; for such a work he hath to do, Heb. 12. 2. A finisher of faith, in his sitting at Gods right hand. His faithful care extends to all his subjects, even the weakest, as well as the highest Believer, as Gods Providence doth to every creature, the lowest worm, as well as the highest Angel. They are all one in Christ, whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free, Gal. 3. 8. They are all one to him, for he is faithful in the exercise of his Office to every one.

(2.) In his affection (and that a strong one) to this Office, besides his faithfulness, such as,

(1.) His stirring compassions to weak Grace. These were great in him before the assumption of our nature, Exod. 33. 2, 3. I will send an Angel before thee, for I will not go up in the midst of thee, for thou art a stiff necked people, lest I consume thee in the way. They will give me so many provocations, that it shall be as a consuming fire; as God must needs be in a way of Justice, when he treats with a sinful people himself. But I will send an Angel; What Angel was this? 'Tis called his presence, v. 14. Isaiah puts them both together, Isa. 63. 9. and calls him the Angel of Gods Presence or Face. Jesus Christ the Messenger of his Favour; He shall go up, for he hath compassion; therefore it is said, Isa. 63. 9. In his pity he redeemed them. The Antitheſis doth easily manifest this sense. He shall go up with thee, and he shall not consume thee, tho thou art a stiff necked people, because he is Mediator, and hath undertaken to satisfie my consuming Justice, and being designed by assuming of your nature to be kin to you, hath great compassions towards that nature, his delights are among the Sons of men. For God here is considered as a Judge, and the Angel of his presence as a Mediator. The Government of them by Christ, is here appointed for their security, which they could not have under the immediate government of God. His compassions are in some sense greater now than they were then, since he hath been made like unto us, and compassed with our infirmities, and hath learned obedience (the necessity of obedience to the mediatory law) by the things which he suffered. Infirmity is the Object of compassion, and the more pressing the infirmity is, the more stirring is the pity. As God pities the more, when he remembers they are but dust, and knows their frame, Psal. 103. 13, 14. So doth Christ know thy frame, thy believing frame, how weak it is; thy sinful frame, how strong it is; he knows thy enemies, and he knows thy indigence, and how unprovided thou art of thy self to make a stout resistance; and this awakens his compassion. As the sickly faint child hardly able to go, and not the strong one, is the Object of the Fathers pity. The weaker thy faith, which lies mixt with a world of strong corruptions, the more will Christ be affected with thy case, and pity that Grace of his own, which suffers under them; for to this end his heart was stored with bowels to be exercised upon such occasions. He cannot have a greater Object of pity, than his own Grace at the lowest ebb, nor a fitter opportunity to show what a Priest he is, how merciful to man in his misery, how faithful to God in his interest, which was the end of his being cloathed with our infirmities, firmities, Heb. 2. 17. That very ſin which he hates, which is a burden, a grief, a trouble to him, ſhall rather excite, than damp his compaſſion. It ſhall draw out his bowels to thy perſon and thy grace, and his anger only againſt thy ſin. If he hath any compaſſions in Heaven, they are for thoſe that are his own, and for that grace which he loves, when it is ſhot at by powerful corruptions.

(2.) A choice love to the weakeſt believers and their Grace. The having a ſeed is the greateſt Article that he inſiſted on in his firſt agreement with God in this Mediatory Work. He was ſatisfied with the promiſes of it, for all the ſatisfaction he was to give to God by his blood, Iſa. 53. 10, 11. He ſhall ſee his ſeed, and the travel of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied. And in his laſt prayer, John 17. he prays more for his people and their graces, than for himſelf, to ſhow that his ſeed lay then neareſt his heart, and that his ſoul travelled moſt with them. And ſhall that which he had an intire affection for in the firſt agreement between his Father and himſelf be ſlighted now after all his Agonies, Pains, Sweat and Blood to gain it? When he was in the fleſh, he admired not the buildings of the Temple, had no fondneſs for the pomp of the world or the ſplendor of a Princes Court. No. The faith of the Centurion was the matter of his Wonder. That of a Canaaniti∫h Woman, and the penitent love of a converted harlot, the Object of his Affection. The revelation of God to babes and ſucklings, the ſubject of his Thanksgiving. He had more deſire to recover a little languiſhing grace to its former vigor, than to preſerve his life. When he was near his ſentence of condemnation, he would in that extremity look back upon Peter to inſpire him with a new ſtrength after his fall, and by rallying his ſcattered Graces, make him victorious who had been ſo miſerably baſled by his corrupt fears. Would it be correſpondent to the ſincere love of Chriſt, to let that which is his ſpecial favourite lye groveling in the duſt, wounded to death by ſin, his hateful enemy?

(3.) His delight in believers and their graces. The very firſt grace acted by a new convert cauſes a Jubilee in Heaven. Chriſt as it were makes a feaſt in Heaven when the loſt ſheep is found, and calls upon all the Angels to congratulate with him for the recovery of it. Surely he will never have this joy turned into ſorrow, theſe graces rifled and routed by the Devil, and ſo give him occaſion to laugh or ſcoff both at himſelf and the Angels for their too forward joy. He was glad even of ſad occaſions contrary to his nature, when they might further the increaſe of a little Faith. When Lazarus was dead, he was glad he was not there in the time of his ſickneſs, to hinder the death of a friend he loved, becauſe by his raiſing him again, his diſciples might be confirmed in faith, and gain a greater power againſt their frequent doubts and unbelief. John 11. 15. I am glad for your ſakes that I was not there, to the intent that you may believe. If Paul calls the Philippians his Joy and Crown, becauſe he inſtrumentally converted them, believers then are Chriſts Joy and Crown, becauſe he effectually died for them. Will Chriſt have his Joy torn from his heart, his Jewels rifled from his Crown, and his Crown pluckt from his head? What was that Joy of his which he deſires of his Father to be fulfilled in his diſciples, Joh. 17. 13. but the Sanctification of his people, which he prays for? The very diſcourſe of the fruitfulneſs of his Saints Graces chears his heart, Joh. 15. 11: Theſe things I have ſpoken to you, that my joy might remain in you. i. e. That I might rejoice in you. He delights in the beauty; i. e. the Graces of his Queen, Pſal. 45. 11. So ſhall the king greatly deſire thy beauty. And will he not encreaſe his own pleaſure by encreaſing the ſpiritual beauty and graces of a believer? He doth boaſt of believers which are his heritage, Pſal 16. 6: The lines are fallen to me in pleaſant places, yea I have a goodly heritage. And can we think he will not improve it? It muſt be more pleaſure to enjoy it flouriſhing, than to poſſeſs it waſted. And Chriſt doth not repent of any undertaking of his for the happineſs aud ſecurity of his people, Hoſ. 13. 14. I will ranſom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death. Oh death I will be thy plagues, Oh grave I will be thy deſtruction, repentance ſhall be hid from mine eyes. 'Tis the Speech of Chriſt triumphing over death. That it is meant of Chriſt, the word פדה to redeem with a price, and גאל to redeem jure affinitatis, do evince. It includes the conqueſt of all other enemies, as the Apoſtle deſcants upon it, 1 Cor. 15. 55, 56, 57. Sin and the Curſes of the law; of this he would not repent; repentance ſhall be hid from my eyes. I will caſt away any motion to it, that it ſhall never come more in my ſight. If he rejoices in this redemption, he will alſo in the effects of it upon the hearts of his people. Theſe affections are unchangeable as his office. If that be perpetual, Heb. 7. 24. the qualifications neceſſary to that Office muſt be as perpetual as his Office it ſelf. Chriſt is the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever, Heb. 13. 8. The ſame in credit with his Father, faithfulneſs to his charge, affection to his people, ability for his office, fulneſs of his Perſon, virtue of his blood, compaſſions to his weeping, gaſping new Creature, and his hatred of that which doth oppreſs it. And when there is ſuch a combination in the heart of Chriſt, and the end of all is the good of theſe poor bruiſed reeds his believing Creatures; can we think it poſſible, that thoſe affections ſhould be idle? And if they be excited, as undoubtedly they will, they will attain their ends, being all armed with a mighty Power for the effecting of them.

Well then, Let us act faith upon theſe engagements of Chriſt, and ſay with him in the Pſalm, Pſal. 48. 13. This God is our God for ever and ever, he will be our guide, even unto death, and beyond death too. 'Tis his Office to guide by his Counſel here, thoſe that he will bring to glory hereafter. Lord Jeſus, direct us by thy counſel here as parts of thy charge, and bring us to glory as veſſels of thy mercy to be filled with everlaſting riches of Grace, cheriſh our bruiſed reeds and enflame our ſmoking flax.

[4.] The Author of Grace. He keeps this Treaſure in his own hands. He is ſo choice of it, that he never intruſted an Angel to beſtow it. Angels were employed to ſtrengthen him both after his Temptation and in his Agony; They are miniſtring ſpirits to the heirs of Salvation; But they have not the cuſtody of that which brings them into a ſtate of heirſhip. He employs none but his Spirit to be his Attourny and Deputy in the World to this purpoſe; which Spirit is ſent in his name, John 14. 26. What it beſtows, it receives from Chriſt, and doth it by his order, John 16. 14. He ſhall glorifie me, in doing my work, for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhow it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine, therefore ſaid I, that he ſhall take of mine, and ſhow it unto you. To his Glory, and by communication from him, all the ſaving light in our underſtanding, that vital Principle in our Will, thoſe ſupernatural impreſſions upon our Affections, are all handed to us from Chriſt by the Spirit, and wrought in us by our Redeemers order. 'Tis all his work by his Proxy. The Father is the Fountain of Grace, Chriſt the Treaſurer, the Spirit the diſpenſer. 'Twas his prerogative to be the Author of Faith, when he endured the Croſs and deſpiſed the ſhame, Heb. 12. 2. Looking unto Jeſus the author and finiſher of our faith, who for the joy ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of the Throne of God, that he might thereby be the Author of Faith. And he will not loſe the other part of his Royalty to be the finiſher of it, for that is his Title too, and he performs this by ſitting at the right hand of the Throne of God. There he ſits upon a Throne of Grace to diſtribute Grace upon every emergency, to finiſh that faith which is the weakeſt, and becauſe 'tis the weakeſt, needs moſt aſſiſtance for its relief and perfection, and wants his greateſt care for the ſupport of it, Heb. 4. 15, 16. Let us therefore (i. e. becauſe we have not a high Prieſt, which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities) come boldly to the throne of Grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace, εἰς εὔκαιρον βοήθειαν an Emphatical word καιρὸς ſignifies ſeaſon without the addition of the Adverb ἐν in the compoſition. He gives out Mercy from thence for the remiſſion of ſin, and diſpenſeth grace for a ſeaſonable help. 'Tis then moſt ſeaſonable, when habitual Grace is weakeſt in it ſelf, and its enemy ſtrongeſt. If he would be the Author of Faith by his death, becauſe of the joy ſet before him, he will be no leſs the finiſher of it by his life, becauſe of the joy poſſeſſed by him. This being his work ſince his return to glory, his care to look after both the ſupporting and compleating bruiſed and imperfect faith, is greater, becauſe hereby he ſhows more of his art (as maſters reſerve the compleating of a work to themſelves for the honour of their own skill) and manifeſts more of his faithfulneſs to God, which is more evident in the perfection of a thing, than the firſt draught of it. And perhaps this may be meant by that expreſſion, he learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered, Heb. 5. 8, 9. And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal ſalvation unto all them that obey him. He learned by his ſufferings the neceſſity and the acceptableneſs of obedience to God in this Mediatory work, and therefore will not be wanting to that part of faithfulneſs and obedience, which is ſtill due, in being the Author of eternal Salvation, by his being made perfect in Heaven, as he was the Author of Faith by his being humbled upon the earth. And indeed that grace which he gives is eternal life, for ſo he calls it, John 17.2,3. What he calls eternal life, which he had power to give, he calls, v. 3. The knowledg of God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom God had ſent. The knowledg of God in Chriſt, a gracious affectionate knowledg of faith, ſpiritually to know him as ſent by God, for ſuch great ends, is faith and eternal life. Tho it be but a bud in this world, ſubject to ſtorms and winds, mixed with much ignorance and doubts, yet it is life, and eternal too. For there is no eſſential difference between grace and glory, but only in degree; Therefore Chriſt ſaith ſo frequently in John, I give unto them eternal life; I give; not I will give, but I give at preſent; and he that believes hath eternal life, not ſhall have; for grace is a preſerving Principle, which ſhall over-power the corruptive principle of ſin. If this knowledg of God in Chriſt, implanted in the ſoul, ſhould periſh, it cannot then deſerve the Title Chriſt gives it: And indeed it is not agreeable to the Wiſdom of God, and the honour of his Son, to caſt about ſo much, and contrive the ſending of Chriſt, to beſtow only a periſhing gift, and to let the honour and fruit of his ſons death, his gift of Grace, depend upon the mutable Will of man.

Well then, To be the Author and Finiſher of Faith, are his Two Titles combined together; and therefore where he is the Author, he is engaged to be the Finiſher of the weakeſt Grace; the ſmalleſt ſtar receives its light, and the preſervation of it from the Sun, as well as that of the greateſt magnitude.

[5.] The exemplar and pattern of Grace. God ſet up Chriſt as the great ſtandard or ſtanding copy, according to which all believers ſhould be framed and wrought juſt like him, Rom. 8. 29. Whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt born among many brethren; To the image of his Son; Not to the image of the moſt glorious man that ever was in the World. Not to Enoch, that ſignal walker with God, nor Noah the only loyal preacher of righteouſneſs in his time; Nor Abraham, Gods Friend and the believers Father. But his own ſon, who was free from all taint of ſin. As his perfect purity made him fit to be a ſacrifice to take away ſin, 1 John 3. 5. To be an Advocate to plead againſt ſin, 1 Joh. 2. 1. Jeſus Chriſt, the righteous; So alſo to be the Idea according to which all believers ſhould be framed. Now the weakeſt habitual Grace is an inchoative conformity to Chriſt as well as the ſtrongeſt, and as well as that which is perfected in Heaven, and hath in its own nature all the parts of that grace which is in Chriſt. As an infant in his body hath the lineaments of his Father, as well as the grown ſon. 1 Joh. 16. And of his fulneſs have all we received grace for grace. Grace in us ſuited to that Grace which is in Chriſt, as ſome well expreſs it; as the Paper receives the Image of every letter ſet in the Preſs. The higheſt believer in the world was not wrought according to a more exact mode, than the loweſt. The meaneſt branch of Gods affectionate foreknowledg is conformed to Chriſt, and the higheſt cannot have a more excellent pattern. The Spirit in drawing Grace in the ſoul fixeth his eye upon Chriſt in every line he draws, and forms the lineaments of habitual grace in ſome proportion to that original. Here we are ſaid to be συμμορφοι of the ſame ſpiritual form and ſhape with the image of his Son. 'Tis therefore called a forming of Chriſt, Gal. 4. 19, A changing into the ſame image, 2 Cor. 3. 18. μεταμορφούμεθα Metamorphozed from our natural into a ſpiritual ſhape, from glory to glory, from grace, glory begun, to glory; grace perfected. There is not only the ſhape of Chriſt, as a limner draws the picture of a man, but not the intellectual or moral endowments; but in this draught of grace in ſome meaſure there is. Believers are therefore ſaid to have the ſpirit of Chriſt, Rom. 8. 9. The ſame diſpoſitions of holineſs, &c. which were in Chriſt. The ſame mind which was in Chriſt, Phil. 2. 5. And to be partakers of Chriſt, Heb. 3. 14. Not of a part of Chriſt; partakers of his purchaſe, of his Grace, grace, of his nature; And that by Faith, by holding the beginning of our confidence, our first ground of Faith, and our first act of Faith, stedfast to the end. And are called his Brethren, not by the human nature, (for so all men are) but by a nature like his. Now the end of this conformity being that Christ might have brethren, and many brethren; can we imagine he would have one brother among the Sons of men, if this conformity to Christ were to be preserved by our own power? Certainly that tempter who would have deprived us of a Saviour, by making him to cast himself down from the Pinacle of the Temple, would quickly deprive us of his Image, by hurling it down from the Pinacle of our hearts, and dashing all the dirt of Hell upon it: And so the end of God in this absolute will of conforming us to Christ, being thereby to make him the first-born among many brethren, would be frustrate. For if any one true believer, thus conformed to Christ, might totally and finally fall, then a second, and third might, and all till you come to the last man of them. And if we were left to our own care, we should as certainly lose this Image, as Adam did in innocency. Can we preserve our spiritual life without this constant influence of Gods grace, when we cannot our natural without an uninterrupted stream of his Providence? And when Adam did not will to preserve himself without the influx of Gods grace preserving him in the integrity of his Nature?

Well then: will Christ suffer one to perish who hath the same nature, spirit and mind which he himself hath? Will he endure that his own Picture, Limn'd by the Art of his Spirit, with the colours of his own Blood, in so near a resemblance to him, that he hath not his Image again in any thing in the World besides it, and this drawn for his own glory, that he might be a Head among many Brethren; will he suffer so excellent a Piece as this to be torn in pieces, in contempt of him, either by flesh or devils?

[6.] As the head and husband of believers, by vertue of Union with them. Union in all bodies is the ground of stability. There is no straiter Union in the World than that of Christ to believers; 'tis therefore compared to all kind of Unions, natural and political, to show the firmness of a believers state upon all accounts. He is the head, believers the members; He is the root, they the branches; He the Husband, they the Wife. The bands of this Union are, on Christs part, the Spirit; on our parts Faith and Love. The greatness of the Person he sends, to bind it close on his part, shows the high delight he hath in it; and shall he not as much delight in continuing this Union by preserving that Faith and Love which knits us to him? Christs delight shall not be quenched, nor the Spirits Operation prove fruitless.

This will further appear by showing what kind of Union this is,

(1.) 'Tis a Marriage Union, and as a natural Union of head and members. Both are discoursed on together by the Apostle, Eph. 5. 28, 29, 30. He that loves his wife, loves himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the Church. For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. Where exhorting Husbands to love their Wives, he sets Christ as a Copy to enforce it upon them. And Verse 32. he seems to intimate, That his whole discourse, wherein he began to speak of the Love of Christ to the Church, from Verse 25. did refer to this, No man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth it, ἐκτρέφει, provides for it, and θάλπει, clothes it, and beautifies it, and defends it against the injuries of the weather. So doth Christ nourish the graces of his people, and protects them against the temptations of Satan. What Prince would without resistance see a Traytor wrest his beloved Queen from his arms, and cut her Throat?

The Apostle from this passes to mix both those Unions together, and illustrates one by the other, Verse 30. We are members of his body, of his flesh, &c. alluding to Eve's being taken out of Adam's side. And not only the Church in general, but every believing member, We are members of his body; we believers, and every one of us. It being thus, 'tis impossible Christ can do any other than nourish and cherish his own body, and every member of it, his own Spouse. For in doing so, he loves himself, Ver. 28. as a Head, as a Husband, his mystical self, and his own honour, which is concerned in his spouse. No man ever yet hated his own flesh. Whatsoever is implanted in our Nature as a perfection of it, is eminently in God: now ſince he hath twiſted with our Nature a care of our own bodies, this care muſt be much more in the Nature of Chriſt, becauſe he hath a higher Affection to his myſtical Body than we can have to our natural; for he is ſet here as the Exemplar; and Originals are always more excellent than the Copied draughts. Would not every man improve both the beauty and ſtrength of his own body, take care to preſerve it from wounds, and to heal them when they are receiv'd, and not ſuffer the fleſh to be mangled, unleſs it be for the ſecurity of the whole? This would be a hatred of his own fleſh, which never any man in his right wits was guilty of. Shall Chriſt then let ſpots always defile his Body, and wounds putrify it for want of curing? Shall he let ſin within, and the devil without, gnaw, ſlaſh and cut his members, and ſtand by unconcerned? Will he ſuffer the leaſt member of his body to be torn from him by his Enemies? Shall our Affectionate Redeemer, that hath taken upon him to be our Head, and to cauſe this Union, and delights in it, be the firſt that ſhall do ſuch an unnatural act, and be worſe natured to his Body, than the wickedſt man in the World is to his? Men do not uſe to cut off a Finger for every Wart or Wen, or for every Wound that hath putrefaction in it. Chriſt doth not cut off believers for their infirmities, he would then cut off his own members. Men rather uſe diſeaſed parts with more tenderneſs, becauſe they ſtand in more need of it. Chriſt therefore will much more cheriſh the afflicted part, and chaſe the Diſeaſe away. Certainly believers being members of his Body, he muſt naturally care for their ſtate, eſpecially for that grace which is the band of Union, and the vital Spirit in all his members. Will he ever ſuffer that to decay for want of Food? Chriſt hath not only the Name, but the Affection of a Head; and it is his Office by Union, (and not only ſo, but his Nature) as well as his Fathers Charge, to be careful of the preſervation of his members. Shall he feel what is done againſt his People by perſecutors? And will he not be much more ſenſible of what the fleſh, that grand Tyrant and Perſecutor of his Peoples graces, doth againſt his Body, as well as what the leſſer and more extrinſical Enemies execute?

Objection. But if it be ſaid, That there is no doubt of Chriſts faithfulneſs to us while we continue faithful to him; but we may caſt off Chriſt from being our Husband; and we being not natural, but myſtical members, may cut off our ſelves.

Anſwer. Againſt this the Covenant ſecures, Jer. 32. 40. I will make an everlaſting Covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me. The fear he hath put into our hearts, keeps us from ever departing from him. Beſides, there is a ſtronger ſtay, God will not turn from us, to do us good, even the higheſt good, all the good he can. God ſtores us with habitual grace, and ſtands by it. 'Tis Gods keeping cloſe to us, ſecures us from turning our backs upon him. Again, Chriſts Love to keep, is arm'd with gracious Omnipotency to effect it, which no Husband in the World hath over his Wife, nor any man over any members of his Body.

(2.) 'Tis ſo ſtrong a Union intenſively, that Chriſt and a Regenerate man become one ſpirit, 1 Cor. 6. 17. But he that is joyned to the Lord, is one ſpirit, κολλώμενος, glued. One Spirit, as if they had but one Soul in two Bodies. What the Spirit doth in Chriſt, it doth alſo in a believer, according to the capacity of his Soul. The ſame Spirit which was the immediate conveyer of grace to the human Nature of Chriſt, is ſo to us. Chriſt had an eſſential holineſs in reſpect of his Godhead, but a derivative holineſs as man. And this derivative holineſs proceeded from the Spirit in him without meaſure, which we have in our meaſures. And by virtue of this Union, by the ſame ſpirit whereby you become one ſpirit with Chriſt, not only that grace which is in you and the greateſt Apoſtle, are the ſame; but that grace which is in you and our great Mediator the Man Chriſt Jeſus, are of the ſame Nature and Original: As the light of the Sun and the light of a Star are the ſame, but they differ in degrees, not eſſentially: And as we ſay of Souls, Animæ ſunt pares dignitate:

dignitate, tho the actions are not the ſame, becauſe of the indiſpoſition of the Organs, and the predominancy of ſome particular humor. 'Tis the ſame Spirit in Chriſt and a believer, as it is the ſame Soul, in Dignity, which is in an Infant and a Man of the moſt refined parts. 'Tis more here, for tis the ſame Spirit in reſpect of his perſon, which makes Chriſt very near of kin to us. This Spirit muſt either deſert Chriſt, or us, before this Union can be diſſolved. Not Chriſt, for he had it in the World not by meaſure; and he is yet Anointed with the Oil of gladneſs above his fellows. Not us, becauſe the Promiſes of Chriſt cannot be broken. This being the top-ſtone of the comfort of believers, in ſending this Comforter, that he was to abide for ever.

(3.) This Union of the Soul to Chriſt is ſtrengthned by the Union of Chriſt to the Father, John 17. 23. I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one, εἰς ἓν, into one. First the Father in Chriſt, and then Chriſt in believers. So that whatſoever fulneſs, ſtrength, grace, the Father gives to Chriſt by virtue of his Union with him, and which is communicable to his members, the ſame hath the Soul by virtue of its Union with Chriſt. And both theſe Unions, that of the Father with Chriſt, and that of Chriſt with us, are for the perfection of all thoſe that ſhould be with him to the end of the World, even the weakeſt as well as the ſtrongeſt: For it refers to Verſe 20. But we muſt underſtand this, not of that eſſential Union between the Father and the Son, as they are one eſſence, but of the Union of the Father to Chriſt as Mediator, in reſpect of the Fathers influence upon him, and aſſiſtance of him. Chriſt being the medium of our Union with God, both the Fathers Union with him, and his with us, are for our perfection. Becauſe whatſoever grace Chriſt hath, by virtue of his Union with the Father, is to be communicated to us according to our capacity, or employed for us according to our neceſſity. And from this Union it is, that God Loves believers as he Loved Chriſt, Verſe 23. That the world may know that thou haſt loved them, as thou haſt loved me. Chriſt himſelf made no queſtion but the Father loved believers as he loved him their Head, amore ſimilitudinis, not æqualitatis; but Chriſt would have the World know it, and themſelves know it too, and therefore would have them ſanctified, and at laſt perfected. From this paſſage, I think, this will plainly follow, That as Chriſt cannot miſcarry becauſe of his Union with the Father, whereby he hath a continual influence from him; ſo neither can a believer by virtue of his Union with Chriſt, which inveſts him in the ſame love which the Father bears to Chriſt.

Methinks the Apoſtle refers to this paſſage, Col. 3. 3. Our life is hid with Chriſt in God. Our life is hid with Chriſt by virtue of our Union with him, as Chriſt is in God by Union with the Father. Chriſt in God, and our life in Chriſt. The fleſh then and the devils may as well pull God out of Heaven, and overthrow the ſecurity of Chriſt, and pull him from the right hand of the Father, as rob a true believer of his ſpiritual life, or pull grace, which is Chriſt formed in the heart, out of the ſoul of a new creature.

(4.) From this Union with Chriſt doth reſult a communion with him, which ſecures grace in a believers heart. A communion with him in his death, and from thence a perfection. So the Apoſtle argues, Rom. 6. 5, 6. If we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death, we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection: Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, &c. If we are planted with him in the likeneſs of his death, for the deſtruction of the body of ſin, we ſhall grow up with him in the likeneſs of his Reſurrection, for the perpetual life of grace. For by our dying with him we are freed from ſin; i. e. from ſerving ſin, and yielding up our ſelves to it. And this communion in his death, will introduce a communion with him in his life, Verſe 8. Therefore as Chriſt being raiſed again, dies no more; ſo a Chriſtian being Regenerate and raiſed from a death in ſin (which ſpiritually anſwers to the Reſurrection of the Body of Chriſt) cannot ſpiritually die again, Verſe 9, 10, 11. For Chriſt formed in the heart dies no more there, than Chriſt exalted in Heaven doth. And after an exhortation, that they ſhould not obey ſin in the luſts thereof, whereby he ſhows what this communion with Chriſt in his Reſurrection is, not a total preſent freedom from ſin, but a not obeying ſin in its luſts and motions, ons, not reverencing the commands of it, as if it were our Lord, not yielding our selves to its service, but to the service of God, V. 12,13.(which is a good Comment upon those places, which some have made an erroneous use of,and from which they do at this day cry up an absolute perfection in this life,1 John 3.9. 1 John 5.18.whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remains in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. He cannot Morally, because of the seed of God, and strong habit of grace fed by union to, and communion with Christ.) I say, after this exhortation, this is the final inference the Apostle makes, Verse 14. Sin shall not have dominion over you, for you are not under the law, but under grace; i. e. by virtue of your being in the covenant of grace, united to the Mediator of that covenant, who as Surety hath satisfied the Law for you, and brought it about that you are no more under the Law, but under grace. And having a communion with him in his Death and Resurrection, you are in the same stable state inchoatively as Christ himself is, and you will be at last perfectly so in Heaven. For that is the strength of the Apostles reasoning, as you will find perusing that Chapter at your leasure, viz. To show that it was impossible that any one that was in the covenant of grace, should abuse that grace to a licentiousnes in sin, and a devoted affection to it, because if he had been once planted into that likeness of Christs death, he is freed from sin, and will be planted in the likeness of Christs Resurrection; and therefore it will be impossible for him to be under the reign of sin. And to encourage them to keep up their standing against sin,he assures them, that sin shall have no dominion over them; as nothing makes a man fight more couragiously in a Battel,than to be sure of Victory. Union cannot be without Communion.For while the members are united to a living sound head,there will be an influx of Animal spirits, whereby they shall partake of life and motion. The spirit from our Mystical Head will be working in us, providing for us, and standing by us for our preservation.

Well then: sum up this together, That this Union is a Marriage Union, and that thereby we become the body of Christ, yea, and are acted by the same spirit; add the Union of the Father with Christ as well as that of Christ with us; and the communion both of his Death and Resurrection resulting from this Union; And if those be not strong enough to hold and secure a true believer tho he hath but little strength, he may then, and not till then, totally and finally fall away.

[7.] An Advocate of grace in respect of his intercession. Christs Office being that of an Advocate, doth ascertain this truth. An Advocate is so to plead his Clients right, that he may gain the victory over his Adversary in the suit. Christ being an Advocate that always entertains a good cause, will certainly so manage it, that grace shall at length prove victorious.

(1.) The concerns of Grace are the principal subject of his intercession.

[1.] Our standing in Grace. Our first access by Faith is the immediate fruit of his death in reconciling us. But our actual Salvation, and all the methods of it, are the fruits of his life, Rom. 5. 2. By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoyce in hope of the glory of God.

The Apostle in that Verse mentions three things.

1. Our access by Faith.

2. Our standing in this Grace, whereunto we have access.

3. Our joy in the hopes of all the fruits of it. All which are ascribed not only to his death, but to his life, and the two last principally to that, Verse 10. 11. By his death he takes away the partition-wall between God and us, built on our parts by sin, and on Gods part by the hand of Justice. By his life he preserves this access free and open, and secures the wall from ever being built up again to hinder our access; which would be, if sin should prevail: for if sin builds it on our part, justice could not but re-build it on Gods part, were it not for the Life of Christ, which doth as much maintain our standing, as his Death did work our reconciliation, otherwise the Apostle could not have put a much more to it. For by this Life of Christ we can joy in God as our Friend, who was formerly our Enemy; because by Christ thus living, we receive the atonement; i. e. it is continually nually applied to us, v. 11. by whom we have now received the atonement, ἐλάβομεν, Aoriſt. juſt now, the fruits of the atonement; and by this conſtant application of the Atonement, our ſtanding is ſecured with joy; for in receiving the atonement made by his death from him now living, we receive all the other fruits of his purchaſe. Hence he is ſaid to prepare Heaven for us, i. e. by keeping up the favour of God towards us, that when we come we may have the kindeſt reception, juſt as he doth make us meet below for the inheritance of the Saints in light by his Spirit.

[2.] Our progreſs in ſanctification. The keeping his Seed from the evil, and preſerving of them, is the main matter of all that prayer, John 17. 15. Keep them from the evil; ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ: From the Devil, the head of ſin, from all ſorts of evils; evils within, and evils without; which implies not only a deſire negatively, that they might not be hurt by evil, but alſo that they might overcome it, and be improved by it. And that no believer ſhould be diſcouraged, and think himſelf out of Chriſts thoughts, he preſents to his Father the whole generation of them to the end of the world, v. 20. He holds up here all his ſeed, as it were, in his hand, as thoſe to whom he would have thoſe petitions then put up, anſwered in time, to every one of them, weak and ſtrong, to the very laſt man that ſhould give up his name to him; every one that ſhould believe through the Apoſtles word; their word miniſterially, becauſe committed to them to be delivered down by them from age to age: So that the ſame Goſpel being now preached in the world, and producing the fruit of faith in any ſoul, entitles him to the benefits of this prayer. In his recovery of Peter by his prayer on earth, he ſets a pattern of what he would do for all his people in heaven, Luke 22. 32. but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren: Which is evidenced by thoſe words, When thou art converted, &c. Tell them, that the rallying of thy routed faith, was by the prevalency of my prayer; and that they may expect the like from me in their Temptations: That their faith ſhall not fail, but rather get a ſurer ſtanding, as indeed Peter's did, who tho he ſo ſhamefully denied his Maſter under the power of the temptation, yet was the moſt forward afterwards to confeſs him in the teeth of his Adverſaries. As Paul's converſion was a Pattern to after-ages of the power of his grace for the turning the moſt Giant like ſinners, ſo was this a pattern of the force of his interceſſion for the preſervation and further ſanctification of oppreſt believers. Theſe words, ſtrengthen thy brethren, would be of little force if it were not a leading caſe, and that Chriſt intended to make it a Rule of Court for the comfort of his people that are like Peter, having the revelation of Chriſt from God, and not from fleſh and blood.

3. The keeping the Covenant firm in both the parts of it, as the foundation of both theſe. Therefore in the ſolemn appearance of God in Prophetick Viſions, relating to the Goſpel diſpenſation, both before the manifeſtation of Chriſt, and ſince, the Throne of God is encircled with a Rain-bow. But the place I would conſider is Jer. 30. 21, 22. And their governour ſhall proceed from the midſt of them, and I will cauſe him to draw near, and he ſhall approach unto me: for who is this that engageth his heart to approach unto me, ſaith the Lord? and you ſhall be my people, and I will be your God. God cauſeth Chriſt to draw near, and gives him a power of mediating: I will cauſe him to draw near. Chriſt accepts it, he ſhall approach unto me; Who? their Governour that ſhall proceed from the midſt of them. God then breaks out into a delightful aſtoniſhment at this approach of Chriſt to him as a Surety and Advocate, ſo that he gives out all bleſſings upon his asking, Who is this that hath engaged his heart? ערב את־לבו hath pawned his heart, hath become a Surety in his heart; ſo the word is uſed and tranſlated, Gen. 44. 30. ערב את הנער Thy Servant hath become a Surety for the lad; and likewiſe Prov. 6. 1. if thou be ſurety for thy friend. This is that which makes the Covenant firm, and preſerves the knot between God and us. Ver. 22. You ſhall be my people, and I will be your God: I underſtand it of the Mediation of Chriſt in general, but with a particular application to his interceſſion, as being a great part of that Mediation, and the principal, if not the only continued act of it. Now as long as thoſe engagements of his heart, thoſe affections remain, he hath liberty as a Surety to approach to God, which he will always have; and as long as God delights in it, as here he doth even to admiration, ſo long ſhall believers be Gods people, and he their God. Certainly ſuch an anſwer doth

Chriſt

Chriſt receive upon every act of his interceſſion, even a covenant-anſwer: God ſaith, That poor weak believing ſoul whom thou doſt plead for, ſhall be mine, one of my people, and I will be his God, and I will do what thou wilt for him.

(2.) His interceſſion ſeems to be appointed by his Father for this end, the ſupport and happineſs of thoſe that believe in him: Which appears not only in that forementioned place of Jeremy, wherein God would cauſe him to approach to him for the keeping the covenant ſtable between God and his people; but in Pſal. 2. 8. Ask of me, and I ſhall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the earth for thy poſſeſſion; which is Chriſts Patent for this Office of Advocate; and granted him after his Reſurrection, intimated in thoſe words, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. As Chriſt did not dye for himſelf, or riſe again for himſelf, but as a publick perſon; ſo he hath this power of asking, and promiſe of receiving upon asking, as a publick perſon, as a King and Governour, as he is ſtil'd in *Jer.*30.22. and as he is ſet King upon his holy hill of Sion, i. e. King in his church. If he had then this grant of asking, as a publick perſon, and as King in his church; it muſt then be employed for thoſe who are his church, his voluntary ſubjects, thoſe for whom he dyed and roſe again. If his asking were deſigned as a means to come to the poſſeſſion of his inheritance, the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles, by the ſame reaſon it is alſo deſigned as a means for the improvement of his inheritance. For thoſe that are chiefly his heritage in the world, his garden in the wilderneſs, ſo pleaſant to him, Pſal. 16. 6. that if he can make it more pleaſant for asking, he will not ſtick at it, and God will do it for him. For the large promiſe made him, implies both the preſervation and improvement of his inheritance, to make it comfortable to him. This power of asking was chiefly deſign'd for believers, as appears by the uſe the Pſalmiſt makes of it; of exhortation to the Powers of the world, v. 10, 11. to ſerve him; but of Exultation in the latter end of v. 12. to believers, Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him. If it were not deſign'd by God for them, and for every one of them (all they) and to be employed for them chiefly, they would be no more bleſſed than others. And this bleſſedneſs doth conſiſt in juſtification and ſanctification; for bleſſed is the man whoſe ſins are forgiven, Pſal. 32. 1. and Chriſt bleſſeth us by turning us away from iniquity, Acts 3. ult.

(3.) Chriſt doth ask this bleſſing of grace in particular, for every believer in particular, which ſtill adds a ſtrength to this truth. Chriſts living for ever to make interceſſion for us, is the reaſon render'd why he is able to ſave to the utmoſt, Heb.7.25. 'tis εἰς τὸ παντελὲς ad omnimodam perfectionem, ſo Camero. Perfection of parts here, perfeon of degrees hereafter. If he lives for ever to make interceſſion for the perfect ſalvation of his people, he doth conſequently intercede for all thoſe things which may promote the perfection of their ſalvation, and conſequently for their graces, which are neceſſary to it. Therefore the habit of grace ſhall be actually and perpetually preſerved, otherwiſe Chriſts interceſſion would be in vain. And this he doth in particular for every believer. They were given to him in particular, they come to God by him in particular, and he ſaves them in particular; therefore he intercedes for them in particular, even for all thoſe that come unto God by him. As they come, he interceds for them; As a great Maſter of Requeſts he receives the Petitions of every comer, and preſents their particular caſes to his Father with a good and powerful word of his own: So he prayed for Peter in particular, Luke 22.32. I have prayed for thee (and for thy grace too) that thy faith fail not. 'Tis probable Chriſt prayed for all; it ſeems to be implied; Satan had an aking tooth at every one of them; ἐξητήσατο he hath earneſtly deſired you to ſift you as wheat. He prayed particularly for their faith, that it might not be conquered; becauſe this being the fundamental Grace, if this ſtands all the reſt keep up their heads. His Interceſſion is for every thing which may preſerve, and againſt every thing which may deſtroy. Not only for the preſervation it ſelf, but for the particular means of it, John 17. 17. Sanctifie them through thy truth, thy word is truth. Do it by thy Word; where he intercedes for the keeping up a Goſpel in the world in ſubſerviency to this end, viz. their Sanctification. Do it by thy Truth, that incorruptible ſeed, that eternal Goſpel, eternal in the duration of the effects of it; ſo that thy ſtanding, and all the means of it, the habit and the very acting of thy faith, the impreſſions made upon thy ſoul by any particular Truth, are the fruits of Chriſts Interceſſion. I cannot imagine that a Perſon that Chriſt doth in ſo particular a manner intercede for in all his Concerns, can fall totally and finally.

(4.) He intercedes more fervently (if there be any degrees at all in his affection in Heaven above what he had here) in Heaven, than he did upon the earth. If he upon the earth did pray ſo earneſtly to his Father to keep them, and that a little before his death, when the Sorrows of Death and the Grave, the conteſt he was to have with his Fathers Wrath began to ſtare him in the face, when he had a foreſight of all thoſe bruiſes his ſoul was ſhortly to ſuffer, which, if any thing, might reaſonably divert his thoughts, and damp his Affections from praying for others; When he hath conquered all this, and hath no more death to ſuffer, no infirmity of the fleſh to clog him, not the leaſt Eclipſe of his Fathers countenance ſo dreadfully to groan under; he will rather be more fervent than cold in his ſuit. Shall he pray againſt the indulged ſins of his enemies under the anguiſh of Death, and not againſt the lamented and troubleſome corruptions of his friends in the Triumphs of Glory? Shall he pray for his murderers under the horror of his Fathers Wrath, and not plead for the ſupport of his peoples graces in the arms of his Fathers Love? Hath he not more encouragements to plead ſtrongly for them, ſince he ſits upon a Throne of Grace, than when he ſuffered upon a Croſs by juſtice? He ſtood at his Death as a guilty Perſon charged with the guilt of others, but in Heaven he pleads as a righteous Advocate freed from all that guilt, which was then charged upon him. Hath he not more engagements? Shall not the eſteem of his purchaſe, the value of his Fathers gift, honour of his conqueſt, conſent of his people, credit of his Office, obedience to his Fathers charge, elevated Affection, Delight in his peoples Graces, Care of his Image, Relation of a Husband, ſtraitneſs of Union, ſhall not all theſe enflame his Spirit with a zeal in his Plea beyond the power of a controul, were there a poſſibility of any?

[5.] His interceſſion now muſt be every jot as prevalent, if not more, than his prayer upon earth. If he prevailed at the Tribunal of Gods Juſtice by his ſatisfaction, which was the ſharpeſt conflict he could ever enter into, ſhall he not much more prevail at the Throne of Gods grace by his interceſſion? If his death were powerful to procure a perfect righteouſneſs for our juſtification, his interceſſion will keep pace with it to apply that, and perfect grace for our Sanctification. Will not Chriſt be ſucceſsful in one as well as the other, and as good at finiſhing the work in Heaven, as he was at finiſhing his work on earth? Eſpecially when his finiſhing his work on earth is the foundation of the continuance of that work of his interceſſion, being firſt a Propitiation, and then an Advocate. It will certainly produce as perfect effects for the perfection of the weakeſt beliver, as his Death upon the Croſs, did for his Reconciliation; which is to preſent us holy, unblamable, and unreprovable in Gods Sight, 1 Col. 22.

How ſtrongly grounded his Interceſſion in Heaven is, and what arguments he doth uſe, ſee John 17. 11, 12. And now I am no more in the World, but theſe are in the world, and I come to thee; holy Father, keep through thy own name thoſe whom thou haſt given me, that they may be one as we are. While I was with them in the world I kept them in thy name, thoſe that thou gaveſt me I have kept, and none of them is loſt, but the Son of Perdition. I am no more in the world, corporally, but thoſe are in the World. I ſhall leave thoſe behind me in a world of Temptation and Miſery. I come to thee. I ſhall ſhortly aſcend to thee. Now, holy Father keep through thy name, &c. Here we have,

(1.) Gods relation to himſelf, and to his people. Father, not my holy Father. The relation reaches not only to the Interceſſor, but the Perſons pleaded for. Chriſt in Heaven pleads with God as a Father, his Father, our Father.

(2.) Gods Holineſs. Holy Father. Not merciful, powerful Father, or righteous Father, as afterwards. Grace is an Image of Gods holineſs, and therefore is the moſt proper Attribute of God to be uſed as an argument for the preſervation of it.

(3.) The gift of God; keep thoſe whom thou haſt given me; which he urgeth Twice. Thou gaveſt them me to redeem and ſanctifie, not wholly to part with them, but to be preſented to thee again in a better ſtate. I had never had them but by thy donation. Thou didſt not give them to me that they might periſh, but that they might be kept; keep therefore thy own gift, that they may be returned to thee in a better ſtate. Thou gaveſt them me, and they are ſtill thine, neglect not thy own, becauſe thou art immutable in thy counſel and affection.

(4.) The end why God gave them to Chriſt. That they may be one as we are; ἵνα the cauſal particle may refer either to δέδωκας or τήρησον. If the end, Father, why thou didſt give them to me, was that they might be one, as we are, keep them therefore till they attain this end in perfection, that thy aim may not be fruſtrated.

(5.) Gods paſt preſervation of them; I have kept them through thy name. Tho I have been in the world with them, and have kept them, it was through thy ſtrength; and in my preſent Petition, I deſire no greater a ſtrength, than what already thou haſt exerted for their preſervation.

(6.) His own Obedience to God; Thoſe whom thou gaveſt me, I have kept. He lays a ſtreſs upon Gods donation, and his own faithfulneſs. I have been obedient to thee in the keeping of them, becauſe they were thy gift. Wilt thou command me to keep that which thou thy ſelf wilt neglect and ſlight? Wilt thou be careleſs of that charge thou gaveſt me ſuch ſtrict orders to preſerve? Shall my faithfulneſs to thee in that charge outſtrip thy mercifulneſs to them, and care of their ſtanding?

7. The ſucceſs of his care; None of them is loſt. This charge thou gaveſt me, not to loſe any, I have hitherto performed it. Not one Son of Election, but only that of Perdition, which was given to me as my attendant, not my Charge. The But or εἰ μὴ doth not weaken this aſſertion of Chriſt. As Camero and others obſerve, Εἰ μὴ is not by way of exception, but oppoſition. He was not of the number of thoſe given to Chriſt, but of another rank and ſociety, as Gal. 2. 16. A man is not juſtified εἰ μὴ but by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt; Where Faith is ſet in oppoſition to works in juſtification. Not at all by works; but only by Faith. ſo Mat. 24. 36. Of that day and hour knows no man, no not the Angels in Heaven, but εἰ μὴ my Father only. The Father is ſet in oppoſition to Men and Angels, not excepted as either Man or Angel; ſo Judas here is ſet in oppoſition to thoſe that were given to Chriſt, not excepted as a loſt part of that number. I have been the larger in it, that it may ſerve for a little uſe of what hath been ſpoken. It will be a good pattern of Prayer; Arguments may be fetcht from thoſe Topicks ſo far as will ſuit us to plead with God in our caſe, and there is ſcarce any of theſe conſiderations which have been delivered, but may be turned into an argument in Prayer.

Now ſum up all this. Doth Chriſt plead for our ſtanding in Grace, and progreſs in Sanctification, and live for this end? Did he ſet Peter up as a pattern of what he would do in this caſe? Is the Covenant kept firm by his Mediation, and Covenant-Anſwers procured by his Interceſſion? Is it appointed by God for this very end, viz. the bleſſedneſs of his People? Doth he preſent every mans caſe in particular, and intercede for his Grace in particular, and what truth ſhall make impreſſions on him? Is there ſome reaſon to think he is more fervent in it now, than he was upon the earth? to be ſure no leſs. Are the Arguments he uſes very ſtrong? Then the ſtanding even of the weakeſt Grace is ſure. Before that can fall, God muſt change his end in giving his Son a power to ask, Chriſt muſt leave pleading, or his Arguments muſt loſe their ſtrength. But as Ambroſe ſaid to Monica concerning Auſtin, who remained in his natural Condition, notwithſtanding his good education, and his Mothers Prayers, 'Tis impoſſible that a Son of ſo many Prayers ſhould periſh. So may I ſay of Grace, 'Tis impoſſible a Child of ſo many, ſo fervent, ſo powerful Interceſſions in all circumſtances, can ever, either totally, or finally periſh.

(3.) The Spirit is engaged in this Buſineſs. The reaſon why God puts his Spirit into the heart, is to preſerve us from departing from him, Jer. 32. 40. As Chriſt was true and faithful to God in the end of his coming; ſo will the Spirit be faithful to God in the end of his being put into the heart. 'Tis the ſame Spirit, which being upon Chriſt, enabled him to the performance of his charge, Iſa. 11. 1, 2. and made him of quick underſtanding in the fear of the Lord, to eſtabliſh him in Faithfulneſs and obedience to God in his Mediatory Work. The ſame Spirit is in us to eſtabliſh us in the fear of God, to keep that principle of Gods fear put into our hearts, alive. And as the Spirit performed his office fully upon the humane nature of Chriſt, ſo it will not be deficient in us according to our meaſure. Conſider the ſpirit every way, and this work of preſerving Grace will appear to be his buſineſs. What Chriſt doth by his Proxy, may well be interpreted to be his own act.

(1.) His Miſſion. If Chriſt were not to break the bruiſed Reed, ſurely no Meſſenger ſent by him, is to do it. The Spirt is ſent by the Father in his Sons name, John 14. 26. He is ſent by Chriſt from the Father, John 15. 26. With his Fathers conſent and commiſſion. There is a conjunct authority, ſent by commiſſion from both; ſent to ſupply Chriſts place upon earth. Chriſts buſineſs in part was to keep his People, and he wanted one to do it after his departure. Therefore prays his Father to keep them in his name, Joh. 17. 11. In anſwer to this prayer the ſpirit is ſent. Therefore ſent by the Father and Son in ſubſerviency to this end of preſerving his people, and comes himſelf with an intention to anſwer this end, and perform the Covenant. If both concur in ſending him, his miſſion muſt be in order to the fulfilling what was agreed upon by the Three Perſons, and more particularly by the Father and Son in the Mediatory Covenant; for they would never ſend one that ſhould go contrary to rhe Covenant they were engaged in.

(2.) His Titles. He is called

(1.) A Comforter, John 14. 16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another comforter. The Comforter κατ' ἐξοχήν Such another Comforter as I have been unto you, and in ſome reſpect better, a more ſpiritual Comforter. It was expedient that Chriſt ſhould go away, that this Comforter might come, John 16. 27. Nevertheleſs I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away, for If I go not away, the comforter will not come unto you. I tell you the Truth. I muſt deal plainly with you; I have a great deſire the Comforter ſhould come, and if I go not away he will not come. Intimating thereby, that it was a greater bleſſing to have the Comforter with them, than Chriſt in Perſon. What Comfort could they have in this declaration, and what expediency in it, if the Spirit did not mind the ſame end in keeping and preſerving us as Chriſt did? It had been no ways expedient; better a Thouſand Times Chriſt had never gone, and the Comforter never come, if it were not for the ſame end, which Chriſt minded in the World. The ends of Chriſt were to give the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praiſe for the ſpirit of heavineſs, that they might be called trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified, Iſa. 61. 3. As this was the work of Chriſt, ſo this is the work of the Spirit as a Comforter, to make the heart grow up in fruit to the glory of God.

(2.) An abiding Comforter. John 14. 86. That he may abide with you for ever; he muſt abide with us in the capacity wherein he is ſent, i. e. as a Comforter. His comfort would ſignifie little, if it did not meet with the main Trouble which peſters us; i. e. The fear of miſcarrying, and not continuing to the end. Oh, I am afraid that this little ſpark may be quenched by the floods caſt out of the Dragons mouth, that this little faith may be wounded to death by ſome ſtrong temptations. I doubt it will quickly gaſp its laſt; I have but a little oil in the Cruſe, it will ſoon be waſted, and I ſhall die. Theſe kind of Thoughts every believer hath more or leſs. The choſen veſſel and the greateſt inſtrument for God that ever was, found ſuch fears clambering up in him, 1 Cor. 9. 27. I keep under my body, leſt that by any means I my ſelf ſhould be a caſtaway. The ſpirit therefore muſt be a comforter to mate this grand Trouble, and melt this gloomy cloud which doth ſo often darken the ſtrong, as well as the weak believer. And truly every ones experience can teſtifie, that when ſuch thoughts do creep up, ſome hopes alſo ſtart up with them from the ſpirit, like a covenant-rainbow with a ſhower; and one thing which, as a comforter, he is to convince the world of (and the beſt part of the world too, even thoſe that are convinced of unbelief, ſinfulneſs, and the neceſſity and ſufficiency of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt) is, that the Prince of this World is judged and condemned, his works diſſolved, and that he ſhall never more have Power over believers to ruin them, Joh. 16. 11. He is to abide with us to that end and purpoſe for which he came into our hearts; and that was to bring us to God; therefore his abiding with us is to keep us with God. If our firſt converſion were the work of the Spirit, and our ſtanding in it our own, we ſhould be more beholding to our ſelves than to the Spirit, becauſe a good condition ſtable, is a greater bleſſing than a good conditition mutable. If the Spirit ſtand only as a careleſs ſpectator, to ſee how we would ſteer our courſe, without putting his hand to the Helm, what good would his abiding with us do? If a man have a great buſineſs to do, the preſence of a multitude of men doth him no good, unleſs he hath aſſiſtance from them. By the Spirits abiding with us, is meant, not the remaining of his Perſon without his Operations. As when God Promiſes to be preſent with us, he doth not mean his Eſſential preſence, for that cannot but be preſent whether he promiſeth it or no; but his gracious preſence. The Spirit abides with believers not only in moving them, for ſo he abides with wicked men, but efficaciouſly moving, not only in their firſt converſion, but in their growth and progreſs.

(1.) The Doctrine of the poſſibility of a total and final Apoſtacy of a Regenerate man after Grace infuſed, is not according to truth. You ſee upon what pillars the Doctrine we have aſſerted, ſtands. Whence it follows, that the contrary Doctrine of the Apoſtacy of a Regenerate man, is againſt the whole tenor of the covenant of grace, againſt the Attributes of God engaged in it and about it, againſt the deſign of Chriſt the Mediator of it, againſt the charge committed to him, againſt the end of the Spirits miſſion and abiding with us.

The Queſtion then may be thus ſtated: Whether that vital principle or habit of Grace put into the heart by the powerful Operation of the Holy Ghoſt at the converſion of the Soul, be not perpetually preſerved and cheriſhed by the ſame Spirit, ſo that it never dies? And that therefore a Regenerate man endued with this vital principle, neither can, nor will, by reaſon of this implanted and inworking grace of the Spirit, fall from Faith, and ſerve ſin, ſo as to give himſelf up wholly to the commands of it. The Queſtion is not, whether we ſhall perſevere if grace doth continue, as the contrary minded aſſert, and accordingly gloſs upon the Scriptures alledged for it. Such a Queſtion would be ridiculous. 'Tis as much as to ask whether a man ſhall live to morrow if his life remain in him? or whether the Sun ſhall ſhine to morrow if its light continues? And is as much as to ſay, A man ſhall perſevere if he doth perſevere. But whether the habit of Grace, the fear of God, Faith, the New Creature, New Man, or howſoever you will term it, be not ſo ſettled in the Soul as that it ſhall never be totally removed? Some affirm that it may. Satan was of this perſuaſion (tho he hath ſince diſcovered himſelf more Orthodox) when he tells God to his face, Job 1. 8, 9, 10, 11. Put forth thy hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face. that ſmart afflictions would diveſt Job of that uprightneſs God ſo ſignally applauded in him, as a non-ſuch in all the Earth. The chief ground is, That they lay all, both converſion and preſervation, upon the will of man, not grace.

I ſhall therefore lay down,

[1.] Some propoſitions for explaining it.

'Tis acknowledged that,

(1.) The Operations of Grace may be interrupted. As long as there are two Laws, one of ſin in the members, another of grace in the mind; As long as there are two principles in a grand conteſt, fleſh and ſpirit; As long as our knowledg is imperfect, and our love but of a weak growth, the Operation of both cannot be perfecter than the Nature of their principle. The vigour of our gracious actions is often enfeebled by the power of the fleſh, that we do many times that evil we hate, and omit that good we love. And we cannot deny but that our acts flow oftener from a corrupt than a renewed principle. Yea, and thoſe actions which flow from grace, are ſo tinctured with the vapours of the other principle, that they ſeem to partake more of the impreſſions of the Law of ſin, than of the Law of the mind. So that our perſeverance is not to be meaſured from the conſtant temper of our actions, but from the permanency of the habit. The acts of grace may be ſuſpended by the prevalency of ſome ſinful diſtemper, as the Operations of natural life are in an Epileptick or Apoplectick Paroxiſm. Hence it is that we find David ſo often praying for quickning grace, according to the promiſe, upon a ſenſe of the flagging of his grace.

(2.) The comfort of our grace may be eclipſed. We may loſe the ſenſe of it without loſing the ſubſtance. An actual communion may be loſt upon a ſinful fall, till actual repentance, when the union is not unlooſed. A benum'd member is knit to the body, tho it hath not its wonted vigour, and active heat. Mutual comfort may be ſuſpended between Man and Wife, tho the conjugal knot be not diſſolved. Believers may be ſeparated from Chriſts ſmiles, but not from their relation to Chriſt, and being in him. Comfortable intereſt may be interrupted, when radical intereſt receives no damage. A Leper under the Law was hindered of actual enjoyment of his Houſe, but not deprived of his legal title to it.

(3.) Relative grace cannot be loſt. Every Regenerate Man being the Son of God by a double title, that of Regeneration and Adoption, can never ceaſe to be his Son. The relation of a Son to a Father is indiſſoluble. It can never be, that he that is once a Son can become no Son: the relation is firm, tho the affection may be on both ſides extinguiſht. The relation we have to God, as his Children, is knit with that other of Heirs. The Apoſtle made no doubt of the truth of that conſequence, Rom. 8. 17. If children, then heirs, and heirs of God. And he was afterwards of the ſame mind, Gal. 4. 7. And if a ſon, then an heir of God through Chriſt. If it be objected: True, unleſs a believer diſinherit himſelf by an undutiful and contemptuous carriage. But he cannot, unleſs he ſhould ceaſe to be a creature. For the ſame Apoſtle doth as poſitively affirm in a Triumphant manner, That no other creature, under which believers themſelves are comprehended, can ſeparate from the Love of God, Rom. 8. 38, 39. I am perſuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, &c. nor any other creature, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. And the other Apoſtle comes in as a witneſs, That a Son of God, ſo born, can never be guilty of ſuch a contemptuous carriage habitually, as may end in a diſinheriting of him, becauſe the ſeed of God, whereby he was born, remains in him, as the band of his relation, 1 John 3. 9. His ſeed remains in him, and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God. His being born of God is the rock againſt the flood of ſin, becauſe he is born of God, and makes it eternally true, that ſuch an one is the Son of God. Who ever did, or ever will, hear of a Son of God by thoſe two titles in Hell? It ſeems not congruous to Divine Wiſdom, to make any his Heirs, that he ſaw he ſhould diſinherit. No wiſe man would do ſo, if he were conſcious of all future events, and did ſincerely adopt a perſon. And ſhall the Allwiſe God be repreſented weaker than man?

(4.) The habit of inherent Grace cannot be loſt. A believer hath eternal life in actual poſſeſſion, in the ſeed, and in reverſion in the harveſt, John 6. 54. 'Tis plain, 1 Pet. 1. 23. Being born again, not of corruptible ſeed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which lives and abides for ever. 'Tis called an incorruptible ſeed in oppoſition to corruptible, both in its own nature, and the effects produced by it. But this ſeed of the word being incorruptible, raiſes effects according to its nature. The Antitheſis is expreſs, we are not born of corruptible ſeed, which is of a periſhing nature, but of an incorruptible ſeed. The ſeed of our Regeneration is incorruptible; the word, the inſtrument, is unchangeable; the ſpirit the efficient cauſe which manages the word, and thereby infuſeth the ſeed, abides for ever. All theſe cauſes agreeing in one Attribute of incorruptible, muſt needs produce an effect ſuitable to the nature of them. 'Tis indemonſtrable, that ſo many incorruptible cauſes ſhould center in a corruptible effect, and be combined together to produce an Ephemeron, a thing that may have no longer life, according to this opinion, than the day it is born in. Further, the connexion of thoſe words with thoſe Verſe 17, &c. import as much. He exhorts them to paſs the time of their ſojourning here in fear, not ſervile, but filial, Verſe 17. Foraſmuch as you know that you were not redeemed with corruptible things. Be encouraged to all holy and humble obedience, ſince you are fully aſſured of your perfect Redemption, &c. As the blood of Chriſt doth not purchaſe a corruptible Redemption, ſo neither doth the grace of Chriſt work a corruptible Regeneration. As the blood of Chriſt was incorruptible blood, by virtue of the Hypoſtatical Union, and in regard of the efficacy of it to our Redemption; ſo is grace an incorruptible ſeed, by reaſon of the believers Union with the Son of God, its production by the Spirit of God, and in regard of that incorruptible word, whereby it is both begotten and maintained in us. The habit of grace attends the Soul to Heaven, and for ever. The vital principle was not extinct in David by his groſs fall, ſince we find him not praying for Salvation, but the joy of it; not praying for the giving the Spirit, but not taking it away from him, which he had by his ſin deſerved to be deprived of, Pſal. 51. 11, 12. Take not thy holy ſpirit from me: Reſtore unto me the joy of thy ſalvation: And alſo for greater degrees of Sanctification, and cleanſing his heart from its filthineſs and falſeneſs. Grace may indeed like the Sun, be under an Eclipſe, but its internal Light and Heat cannot expire.

(5.) Tho grace be oppreſt, yet it will recover it ſelf. 'Tis indeed ſometimes overtopt by temptation, (as a Fountain which being over-flowed by the torrent of a neighbouring River, is covered while the flood laſts, that a man knows not where to find it; but, after thoſe great Waters are ſlid away, the Fountain bubbles up as clearly as before) yet it works all that while under that oppreſſion, tho not perceived. It will riſe again by virtue of a believers Union with Chriſt; As a bough bent down by force, yet by virtue of its Union to the body of the Tree will return to its former poſture, when the force is removed. The ſap in the root of a Tree, which the coldneſs of the ſeaſon hath ſtript of its Leaves, will upon the return of the Sun diſperſe it ſelf, and as it were meet it in the utmoſt branches, and renew its old acquaintance with it. Shall the Divine Nature in the Soul be out-ſtript by meer nature in the Plants? Grace can never be ſo blown out, but there will be ſome ſmoke, ſome ſpark, whereby it may be re-kindled. The ſmoking ſnuff of Peter's grace was lighted again by a ſudden look of his Maſter. Yea, it may by a ſecret influence of the Spirit gather ſtrength to act more vigorouſly after its emerging from under the preſent oppreſſion, like the Sun more warm in its beams after it hath been obſcured by Fogs. Peter's love was more vigorous after his recovery. Chriſt implied it, when he acquainted him with his danger, that he who had not ſtrength to keep his Faith from falling, ſhould after his riſing have ſtrength both for himſelf and his brethren, Luke 22. 32. When thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren.

[2.] Let us ſee what inconveniencies and reflections upon God, do follow from their Doctrine. Their denial of this truth is grounded upon their denial of Election, and on the ſuppoſed reſiſtibility of grace, by the will of man.

(1.) It evacutes all the Promiſes of God, and concludes them to be empty vain things. As if they were made by God in mockery, and to ſport himſelf in deceiving his creature.

[1.] It fruſtrates the glory he deſigns by the Promiſes. Doth God promiſe his preſence with the Church to the end of the World? and doth it conſiſt with Infinite Wiſdom to make an abſolute Promiſe concerning an uncertainty? 'Tis poſſible, according to this Doctrine, that God might not have ſo much as one ſincere worſhipper, one faithful ſervant in the whole Earth; not one immediately capable of his gracious preſence. What would become of the glory he intended to himſelf by all the Promiſes of Redemption and Sanctification, and thoſe praiſes and admirations he expects from men, when according to this Doctrine it is poſſible there might not be one to give him the glory due to his Name, if it were left to their natural wills, whether they would receive the grace offered them, or continue in it if they do receive it? For if one Saint may fall away not-notwithſtanding the covenant of grace, the truth of God, and the ſtrength of Chriſt, why may not another, and a third, till there be not the appearance of one ſincere Chriſtian? What certainty then had there been of a Church in the world for God to be preſent with? What certainty of any admirer of his grace to Eternity? Nay, what certainty that any would have receiv'd it, had it been left wholly to their natural wills? The Scripture intimates otherwiſe by repreſenting man to us as dead in ſin and enmity againſt God, one that cannot receive the things of God, &c. May a man be ſaid ſincerely to worſhip God one hour, that doth caſt dirt upon him the next, as the Peaſants in Germany deal with their St. Urban the Patron of their Vines? Is that a worſhip intended by his Promiſes, that might not endure the ſpace of one minute, but be ſucceeded by the groſſeſt deſpites and rebellions? Is that fear put into the heart, that they might never depart from him, of no greater prevalency than to come to ſo ſuddain a period, and produce no better effects? Is ſo ſlight, ſo ſhort-liv'd a worſhip, fit for the great God by ſo many declarations in Scripture to promiſe himſelf from his creature? No better it would be if it were left only to the creatures corrupt will, and the management of that natural enmity which is in the heart. Is the holieſt Soul in the World, without aſſiſting and preventing grace; ſo ſure of the immovableneſs of his own will, among ſo many bluſtering ſtorms and temptations, or fleſh-pleaſing ſnares and allurements?

[2.] It fruſtrates the promiſes made to Chriſt. Is it conſiſtent with the Faithfulneſs of God to be careleſs of all the Agonies, Groans and Blood of his Son? Our Saviour might have bled, and died, and not ſee one grain of ſeed, but loſt all the travel of his Soul, if this Doctrine be true. Will God, according to theſe mens fancies, make no greater account of his Oath? Pſal. 89. 33, 34, 35, 36. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips; That the ſeed of his ſervant David, the Meſſiah, as the Jews underſtand it, ſhould endure for ever, and his loving kindneſs he would not utterly take from them, nor ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail. This, tho Sworn but once by his Holineſs, is enough for an Eternal Obligation upon God, and a perpetual ground of Faith to us. The pleaſure of the Lord was promiſed to proſper in his hand, Iſa. 53. 10. It was to *break through all oppoſition, and overcome all Invaders. Is it a way to glorify his Faithfulneſs to Chriſt, to take the pleaſure, the object of his pleaſure, the fruit of his death out of the hands of Chriſt, and put it into the hands of free will? The Promiſe, is that his pleaſure ſhould proſper in his hand, not in our hands, not in the hands of natural will.

[3.] It fruſtrates the comfort of the Promiſes to us. Doth not this doctrine give the lye to that bleſſed Apoſtle, who was wiſer in the myſteries of the Goſpel than the whole World beſides? Doth it not accuſe him of Arrogance, when by a Divine Inſpiration he confidently perſuades himſelf and all other believers, that neither Angels, nor Principalities, &c. ſhould ſeparate them from the love of God? Rom. 8. 38, 39. Doth God in the Scripture pronounce thoſe actually bleſſed that put their truſt in Chriſt the Meſſiah? Pſal. 2. 12. Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him. How can it deſerve the name of bleſſedneſs, and in all of them too, if the Faith of any one that ſincerely believes in him could be totally and finally loſt? Could they be bleſſed even while they have Faith, ſince the comfort and happineſs of any particular act of Faith would be overwhelm'd by the tormenting fears of the poſſibility and probability of their loſing the habits of it? 'Tis not only probable, but certain to be loſt, if its preſervation depended upon no other hand but the ſlight hold of our own will. Adam in Innocency fell under a covenant of works, and we ſhould as ſoon loſe our habitual grace under a covenant of grace, did not our ſtability depend upon a ſupernatural and divine power promiſed in it. This Doctrine therefore wipes off all the Oil of gladneſs from believers hearts, and contrary to Chriſts commiſſion clothes them with the ſpirit of heavineſs, inſtead of the garments of praiſe.

(2.) It darkens the Love of God. Are the products of Infinite Love ſo light, as theſe men would make them? Is not his Love as immutable as himſelf? Can there be decaies in an eternal and unchangeable affection? Can any emergencies be unknown from Eternity to his Omniſcience? How then can the Fountain of kindneſs be frozen in his breaſt? Shall not that everlaſting love, which was the only motive to draw the believer at the firſt converſion to him, be as ſtrong an argument to him to preſerve the believer with him? Jer. 31. 3. I have loved thee with an everlaſting love, therefore with loving-kindneſs have I drawn thee. It was love in the choice; but by the expreſſion loving-kindneſs it ſeems to be encreaſed in the execution. What is it then that ſhould make it run as faſt backward till it diſſolve into diſaffection? Was there a love of Benevolence towards them in appointing them to be heirs of ſalvation, when they lay like Swine in the confuſed maſs and mire of the corrupt World? And is there not a love of complacency in them, ſince he hath pardon'd them according to the riches of his grace, renewed them by the power of his word, and ſealed them by the Holy Spirit of promiſe? Is it likely this everlaſting love ſhould ſink into hatred, and the glorious fruits of it be daſht in pieces at one blow by a ſudden change? To what purpoſe did he lay the firſt ſtone of thy Redemption, and bring the blood of his Son and thy Soul to kiſs each other? Was it not that he might be your God in covenant with you? It was ſo in the Type, the deliverance from Egypt, Lev. 26. 45. Whom I brought forth out of the Land of Egypt, that I might be their God.? Much more in the Antitype, the deliveranc from Satan. Could the kindneſs of God be ſo illuſtrious, if it did not make the permanency of his gifts a great part of the benefit of them? Can theſe men then fancy infinite tenderneſs ſo unconcern'd, as to let the Apple of his eye be pluckt out, as to be a careleſs ſpectator of the pillage of his Jewels by the powers of Hell, to have the delight of his ſoul (if I may ſo ſpeak) toſt like a Tennis-ball between himſelf and the Devil? Which muſt be the conſequence of this Doctrine, if a renewed man be at one time in the hands of God, and preſently after in the hands of the Devil. Is this eaſie parting with them, like the affection of a Mother to her ſucking infant? How much leſs ſuitable is it to the kindneſs of God, which infinitely ſurmounts the other?

(3.) It diſgraceth his Wiſdom and Power. Doth this Doctrine ſupport the honour of Gods Wiſdom in contriving ways ſo admirable for the reſtoration of his creature that may be loſt in a moment? Is it congruous to infinite Wiſdom, ſet on work in mans recovery, to make a Covenant that ſhould be more uncertain than the former? Which would be, if it depended only upon the voluble and inconſtant temper of the creatures corrupt will for the making it good. The former was leſs likely to be violated by a nature filled with integrity, than this by a nature ſtuffe with iniquity. Is it conſiſtent with the honour of this Attribute, to have his wonderful deſigns, wherein he intended to make known his manifold Wiſdom, puſht away by a breath of Sin and Satan? Was God ſubject to error or ignorance, in not foreſeeing what events might happen, before he obliged himſelf by promiſe; or to diſſimulation if he did foreſee, and notwithſtanding all theſe contrivances and preparations, not abſolutely intend the ſalvation of any one man, but leave it to themſelves whether they would be ſaved or no? It diſgraceth his Power. Where can any ſafety be expected, if not in our Redeemer's hand? Shall his Power be beaten out of breath by the wreſtling of the Devil? None, ſay theſe men, ſhall pluck them out of Gods hand, while they remain there; but they may depart themſelves: As tho that promiſe, John 10. 28. did not provide againſt their inward corruption, as well as external violence. But the Promiſe is excluſive of all ways of deſtruction, They ſhall not periſh, οὐ μὴ ἀπόλωνται, two Negatives to ſtrengthen it, according to the cuſtom of the Greeks: and it is not as it is tranſlated, no man, but οὐχ ἁρπάζει τις, not any one: if they depart, they periſh; but becauſe they ſhall not periſh, againſt which the Promiſe ſecures them, therefore they ſhall not depart. If they may be overcome againſt the will of God, and againſt his Promiſe, it may be inferr'd that the Devil is Superior to God, and that God hath not power, or wants will to make good his promiſe of perſeverance to them. As there never was, ſo there never will be any violation of his Faithfulneſs, or breach made upon his Power. Had God let them lye in their ſins, no objection could be made; but ſince by ſuch an admirable Power he hath ſnatched them from the clutches of the Prince of darkneſs, doth it conſiſt with his Wiſdom or Goodneſs to throw them away, or to let them fall out of his hands into the power of their old Oppreſſor?

4. It ſets God at great uncertainties as to the object of his love. If a renewed man be diſcarded from Gods favour, and loſe the habit of grace becauſe he commits a ſin which deſerves death, he would upon every ſin be caſhier'd, becauſe every ſin deſerves death by the rigor of the Law, Rom. 6. 23. And the whole life of a Chriſtian would be nothing elſe but an interchange of Friend and Enemy, Son and no Son. Nay there could not be a moment fixed, wherein it could be ſaid of any godly man in this life, that he were in Gods favour, and had the habit of grace, becauſe there is not a moment but man is guilty of ſome ſin or other, of infirmity at leaſt. If it be ſaid, 'Tis meant only of thoſe ſins that waſte the conſcience: Theſe, we ſay, cannot live in the conſtant practice of a Regenerate man. But ſuppoſe he be overtaken, Is he then caſt out of favour, i.e. out of Gods everlaſting love? I would demand, If he be, what brings him in again? Good works afterwards? Alas! there is not one of them but is mixed with that which deſerves eternal death. Can they bring us into favour, which need ſomething themſelves to make them accepted? Can a menſtruous rag look ſo amiable in the eyes of God, as to introduce us into a forfeited favour? Is it our Saviours Merit? That is as ſufficient to keep our knot with God indiſſoluble, as it is upon every breach to renew it; for the Merit of Chriſt is greater than the demerit of ſin. If every act of unbelief did deſtroy Faith, might it not be deſtroyed and revived an hundred times a day? For what is the courſe of the beſt Chriſtian, but a mixture of Faith and Unbelief? 'Tis true the bent of the heart ſtands right in Faith; but there are frequent ſtarts of Unbelief. Now according to this Doctrine, there would be ſo many blottings out, and ſo many writings again of their Names in the Book of Life every day. A man may be in their ſence in Gods favour, and out of it many times in a day; one moment in a ſtate of ſalvation, the next in a ſtate of damnation; and ſo run in a circle from ſalvation to damnation all the year long. Is this uncertainty like the ſtability of Mountains and Hills, a greater than which God promiſes? Iſa. 54. 10. The mountains ſhall depart, and the Hills be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the Lord that hath mercy on thee. God provided ſuch a Covenant of peace that might not be removed, that he might not be at ſuch conſtant removes in his kindneſs, as theſe men would make him. Is it not unworthy to make ſuch a repreſentation of the allwiſe and immutable God, as if he were daily careſſing his creatures, and daily repenting of thoſe gifts of effectual calling, which the Scripture aſſerts to be without repentance? Rom. 11. 29, Repentance of any deſign is an effect of weakneſs of judgment as well as mutability of Will.

(5.) It doth the rather ſet God at uncertainties, becauſe it doth ſubject the Grace of God to the Will of Man. It hangs the glory of Gods grace in all the motions of it, and the efficacy of the promiſe upon the ſlipperineſs of Man's Will and Affections. It makes the omnipotent grace of God follow, not precede the motions of mans will; to be the Lacquey not the Leader, either in converting or preſerving; which is at the beſt to make the glory of his grace as volatile as a Feather, at the beſt ſometimes up ſometimes down; the ſoul this moment embraced by God with the deareſt Affections, the next caſt out as a Veſſel wherein is no pleaſure, and the ſucceeding Moment admitted to freſh communications; this hour the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, the next an Habitation for Dragons and Satyrs, the Will of Man giving one time the Key to the Spirit, the next time to the Devil; one time as clean as a Saint, another time as foul as a fallen Angel; So that a Chriſtians life would be ſpent in nothing but ejectments and repoſſeſſions between God and the Devil, and the grace of God beholding for its reſidence in the heart only to the humor of the Will. Is it reaſonable thus to ſubject the fruits of the great undertaking of Chriſt to the lottery of fancy, and to take the Crown from the Head of Grace, to ſet upon the Scalp of our corrupt Will?

(6.) It fruſtrates the deſign and fruits of election. The Seduction of Believers by falſe Prophets, with their Train of great Signs and Wonders, which our Saviour concludes impoſſible, Mat. 24. 24. There ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, and ſhall ſhow great ſigns and wonders; inſomuch as, if it were poſſible, they ſhould deceive the very elect, is according to this Doctrine very eaſie and natural. One ſtart of the fancy compleats it. The impoſſibility of their embracing, or at leaſt perſiſting in damnable errors, is founded upon the eternal choice of them by God, and his decree for their preſervation. It was the entry of their names into the Lambs book of Life, that preſerved his followers from the contagion in the univerſal Apoſtacy of the Romiſh Church, Rev. 13. 8. All that dwell upon the earth ſhall worſhip him, whoſe names are not written in the book of life of the lamb. If believers could totally and finally fall away from Chriſt, why is it impoſſible for them to be deceived by damning errors accompanied with ſuch wonders, that might ſtupifie the reaſon of the wiſeſt natural men, and the elect too, did not their election make it impoſſible? The very Elect. But it is laid upon a higher ſcore than their own Wiſdom, and depends upon that golden Chain of electing love, which neither the Wit of man, nor malice of Devils, the Terrors of Afflictions, nor Pleaſures of Temptations are able to break, Rom. 8. 38, 39.

(7.) It fruſtrates the fruits of Chriſts Mediation and Offices. Was it not the deſign of his coming, according to the ancient Promiſe, that all nations ſhould be bleſſed in him, in the ſeed of Abraham, which ſeed he was? According to this Doctrine it is uncertain at the beſt, whether any one Perſon ſhould be bleſſed by him or no. If the gates of Hell could prevail againſt one real member of Chriſt, they might againſt a ſecond and a third, till he ſhould not have one member to enjoy a bleſſing by him. Grace infuſed is as the holy fire upon the Altar, which deſcended from heaven, Lev. 6. 12, 13. And as it was the Prieſts Office, ſo it is the office of Chriſt the Antitype, to feed it morning and evening by his ſpirit, with freſh fuel for its continual ſupport. According to this Doctrine, the Offices of Chriſt ſignifie nothing but with the conſent of the Will of man. The death of Chriſt might be wholly an unprofitable Sacrifice. The Interceſſion of Chriſt in Heaven would ſignifie nothing ſince they can perſevere without him, and notwithſtanding his Interceſſion can fall away. This is to unprieſt Chriſt, and deſtroy the end of his living for ever. His Propheticall Office fares no better becauſe they make the efficacy of it depend upon their Will; and the teaching of Chriſt, like the Sibyls writing upon leaves, may be blown away by the next Wind. It robs Chriſt of the key of government, by making every man his own governor in this affair, and denying Chriſt the Sovereign Throne in the Wills of Men. His government would be exerciſed only in puniſhing, ſince none left wholly to themſelves, but would prove obſtinate rebels. He might be a Prieſt without a people to ſacrifice for, an Advocate without a Client, a Prophet without a Diſciple, and a King without a Subject, and ſo be inſignificant in the fruits of all his Offices.

(8.) It diſparageth the work of the Spirit. As if the Spirit of God did tincture the Soul with ſo weak a colour as might be eaſily waſhed off by the next ſhower; as if he did only ſtrow, not ſow the Seed of Grace, eaſily to be blown away by the next puff of wind, or devoured by fowls. Are the divine image and workmanſhip of Heaven, the products of infinite Power, Wiſdom and Love, of ſo ſlight a make, as the embracers of this Doctrine would fancy? Is the ſpirit too weak to hold, or is he unwilling? Would Chriſt ever ſend ſo uncertain a comforter, as he would be, unleſs he did abide with us? Would Chriſt after laying ſo ſtrong and rich a foundation for the Redemption of his People, ſend a Deputy that ſhould build ſo weakly, and work ſo ſlightly upon it? The Spirit was to glorifie Chriſt, Joh. 16. 13. How? Certainly, As Chriſt glorified the Father, Joh. 17. 4. But Chriſt glorified the father by finiſhing the work which was given him. Therefore the Spirit will glorifie Chriſt in the ſame manner by finiſhing the work he is ſent to do; as the Father is not imperfect in his choice, nor Chriſt in his purchaſe; ſo neither will the Spirit be imperfect in his conduct. The very end why God puts the Spirit into the heart, is to preſerve the Believer from going back from God. What is called putting the fear of the Lord into us that we might not depart from him, Jer. 32. 40. is called putting a new heart and a new ſpirit, Ezek. 36. 26. And I will put my ſpirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes, and you ſhall keep my judgments and do them; And a putting his own ſpirit within them to preſerve and aſſiſt that new habitual Grace, for it is to cauſe them to walk in his ſtatutes. 'Tis not only a cleanſing them from their filthineſs, and then leaving them to be their own guides, but it is a putting a contrary principle into them; and the end of putting this Spirit into them, is that they ſhould live till they be placed in their own land, land, in the heavenly Canaan, Ezek. 37. 14, and be ſetled there in the work of admiration, and bleſſing God for his faithfulneſs in performing this covenant; then ſhall ye know, by a full experience, that I the Lord have ſpoken, and performed it. I know ſome underſtand it of their deliverance from the Babyloniſh captivity; but the words methinks ſeem to be of a higher import, and the deliverance from Babylon was typical of Redemption by Chriſt, Jer. 23. 6, 7, 8. ſpeaking of the days of the Goſpel, The Lord lives that brought up the ſeed of Iſrael out of the North Country. I leave you to judg; however take it as an alluſion. The ſpirit will be no more falſe to God in not anſwering the end of his being put into the heart, to cauſe us to walk in his Statutes, than Chriſt was or can be falſe to God in not anſwering the end of his deſignation to the Mediatory Office. This Doctrine doth quite ſubvert the end of the ſpirits coming, and being put into the heart of a renewed man, and makes all its work a ſlight and ſuperficial buſineſs.

For a cloſe then of this. This Doctrine ſtands firm, I hope. Tho it be poſſible and probable, and I may ſay certain, that the habit of grace in a renewed man, conſidered abſtractedly in it ſelf without Gods powerful aſſiſtance, would fall, and be overwhelmed by the batteries of Satan, and ſecret treacheries of the fleſh, yet it is impoſſible it ſhould wholly fall, being ſupported by Gods Truth in his Covenant, his power in the performance, held up by the interceſſion of Chriſt, and maintained by the inhabitation of the Spirit. Our wills are mutable, but Gods promiſe unchangeable; our ſtrength is feeble, Gods power inſuperable; our prayers impotent, Chriſts interceſſions prevalent. Our ſins do meritoriouſly expel it, but the grace of God through the merit of Chriſt doth efficiently preſerve it. If therefore believers fall totally and finally, it muſt be by themſelves, or by the induſtry of ſome external Agent.

(1.) Not by themſelves, and their own Wills. Not as conſidered in themſelves, but as their wills are the proper ſubject and ſeat of this habitual grace. They are made willing in the day of his power, Pſal. 110. 3. And they are continued willing by the influence of the ſame power, for the day of his Power endures for ever. They will not depart out of Chriſts hand, becauſe it is the chief part of this grace to determine their wills (and to bring down every high imagination which might pervert their wills) to a ſubjection to Chriſt, and fix them upon God as the chief good, and laſt end. Hence being his ſheep, and knowing him for their ſhepherd, they are ſaid to hear his voice, and follow him; ſo that this perſeverance is not a forced and conſtrained work. They cannot totally fall by their own wills, they are renewed and ſtrengthened; nor by their own corruption, that is ſubdued and mortified by the ſpirit of God, which is continually in arms againſt it; and if when it was in its full ſtrength, it could not hinder the power of Gods grace in converſion, ſurely when it is thus impaired, and only ſome reliques of it (tho alas! too too much) abiding, it can leſs reſiſt the Power of the ſame grace in our preſervation.

Again, Not by their own wills, for it is here that grace ſets its Throne, and eſtabliſheth the heart. Neither doth that life which is hid with Chriſt in God depend upon the levity of our wills; it being an abiding life, it hath an influence upon our wills to preſerve them in a due bent, wherein they are ſet by the Spirit.

(2.) Not by any external Agent.

(1.) Not by God. The counſel of his election ſtands firm: and they are heirs by an immutable Covenant. Tho God by reaſon of his Omnipotent Soveraignty might juſtifiably take grace away, and we deſerve it, yet morally in regard of the immutability of his righteouſneſs and truth, he will not. Chriſt will not do it. He died to purchaſe it, and lives for ever to preſerve it. The Spirit will not do it, the end of his coming and indwelling is to maintain it.

(2.) Not by the Devil; for he that is in us is greater and ſtronger than he that is in the world, 1 John 4. 4. in all the allurements, and affrightments of the World. Not by his Temptations; They ſhall either be intercepted or reſiſted by an aſſiſting grace ſtronger than their authors malice, 1 Cor. 10. 13. God is faithful who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above what you are able, but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that you may be able to bear it.

(3.) Not by the World. If the God of the World cannot do it, the World it ſelf ſhall not be able. Chriſt hath conquered the world for us by his death, John 16. 23. and hath given us power to conquer it by our faith, 1 John 5.4.

2. USE. Matter of Comfort.

This Doctrine of the preſervation of Grace is the Crown, Glory, and ſweetneſs of all other priviledges. Without it we ſhould in the midſt of Regeneration, Juſtification, Adoption, droop and be magor miſſabibs, tormented with fears of loſing them: 'Tis the aſſurance of this that makes believers come to Sion with Songs and everlaſting joy upon their heads. Premiſe this I muſt; This Comfort belongs only to thoſe that have true grace; ſee therefore whether you can find any ſaving-work upon your hearts towards God, before you entitle your ſelves to the comfort of this Doctrine.

(1.) Our ſtate by Redemption and Regeneration is better than Adam's by creation, in reſpect of permanency, tho not of preſent integrity. God keeps us ſafer in a ſtate of imperfection, than Adam was in all his innocence. Adam had a better nature, and a ſtronger inherent power conferred upon him by creation; he was created after Gods Image, but he defaced and loſt it, and afterwards begat in his own likeneſs, not in the likeneſs of God, whereof he was ſtript. He had a natural power, but no ſupernatural aſſiſtance. We have no natural power, but we have a ſupernatural help. Our ſupernatural aſſiſtance confers upon us a better ſtate than his natural power did, or could do upon him. We are kept by the power of God to ſalvation, and he was to be kept by his own. He was to ſtand by the ſtrength of nature, we by the ſtrength of grace, Rom. 5 2. grace wherein you ſtand, through faith, 2 Cor. 1. 24. by faith you ſtand. Grace is as immutable, as nature is changeable. He was under the government of his own free-will; 'tis our happineſs to be under the conduct of the Son of God by his ſpirit, Rom. 8. 14. As many as are led by the ſpirit of God, they are the ſons of God; and that by virtue of a charge, a priviledg never allowed to Adam, nor Angels, who being their own keepers, were ſoon their own deſtroyers. He had a natural power to ſtand, but without a will; we have a gracious power to will, and the act of perſeverance conferred upon us. He had a power to ſtand, precepts to ſtand, promiſes to encourage him to ſtand, but not one promiſe to ſecure him from falling; we have both a ſupernatural help, and an immutable promiſe, that the fear of God ſhould be put into our hearts, to this end, to preſerve us from falling, Jer. 32.42. By Chriſt we have not only words of grace to encourage us, but the power of grace to eſtabliſh us; not only precepts to perſevere, but promiſes that we ſhall. Otherwiſe the Promiſe could be no ſurer than that annext to the Covenant of works. If the condition of it might be as eaſily loſt as the condition of Adam's covenant, then would the new Covenant loſe its end, which was to enſure the Promiſe to all the ſeed, Rom. 4. 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace, that the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed. Adam was under a mutable covenant, and we under an everlaſting one. Adam had no reſerve of nature to ſupply nature upon any defect; we have out of Chriſts fulneſs, grace for grace, John 1. 16. Grace for the ſupply of grace upon any emergency. The manner whereby we ſtand is different from the manner of his ſtanding; he ſtood in dependance on his Original Righteouſneſs, which being once loſt, all the Original virtues depending on that, were loſt with it. Our ſtate is ſecured in higher hands. Chriſt is made Wiſdom, &c. 1 Cor. 1. 30. But of him are you in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption. All which are diſpenſed to us in the ſtreams, but reſerved in him as the Fountain. He is made all thoſe to us, not we to our ſelves. Adam's life was hid in himſelf; ours with Chriſt in God, Coloſſ. 3. 3. Our life is as ſecure in Chriſt, as Chriſts is ſecure in God. Chriſts hand, and his Fathers boſom, is not to be rifled by any power on Earth. Heaven is no place to be pillaged by the Serpent. Which ſtate then is beſt? Our nature is reſtored by the ſecond Adam fundamentally better; not at preſent ſo bright as his, but more permanent. The mutability of the firſt Adam procured our miſery; the ſtrength of the ſecond preſerves our ſecurity. So that a gracious man is better eſtabliſhed in his little grace,

grace, by the power of God, than Adam in his flouriſhing integrity by the ſtrength of his own will.

(2.) The ſtate of a Regenerate man is as ſecure as the ſtate of the inviſible Church, and more firm than that of any particular viſible Church in the World. You ſtand upon as good terms as the whole Aſſembly of the firſt-born, and upon a ſurer foundation than any particular Church, Pſal. 125. 1. They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Sion, which cannot be removed, but abides for ever. They ſhall be impregnable. As ſtable as that Mountain of the Lords houſe, which was to be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains, Iſa. 2. 2. alluding to that Temple built upon mount Moriah, of a ſteep aſcent; firmer than all the worldly powers and ſtrongeſt Monarchies, compared to Mountains in Scriptnre. Particular Churches may fall. How is the glory of many of them vaniſht? Particular believers ſhall not, becauſe their ſtanding is in Chriſt, by virtue of that Covenant whereof Chriſt is Mediator, and of that Promiſe made to the whole body, wherein the intereſt of every member is included, Matth. 16. 18. the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. Neither the power nor policy of Hell-gates being the ſeats of Judgment, and Magazines of Arms. The viſible Church is only ſo by profeſſion and priviledges; an inviſible member is ſo by nature and union. Appearances will expire, when nature ſhall abide. The myſtical Body of Chriſt, and any member of it, can no more die, than the natural Body of Chriſt can now, or any member of that. No member of Chriſts fleſhly body did or ſhall ſee corruption. The knot between the Soul and the Body is natural by the band of vital ſpirits; the knot between a true member and Chriſt is ſupernatural. The ſecond perſon in the Trinity, being united to the Body of Chriſt, kept it from corruption. The third perſon in the Trinity keeps the union between Chriſt and a myſtical member from diſſolving, which no particular Church in the World, as a Church, can lay claim to. Tho Chriſt may diſcard a particular Church, yet not a particular elect perſon, becauſe of that agreement between his Father and himſelf concerning thoſe given to him. But we read not of any whole Nation or Church in the World given to Chriſt as ſuch, and in ſuch a manner as a particular perſon is. There is a difference between Gods Electing a People to have the Goſpel preacht, and his Electing a Perſon to have the Goſpel wrought in him. The ſtanding of any particular Church is not for it ſelf, but for the Elect in it. When God chuſeth a Nation to be under the preaching of the Goſpel, it is for the ſakes of his Elect ones ſprinkled among them. And that Church ſtands as long as there are Elect perſons among them to be brought in; When the number is gathered into Gods fold, the Goſpel is removed thence, becauſe of the rejection of it by the reſt. Theſe two elections of perſons and nations, the one to grace, and the other to the enjoyment of the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, are mixed together by the Apoſtle in his Diſcourſe, Rom. 11. Some places muſt be underſtood of the one, and ſome of the other. When the Election is ſaid to be void, it is meant of the election of a Nation, as the Jews are called Gods choſen people. When it is ſaid to ſtand, it is meant of the election of a perſon: as when we ſay, Man is mortal, and man is immortal, in different ſenſes both are true; mortal according to his Body, immortal in reſpect of his Soul.

(3.) Comfort againſt the weakneſs of grace: This is the proper comfort of this Doctrine. 'Tis, and ought to be, a matter of trouble, that our grace is ſo weak; but it ſhould not be a matter of murmuring and deſpondency. We have reaſon to mourn that our graces are not ſtrong; we have reaſon to rejoyce that we have any at all. Little grace is enrolled in Heaven. Not a weak member of the inviſible Church, but hath his name written there, Heb. 10. 23. How glimmering was the Diſciples Faith! yet our Saviour bids them, in all that weakneſs, Rejoyce that their names were written in heaven, Luke 10. 20. Could their names have been blotted out again, the joy he exhorts them to could not have dwelt with ſuch a ground of fear. As the leaſt ſin beloved, brings us into alliance with the Devil; ſo the leaſt grace cheriſhed, intitles us to the Family of God; and it is but a rough draught with blots, of what God hath fairly drawn in the glorified Saints. The weakeſt grace gives a deadly wound to ſin, and a ſure, tho not ſo highly comfortable a title to ſo abundant an entrance into Heaven as a ſtronger.

ger. Do not therefore ſeek your torment, where you ſhould find your comfort.

(1.) The foundation of weak grace, and the hopes of it, is ſtrong. Every new creature hath not an equal ſtrength, but every one hath an equal intereſt in the Covenant, and as ſure a ground of hope as the higheſt. The deſign of God was to make the new Covenant ſecure from the violations of the creature, Jer. 31. 31, 32. I will make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael; not according to the covenant I made with their fathers, which my covenant they brake, tho I was an husband to them. He would make a Covenant ſtronger than to be broken by them. That Covenant was perpetual, in regard of God, for he continued a Husband to them, and did nothing to diſſolve the knot. This is not to be broken by a perſon in covenant. If it could be broken, it would be the ſame with the othe Covenant. thō not in terms, yet in the iſſue. Now true grace depends upon this Covenant, Verſe 33. I will put my law into their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. Beſides, this Covenant and the Bleſſings of it are ſettled upon believers, and every one of them, as an Inheritance, Iſa. 54. 9, 10. I have ſworn that I will not be wroth with thee: for the mountains ſhall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindneſs ſhall never depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the Lord that hath mercy on thee; and that by Oath. It could not have been made over in ſurer terms. Mountains, the ſtableſt parts of the Creation, that cannot be blown away by ſtorms, ſhall depart at the end of the World; this Covenant ſhall not. It proceeds not only from Love, but Kindneſs, which is Love ſpread with a choicer Affection. 'Tis a Covenant of Peace, wherein their reconciliation with God, and the bleſſings following from it, are ſettled upon them, and that as an heritage, Verſe 17. this is the heritage of the ſervants of the Lord; and leſt they ſhould fall or loſe their Righteouſneſs, the latter clauſe ſecures them; and their righteouſneſs is of me, ſaith the Lord. Whether you underſtand it of the Righteouſneſs of Juſtification or Sanctification, it amounts to the ſame thing. This is the ſure mercies of David. So that thou hangeſt upon a Covenant ſettled faſt by the Promiſe and Oath of God, and cemented in every part by the Mediators blood. God never yet broke his Word. It depends upon promiſe; eternal life was promiſed before the foundation of the World, Tit. 1. 2. In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lye, promiſed before the world began; to whom? To Chriſt, and in him to all the Elect of what ſize or ſtature ſoever, babes as well as ſtrong men. God had time to conſider all that unconceivable Eternity before Chriſt came, and yet he never repented of this Promiſe of Eternal Life; becauſe he cannot lye, which the Apoſtle lays an Emphaſis upon. When Chriſt came, all his actions and ſpeeches upon Record were purſuant to the confirmation of this Promiſe. The Lamb, in whoſe boſom you are carried, was ſlain from the foundation of the World in the decree of God, and voluntary deſignation of himſelf. Was there not a long time to conſider? and did he not repent of it all that time? and will he now, ſince he has paid all the price for your grace, and the continuance of it? Can a little time, ſixteen hundred years ſince Chriſt was in the fleſh, make any alteration in Gods counſel, and Chriſts deſign, which eternity could not? Beſides, the root is ſtrong, tho the branch be weak: buds draw ſap from the root, as well as the forwarder fruit. The leaſt ſplinter of Wood in a Tree is a part of the Tree. The leaſt atome, tho never ſo ſmall, is a part of the World. Every one in Chriſt is a part of Chriſt, and hath a ſhare in the Promiſe made to him. Is there any diſtinction or difference made in the Covenant between weak and ſtrong? The babe in Chriſt is as well within the verge of it, as the moſt compact Chriſtian. Never then ſadden your Souls if you find true grace in your ſelves, when you are within the arms of an everlaſting Covenant. The grace which lies ſmoking in the chaff, hath fire in it, as well as that which flames.

[2.] All grace, now triumphant, was weak at firſt. The higheſt began in a ſeed, a little ſeed. The waters of the Sanctuary, whereby the propagation of the Goſpel in the World, and the Operation of it in the heart is figured; I ſay, Thoſe waters which will perfectly purify the ſoul, did at firſt reach but to the ancles, Ezek. 47. 3, 4, 5. after that to the loins, and afterwards terwards ariſe to the height of waters to ſwim in. Till you read of any grace in Scripture without its mixtures, do not deſpond. Moſes had his Encomium of Gods familiar; yet tho he ſtruck the rock through Faith, he ſtruck twice through unbelief, when indeed he was only to ſpeak, not ſtrike, Num. 20. 8, 11. which God interprets unbelief, Verſe 12. Abraham, who is honoured with the noble title of the Father of the Faithful, had a diſtruſt of Gods promiſe, Gen. 12. 2, 3. I will make of thee a great nation, I will bleſs thee; I will bleſs them that bleſs thee, and curſe them that curſe thee: Therefore he deals with his Wife to call her ſelf his Siſter for fear of his life in Pharaoh's Court, Gen. 12. 12. And after much more experience of Gods truth, in the Court of Abimelech, Gen. 20. 11.

[3.] Your ſtock is ſure. Your grace is weak, but the ſtock in Chriſts hands for ſupply is full. He keeps it in his own hands. He knows our neceſſity better than we do; and meaſures ſupplies by his own Wiſdom, not by our deſires; for he feeds them with judgment, Ezek. 34. 16. i. e. he will govern them wiſely: for ſo that place may be underſtood. 'Tis our happineſs, that tho we have little in poſſeſſion, we have much for our neceſſity. 'Tis our happineſs that it is laid ſo high, that we cannot reach it but by Faith; that we have it not in our hands to ſquander it away. Were it in our own hands, it would quickly be out of them, and we not have a mite left. The Covenant with us, was founded upon that made with Chriſt, Iſa. 59. 21. This is my covenant with them, ſaith the Lord; My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeeds ſeed, ſaith the Lord, from henceforth, and for ever. This is my covenant with them; i. e. made with us in Chriſt. My Spirit that is upon thee, &c. As long as Chriſt hath the Spirit by virtue of that everlaſting Mediatory Covenant, ſo long ſhall the Spirit, and the Fruits, and Power of the Goſpel, be in the hearts of his people. The words in the mouth of his ſeed, depend upon the word put into his mouth, and the Spirit put upon him. The Covenant was made with Chriſt, not for himſelf, but for his ſeed, and his ſeeds ſeed; made with them, but founded upon him; It was for their ſakes the Spirit was put upon him; for their ſakes that words were put into his mouth; for their ſakes for whom he ſanctified himſelf, John 17. even for the ſakes of thoſe weak Diſciples, he then prayed for. The words put into his mouth were not bare words, but attended with Spirit; not meer profeſſions, but operative. And this was to abide upon him for them, henceforth, and for ever: for he calls it a Covenant with them, yet turns and ſpeaks to one perſon. It muſt therefore be for them, that this Perſon is endowed with the Spirit, otherwiſe it was not a Covenant with them.

[4.] Chriſts charge extends to this weak grace. It was for this reaſon he hath the order given him in the Text by his Father, not for the ſtanding Reed or flaming Flax, tho that is included. The weakeſt is here committed to him, and therefore is as much under his care. To what purpoſe hath Chriſt this order, if the weakneſs of grace were a ground of deſpondency? 'Tis a ground of humiliation, but not of diſtruſt. The Gardener that regards all his ground, watcheth over the tendereſt Plants. Our keeper riſeth early to look after the tender grapes and pomgranate buds, Cant. 7. 12. That which is feeble is as much under his conduct, as that which is vigorous. He was ordered to be a Shepherd, whoſe office is to attend the weak motions of the new fallen Lambs. His boſom is appointed a place for them; he gathereth them by his Arms; i. e. converts them by his Power, and was to carry them in his boſom, Iſa. 40. 11. He ſhall feed his flock like a ſhepherd: he ſhall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his boſom, and ſhall gently lead thoſe that are with young. If you can go, he is to guide you gently; if you cannot, he is to bear you tenderly; not on his ſhoulders, meerly by ſtrength, but in his boſom with a tender affection. He is not only the Shepherd, but Biſhop of our ſouls, 1 Pet. 2. 25. And our converſion to him makes us part of his Dioceſs; you are returned to the ſhepherd and biſhop of your ſouls. In all your weakneſs he was ordained by God for your help, Pſal. 89. 19. he laid help upon one that is mighty: mighty to preſerve his Power, and mighty to uſe it. Help ſuppoſeth perſons moſt in need of it, as the objects to whom it is to be afforded. Every New Creature hath not an equal ſtrength, but they have an equal intereſt in in the Redeemers Death and Merit, and the weakeſt may ſeem more under his care than the ſtrongeſt, becauſe they ſtand more in need of that office which he is entruſted with, and delights to exerciſe.

(5.) He delights in this charge. It was his delight to do the will of God, yea, and his meat and drink to cheriſh the beginnings of grace in the Samaritan Woman, John 4. 34. becauſe it was his Fathers work. Surely it was no ſmall part of the joy ſet before him, that upon his dying he was to be inveſted with a power to perform his Fathers charge. He will not therefore refuſe to embrace the feebleſt Saint. He knew how well the ſoul of his Father was pleaſed with his undertaking this care of the ſmoaking flax, as the words intimate, Mat. 12. 18. My beloved in whom my Soul is well pleaſed; pleaſed with that which Chriſt was to do, whereof that in the Text is a part. God takes particular notice of the beginnings of grace, and Chriſts Affection runs in the ſame Channel with his Fathers. Yea, he regards the very Trembling degrees of it. He overlooks all the Philoſophers at Athens, who boaſted themſelves to be the Grandees in Learning and Records, only two new Converts, Act. 17. ult. Dionyſius, who for all his Ability and Juſtice in judging controverſies, had never had his name ſet down there, but for his Faith; And Damaris a Woman. He joins a Woman with a Judg, to ſhow that he takes notice of the weakeſt Faith, as well as that which is joined with the ſtrongeſt parts; this great man is mentioned only upon the account of his Faith. See alſo how he overlooks the infirmities of Job, Job. 2. 3. Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job? tho he knew them as well as his graces; and doth not only approve of him, and defend him, but makes his boaſt of him. He makes a publick Proclamation with Joy in the very Teeth of the Devil. Tho he had ſo many pure Angels about him, that one would think he ſhould have ſpoken of with applauſe, as well as of a poor Mortal. Was Jobs grace very ſtrong? what means then that multitude of impatient expreſſions ſcattered in the book?

(6) He will therefore be faithful in it. His faithfulneſs is more illuſtrious in regarding the more troubleſome parts of his charge; as the Fidelity of a Friend or Servant is more evidenced by the difficulty than facility of his Truſt. When he knew how weak we are, and how apt to ſwerve; had he not been reſolved to relieve us, he had never ſent his Spirit to abide with us for ſuch an end. The Apoſtle aſſures us, that the care lies upon him ſtill to confirm us to the end, 1 Cor. 1. 8. Who ſhall alſo confirm you to the end, that you may be blameleſs in the day of our Lord Jeſus; in the day, not before; expect not grace to be triumphant till then. Wherein the faithfulneſs of God alſo bears a part, v. 9. And ſurely thoſe Corinthians were none of the ſtrongeſt, when the Apoſtle doubts whether he ſhould write to them as ſpiritual, or as unto carnal. The weakeſt is his ſeed, and he will not loſe it. You cannot value your ſecurity more than Chriſt values the honour of his office, and it being his Fathers Pleaſure that he ſhould exerciſe it, it doth more affect him than the deſires of your ſecurity can affect you. Suppoſe he himſelf had no love to Grace, yet you cannot doubt, but that he hath ſo much reſpect to his Father, as not to diſpleaſe him by a neglect of that which he ſolemnly committed to him as a pledg of his affection, and a teſtimony of his confidence in him. He will alſo be faithful to his own glory; but the fulfilling of the work of faith with power is for the glory of his name, 2 Theſ. 1. 11, 12. 'Tis one part of the glory he reſerves to himſelf, to be admired not only by them that believe, but in them at the laſt day, v. 10. admired in the admirable conduct of their Faith through all weakneſſes and difficulties.

[7.] He has given evidences of this faithfulneſs. He never yet put out a dim candle, that was lighted at the Sun of Righteouſneſs.

(1.) It was his courſe in the world. He found ſome ſmoking flax in the Ruler, Joh. 4. 47, 48, 49. Come down and heal my ſon; come down ere my child die. He thought Chriſt could cure his Son, there was ſome fire of Faith; but not unleſs he came to his houſe, and that before he died too, as if Chriſt could not recover him by a Word, and could not reſtore him after his breath was expired. Chriſt according to his Office of not quenching ſmoking flax, complys with him. So Mar. 7. 32. Their faith thought Chriſt could cure their friends, but not unleſs he laid his hands upon them; yet he grants their requeſts. He eaſily complies with a weak faith, when when he loves to put a ſtrong one to its ſhifts. As he did in the repulſe he gave to the Woman of Canaan, whoſe faith afterwards he applauds with admiration, Oh woman, great is thy faith!

(2.) It was his diſpoſition after his reſurrection, Luke 24. 13. He meets with two Diſciples going to Emmaus, who ſeem to have thrown away all their faith and hope in him, and to be upon the brink of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, v. 21. We truſted that it had been he that ſhould have redeemed Iſrael. The next words in courſe were like to have been, But we think him an Impoſtor. But doth Chriſt with indignation caſt them off as tho he would have no more to do with them? No; He takes pains to enliven their faith, and takes occaſion from their weakneſs to renew their ſtrength; and that in ſo eminent a manner, that it ſeems to be one of the moſt excellent Sermons that ever he preached, a comment upon the whole Scripture concerning himſelf, v. 27. Beginning at Moſes, he went through all the Prophets, and expounded all the Scriptures concerning himſelf. He filled their heads with knowledg and inſpired their hearts with life.

(3.) After his Aſcenſion too. He takes notice of a little ſtrength in Philadelphia, Rev. 3. 8. and opens a door for it, that no man can ſhut. Well; Did our Redeemer ever yet diſappoint a Trembling Faith, or let a limping grace go from him without a bleſſing? 'Tis too late ſurely for him to begin now at the cloſe of all things, when the world is almoſt at an end.

[8.] Therefore you may in the weakeſt ſtate expect aſſiſtance. The weakeſt grace hath a Throne of grace to ſupply it, a God of grace to delight in it, a Mediator of grace to influence it, a ſpirit of grace to brood upon it. Tho our grace be weak, yet the grace of all theſe are ſufficient to preſerve us. The weakeſt grace in Chriſts hand ſhall ſtand, when the ſtrongeſt nature without his guard ſhall fail. 'Tis not our hold of Chriſt ſo much preſerves us, as Chriſts hold of us; tho the faith we hang by, be a weak thread, yet Chriſt hath a ſtrong hand. Had you the grace of a glorified Saint, you could not maintain it without his help, and that is ſufficient to conduct through the greateſt ſtorms into a ſafe harbour. The preſerved in Chriſt is the happy Title of thoſe that are ſanctified by God the Father, as Jude ſpeaks, To them that are ſanctified in God the Father, and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, and called. His mercy is in the heavens, his righteouſneſs as the great mountain ſtable, his Title iſſuing from thence is, the preſerver of man and beaſt, Pſal. 36. 5, 6. And ſhall not that which is more valued by him than man and beaſt, that which is the cauſe of his keeping up the world, be preſerved by him? Fear not thou worm Jacob, Iſa. 41. 14. I will help thee, ſaith the Lord, and thy Redeemer the holy one of Iſrael. What hath more need to fear than a Worm, that is liable to be trod on by every paſſenger? What hath more reaſon to fear than a creeping grace in it ſelf? Yet what hath leſs reaſon to be afraid, when backt by ſuch a mighty power? 'Tis a weakneſs, but fortified by an almighty ſtrength; it hath a power which neither Adam with all his nature, nor the holy Angels before their confirmation were ever poſſeſſed of.

Well then, the weaker thy grace, the faſter let thy dependance be on Chriſt, and then thou wilt be more ſecure by that exerciſe of faith than by the ſtrongeſt grace without it. A ſmall Veſſel managed by a skilful Pilot, may be preſerved in a rough Sea, when a ſtronger left to it ſelf, will daſh in pieces.

(4.) Comfort againſt corruptions. Indwelling and eaſily beſetting ſin is that which makes a believer hang down his head. Oh this enemy within me that I cannot conquer! ſurely I ſhall one day die by the hand of Saul. 'Tis our unbelief and the ignorance of the great tranſaction between God and Chriſt, and the tenor of the Covenant of grace, which is the ground of all the practical doubts about this Doctrine as well as the notional Diſputes againſt it. Every member; tho it hath boils and ſcabs, is as much a member of the body as the ſoundeſt till it be cut off, and that it ſhall not, hath been the deſign of the whole Diſcourſe to prove. Chriſt doth not cut it off, but heal it. Is it not a part of the Covenant of grace to heal our backſlidings? Hoſ. 14. 4. When he finds a diſeaſe, he cures us by the Application of his blood, for the end of his ſtripes was that we might be healed, Iſa. 53. 5. And tho God hath a piercing eye to ſee every ſin and the malignity of every circumſtance, yet the motion of his eye that way is not to deſtroy, but to heal, Iſa. 57. 18, 19. I have ſeen his ways, and will heal him, tho he walked frowardly. We ſpeak not now of a courſe of groſs ſins. No true believer can be guilty of that; there is a great difference between fouling the feet in the mire, and a total wallowing in it like a ſwine with delight and pleaſure.

Therefore conſider that,

[1] Chriſts charge extends to this too. Is his charge not to break the bruiſed Reed? He is by the ſame Reaſon to provide againſt that which would break it. Is he not to quench the ſmoking flax? Then he is alſo to prevent the extinction of it by any other cauſe. The charge cannot be ſuppoſed only to tie his own hands from doing it. Such a Comfort would be of a ſmall value, while we were endangered by powerful enemies. But this charge arms him with a commiſſion, and lays a neceſſity upon him to prevent the breaking and quenching of it by any other hand, and therefore obligeth him to withſtand that which is moſt able and moſt likely to do it; viz. indwelling ſin. Tho the Devil be our great external enemy, yet this is our greateſt internal, without whoſe aſſiſtance the keeneſt Arrows of the Devil would be ſhot at rovers, and be uncertain in their effects. Chriſt therefore undertaking the work, undertakes every part of the charge, and this among the reſt. The conqueſt of this in the ſoul was the reaſon of the oblation of himſelf, Tit. 2. 14. Who gave himſelf for us not only to redeem from iniquity, but to purifie a people peculiar to himſelf. Is it agreeable to the Wiſdom of Chriſt, to neglect the main end of his undertaking, which was to make an end of ſin? Dan. 2. 4. What end is there if it recover its loſs, and regain its Empire in a believing ſoul? It were in vain for him to go to heaven to prepare Manſions for Believers, and ſend his Spirit to prepare them for thoſe Manſions, if corruption ſhould get a full head, which would incapacitate them for ever poſſeſſing thoſe Manſions. Would he be worthy of the name of Saviour, yea, and Salvation, a title God conferred upon him in the paſt Ages, if he ſhould not ſave thoſe that have the mark of God upon them from that corruption, without which deliverance they could not enjoy any real benefit of his purchaſed Salvation? You have no reaſon to queſtion his power, and as little to ſuſpect his faithfulneſs. The diſtruſt of either is an unworthy reflection upon that God that choſe him for this work, and upheld him in it. Infinite Wiſdom and immutable Goodneſs would never have pitched upon a perſon, for the reſtoration of mankind, of a dubious fidelity. This were to diſparage his Wiſdom, ſully the Glory of his Mercy, and render the deſigns of his goodneſs inſignificant. Shall not this great Perſon be thought fit to be truſted by us againſt our enemies, when we have both his own word, and his Fathers for his willingneſs and ability, whom God thought fit to truſt with a power againſt the greateſt enemy he had in the world upon his own ſingle promiſe? 'Tis unworthy for us to nouriſh jealouſies of ſo great a Redeemer, when God that ſent him, never had cauſe to have the leaſt ſuſpition of him. Let me then beg this of any deſpondent ſoul, not to diſtruſt the Redeemers faithfulneſs, till you meet with a perſon of more unblemiſhed fidelity to confide in.

[2.] He has an enmity againſt your corruptions. Sin hath done more wrong to God than ever it did to us. Can it be thought then, that he ſhould let ſo injurious an enemy reign in the hearts of any that love God, and are beloved by him? Your hatred againſt it cannot be ſo great as his, becauſe you cannot arrive to an equality of holineſs with him; the greater the holineſs, the greater the hatred to any thing contrary to it. Our high Prieſt is holy, ſeparate from ſinners, and therefore made higher than the heavens, Heb. 7. 26. Separate from ſin too, in all kinds of Affection. Letting ſin reign in them for whom he is a Prieſt is inconſiſtent with the holineſs of his Office. Had he not had an indignation againſt ſin, and a pitty to the ſinner, he would have ſpared both the trouble of coming and the pains of dying.

[3.] His reſidence in Heaven is an evidence that this corruption ſhall be deſtroyed. The heavens muſt receive him till the time of the reſtitution of all things, Act. 3. 22. Ἀποκατάστασις, τελείωσις ſo Heſychius. Till the time of the perfection of all things: His being there is an evidence that things ſhall be reſtored to a perfect ſtate. It was promiſed by God from the beginning of the world, all the propheſies were deſigned to declare it, that thoſe things deformed by the Devil ſhould be reſtored to their primitive luſtre. Things cannot be reſtored till ſin be deſtroyed, Grace fully fully compleated, Satan put out of all Dominion; in a Word, All his enemies put under his Feet; and we have the greateſt aſſurance of this; for God hath repeated it again and again by all the Prophets from the beginning of the world as if Gods thoughts run upon nothing elſe but this, and the Spirit of Propheſie was nothing elſe but the Teſtimony of Jeſus; (as indeed it is not, Rev. 19. 10.) A Witneſs of what Chriſt was to do. He hath the government to reſtore things. If every thing is to be reſtored, believers certainly ſhall not be left out. It was his main deſign to expel unbelief and ſin out of the hearts of his Diſciples by his gracious Exhortations when he was in the World; much more will he do it by his power conferred upon him ſince his Reſurrection, and poſſeſſed by him upon his Aſcenſion. He ſits King in Heaven to reſtore this.

[4.] 'Tis his glory to conquer them. The ſtronger our corruptions are, the firmer ground hath Chriſt to glorifie his ſtrength in our weakneſs. If they were not ſo ſtrong and ſin ſo foul, Redemption would not appear ſo plenteous. His office is chiefly exerciſed about thoſe; when thoſe are fully conquered in all the elect his Office ceaſeth, and the kingdom is to be reſigned to the Father. Till then he is a Shepherd, and in that reſpect his Office is to find his Sheep out when they wander, and bring them home: If he came to ſeek that which was loſt, it is no leſs for his honour to preſerve that which he hath found. The choicer the thing, and the ſtronger the oppoſition, the more glory accrues to the preſerver of it. Is it for his honour to begin a work in thee, and ſtart back from it? Is it likely he would ever have ſtruck a ſtroke at thoſe hard hearts of ours, if he did not intend to make thorow work with them? He never yet did any work by halves, and ſhall he begin now?

[5.] 'Tis already condemned by him. God condemned ſin in the fleſh by the Sacrifice of Chriſt, Rom. 8. 3. And for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh. As at his death there was a general condemnation of ſin in its nature, ſo upon faith in this Sacrifice, our faith in his blood, there is a particular condemnation of ſin in its power, as an unrighteous thing, and not fit by reaſon of its malignity to have a ſtanding there. He condemned it by his holineſs in the Law, by his juſtice in the death of Chriſt, and by his mercy in the renewing of thy Nature, which is always accompanied with a condemnation and in part an execution of ſin. When the guilt of thy ſin was pardoned, the power of thy ſin was condemned. As the pardon of the one will not be reverſed, ſo neither ſhall the condemnation of the other. If it be condemned by our Saviour in his fleſh, it will be conquered in us by his ſpirit; for whatſoever was done by Chriſt as Mediator in his Perſon, was an evidence of what he would do by his ſpirit in his Members according to their capacity. Hence they are ſaid to be crucified, riſen, aſcended, and to ſit in Heavenly Places with him, not only virtually in him, as their head, but ſpiritually in themſelves. Shall a dying, gaſping ſin overpower a living, thriving Grace? Sin therefore ſhall be conquered. The Father by his ſpirit will purge away the worms and ſuckers which may hinder the growth and ripening of the fruit, John 15. 2. Every branch that bears fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. If a branch, tho ſmall, he will take care to remove the hindrance to its fruitfulneſs. God foreſaw what infirmities thou wouldſt have, before he gave Chriſt this commiſſion; and Chriſt fore ſaw them before his acceptance of the charge. If their preſcience could not ſtop God in his gift, nor cool Chriſt in his acceptance, why ſhould it now.

But,

(1.) This conqueſt is by degrees. 'Tis victory promiſed in the Text, therefore a conflict is implied, and muſt be endured. Victory doth not attend the beginning of a War juſt at the heels. Some time muſt be allowed between the ſmoke and flame. Chriſt muſt not quench the ſmoke; but grace may ſmoke, and only ſmoke for a while. His charge is to keep that which is committed to him, not preſently to overthrow its Enemies. He will eye his Authority and inſtructions, as he is Gods ſervant; for as he hath received a commandment from his father, John 14. 31. ſo he acts. He will not perfect it in an inſtant, but at length he will. Light, and a fulneſs of it, is ſown for the righteous. 'Tis but ſown, time muſt be allowed between that and the harveſt. The new Creation is no more than the old was perfected at once. Can you expect your Saviour ſhould make quicker work with you than with his Diſciples when he was upon the Earth? It was his pleaſure not to reduce them preſently to a perfect ſtate. Neither can we expect more than our Saviour Prayed for which was not that you ſhould be without foils to your Faith, but without the failing of your Faith. He did not deſire his Father preſently to take them out of a World of ſin, or ſin preſently from them, but to preſerve them under it, from being conquered by it. God works to will and to do, but of his own good pleaſure. Not as we pleaſe, but as himſelf pleaſeth.

(2.) Yet while they do continue, the love of God to thee is not hindered by them. The incorruptible ſeed, which is his own, will more prevail to draw out his love, than thy infirmities to engage his hatred againſt thee. When Chriſt hung upon the Croſs with all the ſins of believers about him, God did not withdraw his Love from him, becauſe of that righteouſneſs, holineſs, and love to God found in him; yet he withdraw his comfortable preſence, to ſhow his hatred of ſin. As God dealt with the head, ſo he will with the members. Eſpecially if your hearts begin to hanker after any ſin; tho he hath engaged not to take away his loving kindneſs from you, yet he may withdraw his comfort, till you have repented of your ſin. He may chaſtiſe you with rods, but will not ſuffer his Faithfulneſs to fail. He will, as a Mother, raiſe you when you fall, but whip you for falling, to cauſe you to take more heed. Chriſt ſeems to have had as much reaſon to caſt off his Diſciples, as ever he had to caſt off any believing Soul ſince. None could ever forſake him in ſuch extremity as they did, for his perſon will never be in the like ſtraits again. Yet having once loved them, he loved them to the end, and after the end, after his Reſurrection, as appears by viewing the ſtory. And 'tis to be obſerved, That tho their unbelief, ignorance and pride did often fume from them in the preſence of their Maſter, yet Chriſt mentions none of them in his Prayer to his Father; Only their grace, John 17. 6, 8. They have kept thy word; they have believed that thou didſt ſend me. They had indeed received the Word of God, but it was lodged in Souls very muddy.

(3.) While they do continue, God by his Wiſdom and Grace draws profit to you from them. The very ſtirring of one ſin is ſometimes the ruine of another; a groſs ſin ſometimes is the occaſional break-neck of ſpiritual pride. The high thoughts Peter had conceived of himſelf upon the confeſſion of Chriſt, were not ſcattered, till he had as ſhamefully denied him, as before he had glorioufly confeſt him. The thorn in the fleſh of that great Apoſtle, whether it was an outward temptation, or inward corruption, kept him upon his level from being liſted up above meaſure. Thus doth Chriſt make good his charge by ordering things ſo by his Wiſdom, that that which would in it ſelf quench the ſmoking flax, is an occaſional means to enflame it. The fogs which threaten the choaking the Sun, make his heat more vigorous after the diſperſion of thoſe vapours. Neither can ſin, becauſe it hath no poſitive being, be excluded from the number of thoſe things which by the over-ruling grace of God are ordered to our good, Rom. 8. 28. tho it be not ſo in its own nature, ſince the Penmen of Scripture ſpake not alway according to the rules and terms of Philoſophy.

For a cloſe therefore of this: perhaps it is our own fault that our corruptions are no more ſhattered. God hath given you ſucceſs againſt ſome ſin. But have your hearts been as much elevated in praiſe for it, as they were before fervent in prayer? If corruption gather ſtrength, charge not God with want of love, but your ſelves with want of thankfulneſs. Prayer procures mercy, but praiſe is a means to continue it. As we muſt depend upon his ſtrength for a victory, ſo we muſt acknowledg his ſtrength in our ſucceſs; elſe he may withdraw his power, and our Enemies may thereupon re-aſſume new life, and aſſault us with a greater courage. Again, Let not any thing you have heard of the Faithfulneſs and Power of Chriſt make you neglect your duty. Let Aſaph be your pattern, Pſal. 73. who after a ſtrong conflict with ſin, had an aſſurance that God would guide him by his counſel to glory, Verſe 24. This makes him not lazy, but quickens him into a reſolve, That it was good, and good for him too to draw nigh to God, Verſe 28.

God

God is ready with his counſel to guide us, but we muſt be ready with our Petitions.

3. USE. Matter of Duty.

(1.) How ſhould men labour to get into a ſtate of grace! To get within the verge of Chriſts commiſſion, into ſuch a ſecurity which may at laſt bring them to an eternal triumph over Death and Hell! Security of Eſtate, and ſecurity of Perſon and Intereſt, is the main intendment of men in the World. But ſecurity of Soul is leaſt in mens thoughts. Should not this latter be as ſeriouſly minded? Were there a ſtrong Tower wherein they might be infallibly preſerved in the time of hoſtile Invaſion, and be out of the reach of the Enemies battery, how greedy would men be to get underthe ſhelter? Such a ſtrong tower is the Name of the Lord, and thoſe that put their truſt in him ſhall be ſafe both againſt open Invaſion and ſecret ſtratagems, Prov. 18. 10. The Name of the Lord is a ſtrong tower: the righteous runs into it, and is ſafe. By the Name of the Lord, the Jews underſtand in this place, and in many other, the Meſſiah appointed for the ſecurity of the Righteous. Methinks every natural man ſhould run with all haſte into his Cloſet, fall upon his knees, and not riſe till he hath that grace which is by Gods order the ſubject of Chriſts tender care. Methinks he ſhould cry and groan, ſigh and pray, till he have at leaſt ſome ſmoking flax. There is no medium; we muſt either be under the conduct of Chriſt, or the government of the Devil. If we are in our natural ſtate, we are not inrolled in Chriſts Family. There is nothing for Chriſt, but enough for the Devil to make victorious. Smoking grace ſhall grow into a flame of love, and ſmoking ſins into a flame of wrath. Smoking grace is under his care, and ſmoking ſins under his vengeance. As at the laſt Chriſt ſhall come to be admired in all them that believe, i. e. in the conduct of them through grace to happineſs, ſo he ſhall be admired too in the vengeance he ſhall take upon all them that obey not the Goſpel, 2 Theſſ. 1. 8, 10.

(2.) Examine whether you have grace or no. 'Tis not loſt time to enquire whether you have this victorious principle? Put thoſe queſtions to your Souls. Have I a ſincere reſolution to diſcard my former ſin? Do I moſt abhor my darling luſts? Is the burden of this body of death my greateſt grief? Have I valuations of Chriſt above all the World? Would I rather be under the gracious government of Chriſt, than be the greateſt Prince in the World without it? Do I eſteem God my chief good, and delight in ſpiritual converſe with him, above thouſands of Gold and Silver? Have I a reliſh of the things of God above all the pleaſures of ſenſe? Is the knowledg of God, and excitation of my affections towards him, my chief light? Try it by its activity. 'Tis a true Maxim, Operari ſequitur eſſe. To be without operation, is not to be. If there be not the Operation, there is not the Eſſence of grace. 'Tis impoſſible ſo active a Being as that ſhould lie idle in the Soul; there will be ſmoke, ſtrong deſires, aſcents upwards, and aims at an Heavenly Region, tho ſometimes it be hindered in its direct aſcent by the violence of the winds, as the ſmoke is. Every creature is active in that which concerns its welfare; grace therefore will be as active as any natural thing whatſoever, according to its degrees, becauſe it is a Divine communication, a participation of the Divine Nature. It being more noble, and of a choicer extraction than any other creature, it will be more active to reſiſt the Invaſions of the Devil, and to move towards God as its chief end.

Only take theſe cautions:

[1.] Judg not of thy want of grace by the not acting of that grace which formerly was very vigorous. One grace may for a time ceaſe to act ſo ſenſibly, to give way to the powerful Operations of another. John Baptiſt did decreaſe, that Chriſt might increaſe. Graces have their particular ſeaſons to traverſe the ſtage of the Soul, ſometimes Love, ſometimes Hope, ſometimes Patience, Humility, Faith and dependance, ſometimes Sorrow for ſin, ſometimes Joy, &c.

[2.] Grace may be ſometimes oppreſt by a temptation, and ſo may ceaſe a ſenſible acting; but it will recover it ſelf by degrees.

[3.] If

[3.] If you find upon a diligent ſearch that you have true grace, take heed of nouriſhing jealouſies of God, and unbelieving doubts of the Care of Chriſt over you. We indeed often have our fears of our ſelves upon the clouding of our evidences; and when we have reaſon to queſtion the truth of our grace, we have very good reaſon to queſtion our ſtanding alſo. Tho we have a clear proſpect of our grace, and know it to be true, yet there may be fears in us of what might have been, had we not this ſecurity in Chriſts commiſſion. As a man upon a high Tower, tho hemm'd in with ſtrong Battlements, and ſure that he cannot fall, yet when he looks down, he cannot but have ſome horror and chilneſs in his blood at the apprehenſion of what might be, if he had not that protection *. Neither do I diſcourage fears in our ſelves, and fears of thoſe things which may weaken our hopes of Salvation. For thoſe the Apoſtle joyns with a confidence in God, *Phil.*2. 12, 13. Work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling, for it is God which works in you both to will and to do. Fear your ſelves, but have confidence in God, a believing fear without an unbelieving jealouſy of Gods neglect of you. For all doubts of the ſtability of the Covenant, and the perpetual tenderneſs of God, are brats of a natural Pelagianiſm. Breathe not your unbelieving fears in the face of Chriſt; 'tis a wrong to his Commiſſion, a diſparagement to his Fathers Wiſdom, as if he had placed ſo great a truſt in feeble hands; and a vertual accuſing of God and Chriſt of the greateſt falſity imaginable, whereby we make him more baſe and deceitful than the worſt of men; an affronting the main tenor of the covenant of grace, and making the Work of Redemption to bear no better fruits than that of Creation. How languiſhing will be our love to God, while we have unworthy ſuſpicions of him, that he ſhould love us this day, and be an Enemy to us to morrow? Can we love a man this day, that we fear will the next be our deadly Enemy? Let the time ſpent in ſuch jealous thoughts and complaints of God, be ſpent in duty. Would it not be a trouble to a loving Husband, to have his Wife complain of her fears of his caſting her off after the Marriage-knot, and reiterated promiſes and aſſurances of his Affection? Would ſhe not better engage his Affections by a performance of all offices of Love and Duty towards him?

* Theſ. Salm. de Preſever.

[4.] Let not this Doctrine encourage any remiſneſs in our known duties. Let none encourage themſelves to a freedom in ſin, and preſume upon Gods preſervation of them without the uſe of means. No; The electing counſel upon which this victory is founded, choſe us to the means as well as to the end. He that makes ſuch a conſequence, I doubt whether ever he was a Chriſtian. I may ſafely ſay, That any perſon that hath a ſettled, reſolved, and wilful remiſneſs, never yet was in the covenant of grace, ſince that promiſeth ſuch a fear of God in the heart which is incompatible with a reſolved lazineſs in duty. 'Tis a new heart and a new ſpirit, not a lazy heart, that is the intendment of the Covenant. The ſame will which is the ſeat of grace, can never be the ſettled ſeat of the neglects of God. God hath promiſed a victory; but the very promiſe of victory implies a War, and commands, as well as encourages a ſtanding to our Arms. Victories are never gained by ſleep and lazineſs; Camps may be beat up, and Throats cut, if Guards be neglected. He that is not under the influence of the Doctrine of grace, never had the truth of habitual grace in him. He that hath not learned the Leſſon which the Grace or Goſpel of God teacheth, to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, &c. *Tit.*2. 11, 12. was never any proficient in Chriſts School, never had any work of Grace. 'Tis the nature of Grace to be active. 'Tis a Divine principle; ſecurity a Diabolical; darkneſs and light cannot blend together in intenſe degrees; Chriſt and Belial cannot ſhake friendly hands. Security is never the effect, but the diſeaſe of grace, the death of holineſs, and the life of ſin. That grace which aſſures us to the end, will make us conſcionable in the means to attain it. A partial ſecurity is alſo very dangerous in a Chriſtian. It will kill our comfort, tho it may not deſtroy our Souls. It will impair the beauty of grace, tho not its being. Would any but a mad man under a diſtemper neglect the means to reſtore his healthfulneſs, becauſe he were ſure to live ſo long a time?

[5.] Admire the grace of God. How much are we beholding to the grace of God

God which is at an hourly expence upon us? As his Providence is called, a continual creation by the efflux of his Power, so our preservation in the new state is a continual Regeneration by the influence of his grace. God in giving thee grace, hath given thee more than if he had given thee all the glory of the world. All other things are managed only by a common Providence, this is put more immediately under Christs charge. By giving thee this, which is a peculiar part of his Commission, he hath given thee such a Guardian, such an advantage, which could never have been gained by a confluence of all the honours in the World. 'Tis a standing Miracle in the World, That all the floods of temptations should not be able to quench this little Heavenly spark in the heart; that it should be preserved from being smothered by the steams of sin, which arise in us; that a little smoking Flax should smoke and burn in spite of all the Buckets of Water which are poured upon it. To see a rich Jewel in a Childs hand, with a Troop of Thieves about him snatching at it, and yet not able to plunder, would raise an astonishment both in the actors and spectators, and make them conclude an invisible strength that protects the Child, and defeats the Invaders. Thus God perfects his strength in our weakness, and ordains matter for praise in the mouths and hearts of Babes and Sucklings.

[6.] Acknowledg thy standing and thy present victories only to be by the Grace of God. Give the grace of God its due praise. God hath fixed our standing in Christ, and intrusted and charged him with our preservation, that grace might triumph in the whole Christian-pilgrimage, till we come to the Land of rest; that nothing may be heard either in Heaven or Earth, but the acclamations of grace, grace. God put no trust in his saints, Job 15. 15. In some other person therefore as the head of them. The ground of our perseverance is not in our selves then, since God puts no trust in us, but in another, in the Mediator.

We cannot beat men too much off from themselves; and therefore to strengthen this, take these grounds:

(1.) Grace in its own Nature is not immutable, nor independent. Immutability is not intrinsical to grace; neither is it, nor can it be, the essential property of any creature tho never so high. 'Tis a natural perfection belonging only to God. The habit of grace is called an incorruptible seed; not that it is so in its own nature, (for it is a creature, and therefore defectible; for mutability is as much belonging to the essence of a creature, as immutability to the essence of God. As it is impossible God should be mutable, so it is impossible a creature should be in its own nature immutable.) But grace is immortal in respect of that Omnipotent power which doth attend the principle, and spreads its warm wings over it, as the Spirit over the World, to bring it to a perfect beauty and order out of the Chaos. If grace did not depend upon God in its preservation, but were unchangeable in its own nature, it might be counted as perfect as God, whose only prerogative it is to be independent and immutable in himself. The Heathens could say, There was no τὸ ὄν, no ens, but God; in him we have our being, and in him only we have our firm and stable being.

(2.) The same power that doth create, is necessary to preserve. There is little difference between Creation and Conservation the one gives primo esse; the other porro esse. The Wisdom and Power of God is as eminent in the preservation and Government of the World, as in the rearing of it. We are no more able to preserve Grace, than we are to create it. We cannot preserve our own Thoughts which are the natural products of our minds, much less so rich a Treasure as Grace, which is purely supernatural, and in the midst of so many Pirates which endeavour to rob us of it. As the first habitual Grace is by the operation of Gods grace in us, so the daily preservation of it is by his assisting Grace, which in a sweet way, and yet efficacious, keeps grace in its station, and carries on the soul to further degrees. As it is the preserving power of God maintains the world, so the auxiliary grace of God maintains grace and all the exercises of it in the heart, which could not else be kept up by all the power of mens wit or will. As the influence of the Sun is necessary to all natural productions, preservation, and maturity of them, so is the influence of Christ necessary to all productions and preservations of grace. The Righteousness whereby we are justified, and whence whence our habitual grace doth ſpring, is laid up in Chriſt, and our ſtrength too, Iſa. 45. 24 In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength. Righteouſneſs to juſtifie us, and ſtrength to preſerve us; and as he is our Redeemer, laying thereby the foundation of the new Creation; ſo he is our ſtrength whereby it is preſerved, Pſal. 19. ult. Oh Lord, my ſtrength, and my Redeemer. The former part of the Pſalm is by the Apoſtle in the Romans applied to the times of the goſpel. Our redemption and our ſtrength, our righteouſneſs imputed, our Righteouſneſs inherent, and our Strength are the effects of the ſame cauſe. So that we can no more be our own ſtrength, than be our own Redeemers; nor be our own ſtrength no more than our own Righteouſneſs. When Paul complains of his temptation, God anſwers him that his grace ſhould be ſufficient for him. Not the habitual grace in Paul, but the aſſiſting grace of God, 2 Cor. 12. 9. Hence it is that the Saints in Scripture deſire ſo often God to help them, which they need not, if their inherent grace were ſufficient to preſerve them.

(3.) The ſtanding of thoſe who are in their conſummate ſtate in glory, is only by grace as the chief cauſe. The good Angels and bleſſed ſouls are confirmed in that ſtate by a ſuperabounding Grace; for by nature they are mutable. Was it the contemplation of the face of God that kept the Angels firm in that ſtate? What is the reaſon ſome of the Angels fell who contemplated Gods Face at the creation as well as thoſe that ſtood? Or is it that they ſee no good which they want, being advanced the higheſt of any creatures? Was not this the caſe of the fallen Angels? What good did they want which was proper to a created ſtate? Beſides, confirmation is poſitivus effectus, a poſitive effect, and therefore muſt have a poſitive cauſe, a privative cauſe not being ſufficient to produce a poſitive effect. Or do the good Angels and glorified Saints continue firm to God, becauſe they know that if they ſin, they ſhould be eternally miſerable? But this doth not become a bleſſed ſtate to avoid ſin for fear of puniſhment, rather than love of Righteouſneſs. Beſides, the happineſs of heaven could not be eternal, nor the joy pure, that is mixed with thoſe fears of falling and loſing it. Or is it from an affection to the pleaſure of the place? Such a ſelf-principle becomes not the purity of that ſtate. But tho their inherent grace, the contemplation of God, and delight in him, may be ſome means of their ſtanding and methods God uſeth, yet thoſe are not ſufficient of themſelves. 'Tis God in his incomprehenſible grace which preſerves them.

Bradw. de Cauſa Dei. l. 2. c. 15.

Rutherfords Letters, p. 184. 'Tis an excellent Speech of a holy man of our neighbour nation: I am ſure if my feet were in Heaven, and Chriſt ſhould ſay, defend thy ſelf, I will hold thee no longer, I ſhould go no farther, but preſently fall down in many pieces of dead nature. If you can find one Saint that in that place of glory aſcribes the beginning or perfection of his Salvation to himſelf, then glory in your ſelves too. But not till then, and I am ſure you never will.

(4.) If all this be true, much leſs can the beſt grace in this world preſerve it ſelf, becauſe at beſt in it ſelf 'tis weaker than its adverſaries. No ſooner is grace put into the heart, but all the powers of hell are in arms againſt it, and would murther the new-born heavenly nature. Now it being a creature weak and imperfect, it cannot be ſo powerful in Operation, as to reſiſt the force of a ſtronger being, and a ſubtle and inſinuating adverſary. Were there no Devils to aſſault, I do not underſtand how this principle, ſo weak in it ſelf, were able to make head againſt the deceitfulneſs of our own hearts. 'Tis the Spirit ſteps in to quell thoſe deſtroyers, and brood upon his own work in the ſoul. What? Was it Peters ſtrength, or Gods grace in him, that made the difference between him and Judas? Between Paul and the reſt of the perſecuting Phariſees? 'Tis from Gods faithfulneſs that we are eſtabliſhed and keept from evil, 2 Theſ. 3. 3. But the Lord is faithful, who ſhall eſtabliſh you and keep you from evil. If God, not our ſelves; 'tis true, we will, but God works that will in us. We work, but the grace of God works that work in us, and for us. If by grace we are what we are, it is by grace we do what we do, and that of Gods good pleaſure, not our merit. Our ſufficiency is of God, not of our ſelves. Our fruitfulneſs depends upon our abiding in Chriſt. What can Duſt and Aſhes do againſt Principalities and Powers? What man is able without the grace of God to wreſtle with an experienced Devil? A ſmoking flax would quickly be blown out or expire after a little blaze, if God did not cheriſh it; a bruiſed Reed would be trod in the dirt, if he did not ſecure it. A gracious ous man depends upon God as the Steel doth upon the Loadstone in the Air, which if once separated will be carried down with its own weight, and be reduced to a motion proper to its nature. If God should withdraw his grace from us, the grace in us would not preserve us from falling as low as Hell; for of it self it is far more insufficient to preserve us, than the strength which Angels and Adam had was to preserve them. We are preserved not by any inherent power in our selves, but by the constant touches of God upon our wills, whereby he keeps our wills fixed to him.

Let not then our free-will usurp the praise which is due only to Gods grace.

(1.) There is danger in it. To ascribe thy standing or victory to thy self, is an usher to some scurvy and deplorable fall. When we confide too much in our selves, God leaves us to our own foolish confidence, to reduce us to our proper dependency on him. Peters boasting of the power of his own grace, was a just cause of his being left to himself, that he might be sensible of his own weakness, and the true ground of his security. If we do fall, it is not for want of faithfulness in God, but for want of Thankfulness in us.

(2.) 'Tis our sin. So much as we ascribe any thing to our own strength, so much we rob grace of its glory. We provoke the Lord to jealousie, who will not have the glory due to his name, ascribed to the creature.

(3.) The contrary is our Advantage. The acknowledgment of our dependency on God is the way to be preserved; the more we give God the glory of his grace, the more will he give us the comfort of it.

[7.] Let the falls of others that seem stronger than you, make you more thankful, and more compassionate. If they make you more thankful, they will make you more compassionate. Tho you may be engraven with more lively characters of Gods Image, and in an higher manner like to God, yet grace is to be acknowledged that kept Temptations from overcoming you. Let not your pride, but your praise take encouragement from thence. Think not your selves better, because you are victorious while others are defeated, but God more gracious to you. The continuance of his assisting grace was the cause of your success, as the withdrawing of it was the cause of the others defeat. If this too much natural corruption be indulged, it is a ground to fear we may shortly be his successors in the like fault, or a worse.

Be more compassionate to others, Gal. 6. 1. If a man be overtaken in a fault, you which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thy self, lest thou also be tempted. Let the faults of others teach us to exercise the grace of humility in our hearts, and carriage towards them. Make not the breach wider by our censures, which is too wide already by Satans Power. Restore with meekness, not proud censoriousness; by a dove-like meekness like that of our Saviour; the case may shortly be our own, and we may stand in need of his assistance for our restoration. To pity or help a gracious man in such a case, is to assist Christ in his charge, and be his seconds in his duel against the Devil, and will be kindly accepted by him. God commanded in the Law to help a beast, if they saw it in a Ditch. 'Tis unnatural to let an infant lie on the ground and not lend a hand to lift it up; much more to let an infant grace, the birth of God and charge of Christ, to lie grovelling in the earth by the power of sin.

[8.] Despise not therefore small grace in any. Is Christ to have a special regard to smoking flax and bruised reeds? Is it fit we should be of a temper contrary to our Saviour in despising that which God hath ordered him to regard? Must that be the object of our laughter, which is the object of Christs tendrest care? Is that to be the subject of our scorn, which is one of the chief parts of his commission to take care of? Can he be thought to be regenerate, who is of a disposition so contrary to him who ought to be his pattern? If Gods soul be well-pleased with Christs care of small grace, he must abominate any temper so opposite to his own, and that of his Son. 'Tis a pride and a scorn like to that of Devils, not a spirit like that of God. As the least sin in others must not draw our affection, so the weakest grace in others must not lie under our contempt. Would you tread upon a Diamond because it is little, or slight a Star bigger than the whole earth, because it seems a little twinkling spark in your eye? Let us look to it then, that we diſeſteem not that in another, which is of more worth than the whole Maſs of the ungracious world. 'Tis a gallant diſpoſition not to be offended with that ſmoke, which doth not offend the Redeemers eye.

[9.] Stand faſt. Leave not off till you gain a full victory; till judgment be brought forth to victory. 'Tis neceſſary. He that is not at laſt victorious, was never any Soldier under Chriſts pay, or inſpir'd with Chriſts ſpirit. Men may think they ſtand faſt, and are in a proſperous way to victory, when they are not, 1 Cor. 10, 12. Wherefore let him that thinks he ſtands faſt, take heed leſt he fall. There muſt therefore be much watchfulneſs and warineſs uſed. Tho this Doctrine ſtands firm, yet ſuch exhortations muſt be uſed. The Word of Chriſt to Peter, that his faith ſhould not fail, was as firm as a Rock, yet Mat. 26. 40, 41. He ſaith unto Peter, Watch and pray, that you enter not into a temptation; he ſtirs him up particularly to his watchful guard, tho there were two others beſides, that had not that aſſurance from his mouth, that their faith ſhould not fail, as Peter had. Paul promiſeth the Corinthians in the name of God, 1 Cor. 10. 13, 14. that God would not ſuffer them to be tempted above meaſure; muſt they therefore ſtand idle, and ſuffer themſelves to be carried down the ſtream of a Temptation, and leave God wholly to do his work? No. v. 14. he draws an argument from this promiſe to exhort them to their duty, wherefore my beloved flee from Idolatry; flie, not creep, not go, not walk. Promiſes are not to encourage our lazineſs, but quicken our induſtry. Let not the charge then brought againſt Ephraim fall upon us, That our goodneſs is like a morning dew, Hoſ. 6. 8. When men begin in the ſpirit, and end in the fleſh, the end will be both dreadful and ſhameful. An eternal Crown is entailed upon a conſtant faithfulneſs. Our running in a race near to the end will be inſignificant, if then our Antagoniſt get the ſtart of us. 'Tis by this conſtancy we come neareſt the name of God, which is, I am that I am, unchangeable in Perfections, and immutable in goodneſs. Our actions ſhould be ſuitable to the reward promiſed, which is not for a day or two, but for eternity. We muſt hold on and wreſtle, till we get the bleſſing. Without continuance we loſe our pains, and the fruit of them, our Crown. Run not ſlowly; but that you may obtain, let your eye be upon the Crown, you will never elſe run ſwiftly, becauſe not chearfully. But withall, means muſt be uſed, to ſtand faſt in grace and gain a victory. God doth not preſerve a Chriſtian by force or compel him to keep his ſtanding as he doth eſtabliſh the earth, or the Heavens, but by rational means, by promiſes and precepts ſuitable to the condition of a rational and voluntary Agent, and propoſing affective and alluring arguments to encourage him in his courſe; yet he leaves not the ſucceſs barely to this, and the operation of our own wills, but attends it with the ſupernatural power of his Spirit, ſuitable to the manner of our firſt converſion, which was not by violence, but by the propoſals of the Goſpel, and the ſalvation promiſed in it, wherein a ſecret power of the ſpirit was exerted upon the heart, enlightning the mind, and enclining the will, and drawing it with the cords of a man in a way of love, to a compliance with the Goſpel-promiſe. So likewiſe in the preſervation and progreſs of Grace, there is ſtill a ſecret working of the Spirit of God with outward exhortations, and admonitions to perſeverance; thereby keeping up the new habit, and new heart in us, quickening it by outward means aud rational ways, ſuited to the judgment and reaſon of the new creature; and thus keeping his hand upon the will, he moves it to ſuch ends, for which he firſt touched it, and draws it on from one degree unto another, till it comes to perfection.

Camero de Eccleſ. p. 227.

Therefore we muſt not make uſe of this doctrine to neglect the means God hath appointed for the eſtabliſhing and compleating of grace; ſince God acts with us as rational creatures, we are not only paſſive but active ſubjects in this work. John aſſures the believers, that the unction in them ſhould preſerve them from ſouldeſtroying errors. There is this paſſive perſeverance, 1 Joh. 2. 27. As it hath taught you, ye ſhall abide in him. Muſt they therefore be careleſs? No; v. 28. He backs it with duty on their parts. Wherefore my little children abide in him, that when he ſhall appear we may have confidence; abide in him, that certainly abides in you. There is ſcarce a promiſe in the whole book of God to encourage us, but is ſome where or other attended with a precept to quicken us. Means.

(1.) Look well to Sincerity. This is the blood and vital Spirit, which runs through through the veins of every Grace, without which it is not what it seems to be; Faith is not Faith, unless it be unfeign'd, and what may seem to be Love, is not so, unless it be Sincere. Sincerity is that Principle in the heart, which complies with the quickning Grace of God, as the vital Spirit in a plant doth with the beams of the Sun, which doth not only make it stand, but grow against the injuries of the weather. It was Gods manner long ago to have a special respect to Sincerity, Job 8. 20. Behold God will not cast away a perfect man, neither will he help the evil doer, לא ימאס. He will not despise or turn away himself. If a sincere man falls, he will reach out his hand to lift him up, as the Antitheses manifests; The word being in the Hebrew, he will not take the evil doer by the hand, לא בידיחזיק, Implying, that he doth hold the other, and raise him up. 'Tis our Sincerity in withstanding the sins and temptations of the World, that the promise of perfect Sanctification is made to, Revel. 3. 4, 5. Thou hast a few names in Sardis, which have not defil'd their garments, and they shall walk with me in white, they shall be cloathed in white. An allusion to the Jewish custom of admitting the Priests into their Office, by cloathing them with white, as a badg of their Office, and continuance in the Priesthood. Job held fast his integrity, Job 2. 3. And that was a means to preserve and recover him. Uncompounded things are least subject to Putrefaction, whereas mixt bodies easily ferment and corrupt; sincerity can never be feeble, because the spirit of power alwaies attends it, 2 Tim. 1. 7. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, of love, and of a sound mind. The Apostle couples them both together. A single respect to Christ in the midst of shaking Persecution, is both an evidence of the strong touch of the heart by the Spirit, and a preservative against Apostacy; as the standing right of the Needle in the Compass, in the midst of the winds which tose the Ship, manifests its powerful touch by the loadstone, and is a means to direct it in its course, and preserve it from a Wrack.

(2.) Get a stock of spiritual knowledg, and actuate it often. The grave considering Christian will stand, when the hot headed professor, like horses of the same temper, will jade and sink under the rider in a few miles. Men whose Religion consists rather in a commotion of their passions, than a judicious and considerate Determination of their wills, will quickly flag; hot beginners are not durable: violent motions, either in Naturals or Morals, are not perpetual; get the experience of every truth you hear. Experimental knowledg is the true ballast of the Soul, when meer sound and air is a rouling and moveable thing. Meer head professors are as light as a cork dancing upon every dash of water. An experimental tast of the Grace of God, viz. That Grace of Christ which produceth a coming to him, is a means to be built up a spiritual house, 1 Pet. 2. 3, 4, 5. If so be you have tasted that the Lord is gracious. It must be a tast, not only the hearing of a sound; 'tis not enough to be sound in judgment, but spiritual in tast, Col. 1. 23. Skilful Musitians, who understand the delicacy of the airs in a tune, will chain their ears to the sound, when an unskilful person will listen and stare a while, and run away. Our valuations of God, are according to the degrees of our knowledg; and our cleavings to him, according to the degrees of our Estimations of him. Actuate it often. Let thy knowledg sink down to thy will, and lie ready by thee, to bring forth new and old upon any exigency. The forgetting the Precepts and Promises of God, is the cause of fainting, Heb. 12. 5. Wisdom and knowledg shall be the stability of thy time, and strength of salvation, Isa. 33. 6. As this makes the Kingdom of Christ stable in the World, so it will the Kingdom of Grace in our Souls. Get therefore, and actuate a Knowledg of the tenor of the Covenant, the substance of the Promises, the nature and ends of Christ Mediation. Be strong in the grace that is in Christ, 2 Tim. 2. 1, 3. Have a right understanding of the Covenant of Grace, which is manifested in and by Christ, of the stock of Grace stor'd up in Christ. This will make you endure hardship as the Soldiers of Christ; this will make you high-spirited in the acting of your Faith, and Pleas before God, without which both your faith and prayers will be very faint and languishing.

(3.) Rest not in small degrees of grace. 'Tis true, weak grace will keep close to Christ; Philadelphia with her little strength kept Christs words, Rev. 3. 8. yet that pretended grace that always remains in the same posture, may well be suspected as a counterfeit. He that stands at a stay in what he supposeth to be grace, never had grace in truth. 'Tis impossible any thing should be without its essential properties, and it is an essential property of grace to grow, it would not else be the Seed of God and an immortal principle: He that hath grace, finds such a pleasure and excellency in it, that he can have but little acquiescence in himself without exercise of it. If you do not strengthen your grace, you will make way to strengthen your doubts. Tho weak grace will carry a man to Heaven, it will be just as a small and weak vessel surprized by a shattering storm, which tho it may get to the shore, yet with excessive hardships and fears; such will sail through a stormy Sea, and have a daily contest with stormy doubts ready to overset their hopes; whereas a stout ship well rigged, will play with the waves in the midst of a Tempest, and at last pass through all difficulties without many fears, into its Haven. We are not perfect here, Perfection is a Title peculiar to the Blessed, Heb. 12. 23. The spirits of just men made perfect. Yet we must press forward towards it, to attain the Resurrection of the dead, Phil. 2. 11. i. e. Such a perfection of holiness which shall be the state of glorified souls. When this is our mark, we shall have a further progress in the degrees of grace, and by that means be nearer to a compleat victory. Tho a man cannot reach the Sun in shooting, yet if he aim at it, he shall mount his Arrow higher than if he aimed at a shrub.

Well then, Let our aims be at the highest degrees. He is so far from gaining strength that doth not aspire to a further conquest, that he is in danger to be beaten out of what he hath, & lose the things which he hath wrought. To take up our rest beneath it, is a sign, that neither the hatred of sin our enemy, nor the love of God our friend, were ever sincere and well rooted. Not to arrive to a compleat victory, is our weakness; not to aspire to it, is our sin; for it answers not the design of Christs coming, which was not only that we might have life spiritual and eternal, but an abounding life, Joh. 10. 10. I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. Not a decreasing life, or one that stands at a stay.

(4.) Study much your exemplar and copy. That hope whereby we expect to become like to Christ in an eternally happy state, must be formed by no lower copy than that of Christ himself, 1 John 3. 3. He that hath this hope, i. e. to see him as he is, purifies himself as he is pure. Not as the Saints are pure, as Abraham, Noah, Job, Daniel. He that steers himself only by the lower exemplars, will be more subject to imperfect draughts, and failings, than he that endeavours to form his soul and life according to the original. He that sets the best copy to imitate, will exceed others who propose lower patterns, tho he may not yet come near the original. The Apostle directs to study Christ much, who is the foundation of our standing, Heb. 12. 3. Consider him that endured such contradictions of sinners against himself, lest you be wearied and faint in your minds. Consider him as the Author and Finisher of your faith, consider him in his patience on the Cross despising the shame, and the success of his Heroick Temper, and this will inspire you with a holy courage under the contradictions of corruptions and temptations against your grace. This is our duty, Mat. 5. 48. Be you therefore perfect as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect. Christ himself commands it, when he exhorts them to mount above Publicans in their duty, and not to conform themselves to the low patterns of the world. Some translate it, You shall be perfect; enforcing thereby the strength of the command; as men when they would impose any thing by the stress of their Authority, say, You shall do such a thing, instead of saying, do such a thing. Be as resolute and vigorous in all your duties to God, as he is in all his notes of Mercy and goodness to you.

(5.) Be conscientious in the performance of holy duties. A fire which for a while shoots up to Heaven, will faint both in its heat and brightness, without fresh supplies of nourishing matter. Bring fresh wood to the Altar, morning and evening, as the Priests were bound for the nourishment of the holy fire, Levit. 5. 12. God in all his promises supposeth the use of means. When he promised Hezekiah his life for fifteen Years, it cannot be supposed that he should live without eating and exercise. 'Tis both our sin and misery to neglect the means. Therefore let an holy and an humble spirit, breathe in all our acts of Worship. If we once become listless to duty, we shall quickly become lifeless in it. If we languish in our duties, we shall not long be lively in our graces. The loſs of the ſtomach is a ſign of the loſs of health. If we would flouriſh, we muſt drink of thoſe waters which ſpring up to everlaſting life. If we deſire our leaves ſhould proſper, we ſhould often plant our ſelves by the Rivers of waters; we muſt be where the Sun ſhines, the dews drop, and the ſpirit blows. If you find your ſelves growing into a ſlothful temper, check it betimes, and recall to your minds the pleaſure you have had in your lively and warm converſes with God in any duty, and how delightful afterwards, both the beauty and comfort of your graces were. Livelineſs in action is a ſign of the continuance of health; and livelineſs in duty, an evidence of the continuance of grace. Let them all be perform'd in the ſtrength of Chriſt. 'Tis not means or ordinances, bring judgment to victory, but Chriſt in them.

(1.) Attend upon the Word and Sacraments. As the Word was the ſeed whence grace did ſpring, ſo it is the channel through which ſtrength and nouriſhment is conveyed. 'Tis the ſeed whereby we are begotten, 1 Pet. 1. 23. and the milk whereby we are nouriſhed, 1 Pet. 2. 2. If the ſtomach to our ſpiritual food grow weak, the vigour of our grace will quickly begin to gaſp.

(2.) Prayer. This is the chiefeſt duty, and that which makes all others more vigorous in their tendency to their end. Our Saviour breathes out ſtrong cries, tho he had the ſtrongeſt aſſurances of a victorious ſucceſs, Heb. 5. 7. Promiſes of perſeverance ſhould be the guides of our prayers. We may pray moſt comfortably for that which we are ſure to ſpeed in. The Spirit which is ſent to comfort us in our fears of miſcarrying, is a ſpirit of ſupplication as well as a Spirit of grace, Zech. 12.10. Where it is moſt a Spirit of grace, it will be alſo moſt a Spirit of Supplication. To talk of a gracious man that neglects prayer, is as great non-ſenſe as to tell us of a living man that doth not breathe. We in all our diſtreſſes make our application to thoſe that have power in their hands. 'Tis God only draws us to Chriſt and keeps us with him. 'Tis Chriſt that is ordered to bring forth Judgment unto Victory. To him therefore we muſt be Petitioners. He gives us firſt the Grace of Deſire, that he may with the more honour confer the mercy he intends us. Our Saviour ſets us a pattern, in praying to the Father to preſerve and keep us, John 17. We muſt not therefore be negligent in our deſires of it, or diſtruſtful of the ſucceſs; eſpecially when we have encouragements by Chriſts Petition for the ſame thing, who was never denied by his Father any requeſt for his people. You have many Arguments to uſe, Pſal. 68. 28. Strengthen, O Lord, what thou haſt wrought for us. Let thy power preſerve what thy power did work. 'Tis as much to the glory of thy Omnipotent Love to ſecond thy own work with thy own ſtrength, as it was to begin it. To what purpoſe, O God, wert thou pleaſed to work it, if thou wilt not maintain it? The Arguments of Gods glory are moſt prevalent. They were ſo in the mouth of Moſes; plead the ſame believingly and thou wilt find the ſame ſucceſs. 'Tis for the glory of God you ſhould be victorious. He which ſtabliſheth us with you is God, 1 Cor. 1. 21. Shall we think to ſtand without ſeeking to the Author of our ſtanding? And that you may pray boldly, believe it to be a thing belonging to you by virtue of Chriſts purchaſe as well as your Reconciliation and Adoption. If you can but pray, you are ſure to ſucceed in the conqueſt. And you can never want pleas for ſtanding, till God cancel the Bond of his everlaſting Covenant, and depoſe Chriſt from his Office of an Advocate. Plead theſe then. God cannot deny his own Bond, nor reſiſt the exerciſe of an Office of his own erecting.

[6.] Exerciſe Grace much. Graces, as Soldiers well exerciſed, are more fit to engage an Invading Enemy. Muſter them up often and ſee thy ſtrength: but behold it with Humility, Prayer and Thankfulneſs. Living bodies grow ſtronger by moderate exerciſe; and many things grow ruſty and unfit for want of uſe. Graces are compared to Armour, Eph. 6. and Armour is the better for uſe. Frequent blowing up this fire will make it ſtronger in it ſelf, and more comfortable to us.

(1.) Faith. It was by Faith that out of weakneſs the ancient Worthies were made ſtronger, Heb. 11. 24. It was this made Abraham the Father of the Faithful, and it will make all the Children mighty men of valour, Rom. 4. 24. 'Tis a mighty expreſſion, Pſal. 147. 11. The Lord taketh pleaſure in them that fear him: in thoſe that that hope in his mercy. As if the delight and content of his Being were maintained by this grace. He takes pleaſure to relieve, and pleaſure to ſupport them. Mercy cannot be ſo hard-hearted, as to deny aſſiſtance to that Faith that clings about it: ſhould God do, ſo he would caſt off his pleaſure. You can never offend him by the ſtraiteſt claſping, or pain him with too cloſe embraces. The faſter you hold him, the leſs power will in-dwelling ſin, or watchful Satan, have to drag you from him; for the more you hold him, the more he holds you; you do not only apprehend him, but are apprehended by him. A ſling and ſtone, with Faith in the Name of the Lord, will be more ſucceſsful to pierce the head of Goliah with his whole Army of Philiſtines, than if you did march clothed with Saul's Armour; Faith will do more than all the Arms and Ammunition of Moral Philoſophy, ſo much furbiſhed and trimmed up in our day. 'Tis to Faith all the victorious acts of a Chriſtian, through the whole Scripture, are aſcribed. Faith quencheth the fiery darts of the Devil, Faith purifies the heart from inward corruptions, Faith wreſtles with principalities and powers, Faith gets the victory over the World, Faith preſerves us by engaging Gods power for us; and Faith in all this conteſt never leaves us, till it lands us in Heaven. 'Tis the prime piece in the Chriſtian Armour whereby we gain the victory, and therefore there is ſuch an Emphaſis, ſet upon it, as if tho a man had all the reſt, and wanted this, he would be foundred in all his attempts, Eph. 6. 16. above all taking the ſhield of faith; As if all other pieces, tho very gallant and ſtrong, were nothing to this, to keep off the darts of the Enemy. 'Tis a grace worthy the exerciſe. Other graces may fail, and the Soul recover; but if Faith fail, all is gone. The acting of all our graces depends upon the ſtrength and acting of our Faith. The ſtronger our Faith, the greater our ſtability; the weaker our Faith, the more tottering our ſtanding. If the Soul could at the firſt go out to God in acts of Faith, when its corruptions had the firſt blow given them, and found ſucceſs, much more encouragement hath it to launch out to Chriſt, and renew the ſame Faith, ſince the wounds upon its luſts are both more numerous and deeper.

(2.) Patience. I mean not patience under Afflictions, but a patient waiting; there is need of patience to uphold us in a courſe of obedience, and need of it alſo to ſtrenghen our expectations of reward, Heb. 10. 36. Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God, you may receive the promiſe. God in the courſe of his Providence ſeems ſometimes to turn the back of his Promiſe upon us; there is need of a patient waiting, till it turn again and march towards us. He ſometimes lets looſe the Devil upon us, and then we fear the waters will ſwallow up our Souls, and that our ſpiritual Enemies will utterly defeat us; there is need of patience, till God pulls back the chain whereby he holds our Enemy. Chriſt accompliſheth the moſt glorious things by degrees. As he doth not give all grace in a moment, ſo he doth not perfect it in a moment. Patience muſt endure in the whole Military exerciſe. We cannot lay it aſide, till we gain the victory. 'Tis as neceſſary as Faith, to entitle us to the Inheritance of the promiſes of perſeverance and victory, Heb. 6. 12. through faith and patience inherit the promiſes. Without it we cannot believe in hope againſt hope; without it we can never run our race, Heb. 12. 1.

(3.) Love. Love adds weight to the Soul, and ſuffers not the Affections eaſily to be divorced from the endeared object. The Holy Angels are fixed in their ſtanding by grace as the principal cauſe, by the purity of their love as the internal principle. An intelligent and purified love will not forſake a choice object. The Iron mixt with droſſy particles runs not ſo quick, nor ſticks ſo cloſe to the Loadſtone, as the refined and beſt tempered Steel. Men embrace not the truth as truth for want of Faith, and they fall from it for want of Love, 2 Theſſ. 2. 10. They receive not the love of the truth. They receive the truth, but not the love of the truth. The purer our love, the faſter we ſhall ſtick to that rock which is our ſtrength. God is the ſtrength of thoſe that love him, Pſal. 18. 1. I will love thee, O Lord, my ſtrength.

(4.) Humility. God gives grace to the humble; Then ſurely the greateſt ſupplies of grace in our deepeſt exerciſes of Humility. We ſhould find the very workings of Gods grace more powerful in us, in the very exerciſes of this grace.

Chriſt

Chriſt finds thoſe moſt ſtrangers to him, that are moſt proud of themſelves. He that is not ſenſible of his own weakneſs, is never like to have recourſe to another for ſtrength. To truſt in our grace, is to make our grace a God, becauſe the principal object of the Creatures truſt is God, and it belongs to him to be ſo, as the higheſt good. Now to make our inherent grace the chief object of our truſt, is to own it to be as good as God, and as ſufficient as God to keep its ſtanding. A conceit of our ſtrength may make us ſeem bigger, but in reality it makes us weaker. All the humours in the Soul run to the boyl of pride. Fearfulneſs of our ſelves, is a good Prologue to a firmneſs in God; it will make us more ſtrongly lay hold of his Power, and more earneſtly plead his Faithfulneſs. Exerciſe it moſt after the conqueſt of a temptation; then it is our time to take heed of ſpiritual pride, we may elſe overcome one temptation, and ſink under another. Pride after a victory gives the Enemy an opportunity of ſucceſs, upon a new aſſault with a freſh recruit. Humility is as neceſſary to preſerve us after a conqueſt, as Faith was to arm and ſtrengthen us for it.

[7.] Frequently renew ſettled and holy reſolutions. A Soldier unreſolved to fight, may eaſily be defeated. True and ſharpned Courage treads down thoſe difficulties which would triumph over a cold and wavering ſpirit. Reſolution in a weak man will perform more than ſtrength in a coward. The weakneſs of our graces, the ſtrength of our temptations, and the diligence of our ſpiritual enemies, require ſtrong reſolutions. We muſt be ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, and this will make us abound in the work of the Lord, 1 Cor. 15. 58. Abundant exerciſe in Gods work, will ſtrengthen the habit of grace, encreaſe our skill in the conteſt, and make the victory more eaſy and pleaſant to us. Let them be believing, humble reſolutions in the ſtrength of Gods grace, with a jealouſy of your ſelves; not a vaunting reſolution in the ſtrength of your own wills; a fear of our ſelves, but a confidence in God. David bound himſelf to God with a hearty vow, depending upon his ſtrength, Pſal. 119. 106. I have ſworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. I have ſworn, &c. but not in his own ſtrength, for Verſe 107. he deſires God to quicken him, and to accept the free-will offering of his mouth, Verſe 108. i. e. the Oath which proceeded from a free and reſolved will. God will not ſlight, but ſtrengthen the affectionate reſolutions of his creature. We cannot keep our ſelves from falling, if we firſt keep not our reſolutions from flagging.

[8.] Look often back upon your ſtate under convictions, and the firſt ſtate of converſion. Meaſure your preſent complexion by your former temper. Caſt up your accounts often, and ſee whether you thrive or decay; and renew your former diſpoſitions. 'Tis our Saviours counſel, Rev. 2. 5. Remember from whence thou art fallen, and do thy firſt works, which cannot be done without reflection upon thy wonted delight in God, thy deſires for him, and the ſweet communications diſpenſed by him. Inquire into the cauſe of thy decay. This is a neceſſary attendant upon this act of remembrance; for it is not a bare ſimple act of memory Chriſt commands, but a diligent inquiſition by a practical remembrance. A timely obſervance of the cauſe of our loſs, will prevent many future ones; without this act, the Devil will creep in and finiſh his buſineſs before we are aware. 'Tis a pleaſure to reflect upon the time of danger wherein we have been, and to recount the methods God uſed in our delivery, and the reſolutions we then entertained, Iſa. 33. 18. Thy heart ſhall meditate terror, i. e. Thou ſhalt conſider what thy troubles were, what the frame of thy heart was, what terrors thou hadſt in thy diſtreſs: for it is ſpoken of the Goſpel-times, when they ſhall ſee the King in his beauty. So likewiſe it is uſeful to recal to our memory what deſires, what fervency in prayer, what holy vows there were in, and upon us, when we were under a wounded ſpirit, and act the ſame fervors over again. This would reſtore and enflame the heart more in duty, and enable thee for the conteſt, by calling into thy aſſiſtance the ſupplies of all the habitual grace thou haſt had ſince thoſe firſts heats. Remember then the ſtrength of thy Appetite to the word; how your Zeal did glow, what ſprightlineſs in your Affections, with what Devotion your prayers were winged, with what ſtoutneſs your Faith did breathe, how high it did climb, with what deteſtation you entertained the motions to ſin, with what what courage you entered into the liſts of temptations, how quick and nimble your obedience was, what a freſhneſs and verdure was upon all your graces. Remember thoſe, and do the ſame works.

[9.] Cheriſh any breathing of the Spirit. Man is unable to keep his Knowledg and Evangelical impreſſions upon himſelf without the Spirit, 2 Tim. 1. 14. That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghoſt which dwells in us. If we cannot keep the knowledg and form of ſound words agreeable to that affection in Man whereby he deſires knowledg, much leſs can we preſerve grace in us, which is more ſtomacht by corrupted nature. Men have a natural deſire to know, but no natural deſire to be gracious. Chriſt promiſed the Spirit to abide with us, and ſhall we ſlight his Harbingers which come to prepare the way for a more powerful reſidence? We can never prize the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, if we neglect the Auxiliary Force he ſends us. Thoſe Heavenly motions are the Spirits orders. How can we expect to gain the victory, when we neglect the directions and conduct of our Great General? Perſeverance is no more to be aſcribed to our own Wills, than our firſt converſion. As without the Spirit we could never by the power of our own Wills turn to God, ſo without the continuance of his efficacy, the Will would never keep with God, but would ſtart from him. We are forgetful Creatures, therefore need a Monitor; ſtupid Creatures, therefore need a quickner. The main reaſon of our falls is a non-attendance to thoſe motions; for we cannot aſcribe them to the Spirits careleſneſs, but our own. We cannot ſuppoſe him negligent in his Office, but our ſelves in our duty. Grace cann't live, if you neglect this Oil put into the Lamp to preſerve it from expiring. The Spirits motions are the Phyſick he uſes for the removal of that which endangers the health of our grace, and Cordials to ſtrengthen the languiſhing ſpiritual nature to a recovery of it ſelf. Neglect him not therefore, but when you find him turning his back, withdrawing his motions, and beginning to grieve, do what you can to delight him. Beg, pray, cry, with an holy imitation of David, Lord take not thy Holy Spirit from me, Pſal. 51. 11.

[10.] Take frequent views of Glory. An Heavenly converſation will quicken our graces, enliven our duties; while the vigour of both is kept up, the heart cannot flag in the ways of God. Can a man be lazy in a duty, when he conſiders he muſt Pray, Hear, Meditate, walk for Heaven? The heat of our graces will be purer and more durable, when we approach neareſt, and lie cloſeſt under the Sunbeams. Glory in the eye will encourage grace in the heart, and quicken a reſolution againſt temptations, and contempt of the fooliſh pleaſures and enticements of the World, as the glory ſet before Chriſt made him deſpiſe the ſhame of the Croſs.

I might add more,

(1.) Look to the firſt flagging of thy heart, thy firſt remiſneſs in Religious duties. Slothful proceedings become not fervent beginnings.

(2.) Be much in the duty of Mortification. Shake off every weight, Heb. 12. 1. that may weaken thee in thy courſe. Thoſe that are to run a Race, or go to a Battel, carry not burdens with them.

(3.) Entertain wiſe conſiderations of the worſt that may happen in your Chriſtian courſe. Prepare againſt the worſt, tho it may never come upon you. Conſider the fury of Perſecutors, the diligence of the Devil, the multitude of temptations, and what promiſes are ſuted to elevate you above them.

(4.) Remember the Promiſe. This will ſtill us in our wavering, Heb. 10. 23. Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering: for he is faithful that promiſed.

DISCOURSE OF THE Sinfulneſs and Cure
THOUGHTS.

Gen. 6. 5.

And God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.

I Know not a more lively deſcription in the whole Book of God, of the Natural corruption derived from our firſt Parents, than theſe words; Wherein you have the Ground of that grief, which lay ſo cloſe to God's heart, v.6. & the Reſolve thereupon to deſtroy man, and whatſoever was ſerviceable to that ungrateful creature. That muſt be highly offenſive, which moved God to repent of a fabrick ſo pleaſing to him at the creation: every ſtone in the building being at the firſt laying pronounced good by Him, and upon a review at the finiſhing the whole, He left it the ſame character with an Emphaſis; † very good. There was not a pin in the whole frame, but was * very beautiful, and being wrought by infinite * wiſdom, it was a very comely piece of Art. What then ſhould provoke him to repent of ſo excellent a work? The wickedneſs of man, which was great in the earth. How came it to paſs that man's wickedneſs ſhould ſwell ſo high? Whence did it ſpring? From the imagination. Though theſe might be ſinful imaginations, might not the ſuperiour faculty preſerve it ſelf untainted? Alas! That was defiled; The imagination of the thoughts was evil. But though running thoughts might wheel about in his mind, yet they might leave no ſtamp or impreſſion upon the will and affections. Yes, they did, The imagination of the thoughts of his heart was evil. Surely all could not be under ſuch a blemiſh: Were there not now and then ſome pure flaſhes of the mind? No not one; Every imagination. But granting that they were evil, might there not be ſome fleeting good mixed with them: as a poiſonous toad hath ſomething uſeful? No, Only evil. Well, but there might be ſome intervals of thinking, and though there was no good thought, yet evil ones were not always rouling there. Yes, they were Continually; not a moment of time that man was free from them. One would ſcarce imagine ſuch an inward neſt of wickedneſs, but God hath affirmed it; and if any man ſhould deny it, his own heart would give him the lye.

* Pſa. 104. 24. Πεευγλλὶς τεκνὶσγμια. Euſeb. Præpar. Evang.

Let us now conſider the words by themſelves.

יצר Imagination, properly ſignifies figmentum, of יצר to afflict, preſs or form a thing by way of compreſſion. And thus 'tis a metaphor taken from a potters framing a veſſel, and extends to whatſoever is fram'd inwardly in the heart, or outwardly in the work. 'Tis uſually taken by the Jews for that fountain of ſin within us: † Mercer tells us it is always uſed in an evil ſenſe: But there are two places (if no more) wherein it is taken in a good ſenſe, Iſa. 26. 3. * Whoſe mind is ſtayed; and 1 Chron. 29. 18. where David prays, that a diſpoſition to offer willingly to the Lord might be preſerved in the Imagination of the thoughts of the heart of the people. Indeed for the moſt part 'tis taken for the evil imaginations of the heart, as Deut. 31. 21. Pſal. 103. 14. &c. The Jews make a double figment, a good and bad; and fancy two Angels aſſign'd to man, one bad, another good: which Maimonides interprets to be nothing elſe but natural corruption, and reaſon. This word imagination being joyn'd with thoughts, implies not only the compleat thoughts, but the firſt motion or formation of them, to be evil.

Maimon. More Nevoch. Par. 3. c. 22. Amam. Cenſur. in locum.

The word Heart is taken variouſly in Scripture. It ſignifies properly that inward member, which is the ſeat of the vital ſpirits: But ſometimes it ſignifies, 1. The underſtanding and mind, Pſal. 12. 2. With a double heart do they ſpeak: i. e. With a double mind, Prov. 8. 5. 2. For the Will, 2 Kings 10. 30. All that is in my heart; i. e. in my Will and purpoſe. 3. For the affections; as, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart: i. e. with all thy affections. 4. For conſcience, 2 Sam. 24. 5. David's heart ſmote him: i. e. his Conſcience check'd him. But Heart here is uſed for the whole ſoul, becauſe (according to Pareus his note) the ſoul is chiefly ſeated in the heart, eſpecially the Will, and the affections her attendants; becauſe when any affection ſtirs, the chief motion of it is felt in the heart. So that by the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart are here meant all the inward operations of the ſoul, which play their part principally in the heart: whether they be the acts of the underſtanding, the reſolutions of the Will, or the bluſtrings of the affections.

that the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart are all the inward operations of the soules is proved by 1 Cron. 29. 18

Only evil.] The Vulgar mentions not the excluſive particle רק, and ſo enervates the ſenſe of the place. But our Neighbour Tranſlations either expreſs it as we do, Only; or to that ſenſe, that they were Certainly, or no other than evil.

Continually.] The Hebrew, All the day or every day. Some Tranſlations expreſs it verbatim as the Hebrew. Not a moment of a man's life, wherein our hereditary corruption doth not belch out its froth, even from his youth, as God expounds it, Gen. 8. 21. to the end of his life.

Whether we ſhall refer the general wickedneſs of the heart in the Text to that age, as ſome of the Jeſuits do; becauſe after the Deluge God doth not ſeem ſo ſeverely to cenſure it: Or rather take the expoſition the learned Rivet gives of it, referring the firſt part of the Verſe [and God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth] to thoſe times: and the ſecond part to the univerſal corruption of man's nature, and the root of all ſin in the world. The Jeſuits argument will not be very valid, for the extenuation of original corruption, from Gen. 8. 21. For if man's imaginations be evil from his youth, what is it but in another phraſe to ſay they were ſo continually? But ſuppoſe it be underſtood of the iniquity of that age, may it not be applied to all ages of the world? David complains of the wickedneſs of his own time, Pſal. 14. 3. Pſal. 5. 9. Yet St. Paul applies it to all mankind, Rom. 3. 12. Indeed it ſeems to be a deſcription of man's natural pravity, by Gods words after the deluge, Gen. 8. 21. which are the ſame in ſenſe, to ſhew that man's nature after that deſtroying judgment, was no better than before. Every word is emphatical, exaggerating man's defilement; Wherein conſider the Univerſality

Gen. 8. 21. Rivet. in Gen. exerc. 51.

1. Of the ſubject, Every man.
2. Of the act, Every thought.
3. Of the qualification of the act, Only evil.
4. Of the time, continually.

The words thus opened afford us this Propoſition:

That the thoughts, and inward operations of the ſouls of men, are naturally univerſally evil, and highly provoking.

Some by cogitation mean not only the acts of the underſtanding, but thoſe of the will, yea and the ſenſe too. But indeed that which we call cogitation, or thought, is the work of the mind; imagination, of the fancy. 'Tis not properly thought, till it be wrought by the underſtanding; becauſe the fancy was not a power deſigned for thinking, but only to receive the images impreſt upon the ſenſe, and concoct them, that they might be fit matter for thoughts; and ſo 'tis the Exchequer, wherein all the acquiſitions of ſenſe are depoſited, and from thence received by the intellective faculty. So that thoughts are inchoativè in the fancy, conſummativè in the underſtanding, terminativè in all the other faculties. Thought firſt engenders opinion in the mind; thought ſpurs the will to conſent or diſſent; 'tis thought alſo which Spirits the affections.

Carteſ. Princip. Philoſ. Part 1. Sect. 9.

I will not ſpend time to acquaint you with the methods of their generation. Every man knows he hath a thinking faculty, and ſome inward conceptions, which he calls thoughts, he knows that he thinks, and what he thinks; though he be not able to deſcribe the manner of their formation in the womb, or remember it any more than the ſpecies of his own face in a glaſs.

In this diſcourſe let us firſt ſee what kind of thoughts are ſins.

1. Negatively. A ſimple apprehenſion of ſin is not ſinful. Thoughts receive not a ſinfulneſs barely from the object: That may be unlawful to be acted, which is not unlawful to be thought of. Though the will cannot Will ſin without guilt, yet the underſtanding may apprehend ſin without guilt; for that doth no more contract a pollution by the bare apprehenſion, than the eye doth by the reception of the ſpecies of a loathſome object. Thoughts are morally evil, when they have a bad principle, want a due end and converſe with the object in a wrong manner. Angels cannot but underſtand the offence which diſplaced the Apoſtate Stars from heaven; but they know not ſin cognitione practicâ: Glorified Saints may conſider their former ſins, to enhance their admirations of pardoning mercy. Chriſt himſelf muſt needs underſtand the matter of the Devils temptation; yet Satan's ſuggeſtions to his thoughts were as the vapors of a jakes mixed with the Sun-beams, without a defilement of them. Yea God himſelf, who is infinite purity, knows the Object of his own acts, which are converſant about ſin; as his holineſs in forbidding it, wiſdom in permitting, mercy in par-pardoning, and juſtice in puniſhing. But thoughts of ſin in Chriſt, Angels, and glorified Saints, are accompanied with an abhorrency of it, without any combuſtible matter in them to be kindled by it. As our thoughts of a divine object are not gracious, unleſs we love and delight in it; ſo a bare apprehenſion of ſin is not poſitively criminal, unleſs we delight in the object apprehended. As a ſinful obiect doth not render our thoughts evil, ſo a divine object doth not render them good; becauſe we may think of it with undue circumſtances, as unſeaſonably, coldly, &c. And thus there is an imperfection in the beſt thought a regenerate man hath; for though I will ſuppoſe he may have a ſudden ejaculation without the mixture of any poſitive impurity, and a ſimple apprehenſion of ſin, with a deteſtation of it, yet there is a defect in each of them; becauſe 'tis not with that raiſed affection to God, or intenſe abhorrency of ſin, as is due from us to ſuch objects, and whereof we were capable in our primitive ſtate.

2. Poſitively. Our thoughts may be branched into firſt motions, or ſuch that are more voluntary.

1. Firſt motions; Thoſe unfleched thoughts, and ſingle threads, before a multitude of them come to be twiſted and woven into a diſcourſe: ſuch as skip up from our natural corruption, and ſink down again as fiſh in a River. Theſe are ſins, though we conſent not to them; becauſe, though they are without our will, they are not againſt our nature, but ſpring from an inordinate frame, of a different hue from what God implanted in us. How can the firſt ſprouts be good, if the root be evil? Not only the thought formed, but the very formation, or firſt imagination is evil. Voluntarineſs is not neceſſary to the eſſence of a ſin, though it be to the aggravation of it. 'Tis not my Will or Knowledge, which doth make an act ſinful, but God's prohibition. Lot's Inceſt was not uſhered by any deliberate conſent of his Will; yet who will deny it to be a ſin, ſince he ſhould have exerciſed a ſeverer command over himſelf, than to be overtaken with drunkenneſs, which was the occaſion of it? Original ſin is not effectivè voluntary in Infants; becauſe no act of the will is exerted in an infant about it: Yet it is voluntary ſubjectivè; becauſe it doth inhærere voluntati. Theſe motions may be ſaid to be voluntary negatively, becauſe the Will doth not ſet bounds to them, and exerciſe that ſoveraign dominion over the operations of the ſoul, which it ought to do, and wherewith it was at its firſt creation inveſted. Beſides, though the Will doth not immediately conſent to them, yet it conſents to the occaſions, which adminiſter ſuch motions; and therefore, according to the rule, that cauſa cauſæ eſt cauſa cauſati, they may be juſtly charged upon our ſcore. Gen. 19.33, 35.

2. Voluntary thoughts, which are the bloſſoms of theſe motions. Such that have no lawful object, no right end, not governed by reaſon, eccentrick, diſorderly in their motions, and like the jarring ſtrings of an untun'd Inſtrument. The meaneſt of theſe floating phancies are ſins; becauſe we act not in the production of them, as rational creatures: and what we do without reaſon, we do againſt the law of our creation, which appointed reaſon for our guide, and the underſtanding to be τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν, the governing power in our ſouls.

Theſe may be reduced to three heads,

1. In regard of God. 2. Of our ſelves. 3. Of others.

I. In regard of God.

1. Cold thoughts of God; When no affection is raiſed in us by them. When we delight not in God, the object of thoſe thoughts, but in the thought it ſelf, and operation of our mind about Him, conſiſting of ſome quaint notion of God of our own conceiving. This is to delight in the act or manner of thinking, not in the object thought of; and thus theſe thoughts have a folly and vanity in them. They are alſo ſinful in a regenerate man, in reſpect of the faintneſs of the underſtanding, not acting with that vigor, and ſpritelineſs, nor with thoſe raiſed and ſpiritual affections, which the worth of ſuch an object doth require.

2. Debaſing Conceptions, unworthy of God. Such are called in the Heathen Vain Imaginations *; who, as they glorified not God as God, ſo they did not think of God as God, according to the dignity of a Deity. Such a mental Idolatry may be found in us, when we dreſs up a God according to our own humors, humanize Him, and aſcribe to Him what is grateful to us, though never ſo baſe †. Which is a groſſer degrading of the Deity, than any repreſentation of Him by material Images; becauſe it is directly againſt his Holineſs, which is His glory, applauded chiefly by the Angels; and an Attribute, which He ſwears by, as having the greateſt regard to the honour of it. Such an imagination Adam ſeemed to have, conceiting God to be ſo mean a Being, that he, a creature not of a daies ſtanding, could mount to an equality of knowledge with Him.

* Rom. 1.21. διαλογισμοῖς, their reaſonings about God.

† Pſal. 50.21. Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thy ſelf. Exod. 15.11. Iſa. 6. 3. Pſal. 89.35.

3. Accuſing thoughts of God: Either of his Mercy, as in deſpair; or of his Juſtice as too ſevere, as in Cain ‖. Of his Providence: Adam conceited, yea and charged God's Providence to be an occaſion of his crime *: His poſterity are no juſter to God, when they accuſe him as a negligent Governour of the World, Pſal. 94. 11. The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man that they are vanity. What thoughts? Injurious thoughts of his Providence, v. 7. as though God were ignorant of men's actions: or, at beſt, but an idle Spectator of all the unrighteouſneſs done in the world, not to regard it, though He did ſee it. And they in the Prophet were of the ſame ſtamp, That ſaid in their hearts, The Lord will not do good, neither will He do evil. From ſuch kind of thoughts moſt of the Injuries from oppreſſors, and murmurings in the oppreſſed, do ariſe.

‖ Gen. 4. 13.

* Gen. 3. 12. The woman whom thou gaveſt to be with me.

Zeph. 1. 12.

4. Curious

4. Curious thoughts about things too high for us. 'Tis the frequent buſineſs of mens minds to flutter about things without the bounds of God's revelation. Not to be content with what God hath publiſhed is to accuſe Him, in the ſame manner as the Serpent did to our firſt Parents, of envying us an intellectual happineſs. Yet how do all Adam's Poſterity long after this forbidden fruit!

Gen. 3. 5. God knows that your eyes ſhall be opened.

II. In regard of our ſelves; Our thoughts are proud, ſelf-confident, ſelf-applauding, fooliſh, covetous, anxious, unclean; and what not?

1. Ambitious: The aſpiring thought of the firſt man runs in the veins of his Poſterity. God took notice of ſuch ſtrains in the King of Babylon, when he ſaid in his heart, *I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God: I will aſcend above the heights of the Clouds; I will be like the moſt High. No leſs a charge will they ſtand under, that ſettle themſelves upon their own bottom, eſtabliſh their own Righteouſneſs, and will not ſubmit to the Righteouſneſs of God's appointment †. The moſt forlorn beggar hath ſometimes thoughts vaſt enough to graſp an Empire.

* Iſa. 14. 13, 14.

† Rom. 10. 3.

2. Self-confident: Edom's thoughts ſwelled him into a vain confidence of a perpetual proſperity. And David ſometimes ſaid in the like ſtate, that he ſhould never be moved.

Obad. 3. That ſaith in his heart, Who ſhall bring me down to the ground?

3. Self-applauding: Either in the vain remembrances of our former proſperity, or aſcribing our preſent happineſs to the dexterity of our own wit. Such flaunting thoughts had Nebuchadnezzar at the conſideration of his ſetling Babylon the head, and Metropolis of ſo great an Empire. Nothing more ordinary among men, than overweening reflexions upon their own parts, and * thinking of themſelves above what they ought to think.

Dan. 4. 30. Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the houſe of the Kingdom, &c.

* Rom. 12. 3, 4.

4. Ungrounded Imaginations of the events of things, either preſent, or future: Such wild conceits, like Meteors bred of a few vapors, do often friſk in our minds. 1. Of things preſent: 'Tis likely Eve fooliſhly imagin'd ſhe had brought forth the Meſſiah, when ſhe brought forth a murderer, Gen. 4. 1. I have gotten a man the Lord (as in the Hebrew) believing (as ſome interpret) that ſhe had brought forth the promiſed ſeed. And ſuch a brisk conceit Lamech ſeems to have had of Noah †. 2. Of things to come, either in beſpeaking falſe hopes, or antedating improbable griefs. Such are the jolly thoughts we have of a happy Eſtate in reverſion, which yet we may fall ſhort of. Haman's heart leap'd at the King's queſtion, (What ſhall be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour?) phancying himſelf the mark of his Princes favour, without thinking that a halter ſhould ſoon choak his ambition. Or perplexing thoughts at the fear of ſome trouble, which is not yet fallen upon us, and perhaps never may. How did David torture his Soul by his unbelieving fears, that he ſhould one day periſh by the hand of Saul? Theſe foreſtalling thoughts do really affect us: we often feel caprings in our Spirits upon imaginary hopes, and ſhiverings, upon conceited fears. Theſe pleaſing impoſtures, and ſelf-afflicting ſuppoſitions are ſigns either of an idle, or indigent mind, that hath no will to work, or only rotten materials to work upon.

5. Immoderate thoughts about lawful things: When we exerciſe our minds too thick, and with a fierceneſs of affection above their merit: not in ſubſerviency to God, or mixing our cares with dependencies on Him. Worldly concerns may quarter in our thoughts; but they muſt not poſſeſs all the room, and thruſt Chriſt into a manger: Neither muſt they be of that value with us, as the law was with David, ſweeter than the honey or the honey comb.

III. In regard of others; All thoughts of our neighbour againſt the Rule of Charity. *Such that imagine evil in their hearts, God hates. Theſe principally are 1. Envious, when we torment our ſelves with others fortunes. Such a thought in Cain, upon God's acceptance of his Brother's Sacrifice, was the Prologue to, and foundation of that curſed murder. 2. Cenſorious, ſtigmatizing every freckle in our Brother's converſation. 3. Jealous, and evil ſurmiſes contrary to Charity, which thinks no evil. 4. Revengeful; ſuch made Haman take little content in his preferments, as long as Mordecai refuſed to court him. And Eſau thought of the daies of mourning for his Father, that he might be revenged for his Brother's deceits.

There is no ſin committed in the world, but is hatched in one or other of theſe thoughts. But beſide theſe, there are a multitude of other volatile conceits, like ſwarms of Gnats buzzing about us, and preying upon us, and as frequent in their ſucceſſions, as the curlings of the water upon a ſmall breath of wind, one following another cloſe at the heels. The mind is no more ſatisfied with thoughts, than the firſt matter is with forms, continually ſhifting one for another, and many times the nobler for the baſer: as when upon the putrefaction of a human body, part of the Matter is endued with the form of Vermin. Such changeable things are our minds, in leaving that which is good for that which is worſe, when they are enveigled by an active fancy, and Bedlam affections. This madneſs is in the hearts of men while they live, and ſtarts a thouſand frenzies in a day. At the beſt our phancy is like a Carrier's bag, ſtuffed with a world of Letters, having no dependence upon one another; ſome containing buſineſs, and others nothing but froth.

Eccleſ. 9. 3.

In all theſe thoughts there is a further guilt in three reſpects, viz. 1. Delight, 2. Contrivance, 3. Reacting.

1. Delight in them. The very tickling of our phancy by a ſinful motion, though without a formal conſent, is a ſin; becauſe it is a degree of complacency in an unlawful object. When the mind is pleaſed with the ſubject of the thought, as it hath a tendency to ſome

ſenſual pleaſure, & not ſimply in the thought it ſelf, as it may enrich the underſtanding with ſome degree of knowledg. The thought indeed of an evil thing may be without any delight in the evil of it; as Philoſophers delight in making experiments of poiſonous Creatures, without delighting in the poiſon, as it is a noxious quality. We may delightfully think of ſin without guilt, not delighting in it as ſin, but as God by his wiſe providential ordering extracts Glory to himſelf, and good to his Creature. In this caſe, though a ſinful act be the material object of this pleaſure, yet 'tis not the formal object: becauſe the delight is not terminated in the ſin, but in God's ordering the event of it to his own glory. But an Inclination to a ſinful motion, as it gratifies a corrupt affection, is ſin: becauſe every Inclination is a malignant tincture upon the affections, including in its own nature an averſion from God, and teſtifying ſin to be an agreeable object. And without queſtion, there can be no inclination to any thing, without ſome degree of pleaſure in it: becauſe it is impoſſible we can incline to that, which we have a perfect abhorrency of. Hence it follows, that every inclination to a ſinful motion is Conſenſus inchoatus, or a Conſent in Embryo: though the act may prove abortive. If we think of any unlawful thing with pleaſure, and imagine it either in fieri or facto eſſe, it brings a guilt upon us, as if it were really acted. As when upon the conſideration of ſuch a man's being my enemy, I phancy robbers rifling his goods, and cutting his throat, and rejoyce in this revengeful thought, as if it were really done, 'tis a great ſin: becauſe it teſtifies an approbation of ſuch a butchery, if any man had will and opportunity to commit it. And though it be a ſuppoſition, yet the act of the mind is really the ſame it would be, if the ſinfull act I think of were performed. Or when a man conditionally thinks with himſelf, I would ſteal ſuch a man's goods, or kill ſuch a perſon, if I could eſcape the puniſhment attending it, it is as if he did rob and murder him: becauſe there is no impediment in his will to the commiſſion of it, but only in the outward circumſtances. Nay though it be a mere Ens intentionale, or rationis, which is the object of the thought, yet the act of the mind is real, and as ſignificant of the inclination of the Soul, as if the object were real too: As if a man hath an unclean motion at the ſight of a picture, which is only a compoſition of well mixed and well ordered colours: or at the appearance of the Idea of a beauty fram'd in his own phancy: 'tis as much uncleanneſs as if it were terminated in ſome ſuitable object, the hinderance being not in the will, but in the inſufficiency of the object to concur in ſuch an act. Now as the more delight there is in any holy ſervice, the more precious it is in it ſelf, and more grateful to God: ſo the more pleaſure there is in any ſinful motion, the more malignity there is in it.

2. Contrivance. When the delight in the thought grows up to the contrivance of the act, (which is ſtill the work of the thinking faculty:) When the mind doth brood upon a ſinful motion, to hatch it up, and invents methods for performance: which the wiſe man calls artificial Inventions. So a learned man interprets διαλογισμοὶ πονηροὶ, Mat. 15. 19. of contrivances of murder, adultery, &c. And the word ſignifies properly reaſonings. When mens wits play the Devils in their ſouls, in inventing ſophiſtical reaſons for the commiſſion and juſtification of their crimes, with a mighty jollity at their own craft. Such plots are the trade of a wicked man's heart. A covetous man will be working in his inward ſhop from morning till night to ſtudy new methods for gain*: and voluptuous, and ambitious perſons, will draw ſchemes and models in their fancy, of what they would outwardly accompliſh: They conceive miſchief, and bring forth vanity, and their belly prepares deceit, Job. 15. 35. Hence the thoughts are called the counſels † and devices * of the heart: when the heart ſummons the head, and all the thoughts of it, to ſit in debate, as a private Junto, about a ſinful motion.

Eccleſ. 7. 29. חשבנות Dr. Hammond on Mat. 15. 9. * 2 Pet. 2. 14. καρδίαν γεγυμνασμένην πλεονεξίας, a heart exercis'd in covetous practices. † 1 Cor. 4. 5. * Iſa. 32. 7, 8.

3. Re-acting ſin after 'tis outwardly committed. Though the individual action be tranſient, and cannot be committed again: yet the Idea and Image of it remaining in the memory, may by the help of an apiſh fancy be repeated a thouſand times over with a rarified pleaſure: As both the features of our friends, and the agreeable Converſations we have had with them may with a freſh reliſh be repreſented in our fancies, though the perſons were rotten many years ago.

Kimchi in 66 Pſal. as quoted by Grotius in Mat. 5. 20. Ut jam ſint ſaxa hæc corpus adultera meæ eſt. Nec cuſtodivi, ni velit, ille poteſt. Nec mentem ſervare potes, licet omnia claudas: Omnibus occluſis intus adulter erit. Ovid. Amor. l. 3. Eleg. 3. v. 5, &c.

Having thus declared the nature of our thoughts, and the degrees of their guilt: the next thing is to prove that they are ſins.

The Jews did not acknowledg them to be ſins, unleſs they were blaſphemous, and immediately againſt God himſelf. Some Heathens were more Orthodox, and among the reſt Ovid, whoſe amorous pleaſures one would think ſhould have ſmothered ſuch ſentiments in him. The Lord (whoſe knowledg is infallible) knows the thoughts of men that they are vanity, Pſal. 94. 11. yea, and of the wiſeſt men too, according to the Apoſtle's Interpretation, 1 Cor. 3. 20. And who were they that became vain in their Imaginations, but the wiſeſt men the carnal world yielded? The Gracians the greateſt Philoſophers, the Ægyptians their Tutors, and the Romans their Apes. The elaborate operations of an unregenerate mind are fleſhly, Rom. 8. 5, 7. If the whole web be ſo, needs muſt every thread. The thought of fooliſhneſs is ſin, * (i. e. a fooliſh thought; not objectively a thought of folly, but one formally ſo) yea, an abomination to God †. As good thoughts and purpoſes are acts in God's account, ſo are bad ones. Abraham's intention to offer Iſaac is accounted as an actual Sacrifice ‖: that the ſtroke was not given, was not from any reluctance of Abraham's will, but the gracious indulgence of God. Sarah had a deriding thought, and God chargeth it as if it were an outward laughter, and and a ſcornful word. * Thoughts are the words of the mind, and as real in God's account, as if they were expreſſed with the Tongue.

* Prov. 24. 9. † Prov. 1. 26. ‖ Heb. 11. 17. James 2. 21.

* Gen. 18. 12, 15. Therefore Sarah laughed within her ſelf, ſaying, בְּמֵעֶהָ in viſceribus ſuis, Targum. Rom. 7. 7. I had not known luſt, except the Law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.

There are three Reaſons for the proof of this, that they are Sins.

1. They are contrary to the Law, which doth forbid the firſt foamings and belchings of the heart; becauſe they ariſe from an habitual corruption, and teſtifie a defect of ſomething, which the Law requires to be in us, to correct the excurſions of our minds. Doth not the Law oblige man as a rational creature? Shall it then leave that part, which doth conſtitute him rational, to fleeting and giddy fancies? No, it binds the ſoul as the principal agent, the body only as the inſtrument. For if it were given only for the ſenſitive part, without any reſpect to the rational, it would concern brutes as well as men, which are as capable of a rational command, and a voluntary obedience, as man without the conduct of a rational ſoul. It exacts a conformity of the whole man to God, and prohibits a diſformity; and therefore engageth chiefly the inward part, which is moſt the man. It muſt then extend to all the acts of the man, conſequently to his thoughts, they being more the acts of the man than the motions of the body. Holineſs is the prime excellency of the Law, a title aſcribed to it twice in one Verſe, Rom. 7. 12. Wherefore the Law is holy, and the Commandment holy, juſt and good. Could it be holy, if it indulged looſeneſs in the more noble part of the creature? Could it be juſt, if it favoured inward unrighteouſneſs? Could it be good, and uſeful to man, which did not enjoyn a ſuitable conformity to God, wherein the creatures excellency lies? Can that deſerve the title of a ſpiritual Law, that ſhould only regulate the brutiſh part, and leave the ſpiritual to an unbounded licentiouſneſs? Can perfection be aſcribed to that Law, which doth countenance the unſavoury breathings of the Spirit, and lay no ſtricter an obligation upon us than the Laws of men? Muſt not God's Laws be as ſuitable to his Soveraignty, as mens Laws are to theirs? Muſt they not then be as extenſive as God's Dominion, and reach even to the privateſt cloſets of the heart? 'Tis not for the honour of God's holineſs, righteouſneſs, goodneſs, to let the Spirit, which bears more flouriſhing characters of his Image than the body, range wildly about without a legal curb.

Mat. 5. 28.

2. They are contrary to the order of nature, and the deſign of our Creation. Whatſoever is a ſwerving from our primitive nature, is ſin, or at leaſt a conſequent of it. But all inclinations to ſin are contrary to that righteouſneſs, wherewith man was firſt endued. Man was created both with a diſpoſition, and ability for holy contemplations of God; the firſt glances of his ſoul were pure; he came every way compleat out of the mint of his infinitely wiſe and good Creator; and when God pronounced all his Creatures good, he pronounced man very good amongſt the reſt. But man is not now as God created him, he is off from his end, his underſtanding is filled with lightneſs and vanity. This diſorder never proceeded from the God of order; infinite goodneſs could never produce ſuch an evil frame; none of theſe looſe inventions were of God's planting, but of man's ſeeking. No, God never created the intellective, no, nor the ſenſitive part, to play Domitian's game, and ſport it ſelf in the catching of Flies. Man that is in honour, and underſtands not that which he ought to underſtand, and thinks not that which he ought to think, is like the Beaſts that periſh: he plays the beaſt, becauſe he acts contrary to the nature of a rational and immortal ſoul. And ſuch brutes we all naturally are, ſince the firſt woman believed her ſenſe, her phancy, her affection, in their directions for the attainment of wiſdom, without conſulting God's Law, or her own reaſon. The phancy was bound by the right of nature to ſerve the underſtanding: 'Tis then a ſlighting God's wiſdom to invert this order, in making that our Governour which he made our Subject. 'Tis injuſtice to the dignity of our own ſouls, to degrade the nobler part to a ſordid ſlavery; in making the brute have dominion over the man; as if the Horſe were fitteſt to govern the Rider. 'Tis a falſeneſs to God, and a breach of truſt, to let our minds be impoſed upon by our phancy; in giving them only feathers to dandle, and chaff to feed on, inſtead of thoſe braver objects they were made to converſe withal.

Eccleſ 7. 29. God made man perfect; but they have ſought out many inventions.

Pſal. 49. 20. Gen. 3. 6.

3. We are accountable to God, and puniſhable for thoughts. Nothing is the meritorious cauſe of God's wrath but ſin. The Text tells us, that they were once the keys, which opened the floud-gates of divine vengeance and broach'd both the upper & neather Ciſterns, to overflow the world. If they need a pardon *, (as certainly they do) then, if mercy doth not pardon them, juſtice will condemn them. And 'tis abſolutely ſaid, that *a man of wicked devices [or thoughts] God will condemn. 'Tis God's prerogative, often mentioned in Scripture, to ſearch the heart. To what purpoſe, if the acts of it did not fall under His cenſure, as well as His cognizance? He weighs the Spirits, Prov. 16. 2. in the ballance of His Sanctuary, and by the weights of His Law, to ſentence them, if they be found too light. The word doth diſcover, and judge them; Heb. 4. 12, 13. It divides aſunder the ſoul and ſpirit, the ſenſitive part the affections, and the rational the underſtanding and will; both which it doth diſſect, and open, and judge the acts of them, even the thoughts and intents, ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν, whatſoever is within the θυμὸς and whatſoever is within the νοῦς, the one referring to the Soul, the other to the Spirit: Theſe it paſſeth a Judgment upon; as a Critick cenſures the Errata's, even to ſyllables, and Letters, in an old Manuſcript. Theſe we are to render an account of, (as the Syriack renders thoſe words, v. 13. with whom we have to do.) Of what? Of the firſt bubblings of the heart, the motions, and intents of it. The leaſt Speck and Atome of duſt in every chink of this little world is known and cenſured by God. If our thoughts be not judged, God would not be a righteous judge. He would not judge according to the merit of the cauſe, if outward actions were only ſcann'd, without regarding the intents, wherein the principle and end of every action lies, which either ſwell or diminiſh the malignity of it. Actions in kind the ſame, may have different circumſtances in the thoughts to heighten the one above the other; and if they were only judged, the moſt painted hypocrite might commence a bleſſed ſpirit at laſt, as well as the exacteſt Saint. 'Tis neceſſary alſo for the Glory of God's omniſcience. 'Tis hereby chiefly that the extenſiveneſs of God's knowledge is diſcovered, and that in order to the praiſe, or diſpraiſe of men, viz. To their Juſtification or condemnation. Thoſe very thoughts will accuſe thee before God's Tribunal, which accuſe thee here before conſcience, His Deputy, Rom. 2. 15, 16. Their thoughts the mean while (i. e. in this life, while conſcience bears witneſs) accuſing, or excuſing one another; in the day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men, i. e. and alſo at the day of judgment, when conſcience ſhall give in its final Teſtimony, upon God's examination of the ſecret counſels. This place is properly meant of thoſe reaſonings concerning good and evil in men's Conſciences, agreeable to the Law of nature imprinted on them, which ſhall excuſe them, if they practiſe accordingly, or accuſe them, if they behave themſelves contrary thereunto. But it will hold in this Caſe; for if thoſe inward approbations of the notions of good and evil will accuſe us for our contrary practices, they will alſo accuſe us for our contrary thoughts. Our good thoughts will be our accuſers for not obſerving them, and our bad thoughts will be indictments againſt us for complying with them. 'Tis probable the Soul may be bound over to anſwer chiefly for theſe at the laſt day; for the Apoſtle chargeth Simon's guilt upon his thought, not his word, and tells him, pardon muſt be principally granted for that. The tongue was only an Inſtrument to expreſs what his heart did think, and would have been wholly innocent, had not his thoughts been firſt criminal. What therefore is the principal ſubject of pardon, would be ſo of puniſhment: as the firſt incendiaries in a rebellion are moſt ſeverely dealt with. And if (as ſome think) the fallen Angels were ſtript of their primitive Glory, only for a conceiv'd thought, how heinous muſt that be, which hath inrolled them in a remedileſs miſery?

1 Cor. 4. 5.

Non ſolum opus, ſed mali operis cogitatio pœnas luit. Hieron. in Hoſ. 4. 7.

Acts 8. 22.

Having proved that there is a ſinfulneſs in our thoughts, let us now ſee what provocation there is in them: Which in ſome reſpects is greater than that of our actions. But we muſt take actions here in ſenſu diviſo, as diſtinguiſhed from the inward preparations to them. In the one there is more of ſcandal; in the other more of odiouſneſs to God. God indeed doth not puniſh thoughts ſo viſibly, becauſe, as He is Governour of the world, His Judgments are ſhot againſt thoſe ſins that diſturb humane ſociety: but He hath ſecret and ſpiritual Judgments for theſe, ſuitable to the nature of the ſins.

Now thoughts are greater in reſpect,

1. Of ſinfulneſs. The wickedneſs that God ſaw great in the earth was the fruit of imaginations. They are the immediate cauſes of all ſin. No Cockatrice but was firſt an Egg. It was a thought to be as God *, that was the firſt breeder of all that ſin, under which the world groans at this day; For Eve's mind was firſt beguiled in the alteration of her thought. Since that the lake of inward malignity acts all it's evil by theſe ſmoaking ſteams. Evil thoughts lead the van in our Saviour's Catalogue, as that which ſpirits all the black regiment which march behind. As good motions cheriſh'd will ſpring up in good actions, ſo looſe thoughts favoured will break out in viſible plague-ſores, and put fire unto all that wickedneſs which lyes habitually in the heart: as a ſpark may to a whole ſtock of Gun-powder. The vain babblings of the ſoul, as well as thoſe of the Tongue, will encreaſe to more ungodlineſs. Being thus the cauſe, they include virtually in them all that is in the effect; as a ſeed contains in its little body the leaves, fruit, colour, ſcent, which afterward appear in the plant. The ſeed includes all, but the colour doth not virtually include the ſcent, or the ſcent the colour, or the leaves the fruit: ſo 'tis here, One act doth not include the formal obliquity of another: but the thought which cauſed it, doth ſeminally include both the formal & final obliquity of every action; both that which is in the nature of it, and in the end to which it tends. As when a Trades-man cheriſheth immoderate thoughts of gain, and in the attaining it runs into many fooliſh and hurtful Luſts, there is cheating, lying, ſwearing, to put off the commodity: all theſe ſeveral acts have a particular ſinfulneſs in the nature of the acts themſelves, beſides the tendency they have to the ſatisfying an inordinate affection; all which are the ſpawn of thoſe firſt immoderate thoughts ſtirring up greedy deſires.

* Gen. 3. 5.

2 Cor. 11. 3.

Mat. 15. 19.

2 Tim. 2. 16.

1 Tim. 6. 9.

2. In reſpect of Quantity. Imaginations are ſaid to be continually evil. There is an infinite variety of conceptions, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of the Sea, wherein are all things creeping innumerable, both ſmall and great, and a conſtant generation of whole ſhoals of them; that you may as well number the Fiſh in the Sea, or the Atomes in the Sun-beams, as recount them.

* Ἀν ᾖ σαυτὸν ἐνθάδε ἀνοίξας ᾧ ἀνθρώπῳ, πολλὰ καὶ παμπόλλας θηρίων χαλεπῶν ἐνθυμήσεις καὶ ἐπιθυμίας εὑρήσεις, &c. Plutarch. Moral. p. (mihi) 500.

There is a greater number in regard of the acts, and in regard of the objects.

1. In regard of the acts of the mind:

1. Antecedent acts. How many preparatory motions of the mind are there to one wicked external act *? Yea, how many ſinful thoughts are twiſted together to produce one deliberate ſinful word? All which have a diſtinct guilt, and, if weigh'd together, would outweigh the the guilt of the action abſtractedly conſidered. How many repeated complacencies in the firſt motion, degrees of conſent, reſolved broodings, ſecret plottings, propoſals of various methods, ſmothering contrary checks, vehement longings, delightful hopes, and foreſtalled pleaſures in the deſign? All which are but thoughts aſſenting, or diſſenting in order to the act intended. Upon a diſſection of all theſe ſecret motions by the critical power of the word, we ſhould find a more monſtrous guilt, than would be apparent in the ſingle action, for whoſe ſake all theſe ſpirits were raiſed. There may be no ſin in a material act, conſidered in it ſelf, when there is a provoking guilt in the mental motion. A Hypocrite's Religious ſervices are materially good, but poiſoned by the Imagination skulking in the heart, that gave birth unto them. 'Tis the wicked mind or thought makes the Sacrifice (a commanded duty) much more an abomination to the Lord.

Prov. 21. 27. זמה with a wicked thought.

2. Conſequent acts; When a man's phancy is pregnant with the delightful remembrance of the ſin that is paſt, he draws down a freſh guilt upon himſelf: as they did in the Prophet, in reviving the concurrence of the will to the act committed, making the ſenſual pleaſure to commence ſpiritual, and (if ever there were an aking heart for it) revoking his former grief by a renewed approbation of his darling luſt. Thus the ſin of thoughts is greater in regard of duration. A man hath neither ſtrength nor opportunity always to act, but he may always think; and imagination can ſupply the place of action. Or if the mind be tired with ſucking one object, it can with the Bee preſently faſten upon another. Senſes are weary, till they have a new recruit of ſpirits: as the poor horſe may ſink under his burden, when the rider is as violent as ever. Thus old men may change their outward profaneneſs into mental wickedneſs; and as the Pſalmiſt remembred his old ſongs, Pſal. 77. 5, 6. ſo they their calcin'd ſins in the night, with an equal pleaſure. So that you ſee there may be a thouſand thoughts as uſhers and lacqueys to one act, as numerous as the ſparks of a new lighted fire.

Ezek. 23. 3, 19. Yet ſhe multiplied her whoredoms in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, &c. v. 21. the lewdneſs of her youth.

2. In regard of the Objects the mind is converſant about. Such thoughts there are, and attended with a heavy guilt, which cannot probably, no nor poſſibly deſcend into outward acts. A man may in a complacent thought commit fornication with a woman in Spain, in a covetous thought rob another in the Indies, and in a revengeful thought ſtab a third in America; and that while he is in this Congregation. An unclean perſon may commit a mental folly with every beauty he meets. A covetous man cannot plunder a whole kingdom; but in one twinkling of a thought he may wiſh himſelf the poſſeſſor of all the eſtates in it. A Timon, a μισάνθρωπος cannot cut the throats of all the world; but like Nero, with one glance of his heart he may chop off the heads of all mankind at a blow. An Ambitious man's practices are confined to a ſmall ſpot of land, but with a caſt of his mind he may graſp an Empire as large as the four Monarchies. A beggar cannot aſcend a throne; but in his thoughts he may paſs the Guards, murder his Prince and uſurp the Government. Nay further, an Atheiſt may think there is no God, Pſal. 14. 1. i. e. (as ſome interpret it) wiſh there were no God, and thus in thought undeifie God himſelf; though he may ſooner daſh heaven and earth in pieces, than accompliſh it. The body is confined to one object, and that narrow and proportionable to its nature: but the mind can wing it ſelf to various objects in all parts of the earth. Where it finds none, it can make one; for phancy can compact ſeveral objects together, coyn an image, colour a picture, and commit folly with it, when it hath done; It can neſtle it ſelf in cobwebs ſpun out of its own bowels.

3. In reſpect of Strength. Imaginations of the heart are only, i. e. purely evil. The nearer any thing is in union with the root, the more radical ſtrength it hath. The firſt ebullitions of light and heat from the Sun are more vigorous, than the remoter beams: and the ſteams of a dunghil more noyſom next that putrified body, than when they are dilated in the air. Grace is ſtronger in the heart-operations, than in the outward ſtreams: and ſin more foul in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart, than in the act, In the Text the outward wickedneſs of the world is paſſed over with a ſhort expreſſion; but the Holy Ghoſt dwells upon the deſcription of the wicked Imagination, becauſe there lay the maſs. Mans * inward part is very wickedneſſes, a whole neſt of vipers. Thoughts are the immediate ſpawn of the original corruption, and therefore partake more of the ſtrength and nature of it. Acts are more diſtant, being the children of our thoughts, but the Grandchildren of our natural pravity. Beſides, they lye neareſt to that wickedneſs in the inward part, ſucking the breaſt of that poyſonous dam that bred them. The ſtrength of our thoughts is alſo reinforced by being kept in, for want of opportunity to act them: as liquors in cloſe glaſſes ferment and encreaſe their ſpritelineſs. Muſing either carnal or ſpiritual, makes the † fire burn the hotter: as the fury of fire is doubled by being pent in a furnace. Outward acts are but the ſprouts; the ſap and juice lies in the wicked imagination or contrivance, which hath a ſtrength in it to produce a thouſand fruits as poyſonous as the former. The members are the inſtruments, or * weapons, of unrighteouſneſs; now the whole ſtrength which doth manage the weapon lyes in the arm that wields it, the weapon of it ſelf could do no hurt without a force impreſt. Let me add this too, that ſin in thoughts is more ſimply ſin. In acts there may be ſome occaſional good to others, for a good man will make uſe of the ſight of ſin committed by others to encreaſe his hatred of it: but in our ſinful thoughts there is no occaſion of good to others; they lying lock'd up from the view of man.

4. In reſpect of Alliance. In theſe we have the neareſt communion with the Devil. The underſtanding of man is ſo tainted, that his † wiſdom, the chiefeſt flower in it, is not only earthly and ſenſual (it were well if it were no worſe) but devilliſh too. If the flower be ſo rank, what are the weeds? Satan's devices and our thoughts are of the ſame nature, and ſometimes in Scripture expreſt by the ſame word, νοήματα. As he hath his devices, ſo have we againſt the authority of God's Law, the power of the Goſpel, and the Kingdom of Chriſt. The Devils are call'd ſpiritual wickedneſſes, becauſe they are not capable of carnal ſins. Prophaneneſs is an Uniformity with the world, and intellectual ſins are an Uniformity with the God of it, Epheſ. 2. 2, 3. There is a double walking, anſwerable to a double pattern in v. 2. Fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh is a walking according to the courſe of this world, or making the world our copy: and fulfilling the deſires of the mind is a walking according to the Prince of the power of the air, or a making the Devil our pattern. In carnal ſins Satan is a tempter, in mental an actor. Therefore in the one we are conformed to his will; in the other we are transformed into his likeneſs. In outward we evidence more of obedience to his laws; in inward more of affection to his perſon, as all imitations of others do. Therefore there is more of enmity to God, becauſe more of ſimilitude and love to the Devil; a nearer approach to the Diabolical nature implying a greater diſtance from the Divine. Chriſt never gave ſo black a character, as that of the Devil's children, to the prophane world, but to the Phariſees, who had left the ſins of men to take up thoſe of Devils, and were moſt guilty of thoſe high imaginations which ought to be brought into captivity to the obedience of Chriſt.

5. In reſpect of contrariety and odiouſneſs to God. Imaginations were only evil; and ſo moſt directly contrary to God, who is only good. Our natural enmity againſt God is ſeated in the mind. The ſenſitive part aims at its own gratification, and in mens ſerving their luſts they ſerve their pleaſures; but the τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν, the Prince in man, is poſſeſt with principles of a more direct contrariety; whence it muſt follow, that all the thoughts and counſels of it are tinctured with this hatred. They are indeed a defilement of the higher part of the Soul, and that which belongs more peculiarly to God. And the nearer any part doth approach to God, the more abominable is a ſpot upon it; as to caſt dirt upon a Prince's houſe is not ſo heinous as to deface his Image. The underſtanding, the ſeat of thoughts, is more excellent than the will; both becauſe we know and judge before we will, or ought to will only ſo much, as the underſtanding thinks fit to be willed; and becauſe God hath beſtowed the higheſt gifts upon it, adorning it with more lively lineaments of his own Image, Col. 3. 10. Renewed in knowledge after the Image of Him that created him; implying, that there was more of the Image of God at the firſt Creation beſtowed upon the underſtanding, the ſeat of knowledge, than on any other part; yea, than on all the bodies of men diſtill'd together. Father of Spirits is one of God's titles: To beſpatter His Children then, ſo near a relation, the Jewel that he is choice of, muſt needs be more heinous. He being the Father of Spirits, this ſpiritual wickedneſs of nouriſhing evil thoughts, is a caſhiering all child-like likeneſs to him. The traiterous acts of the mind are moſt offenſive to God: as 'tis a greater deſpite for a Son, to whom the Father hath given the greater portion, to ſhut him out of his houſe, only to revel in it with a company of Rioters and Strumpets, than in a Child, who never was ſo much the ſubject of his Father's favour. And 'tis more heinous and odious, if theſe thoughts, which poſſeſs our Souls, be at any time converſant about ſome Idea of our own framing. It were not altogether ſo bad, if we loved ſomething of God's creating, which had a phyſical goodneſs, and a real uſefulneſs in it to allure us: but to run wildly to embrace an Ens rationis, to prefer a thing of no exiſtence, but what is colour'd by our own imagination, of no vertue, no uſefulneſs, a thing that God never created, nor pronounced good, is a greater enmity, and a higher ſlight of God.

Heb. 12. 9.

6. In reſpect of Connaturalneſs and Voluntarineſs. They are the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart, and they are continually evil. They are as natural as the æſtuations of the Sea, the bubblings of a Fountain, or the twinklings of the Stars. The more natural any motion is, ordinarily the quicker it is. Time is requiſite to action, but thoughts have an inſtantaneous motion. The body is a heavy piece of clay, but the mind can ſtart out on every occaſion. Actions have their ſtated times and places; but theſe ſolicit us, and are entertain'd by us at all ſeaſons. Neither day nor night, ſtreet nor cloſet, exchange nor temple, can priviledge us from them; We meet them at every turn, and they ſtrike upon our Souls as often as light upon our Eyes. There is no reſtraint for them; the Laws of men, the conſtitution of the body, the intereſt of profit or credit, are mighty bars in the way of outward profaneneſs: but nothing lays the reins upon thoughts but the Law of God; and this man is not ſubject to, neither can be, Rom. 8. 7. Beſides, the natural Atheiſm in man is a ſpecial friend and nurſe of theſe; few firmly believing either the omniſcience of God, or his Government of the world; which the Scripture ſpeaks of frequently, as the cauſe of moſt ſins among the ſons of men. † Actions are done with ſome reluctance, and nips of natural conſcience. Conſcience will ſtart at a groſs temptation, but it is not frighted at thoughts. Men may commit ſpeculative folly, and their conſcience look on, without ſo much as a nod againſt it: Men may tear out their neighbours bowels in ſecret wiſhes, and their conſcience never interpoſe to part the fray. Conſcience indeed cannot take notice of all of them; they are too subtil in their nature, and too quick for the observation of a finite principle. They are many, † and they are nimble too: like the bubblings of a boyling pot, or the rising of a wave, that presently slides into its level; and as Florus saith of the Ligurians, the difficulty is more to find, than conquer them. They are secret sins, and are no more discerned than motes in the air, without a spiritual sun-beam; whence David cryes out, Psal. 19. 12. Cleanse me from secret sins: which some explain of sins of thoughts that were like sudden and frequent flashes of lightning, too quick for his notice, and unknown to himself. There is also more delight in them. There is less of temptation in them, and so more of election; and consequently more of the heart and pleasure in them, when they lodge with us. Acts of sin are troublesome, there is danger as well as pleasure in many of them: but there is no outward danger in thoughts; therefore the complacency is more compact, and free from distraction. The delight is more unmixed too; as intellectual pleasures are more refined than sensual. All these considerations will enchance the guilt of these inward operations.

Florus l. 2. c. 3. Major aliquanto labor erat invenire, quam vincere.

The Uses shall be two, though many Inferences might be drawn from the point.

1. Reproof. What a mass of vanity should we find in our minds, if we could bring our thoughts in the space of one day, yea but one hour, to an account? How many foolish thoughts with our wisdom, ignorant with our knowledge, worldly with our heavenliness, hypocritical with our religion, and proud with our humiliations? Our hearts would be like a Grott, furnished with monstrous and ridiculous pictures: or as the wall in Ezekiel's Vision pourtrayed with every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts; a greater abomination than the Image of Jealousie at the outward gate of the Altar. Were our inwards opened, how should we stand gazing both with scorn, and wonder at our being such a pack of fools? Well may we cry out with Agur, We have not the understandings of men: We make not the use of them, as is requisite for rational creatures; because we degrade them to attendances on a brutish phancy. I make no question, but were we able to know the phancies of some irrational creatures, we should find them more noble, heroick and generous in suo genere, than the thoughts of most men; more agreeable to their natures, and suited to the Law of their Creation †. How little is God in any of our thoughts, according to His excellency? No, our shops, our rents, our backs and bellies usurp God's room. If any thoughts of God do start up in us, how many covetous, ambitious, wanton, revengeful thoughts are jumbled together with them? Is it not a monstrous absurdity to place our friend with a crew of vipers, to lodge a King in a Sty, and entertain him with the fumes of a jakes and dunghil? A wicked man's heart is little worth; all the pedling wares and works in his inward shop are not valuable with one silver drop from a gracious man's lips. It was an invincible argument of the Primitive Christians for the purity of the Christian Religion above all others in the world, that it did prohibit evil thoughts: And is it not as unanswerable an argument that we are no Christians, if we give liberty to them? What is our moral conversation outwardly, but only a bare abstinence from sin; not a disaffection? Were we really and altogether Christians, would not that which is the chiefest purity of Christianity, be our pleasure? And would we any more wrong God in our secret hearts, than in the open streets? Is not thought a beam of the mind, and shall it be enamour'd only on a dunghil? Is not the understanding the eye of the Soul, and shall it behold only guilded nothings? 'Tis the flower of the Spirit: Shall we let every Caterpillar suck it? 'Tis the Queen in us: Shall every Ruffian deflore it? 'Tis as the Sun in our Heaven; and shall we besmear it with misty phancies? It was created surely for better purposes, than to catch a thousand weight of Spiders (as Heliogabalus employ'd his Servants.) It was not intended to be made the common sewer of filthiness, or ranked among those ζῶα πίμπλαμα, which eat not only fruit, and flesh, but flies, worms, dung, and all sorts of loathsom materials. Let not therefore our minds wallow in a sink of phantastical follies; whereby to rob God of his due, and our Souls of their happiness.

2. Exhortation. We must take care for the suppression of them. All vice doth arise from imagination; Upon what stock doth ambition and revenge grow, but upon a false conceit of the nature of honour? What engenders covetousness, but a mistaken fancy of the excellency of wealth? Thoughts must be forsaken as well as our way; we cannot else have an evidence of a true conversion: and if we do not discard them, we are not like to have an abundant pardon; and what will the issue of that be, but an abundant punishment? Mortification must extend to these: Affections must be crucified, and all the little brats of thoughts, which beget them, or are begotten by them. Shall we nourish that, which brought down the wrath of God upon the old world; as though there had not been already sufficient experiments of the mischief they have done? Is it not our highest excellency to be conform'd to God in holiness, in as full a measure as our finite natures are capable? And is not God holy in his counsels and inward operations, as well as in his works? Hath God any thoughts but what are righteous and just? Therefore the more foolish and vain our imaginations are, the more are we alienated from the life of God. The Gentiles were so, because they walked in the vanity of their mind; and we shall be so if vanity walk and dwell in ours. As the tenth Commandment forbids all unlawful thoughts and desires: so it obligeth us to all thoughts and desires, that may make us agreeable to the divine Will, and like to God himself.

We

We ſhall find great advantage by ſuppreſſing them: We can more eaſily reſiſt temptations without, if we conquer motions within. Thoughts are the mutineers in the ſoul, which ſet open the gates for Satan: He hath held a ſecret intelligence with them (ſo far as he knows them) ever ſince the fall: and they are his ſpies to aſſiſt him in the execution of his devices. They prepare the tinder and the next fiery dart ſets all on a flame. Can we cheriſh theſe, if we conſider that Chriſt dyed for them? He ſhed his blood for that which put the world out of order? which was accompliſhed by the ſinful imagination of the firſt man, and continued by thoſe imaginations mention'd in the Text. He dyed to reſtore God to his right, and man to his happineſs: neither of which can be perfectly attained, till thoſe be thrown out of the poſſeſſion of the heart.

That we may do this, Let us conſider theſe following directions, which may be branched into theſe heads: 1. For the raiſing good thoughts. 2. Preventing bad. 3. Ordering bad when they do intrude. 4. Ordering good when they appear in us.

1. For raiſing good thoughts.

1. Get renewed hearts. The fountain muſt be cleanſed which breeds the vermine. Pure vapors can never aſcend from a filthy quagmire. What iſſue can there be of a vain heart, but vain imaginations? Thoughts will not become new, till a man is in Chriſt. We muſt be holy, before we can think holily. Sanctification is neceſſary for the diſlodging of vain thoughts, and the introducing of good. A ſanctified reaſon would both diſcover, and ſhame our natural follies. As all animal operations, ſo all the ſpiritual motions of our heads, depend upon the life of our hearts * as the principium originis. As there is a law in our members to bring us into Captivity to the law of ſin, Rom. 7. 23. ſo there muſt be a law in our minds to bring our thoughts to the obedience of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 10. 5. We muſt be renewed in the ſpirit of our minds, Epheſ. 4. 23. in our reaſonings and thoughts, which are the ſpirits whereby the underſtanding acts; as the animal ſpirits are the inſtruments of corporeal motion. Till the underſtanding be born of the ſpirit †, it will delight in, and think of, nothing but things ſuitable to its fleſhly original: but when 'tis ſpiritual, it receives new impreſſions, new reaſonings and motions, ſuitable to the Holy Ghoſt, of whom it is born. A ſtone, if thrown upwards a thouſand times, will fall backward; becauſe 'tis a forced motion: but if the nature of this ſtone were changed into that of fire, it would mount as naturally upward, as before it ſunk downward. You may force ſome thoughts toward heaven ſometimes, but they will not be natural, till nature be changed. Grace only gives ſtability, † and prevents fluctuation, by fixing the ſoul upon God as its chief end: and what is our end will not only be firſt in our intentions, but moſt frequent in our conſiderations. Hence a ſanctified heart is called in Scripture a ſtedfaſt heart. There muſt be an enmity againſt Satan put into our hearts, according to the firſt promiſe, before we can have an enmity againſt his imps, or any thing that is like him.

† Heb. 13. 9. It is a good thing that the heart be eſtabliſhed with grace.

2. Study Scripture. Original corruption ſtuffs us with bad thoughts, and Scripture-knowledge would ſtock us with good ones; for it propoſeth things in ſuch terms, as exceedingly ſuit our imaginative faculty, as well as ſtrengthen our underſtanding. Judicious knowledge would make us approve things that are excellent: and where ſuch things are approved, toys cannot be welcom. Fulneſs is the cauſe of ſtedfaſtneſs. The cauſe of an intent and piercing eye is the multitude of animal ſpirits. Without this skill in the Word we ſhall have as fooliſh conceits of Divine things, as ignorant men without the Rules of Art have of the Sun and Stars, or things in other Countries which they never ſaw. The Word is call'd a Lamp to our feet, i. e. the affections: a light to our eyes, i. e, the underſtanding. It will direct the glances of our minds, and the motions of our affections. It enlightens the eyes, and makes us have a new proſpect of things: as a Scholar newly entred into Logick, and ſtudied the Predicaments, &c. looks upon every thing with a new eye, and more rational thoughts, and is mightily delighted with every thing he ſees; becauſe he eyes them as clothed with thoſe notions he hath newly ſtudied. The Devil had not his engines ſo ready to aſſault Chriſt, as Chriſt from his knowledg had Scripture-precepts to oppoſe him. As our Saviour by this means ſtifled thoughts offered, ſo by the ſame we may be able to ſmother thoughts ariſing in us. Converſe therefore often with the Scripture, tranſcribe it in your heart, and turn it in ſuccum & ſanguinem; whereby a vigor will be derived into every part of your ſoul, as there is by what you eat to every member of your body. Thus you will make your mind Chriſt's library, as Hierom ſpeaks of Nepotianus.

3. Reflect often upon the frame of your mind at your firſt converſion. None have more ſettled, and more pleaſant thoughts of divine things than new converts, when they firſt claſp about Chriſt; partly becauſe of the novelty of their ſtate, and partly becauſe God puts a full ſtock into them; and diligent trades-men at their firſt ſetting up have their minds intent upon improving their ſtock. Endeavour to put your mind in the ſame poſture it was then. Or if you cannot tell the time when you did firſt cloſe with Chriſt, recollect thoſe ſeaſons wherein you have found your affections moſt fervent, your thoughts moſt united, and your mind moſt elevated; as when you renewed repentance upon any fall, or had ſome notable chearings from God; and conſider what matter it was which carried your heart upward, what employment you were engaged in, when when good thoughts did fill your ſoul; and try the ſame experiment again. Aſaph would oppoſe God's ancient works to his murmuring thoughts: he would remember his ſong in the night, i. e. the matter of his ſong, and read over the records of God's kindneſs. * David too would never forget, i. e. frequently renew the remembrance of thoſe precepts, whereby God had particularly quicken'd him †. Yea, he would reflect upon the places too, where he had formerly converſed with God, to reſcue himſelf from dejecting thoughts; therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Miſſar ‖. Some elevations ſurely David had felt in thoſe places, the remembrance whereof would ſweeten the ſharpneſs of his preſent grief. When our former ſins viſit our minds, pleading to be ſpeculatively reacted, let us remember the holy diſpoſitions we had in our repentance for them, and the thankful frames, when God pardoned them. The Diſciples at Chriſt's ſecond appearance reflected upon their own warm temper at his firſt diſcourſe with them in a diſguiſe, to confirm their faith, and expel their unbelieving conceits. Strive to recollect truths, precepts, promiſes with the ſame affection which poſſeſt your Souls, when they firſt appeared in their glory and ſweetneſs to you.

4. Ballaſt your heart with a Love to God. David thought all the day of God's Law, as other men do of their luſts, becauſe he unexpreſſibly loved it *. This was the ſucceſsful means he uſed to ſtifle vain thoughts, and excite his hatred of them, 'Tis the property of love to think no evil, 2 Cor. 13. 5. It thinks good and delightful thoughts of God; friendly and uſeful thoughts of others. It fixeth the Image of our beloved object in our minds, that 'tis not in the power of other phancies to diſplace it. The beauty of an object will faſten a rolling eye. 'Tis difficult to divorce our hearts and thoughts from that which appears lovely and glorious in our minds, whether it be God or the world. Love will by a pleaſing violence bind down our thoughts, and hunt away other affections. If it doth not eſtabliſh our minds, they will be like a Cork, which with a light breath, and a ſhort curl of water, ſhall be toſſed up and down from its ſtation. Scholars that love learning, will be continually hammering upon ſome notion or other, which may further their progreſs, and as greedily claſp it, as the Iron will its beloved Loadſtone, He that is wing'd with a divine love to Chriſt, will have frequent glances and flights towards him, and will ſtart out from his worldly buſineſs, ſeveral times in a day, to give him a viſit. Love in the very working is a ſettling grace; it encreaſeth our delight in God, partly by the ſight of his amiableneſs, which is clear'd to us in the very act of loving, and partly by the recompences he gives to the affectionate carriage of his creature; both which will ſtake down the heart from vagaries, or giving entertainment to ſuch looſe companions, as evil thoughts are. Well then, if we had this heavenly affection ſtrong in us, it would not ſuffer unwholeſom weeds to grow up ſo near it; either our Love would conſume thoſe weeds, or thoſe weeds will choak our Love.

5. Exerciſe Faith. As the habit of Faith is attended with habitual Sanctification, ſo the acts of Faith are accompanied with a progreſs in the degrees of it. That Faith which brings Chriſt to dwell in our Souls, will make us often think of our inmate. Faith doth reallize divine things, and make abſent objects as preſent; and ſo furniſheth fancy with richer ſtreams to bathe it ſelf in, than any other principle in the world. As there is a neceſſity of the uſe of fancy, while the ſoul is linked to the body; ſo there is alſo a neceſſity of a corrective for it. Reaſon doth in part regulate it, but 'tis too weak to do it perfectly, becauſe fancy in moſt men is ſtronger than reaſon; man being the higheſt of imaginative beings, and the loweſt of intelligent; fancy is in its exaltation more than in creatures beneath him, and reaſon in its detriment more than in creatures above him; and therefore the imagination needs a more skilful guide than reaſon. Fancy is like fire, a good Servant but a bad Maſter; if it march under the conduct of faith, it may be highly ſerviceable, and by putting lively colours upon divine truth may ſteal away our affections to it. Faith is the evidence of things not ſeen. viz. not by a corporeal, but intellectual eye; and ſo it will ſupply the office of ſenſe: 'Tis the ſubſtance of things hoped for; and if hope be an attendant on faith, our thoughts will ſurely follow our expectations. The remedy David uſed, when he was almoſt ſtifled with diſquieting thoughts, was to excite his ſoul to a hope and confidence in God, Pſal. 42. 5. and when they return'd upon him, he uſeth the ſame diverſion, v. 11. The peace of God, i. e. the reconciliation made by a Mediator between God and us believingly apprehended, will keep [or garriſon] our hearts and minds [or thoughts] againſt all anxious aſſaults both from within and without †. When any vain conceit creeps up in you, act faith on the interceſſion of Chriſt; and conſider, Is Chriſt thinking of me now in Heaven, and pleading for me, and ſhall I ſquander away my thoughts on trifles, which will coſt me both tears and bluſhes? Believingly meditate on the promiſes; they are a means to cleanſe us from the filthineſs of the ſpirit, as well as that of the fleſh *. If the having them be a motive, the uſing them will be a means to attain this end. Looking at the things that are not ſeen, preſerves us from fainting, and renews the inward man day by day †. Theſe inviſible things could not well keep our hearts from fainting, if faith did not firſt keep the thoughts from wandring from them.

6. Accuſtom your ſelf to a ſerious meditation every morning. Freſh airing our ſouls in Heaven will engender in us purer ſpirits, and nobler thoughts. A morning ſeaſoning would ſecure us for all the day. Though other neceſſary thoughts about our callings will, and must

muſt come in, yet when we have diſpatch'd them, let us attend our morning Theme as our chief companion. As a man that is going with another about ſome conſiderable buſineſs, ſuppoſe to Weſtminſter, though he meets with ſeveral friends in the way, and ſalutes ſome, and with others with whom he hath ſome affairs he ſpends a little time, yet he quickly returns to his companion, and both together go their intended ſtage. Do thus in the preſent caſe. Our minds are active, and will be doing ſomething though to little purpoſe, and if they be not fixed upon ſome noble object, they will like mad men and fools be mightily pleaſed in playing with ſtraws. The thoughts of God were the firſt Viſiters David had in the morning; God and his heart met together as ſoon as he was awake, and kept company all the day after. In this meditation look both to the matter and manner. Pſal. 139. 17, 18.

1. Look to the matter of your meditation. Let it be ſome truth, which will aſſiſt you in reviving ſome languiſhing grace, or fortifie you againſt ſome triumphing corruption; for 'tis our darling ſin which doth moſt envenom our thoughts †. As if you have a thirſt for honour, let your fancy repreſent the honour of being a child of God and heir of Heaven. If you are inclined to covetouſneſs, think of the riches ſtored up in a Saviour, and diſpenſed by him. If to voluptuouſneſs, fancy the pleaſures in the ways of wiſdom here, and at God's right hand hereafter. This is to deal with our hearts as Paul with his hearers, to catch them with guile. Stake your ſoul down to ſome ſerious and profitable myſtery of Religion; as the Majeſty of God, ſome particular Attribute, his condeſcenſion in Chriſt, the love of our Redeemer, the value of his ſufferings, the vertue of his blood, the end of his aſcenſion, the work of the Spirit, the excellency of the ſoul, beauty of holineſs, certainty of death, terror of judgment, torments of Hell, and joys of Heaven. Why may not that which was the ſubject of God's innumerable thoughts, be the ſubject of ours? God's thoughts and counſels were concerning Chriſt, the end of his coming, his death, his precepts of holineſs, and promiſes of life; and that not only ſpeculatively, but with an infinite pleaſure in his own glory, & the creatures good to be accompliſhed by him. Would it not be work enough for our thoughts all the day to travel over the length, breadth, height, and depth of the love of Chriſt? Would the greatneſs of the journey give us leiſure to make any ſtarts out of the way? Having ſettled the Theme for all the day, we ſhall find occaſional aſſiſtances, even from worldly buſineſſes; as Scholars, who have ſome Exerciſe to make, find helps in their own courſe of reading, though the Book hath no deſign'd reſpect to their proper Theme. Thus by imploying our minds about one thing chiefly, we ſhall not only hinder them from vain excurſions, but make even common objects to be oyl to our good thoughts, which otherwiſe would have been fuel for our bad. Such generous liquor would ſcent our minds and converſations all the day; that whatſoever motion came into our hearts, would be tinctured with this ſpirit, and ſavour of our morning thoughts: as veſſels having been filled with a rich wine, communicate a reliſh of it to the liquors afterward put into them. We might alſo more ſteadily go about our worldly buſineſs, if we carry God in our minds; as one foot of the Compaſs will more regularly move about the Circumference, when the other remains firm in the Center. † Prov. 23. 7. As a man thinks in his heart, ſo is he. The heads of the Catechiſm might be taken in order, which would both encreaſe and actuate our knowledge. Pſal. 40. 5.

2. Look to the manner of it.

1. Let it be intent. Tranſitory thoughts are like the glances of the eye, ſoon on, and ſoon off; they make no clear diſcovery, and conſequently raiſe no ſpritely affections. Let it be one principal ſubject, and without flitting from it; for if our thoughts be unſteady, we ſhall find but little warmth: a burning glaſs often ſhifted fires nothing. We muſt look at the things that are not ſeen, as wiſtly as men do at a mark they ſhoot at. Such an intent meditation would change us into the image, and caſt us into the mould of thoſe truths we think of; it would make our minds more buſie about them all the day: as a glaring upon the Sun fills our eyes for ſome time after with the image of it. To this purpoſe look upon your ſelves as deeply concern'd in the things you think of. Our minds dwell upon that whereof we apprehend an abſolute neceſſity. A condemned perſon would ſcarce think of any thing but procuring a reprieve, and his earneſtneſs for this would bar the door againſt other intruders. 2 Cor. 4. 18. σκοπέντων, 2 Cor. 3. 18.

2. Let it be affectionate and practical. Meditation ſhould excite a ſpiritual delight in God, as it did in the Pſalmiſt †; and a divine delight would keep up good thoughts, and keep out impertinencies. A bare ſpeculation will tire the Soul, and without application, and preſſing upon the will and affections, will rather chill, than warm devotion. 'Tis only by this means, that we ſhall have the efficacy of truth in our wills, and the ſweetneſs in our affections, as well as the notion of it in our underſtandings. The more operative any truth is in this manner upon us, the leſs power will other thoughts have to interrupt, and the more diſdainfully will the heart look upon them, if they dare be impudent. Never therefore leave thinking of a ſpiritual ſubject, till your heart be affected with it. If you think of the evil of ſin, leave not till your heart loath it; if of God, ceaſe not till it mount up in admirations of him. If you think of his Mercy, melt for abuſing it; if of his Soveraignty, awe your heart into obedient reſolutions; if of his Preſence, double your watch over your ſelf. If you meditate on Chriſt, make no end till your hearts love him; if of his Death, plead the value of it for the juſtification of your perſons, and apply the vertue of it for the ſanctification of your natures. Without this practical ſtamp upon our affections, we ſhall have † Pſa. 104. 34. My meditation of him ſhall be ſweet: I will be glad in the Lord.

have light ſpirits, while we have opportunity to converſe with the moſt ſerious objects. We often hear fooliſh thoughts breathing out themſelves in a houſe of mourning, in the midſt of Coffins, and trophies of death, as if men were confident they ſhould never die; whereas none are ſo ridiculous as to aſſert they ſhall live for ever. By this inſtance in a Truth ſo certainly aſſented to, we may judg of the neceſſity of this direction in truths more doubtfully believed.

Pſal. 8. 3, 4. 7. Draw ſpiritual Inferences from occaſional Objects. David did but wiſtly conſider the Heavens, and he breaks out in ſelf-abaſement, and humble admirations of God. Glean matter of inſtruction to your ſelves, and praiſe to your Maker, from every thing you ſee: It will be a degree of reſtoration to a ſtate of innocency, ſince this was Adam's task in Paradiſe. Dwell not upon any created object only as a Virtuoſo, to gratifie your rational curioſity, but as a Chriſtian call Religion to the feaſt, and make a ſpiritual improvement. No creature can meet our eyes, but affords us leſſons worthy our thoughts, beſides the general notices of the power and wiſdom of the Creator. Thus may the Sheep read us a Lecture of patience, the Dove of innocence, the Ant and Bee raiſe bluſhes in us for our ſluggiſhneſs, and Iſa. 1. 3. the ſtupid Oxe, and dull Aſs correct and ſhame our ungrateful ignorance. And ſince our Saviour did ſet forth his own excellency in a ſenſible dreſs, the conſideration of thoſe Metaphors by an acute fancy, would garniſh out divine truths more deliciouſly, and conduct us into a more inward knowledge of the Myſteries of the Goſpel. He whoſe eyes are open, cannot want an inſtructer, unleſs he wants a heart. Thus may a Tradeſman ſpiritualize the matter he works upon, and make his commodities ſerve in wholſom meditations to his mind, and at once enrich both his Soul and his Coffers; yea, and in part reſtore the creatures to the happineſs of anſwering a great end of their Creation, which Man depriv'd them of when he ſubjected them to vanity. Such a view of ſpiritual truths in ſenſible pictures would clear our knowledge, purifie our fancies, animate our affections, encourage our graces, diſgrace our vices, and both argue and ſhame us into duty; and thus take away all the cauſes of our wild wandring thoughts at once. And a frequent exerciſe of this method would beget and ſupport a habit of thinking well, and weaken, if not expel, a habit of thinking ill.

2. The ſecond ſort of directions are for the preventing bad thoughts. And to this purpoſe, Prov. 30. 32. 1. Exerciſe frequent humiliations. Pride expoſeth us to impatient and diſquieting thoughts; whereas humility clears up a calm and ſerenity in the Soul. 'Tis Agur's advice to be humbled particularly for evil thoughts. Frequent humiliations will deaden the fire within, and make the ſparks the fewer. The deeper the Plough ſinks, the more the weeds are killed, and the ground fitted for good grain. Men do not eaſily fall into thoſe ſins, for which they have been deeply humbled. Vain conceits love to reſide moſt in jolly hearts:

Eccleſ. 7. 3, 4. but by the ſadneſs of the countenance the heart is made better. There is more of wiſdom, or wiſe conſideration in a compoſed and graciouſly mournful ſpirit, whereas carnal mirth and ſports cauſe the heart to evaporate into lightneſs and folly. The more we are humbled for them, the more our hatred of them will be fomented; and conſequently the more prepared ſhall we be to give them a repulſe upon any bold intruſion.

2. Avoid entangling your ſelves with the world. This clay will clog our minds, and a dirty
Lutta felicitas. Aug. de Civ. Dei. l. 10. † Pſal. 49. 6, 11. happineſs will engender but dirty thoughts. Who were ſo fooliſh to have inward thoughts that their houſes ſhould continue for ever, but thoſe that truſted in their riches *? If the world poſſeſs our Souls, it will breed carking thoughts: much buſineſs meets with croſſes, and then it breeds murmuring thoughts; and ſometimes it is crown'd with ſucceſs, and then it
1 Tim. 6. 9. ſtarts proud and ſelf-applauding thoughts. Thoſe that will be rich fall into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts; ſuch luſts that make men fools; and one part of folly is to have wild and ſenſleſs fancies. Miſts and fogs are in the lower Region near the Earth, but reach not that next the Heavens. Were we free from earthly affections, theſe groſs vapours could not ſo eaſily diſturb our minds; but if the World once ſettle in our hearts, we ſhall never want the fumes of it to fill our heads. And as covetous deſires will ſtuff us with fooliſh imaginations, ſo they will ſmother any good thought caſt into us; as the thorns of worldly cares choak'd the good ſeed, and made it unfruitful, Matth. 13. 22. As we are to rejoyce in the World as though we rejoyced not; ſo, by the ſame reaſon, we ſhould think of the World
Rom. 12. 2. as though we thought not. A conformity with the World in affection is inconſiſtent with a change of the frame of the mind.

3. Avoid Idleneſs. Serious Callings do naturally compoſe mens ſpirits; but too much Recreation makes them blaze out in vanity. Idle ſouls, as well as idle perſons, will be ranging. As Idleneſs in a State is both the Mother and Nurſe of Faction; and in the natural body gives birth and encreaſe to many diſeaſes, by enfeebling the natural heat: ſo it both kindles and foments many light and unprofitable imaginations in the ſoul, which would be ſufficiently diverted, if the active mind were kept intent upon ſome ſtated work. So
Mat. 25. 26. Thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant. truly may that which was ſaid of the ſervant, be applied to our nobler part, that it will be wicked, if once it degenerates into ſlothfulneſs in its proper charge. As empty minds are the fitteſt ſubjects for extravagant fooleries; ſo vacant times are the fitteſt ſeaſons. While we
Mat. 13. 25. ſleep, the importunate enemy within, as well as the envious adverſary without us, will have a ſucceſs-

a ſucceſsful opportunity to ſow the tares; whereas a conſtant imployment fruſtrates the attempt, and diſcourageth the Devil, becauſe he ſees we are not at leiſure. Therefore when any ſinful motion ſteps in, double thy vigour about thy preſent buſineſs, and the fooliſh impertinent will ſneak out of thy heart at this diſcountenance. So true is that in this caſe, which Pharaoh falſly imagined in another, that the more we labour, the leſs we ſhall regard vain words †. As Satan is prevented by diligence in our Callings, ſo ſometimes the Spirit viſits us, and fills us with holy affections at ſuch ſeaſons; as Chriſt appeared to Peter and other Diſciples, when they were a fiſhing †; and uſually manifeſted his grace to men, when they were engaged in their uſeful buſineſſes, or religious ſervices. But theſe motions (as we may obſerve by the way) which come from the Spirit, are not to put us out of our way, but to aſſiſt us in our walking in it, and further us both in our attendance on, and ſucceſs in our duties. To this end look upon the work of your Callings as the work of God, which ought to be done in obedience to Him; as He hath ſet you to be uſeful in the community. Thus a holy exerciſe of our Callings would ſanctifie our minds, and by prepoſſeſſing them with ſolid buſineſs, we ſhould leave little room for any Spider to weave its Cobwebs.

† Joh. 21.3,4.

4. Awe your hearts with the thoughts of God's Omniſcience, eſpecially the diſcovery of it at the laſt Judgment. We are very much Atheiſts in the concern of this Attribute: for though it be notionally believed, yet for the moſt part it is practically deny'd. God underſtands all our thoughts afar off †: as He knew every creature, which lay hid in the Chaos, and undigeſted lump of matter. God is in us all *; as much in us all, as He is above us all; yea in every creek, and chink, and point of our hearts. Not an Atom in the ſpirits of all men in the world, but is obvious to that All-ſeeing Eye, which knows every one of thoſe things that come into our minds †. God knows both the order and confuſion of them, and can better tell their natures one by one, than Adam named the creatures. Fancy then, that you hear the ſound of the laſt Trumpet, that you ſee God's Tribunal ſet, and His Omniſcience calling out ſingly all the ſecrets of your heart. Would not the conſideration of this allay the heat of all other imaginations? If a fooliſh thought break in, conſider, What if God, who knows this, ſhould preſently call me to Judgment for this ſinful glance? Say with the Church, Shall not God ſearch this out? Is it fit either for God's glory, or our intereſt, that when he comes to make inquiſition in us, He ſhould find ſuch a naſty dunghil, and ſwarms of Ægyptian Lice and Frogs creeping up and down our Chambers? Were our heads and hearts poſſeſt by this ſubſtantial truth, we ſhould be aſhamed to think, what we ſhall be aſhamed to own at the laſt day.

5. Keep a conſtant watch over your hearts. David deſires God to ſet a watch before the door of his lips; much more ſhould we deſire that God would keep the door of our hearts. We ſhould have grace ſtand Sentinel there eſpecially; for words have an outward bridle, they may diſgrace a man, and impair his intereſt and credit; but thoughts are unknown, if undiſcovered by words. If a man knew what time the Thief would come to rob him, he would watch. We know we have Thieves within us to ſteal away our hearts; therefore when they are ſo near us, we ſhould watch againſt a ſurprize, and the more carefully, becauſe they are ſo extraordinary ſudden in their riſe, and quick in their motion. Our minds are like idle School-Boys, that will be friſking from one place to another, if the Maſter's back be turned, and playing inſtead of learning. Let a ſtrict hand be kept over our affections, thoſe wild beaſts within us; becauſe they many times force the underſtanding to paſs a judgment according to their pleaſure, not its own ſentiment. Young men ſhould be moſt intent upon their guard, becauſe their fancies gather vigor from their youthful heat, which fires a world of ſquibs in a day; (which mad-men, and thoſe which have hot diſeaſes are ſubject to, becauſe of the exceſſive inflammation of their brains): and partly becauſe they are not ſprung up to a maturity of knowledge, which would breed and foſter better thoughts, and diſcover the plauſible pretences of vain affections. There are particular ſeaſons wherein we muſt double our guard; as when Incentives are preſent, that may ſet ſome inward corruption on a flame. Timothy's Office was to exhort younger, as well as elder women: and the Apoſtle wiſheth him to do it with all purity or chaſtity, that a temptation, lying in ambuſh for him, might not take his thoughts and affections unguarded. Engage thy diligence more at ſolitary times, and in the night; wherein freedom from buſineſs gives an opportunity to an unſanctified imagination, to conjure up a thouſand evil ſpirits: whence perhaps it is that the Pſalmiſt tells us, God had tryed him in the night, and found him holy. The ſolitary Cave tainted Lot with Inceſt, who had preſerved himſelf freſh in the midſt of the ſalt luſts of Sodom. In ill company, wherein we may be occaſionally caſt, there is need of an exacter obſervation of our hearts; leſt corrupt ſteams, which riſe from them, as vapours, from Lakes and Minerals, being breath'd in by us, may tincture our ſpirits; or as thoſe μιάσματα, which (as Phyſicians tell us) exhaling from conſumptive perſons, do by inſpiration ſteal into our blood, and convey a contagion to us. And though above all keepings and watchings we are to keep and watch our hearts, becauſe out of them are the iſſues of life; yet we muſt walk the rounds about our ſenſes, and members of the body, as the wiſe man there adviſeth, v. 24. the mouth which utters wickedneſs; the eyes, v. 25. which are Brokers to make bargains for the heart; and v. 26. the feet which are Agents to run on the errands of ſin. And the rather muſt we watch over our ſenſes, becauſe we are naturally more ready to follow the motions of them, as having had a longer acquaintance and familiarity with them before we grew up to the uſe of reaſon. Beſides, moſt of our thoughts creep in firſt at the windows of ſenſe: The Eye and the Ear robb'd Eve of original righteouſneſs: and the Eye rifled David both of his Juſtice and Chaſtity. If the Eyes behold ſtrange women, the heart will utter perverſe things, Prov. 23. 33. Perverſe thoughts will ſparkle from a rolling Eye. Revel-rout is uſual where there is a negligent Government. He that hath no rule over his own ſpirit, is like a City that is broken down, and without walls †, where any Thieves may go in and out at pleaſure.

3. The third ſort of directions are for the ordering of evil thoughts, when they do intrude; and,

1. Examine them. Look often into your heart to ſee what it is doing: and what thoughts you find dabling in it, call to an account: enquire what buſineſs they have, what their errand and deſign is, whence they come, and whither they tend. David askt his ſoul the reaſon of its troubled thoughts; ſo ask thy heart the reaſon why it entertains ſuch ill company, and by what authority they come there, and leave not chiding, till thou haſt put it to the bluſh. Bring every thought to the teſt of the Word. Aſaph had envious thoughts at the proſperity of the wicked, Pſal. 73. 2, 3. which had almoſt tript him up, and laid him on his back. And theſe had blown up Atheiſtical thoughts that God did not much regard, whether his commands were kept or no; as though God had untied the link between duty and reward, and the breach of his laws were the readieſt means to a favourable recompence; v. 13. I have cleanſed my hands in vain. But when he weighed things in the ballance of the ſanctuary, by the holy rules of God's patience and Juſtice, v. 17. He ſees the brutiſhneſs of his former conceits; v 22. So fooliſh was I and ignorant, I was as a beaſt before thee; and v. 25. he makes an improvement of them to excite his deſire for God, and delight in Him. Let us compare our thoughts with Scripture-rules. Comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, is the way to underſtand them; comparing ſpiritual ſins with ſpiritual commands, is the way to know them; and comparing ſpiritual vices with ſpiritual graces, is the way to loath them. Take not then any thing upon truſt from a crazy fancy: nor, without a ſcrutiny, believe that faculty, whereby dogs dream, and animals perform their natural exploits.

Pſal. 42. 11. Why art thou diſquieted, O my ſoul?

2. Check them at the firſt appearance. If they bear upon them a palpable mark of ſin, beſtow not upon them the honour of an examination. If the leproſie appear in their foreheads, thruſt them as the Prieſts did Uzziah out of the Temple: or as David anſwered his wicked ſollicitors, Pſal. 119. 115. Depart from me ye evil doers: for I will keep the commandments of my God. Though we cannot hinder them from haunting us, yet we may from lodging in us. The very ſparkling of an abominable motion in our hearts is as little to be look'd upon, as the colour of wine in a glaſs by a man inclined to drunkenneſs. Quench them inſtantly, as you would do a ſpark of fire in a heap of ſtraw. We muſt not treat with them: Paul's reſolve is a good pattern, not to confer with fleſh and blood †. We do not debate whether we ſhould ſhake a viper off our hands. If it be plainly a ſinful motion, a treaty with it is a degree of diſobedience; for a putting it to the queſtion whether we ſhould ſuckle it, is to queſtion whether God ſhould be obeyed or no. If it ſavour not of the things of God, hear not its reaſons, and complement it with no leſs indignation than our Saviour did his officious Diſciple upon his carnal advice; Get thee behind me Satan, Mat. 16. 22, 23. Excuſe it not, becauſe 'tis little: Small vapours may compact themſelves into great clouds, and obſtruct our ſight of heaven: a little poiſon may ſpread its venom through a great quantity of meat. We know not how big a ſmall motion, like a Crocodile's egg, may grow, and how ravenous the breed may prove: it may, if entertain'd, force our Judgment, drag our Will, and make all our affections Bedlams. Beſides, ſince the Fancy is that Power in us upon which the Devil can immediately imprint his ſuggeſtions, and that we know not what army he hath to back any ſinful motion, if once the gate be ſet open; let us cruſh the brat betimes, and fling the head over the wall to diſcourage the party. Well then, let us be aſhamed to cheriſh that in our thoughts, which we ſhould be aſhamed ſhould break out in our words or actions: therefore as ſoon as you perceive it baſe, ſpit it out with deteſtation: as you do a thing you unexpectedly find ungrateful to your Palate.

Hic Annibal virtuti, non morâ frangitur.

† Gal. 1. 16.

Ex hinc nota eſt infirmitas mea: quia multo faciliùs irruunt abominandæ phantaſiæ quàm diſcedunt. Kemp. de Imit. Chr. lib. 3. cap. 20.

3. Improve them. Poiſons may be made medicinable. Let the thoughts of old ſins ſtir up a commotion of anger and hatred. We feel ſhiverings in our ſpirits, and a motion in our blood at the very thought of a bitter Potion we have formerly taken: why may we not do that ſpiritually, which the very frame and conſtitution of our bodies doth naturally, upon the calling a lothſom thing to mind? The Romans ſins were tranſient, but the ſhame was renewed every time they reflected on them †: they reacted a deteſtation inſtead of the pleaſure: ſo ſhould the revivings of old ſins in our memories be entertain'd with our ſighs, rather than our joy. We ſhould alſo manage the opportunity ſo as to promote ſome further degrees of our converſion *. There is not the moſt helliſh motion, but we may ſtrike ſome ſparks from it, to kindle our love to God, renew our repentance, raiſe our thankfulneſs, or quicken our obedience. Is it a blaſphemous motion againſt God? It gives you a juſt occaſion thence to awe your heart into a deeper reverence of His Majeſty. Is it a luſtful thought? Open the floud-gates of your godly ſorrow, and groan for your original ſin. Is it a remembrance brance of your former ſin? Let it wind up your heart in the praiſes of him, who delivered you from it. Is it to tempt you from duty? Endeavour to be more zealous in the performance of it. Is it to ſet you at a diſtance from God? Reſolve to be a light ſhining the clearer in that darkneſs, and let it excite you to a cloſer adherence to him. Are they envious thoughts which ſteal upon you? Let thankfulneſs be the product, that you enjoy ſo much as you do, and more than you deſerve. Let Satan's fiery darts enflame your love rather than your Luſt, and like a skilful Pilot, make uſe of the violence of the winds, and raging of the Sea to further you in your ſpiritual voyage. This is to beat the Devil and our own hearts with their own weapons; who will have little ſtomach to fight with thoſe arms, wherewith they ſee themſelves wounded. There is not a remembrance of the worſt objects but may be improved to humility and thankfulneſs; as St. Paul never thought of his old perſecuting, but he ſank down in humiliation, and mounted up in admirations of the riches of grace.

† Rom. 6. 21. Whereof you are now aſhamed.

* Pſal. 119. 59. I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy teſtimonies.

4. Continue your reſiſtance, if they ſtill importune thee; and lay not down thy weapons till they wholly ſhrink from thee. As the wiſe man ſpeaks of a fool's words, ſo I may not only of our blacker, but our more aerial phancies, The beginning of them is fooliſhneſs, but if ſuffered to gather ſtrength, they may end in miſchievous madneſs; therefore if they do continue, or reaſſume their arms, we muſt continue and reaſſume our ſhield *. Reſiſtance makes the Devil and his imps fly: but forbearance makes them impudent. In a battel when one party faints and retreats, it adds new ſpirits to the enemy that was almoſt broken before: ſo will theſe motions be the more vigorous, if they perceive we begin to flag. That encouraging command, Reſiſt the Devil, and he will flye from you †, implies not only the beginning a fight, but continuance in it, till he doth fly. We muſt not leave the field, till they ceaſe their importunity; nor encreaſe their courage by our own cowardiſe.

Eccleſ. 10. 13.

† Jam. 4. 7.

5. Joyn Supplication with your oppoſition. Watch and pray are ſometimes linkt together *. The diligence and multitude of our enemies ſhould urge us to watch, that we be not ſurpriz'd; and our own weakneſs and proneneſs to preſumption ſhould make us pray, that we may be powerfully aſſiſted. Be as frequent in ſolliciting God, as they are in ſolliciting you: as they knock at your heart for entrance, ſo do you knock at heaven for aſſiſtance. And take this for your comfort, As the Devil takes their parts, ſo Chriſt will take yours at his Father's Throne; he that pray'd that the Devil might not winnow Peter's faith, will intercede that your own heart may not winnow yours. If the waves come upon you, and you are ready to ſink, cry out with Peter, Maſter I periſh; and you ſhall feel his hand raiſing you, and the winds and waves rebuked into obedience by him. The very motion of your hearts heaven-ward at ſuch a time is a refuſal of the thought that preſſeth upon you, and will be ſo put upon your account. When any of theſe buzzing flies diſcompoſe you, or more violent hurricanes ſhake your minds, cry out with David, Unite my heart to fear thy Name; and a powerful word will ſoon ſilence theſe diſturbing enemies, and ſettle your ſouls in a calm, and a praiſing poſture.

* Mat. 26. 41.

Pſa. 86. 11, 12.

4. A fourth ſort of directions is concerning good motions; whether they ſpring naturally from a gracious principle, or are peculiarly breath'd in by the ſpirit. There are ordinary bubblings of grace in a renewed mind, as there are of ſins in an unregenerate heart; for grace is as active a principle as any, becauſe 'tis a participation of the divine nature. But there are other thoughts darted in beyond the ordinary ſtrain of thinking: which like the beams of the Sun, evidence both themſelves and their original. And as concerning theſe motions joyn'd together, take theſe Directions in ſhort.

1. Welcom and entertain them. As 'tis our happineſs, as well as our duty, to ſtifle evil motions: ſo 'tis our miſery, as well as our ſin, to extinguiſh heavenly. Strange fire ſhould be preſently quench'd, but that which deſcends from heaven upon the Altar of a holy ſoul, muſt be kept alive by quickning meditation. When a holy thought lights ſuddenly upon you, which hath no connexion with any antecedent buſineſs in your mind (provided it be not unſeaſonable, nor hinder you from any abſolutely neceſſary duty either of religion, or your calling) receive it as a meſſenger from heaven: and the rather becauſe 'tis a ſtranger. You know not but you may entertain an Angel, yea, ſomething greater than an Angel, even the Holy Ghoſt. Open all the powers of your ſouls, like ſo many Organ-pipes, to receive the breath of this Spirit when he blows upon you. 'Tis a ſign of an agreeableneſs between the heart and heaven, when we cloſe with, and preſerve ſpiritual motions. We need not ſtand long to examine them: they are evident by their holineſs, ſweetneſs, and ſpirituality. We may as eaſily diſcern them, as we can exotick plants from thoſe that grow naturally in our own ſoil: or as a palate at the firſt taſt can diſtinguiſh between a rich and generous wine, and a rough water. The thoughts inſtill'd by the Spirit of adoption are not violent, tumultuous, full of perturbation: but, like himſelf, gentle and dove-like ſolicitings, warm and holy impulſes, and (when cheriſhed) leave the ſoul in a more humble, heavenly, pure, and believing temper than they found it. 'Tis a high aggravation of ſin to reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 7. 51. Yet we may quench his motions by neglect, as well as by oppoſition, and by that means loſe both the profit and pleaſure, which would have attended the entertainment. Salvation came both to Zacheus his houſe and heart, upon embracing the firſt motion our Saviour was pleaſed to make him; Had he ſlighted that, 'tis uncertain whether another ſhould have been beſtowed upon him. The more ſuch ſprouts are planted and nouriſhed in us, the leſs room will ſtinking weeds have to root themſelves, and diſperſe their influence. And for thy own good thoughts, feed them and keep them alive, that they may not be like a blaze of ſtraw which takes birth, and expires the ſame minute. Brood upon them, and kill them not, as ſome birds do their young ones, by too often flying from their neſts. David kept up a ſtaple of ſound and good thoughts: he would ſcarce elſe have deſired God to try and know them, had they been only ſome few weak flaſhes at uncertain times.

Pſal. 139. 23. Try me and know my thoughts.

2. Improve them for thoſe ends, to which they naturally tend. 'Tis not enough to give them a bare reception, and forbear the ſmothering of them; but we muſt conſider what affections are proper to be rais'd by them, either in the ſearch of ſome truth, or performance of ſome duty. Thoſe gleams, with ſhoot into us on the ſudden, have ſome leſſon ſeal'd up in them, to be opened, and learned by us. When Peter upon the crowing of the cock call'd to mind his Maſter's admonition, he thought thereon and wept: † he did not only receive the ſpark, but kindled a ſuitable affection. A choice graff, though kept very carefully by us, yet if not preſently ſet, will wither, and diſappoint our expectation of the deſired fruit. No man is without ſome ſecret whiſpers to diſſwade him from ſome alluring and buſie ſin †; as Cain had by an audible voice, Gen. 4. 7. which had he obſerved to the damping the revengeful motion againſt his brother, he had prevented his brother's death, his own deſpair, and eternal ruin. Have you any motion to ſeek God's face, as David had? Let your hearts reply, Thy face, Lord, will I ſeek. * The addreſs will be moſt acceptable at ſuch a time, when your heart is tuned by One, that ſearcheth the deep things of God, † and knows his mind, and what airs are moſt delightful to Him. Let our motion be quick in any duty which the Spirit doth ſuggeſt; and while he heaves our hearts, and oyls our wheels, we ſhall do more in any religious ſervice, and that more pleaſantly and ſucceſsfully, than at another time with all our own art and induſtry; for his injections are like water poured into a pump to raiſe up more; and as Satan's motions are not without a main body to ſecond them, ſo neither do the Spirit's go unattended, without a ſufficient ſtrength to aſſiſt the entertainers of them. Well then, lye not at anchor, when a freſh gale would fill thy ſails, but lay hold of the preſent opportunity. Theſe ſeaſons are often like thoſe influences from certain conjunctions of the Planets, which if not (according to the Aſtrologer's opinion) preſently applied, paſs away, and return not again in many ages: So the Spirit's breathings are often determined, that if they be not entertained with ſuitable affections, the time will be unregainable, and the ſame gracious opportunities of a ſweet entercourſe may be for ever loſt; for God will not have his holy Spirit diſhonoured in always ſtriving with wilful man. When Judas neglected our Saviour's advertiſement, John 13. 21. the Devil quickly enters and hurries him to the execution of his traiterous project, v. 27. and he never meets with any motion afterwards, but from his new Maſter, and that eternally fatal both to his body and ſoul.

3. Refer them, if poſſible, to aſſiſt your Morning Meditation; that like little Brooks ariſing from ſeveral Springs, they may meet in one channel, and compoſe a more uſeful Stream. What ſtraggling good thoughts ariſe, though they may owe their birth to ſeveral occaſions, and tend divers ways, yet liſt them in the ſervice of that truth, to which you have committed the government of your mind that day: As Conſtables in a time of neceſſary buſineſs for the King take up men that are going about their honeſt and lawful occaſions, and force them to joyn in one employ for the publick Service. Many accidental glances (as was obſerved before) will ſerve both to fix and illuſtrate your Morning Propoſition. But if it be an extraordinary injection, and cannot be referred to your ſtanding Theſis, follow it, and let your thoughts run whither it will lead you: A Theme of the Spirit's ſetting is better than one of our own chuſing.

4. Record the choicer of them. We may have occaſion to look back upon them another time, either as grounds of comfort in ſome hour of temptation, or directions in ſome ſudden emergency; but conſtantly as perſuaſive engagements to our neceſſary duty. Thus they may lye by us for further uſe, as money in our purſe. Since Mary kept and ponder'd the ſhort ſayings of our Saviour in her heart, † committing and fitting them as it were in her common-place book; why ſhould not we alſo preſerve the whiſpers of that Spirit, who receives from the ſame mouth and hand, what he both ſpeaks and ſhews to us? It is pity the duſt and filings of choicer metals, which may one time be melted down into a maſs, ſhould be loſt in a heap of droſſy thoughts. If we do not remember them, but like children, are taken with their novelty, more than their ſubſtance; and like John Baptiſt's hearers, rejoyce in their light only for a ſeaſon †, it will diſcourage the Spirit from ſending any more; and then our hearts will be empty, and we know who ſtands ready to clap in his helliſh ſwarms and legions. But howſoever we do, God will record our good thoughts as our excuſers, if we improve them; as our accuſers, if we reject them; and as He took notice how often He had appear'd to Solomon †, ſo He will take notice how often His Spirit hath appeared to us, and write down every motion, whereby we have been ſolicited, that they may be witneſſes of his endeavours for our good, and our own wilfulneſs.

† Joh. 5. 35.

† 1 Kin. 11. 9.

5. Back them with Ejaculations. Let our hearts be ready to attend every injection from Heaven with a motion to it: ſince 'tis ingratitude to receive a preſent, without returning an an acknowledgment to the Benefactor. As God turns His thoughts of us into promiſes, ſo let us turn our thoughts of Him into prayers; and ſince his regards of us are darted in beams upon us, let them be reflected back upon Him in thankfulneſs for the gift, and earneſtneſs both for the continuance and encreaſe of ſuch impreſſions; as David prayed that God would not take his holy Spirit from him †, which had inſpired him with his penitential reſolutions. To what purpoſe doth the Holy Ghoſt deſcend upon us, but to declare to us the things which are freely given us of God †? And is it fit for us to hear ſuch a declaration, without a quick ſuitable reflection? Since the Comforter is to bring to our remembrance † what Chriſt both ſpake and did; it muſt be for the ſame end, for which they were both ſpoken and acted by him, which was to bring us to a near converſe with God. Therefore when the Spirit renews in our minds a Goſpel-truth, let us turn it into a preſent plea, and be God's remembrancers of His own promiſes, as the Spirit is our remembrancer of Divine Truths. We need not doubt ſome rich fruit of the application at ſuch a ſeaſon; ſince, without queſtion, the impreſſions the Spirit ſtamps upon us, are as much according to God's will †, as the interceſſions he makes for us. Therefore when any holy thought doth advance it ſelf in our Souls, the moſt grateful reception we can beſtow upon it, will be to ſuffer our hearts to be immediately fired by it, and imitate with a glowing devotion the Royal Prophet, in that form he hath drawn up to our hands; O Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and of Iſrael our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy ſervant, and prepare my heart unto thee. † This will be an encouragement to God to ſend more ſuch gueſts into our hearts. And by an affectionate entertainment of them, we ſhall gain both a habit of thinking well, and a ſtock too.

A DISCOURSE OF THE CHURCHES STABILITY.

Pſalm 87. 5.

And of Sion it ſhall be ſaid, This and that man was born in her; and the Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

THE Author of this Pſalm, and the time when it was penn'd, are uncertain. Some think it was compos'd after the return of the Jews from Babylon, upon the Erection of the ſecond Temple, and deſigned to be ſung in their conſtant Publick Aſſemblies. Others think it was compos'd by David, when he brought the Ark to Sion, as the Repoſitory for it, till the Building of the Temple, wherein it might honourably reſt. It ſeems, whoever was the Author, to be Ecſtatical. The Penman breaks out into a holy rapture and admiration of the firmneſs and ſtability of the Church. 'Tis alſo Prophetical of the Chriſtian Church, of the glory of it, the largeneſs of its bounds, and perpetual duration. The Jews ridiculouſly interpret it of literal Jeruſalem in regard of the excellency of its Climate, the goodneſs of the air, being ſeated in the middle or navel of the earth, and the ſeat and ſpring of all the wiſe men, accounting all fools that were to be found in other parts; 'tis true, others were not wiſe with a wiſdom to Salvation; they were not inſtructed in the high Myſteries of Religion by God, as thoſe People were. But was there not Learning among the Greeks, & Wiſdom among the Chaldeans, and a ripeneſs in Mechanick Arts among the Tyrians which lived in the ſame Climate with the Jews? It can by no means be underſtood of the material Jeruſalem and Sion; that was ruin'd by the Babylonians, and tho re-edified, yet afterwards ſubverted by the Romans, and the remainders of it at this day become a Stable for Mahomet, and the bringing in thoſe Nations mention'd, v. 4. overthrows any ſuch interpretation, which never were inrol'd in the regiſters of Sion, nor became Votaries to the true Religion, while the walls of that place were ſtanding in their glory. Sion was the place whence the Law was to come, Mich. 4. 2. a Law of another nature, than that which was uttered with Thunders from Mount Sinai. Sion was the place where the Throne of Chriſt was to be ſettled, where he was to be crowned King, Pſal. 2. 6. and where he was to manage the Scepter and rule in the midſt of his enemies, Pſal. 110. 2. and therefore 'tis here celebrated as the figure of the Chriſtian Church; of that City which Abraham expected, whoſe builder and maker is God, Heb. 11. 10. And the Chriſtian Church is particularly called by this name of Mount Sion, Heb. 12. 21. And Believers are called the Sons of Sion, Joel 2. 23. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks,

1. Of the great love the Lord bears to Sion, v. 2.
2. Of the glory of the Promiſes made to her, v. 3.
3. Of the confluence of new Inhabitants to her, v. 4.
4. Of the Duration and Eſtabliſhment of her, v. 5.

v. 1. His Foundation. The Foundation of God, i. e. That which God hath founded, that Jeruſalem which is of God's building, is ſeated in the holy Mountain; the City was built before Joſhuah conquered Canaan: But God is ſaid to be the Founder of it in regard of that peculiar glory to which it was deſigned, to be the reſt of his Ark, the place of his Worſhip, the Throne of the Types of the Meſſiah, the Seat whence the Evangelick Law was to be publiſht to all Nations, and the Meſſiah revealed as the Redeemer and Ruler of the World.

In the holy Mountains. Jeruſalem was ſeated upon high Mountains. The Palace of the Kings was built upon Sion, and the Temple, the Houſe of the Moſt High, was built upon Moriah, and encompaſt with Mountains round about, Pſal. 125. 2. an emblem of the ſtrength and ſtability of the Church. * Holy Mountains; not that there was any inherent holineſs in them more than in the other Mountains of the Earth; or that they were naturally more beautiful and ſtately than other Mountains; but becauſe they were ſeparated for the Worſhip and Service of God, and had been ennobled by the performance of a Worſhip there before the building of the Temple. It was upon Moriah that Iſaac was deſigned for a Sacrifice, and the moſt ſignal act of obedience performed to God by the Father of the Faithful. It was there alſo that David appeaſed the wrath of God, by Sacrifice, after it had iſſued out upon the People in a Plague, for the numbring of them: And the very name Moriah hath ſomething ſacred in it, it ſignifying either God teaching, or God manifeſted; which name might be given it by God, with reſpect to the manifeſtation of Chriſt who was to come, during the ſtanding of the ſecond Temple.

v. 2. The Lord loves the Gates of Sion.] By Gates in Scripture is meant the ſtrength, or wiſdom, or juſtice of a place. Gates were the Magazines of Arms, and the places of Judicature. He had manifeſted his love to her in chuſing that City before all the Cities of Iſrael and Judah, wherein to place his Name, and have his Worſhip celebrated; and that place in Jeruſalem particularly, where his Law ſhould be given by the Spirit to the Apoſtles upon the day of Pentecoſt; and to apply it to the Goſpel-Church, it ſignifies the ſpecial reſpect God bears to her, above all the Rites, Obſervancies and Ceremonies of the Judaick Inſtitution. It was in this Goſpel-Church, the true Sion, that he deſired to dwell, and will remain for ever, Pſal. 68. 17. Which is a Prophetick Pſalm of the Goſpel-times, and the Aſcenſion of Chriſt.

1. The Stability of the Church is here aſſerted. * The Church is not built upon the Sand, which may fall with a Storm, nor upon the Waters, that may float with the waves; nor ſpread out as a Tent in the Deſert, that may be taken up, and carried away to another place; but upon a Mountain not to be removed *, 'tis built upon a Rock, the Rock of Ages; upon a Mountain which is not ſhatter'd by waves, or ſhaken by ſtorms, upon Chriſt, who hath the ſtrength of many Mountains in himſelf.

* Geierus in loc.

* Pſal. 125. 1. Mount Sion cannot be removed.

2. The neceſſity of holineſs in a Church. What though the Church be a Mountain for ſtrength and eminency, have the honour and priviledg of Sacraments, and be the Ark of the Oracles of God, 'tis not eſtabliſhed unleſs it be a holy Mountain: Holineſs is the only becoming thing in the Houſe of God; as it is conſecrated to the glory of God, ſo it muſt be exerciſ'd in things pertaining to the glory of God. As the Foundation is holy, ſo ought the Superſtructure to be. There was no filth in the framing it; there muſt be no filth in the continuance of it.

v. 3. He ſpeaks with ſome kind of aſtoniſhment of the glorious things ſpoken of her, or promiſed to her, and concludes it with a note of attention, or a mark of eminency, Selah *. No place enjoy'd an equal happineſs with Jeruſalem, while it remained faithful to its Founder. It maintain'd its ſtanding in the midſt of its enemies; no weapon formed againſt it was able to proſper; Heaven planted it, and the dews of Heaven watered it; it had a continual ſucceſſion of Prophets; the beſt Kings that ever were in the world, ſwayed the Scepter in it; it was bleſſed with more miraculous deliverances than any part of the Univerſe; the Nations that loved it not, yet feared its power, and feared the diſpleaſure of its Guardian. It was here the Son of God delivered the Meſſages of Heaven by the order of his father: It was here the ſpirit firſt filled the heads and hearts of the Apoſtles in order to the converſion of a world from Idolatry to the Scepter of God; but more glorious things are ſpoken of the Spiritual Sion than of the material Jeruſalem; that had Chriſt in the fleſh, and the Goſpel-Church hath Chriſt in the ſpirit, he went from thence to heaven, but he comes from heaven to viſit them with his comforts; he hath left the walls of Jeruſalem in its ruins, but he hath not, he will not leave his Spiritual Sion fatherleſs and comfortleſs; Joh. 14. 18. his ſpirit abides for ever with his Church. Glorious things are ſpoken of it, when he pronounced it impregnable, and that the gates of Hell, the power and policy of all the Apoſtate Angels and their inſtruments ſhould not prevail againſt her, when he aſſured her he would be preſent with her, not to the end of an age or two, but till the period of time, the conſummation of the world; priviledges that material Jeruſalem could never boaſt of; whatſoever countries have been applauded for ſecular excellencies, or been famous for wiſdom, none can claym ſuch elogies as Goſpel Sion, where God hath declared his will, publiſht himſelf a God of ſalvation, placed the laws of heaven, and poured out that wiſdom which comes from above: Theſe are glorious things, above humane expectations, above humane deſires.

* v. 3. Glorious things are ſpoken of thee, O City of God.

The Glorious things mentioned of the Goſpel-Church are in v. 4. where he ſpeaks of the the enlargement of her bounds, the increase of her inhabitants, and the numerous muster-rolls of those that shall list themselves in her service *.

* I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me. Behold Philistia and Tyre, with Æthiopia: this man was born there.

The time shall come when those nations that are most alienated from the profession of truth, shall come under her wing, and pay allegiance to her empire; Strangers shall be brought into her bosom, not only Philistia and Tyre, nations upon her confines, but Ægypt and Æthiopia, nations more remote, nations born and bred at a distance shall be registred as born from her womb, and nurst in her lap; distance of place shall not hinder the relation of her children. And when God shall count the people of forraign nations, he shall set a mark upon every true believer, and reckon him as one born in Sion, a Denizen of Jerusalem, though not a Jew in the flesh.

De Dieu in loc.

I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me; or rather among them that know me, or for them that know me *, I will remember them as persons inlightned by me, and acquainted with me.

לידעי *

* For so Ægypt is named, Isa. 51. 9.

The Psalmist reckons up here nations that were greatest enemies to the Church, Rahab or Ægypt * her antient enemy; Philistia her perpetual invader: Rahab signifies pride or fierceness, the fiercest people shall be subdued to Sion by the power of the Gospel: Ægypt the wisest and learnedst nation, the most Idolatrous and Superstitious, men that rest in their own parts and strength shall cast away their Idols; Babylon the strongest and most powerful Empire, the subjects of which the Scripture often describes as luxurious, cruel, proud: Tyre the greatest mart, whose Citizens were the greatest merchants, The Æthiopians the posterity of Cursed Cham, whose souls are blacker than their bodies: men buried in sin, benighted with ignorance, poysoned with pride, the most fierce and envenom'd enemies shall be brought in by an infinite grace, and make up one body with her, and shall be counted as related to her by a new birth, and be made members of her by regeneration; this is properly to be born in Sion *; as without regeneration we have not God for our father, so neither have we Sion or the Church for our mother: this is the great priviledg we should inquire after, without which we are not in Gods register; this 2*d birth* God only approves of, he enrolls no man in the number of the Citizens of Sion, nor indows them with the special priviledges of it upon the account of their first, wherein they lye buried in the corruption of Adam, and are Citizens of Hell, not of Jerusalem. Again, this 2*d birth* is never without the knowledge of God. * Ignorance is a bar to this enrolment; he is no man that is not a rational creature, and he no regenerate man that hath not some knowledg in the great mysteries of God in Christ.

* This man was born there.

* Among those that know me.

In v. 5. 1. The honour of Sion is described by her fruitfulness.

1. In regard of the eminency of her births, she is not wholly barren, she hath her births of men, and worthy men; the carnal world hath not exceeded the Church in men of raised intellectuals; Sion hath not been a City of fools. Dionysius the Areopagite hath been her production as well as Damaris a woman. Kings also have been nurst at her breasts, that they might be nursing fathers to her by their power; but the honour of Sion, consists in the inward change it makes on men, dispossessing them of the nature of wolves for that of lambs, rendring them the Loyal subjects of God instead of his active enemies. 'Tis the glory of Sion, that this or that man born in her, was changed to such principles and such affections, that all the education and politeness of the most accomplisht Cities in the world could not furnish them with.

2. In regard of the multitude of them; this and that man, of all sorts and conditions, and multitudes of them, so that more are the children of the desolate than of the marryed wife. The tents were prophesied to be inlarged, the curtains of the habitations of Sion to be stretched out, and her cords to be lengthened to receive and entertain that multitude of children that should be brought forth by her, after the Sacrifice of the Son of God, Isa. 54. 1, 2. For that exhortation follows upon the description of the death and exaltation of Christ, Isa. 53.

2. The happiness of Sion. The highest himself shall establish her.

1. Security in her glory. Establish her.

2. The Author of that security and perpetuity. The Highest; and that exclusive of any other. The Highest himself *, all that are not the most high are excluded from having a share in the establishment of the Church.

* Coccei. in loc.

'Tis a work peculiar to him. 'Tis not the excellent learning, strength of the wise, or mighty men, that are born in her, that doth preserve her, but God alone; he spirits and acts them; means God doth use in bringing in inward grace, means he doth use in setling the outward form. But such means that have in reason, no strength to effect so great a business, means different from those which are used in the establishment of other Kingdoms, whereby the hand that acts them is more visible and plain than the means that are used. * 'Tis not the wit of man which is folly, nor the strength of man which is weakness, nor the holiness of man which is nothing, can claim the honour of this work: God himself picks stones out of the quarry, smooths them for the building, fixeth them in their places, he himself is the only architect, his wisdom contrives it, his grace erects it, his power preserves it, and accomplisheth his own work; 'tis the highest, none higher to over-power him, none so high as to check and mate him.

* Polan.

Shall establish her.] This cannot be meant of the literal or local Sion (though that indeed was preserved while the legal service was to indure, (excepting that interruption by the Babylonish captivity, but now Mahomets horse tramples upon it, and it retains none of the ancient inhabitants.) but of the true mystical Sion, the Gospel state of the Church, which shall continue in being as Christ the head of it hath setled it, till time shall be no more. Other Kingdoms may crumble away, the foundations of them be dissolved. But that God which laid the foundation of Sion and built her walls, will preserve her palaces, that the gates of Hell, the subtilty of Hereticks, the fury of Tyrants, the Apostacy of some of her pretended Children, all the locusts and spawn of the bottomless-pit shall not be able to root her up.

was

Shall establish her.] The word signifies the affording all things necessary for defence, increase of victory, preparations of it, the knitting of it. כונן

Doct. The Gospel-Church is a perpetual Society established by the highest Power in Heaven or Earth.

It shall continue as long as the World, and out-live the Dissolution of Nature; she shall bring forth her Man-child, maugre all the vigilancy of the Dragon, which shall be caught up to God and his Throne; and though she be forced to flie into the wilderness, yet a place is prepared for her habitation, and food for her support during that state, no less than 1260 days, or years, and this by no weaker, no meaner a hand than that of God himself *; that hand that catches up Christ the Man-child into Heaven; that hand that sets him upon the Throne of God; provides meat for the Woman in the wilderness. The head and the body have the same Defender, the same Protector, the same hand to secure them *. Or by Man-child is meant, the whole number of the Believers which were more numerous before she went into a wilderness-condition; the Scripture using often the singular for the plural; and the Holy Ghost expressing himself here according to the property of the Woman, which is to bring forth one at the same time. The Figure of the Church notes stability; 'tis four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth, Rev. 21. 16. The length, breadth, and height of it are equal; the most perfect Figure, noting perfection and duration. So it was described in the Prophecy, Ezek. 48. 16. exactly 4500 measures on each side. All belonging to this City or Church, is reckoned by the number twelve, a square number, equal on all sides; twelve Gates, twelve Foundations, twelve Tribes of Israel, twelve Apostles, twelve Stones to garnish it, Revel. 21. 12, 13, 14, &c. A foursquare Figure is an emblem of unchangeable constancy. Things so framed remain alwaies in the same posture, cast them which way you will; and among some of the Heathens was reckoned as a divine figure *, and the character of virtuous man in regard of his constancy was τετράγωνος.

The shutting of the gate of the new Temple, Ezek. 44. 2. after the God of Israel had entred in by it, is interpreted by some of the everlasting dwelling of the Lord in the Church of the Gospel among his people, and never departing from it as he had done from the first Temple †. None shall enter in to deface it, none shall prescribe new laws to it, none shall trample upon it; when God enters into the Christian Church, he shuts the door after him, his presence never departs from it, his Gospel shall never be rooted out of it, the Church hath a security in its foundation as being built upon a rock, Mat. 18. 16. It hath an assurance of preservation by the presence of the God of Israel, of Christ in the midst of her, Mat. 28. 19, 20. The tabernacle of Sion shall not be taken down, not one of the stakes thereof shall be remov'd, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken; And that because the glorious Lord shall be a place of broad rivers and streams to it, Isa. 33. 20, 21.

† Lightfoot Temple, cap. 38. p. 252.

The enemies of the Church shall be consum'd, that God may have his due praise. Hallelujahs are never sung with the highest note, till the wicked & Idolatrous generation be rooted out of the earth. Hallelujahs were never used, as the Jews observe, till the consummation of all things by the setting the Church above the tossing of the waves, and the destruction of its troublers, when the glory of the Lord should endure for ever, and God rejoyce in his works, Psal. 104. 31, 35. And therefore when the blood of his children is avenged by his Justice upon his enemies, and the smoke of Antichrist riseth up before him, and the Kingdom of God is for ever setled, Hallelujah is pronounced and repeated with a loud voice, Rev. 19. 2, 3, 6. Such a time will be, and God will establish and secure his Church till he hath perfected his own and her glory.

This stability the Church hath had experience of in all ages of the world, and it will always be said in her, Psal. 48. 8. As we have heard, so have we seen in the City of the Lord of hosts, in the City of our God; God will establish it for ever.

In the handling this Doctrine, these four things are to be done.

1. The Explication. 2. The Proof, that it is so. 3. Why it must needs be so. 4. Use.

1. Explication.

1. This stability must not be meant of any particular Church in the world. Particular Churches have their beginnings, progresses, and periods; many Churches as well as many persons have apostatized from the faith; many Candlesticks have been broken in pieces, and yet the candle not blown out, but remov'd and set in another socket; particular Churches have been corrupted by Superstition and Idolatry, rent by Heresies, and scattered by Persecutions. What remains are there of those seven Churches in Asia which were the walk of Christ, Revel. 2. 1. but deplorable ruines? There is no absolute promise given to any particular Church, that it ſhall be free from defection. The Church of Rome ſo flouriſhing in the Apoſtles time, was warn'd to be humble, leſt it became as much Apoſtate as that of the Jews, Rom. 11. 21, 22. Nay there are predictions of almoſt an univerſal apoſtacy*. And juſt before the coming of Chriſt it will be difficult to find a grain of faith among the multitude of Chaff, Luk. 18. 8. There is not one place which was in the primitive times dignified with truth, but is now deformed by error. Yea the univerſal Church hath been forced by the fury of the Dragon, though not to ſink yet to fly into the wilderneſs & obſcurity, yet hath been preſerv'd through all changes in the midſt of thoſe deſolations & deſerts. 'Tis not indeed ſo fixed in one place but the cords may be taken up, the ſtakes removed, and the tents pitched in another ground. 'Tis ſpread through the world wherever God will ſet up the light of his Goſpel. Sion hath ſtood, though ſome Synagogues of it have been pulled down; it hath like the Sun kept its ſtation in the Firmament, though not without eclipſes and clouds to muffle it. The Church is but one, though it be in divers Countries, and nam'd according to the places where it reſides, as the Church of Epheſus, the Church of Sardis, &c. which all are as the beams of the Sun darted from one body, branches growing from one root, ſtreams flowing from one fountain; if you obſtruct the light of one beam, or lop off one branch, or dam up the ſtream, yet the Sun, Root, Fountain remains the ſame: So though the light of particular Churches may be dim and extinguiſht, the beauty of them defaced, yet the univerſal Church, that which is properly Sion remains the ſame, it remains upon Chriſt the rock, and is ſtill upon the baſis of the covenant, 'tis ſtill Gods Church, and God is her God. When a people have forfeited their Church priviledges by barrenneſs, and wantonneſs, and God in juſtice ſtrips them of their Ornaments, he will have another people which he will form for his glory, and fit for his reſidence; the Goſpel ſhall never want an hoſt to entertain it, nor a ground to be made fruitful by it*. The Kingdom of God is not deſtroyed when it is removed, but tranſplanted into a more fruitful Soil. While Chriſt hath a body in the world, he will find a Joſeph of Arimathea to embalm it, and preſerve it for a reſurrection. When the glory of the Lord goes off from one Cherub, it will find other Cherubims whereon to ſettle, Ezek. 10. 4. 18. That glory which had dwelt in the material ark of the Sanctuary, departs from thence to find a Throne in that Chariot which had been deſcribed, Ezek. 1. Nay the departure of God from one Church renders his name more glorious in another*. The rejection of the carnal Iſrael was the Preamble to the appearance of the ſpiritual Iſrael, & the Kingdom of the Meſſiah was rendred more large and illuſtrious by the diſſolving of that Church that had confidence in the fleſh, truſted in their external rites and patcht the beauty and purity of divine Worſhip with their whoriſh additions; juſt as the mortification of the fleſh gives livelineſs to the ſpirit, and the pulling up noyſom weeds from a garden makes room for the ſetting and flouriſhing growth of good plants.

All the world wondrid after the Beaſt, Rev. 13. 3. and worſhipid him, v. 8.

* Mat. 21 43. The Kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you, and given to a Nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

* Rivet. in Hoſ. 1.10. p. 518.

2. Though God unſtakes the Church in one place, yet he will not only have a Church, but a profeſſing Church in another. It ſhall be ſaid of Sion, This and that man was born there. It ſhall be ſaid of Sion by God; It ſhall be ſaid of Sion by men. If Chriſt confeſſeth none before his Father, but ſuch as confeſs him before men, Luk. 12. 8. ſhall he ever want imployment? ſhall the world ever be at that paſs as to bear none that profeſs him? and ſo none to be owned by him at the right hand of his Father? Shall he by whom all things ſubſiſt, have none to acknowledg their ſubſiſtance by him? The world may be the Inheritance of Chriſt, but ſcarce counted his poſſeſſion, if there were not in ſome parts of it a body of ſubjects to juſtifie their Allegiance to him in the face of a perſecuting generation. Indeed when the Church was confined to the narrow limits of the carnal Iſrael, the profeſſion of the truth was contracted to a few, though the faith of it might be alive in others; only Caleb and Joſhua among the whole body of the murmuring Iſraelites in the wilderneſs aſſerted the honour of God, and maintained the truth of his promiſe, though the belief of it might ſparkle in the hearts of others under the aſhes of their fears, that hindered their diſcovery of it to others. It was another time reduced to one, and Elijah only had the boldneſs to make a declaration of the name of God, though there were 7000 who had retain'd their purity while they had loſt their courage to publiſh it, 1 Kings 19. 18. But in the Chriſtian Church, ſince the number of elect are more, the profeſſion will be greater in the midſt of an univerſal Apoſtacy of pretenders, Rev. 13. 8. All that dwell upon the earth ſhall Worſhip him, i.e. the Beaſt, whoſe names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb. If their election be a preſervative againſt an adoration of the Beaſt, it is alſo a ſecurity againſt the denial of any ſuch worſhip; and an encouragement to profeſs the name of Chriſt, when they ſhall be brought upon the ſtage.

This profeſſion may lye much in the dark, and not be ſo viſible as before; As a field of corn overtopt by weeds looks at a diſtance, as if there were nothing elſe but the blew and red cockle and darnel, but when we come near we ſee the good grain ſhews its head as well as the weeds; but a profeſſing people there will be one where or other. 'Tis a ſtanding law of Chriſtianity, that a belief in the heart ſhould be attended by confeſſion with the mouth, Rom. 10. 9. And the Church is a congregation of people ſounding the voice of Chriſt, as he was preached and confeſt by the Apoſtles; while there are believers, there will be profeſſors in Society together; ſome Ordinances ſetled in being, during the continuance of the world; as the Supper, 1 Cor. 11. 6. implies a Society, as the ſeat of the adminiſtration; Baptiſm is a Ceremony of admiſſion into a Society; the Supper a feaſting of ſeveral upon ſpiritual Viands.

Officers

Officers appointed imply a body profeſſing ſome rules, Math. 28. 20. To what purpoſe are all theſe ſetled during the continuance of the world, if they were not ſomewhere to be practiſed till that period of time; & how can they be practiſed without a Confederation and Society? Without ſuch a body all the Ordinances and Rules of Chriſt would be in vain, and imply as little wiſdom in enacting them, as a want of power in not keeping up a Society in ſome part of the world to obſerve them according to his own preſcriptions. There will therefore be in ſome part or other of the world a Church openly profeſſing the doctrine of truth.

3. This Church or Sion ſhall have a numerous progeny. The Spiritual Iſrael ſhall be as the Sand of the Sea, which cannot be meaſured or numbred, Hoſ. 1.10. which was the promiſe made to Abraham, Gen. 22. 17. and renewed in the ſame terms to Jacob, Gen. 32.12. The Church is a little flock in compariſon of the carnal world, yet it is numerous in it ſelf, though not in every place; for ſometimes there may not be above three found to withſtand the worſhip of a Golden Image; yet in ſome one or other place of the world, and ſucceſſively it ſhall be numerous; he will not loſe the honour of the feaſt he hath prepared, though thoſe that are invited prefer their Farms and Oxen before it, but will find Gueſts in the high-ways; he will ſpread his wings from Eaſt to Weſt, and in every place Incenſe ſhall be offered to his Name, Mal. 1. 11. The Church is compared to the morning, Cant. 6. 10. which from ſmall beginnings in a ſhort time fills the whole Hemiſphere with light; and the promiſes concerning it run all that way. The Hills were to be covered with the ſhadow of it; her boughs are to be ſent out to the Sea, and her branches to the River, Pſal. 80. 10, 11. It was to ſpread it ſelf like a goodly Cedar, and be a dwelling-place to the Fowl of every wing, Ezek. 17.23. Yea, a numberleſs multitude from all Nations, Kindreds, People and Tongues, are to ſtand before the Throne, and before the Lamb, Clothed with white Robes, and Palms in their hands, Rev. 7.9. adorned with innocency, and crowned with victory. No Monarchy ever did, ever can ſo far ſtretch her bounds; nor hath the Sun ſeen any place where it hath not ſeen ſome ſprinkling of a Church. Every Kingdom hath met with unpaſſable bounds; but the Enſigns of Chriſt have not been limited. The Church was once crowded up in a narrow compaſs of Judæa; but ſince that her Territories are enlarged, her Enſigns have flouriſhed over many Countries, Rahab, Tyre, Ethiopia, the vaſt circuit of Aſia, and the deſerts of Africa, have been added to her Empire; her Progeny ſhall be hereafter as numerous as it hath been; when the devices of Antichriſt ſhall be more ſeen and perceived, they will be more nauſeated, and many with Ephraim ſhall ſay, What have I to do any more with Idols?

Second thing; That God has hitherto eſtabliſht Sion. II.

1. 'Tis teſtified by its preſent ſtanding, when other Empires have ſunk by Age or violence.

God hath promiſed the ſtability and eminency of the Mountain of the Lord's houſe above all the Mountains, the ſtrongeſt Power, and moſt compacted Empires of the world, ſometimes ſignified to us by that title, Iſa. 2. 2. And in the midſt of his deſtroying Plagues, and his milder Anger with the Church, ſhe hath a Charter of ſecurity, Jer. 30. 11. Though I make a full end of all Nations, yet will I not make an end of thee. Further, the reaſons why Kingdoms and Nations are pull'd up by the roots, and utterly waſted, is not only becauſe they are inveterate enemies, but refuſe her eaſie chains, and decline her ſervice, Iſa. 60. 12. The Nation and Kingdom that will not ſerve thee, ſhall periſh; yea thoſe Nations ſhall be utterly waſted. The warrant for the execution of ſuch is as firmly ſealed by Heaven, as the Patent for the Churches preſervation; 'tis repeated with an Emphaſis. The perſecuted Church hath ſtill been lifted up, when the Aſſyrian, Perſian, and Greek Monarchies have fallen in pieces, and left no footſteps of their Grandeur. The proſperity of worldly Kingdoms is no better than a fire of ſtraw that blazeth and vaniſheth, it hath but the brittle foundation of humane Policy, and an eſtabliſhment by a temporary Providence; the everlaſting Covenant, and the Baſis of Divine Truth and Love cannot be claimed by any but the Church; not a Kingdom can be pitched upon in all the Records of Hiſtory, that hath maintain'd its ſtanding, triumphed over its enemies, and ſubſiſted at ſuch a rate, and by unuſual and unheard of Methods, as the Church hath done. Thoſe that have been beſt guarded by Laws, hedg'd in with the beſt Methods of Government, and arm'd with a ſtrong power to protect them, have found ſomething or other riſing from their own bowels, or their enemies Power to procure their diſſolution. But the Church, though daſht againſt ſo many Rocks, has yet floated above the deluge of thoſe Commotions that have ſunk other Societies. The Kings of the world could never yet boaſt of a full Conqueſt of her, or brag that ſhe hath been ſubjected to the ſame condition with themſelves; ſhe hath born up her head in the midſt of earthly Revolutions, and met with her preſervation or reſurrection, where carnal Intereſts have found their Funeral. Thoſe that have ſet their feet upon the Churches breaſts, or ſpilt her blood, have found their poiſon where they imagin'd they ſhould find their ſafety. The Babyloniſh Empire, which was God's Rod for the correcting his People, ſaw her ſelf in the chains of her Enemies that night ſhe had been ſacrilegiouſly carouzing healths in the ſacred Veſſels of the Temple, Dan. 5. 3, 30. And the Jews enjoy'd a Deliverer, where the Babylonians felt the force of a Conquerour. Many ſuch fatal Periods may be reckoned up both in ſacred and humane ſtory, either for not protecting, or perſecuting that which is ſo dear to the Higheſt who hath eſtabliſht her.

2. No Society but the Church ever ſubſiſted in the midſt of a multitude of Enemies. Has ſhe not been like a little Flock in the midſt of many Wolves, which though they ſuckt the blood of ſome, yet could never reach the head or heart of the whole? The Devil hath attackt her, without vanquiſhing her; ſhaken her, without ruining her. The biting of the Serpent, according to the ancient promiſe, may bruiſe the heel, but not the head, and make an incurable wound in the Myſtical Body. She hath been preſerved in a hating world in ſpight of the enmity of it, by a Divine Wiſdom that hath not regulated it ſelf by the Methods of fleſh and blood. His feeding the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs was a figure of what he would do to his Church, and he hath accompliſht it to the Goſpel-Church, as really as he did to the ancient Iſrael. While ſhe hath been in a wilderneſs theſe 1200 years, and I hope ſomewhat upwards, ſhe hath not wanted her Manna, nor her Rock; ſhe hath been fed in her ſtraits, and preſerved in her combates; and as Chriſt reigns, ſo the Church lives, and hath her Table ſpread in the midſt of her Enemies. What is 1100 years continuance of the Venetian Government, to ſo many thouſand years preſervation of the Church in the midſt of Atheiſm, Paganiſm, Antichriſtianiſm, ever ſince it was firſt born and nurſt in Adam's Family; and this hath been, when her friends have forſaken her; when her enemies have been confident of her ruine; when her ſelf hath expected little elſe than deſtruction; when ſhe hath thought ſometimes in her ſtraits, her God ignorant of her; when Hell hath poured out a flood, the carnal Earth hath ſometimes found it their Intereſt to help her, though their enmity were irreconcileable againſt her, Rev. 12. 16. The ſubtilty and power of her Enemies, that have found ſucceſs in their other projects, have met with an unforeſeen baffle, when they have armed againſt her. Men of the greateſt abilities have proved fools, when they have exerciſed their wit againſt her. Achitophel's wiſdom was great when on David's ſide, and changed to folly when he ſhifted ſides againſt him. A ſecret blaſt hath been upon the Projects of men, when they have turned againſt her upon ſecular Intereſts. In the greateſt Judgments which have come, and ſhall come upon the world, when wonders ſhall be ſhewn in the Heavens, and in the Earth, blood, fire, and pillars of ſmoke; when the Sun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the Moon into blood, Joel 2. 30, 31. yet God will have a Mount Sion and Jeruſalem: Some that call upon his Name, v. 32. Not the malice of her enemies ſhall impair her, becauſe of God's Power, nor the common Judgments of the world, under which others ſink, ſhall extinguiſh her, becauſe of God's Truth, v. 32. As the Lord hath ſaid. Whence comes all this, but from God's having been her dwelling-place in all generations? Pſal. 90. 1. He was ſo to her from the time of Abraham, to the introduction of his poſterity into Canaan; he hath ſheltred her as an houſe doth an Inhabitant, or the Ark did Noah in the midſt of many waters. In all generations Sion hath been impregnable; for he that is her dwelling-place, hath formed the Mountains, and from everlaſting to everlaſting is only God, v. 2. And though one generation paſs, and another comes, he is the ſame dwelling-place, and never out of repair, never will want repair; and therefore it is an aſtoniſhment, that the Devil after ſo long an experience ſhould be ſuch a fool as to engage in new attempts, when he hath found ſo little ſucceſs in his former, and hath had ſo many Ages to witneſs the baffles he hath received, what a fool is he to think that her Defender ſhould be conquered by a revolted Angel, that lies under an everlaſting curſe!

3. The violences againſt her, which have been fatal to other Societies, have been uſeful to her. This buſh hath burned without conſuming, and preſerved its verdure in the midſt of fire, not from the nature of the buſh, but the preſence of him that dwelt in it: It hath not only ſubſiſted in the bowels of her Enemies, but hath been eſtabliſhed by means of the violence of men, and grown greater in the midſt of torments and death; ſhe hath not only out-grown her afflictions, but grown greater and better by them. The laſt Monarchy compos'd of Clay and Iron, Clay for its earthly and miry deſigns, and Iron for its force and violence, is the immediate Uſher of the Kingdom of God, that ſhall never be deſtroyed, but ſtand for ever, Dan. 2. 41, 44.

1. She hath been often encreaſed. Perſecution hath lopt off ſome branches of the Vine, but have been found more ſprouting up inſtead of them, that were cut off. Her blood hath been ſeed, and the pangs of her Martyrs have been fruitful in bringing forth new witneſſes. We have ſcarce read of more ſudden converſions to Chriſtianity, though indeed more numerous, by the Preaching of the Word, than by the ſhedding the blood of Chriſtians. Eminent Profeſſors have ſprung out of the Martyrs Aſhes. The ſtorms have been ſo far from deſtroying her, that it hath been the occaſion of ſpreading her Tents in a larger ground. Saul's winnowing the Church, blew away ſome of the Corn to take rooting in other places, Acts 8. 3, 4. Like ſeeds of Plants blown away by the wind, which have riſen & brought forth their kind in another ſoil; and it is no more than hath been predicted, Dan. 12. 1, 4. Such a time of trouble that never was ſince there was a Nation, ſhould be the time when many ſhould run to and fro, and knowledg ſhould be increaſed. While other Societies increaſe by perſecuting their Enemies, this increaſeth by being perſecuted her ſelf. It grows as a Vine, Hoſ. 14. 7. Though it be cut, the cutting hath contributed to its thriving. This Roſe-buſh hath not only ſtood in the wind, which hath rooted up other Oaks, but the fragrancy of it hath been carried by that wind to places at a greater diſtance. When Antiochus commanded all the Books of the Scripture in the hands of any to be burned, they were not only preſerved, but preſently after appeared out of their hidden places, as they were tranſlated into the Greek Tongue, the Language then moſt known in the world, and made publick to other Nations. Truth hath been often rendred by ſuch proceedings more clear and glorious. The perſecution of Sion's Head, the Captain of our Salvation, to death, was the occaſion of the diſcovery of the Goſpel to the whole world; he was the great ſeed, that being caſt into the ground became ſo fruitful, as to ſpread his branches in all corners of the Earth, Joh. 12. 24. And that perſecution which I ſuppoſe remains yet to be acted, and which will be the ſmarteſt, ſhall be ſucceeded by the cleareſt eruption of Goſpel-light, wherein the Goſpel ſhall recover its ancient and primitive glory. The ſlaying of the witneſſes ſhall end in an Evangelical ſucceſs, Rev. 11. 9, 10, &c. The world ſhall give glory to the God of Heaven, v. 13. The Kingdoms of the world ſhall become the Kingdoms of Chriſt, v. 15. Chriſt ſhall more illuſtriouſly reign, v. 17. The Temple of God ſhall be opened in Heaven, v. 19. The ſpiritual Iſrael, as well as the national, the Antitype as well as the Type, have multiplied under oppreſſion*; and, like an arched Building, ſtood firmer by all the weights that have been deſigned to cruſh her.

* Decay of Chriſtian Piety, p. 23.

(2.) She has often been Refin'd by the moſt violent perſecutions of her Enemies.

She hath not only ſurviv'd the flames that have been kindled againſt her, but as refin'd Gold come out more beautiful from the furnace, left her droſs behind her, and hath been wrought into a more beautiful frame by the hand of her great Artificer; like the ſand upon the ſea ſhore, ſhe hath not only broke the force of the waves, but been aſſiſted by them to diſcharge her filth, and been waſhed more clean by thoſe waves that ruſht in to drown her. She hath been more conformed to the image of her head, and made fitter to glorify God here, and to enter into the glory of God hereafter. The Church is to caſt forth her roots like Lebanon, Hoſ. 14. 5. The Cedar by its ſhakings grows up more in beauty as well as ſtrength, and the torch by its knocks burns the clearer. Though the number of her children might ſome times decreaſe through fear, yet her true Off-ſpring that have remained, have increaſed in their zeal, courage, and love to God. Apoſtates themſelves have proved refiners of them that they have deſerted *. The Corn is the purer by the ſeparation of the chaff. Thus hath ſhe grown purer by flames, and ſounder by batteries.

* Dan. 11. 35. And ſome of them of underſtanding ſhall fall to try them, and to purge and make them white.

4. When ſhe has ſeemed to be forlorn and dead, God has reſtored her. When Iſrael was at the loweſt, a decree iſſued out in Ægypt to deſtroy her males and root out her ſeed, deliverance began to dawn; and when a knife was at her throat at the red ſea, and ſcarce a valiant believer found among a multitude of deſpairers, God turned the back of the knife to his Iſrael, and the edge to the throat of the enemies. When the whole Church as well as the whole world ſeemed to be at its laſt gaſp, God preſerved a Noah as a ſpark to kindle a new world and a new Church by. When Jeruſalem was ſackt, the City deſtroyed, the people diſperſed into ſeveral parts of the Babyloniſh Empire without any humane probability of ever being gathered again into one body; yet ſhe was preſerved, reſtored, recollected, brought out of the ſepulchre, reſetled in her ancient ſoyl and recovered her beauty, which can be ſaid of no other ſociety in the world but this; whoſe deliverance and reſtauration hung not upon the will and policy of man, but upon the Word of God, who had limited their captivity to ſeventy years, and promiſed a reſtauration. The bleſſing of God to Abraham and Sarah is ſet out as a ground of faith and comfort for the Churches reſtauration and increaſe, Iſa. 51. 1, 2, 3. He will comfort Sion and comfort all her waſt places and make her wilderneſs like Eden, and her deſert like the garden of God, that joy and gladneſs may be found therein; as well as he did enliven the dead body of Abraham and the barren womb of Sarah. When the Church hath been ſo low, that men have deſpaired of ſeeing any more of her than her aſhes, God hath produced, a new remnant, he hath reſerv'd a tenth to return, Iſ. 6. 13. and from the hidden womb of the earth brought forth a new ſucceſſion by the vigorous influence of the Sun of righteouſneſs. And after the laſt attempt and ſucceſs of the antichriſtian ſtate, when they are jolly and merry at the Churches funeral, Revel. 11. 10. they ſhall ſoon be amaz'd at her reſurrection, v. 11. as much as the high prieſts were at the reſurrection of Chriſt. For the Church can no more lye in the grave than her head, the Myſtical Body no more than the Natural; his reſurrection was an earneſt of this, and this the accompliſhment of that; little difference in the time of their grave-ſtate; three days the Natural Body lay, three days and an half only the Myſtical ſhall lye before a full revival.

5. God never wanted inſtruments for his Church in the due ſeaſon. If Abel be butcher'd by Cain, God will raiſe up Seth in his place, to bring men to a publick form of worſhip, Gen. 4. 26. If Nebuchadnezzar be the ax to hew down Jeruſalem, Cyrus ſhall be the inſtrument to build her up; when his time is come he will not want an Ezra and Nehemiah to rear her walls, nor be wanting to them to inſpire them with courage, and aſſiſt their labour in ſpite of the adverſaries that would give check-mate to the work If Stephen be ſtoned by the Jews, he will cull out Paul an abetter of that murder to be a preacher of the Goſpel, and he that was all fire againſt it, ſhall become as great a flame for the propagation of it; one Phenix ſhall ariſe out of the aſhes of another. When Arrianiſm, like a deluge overflowed the world, the Church wanted not an Athanaſius to ſtand in the gap, and be a Champion for the truth of the Deity of Chriſt. When enemies riſe up againſt the Church from all quarters to afflict it, God raiſed others from all quarters to defend it, Zach. 1. 19,20. Yea thoſe that have been the inſtruments to ſupport the Antichriſtian ſtate againſt her, by giving their power and ſtrength to the beaſt, ſhall turn their arms againſt that which they ſupported, to make her deſolate, eat her fleſh and burn her with fire, Rev. 17.12,13,16. 'Tis the ſame Chriſt that is King in his Church, and the Spirit is not diſpoſſeſſed of his office to furniſh men with gifts for the defence and encreaſe of it; he is ſtill a ſpirit of government in Magiſtrates, and the ſpirit of fire in Miniſters for the Churches intereſt. Now ſince the Church hath maintained its ſtanding longer than any other Empire, & that in the midſt of its enemies, and hath been both encreated and refin'd by the violences uſed againſt her, ſince ſhe hath been ſo often reſtor'd, and never wanted inſtruments for the rearing and protecting her, who can doubt whether the higheſt hath not, and whether the higheſt will not ſtill eſtabliſh her, and cover her with his mighty wings?

III. 3. The 3d thing. Why it muſt needs be ſo?

1. 'Tis neceſſary for the honour of God. Thoſe Societies may moulder away, and thoſe Religions grow feeble which have drawn their birth from the wiſdom of man, and been ſeeded by the force of man; but a divine work muſt needs have a divine eſtabliſhment. Tis ſo,

(1.) If you regard it as his main deſign in the Creation of the world. Can we think God made the world for the worlds ſake, that he pitch'd tabernacles here for a few creatures, that could ſpell from all his works but a few and little letters of his name? Could the bare creation ſhew to man ſo much as his back parts? The moſt glorious perfections of his Nature could never be viſible in a handful of creatures, though never ſo glorious, no nor in multitudes of worlds of a more beautiful aſpect, without the diſcovery of the Goſpel, and the ſetling a Goſpel Church. How ſhould we have known his patience, been inſtructed in his mercy, have had any ſenſe of his grace, or underſtood the depths of his wiſdom or heard the voice of the bowels of his love, ſo as they are linkt together in his nature? If God created the world for his glory, he created it for his higheſt glory; a bare creation without a redeemed company of creatures, could never have given us a proſpect of the great glory of his Nature, nor have anſwered the end of God, which was the manifeſtation of his perfections. His wiſdom broke out in the frame of all creatures giving them life and motion; but his eye, when he made the world, was upon the manifeſtation of a greater wiſdom which then lay hid in his boſom, and was not to be diſcovered but in the publiſhing the Goſpel. Epheſ. 3. 9. 10. The wiſdom that broke out in the creation, was but a ſcaffold, whereon in time his wiſdom in the glory of a Church peculiar to himſelf ſhould appear. All things were created for Chriſt as well as by him, for him and his glory as Mediator and as Head of the Church, and therefore for the glory of his body. And his end in ſending Chriſt was to gather all things together in him; thoſe things which are in Heaven as well as thoſe which are on earth, Eph. 1. 10. And in order to that end he *works all things. This counſel and will of appointing Chriſt was the ſpring and rule of all his works, and therefore of creation, as well as the reſt ſucceeding it. He that would upon occaſion give the richeſt parts of the world for the ranſom of Sion, as Ægypt Æthiopia Seba, Iſa. 23.43. may well be thought to create thoſe and other nations to lay a foundation for her. We know that ſoon after the Creation the reſt of God was diſturbed by the entrance of ſin, which could not come unexpected, unforeſeen and unpermitted. There had not then been any ground of rejoycing in the habitable parts of the earth, Prov. 8. 31. if he had not deſigned ſomething elſe. But he provided in his counſel another reſt, and in order to that ſuffered this firſt reſt in the bare creation to be ſpoyl'd; Sion he choſe; and Sion he deſired as his reſt for ever wherein he would dwell, Pſa. 132. 13,14. The end of God in creation was not certainly only to make a Sun of Stars, an earth bedeckt with plants, and man a rational creature, only to contemplate theſe works, but to render him the acknowledgments of his power and wiſdom*: As a Limner lays his chief deſign in the midſt of the cloth, and fills the void places with many other fancies to beautify and ſet off his work, but thoſe were not in his firſt intention, but his main deſign was the draught, in the middle, ſurrounded with the reſt. Now when man by ſin had made himſelf uncapable of performing the work he had to do, God orders things ſo as to have a reſt, to have a people to acknowledge him. Hence perhaps the forming of ſuch a people is called by the term of a new creation, not only as it is an act of creative power, but as it was the chief deſign of the exerting his power in the creation of the world. And ſhall the chief of his counſel be the conqueſt & triumph of Satan? Shall he at the cloſing up of the world be defeated of his main contrivance? Surely if there were a greater oppoſition to Sion than ever there was, he would exert a greater ſtrength than ever he did, not to be croſt in his principal aim.

(2.) *As he hath been the Author and Builder of Sion. Great Kings have a particular care of the Cities they have founded for the honour and preſervation of their Name, and a teſtimony of their Magnificence; with what choice Priviledges do they uſe to endow them? with what ſtrong Garriſons do they uſe to ſecure them in time of danger? And ſhall not the Great God perpetuate that which he hath form'd for his glory, to which he hath given a peculiar denomination of the City of God ? Nebuchadnezzar* cannot be more induſtrious to enrich Babylon, which he had built by the might of his Power, than God will be to perpetuate

Sion

Sion, which he hath built for the honour of his Majesty. God was the Architect of this City, and gave the Model. Christ was the Builder of this City, and rais'd the Structure *. God laid the Platform of all things, much more of that which is dearer to him than all things: He laid the Foundation of it by his Son; whereas the Jewish Synagogue was form'd by the Ministry of Moses; he hath poured upon her greater Treasures of knowledg, a fuller measure of the Spirit than he did before, that the knowledg of precedent Ages was nothing in comparison of that which he lighted in the Gospel Sion, in the fulness of time. The Spirit hath form'd the Church in the womb of the world, as he form'd Christ in the womb of the Virgin. The natural and the mystical Body of the Son of God have the same Author and Original; not a stone fitted to be a part in composing this Temple, but was culled out, and polisht by God, 1 Pet. 3. 5. He that laid the corner stone, fixeth the lively stones to become a spiritual house. Are built; not built themselves; 'tis his house, because he built it, as well as his house because he dwells in it, and rules it as the Master of the Family. Though the whole Fabrick of Nature is God's work, yet the Church is peculiarly, and by way of distinction called his work *; and every stone in it is called his Jewel *, made so by his Power, in working a real change; for by nature they were as unfit as the common Pebbles of the Earth. He is therefore peculiarly called the Creator of Israel, Isa. 43. 15. As he hath maintained a Creation revolted from him, notwithstanding all the provoking sins of men; so he will maintain a Creation dear to him, notwithstanding all the bloody contrivances of men. Sion's Inheritance is secured, because 'tis a branch of God's planting, Isa. 60. 21. Things are preserv'd by the same means whereby they are first setled. Is it not then for the honour of God to be the Establisherof that by the Power of his might, whereof he hath been the Founder by the strength of his Arm? He made not use of the Riches, Power and Wisdom of the World, to lay the Foundation of Sion; but as the Jews, he wrought as it were with a Trowel in one hand, and a Sword in the other, and erected her Walls against the force and policy of Hell and Earth; and as he founded it without worldly advantages, and against the stream of corrupt Nature, he knows how to preserve it when the wit and strength of the World are contrary to it. It would be too low a conceit of the Wisdom and Power of God, to imagine that he should undertake so great a work, to be baffled in the end he designed to himself: His Wisdom is as much concerned in honour to work wonders for the preservation of Sion, as his Power was imployed at first miraculously, to lay the first corner stone of her.

* Heb. 3. 3, 4. He, i.e. Christ, built the house, and he that built all things is God.

* Hab. 3. 2. Revive thy work.
* Mal. 3. 17. My Jewels.

(3.) As he hath been the preserver and inlarger of her to this day. Men think themselves concerned in honour to perfect those which they call their creatures, and often regard one act of kindness as an engagement upon them to successive acts of the like nature. 'Tis not for the honour of any man to stand by a friend a long time, and to enjoy the glory of assisting him, and desert him at the last pinch. God set up the Church after the fall in Adam's Family, rather than create a new world to create a new Church; he raised up Seth to propagate it, when Abel was taken off by the bloody hands of his Brother; he preserv'd it in Noah's Family, in the midst of a corrupted and degenerate world, and settled it upon the Foundation of the Gospel in both; Upon the first promise in the Family of Adam, Gen. 3. 15. Upon the sweet-smelling Sacrifice offered by Noah, Gen. 8. 20, 21, 22. Not upon the Symbol or Type, the blood of the beasts, but upon the thing signified by it; and the preservation of the world promised after that Sacrifice, was chiefly in order to the preservation of a Church in it, as the Creation of the world was in order to the erecting it; and therefore the Rain-bow settled then as a sign of the Covenant, for the worlds preservation from a Flood of Waters, is made the sign of the Everlasting Covenant of Peace, both in Ezekiel *, and in the Revelation *, as a sign he would preserve his Church from the multitude of Waters, from the Rage of the People, signified by Waters in the Prophetick part of Scripture, and from the Floods that the Devil should cast out against her. And thence it is that this Covenant of her Establishment is compared with that Covenant God swore to Noah, and the Faith of the Church strengthened by reflection upon that, Isa. 54. 9. After this settling it in Noah, he fixed it in Abraham, and cleared up the Promise of the Messiah, with a greater evidence than to the Ages before: He multiplied it in the fleshly Israel, and enlarged the bounds of it to a whole Nation. After that, he takes away the partition wall, and spreads her Confines to the possession of the Gentiles, that the Sons of Japhet might dwell in the Tents of Shem, according to his Promise, Gen. 9 27. out of the forelorn Gentiles, as stupid as stocks and stones, he raiseth up Children, a great posterity to Abraham. Those that he imployed in the erecting Sion, and establishing the Law that went out from her in the rubbish of the Gentiles, he struck off from all humane assistances, all strength and power in themselves, when he commanded them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait there for a power from on high, before they ventured to be Witnesses to him, and publish his Name, not only in the uttermost parts of the Earth, but in Jerusalem, the City where they were to abide, or in any part of Judæa, Acts 1. 4, 8. They were not to speak a word of him in their own strength, or in any strength less than a Power from Heaven, which was to be given them by the sending the Spirit: and this he calls the promise of the Father; as signifying his purpose to enlarge his Church as well as build it at the first, by himself and his own power. 'Tis this the promise of the Father our Saviour there pitches their faith upon, and 'tis this our faith should be established in in all conditions of the Church. Now

* Ezek. 1. 28.
* Rev. 4. 3.

Now hath God thus rear'd up a Church out of the aſhes of mans original Apoſtacy, ſetled it among the murmuring and ungrateful Iſraelites that induſtriouſly longed for the Garlick and Onions of Ægypt, as weary of the greatneſs of his mercy to them, and propagated it to the Idolatrous Gentiles fill'd with all unrighteouſneſs, as bad as bad could be, as is deſcribed, Rom. 1. 29, 30, 31? To what purpoſe was the enlarging the Churches Patent, if he did intend the footſteps of her ſhould ever be rooted out of the world? He pickt out the weakeſt, pooreſt perſons as the matter of it, that he might ſhew his own honour in preſerving it: he hath yet ſupported her all the while ſhe hath carryed the croſs of her Lord: he hath ſent his ſpirit to frame a ſucceſſion of new materials for her: how fruitleſs would all this be, if he ſhould let Hell waſte the Temple erected for Heaven? What? did he gather and enlarge the Church only to make it a richer conqueſt, and a fatter morſel for the Devil? How vain would his former kindneſs appear, if he ſhould let it utterly ſink as long as the world endures? It cannot be imagin'd with any ſemblance of reaſon, that God hath taken all this care about the nurſing and growth of the Church from ſmall beginnings, to let his darling be a prey to the mouth of Lyons, and be of no other uſe than to fatten his enemies.

(4.) In regard of the coſt and pains he hath been at about Sion. Did the creation of the world ever coſt him ſo much? Was there one tear, one groan, one ſigh, much leſs the blood of the Son of God expended in laying the foundation of it? When the matter of it was without form and void, the beauty of it was not wrought with a waſhing with blood. When God eſtabliſhed the clouds above, and ſtrengthn'd the foundations of the deep, when he gave the ſea his decree, and appointed the foundations of the earth, the Son of God was by him rejoicing in the habitable parts of the earth and his delights were among the ſons of men, Prov. 8. 28, 29, 31. Not bleeding and dying. But this he muſt do, he muſt take humane nature, be bruiſed in his heel by the ſerpent, and be a Sacrifice himſelf, make an atonement for ſin, before a ſtone for the building of ſpiritual Sion could be fram'd and laid.

What pains have been taken alſo in the effecting it? The birth of the Church was a work of greater power than the fabrick of the world; a few words went to the rearing of that; in the revolution of ſix days it was ſet upon its feet: but many a year was God in travel before Sion was brought forth; there was an enemy as potent as Hell to deal with in ſetting it in Adams family after mans Apoſtacy: The corrupt nature, that had then got the poſſeſſion of the world, to conteſt with. The world muſt be drowned to bring it to a ſecond nativity and eſtabliſhment in Noah. The forming the Church of the Jews was not without ſome pangs of nature; what ſigns and wonders, and great terrours were wrought in its bringing forth out of Ægypt, and ſtriking off the chains of her Captivity? Deut. 4. 34. What fire, blackneſs, darkneſs, tempeſt, that made a convulſion in the Souls of thoſe that were to be her materials? Heb. 12. 18, 19. And the bringing forth the Gentile Church, and enlarging the cords and ſtakes of Sion, was preceded by the darkening the Sun, the trembling of the Earth, the opening of the Graves, the ſuffering of that which was deareſt to God himſelf.

No Power was ever employed ſo ſignally in the Affairs of any worldly concern, as in the ſettlement of Sion. The devouring waves of the Red Sea have been made her Bulwarks, and the Sand, the Grave of her Enemies, hath been a path for her paſſage. The Sun hath forgotten his natural Race, to gaze upon her Victories, Joſh. 10. 13. Angels have been commiſſioned to be her Champions, and fight her Battels, 2 King. 19. 35. The whole Hoſt of Heaven have been arrayed to fight for Sion on Earth. The mercileſs nature of the fire hath been curb'd, to preſerve her children, when ſhe ſeemed to be reduced to a ſmall number; and the mouths of hunger-ſtarv'd Lions have been bridled for the ſame purpoſe, Dan. 6. 22. The proudeſt Enemies to her have been vanquiſht by Frogs, and Lice; and Tyrants, that would lay their hands upon her, have been made to their diſgrace a living Banquet for Worms the vileſt creatures, Act. 12. 23.

And indeed, after the malice of the Devil had uſurpt God's right in the Creation, and had drawn the chiefeſt of his ſublunary creatures into an Apoſtacy with himſelf, no leſs than an Infinite Power could be engaged againſt the greateſt of created Powers, if God would not forego his own honour in ſuffering himſelf to be deprived of the fruit of his works. No leſs than Infinite Power could erect a Church in the world; that God might have the fruit of his Creation, he ordered this Power to appear, ſtruck down the Gates of Hell, ſent his Son to reſcue his Honour, and his Spirit to poliſh ſtones for his Temple. Every one that is fitted for this Building, had Almightineſs at work with him before he was form'd, Eph. 1. 19, 20. Every ſtone was hewed by the Spirit, and the Image of God was imprinted by a Divine Efficacy. Shall the fruit of ſo much Power, and the mark of his own Image, want an eſtabliſhment, God would ſeem to be careleſs of the Treaſures of his own Nature, wherewith he hath endow'd her. Shall all this coſt and pains be to no purpoſe? Were the Gates of Hell taken down to be ſet up again more ſtrongly? and the chargeable Counſels of God to be puft away by the breath of Satan? Doth it conſiſt with his Wiſdom to let Sion fall out of his hands into the power of her old Oppreſſor? Men are more deſirous to preſerve the Eſtate they have gotten by ſweat, than that which is left them by Inheritance; and are moſt careful in ſettling that which hath coſt them more Treaſure, and more Labour. Jacob ſets a value upon the Portion he got with his Sword and

Bow,

Bow, Gen. 48. 22. No leſs will God upon that Sion he hath wreſted out of the world by the Might of his Arm.

(5.) In regard of Faithfulneſs: His Veracity is ingaged.

[1.] In regard of Faithfulneſs to Chriſt the Head. The Spirit was promiſed to Chriſt, Act. 2. 33. Having received the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, i. e. the Holy Ghoſt promiſed to him by the Father: He received that which was promiſed; his receiving it from God implyed the Spirit's being promiſed to him by God. To what end was this Spirit given him, and ſent by him? To convince the world of righteouſneſs, John 16. 10. an effect neceſſary to the building Sion. For this end he received it, for this end therefore it was promiſed to him. The promiſe would be vain, the performance of the promiſe, in the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, would be to no purpoſe, if the end for which he was promiſed, and for which he was ſent, were not perform'd, if there ſhould not be a perpetual number convinced of, and imbracing that righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which hath been manifeſted by his going to the Father.

God alſo promiſed him a great poſterity after his making his ſoul an offering for ſin, Iſa. 53. 10. 11. A ſeed that he ſhould ſee, therefore ſtable and perpetual ‖, becauſe always viſible to him. God pawn'd his word upon the condition of his death; the condition was performed to the full ſatisfactionof God: his Truth therefore hath no evaſion, no plea to deny the performance of the promiſe in raiſing up a multitude of believers in the world, and ſuch a multitude as ſhall always be ſeen with pleaſure by him, as good, and ſound children and the travel of the mothers womb, are by the parents. The truth of God is oblig'd by Chriſt's exact performance of the condition, as well as by the particular reſpect he hath to the glory of it; it was for the Church Chriſt gave himſelf, Eph. 5. 25. 'Tis neceſſary therefore that God ſhould preſerve and eſtabliſh a Church for him to the end of the world; that Chriſt might not by any default of his Father, loſe the end and deſign of his death, there ſhall be a generation of believers, a little ſeed lying in the midſt of all the chaff; ſo God promiſed *: His name ſhall be propagated in a perpetual birth of Children, it ſhall be found while the Sun in the Heaven keeps its ſtation.

‖ A poſterity was to follow his Sacrifice, his Croſs was to give them being, and his Blood was to give them life.

* Pſal. 72. 17. His name ſhall be continued as long as the world. ינון

(2.) In regard of faithfulneſs to the Church it ſelf. How doth the word ſparkle with promiſes to Sion in all her concerns? He hath promiſed an indiſſolvable marriage, the fixing a knot that ſhall never be untied *. A marriage, that ſhall never end in widdow-hood, ſo that Judgment, righteouſneſs, loving kindneſs, mercy, faithfulneſs muſt firſt fail, before the Church meet with an entire diſſolution, i. e. God and the glorious perfections of his nature ſhall fail, before the Church be forſaken, and left to her enemies. She is no leſs aſſur'd of continual ſupplies and nouriſhment, and that by no meaner a hand than that of God himſelf, Iſa. 27. 3. I the Lord do keep it, I will water it every moment, I will keep it night and day. (Nor a meaner dew than himſelf, Hoſ. 14. 5.) Alſo without the failing her a minute; he would water her with doctrine to preſerve her verdure and increaſe her growth. He would be her Guardian night and day, in the darkneſs of adverſity, in the ſunſhine of proſperity; ſo that Satan ſhould not outwit, nor the craft and ſubtilty of hereticks waſte her; for it refers to v. 1. wherein God promiſeth her to puniſh the piercing Serpent, the crooked Serpent, that by various windings and turnings inſinuates himſelf to the deſtruction of men. And he adds v. 4. Fury is not in me, he lays by his anger againſt her, as conſidered in apoſtate nature; the fury of Hell ſhall not prevail where the anger of God is pacified, but her enemies ſhall be as bryars and thorns before him. He hath a conſuming fury for her enemies, though he hath none for his vineyard. Protection is in no leſs meaſure promiſed, and that not a temporary one, nor a bare defence, but with the ruin of her enemies, and treading them down, as ſtraw is trodden down for the Dunghil, Iſa. 25. 10. In this mountain ſhall the hand of the Lord reſt. By hand is meant his power, and by reſt is meant the perpetual motion of it for her, and that againſt the moſt furious, malicious & powerful of her Enemies, Mat. 16. 18. againſt the gates of hell: againſt the wiſdom of Hell, gates being the ſeat of councel, againſt the cenſures and ſentences of Hell, gates being the place of judicature, againſt the arms of Hell, gates being the place of ſtrength & guards. When Chriſt ſecures againſt Hell, he ſecures againſt all that receive their commiſſion from Hell; neither Hell it ſelf, nor the inſtruments edg'd and envenomed by Hell, ſhall prevail againſt her; ſhe is ſecur'd for her aſſemblies in one part or other, when they gather together to hear the Law, and to ſacrifice; And I that am the Lord thy God, from the Land of Ægypt, will yet make thee to dwell in tabernacles, as in the days of Solemn feaſts, Hoſ. 12. 9. 'tis a promiſe to the Church, it was never yet, nor appears like to be performed to the ten tribes as a Nation, but to their Poſterity as ſwallowed up in, & embodied with the Gentiles. The conqueſt of her enemies is ſecur'd to her, Pſ. 110. 1. The promiſe is made to Chriſt of making his enemies his footſtool: But made to him as Davids Lord, and conſequently as the Lord of his people, as King in Sion: and therefore made to the whole body of his loyal ſubjects. And, all thoſe things are of little comfort without duration and ſtability, which is alſo ſecur'd to her, Hoſ. 6. 3. His going forth, i. e. the going forth of God in the Church, is prepared as the morning. נכון Stable; His appearance for her, and in her, is as certain as the dawning of the morning light at the appointed hour. All the clouds which threaten a perpetual night, cannot hinder it, all the workers of darkneſs cannot prevent it; the morning will dawn whether they will or no. Her duration is compared to the moſt durable things, to that of the Cedar the moſt laſting of all plants. Three times it is compared to Lebanon in the promiſe, Hoſ. 14 5, 6, 7. The Cedar never rots, worms eat it not. 'Tis not only free from putrifaction it ſelf, but the juyce of it preſerves other things. Numa's Books *, though of paper, yet dipt in the juyce of Cedar, remained without corruption in the ground 500 years. How ſhall that God who always remembers every thing, yea the meaneſt of his creatures, forget his own variety of expreſſions and multiplyed promiſes concerning his Sion?

* Hoſ. 2. 19. I will betroth thee unto me for ever, and that in judgment, righteouſneſs, loving kindneſs, mercy, faithfulneſs.

* Sanct. in loc.

(6.) In regard, 'tis the ſeat of his glory. 'Tis the branch of his planting, the work of his hands, that he might be glorified, Iſa. 60. 21. His glory would have a bruſh, if Sion ſhould ſink to ruin. He ſows her for himſelf, Hoſ. 2. 23. ſpeaking of the Church in the time of the Goſpel, not to the Devil, to ſin, to the world, but to his own glory. As husbandmen ſow their Fields for their own uſe, to reap from them a fruitful crop; and therefore till the Harveſt be in, they take care to make up the breaches, and preſerve them from the Incurſions of beaſts. Though God hath an objective glory from all creatures, yet he hath an active glory only from the Church. 'Tis Iſrael, the houſe of Aaron, and thoſe that fear the Lord, that the Pſalmiſt calls upon to render God the praiſe of the eternity of his mercy, Pſal. 118. 2, 3, 4. He forbids the prophane and diſobedient world to take his Covenant in their mouth, Pſal. 50. 16. None do, none can truly honour and acknowledg him, but the Church; therefore the Apoſtle in his Doxology appropriates the glory that is to be given to God as the object, to the Church as the ſubject, Epheſ. 3. 21. Unto him be glory in the Church by Jeſus Chriſt throughout all Ages, world without end. So ſolemn a wiſh from ſo great an Apoſtle, that it ſhould be, amounts to a certainty that it will be. There cannot be a glory to God in the Church throughout all Ages, without the continuance of the Church in all Ages. God will have a revenue of glory paid him during the continuance of the world; there ſhall therefore be a ſtanding Church during the duration of the world; while he therefore expects a glory from the midſt of his People, he will be a wall of fire round about them, and keep Sion one where or other in a poſture to glorifie him. What is the Apoſtles motive to this glory? 'Tis not a remote power, ſuch as can act, but will not; but a power operative in the Church, in doing thoſe things for her, which ſhe could never ask, nor think for her ſelf *. God hath a greater glory from the Church, than he can have from the world; he therefore gives her more ſignal experiments of his Power, Wiſdom and Love, than to the reſt of the world. He had a glory from Angels, but only as Creator, not as Redeemer, till they were acquainted with his deſign, and were ſpeculators of his actions in gathering a Church in the world. The Church therefore was the original of the new glory, and praiſe, the Angels preſented to God. Glory in the Church by Chriſt. Muſculus thinks that is added to diſtinguiſh it from the Jewiſh Church, which was ſettled by the Miniſtry of Moſes; as much as to ſay, God had not ſo much glory by the Tabernacles of Jacob, as he hath by the Church as ſettled by Chriſt. Or, by Chriſt notes the manner of the preſenting our praiſe, and the ground of the acceptance of our praiſe. God accepts no glory but what is offered to him by the hand of Chriſt; and Chriſt preſents no glory but what is paid him by the Church. 'Tis the Church then, and the Goſpel-Church that preſerves the glory of God in the world. If the Church therefore ceaſeth, the glory of God in the world ceaſeth. But ſince God hath created all for his own glory, ſeparated a Church out of the world for his glory, appointed his Son the Head of it, that he might be glorified, his Church therefore is as dear to him as his glory, and dear to him in order to his glory; in eſtabliſhing it therefore he eſtabliſhes his own honour and name. It ſhall therefore remain in this world to glorifie him, afterwards in another to glorifie him, and be glorified by him.

* v. 20. Now to him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that works in us.

(7.) In regard that 'tis the object of his peculiar affection. Eſtabliſhment of a beloved object is inſeparable from a real affection. By this he ſecures the Spiritual Sion, or Goſpel-Church both from being forſaken by him, or made deſolate by her Enemies, becauſe ſhe was Hephzibah *, my delight, or, my will is in her, as if he had no will to any thing but what concern'd her and her ſafety: As men ingrave upon their Rings the Image of thoſe friends that are deareſt to them, and as the Jews in their Captivity engraved the Effigies of their City upon their Rings, to keep her in perpetual remembrance, ſo doth God engrave Sion upon the palms of his hands, Iſa. 49. 16. to which the Holy Ghoſt ſeems to allude. He ſo loves his Iſrael, that he who will be commanded by none, ſtoops to be commanded by them in things concerning his Sons, Iſa. 45. 10. Not only ask of me what you want, but command me in the things that are to come; the pleas of my promiſes of things to come, and your deſires to bring them forth as the work of my hand, ſhall be as powerful a motive to me, as a command from a Superiour is to an obedient Inferiour; for it is to things to come, ſuch things that God hath predicted, that he limits their asking, which he calls alſo here a commanding of him. There was a real love in the firſt choice; there is an intenſeneſs of love in the firſt attraction, Jer. 31. 3. I have loved thee with an everlaſting love, therefore with loving-kindneſs have I drawn thee. His love, which had a being from Eternity, is expreſt by words of more tenderneſs, when he comes to frame her; lovingkindneſs; as if his affection ſeemed to be increaſed, when he came to the execution of his Counſel. According to the vigour of his immutable Love will be the ſtrength of her immutable Eſtabliſhment. This promiſe is made, not to the Church in general, but to all the Families of the ſpiritual Iſrael, v. 1. Men are concern'd in honour for that upon which they have plac'd their affection. Shall there then be decays in the kindneſs of that God, whoſe glory it is to be immutable? Is it poſſible this Fountain ſhould be frozen in his breaſt? Was there not a love of good will to Sion to frame her, to pick out her materials when they lay like Swine in the confused mass, and dirty mire of a corrupt world? Is there not also a love of delight, since he hath refined and beautified her by imparting to her of his own comliness, Ezek. 16. 14. Is it likely this affection should sink into carelesness? And the fruit of so much love be dasht in peices? Can such tenderness be so unconcerned, as to let the apple of his eye be pluckt out? To be a lazy spectator of the pillage of his Jewels by the powers of Hell? to have the Center of his delight tost about at the pleasure of men and Devils? Shall a Mother be careless of her sucking Child? How then can that God, whose tenderness to the Church, cannot be equalled by the bowels of the most compassionate mother to her infants? Surely God is concerned in honour, to maintain against a feeble Devil, and a decrepit world, that which is the object of his almighty affection.

(8.) In regard of the natural weakness of the Church. No generous Prince but will think himself bound in honour to support the weaker subject: no tender parent but will acknowledg himself obliged in affection to take a greater care of the weaker than the stronger Child; The Gardiner adds props to the feebleſt plants, that are most exposed to the fury of the storms, and have least strength to withstand them. The powers of the world have always been the Churches enemies; the wise have set their reason, and the mighty their arms against her; the Devil, the God of this world, is so far from being her friend, that Sion hath been the only object of his spite. He contrives only floods to drown her, or mines to demolish her. Her own friends are often so darkened, or divided, that they cannot some times for Ignorance, and will not other times for peevishness hit upon, and use the right means for her preservation. 'Tis an honourable thing then for that God, who entitles himself the Father of the fatherless, to shew his own power and grace in her establishment. The fatherless condition of the Church is an argument she hath sometimes used to procure the assistance she wanted*. And the weakness of Jacob urged by the Prophet excited repentance in God and averted two Judgments which were threatned against that people, Amos. 7. 2, 3, 5, 6. 'Tis no mean motive to him to help the helpless, this opportunity he delights to take; when there was no man to help, no intercessor to plead, then his own arm brought Salvation. When he saw no defenders, but all ravagers, no Physicians, but all wounders, then should the Spirit of the Lord lift up a standard, Isa. 59. 16. 19.

* Hos. 14. 3. With thee the fatherless finds mercy.

To conclude, if Sion, the Gospel-Church, were not of as long a duration as the standing of the world, God would lose the honour of his creation, after the Devil by sin had made the creatures unuseful for those ends to which God had appointed them by his first institution. The wisdom of God had been blurred, the serpent would have Triumphed, the Kingdom of God had been dissolved, the enemy would have enjoy'd a remedileſs tyranny, had not God put his hand to the work, and erected a new Kingdom to himself out of the ruins of the fall. And since God was pleased to take this course rather than create a new world, and hath laid the foundation of a new Kingdom by drawing some out of that common rebellion, the humane nature was fallen into, and that he might do it with honour to himself, hath sent his Son upon that errand, by his blood to bring back man to God, and his spirit to make men fit for a Communion with him, and hath backt his affection to the Church with so much cost and pains for her welfare; If after all this God should desert his Church, the dishonour of Gods wisdom, the loss of the fruit of all his cost and pains, the weakness of his affection, or of his power to perform his promise, and the ruin of his glory intended by those methods, would be the issue, which would be attended with the triumph of his revolted creature, and greatest enemy. This would be, if God should cease picking out some men for his praise, and keeping up his name and royalty in the earth.

2. 'Tis for the exercise of the Offices of Christ that Sion should be established. He is Prophet, Priest, and King, which are all titles of relation. Prophet implies some to be instructed, a Priest some to offer for, and a King some to be ruled; put one relation, and you must necessarily put the other. If there were no Church preserv'd in the world, he would be a nominal Prophet without any disciples, a King without subjects, and a Priest without suppliants to be atoned by him, upon earth. Now Christ is the wonderfull Counsellour, the everlasting Father, and the Government is laid upon his Shoulders; to what end? to order and establish the Kingdom of God, Isa. 9. 6, 7. All the strength and vigor he had, as it was from God, so it was intended *for God. And the reason is, because, though God hath given up the administration of things to Christ, yet he hath not devested himself of his right, nor can; For God is the chief Lord, and the relation of creatures not ceasing, the relation of Lord and Creator cannot cease. And therefore since the right of God continues, the grant of the uttermost ends of the earth to be the inheritance & possession of Christ, includes not only a gift, but an Office, to preserve, protect, establish, and improve his possession for those ends for which he had the grant, and to prevent all that may impair it. As he had a right and strength, by the order of God to rear it, so he hath an Office and Power to establish it, as well as to erect it, and Christ is the same in all his offices yesterday, to day and for ever, Heb. 13. 8. The same in credit with God, in faithfulness to his Office, the vertue of his blood, the force of his arm, and compassions to bleeding Sion.

* Thou madest the Son of man strong for thy self, Psa. 80. 17.

(1.) 'Tis his part, as a Prophet, to establish it in Doctrine. 'Tis his part externally to raise his truth when it lyes gasping in the rubbish of errour, and refine his worship when it is daub'd with Superſtition and Idolatry. Internally to clear the underſtanding to know his truth, quicken the will to imbrace it, rivet the word in the conſcience, and enflame the affections to love and delight in it. Certainly the promiſe of the abiding of his Spirit implies the efficacy of his operation while he abides. He is to provide againſt the ſubtilty and rapine of foxlike Hereticks, that they ſpoil not the tender vine, Cant. 2. 15. And to furniſh the Church with gifts for the preſerving and increaſing her. The perpetual exerciſe of this prophetical office he promiſed them, when he gave the Apoſtles a Charter for his preſence to the end of the world, Mat. 28. 20. Which was in relation to their miniſtry and their office of teaching. Since he promiſed his preſence with his miniſtry to the end of the world, he will have a Church to the end of the world, to enjoy the benefit of that promiſe to be taught by them. It conſiſted not with the wiſdom or faithfulneſs of Chriſt to promiſe a perpetuity to that, if he knew it were to be cut ſhort before the end of the world. And this himſelf alſo aſſures the Church of in all its variety of ſtates, Revel 2. 1. Theſe things ſaith he that holds the ſeven Stars in his right hand, who walks in the midſt of the ſeven Golden Candleſticks. Not only ſeven Stars at one time, or ſeven Golden Candleſticks in being together, but in all the ſucceſſions of the Church to the conſummation of the world. And as he deſcribes himſelf by this title when he ſpeaks of the Church of Epheſus, which was the firſt ſtate of the Church, not only aſſuring her of his holding her Star, and walking by her Candleſtick, but all the reſt that were to follow, ſo he doth renew the ſame expreſſion in part when he ſpeaks of the Church of Sardis, which is the riſing of the Church from the Apoſtacy wherein it had been covered in the Thyatirian ſtate, Revel. 3. 1. Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven Stars. The ſeven ſpirits of God ſignifies the gifts for the building and perfecting the Church ſtill in the hand of Chriſt, which ſhould be in a more plentiful way poured out than for ſome time before, as they were in the firſt reformation. He is ſtill therefore as a Prophet walking in the Church in all ages. Not only in the firſt Foundation of it by the Apoſtles, but in the reformation of it, after it had been buried in Superſtition and Idolatry. And at the reſtauration of the Church in the world, there ſhall be a pure river of water as clear as Chriſtal, proceeding from the Throne of God and the Lamb, Revel. 22. 1. i. e. Pure doctrine without any mud and mixtures.

(2.) 'Tis his part as a Prieſt to eſtabliſh it in the favour of God, and look to the reparations of his Temple. The Church is his Temple. A Temple is the proper ſeat & the proper care of a Prieſt. He is a Prieſt ſtill upon his Throne, Zach. 6. 13. and that for ever. As he hath therefore ſome thing to offer, ſo he hath always ſome for whom he offers; who are they but his Church? His prayer on earth, John 17. was but a model or draught of his interceſſion in Heaven; one part of it is for preſervation of them through the truth of God, John 17. 17. The keeping up the Goſpel in the world in order to a ſanctification of ſome is the matter of his interceſſion, which is one part of his Prieſtly Office. And we cannot imagine his plea for his Church to be weaker on his throne, it being alſo a throne of grace, than it was for his enemies when he was upon a croſs of ſuffering. The compaſſions annext to his Prieſthood remain ſtill, Heb. 4. 15. If his office, be perpetual, the qualifications neceſſary to that office are as durable as the office it ſelf, as long as there is any object for their exerciſe. To what purpoſe are his compaſſions, if he ſhould not pity her for whom they were deſigned, and for whoſe behoof he was furniſht with them? He cannot be faithful to God in his office, if he be not merciful and tender to Sion in her diſtreſſes. He certainly pities her as he would himſelf, were it poſſible he ſhould be in an infirm condition. He muſt loſe his Soul before he can loſe his pity, and the Church muſt ceaſe to be his body, before he can ceaſe to be the object of his compaſſions He hath the ſame ſentiments now that he had when he called to Paul from Heaven, Act. 9. 4. It was not then, Why perſecuteſt thou mine, but why perſecuteſt thou me? Nor is it ſo now; as the relation continues the ſame, ſo doth the compaſſion, ſo do his ſentiments, ſo do his cares. To what purpoſe doth he as a Prieſt ſit upon a Throne of grace, if he did not ſhew grace to his Sion againſt the cruel deſigns of her enemies? As God pities us when he remembers our frame, Pſal 103. 13, 14. So no queſtion doth Chriſt, when he remembers Sions oppreſſions, as a diſtreſſed child is the object of the fathers pitty. Add to this, That ſince the death of Chriſt was one part of his Prieſtly performance, and that the virtue of his ſacrifice is as eternal as his Prieſt-hood, what a diſparagement would it be to him, and the virtue of his death, if ever the world while it ſtood, ſhould be void of the fruits of it? There can be no moment wherein it is not valid to expiate the ſins of ſome men, and therefore not a moment wherein the world ſhall be without a Sion, whoſe ſins are expiated by it. Should the ſtandar'd of Sion be ſnatcht away and torn by the powers of darkneſs, what would become of the glory, what would become of the virtue of the Redeemers death? Would God conſecrate him ſo ſolemnly by an oath to be a Prieſt, to ſo little purpoſe? How could it be for ever, if the execution of that office ſhould be interrupted by the ceſſation of a Church as long as the world ſtands upon its pillars? Would it not be an empty title, if the end of it were not performed? We cannot imagine the falling of Sion, but we muſt queſtion the merit of his death, the truth of his exaltation, the ſtrength of his interceſſion, the faithfulneſs of his office, and the ſincerity and candor of his compaſſions.

(3.) 'Tis his part as a King to eſtabliſh Sion in being, and govern her. The Prophets always teſtified teſtified, that of his Government there ſhould be no end. If the Church ſhould ceaſe for one moment in the world, what ſubjects would he have to govern here? Can he be a King without a Kingdom, or a governour without ſubjects, to bear a voluntary and ſincere witneſs to his name? If he be King in Sion, he will alſo have a Sion to own him, and a Sion to rule in; not only a conqueſt of the Serpentine brood and infernal powers was promiſed, but the total and perpetual victory, Gen. 3. 15. The ſeed of the woman was to bruiſe the Serpents head. When the head is bruiſed, there is no more wiſdom to guide, or force to Spirit the arm and the other members of the body It was a promiſe made not only of Chriſt to man, but of a compleat victory to Chriſt, that he ſhould outwit the Serpents wiſdom and utterly diſcomfit the Serpents power. If the conqueſt were not perfect and perpetual, it could not be called a ſpoiling of principalities and powers, as it is, Col. 2.15. but an interruption or temporary check, whence they might reſcue themſelves. He is therefore ſaid *to ſtill the enemy and the avenger, i. e. Make them utterly ſilent, not knowing what firm Counſels to take, or what ſucceſsful orders to give. And it being his end to deſtroy the works of the Devil; the deſtroying the works muſt be the root of the being and preſervation of the Church. Did Chriſt then riſe as a Conquerour out of the grave, and ſit down as King upon his throne, to let the Devil and the world run away with the fruits of his victory? Will he be ſo injurious to himſelf, as to let his Throne be overturned by his enemies? And to let the adverſary of Sion repoſſeſs himſelf of that, which he hath been ſo powerfully and ſucceſsfully ſtript of? Chriſt being King cannot be chaſed out of his Kingdom, nor wants power to keep it from being utterly waſted. To be the governour of Sion was as much in his firſt Commiſſion as to be her Redeemer *. Chriſt as King will never leave beating up the quarters of Hell, till he hath utterly routed their force, and made the partizans of it his footſtool, and thereby eſtabliſhed Sion beyond the fears of any tottering. Therefore when he ſpeaks of the Church of Smyrna, which was to have a ſore conflict with the Devil and feel the ſmart of him for 10 days, underſtanding thoſe 10 Ancient perſecutions of the Church, he aſſumes a new title for her encouragement, Revel. 2. 8. Theſe things ſaith the firſt and the laſt, which was dead and is alive. I was the firſt that liſted you and embodied you for the war, and I will be the laſt to bring up the rear; I was firſt in raiſing you, and I will be the laſt in preſerving you. Fear not the terror of thoſe perſecutions though they be to blood and death; I was uſed ſo, I was dead, but I am now alive, and I live for my Church, to behold her battles, to procure her victory, and to Crown thoſe that ſhall fall in the fight againſt her enemies. Chriſt in encouraging them to ſuffer for him, aſſures them of the ſecurity of a Church; the Devil ſhould not waſt the whole, but caſt ſome of them into priſon, not all, and that for their refining, v. 10. The Devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon that you may be tryed. Chriſt lives ſtill, and acts as King for the ſecurity of Sion, and preſerving a Generation to ſerve him, till the time comes that is promiſed, Rev. 22. 3. that there ſhall be no more curſe, but the Throne of God and of the Lamb ſhall be in it, and then his Servants ſhall ſerve him with a full ſecurity from all trouble.

3. The Foundation of Sion is ſure. 'Tis founded upon Chriſt the corner ſtone. Chriſt is called the Foundation, 1 Cor. 3. 11. The Apoſtles are the Foundation, Eph. 2. 20 Chriſt is the Foundation perſonally, the Apoſtles doctrinally; Chriſt meritoriouſly, the Apoſtles miniſterially; the Apoſtles in regard of the publication of the Doctrine, Chriſt in regard of the efficacy of the Doctrine, whereby the Church is eſtabliſhed.

1. The Church is ingrafted in Chriſt, united to him, one with him; the parts of it are reckoned as his *ſeed: As if they had ſprung out of his loins, as men naturally did from Adam's; that as Adam was the Foundation of their corruption, ſo ſhall Chriſt be the Foundation of their Reſtauration: They ſhall be looked upon as the Children of Chriſt, and Chriſt as their Father, and as Father and Children, legally counted one.

The Church is his own body, Eph. 5. 29, 30. In loving and eſtabliſhing the Church, he loves & eſtabliſheth himſelf. Whatſoever is implanted in nature as a perfection, is eminently in God. Now, ſince he hath twiſted with our natures, a care of our own bodies, this care muſt be much more in the nature of Chriſt, becauſe his Church is as nearly united to him, as our members to the fleſh and the bones; and he hath an higher affection to his myſtical, than we can have to our natural bodies. Chriſt will no leſs ſecure and perfect his own body, than a man would improve the beauty and ſtrength of his natural body, to preſerve it from wounds, from being mangled or ſcarrified, unleſs it be for the ſecurity of the whole. If he did not do it, it would be a hatred of his own fleſh, which never any man in his right wits was ever guilty of. The Eternity of Chriſt is made the Foundation of the Churches Eſtabliſhment, Pſal. 102. 27, 28. Thou art the Son, and thy years ſhall have no end. The Children of thy ſervants ſhall continue, and their ſeed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee. There could be no ſtrength in the Argument without union and communion with him: The Church is ſettled upon him as a Foundation, and therefore is of as long a duration as the Foundation upon which it ſtands; the conjunction is ſo ſtrait, that if one fails the other muſt; eſpecially ſince, as Chriſt is the head, the Church is his fulneſs, Eph. 1. 22, 23. Sion cannot be compleat but in him, and Chriſt cannot be compleat without her. A Foundation is of little uſe without a Superſtructure, a building falls not without a diſcredit to the Foundation upon which it ſtood. Sions compleatneſs depends upon the ſtrength of Chriſt, and Chriſts myſti-cal compleatneſs depends upon the ſtability of Sion, he will not leave himſelf an imperfect and empty head.

* Pſal. 22. 30. A ſeed ſhall ſerve him, it ſhall be counted to the Lord as a generation.

2. 'Tis founded upon the Covenant. Upon that which endures for ever, and ſhall ſurvive the Funeral of the whole world. Heaven and Earth ſhall paſs away, but the Church is founded upon that which ſhall not paſs away, 1 Pet. 1. 23. the Word of God, &c. Not ſuch a word as that whereby he brought forth light in the world, and form'd the Stars at the Creation; a word that engaged him not to the perpetuating of it *. This Covenant is more firm than the Pillars of Heaven, and the Foundations of the Earth. The Stars of Heaven ſhall diſſolve, the Sun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, the Elements ſhall change their order for confuſion: But the Church being founded upon an eternal and immutable Covenant, ſhall ſubſiſt in the midſt of the confuſions and flames of the world, Iſa. 54. 10. The Mountains ſhall depart, and the Hills be removed, but my Covenant of Peace ſhall not be removed. 'Tis more eſtabliſh'd than the world. The Apoſtle clearly intimates it in his commendation of Abraham's Faith, when he tells us, He looked for a City which hath foundations, by virtue of the promiſe of a numerous ſeed, Heb. 11. 9, 10. As if the world had no foundation in compariſon of the Church. 'Tis beyond the skill of Hell to raze up the foundation, and therefore impoſſible for it to beat down the ſuperſtructure. Adam fell under the ſtrength of the Serpents wit, but he could by no promiſe lay claim to ſtability, as the Church can by an immutable Covenant for her ſupport.

IV. The Uſe 1. Information.

1. If the Church hath a duration and ſtability, then Ordinances and Miniſtry are perpetual. Miniſters may be thruſt into corners, clapt up in priſon, hurried to their graves; but the Sepulchres of Miniſters are not the graves of the Miniſtry. A Miniſtry, and a Church, Ordinances and a Church, cannot be ſeparated; they run parallel together to the end of the world; for Sion cannot be ſuppoſed without Divine Officers, and Divine Inſtitutions; the one cannot be eſtabliſhed without the other. Chriſt walks in the midſt of the ſeven golden Candleſticks, Rev. 2. 1. in the ſeven States of the Church, to the end of the world *. As there are ſeven States of the Church, ſo there are ſeven Stars in the hand of Chriſt for all thoſe States; the Miniſtry have the ſame ſupport, the ſame Guardian as the Church her ſelf. What was in the Epheſian and Primitive State, is alſo in the Sardian State, the State of the Church riſing from corruption of Doctrine and Ordinances *. Chriſt hath ſtill Stars to ſhine, and ſeven Spirits to gift them; hath at preſent, not had; hath in the State we are, which ſeems to be the end of that Sardian State. 'Tis true, the Church is in a wilderneſs condition, and hath been ſo for above 1200 years; but hath ſhe yet ſeen her Funeral? No, ſhe hath a place for her reſidence, and food for her nouriſhment, and both provided for her by that God that fram'd her, by that God that ſtood by her in the pangs of her travel, and ſhelter'd her Man-child from the fury of her enemies *. They ſhould feed her; ſhe is not ſtarved in the deſert, ſhe hath Manna to comfort her, her Caterer to provide her food, and ſome to adminiſter the Banquet of the Word and Sacraments to her. For any Member of Sion to deny a Miniſtry, and deny Ordinances, and therefore to neglect them, is to conclude her dead in a grave, and not living, in a deſert, utterly famiſht, and not fed. Though there be a ſmoke in the Temple, a cloud and obſcurity, the Truths and Ordinances of God not ſo clear, ſo efficacious as they have been, as ſome underſtand, Rev. 15. & or as they ſhall be; yet there is a Temple ſtill. A ſmoke in the Temple ſuppoſeth a Temple ſtanding, and Ordinances in it: The obſcurity of a thing nulls not the being of it, nor a cloud upon the Sun the ſtability and motion of it. He that denies a Church, a Miniſtry, and Divine Ordinances in it, muſt firſt charge Chriſt with falſhood, when he promiſed to be with them to the end of the world. Mat. 28. 19, 20. Alway, even to the end of the world. Not to ſuſtain their particular perſons to the end of the world, but their Doctrine in a ſucceſſion of ſome, to teach and baptize by virtue of Authority from him; for to that doth the promiſe and command refer, and not unto the continuance of the Apoſtolical dignity, or of their extraordinary gifts of miracles, but the duration of their ſtanding work till the top-ſtone were laid, with the loud acclamations of grace, grace. The Church ſhall no more want a Miniſtry in the deſert, than ſhe wanted a Prophet in Babylon.

* I do not queſtion but that the whole is prophetical, it would not elſe be called Myſtery, as it is, Rev. 1. 20. were it meant of thoſe particular Churches.

* Rev. 3. 1. Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven ſpirits of God, and the ſeven Stars.

* Rev. 12. 6. And the woman fled into the wilderneſs, where ſhe hath a place prepared of God that they ſhould feed her there 1260 days.

2. The Doctrine of the eſtabliſhment of every member of Sion is clearly confirmed. He that eſtabliſheth Sion, counts up every man that was born in her, every Child of Sion is in the ſame ſtate, and under the ſame promiſe as Sion her ſelf. The promiſe of ſtability to Sion, is not to be underſtood of the firmneſs of her palaces but the duration of her inhabitants; as when God is ſaid to build a houſe, 'tis not to be underſtood of the rearing the walls, but increaſing the family. * Every renew'd man, every one truly born in Sion ſtands upon the ſame Foundation of the Covenant, hath the ſame Charter with Sion her ſelf, and therefore upon a ſurer ground than any particular ſociety of men in the world, Pſal. 125. 1. They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Sion, which cannot be remov'd, but abides for ever. He is upon a better Foundation of ſecurity than the Church of Epheſus or Smyrna, Pergamus or Sardis, which have loſt their footing, and their places know them no more. A believer injoys other priviledges with Sion, but the patent runs here for his ſtability in the favour of God, and runs high by removing all fears in the negative, Cannot be removed, and confirming all confidence in the affirmative, Abides for ever. No name writ upon Gods hand, no name

* Exod. 2. 21. God made them houſes, i.e. gave them children.

preſented

preſented on Chriſts breaſt ſhall be razed out, no fruit of his death ſhall be loſt, no Devil ſhall ſteal from him any part of his purchaſe. As he hath blood enough to redeem them, ſo he hath power enough to preſerve them; the ſame blood that is the cement of Sion, the ſame hand that built her, the ſame head that influenceth her, ſecures every one of her true born Children. They are all in the ſame poſture and upon the ſame Foundation with Sion her ſelf.

3. How great is the folly of Sions enemies! They Judg of her by the weakneſs of her worldly intereſt, and not by the Almightineſs of her Guardian. They ſtand againſt a God that in decreeing the ſtability of Sion decreed the ruine of her oppoſers, and can with as much eaſe effect it as reſolve it. The Stone, which is the Foundation of this Kingdom, ſhall break in pieces the Image of all worldly glory, the policy of all worldly wiſdom, and the force of all worldly power, Dan. 2. 35, 44, 45. It ſhall make the Mountains of the world as a level, and duſt underneath it. Chaff may as well ſtop the wind, and force it to another quarter; Stubble may as well quench the fury of the flames, as the Enemies of Sion be victorious over the God of Sion. As he hath a Fire in Sion to warm her; ſo he hath a Furnace in Jeruſalem to conſume her Enemies, Iſa. 31. 9. a Fire to burn his Peoples droſs, but a Furnace to diſſolve his Enemies force. Pharaoh is an Example to all Generations, to warn men not to ſtruggle with thoſe whom God reſolves to patronize; how did he further his own deſtruction by his hardneſs, and the deliverance of the oppreſſed by his fury? How often is the violence of her Enemies the occaſion of the manifeſtation of God's glory, and the ſetling Sion's ſecurity? Had not Pharaoh been ſo furious, God had not manifeſted the glory of his Power, nor his Iſrael enjoyed ſo miraculous a ſafety. 'Tis true, the Church is weak, but the Arm that holds her, is the ſtrongeſt in Heaven and Earth. Her outward Intereſt is ſmall, but her Intereſt is twiſted with that of her Lord. An Enemy ſhall find more miſchief from mud-walls, under the protection of a valiant Arm, than from ſtone-walls, under the guard of an Infant. How fooliſh is it for a man to think to break a Rock with his fiſt for hurting his ſhins, whereby he bruiſeth his hands, as well as his leggs? How fooliſh is it for men to beat the buſhes about a Lions Den, whereby they will be ſure to rouſe him? God dwells in Sion, from thence he roars, to the ſhaking of Heaven and Earth, the Powers of the world, when he will manifeſt himſelf to be the hope of his People, and the ſtrength of the Children of Iſrael, Joel 3. 16.

4. What a ground is here for prayer! This ſets an edg upon prayer. No petition can more comfortably, no petition can more confidently be put up, than for Sions eſtabliſhment. Prayers for particular Perſons, or for our ſelves may want ſucceſs, but ſupplications for Sion never miſcarry, they have the ſame Foundation for an anſwer, that Sion hath for her ſtability, viz. The promiſe of God; they are agreeable to that affection which ſhall never be removed from her: How believingly may we cry out, Be it unto Sion according to thy word? There is no fear of a repulſe; whatſoever God denies, he will not deny that for which he hath ſo often ingaged himſelf. It may be for the good of the Church, that ſo great a perſon as Paul ſhould lye in Chains, and his Fetters conduce to the furtherance of the Goſpel, Phil. 1. 12. But it can never be for the Intereſt of Sion, or for the Intereſt of Sion's God, that ſhe ſhould be cruſht between the teeth of the Lions, and that which he hath redeemed by the blood of his Son, be a prey to the Jaws of the Devil. God hath entitled Sion by the name of a City not forſaken, Iſa. 62. 12. And as we have his promiſe for her ſettlement, ſo we have his command for our earneſtneſs; verſ. 7. And give him no reſt, till he doth eſtabliſh Jeruſalem a praiſe in the whole Earth. And he preſcribes us to back that by our prayers, which he had promis'd, v. 1. For Jeruſalem's ſake I will not reſt till the righteouſneſs thereof go forth as brightneſs. Our deſires in this caſe are ſuited to his reſolves, and run in the ſame line with his immutable Decree; he will have no reſt in himſelf, nor he would have no reſt from us, till this be accompliſht. We cannot call upon God with a greater confidence for any thing, than for that Church that ſhall out-live the Funeral of the world, and ſurvive the frame of Nature that ſhall lie in Aſhes.

5. What a ſtrong ground is here for truſt! Look not ſo much upon the condition of Sion's Walls, as upon her Foundation; not upon her preſent poſture, as upon her promiſe-Charter; not upon her as a weak Vine, but under the hand of the Higheſt, as the Vine-dreſſer; look not upon the feebleneſs of the Flock, but upon the care of the Shepherd; nor upon the fierceneſs of the Lions, but upon the ſtrength and affection of her Guardian.

(1.) Let not our Faith reſt upon appearances. Fleſh will then make a wrong Judgment of God. Providences are various, and ſhould our Faith be guided only by them, it would have a livelineſs one moment, and faint the next. As the Promiſe is the ſtability of the Church, ſo it is only the ſtability of our Faith. The Authority of the Word is the Life of our Faith, and not the ſenſe of any particular Providence in the world. A Faith built upon protecting Providences is a ſenſitive Faith, a Faith built upon the Promiſe, is a ſpiritual Faith.

(2.) Yet the Experiences God hath given us hitherto of the continuance of the Church, may be called in to bear witneſs to the Truth of the Promiſe. He hath before conducted his Iſrael into Canaan, when Pharaoh meditated their utter ruine, or their continuance under his Chains; he fed them with Manna, and watered them with a Rock in a deſert, that afforded no earthly aſſiſtance. The preſerving the Vine could never be aſcribed to the Vine it ſelf, in which which there is no ſtrength; nor to the Foxes, in whom there is no pitty; but to the keeper of the vineyard. We have reaſon therefore to truſt God, but not at all to truſt man; Is it from man or from God that the Church hath ſubſiſted ſo long in the world, a little flock in the midſt of many Wolves, among enemies more numerous than her friends? What a ſmall number hath the Church had in any age to mate the multitude of her enemies, what wiſdom to countermine their policy, and what power to repel their force? The Church is not weaker now, than it hath been; the Sons of Sion were always Sheep; Sheep have not the ſtrength of Lyons to reſiſt, nor the ſwiftneſs of Eagles to fly away from danger; the danger cannot be greater than it hath been, there were always Dragons that ſpat out their venom, and Lyons that opened their mouths againſt her; the Devil never wanted diligence nor the world enmity to overturn her; could ſhe for one moment have ſubſiſted in the midſt of ſo many furies, had not God been her ſhield, and glory? Call to mind how often God hath healed her diſeaſes, and bound up her wounds. Let us reſt in that promiſe, which hath ſo often been made good by his power, which he hath in many ages diſplayed upon as great occaſions of danger as Sion can be in. Let us live believingly under his wings, and fear not our own weakneſs or our enemies ſtrength.

3. We have greater ground of confidence than the Church of Iſrael had. In the day of Iſraels trouble by Salmanaſſer, the Prophet comforts the Church in her anguiſh, by the conſideration of the Meſſiah who was to aſſume the Government, though many years after, Iſa. 8. 22. Iſa. 9. 1, 6. Shall a promiſe, that was to ſtay ſo many ages for performance, be a ground of truſt and confidence to a tottering Church then? And ſhall not the ſtaggering Church have more ground to reſt, ſince the Meſſiah is made the head of the Corner, and hath the Keys of Hell and death delivered to him? What a baſe thing is diſtruſt then againſt ſo many aſſurances of ſtability, and the experience of a multitude of ages? Graſp the promiſe, plead it earneſtly, ſhew God his written word which he hath ſent from Heaven, he never yet diſowned it, nor ever will. Methinks, the voice, God is able to deliver Sion, ſounds too much of diſtruſt. If we know no more than Gods power, we know not ſo much as the Devil doth; he knows his power, and he knows his promiſe. Let us therefore firſt eye the promiſe, which God loves, and the Devil fears, and then call in his power to back his word.

4. Regard not man. Too much eye upon him implies too little upon God, as if Gods Word were not enough to create and ſupport a confidence without the buttreſſes of ſecular ſtrength. All dependance on man is either upon a broken reed, that cannot ſupport it ſelf, or a piercing reed, that wounds inſtead of healing, Iſa. 36.6. 'Tis a diſhonour to God, and provokes him to lengthen a miſery and retard a deliverance. The nearer Sion comes to a final ſettlement, the more God will act by himſelf, either without inſtruments, or in a more ſignally ſpiriting Inſtruments, that himſelf ſhall be more viſible in them than themſelves. The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her. If he be the Higheſt he is fit to be truſted by us, if he will do it himſelf, it is fit we ſhould couple none with him. The nearer the time comes wherein God will appear himſelf, the more we ſhould depend upon him himſelf; the exerciſe of faith ſhould be ſtrongeſt, when the promiſe, the object of faith, is neareſt its Meridian. Let us be more careful to keep our faith from ſinking, and let God alone to keep his Church from ſinking.

Uſe 2. of Comfort. The Churches Patent is ſingular, the greateſt worldly Society could never ſhew the fellow of it. The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her. There is not ſuch a clauſe in the ſettlement of any nation. Why ſhould we be afraid then of the joynt conſpiracy of men or Devils? He that hath laid the Foundation, can, and will preſerve the Superſtructure, not only becauſe he formed it, but becauſe he hath promiſed it. When Chriſt would reveal to John the future condition, and conflicts of the Church to the end of the world, he appears like a conquerour with all the enſigns of authority and power about him, Revel. 1. 13, 14, 15, 16. He hath eyes like a flame to pierce his enemies, Feet like braſs to cruſh them, a two edged Sword out of his mouth, to pierce them; and this, while he is in the midſt of the ſeven Candleſticks; The ſeveral alterations and periods of the Church to the end of the world, to preſerve and cleanſe them.

1. Here is comfort in the confuſions and troubles of the world. The ſhaking of Heaven and Earth were the harbingers of the appearance of Chriſt for Redemption, and laying the corner ſtone of Sion, Hag. 2.7. The ſame methods will be uſed when he ſhall come to lay the top-ſtone, and compleat all the fruits of Redemption, Luke 21. 25, 26. 28. The confuſion of the world is the reſtauration of Sion; a ſtorm or ruſhing mighty wind preceded the plentifull effuſion of the Spirit upon the Apoſtles, for the blowing the Goſpel into every corner, Act. 2.2. Never were the diſciples in ſo hopeleſs a condition as before the Reſurrection of Chriſt, the ground of the Churches ſtability; they then expected to ſee his face no more. What commotions and thunders are deſcribed in the Revelation before the new Jeruſalem comes down from Heaven, & God pitch his Tabernacle among men? But he ſuffers not thoſe commotions to be raiſed in the world by the miniſtring Angel, till the ſervants of God be ſealed in the forehead, for their preſervation in thoſe confuſions which ſhall be the ruin of their enemies, Revel. 7. 2, 3. The ark may ſhake with the motion of the oxen, but it cannot fall. Noahs Ark may be toſt by the waves that drown the world, but not ſink, and at laſt reſt upon the mountains of Ararat. * i. e. the curſe of terrors, the removal of fears. Chriſt came came not to the Disciples, but in the fourth Watch of the night, and that when the Ship was tossed by the waves, and was tugging against a contrary wind, Mat. 14. 24, 25. 'Tis no hardship for Sion to be in a Boat beaten by the Sea, when Christ walks upon the waters, and bids her be of good cheer, saying, 'Tis I, be not afraid. An Earthquake preceded the deliverance of Paul and Silas out of Prison, Acts 16. 26. And Lightnings, and Voices, and Thundrings, Earthquake, and great Hail, shall accompany the opening of the Temple of God in Heaven, and the manifestation of the Ark of the Testament in that Temple, Rev. 11. 19.

* Gen. 8. 4. of ארר רטט

2. Here is comfort in Persecutions. Persecution is yet for a while the Lot of the Church; a Sea and a Wilderness are yet the passage to Canaan. The first Promise to Abraham of a numerous Seed, was with the comparing it to the dust of the Earth, Gen. 3. 16. Dust that is trampled upon, Dust that is removed by a puff of wind. But the next was by comparing it to the Stars in Heaven, Gen. 15. 5. that are bright, and fixed, and have their orderly motions. Before the Introduction of the Philadelphian State of the Church, or Brotherly State, (which it is likely we are not far from) the Promise of Glory to them that overcome, intimates a Combate, and the Promise of Christ's confessing the names of such before his Father, implies a time before the Period of the Sardian State, wherein the Church is to bear a signal Testimony to the Truths of Christ in the way of a Conflict, Rev. 3. 5. The glorious State of the Church at the Resurrection of the Witnesses, shall be preceded by such a calamity as shall be the terrour of the godly, and the triumph of an Enemy devoted to a sudden and unexpected destruction, Rev. 11. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Persecutions make way for Sion's stability. Never was she firmer and purer than in the time of the Apostles, and those immediately following them, when the Witnesses for the Truth, to the loss of their blood, were as numerous as the Survivors: she was then, when the flood was cast out against her, clothed with the Sun, and crowned with a Crown of twelve Stars, Rev. 12. 1, 2. Such troubles now may dim the outward splendour, but increase her inward Spirit, and refine her to that temper she was in in the Primitive Ages of Christianity. Prosperity was never much the Churches Friend: Poyson was flung in her dish when she gain'd an earthly felicity, and the fondness of great ones. Her stability consists not in this, but in the graces and spirit of Christianity: That which establisht her Head, establisheth the Body; her Captain ascended not from Mount Oliver, till he had suffered on Mount Calvary. The Church was never described so glorious in her outward Attire, as her greatest Enemy, that is clothed in Scarlet, and deckt with Gold, Rev. 17. 4. Sion's glory is internal, Psal. 45. 13. The King's Daughter is all glorious within. All those Persecutions that are yet to come upon her, shall not demolish her Walls: The rigours of her Enemies, and the Treasons of her pretended Friends, have not yet expelled her out of the Earth; she hath not yet sunk, though her Masts have been sometimes cut close to the Deck, and her visible Pilots flung over-board into the Sea; and shall she sink when she is not far from an entrance into the Harbour? She hath been a Brand pluckt out of the fire, Zach. 3. 2. She was pluckt out of the Furnace of Babylon, and shall be pluckt out of the Furnace of Mystical Babylon. Though she should be mown down as Grass by the Sythe of her Enemies, yet the presence of Christ shall be as Rain upon her, to make her sprout and spread after all her Afflictions, Psal. 72. 6. Though she hath been in the midst of the Fire, she never yet was, nor ever will be consumed: She hath had joy in her disgraces, and greatness by her flames: She hath alwaies had a God to inspire her with vigor, to sustain her weakness, and prop her by his Arm, and hath often swam to a safe Harbour in a Tyde of her own Blood. Is not that God still a sufficient Defence, and the Promise a sufficient Charter against the Violence of the world: The Highest himself shall establish her; Himself by his own Arm, and Himself by his own Methods.

(3.) Here is Comfort in the deepest designs of her Enemies. The Highest himself shall establish her.

If he be the Highest, and imploys himself as the Highest, there is none so high as to over-top him, none so high as to out-wit him. Though their Union be never so close, and their Projects never so deep, yet God's being with the Church, is curb enough for them, and comfort enough for Sion, Isa. 8. 9. Associate your selves together, O ye people, &c. Take counsel together, and it shall come to naught; speak the word, and it shall not stand; for God is with us. God's presence with Sion blows away all. God was with the Ark in its captivity, and made it victorious in its Chains. It cripled Dagon the Philistins Idol, 1 Sam. 5. 4. and made them return it to their disgrace, which they thought they had seiz'd upon to their honour. While God is a strength to the poor, the branch of the terrible shall be brought low, and their blast be but as a storm against a wall, Isa. 25. 4, 5. He can hasten their ruine by their own subtilty, and catch them in their own Net, Psal. 35. 8. Or, he can turn them to glorifie the Church, as much as they hindred her, Isa. 25. 3. They are sometimes compared to Bees, Psal. 118. 12. Isa. 7. 18. and the can make them afford honey as well as a sting. They are Bees for their wrath, and Bees for their weakness, and many times Bees for her profit. Sometimes he makes the House of Jacob as fire, & the House of Esau as stubble before him, Obad. 18. 'Tis not more natural to the Serpents Seed to spite the Church, than it is natural to God to protect her; their malice cannot engage them so much in Attempts against her, as God's Promiſe engageth him in the defence of her. What can weakneſs do againſt ſtrength? folly againſt wiſdom? Hell againſt Heaven? and a fallen Lucifer againſt the higheſt God?

(4.) Here is comfort to expect the glory of the Church. The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

The Mountain of the Lords Houſe ſhall be lifted up on the top of the Mountains, Iſa. 2. 2. In the laſt days it ſhall be more glorious than any Mountain dignified by God: Above Mount Sinai, where the Law was given, the terreſtial Mount Sion, where the Temple was built, Mount Moriah, where Abraham had a type of the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt, Mount Horeb, where Moſes by prayer diſcomfited Amalek, and Mount Piſgah, where Moſes had a proſpect of Canaan. Abraham's Conqueſt of the four Kings, Gen. 14. ſeems to be a figure of the Churches Victories, when the captive Lots ſhould be reſcued, and Sodom it ſelf be ſomething better for Sion. Then ſhall Chriſt meet her as King of Salem, King of Peace, with the bleſſings of the moſt High God. Then ſhall he, as he did at the Feaſt in Cana, turn the Churches Water into Wine. Idols ſhall be utterly aboliſht, Iſa. 2. 18. Droſs and mixtures in Doctrine and Worſhip purged out, Rev. 22. 1. The River of the water of life ſhall be as clear as Cryſtal, proceeding from the Throne of God, and of the Lamb. The everlaſting Goſpel preached, Rev. 14. 6. called everlaſting, becauſe it ſhall never more be clouded and obſcured by the fooliſh Inventions of men; there ſhall be no more Sea, Rev. 21. 1. The troubles of Sion, ſignified by a ſtormy Sea, ſhall ceaſe, and a new Heaven, and a new Earth be created; there ſhall be multitude of converſions, Rev. 11. 15. The Kingdoms of the world ſhall become the Kingdoms of Chriſt. The breath of the Lord ſhall come into many, and make them ſtand upon their feet, Ezek. 37. 9, 10. There ſhall be a greater preſence of God in Ordinances, for the Earth ſhall ſhine with his glory, Ezek. 43. 2. Holineſs ſhall ſparkle in her, for the glory of the Lord ſhall be upon her, Rev. 21. 11. His holineſs to purifie her, and his power to protect her. Perſecutions without, and diviſions within, ſhall ceaſe; Satan ſhall be bound, his force reſtrained; he ſhall not wander about with his cloven-foot, Rev. 20. 3. The Sea of Glaſs, which was mingled with fire, with the fire of worldly Perſecutions, with the fire of inteſtine Animoſities, ſhall be as clear as Cryſtal, Rev. 15. 2. Rev. 22. 1. He will then have Magiſtrates no longer carrying on the Intereſt of the God of this world, but the Intereſt of the Church, whom he calls his Princes, Ezek. 45. 8. His, becauſe ſet up by a more immediate Providence: His, becauſe acting deſignedly and intentionally for his glory; no more pinching his People, and making a prey of his Sion, but laying down their Crowns at the foot of his Throne. And to compleat all, there ſhall be a perpetuity in this ſpiritual proſperity; only between the beginning and compleating it Satan ſhall be let looſe: But for a little ſeaſon, Rev. 20. 3. and after this it ſhall not have one blow more from Hell; but the Devil muſt for ever give over nibbling at her heel. Now the Church never yet found ſuch a ſtate ſuitable to thoſe promiſes and predictions; ſome great thing remains to be accompliſht, which the world hath not yet ſeen, nor the Church experienced. But that Truth that will not lye, that Truth which cannot lye, has aſſured it. The Myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed, Rev. 10. 7. The Church hath hitherto been gaſping in the fire, and in the water; ſhe has liv'd, but as wrapt in a winding-ſheet; the Saints under the Altar have cryed a long time for the vengeance of the Temple to recompence their blood. There is a time when this Lazarus, that hath lain begging at the door of the rich and mighty, ſhall be mounted up to a better ſtate. Sion ſhall enjoy a Reſurrection, and fling off all badges of a Funeral. For the Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

Third Uſe of Exhortation.

(1.) Take heed of Apoſtatizing from Sion; from the Doctrine and Worſhip of Sion.

If God ſhall eſtabliſh her, ſtability is not to be found out of her. To depart from her, is to leave a firm Rock to find ſecurity in a quick-ſand. To leap out of a ſtout Ship in a ſtorm, to expect a preſervation in the waves. To turn our backs upon Heaven, to ſeek eaſe in the bowels of Hell. The Altar at Damaſcus is caſt down, and Jeroboam's Altar is demoliſht when that at Jeruſalem ſtood. To ſtay in Sion, is to be expoſed to the gun-ſhot of men and Devils; to run from her, is to ſeek to the Devil for protection, and run into the mouth of all the Artillery of God, that is ſet for the eſtabliſhment of Sion. If we are Chriſtians, no force, nor violence ſhould ſeparate us from her.

2. Let us love Sion. There is nothing the Scripture uſes more as an argument to ſeparate our affections from the world than the uncertainty and fading nature of it. The perpetuity then of the Church ſhould be a motive to place our affections there, where they ſhall never want an object, and which we cannot love without loving her head and her eſtabliſher. The Jews in Babylon would rather forget themſelves than their City and Temple, Pſal. 137. 5, 6. Our affections to Goſpel-Sion ſhould be more tender, ſince God hath poured out more of his Spirit upon her, and ſhe is more amiable in his eye. That which the Jews ſo much affected, is periſhed. But the true Sion is eternal and ſhall flouriſh for ever. The higheſt himſelf hath an eſtabliſhing affection to her. Let our affections to her equal the malice of the Enemies againſt her, ſince we have greater incentives to love her than they can have to hate her. While others cry, Raze, Raze it even to the ground, let us at leaſt teſtify our affections, and if we have not her ſtanding walls to love, let us not eſtrange our tenderneſs from her very duſt, Pſal. 102. 14. There is a pleaſure to be taken in her ſtones, becauſe they ſhall be again

ſet

ſet in their place, a favour to be ſhewn to her duſt, becauſe it ſhall be again compacted, and enjoy a reſurrection, For the higheſt that hath promiſed to eſtabliſh her, will not deſert her in her ruins, v.16. When the Lord ſhall build up Sion he ſhall appear in glory; we have therefore more ground to favour her duſt than to admire the proudeſt palaces.

(3.) Let us deſire the Eſtabliſhment of Sion more than our own private Eſtabliſhment.

'Tis the Sign of a gracious Spirit to look not only on his own things but the things of others, Phil. 2. 4. And what things of others ſhould be regarded, if the things of Chriſt and his Spouſe be over-looked. No private perſon hath any promiſe of eſtabliſhment but as he is a Deniſon of Sion, as one born in her. In deſiring therefore the welfare of Sion, we wiſh and make way for the eſtabliſhing of our ſelves; our intereſts are common with hers. Her proſperity therefore ſhould be the firſt and laſt of our wiſhes. When we wiſh the ſtability of Sion, we wiſh the honour of God, the continuance of his worſhip, the glorifying his name which is depoſited in that cabinet; The glory of God cannot flouriſh, if the Church periſh. How baſe then are thoſe, that if they can ſwim in a worldly proſperity, care not if the Church be drowned in tears and bloud; that cloth themſelves and regard not her nakedneſs; that provide an earthly Canaan for themſelves, and care not what deſolate deſert Sion ſits weeping in?

(4.) Let us endeavour the eſtabliſhment of Sion. 'Tis a grateful thing to a Prince to favour his favorite. Let us be as forward to enlarge her Territories, as the Devil and his inſtruments are to increaſe the Suburbs of hell. The Higheſt himſelf will eſtabliſh her by himſelf; we muſt therefore take thoſe methods which are agreeable to the chief preſerver. A complyance with the Enemies of God was never the way to ſecure the intereſt of Sion. A divine work in a divine way will meet with divine aſſiſtance. To contribute to the eſtabliſhment of Sion is a work honourable in it ſelf, ſince it is the work of God himſelf; 'Tis an imitation of the higheſt pattern. In this we are aſſociates, and coworkers, with God. For the Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh Sion.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Fifth of November.

Exod. 15. 9, 10.

The Enemy ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil; my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them; I will draw my ſword; my hand ſhall deſtroy them; Thou didſt blow with thy wind; the Sea covered them; they ſank as Lead in the mighty waters.

AN Anniverſary Commemoration of a memorable Deliverance falling upon this Day, hath cauſed a diverſion of my thoughts, to look back, not only upon a mercy never to be forgotten, but to look forward to that Deliverance which is to come parallel to this in the Text. Iſrael was a Type of the Church, Pharaoh a type of the Churches Enemies in all Ages of the world, both of the ſpiritual Enemy, Satan, and of the temporal, his Inſtruments.

The Deliverance was a type of the Deliverance that Chriſt wrought upon the Croſs by his Blood. Alſo, of that Chriſt works by his power upon his Throne, the one from the Reign of Sin, the other from the Empire of Antichriſt.

This was the Exemplar of all the deliverances the Church was to have. As the Aſſyrian ſhould lift up a ſtaff againſt Jeruſalem, after the manner of Ægypt, ſo the Lord ſhould lift his rod up for them upon the Sea after the manner of Ægypt, when the Yoke ſhall be deſtroyed becauſe of the anointing, Iſa. 10. 26, 27. when the power of the Enemies ſhall be deſtroyed by the ſtrength of Chriſt. The Lord himſelf makes it his pattern in thoſe victories he is to gain for his people; when he calls upon his arm to awake as in the ancient days, when he cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon, and made the depths of the Sea a way for the ranſom'd to paſs over, Iſa. 51. 9, 10, 11. then the redeemed of the Lord ſhall come with ſinging unto Sion, the Song of Moſes, while they ſtand upon a Sea of Glaſs, a brittle, frail, and ſtormy world, Rev. 15. 3. And our Redeemer makes this his pattern & rule, when he comes to tread the Wine-preſs in wrath, and make them drunk with his fury, that then he would remember the days of old, Moſes and his people, when he divided the water before them, to make himſelf an everlaſting name, Iſa. 63. 1. 2. 11. that his power may be as glorious in the latter, as it was in the former, and all deliverances of the Church from the beginning to the end be knit together to be an everlaſting matter of praiſe to his name.

This Hiſtorical narration is to have a more univerſal accompliſhment; the deliverance from Ægypt is promiſed to be fulfilled a ſecond time, and God would act the ſame part over again, as alſo their deliverance from Ogg King of Baſhan, after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, Pſa. 6. 22. The Lord ſaid, I will bring again from Baſhan, I will bring my people from the depths of the Sea. This is after he had aſcended, v. 18. when he came to wound the head of his Enemies, v. 21. So Iſa. 11. 15. The Lord ſhall utterly deſtroy the tongue of the Egyptian ſea, and with his mighty wind ſhall he ſhake his hand over the river, and ſhall ſmite it, in the ſeven ſtreams, and make men go over dry ſhod. Nilus with its ſeven ſtreams was the glory of Ægypt, and Rome with its ſeven hills is the glory of the Papacy, Rev. 17. 9. So Zac. 10. 10. I will bring them again out of the Land of Ægypt, and they ſhall paſs through the ſea with Affliction, and the deeps of the river ſhall dry up. Pharaoh and his army cannot revive and ſtand up in their former ranks; but there there shall be deliverances with resemblances to that, when the Enemies shall be as arrogant and furious as Pharaoh, and the Church as dejected and straitned as Israel.

The Text is a part of Moses his Song. A carmen triumphale, A Song after victory: A Panegyrick, the praise of God attended with dancing at the sight of the Ægyptian wracks, v. 20.

1. It was then real; The Israelites then sang it.

(2.) 'Tis typical, the conquerours of Antichrist shall again Triumph in the same manner, Rev. 15. 3.

(3.) It was an earnest of future deliverance to the Israelites. When God appeared for them in their first Exit, he would not fail in that work which should conduce so much to his glory; it was a Pledg, that his purchased people should pass over, and be planted in the mountain of his Inheritance v. 16, 17. There is in the words,

1. A Description of the Enemy.

2. His defeat.

The Enemy is introduced laying his council, and vaunting his resolution. By an elegant Climax, and orderly proceeding, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoyl, my lust shall be satisfied, &c. They laid the foundation deep in council, built their resolves high in power, and then applaud themselves in their Insolence.

I will pursue. Had he no reflections upon his former successless attempts to keep the Israelites in slavery? or could he with any reason hope to reduce them with his basled strength to that yoke, which had been broken by a powerful Arm? Had he not reason freshly to remember his own inability to remove one of the plagues sent upon them, to promote Israels rescue? Was that high arm which brought them out of Ægypt broken? Gods weapons blunted, his magazine of plaguing Ammunition wasted, & his strength too feeble to preserve those he had by a strong hand redeemed? These things be obvious to Pharaoh's thoughts. Yet, I will still pursue. How heady and rash are the Churches Enemies! Infatuation is the usher to Destruction: When you find the Churches Enemies lose their wits, you may quickly expect they will lose their strength and lives.

I will divide the spoil. He promiseth them this victory before the conflict, encourages his Souldiers with hopes of the prey, which was the recovery of their Jewels which the Israelites had borrowed by Gods order, and the Ægyptians had lent them by a Secret Impression, and the flocks and herds of the poor Israelites to boot.

How great is the pride of the Churches enemies! They strut without thinking of a superior power to curb them, and promise themselves the accomplishment of their designs without fearing the check of Providence. Thus did Sisera's Mother triumph in a presumptuous hope before a victory, Jud. 5. 30. and sing Te Deum before a conquest. Ventosa et insolens natio is the title Pliny gives the Ægyptian Nation.

*My lust shall be satisfied upon them. How revengefully do they express themselves? They apprehend themselves cheated of their Jewels by the Israelites; such an apprehension would increase rage and animosity.

* תמל אמר נפשי
My soul shall be satisfied.

I will draw my Sword, my hand shall destroy, תורישׁ כני. my hand shall Disinherit them. I will reduce them like a company of fearful fugitives by brandishing a drawn Sword, that they shall quickly return to their former bondage and become the perpetual Inheritance of the Ægyptians. How secure are the Churches Enemies! The sight of a glittering sword, and an edict for a return they thought would quell their Spirits; 'Tis true they had to deal with an unarmed people, unprovided for defence, whose late slavery had rendered them unfit for military exercises, an unequal match for a numerous and disciplin'd Army. But what if they were? had they not the same power to protect them in their march, which had brought them out of their bondage? This the enemies never reflected on: Pride and security are always twins.

In v. 10. You have their defeat. The Sea quenched the Fire of their rage, and laid flat the towers of their proud confidence. God blows with his wind, the strong east wind, Exod. 14. 21. a strength added to its Natural fierceness, which made the meeting of the Floods more swift and fierce; some think thunders and lightnings burst out of the pillar of fire in the Cloud, when God looked upon them, Exod. 14. 24.

They sank like Lead, suddenly, easily, irrecoverably; they were lasht before, now executed. Other Plagues had a mixture of patience, this is a pure cup of the Indignation of God.

The defeat is described,

1. By the Author: Thou didst blow.

2. Instrument: Thy wind; the Sea, wind and the Sea conspire together against the Enemies, when God orders them.

3. Victory, or success of this order; The Sea covered them; they sank like Lead in the mighty waters— General Observations.

1. The greatest Idolaters are the fiercest Enemies against the Church of God. 'Tis the Ægyptian is the Enemy. No Nation had more and more sordid Idols. The Persians adored the Sun, the greatest Benefactor to the world, in the rank of inanimate creatures; other Nations several Stars, but none did so much abuse the reason of man, as that accursed Nation. Onions, Garlick, Cats, Oxen, Flies and Crocodiles; those dung-hill creatures were their adored adored Deities. And how much better is the Adoration of the ſwadling-clouts of our Saviour, or the ſtraw which was in the Manger, or the Tail of the Aſs he rode upon, and ſo many ſplinters of the Croſs; which if put together would make a Coloſſus? For this among the reſt may the Church profeſſing ſuch Worſhip be called ſpiritual Ægypt.

2. The Churches Enemies are not for her correction, but her deſtruction: I will purſue; my hand ſhall deſtroy them. They breath out nothing but ſlaughters; My hand ſhall deſtroy them; down with it, down with it even to the ground, and men are famous as they can lift up Axes upon the thick Trees, Pſa. 74. 5.

3. How deſperate are ſomtimes the ſtraits of Gods Iſrael in the eye of man? How low their Spirits before deliverance? They here behold a deep Sea before them, and a raging Enemy behind them: Hear a confuſed noiſe of women and Children in the midſt of them, feel the pantings of their own hearts,& perhaps ſee a conſternation in the faces of their governours; they ſee themſelves diſarmed of weapons, lying almoſt at the mercy of an oppreſſor, with a well furniſht Army; they repent of what God had done for them, and are more ambitious of ſlavery than liberty; Quarrel with Moſes (And as one of their Hiſtorians ſaith, were about to ſtone him) Exod. 14. 10, 11, 12. Without doubt they then thought him a lyar, and it is likely had no more honourable thoughts at that time of God; for when they ſaw the happy ſucceſs in the miraculous overthrow of the Ægyptians, then they believed God and his ſervant Moſes, Exod. 14.31. as if they gave credit to neither of them before. They had a pillar of Fire, and a Cloud, the chariot of God; A greater argument to eſtabliſh them than the preparation of their enemies to terrifie them. But what a faithleſs creature is man under the viſible guard of Heaven, and ſo far naturally from living by faith, that he will hardly draw eſtabliſhments from ſenſe!

4. God orders the luſts of men for his own praiſe. He had forced Pharaoh to let the People go, he had ſtopt the ſtreams of his fury; when he removes his hand and pulls up the dam, Pharaoh returns to his former temper with more violence, thereby giving occaſion for God's glory in his own deſtruction; he ſerves himſelf of the deſperate malice of his enemies to make his Wiſdom and other Attributes more triumphant.

5. The nearer the deliverance of the Church is, the fiercer are Gods Judgments on the enemies of it, and the higher the enemies rage. The former plagues were but ſmall gaſhes in the Ægyptian ſtate: But when the time approach'd of the Iſraelites perfect Deliverance, then the firſt-born in every houſe, the delight and ſtrength of the parents is cut off: And at the compleating of it, the glory, flower and ſtrength of Ægypt buryed in the Sea; the fuller beams of mercy on the one are attended with more ſcorcing darts of judgments on the other.

6. All creatures are abſolutely under the Soveraignty of God, and are acted by his Power in all their ſervices. Thy wind: All are ſubject to his conduct, and are the Guardians of his People, and the Conquerours of his Enemies. How eaſie is it for the Arm of Omnipotency to demoliſh the ſtrongeſt preparations againſt his Iſrael, and with a blaſt reduce their Power to nothing? The Sea ſuffers violence to preſerve his People, and the liquid Element ſeems transform'd into a wall of Braſs. God can make the meaneſt creatures Miniſters of his Judgments, raiſe Troops of Flies to rout the Roman Army, as it was in Trajans Siege of the Agareni.

7. By the ſame means God ſaves his People, whereby he deſtroys his Enemies; the one ſank, the other paſt thorow; That which makes one balance ſink, makes the other riſe the higher; the red ſea was the Guardian of Iſrael, and the Executioner of Ægypt, the Iſraelites gallery to Canaan, and the Ægyptians grave. The cloud that led the Iſraelites through the red Sea, blinded the Ægyptians; the waters that were 15 Cubits high above the mountains, kept the Ark from daſhing againſt them, whereby Noah might be indangered, and drowned the enemies though never ſo high according to humane ſtature.

8. The ſtrength and glory of a people is more waſted by oppoſing the Intereſt of the Church, than in conflicts with any other enemy. Had the Ægyptian arms been turned againſt any other Enemy, they might have proſpered, or at leaſt retired with a more partial defeat, or ſaved their lives though under chains. But when they would prepare them againſt Gods Iſrael, they meet with a total defeat where they expected victory, and find their graves where Iſrael found their Bulwarks; the choiceſt of their Youth, the flower of their Nobility, the ſtrongeſt of their chariots and horſes at one blow overthrown by God.

9. We may take notice of the folly of the Churches Enemies. Former plagues might have warned them of the power of God; they had but burned their own fingers by pinching her; yet they would ſet their force againſt Almighty power that ſo often had worſted them; 'tis as if men would pull down a ſteeple with a ſtring.

But the Obſervations I ſhall treat of are,

1. When the Enemies of the Church are in the higheſt fury and reſolution, and the Church in the greateſt extremity and dejection, then is the fitteſt time for God to work her deliverance fully and perfectly. When the Enemy ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the Spoil, &c. then God blowed with his wind, then they ſank,

2. God is the Author of all the deliverances of the Church, whoſoever are the Inſtruments. [Thou didſt blow with thy wind; who is like unto the Lord among the Gods?

1. For the firſt, When the Enemies of the Church are in the higheſt fury, &c. Great reſolutions againſt againſt God meet with great Diſappointments. The Churches ſtraits are the enemies hopes, but Gods opportunity. When their fury is higheſt, Gods love is neareſt.

1. There are four ſeaſons on the part of the Enemy God takes hold of.

1. Flouriſhing Proſperity. Here is Pharaoh in the head of a gallant Army, the Iſraelites in a Pound at his mercy. The Ægyptians proſperity is a forerunner of their deſtruction, the adverſity of the other, of their ſalvation. Haman is in the top of his favour, when the Jews are marked out for ſlaughter, and then himſelf is marked out for ruine. Proſperity, like Rain, makes the weeds of Pride and Atheiſm to grow up, and then they are fit matter for God's Sickle to cut down. When the Cluſters of the Vine of the Earth are ripe, full of an outward glory and ſweetneſs, then the Angel thruſts in his ſharp Sickle, Rev. 14. 18. There is an ἀκμὴ ſet them. When the great City is clothed in fine Linnen, Purple and Scarlet, decks with gold and pretious ſtones, Rev. 18. 16. and come to the higheſt point of its glory and proſperity, then ſhall God thicken the clouds of his vengeance, and bring their riches to naught in one hour.

2. Swelling Pride: I will purſue, &c. Pride is provoking, becauſe it is a ſelf-deifying, and ſets up the creature as God's Mate. God ſtands upon his honour, and loves to attaque thoſe that would equal themſelves with him. Pride ſunk the glory of the fallen Angels into miſery, and ſo it will that of the Serpents ſeed; this is the immediate forerunner of deſtruction, Prov. 16. 18. Men have their hairy ſcalp, the prime of their ſtrength, and pride of their hearts, when God wounds them, Pſal. 68. 21. Ægypt was become Rahab, pride it ſelf, as the word ſignifies, and ſo God called it by that name, Iſa. 51. 9. When Ægypt mounted to Rahab, to the top of pride, then God cut it. When the Dragon briſtled, and erected his ſtately head to ſeiſe upon the prey, then God wounded him, put an end to Ægypts pride, and the Iſraelites fear: He loves to beat down the pride of the one, and raiſe up the lowlineſs of the other. When Herod will aſſume the title of a God given him by the acclamations of the People, an Angel ſhall immediately make him a Banquet for Worms, Acts 11. 22, 23. When Sennacherib had proſpered in his Conqueſt of Judea, had taken many ſtrong Towns, cloſely beleaguered Jeruſalem, thundred out blaſphemies againſt God, and threatnings againſt his People, then comes an Angel, makes an horrible ſlaughter in a night, ſends him back to his own Country, where after the loſs of his Army he loſt his life by the hands of his own children. A greater pride cannot be expreſt, than what the Apoſtle predicts of the Man of Sin, and that hath been extant for ſome time in the world*: And perhaps it will yet amount to a higher ſtep than it hath yet done before he be conſumed by the brightneſs of the Lord's coming, ſince all that yet lets and hinders is not taken out of the way. The higher the pride, the nearer the fall. When Goliah ſhall defie the God of Iſrael, a ſtone from a ſling thrown by the hand of David, our great David, the Antitype, ſhall lay him vomiting out his ſoul, and blaſphemies on the Earth. We are many times more beholding to the Enemies inſolence, than our own innocence. Deut. 32. 17. Were it not that God feared the wrath of the Enemy, i.e in their pride, leſt their Adverſaries ſhould behave themſelves ſtrangely, and ſay, Our hand is high; a ſinful Iſrael ſhould not have ſo many preſervations *. When they will aſcend into Heaven, and exalt their Throne above the Stars of God; when they will aſcend above the heights of the Clouds, and be like the moſt High, then ſhall they be brought down to Hell, to the ſides of the Pit, Iſa. 7. 13, 14, 15. The higheſt Towers are the faireſt marks for Thunder, and the readieſt Tinder for the lightning of Heaven. When Tyrus had ſet her heart, as the heart of God, then would God defile her brightneſs, and make her die the death of them that are ſlain in the midſt of the Sea, Ezek. 28. 6, 7, 8.

3. Eager malice. Nothing would Satisfie the Ægyptians here, but the bloud of the Iſraelites. My hand ſhall deſtroy them; they were under a cruel bondage, attended with anguiſh, of Spirit before God began their reſcue. The ſerpents ſeed have the ſame principles of craft and malice ſown in their nature, that are reſident in his; ever ſince the beginning, he endeavoured to ſhape men into the ſame form and temper with himſelf; Their rage would raze out the very foundation of Iſrael, and not ſuffer the name to be had any more in remembrance, Pſa. 83. 4. They love to be drunk with the blood of the ſaints, and are no more ſatisfied with blood than the grave with carcaſes; they repair their arrows, and watch for an opportunity to diſcharge them; and never want poiſon, but opportunity; this is Gods time to deliver. When Pharaoh would pollute the land with the blood of the Hebrew males, and ordain them to be drag'd from the womb to the ſlaughter, then God raiſes up himſelf to attempt the reſcue of Iſrael; yet he bears with his inſolence, puniſheth him, but not deſtroys him. But when he would be ſtill ſtiff againſt a ſenſe of the multitude of plagues and a greater mercy of patience in them; when he would arm for the field againſt that God the ſmart of whoſe force he had felt, and reſolves to deſtroy or bring back the Iſraelites upon the point of his Sword, God would then bear no longer, but make the water his ſepulchre. When Haman deſigns the ruine of the Jews, procures the Kings commiſſion, ſends diſpatches to all the governours of the Provinces, ſets up a gibbet for Mordecai, and wants nothing but an opportunity to requeſt the Execution, he tumbles down to exchange his princes favours for an exaltation on the Gallows, Eſt. 6. 4. Eſt. 7. 10. When the Serpent encreaſed his malitious cruelty, and caſt out a flood againſt the Church, God makes the earth, the carnal world to give her aſſiſtance, and repel the force that Satan uſed againſt her*.

* 2 Theſ. 2. 4. Who oppoſith and exalteth himſelf above all that is called God, in additions to the word, clipping the Inſtitutions of God, and adding new, and canonizing new Mediators of Interceſſion, who ſits in the Temple of God in a profeſſion of Chriſtianity, ſhewing himſelf that he is God, aſſuming the name of God, and the title of God, in being called moſt holy.

* Trap on Exod. p. 9.

* Rev. 12. 15, 16. The tar helped the woman.

When

When multitudes shall gather together in the valley of decision, then shall the Lord roar out of Sion, and be the hope of his People, and the strength of the Children of Israel, Joel. 3. 14. 16. And when Spiritual Ægypt shall make a war against Christ, who sits upon the white horse, and combine all their force for the destruction of his people, then shall the Beast and the false Prophet be taken and brought to their final ruine, and their force be broken in a lake of fire, as that of Ægypt was in a Sea of water, *Rev.*19.19,20. The time of their greatest fierceness shall be the time of Christs fury; he will strike them sorest when he finds them cruellest, their rage shall rouze up his revenge; when the men of Sodom, to which the Antichristian state is likened, shall be resolutely bent to wickedness, they shall be struck with blindness, and that blindness suceeded by destruction; then will God set bounds to the outragious waves, and snatch the prey out of the teeth of the Lyons.

4. Confident security. I will divide the Spoil, my lust shall be satisfied upon them. God lets the enemy come in like a flood and torrent, with a confidence to carry all before him, before he lifts up a standard against him, *Isa.*59.19. Then shall the Spirit of the Lord stir up himself gloriously in the principles and actions of his people, and the redeemer shall come to Sion. God will set his force against their confidence, & break their impetuousness by his own power. When the Enemies of the Church think they have intangled it in such a snare, reduc'd it to so low a condition as to be secure of her ruine with a blast, and puff, then God will arise and set her in safety from them that puff at her, Psa. 12. 5. This will be the case of Babylon, when she shall say, I sit as a Queen, and am no Widdow, and shall see no sorrow, then shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine, for then God will stir up his strength to Judge her, *Rev.*18.7. 'Tis in the time of the Antichristian Polity, and mutual congratulations with the highest security for their happy succes, triumphing over the dead bodies of the witnesses, that they shall stand again upon their feet, (the same persons if politically dead, others witnessing the same doctrine, if they were corporeally dead) and damp all their mirth and triumph, and turn their security into fears; then shall glory be given to the God of heaven, and the Ark of his Testament be seen in his Temple, and the power of the Lord be magnified, Rev. 11.10,11. When they shall all be gathered together to the battle of the great day of the Lord; the place is called Armageddon, *Rev.*16.14,16, &c. חרם & נרור A cursed troop an army under Gods Anathema, when they have the greatest confidence. When Jerusalem shall be penn'd up by a seige, it shall be a cup of trembling in the hands of her Enemies, Zac. 12. 2. Fear shall seize upon them in the midst of their confidence. The Sun was risen upon Sodom just before the devouring shower of Fire and brimstone. With what derision would they have entertained any messenger, that should have assured them of such a shower in so clear a day? No doubt but the Ægyptian horses went prancing into the Sea, and their riders confident of catching their prey; when they saw the waters congealed, they had not the least suspicion, but that the division of the Sea was made in their favour, till the Chariot wheels were taken off, and the waters ready to roul upon them, *Exod.*14.23,25.

2. As something on the part of the Churches Enemies forwards the deliverance, so there is some regard God hath to the Churches straits. Cum duplicantur lateres, venit Moses. 'Tis Gods usual method to let the Church be in great distress before he commands deliverance. The distress of the Church was great in the concern of this day, though it was not sensible, the deliverance being known near as soon as the danger.

The Church is to be in the depths of the Sea before she be fully delivered, Psa. 68.22. The Jews were to pass through the Sea with affliction before the pride of Assyria should be brought down, and the Scepter of Ægypt depart away; after that, he would strengthen them in the Lord, and they should walk up and down in his name, *Zach.*10.11,12. The sharpest pangs precede deliverance; it was so when Christ came in the flesh; it will be so at every new rising of Christ in his spirit; when things were at a low ebb, when the Sun sat in the greatest darkness of Errour, Idolatry and prophaneſs, when the Jews, the only spot of ground God had, was as a wilderness almost barren of any grace, when the great predictions of the Prophets were unminded, and less understood, when Urim and Thummim had ceased, and the Spirit of Prophesy was shut up, then Christ comes in the fulness of time to work an universal relief for mankind. When the day of vengeance is in the heart of the Redeemer, he shall look and find none to help, he shall wonder to find none to uphold, therefore his own arm shall bring Salvation, Isa. 53. 5.

This has alwaies been God's Method. With his Son, the powers of darkness had their hour, and triumph'd when they had laid him in the grave before he was raised by the glory of his Father. The Witnesses must be killed by the hand of their Enemies, before they stand upon their feet, and ascend up into Heaven, in the sight of their Adversaries, Rev. 11. 7. when the Church shall walk in darkness, grope for the wall like the blind, mourn like Doves, look for salvation, and it shall seem far off; then will the Lord put on a helmet of salvation on his head, and the garments of vengeance for clothing, and be clad with zeal as a cloak, Isa. 59.9, 10, 11, 17. The break of day is ushered in by a thicker darkness than that which clouded the night before. The sharpest persecution that ever the Church had, was in the time of Diocletian, a little before Christianity was to rule his Empire in the exaltation of Constantine. Abraham was in hardship out of his Country, when he received the promises of the Messiah; and Israel in the wilderness, when the Oracles of God were delivered to them them. Confuſion of the Church precedes alwaies the Communication of Light.

1. The Reaſons of the Doctrine are theſe.

1. This makes for God's glory. The creature cannot in this condition challenge any ſhare in the honour of the deliverance, or pare off ſo much as a ſplinter of his glory. Had the Iſraelites been armed, and drawn into a ſtrong Battalion, and ſo defeated the Ægyptian Army, the Victory would rather have been challeng'd by them, than aſcrib'd to God; but neither the ſtrength of their multitude, nor the wiſdom of their Guides, were able to protect them; counſel failed, and heads were feeble; then did God get himſelf a name, when they were upon the point of a remedileſs ruine. It was manifeſt the name of the Lord got David the Victory, ſince he encountred unarmed with Goliah, who could have cruſht him like a Fly had he been in his fingers.

The time of the Churches depreſſion, is the time of God's Exaltation; he waits for the extremity to lift up himſelf. When paleneſs is upon the face of his People; when the Cedars of Lebanon hang their heads; when the Churches beauty ſeems a lamentable deformity, and Sharon is like a wilderneſs, then will God ariſe, Iſa. 33. 9,10. God never builds up Sion, but he ordains all things in a method for his appearance in the greateſt glory, Pſal. 102. 16. When the Lord ſhall build up Sion, he ſhall appear in his glory, that is, when the Church is deſtitute, v. 17.

1. God exalts his power; his right hand then becomes glorious in power, Exod. 15.6. He loves to appear in his dreſs as a Creator, when there is no fitneſs in the ſubject to anſwer his end, but what he beſtows upon it. When Jeruſalem becomes a rejoycing, and her People a joy, 'tis an act of creating power, Iſa. 65.18. For behold I create Jeruſalem a rejoycing. When the creature can give them not the leaſt aſſiſtance, then will they be ſenſible of God's unbounded ſufficiency, and their own neceſſary dependance. God never had too little help from his creature in a deliverance; he hath ſometimes complain'd of too much, and disbanded ſome of the Churches Forces, as in the caſe of Gideon, Judg. 7. As Chriſt rules in the midſt of his Enemies, ſo doth God's Power moſt viſibly in the midſt of diſtreſſes. A Phyſician's skill is moſt conſpicuous when the diſeaſe is moſt dangerous, and moſt complicated, and Nature at the loweſt ebb. 'Tis more glory to God to quench the fire in its fulleſt rage, than to extinguiſh it in its firſt ſmoke and ſparkles. God loves the faireſt mark to ſhoot at, and will rather down with Goliah, than with the ordinary Philiſtines; grapple with the great, rather than with a light danger, that the Lord may appear to be a man of war, Exod. 15. 3. As God ſhews his mercy in his Peoples Redemption, he will ſhew his ſtrength in their conduct, Exod. 15.13. He that made this deliverance a ſtanding Monument of his Power, entitles himſelf by it, Iſa. 43. 16. Thus ſaith the Lord, which makes a way in the Sea, a path in the mighty waters.

2. His kindneſs to, and care of his People. When the ſtraits are remedileſs, and the counſels whereby the Projects are laid, not to be defeated by humane skill; when God ſeems to have forgot, then in a ſeaſonable deliverance he ſhews himſelf the careful Watchman of Iſrael. When the Ship is in a raging ſtorm, and Chriſt aſleep, he will leave his own eaſe to keep his word, and content his People. When the Church thinks God hath forgotten his mercies, and they have forgotten their dependance; when the miſery is ſo preſſing, that there is no faith of a deliverance left, then Chriſt comes, when faith is ſcarcely to be found upon the Earth, Luke 18. 8. to exalt his mercy in the depths of their miſery, and work terrible things they looked not for, Iſa. 64 3. The Iſraelites would not have underſtood God's care in their protection, without this or the like ſtrait. God had a new opportunity to ſhew his watchfulneſs over them, to turn the cloud which went before them as their guide, behind them for their defence, Exod. 14. 19. The ſcoffs of the Enemy at the Churches miſery, are God's motive to help her. I will reſtore health to thee, becauſe they called thee an out-caſt, Jer. 30. 17. 'Tis in ſtraits we ſee God's ſalvation, not man's, Exod. 14. 13. Stand ſtill, and ſee the ſalvation of the Lord.

3. His Juſtice. He lets the Church be encompaſſed with miſeries, and the Enemies in a Combination againſt her, that he may overthrow them at once. God makes a quicker diſpatch with the Ægyptians, when they were united, than when they had aſſaulted Iſrael with a ſmaller body: His Righteouſneſs gets glory at one blow, when he makes them to lye down together, Iſ. 43.17. His Juſtice is unblemiſht in ſtriking when their wickedneſs is viſibly ripe; the equity of it muſt needs be ſubſcribed, that when the Enemies malice is greateſt, when they have no mixture of compaſſion, 'tis the cleareſt righteouſneſs to cruſh them without any mixture of mercy. God brings things to that paſs, that he may honour both his Juſtice and Mercy in the higheſt. That the black horſes, and the white horſes may march firm together, Zech. 6.6. the black horſes that brought death and Judgment Northward to Babylon, where the Church was captive; the white horſes that followed them, and brought deliverance to his People; the one to be Inſtruments of his Judgments, the other of his Mercies. God loves to glorifie thoſe two Attributes together; he did ſo in the redemption of mankind by the death of his Son, and he doth ſo in the deliverance of his Church; there is a conformity of the Church to Chriſt, in her diſtreſs, that there may be a conformity of God's glory in temporal, to his glory in eternal Salvation. God ſingles out a full crop to be an harveſt for both. A wicked man is ſaid to be waited for by the ſword, Job 15.22. God attends the beſt ſeaſon for revenge; when mercy to the one ſhall appear moſt glorious, and vengeance on his Enemies moſt equitable, and all diſputes againſt his proceedings be ſilenced.

2. It makes to the Churches Advantage. God had a work to do upon Mount Sion and on Jeruſalem, before he would puniſh the ſtout heart of the King of Aſſyria, and the glory of his high looks, Iſa. 10. 12. His end ſhall be attained in the correction of his Church, before his glory ſhall be exalted in the deſtruction of her Enemies. There are Enemies in the hearts of his People to be conquered by his grace, before the Enemies to her peace and proſperity ſhall be defeated by his Power; he will let them be in the fire, till, like gold, they may have a purer honour in a brighter luſtre.

1. Humiliation is gain'd hereby. God would not preſently raze out the Canaanites, leſt the wild Beaſts ſhould increaſe upon them, Deut. 7. 22. Too quick deliverances may be occaſions to multiply the wild Beaſts of pride, ſecurity and wantonneſs in the heart; humility would have but little footing. There is need of a ſharp Winter to deſtroy the Vermin, before we can expect a fruitful Spring. Without humiliation the Church knows not how to receive, nor how to improve any mercy. The Enemies haſten their own ruine, by increaſing the meaſure of their ſins; and Iſraels deliverance, by being inſtruments to humble their hearts. The ſooner the plaiſter hath drawn out the corrupt matter, the ſooner it is caſt into the fire. God hereby prevents the growth of weeds in that ground he intends to enrich with new mercies.

2. A Spirit of Prayer is excited. Slight troubles make but drooping prayers. Great ſtraits make it guſh out, as the more the bladder is ſqueezed, the higher the water ſprings. We hear not of the Iſraelites crying to the Lord after their coming out of Ægypt, till they had a ſight of the formidable Army, Exod. 14. 10. They were ſore afraid, and the Children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord. Prayer gains mercies, but ſcarce ſprings up free without ſence of diſtreſs: We then have recourſe to Gods power whereby he is able to relieve us, when we are ſenſible of our own weakneſs, whereby we are unable to relieve our ſelves; men will ſcarce ſeek to God, or truſt him, while any creature, though but a reed, remains for their ſupport; they are deſtitute before they pray, or believe God regards their prayers, Pſa. 102. 17. He will regard the prayer of the Deſtitute, and not deſpiſe their prayer. Diſtreſs cauſes importunity, and God will do much for importunities ſake, Luke. 11. 8.

3. Diſcovery of ſincerity. Hereby God diſcovers who are his people, and who are not; who are in the higheſt form of Chriſtianity, and who are not in the School, or at leaſt but in the loweſt form; he ſeparates the good corn from the uſeleſs chaff. No queſtion but there were ſome among the Iſraelites, that in this extremity, acted faith upon the remembrance of the wonders God had wrought for them in Ægypt before their departure; certainly they did not all murmur againſt Moſes; Were there no Calebs and Joſhuahs, that followed God fully in a way of faith and ſubmiſſion? Their faith & courage had not been conſpicuous without this extremity. Thundrings and Lightnings, and terrible things in righteouſneſs are to prove us, whether the fear of God be before our faces that we ſin not, Exod. 20. 18, 20. God ſeparates the droſs. You never know a new building without pulling down, to ſeparate the rubbiſh, and rotten rafters from the ſound materials. Abraham was put upon hard work, the imbruing his hands in the blood of his only Son, to prove his integrity; when God ſees his ſincerity, he divers the blow; not only delivers him from his grief, his Son from his danger, but renews the promiſe of the Meſſiah to him as a reward. Deliverance then comes when God hath ſeparated the Corn from the ſtubble.

4. A ſtanding encouragement for future faith. When the ſtraits are greateſt from whence God delivers us, there is a ſtronger foundation for a future truſt. When the diſtreſs is inconſiderable, faith afterwards will be more feeble; large experience heartens & ſtrengthens faith in the promiſe. When gloomy clouds are blown over, the brighter and thinner will not be much feared. When we ſee the Sun melt the thickeſt over our heads, we ſhall not doubt its force to diſolve the leſſer vapours which may afterwards aſſemble; when the Ship hath eſcaped a raging ſtorm, we ſhall not doubt it in a leſs. God often puts them in mind of their deliverance in the red Sea, to ſtrengthen their faith, and dependance on him. It muſt needs be an eſtabliſhment to faith; for deliverances from great ſtraits are ſome kind of obligation on the honour of God. When the Iſraelites had provoked God by murmuring, and wiſhed they had dyed in Ægypt, and not in the wilderneſs, Moſes intercedes with this argument, The Ægyptians ſhall hear of it, from whom God brought up Iſrael with a ſtrong hand, and it would diſparage Gods power, and tax him with an inability to bring his people into the Land he intended; then God grants their pardon, Numb. 14. 13, 14, 20.

5. Engagement to future Obedience. 'Tis upon this account God prefaceth the Law with his mercy in delivering them out of Ægypt. The ſtrongeſt Vows are made in the greateſt ſtraits. Many obligations there are when the extremity forces us to cry. When we are in the Jaws of Death, God may have his terms of us; when we are at ſome diſtance, we will have our own. The lower a perſon is, the more readily will he bend to any condition; hope of deliverance will make him ſtoop. And when God ſnatches his People as firebrands out of the fire, they are more obliged to him from common ingenuity, and muſt be more aſhamed of breaking their Vows, than if their mercies were of a great alloy. If common patience leads to repentance, a reſcue from an amazing danger is a ſtronger cord to draw us to repentance and obedience. And it is certain, that when the Church in ſincerity cerity makes Vows to God, it will not be long before God puts her into a condition to pay them; and furniſh her with Incentives of a holy ingenuity.

6. The greater thankfulneſs. The more ſtraitned, the greater thankfulneſs for enlargement. As we hear not of the Iſraelites prayers after they came out of Ægypt till they were in the pound, ſo we read of none of their ſongs, though they had matter enough for them, in their firſt departure, till God had daſht in pieces the Enemy, and thrown the Horſe and the Rider into the Sea. Then, and not till then, had they a deep ſenſe, how glorious God was in holineſs, fearful in praiſes, doing wonders, Exod. 15. 11. Great mercies unvail God's face more to the view of his People. When Iſrael inherits great ſalvation, then the Lord ſhall inherit the praiſe of Iſrael. When we have leſs mercies, we take little notice of the Author; God hears the language of but one of our bones; but when he delivers the poor from him that is too ſtrong for him, and ſpoils him, then all my bones ſhall ſay, Lord, who is like unto thee?

7. To prevent future miſchief to the Church. The deſtruction of the greateſt Enemies is a diſarming the leſs. God by this deſtruction ſtruck a terrour into thoſe Nations upon whoſe confines Iſrael was to march into Canaan, who without ſo remarkable a rebuke of providence, would have been deſirous to finger ſome of their prey. Then trembling took hold of the mighty men of Moab. All the Inhabitants of Canaan did melt away; fear and dread fell upon them by the greatneſs of the Arm of God, that they ſhould be as ſtill as a ſtone, till they paſſed over the River, Exod. 15. 15, 16. Their preſent deliverance was a Paſs-port for their future ſecurity in their Journey; and no Enemies troubled them in the way, but thoſe upon whom God had a mind to ſhew his Power.

2. How doth God deliver when the ſeaſon is thus?

1. Suddenly. They ſank like Lead in the mighty waters, which quickly reaches the bottom. Judgment comes like lightning. Death and Hell are ſaid to ride upon Horſes, Rev. 6. 8. They are too ſwift for God's Enemies, and will eaſily win the Race of them. Deſtruction comes, as travel upon a woman with child, 1 Theſ. 5. 3. How ſuddenly did God turn the Aſſyrian Camp into an Aceldema, overthrow a powerful Army, and make their Tents their Tombs in the ſpace of a night? He will daſh them in pieces like a Potters Veſſel, Pſa. 2. 9. all in bits at a ſtroke: He comes ſuddenly; he rides upon a Cherub, Pſal. 18. 10. But becauſe the motion of an Angel is not ſo intelligible, he adds another Metaphor from the nimbleſt of ſenſible things; he flies upon the wings of the wind, to aſſiſt his People in extremity. The Enemy comes like a *whirlwind, and God goes forth as a whirlwind of fury, Jer. 30. 23. The whirlwind of his Judgments ſhall be as quick as the whirlwind of their malice; a continual whirlwind, when the other is vaniſhing; it ſhall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked, when the other ſhall be as fruitleſs as a Snow-ball againſt a wall of Braſs. The Enemy beholds him not till he be upon him; for the clouds are as duſt under his feet, Nahum 1. 3. and obſcure his appearance, as the raiſing the Duſt doth the march of a Troop; he comes unawares upon them in a Cloud. The Execution is ſudden; They ſhall be cut down as graſs, Pſal. 37. 2. which this moment faceth the Sun, triumphing in its natural bravery, and the next moment is cut off from its Root with one ſhave of a Sythe. He quencheth them as Tow is quencht in Water, Iſa. 43. 17. as the ſnuff of a Candle is quench'd by being bruis'd by the fingers. He cuts them off as foam, the excrement of the water, Hoſ. 10. 7. which burſts in pieces like a bubble, on the ſudden. Vengeance comes upon Tyre and Sidon ſwiftly and ſpeedily, Joel 3. 4. Tyre comes of צור, which ſignifies to afflict; to ſtraiten. Sidon of צדה, the word ſignifies to purſue. All Perſecutors are threatned in Tyre and Sidon with a ſwift deſtruction. God delays the time to try the faith and patience of his People, to make the expected deliverance more ſweet and welcom, and mercy more ſingular. He may have ſome of the ſeed of Chriſt in the loins of ſome of his Enemies. But when he doth draw his Sword, he gives a ſudden blow before the Enemy fears it, or his People expect it. The Jews in Babylon, when the Chains of their Captivity were unlooſed, were like thoſe that dream, they could ſcarce believe they were freed, when the Enemy felt himſelf puniſh'd. In all other Plagues God ſent Moſes as an Herauld, with warning to Pharaoh; but in this God ſurpriſed him, and hurried him to deſtruction, without giving him any caution; Like chaff that the Tempeſt carrieth away, and is ſeen no more, Job 21. 18. So ſhall the Plagues of ſpiritual Ægypt come in one day, Rev. 18. 8. yea, in one hour, v. 17. And the Church ſhall be like a Lilly, which by the aſſiſtance of the Dew, flouriſheth in the morning, when over night it looked as if it were withered.

2. Magnificently. Sometimes in deliverance God puts the frame of nature in confuſion, He melts the mountains, cleaves the vallies, as wax before the fire and as waters poured down a ſteep place, Mic. 1. 4. i. e. He waſts the ſtrength and riches of his enemies when he comes to judge. When he appears in the generation of the righteous, he ſhall appear in ſuch glory, as to make the adverſaries in great fear, and ſtrike a terrour into them, Pſal. 14. 5. God will perform it in a prodigious and unuſual way. God might have taken off the wheels of the Ægyptian Chariots before they had entred the gap of the Sea, and hindred them from approaching ſo near his beloved people; he might have afflicted their hands with the palſy, and rendred them uncapable to manage their weapons; or might have ſent a ſpirit of æmulation among them and made them ſheath their ſwords in one anothers bowels. But though this had ſecured his people, it would not have rendred his operation ſo illuſtrious, as the making that which was a means of his peoples ſecurity, to be his Enemies deſtruction, and the waters at once Indulgent to the Iſraelites, and ſevere to the Ægyptians. He magnifies his Judgments and mercies by one and the ſame ſtroak, and drowns the Enemies, in the Sea, whereby he delivers the Iſraelites. So he preſerved Daniel in the midſt of thoſe Lions which devoured his accuſers. The more contrary things are to an eye of reaſon, the fitter ſubjects they are for the exaltation of God. As Chriſt the head, ſo the Church the body is raiſed out of the grave by the glory of God the Father, Rom. 6.4. His right hand ſhall find his enemies, Pſal. 21.8. his right hand ſhall teach him terrible things, Pſa. 45.4. Then ſhall he come with a ſhout, as one refreſhed with wine, recruited with new Spirits, and riſen from ſleep, Pſa. 78.65. He calls upon all creatures to be aſſiſtant to Cyrus in the deſign of his peoples deliverance, Iſa. 45. 8. He will perfect it by a way of creation. (I have created righteouſneſs to deliverance) with the manifeſtation of a creative power, & he makes things ſerve againſt their natural order appointed by God. Thus, when God ſhall appear for the final overthrow of ſpiritual Ægypt, he ſhall come with Voices, Thunders and Lightnings, an earthquake out of the temple, and appear as magnificently in the garb of a Judge, as he did on Sinai in that of a Law-giver, Rev. 16.19. and make the Ten horns, which were the ſupport of the beaſt, to be the Inſtruments of her deſolation, Rev. 17.16.

* They came out as a whirlwind to ſcatter me, Hab. 3. 14.

3. Severely. They ſank to the bottom like lead in the mighty waters. God ſends out the greateſt Judgments againſt thoſe that deal ſharply with his people greater than againſt any other part of the world, Zac. 6.6. The black horſes, the inſtrument of the execution of his Anger, were ſent towards Babylon, where his people were in Captivity; but the bay horſes of a mixt colour, noting a mixture of Mercy and Judgments, are ſent towards other parts of the world, to walk, not to run, ſignifying the patience of God to thoſe parts which had not yet oppreſt his people; God deals not ſo ſmartly with thoſe, as with them that are Enemies to Iſrael. In ſuch concerns he anſwers his people by terrible things in righteouſneſs: When he appears as a God of Salvation to his people, he appears terrible in his righteouſneſs to his Enemies, Pſa. 65. 5. By terrible things in righteouſneſs wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our Salvation. His Judgments ſhall be as terrible as they are righteous. The executioners of his vengeance ride upon horſes, to ſhew their readineſs to any warlike ingagement; upon red horſes of a bloody colour, to ſhew the ſeverity of their commiſſion againſt the Enemies of God, Zac. 1. 8. He will pay all arrears together, that they ſhall be forced to ſay, God is true to the word of his threatning, as well as that of his promiſe, As the Amalekites in Samuel's time payed the ſcores of their Anceſtors in the time of the Iſraelites travel through the wilderneſs, 1 Sam. 15.2. I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael, how he laid wait for him in the way when they came up from Ægypt. So when God reckons with Babylon for all the bloud of the Saints & Prophets, Rev. 18.20. The bloud of all the Prophets and Saints that were ſlain upon the earth, ſhall be found upon her skirts and avenged on her; and gives unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceneſs of his wrath, all that ſhe hath done ſhall come into his remembrance, Rev. 16.19. And how ſevere it ſhall be is expreſt, Rev. 14. 19, 20. ſhe ſhall be caſt into the great wine-preſs of the wrath of God, as grapes bruiſed with the greateſt ſtrength, and cruſhed in pieces both skin & ſtones. And to expreſs it more ſenſibly to our underſtandings, he ſpeaks of the flowing of the bloud out of the wine-preſs unto the horſe bridles, by the ſpace of a 1000 and 600 furlongs, two hundred miles; not that we ſhould underſtand it literally, but the Spirit of God is ſo particular in deſcribing the height of the deluge of bloud to the bridles of the horſes, the length of the floud to the ſpace of two hundred Miles, to ſet before our apprehenſion the ſeverity of the wrath that ſhall be poured out upon them. And as God never repented of his Judgments upon Ægypt, ſo never will he of thoſe which are to come upon Babylon.

4. Univerſally; and therefore ſeverely. The horſe and the rider did God caſt into the Sea; the Chariots, the Hoſt, and the choſen Captains were drowned there, Exod. 15.1,4. The waters covered the Enemy, there was not one of them left, Pſa. 60.11. Exod. 14. 28. Not a meſſenger to carry back the news; their floating bodies and wracks were the firſt that gave notice of the defeat to their remaining countrymen. God throws off all tenderneſs, his bowels are ſilent, he ſtrikes like a wrathful Enemy, lanceth not like a tender Chyrurgion; ſo ſhall it be with their partners in their ſins, every man that worſhips the Beaſt and his Image ſhall drink of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his Indignation, and whoever receiveth the mark of his name, Rev. 14.9,10,11. The Sun, the political power that defends it, ſhall be darkened; the rivers, whereby their traffick and riches come in to them, ſhall be dried up; all that have any dependance on them, recourſe to them, ſtand in the defence of the power of Ægypt, ſhall fall under the indignation of God.

5. Totally; Irrecoverably. They ſank as lead. God will make an utter end, Affliction ſhall not riſe up a 2*d time*, Nahum 1. 9,10, He overtakes them when they are drunk in the height of their pleaſure, while they are making their confederacies againſt the Church, while they are folden together like thorns, they ſhall be devoured like ſtubble fully dry. Ποιήσει τὴν ἐκδίκησιν, Luke 18. 7. He will avenge his own, he will avenge them ſpeedily; he will act ſo as if wrath were his only and proper work, he will do it to purpoſe, and perfectly: The Ægyptian carcaſſes lay as Trophies of the victory, Exod. 14. 30. Their former plagues had ſomething of patience; Puniſhment was inflicted, but life preſerved; Judgments ſent,

ſent, but upon promiſe of reformation quite removed: Now Patience folds her hands, and ſtands Spectator, while Juſtice opens hers, and becomes a ſole actor; mercy runs on the ſide of Iſrael, and wrath marcheth without any Impediment againſt the Ægyptians. As they like lead, ſo irrecoverably ſhall Babylon fall like a milſtone, in the depths of the Sea, and ſhall be found no more at all; all her mirth and jollity ſhall for ever ceaſe, Rev. 18. 21,22,23. When things fall to the bottom of the Sea, they are entombed there for ever; no skill can reſtore them to their former ſtation; when judgment turneth the key, and locks them in, there is no more opening the door.

6. And all this juſtly. Pharaoh had commanded that the Hebrew Male-children ſhould be expoſed to the mercy of the River, to find their death in the water as ſoon as they had breathed in the Air, Exod. 1. 22. And God makes them periſh in that Element, to which they had adjudged the harmleſs Infants. Now God pays the Law-maker, and his Counſellers with the ſame Coin, and makes the Malefactors food for the Inhabitants of the deep, who had before fed the Crocodiles with the blood of the Innocent. God ſhall reward Babylon as ſhe hath rewarded his people, and double unto her the cup ſhe hath filled for others, Rev 18. 6. Upon this account ſhall praiſe be given to God, that he hath given them bloud to drink, who have ſhed the blood of his Saints and Prophets, Rev. 16. 6. Thou art righteous O Lord, becauſe thou haſt judged thus. As ſhe hath kindled fires to conſume the witneſſes of Chriſt, ſo God ſhall kindle a fire to conſume her, Rev. 17. 16. She ſhall be utterly burnt with fire, Rev. 18. 8. Some think Rome will at length be conſumed with fire from Heaven; ſhe is indeed Spiritual Sodom, Rev. 11. 8. And as ſhe anſwers it in carnal and Spiritual ſins, ſhe may partake of the ſame viſible and Spiritual Judgments: Whether the puniſhment will be the ſame for kind I know not, but certainly it will be ſuch a kind of puniſhment whereby the judgments of God ſhall be read both in proportion, and kind of it, as a retaliation for her ſins; and the Scripture ſpeaks of fire coming down from God out of heaven upon the laſt Enemies of the Church, that ſhall Afflict the beloved City, alluding to the fire upon Sodom, and that which deſcended upon the Perſecutors of Elijah, Rev. 20. 9.

7. Wiſely. He cuts off the Spirits of princes, as he took off the Wheels of the Ægyptian Chariots, Pſa. 76. 12 Either by infatuating their Counſels, or turning them as the rivers of waters into other Channels. He ſtript the Ægyptians, Firſt of their wealth, and now Spoyls them of their ſtrength; he kept a bridle upon the waters, till the Enemies were got into the midſt of them, and then commands the Sea to ſwallow them up in the depths of her bowels. When men lay their Counſels deep, ſecond them by an invincible ſtrength, have almoſt brought them to their imagin'd period ready to bring forth, God diſappoints their hopes baffles their Counſels, renders their projects frothy, raiſeth a ſtorm and blows the ſhip from its harbour, contrary to its intended courſe, and glorifies his wiſdom, by overthrowing their deſigns, when they have brought them to a birth. He watches upon the evil to divert it from the innocent object upon the malicious actor. As God watches for the fitteſt ſeaſon to bring evil upon his people, Dan. 9. 14. he will be as diligent to watch for the fitteſt opportunity to bring Judgment on his Enemies. God hath promiſed vengeance, but he hath reſerved the knowledg of the due time to himſelf, when he will make their foot to ſlide, Deut. 32. 35. Every mercy is then moſt ſeaſonable. Uſually God lets men bring the ball almoſt to the goal, and then kicks it from them, and them from it: And the wiſdom of God hath been, and will be glorious in the overthrow of the remaining Enemies of the Church, in making them which were horns to defend the Beaſt, to be carpenters to ruine him, Rev. 17. 16.

Uſe 1. Of Comfort. How dear is the Church to God! When God was engaged in the deliverance of his people, he ſinks the ſtrength of Ægypt, rather than one hair of the Iſraelites heads ſhould periſh; they went ſafe over, while no man or horſe of the Enemies eſcap't. God gave Ægypt for Iſraels ranſom, Iſa. 43. 3. And the Sea ſhould have drowned the whole Land, rather than the Enemies have hurt his People. So did the contrivers of the Powder-Plot come to deſtruction, when not one hair of a head was loſt, or one ſplinter of the place they intended was ſhav'd off, by the prepared Gunpowder. God ſits in Heaven, and laughs at the little petty Deſigns of men, Pſal. 2. 4. God that is infinite to countermine them, infinitely powerful to defeat them, hath them in deriſion. Chriſt in glory mocks at the folly of earth-worms. The Decree of God, which ſettles Chriſt a King, aſſures him a Kingdom, and ſecures his People as it did his Perſon, Pſal. 2. 7. God is a Sun and a Shield; Pſal. 84. 11. a Shield to defend them, and a Sun to extinguiſh the fire of the Enemies fury, by ſhining upon it. God values no Nation for the ſecurity of his People. The Babylonians, a warlike Nation, ſhall ſink under the Army of Cyrus, for the Reſtauration of the captive Jews, Iſa. 43. 4. I will give men for thee, and people for thy life. He had given Ægypt for their Ranſom before, and Æthiopia and Seba, in the time of Aſa; and ſtill in after Ages God was of the ſame mind. God is as gracious to his People, as terrible to his Enemies: He is light to the one, when he is fire to the ſouls and bodies of the other, Iſa. 10. 17. Chriſt ſtill ſits the Watchman of Ephraim with God, Hoſ. 9. 8. He inſpects his Church, and waits to bring the day of Viſitation upon his Enemies. The Covenant is of ſpecial force with God to move him to deliver his People, Iſa. 63. 8. He ſaid, Surely they are my People, ſo he was their Saviour. It ſeems to refer to the deliverance from Ægypt. Shall I have ſo little regard to the League I have entred into with their Fathers, as to be unconcern'd in their miſery?

There

There is hope in Iſrael, till God forgets his Covenant, and Chriſt ſtrip himſelf of the name of a Saviour. Chriſt hath his Prieſtly habit in Heaven for his People, but Eyes as flames of fire, quick and piercing, to conſume the very hearts of his Enemies; and Feet like fine Braſs, to trample upon them, Rev. 1. 13, 14, 15. He is the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, to tear his Enemies, as well as a Lamb ſlain, to expiate the ſins of his People. He hath meekneſs for his Friends, and terrible Majeſty for his Enemies, Pſal. 45. 4. In thy Majeſty ride proſperouſly, becauſe of meekneſs. His kindneſs to his People makes him ride in Majeſty againſt the others. God will not be at reſt till he hath revenged the Cauſe of his People. Ægypt will be drowned, Babylon will fall, Rev. 18. 2. Chriſt can have no ſatisfaction without it. The Executioners of his Judgments in the North Country, which was Babylon, lying Northward from Jeruſalem, do quiet his Spirit; both as tending to the glory of his Juſtice, and the manifeſtation of his Mercy to his People, Zach. 6. 3. Chriſt will ſtain his garments in the blood of Edom, and Bozra, Iſa. 63. 2, 3. Edom the Poſterity of Eſau, Bozra a City of Moab, Types of the Churches Enemies. The Jewiſh Doctors by Edom in the Prophets underſtand Rome. Chriſt ſits in Heaven, till his Enemies be made his footſtool. All the time of his ſitting God is acting and preparing things for a final Iſſue. There is a ſtrong cry of Blood, and a file of Prayers; the one will be revenged, and the other will be anſwer'd. Their own pride and cruelty witneſs againſt them. God hath a noiſe of Petitions every day for a full end; a combin'd importunity will prevail. But clouds now hang over us, a gloomy ſtorm ſeems to threaten us. God may indeed blow over the cloud. Our Saviour hath the command of the ſtorms and winds in Heaven, as well as he had upon the Earth; the Pillar of the cloud, which hath hitherto conducted us, may be our Guardian in the Rear to defend us. But yet if he doth ſuffer them to prevail, they ſhall be but as Whisks to bruſh off the duſt, wiſps of Straw to cleanſe the filthy Pot. You know what is to be done with them, when their work is done. Their Language indeed is, Let Sion be defiled; but they underſtand not the counſel of the Lord, who in time will make the Horn of Sion Iron, and her Hoofs Braſs, Micah 4. 11. Though the Beaſts that aſcend out of the bottomleſs Pit do kill God's People, Rev. 11. 7. yet even in this Victory of theirs Satan himſelf ſhall be overcome. As when Chriſt was taken out from among the living by Satans means, it was but for a time; but himſelf was caſt out for ever; ſo after this Victory the Church ſhall overcome, Rev. 11. and God ſhall break the head of the Leviathan in the waters; and when he doth by his wiſdom contrive waies of ſalvation, he will by his power execute them, and ſave in ſuch a way as may moſt glorifie himſelf, and witneſs that the ſalvation was the immediate work of his arm, Hoſ. 2. 7. I will ſave them by the Lord their God.

2. Remember former deliverances in time of ſtraits. In our plenty of mercies we ſhould not be unmindful how near we were to the Pit, nor let the impreſſion of God's power, wiſdom and mercy wear off from our hearts. The Iſraelites were apt to forget the moſt ſignal mercies, though they had ſeen them, and had more ſenſibly taſted the ſweetneſs of them, than their Poſterity. God therefore often puts them in mind of them; The Lord that brought them out of the Land of Ægypt, out of the Iron Furnace, Deut. 4. 20. Hoſ. 12. 9. I the Lord your God from the Land of Ægypt, Ezek. 23. 3. It was the more fit to be remembred by them, becauſe many of them were fitter ſubjects for God's wrath with the Ægyptians, than for his delivering-kindneſs, ſince ſhe committed whoredoms in Ægypt in her youth, i.e. had been guilty of the Ægyptian Idolatry. Unmindfulneſs of former experiences may make you hopeleſs of future deliverances: The remembrance of former mercies is a ground of confidence in God for the like mercies for the future. God recalls to his Peoples minds, in their afflictions, the memorable defeat of the Moabites, by his ſole power, in the time of Jehoſhaphat's Reign; they ſhould from that deliverance hope for as great from the hands of God in their ſtraits. And Zech. 10. 11. God would have them conſider their deliverance at the Red Sea, as a ground of hope in the time of their diſtreſs.

3. Thankfully remember former deliverances. If we have not ſome praiſe for God, we may ſuſpect our ſelves. * 'Tis obſerved that the City Shuſhan, the Royal ſeat of the Perſian Monarchy, was pourtrayed upon the eaſt gate of the temple, not becauſe of the Perſian command, or becauſe of their fear of that King, as ſome think; but to have a thankful remembrance of the wonderful deliverance of Purim, which was wrought in Shuſhan, Eſth. 9. 26. If it had been only by the Perſians command, it would have been defaced after the fall of that Monarchy, which held but thirty four years after the building of the ſecond Temple. The 136. Pſalm is a good Copy, where is a threefold exhortation to thankfulneſs, in the beginning, and one at the end, and in the record of every mercy the burden of every verſe is, his mercy endureth for ever. How ſhould we imitate the Pſalmiſt? He broke the teeth of the invincible Leviathan in 88, and ſent a ſtrong wind to diſperſe the Fleet, for his mercy endureth for ever; God prevented the dreadful blaſt of Gun-powder, for his mercy endureth for ever. God ſent the light of the Goſpel into England, and freed it from the yoke of Antichriſts tyranny, for his mercy endures for ever. God hath been a wall of fire about Ireland in the protection of it, for his mercy endureth for ever. Let mercy receive the praiſe of what our own wiſdom and power could not effect. The way to overcome the ſame Enemies we fear, is to praiſe God for what he hath before acted againſt them. The ſtrength of a people conſiſts in praiſes, as well as praying, Pſa. 8. 2. Out of the mouths of babes and ſucklings haſt thou ordained ſtrength.

* Lightfoot Temple, cap. 3. p. 9.

ſtrength. In the Evangeliſt, thou haſt perfected praiſe, *Mat.*21.16. The more Hallelujahs we put up, the more occaſion God may give us for them. If we have any fears of the overflowing deluge, God formerly delivered us from, our non-improvement of thoſe deliverances, the fruits whereof we enjoy this day, may ſtrengthen our fears. When Iſrael was Idolatrous in Jeroboams reign, yet God delivered them from the Syrians, becauſe he ſaw their affliction was bitter, and there was no helper, yet when they did not thankfully improve it to a reformation, God denounced judgments againſt them for their Idolatry, 2 Kings 14. 26, 27. The Lord ſaid not that he would blot out the name of Iſrael; So that he had not yet denounced it, for he waited to ſee the improvement of this mercy. But before the end of Jeroboams reign by the prophet Hoſea, who began to propheſy in his time, he declared their final captivity, from whence they are not reſtored to this day. Praiſe for former mercies is a means to gain future ones; the Muſick of Voices in Jehoſhaphats camp, praiſing the beauty of holineſs, was a prologue of a deliverance from a formidable army, 2 Chron. 20. 21, 22. and more ſucceſsful than the warlike muſick of drums and trumpets.

4. Exerciſe faith on the power of God manifeſted in deliverances in the time of ſtraits. 'Tis not for want of ability in God, but for want of faith in us, that we at any time go groaning under miſery; Faith would quiet the Soul: When David relyed upon God, and found by experience God ſuſtaining him, he would not then be afraid of ten thouſand, *Pſa.*3.5,6. Let that be our carriage which is recorded of the Iſraelites after this memorable defeat, Exod. 14. 31: They believed the Lord, and his Servant Moſes. We muſt never expect to ſee Gods arm bare, without faith in him. Chriſt can do no great work, where unbelief is predominant. Unbelief doth not ſtrip God of his power, and mercy, but it ſtops the ſtreams and effluxes of it. Unbelief againſt experience is a double ſin; 'Tis groſs when againſt a bare word, worſe when againſt the word confirmed by a Witneſs. Iſrael was paſt thoughts of any relief in this ſtrait, but expected to periſh by the hand of their Enemies, yet God brought them into ſtraits in mercy, to bring them out of ſtraits with power; he makes their diſtreſs a ſnare to their Enemies, and a ſcaffold for their faith. That deliverance ought to be a foundation for our truſt in God, though beſtowed upon another Nation, yet not ſo much upon them as a State, but as a Church, and a type of thoſe future ones under the Goſpel, which are yet expected. Well then, truſt upon this foundation. Great truſt in God is a ſort of obligation upon God: Men out of generoſity will do much for them that depend upon them. Dependance on God magnifies his Attributes, this will bring deliverance, whereby God will magnify himſelf. Do not diſtruſt him, till you meet with an Enemy too ſtrong for him to quell, a red Sea too deep for him to divide, an affliction too ſturdy for him to rebuke, an Ægyptian too proud for him to maſter; Then part with your faith, but not till God hath parted with his power, which he hath formerly evidenc'd.

5. Expect and provide for ſharp conflicts. God brings into ſtraits before he delivers; Another deliverance is yet to come; the Churches diſtreſſes are not come to a period, Babylon hath another game to play. The right of the Devil to tyrannize over the Myſtical Body was taken away at the death of the head, yet he ſtill bruiſeth Chriſts heel, and bites, though he cannot totally overcome. As long as Chriſts Enemies are not made his foot-ſtool, as long as there is the ſeed of the Serpent in the World, as long as Chriſts members want a conformity to the head, Satans pinches muſt be expected; as long as the Beaſt is in being, he will make war with the followers of the Lamb; his power is to continue forty two months, to make war with the Saints, and to overcome them, Revel. 13. 5, 7. Forty two months or years. 'Tis like the time is not expir'd: One thouſand ſix hundred and twenty years, which make forty two months; no ending ſince he firſt had his power; when his time draws near to an end, he will bite ſharpeſt. This deliverance from Ægypt is yet again to be acted over, and that muſt be at the end, when the whole Iſrael of God ſhall be freed from Antichriſt, the Antitype of Pharaoh.

6. Yet let us not be afraid. Apoſtacies may be great; there will be but two Witneſſes; not two in number, but in regard of the fewneſs of thoſe that ſhall bear teſtimony to the Doctrine of Chriſt: there may be no Advocate for the Church: Sion may be an out-caſt, caſt out of the affection of many that ſerved or favoured her: But the ſharpeſt Convulſions in the world are preſages of an approaching Redemption, Luke 21. 28. and the Goſpel will ſhine clearer, as the Sun doth, after it hath been muffled with a thick Cloud. The words in the mouths of the Witneſſes, will be moſt killing and convincing. Fear not a natural above a ſupernatural Power. Was not all the Church God had in the world in as low a condition at the Red Sea? Not a Soul, that we read of, exempt (or but few, as Job, and ſome few others in other parts) yet the Church was then delivered for a Pattern, to ſhew forth the power of God in the Ages to come. What though there may be a want of Inſtruments? Are not all Inſtruments out-liv'd by God? Has God diſmiſt the care of his People? Is he not alwaies the Churches Guardian? He muſt be dethron'd, before he can be diſarmed. While Heaven is too high for humane hands to reach, the Church is too well guarded for them to conquer: Fear not, till Chriſt lets his Scepter fall out of his hands, and ceaſes to rule in the midſt of his Enemies, and flings away the Keys of Death and Hell; fear not till God ſtrips himſelf of his ſtrength, wherewith he is clothed; He is clothed with ſtrength, *Pſal.*93.1. Though there be little ſtrength in the Church, there is an Almighty one in their confederate. 'Tis no matter what the Enemy reſolves againſt what God ordains. Pharaoh intended to deſtroy, God intended to deliver. God will have his will, and Pharaoh's luſt goes unſatisfied. When the Enemies are moſt numerous, God ſhall darken their glory and ſtrength, and then ſhall he be the hope and ſtrength of his People, Joel 3. 14, 15, 16. The Valley of Achor, the Valley of the ſharpeſt trouble, ſhall be a door of hope, Hoſ. 2. 15. That God, that can create a World out of nothing, can create deliverance when there is no viſible means to produce it. What can be too hard for him that can work without materials, that can make matter when it is wanting, and call Non-Entities into being? He created the World with a word, and can deſtroy the ſturdieſt men in the world with a look. The ſtrongeſt Devil trembles before him, and the whole Seed of the Serpent is but as the duſt of the ballance before the breath of his mouth. He looked the Ægyptian Hoſt into diſorder, and their Chariot-wheels into a falling-ſickneſs, Exod. 14. 24. He created the World by a word: He reſtored Jeruſalem by a word, Iſa. 44. 26, 27. diſpirited Ægypt by a look. There is no need of an Arm; a word, and a look of Omnipotency will be efficacious both for the one and the other; one Royal Edict from him will perform it, Pſal. 44. 4. Thou art my King, command deliverance for Jacob. He hath Authority as a King, Engagement as the Churches King: As he hath right of Dominion, ſo he hath an Office of Protection, which the Church of right may claim; and is it Jacob that wants deliverance? be not afraid, but ſanctifie the Lord of Hoſts himſelf, Iſa. 8. 12, 13. To truſt in his Power, is to ſanctifie his name, and regard him as the Soveraign of all creatures, and the Lord of Hoſts. If we ſanctifie his name by relying on his Power, he will ſanctifie his name by engaging his Power.

7. To this end ſtudy the Promiſes God hath made to his Church, and what Predictions are upon Record. 'Tis a title of the faithful, that they are ſuch as keep the ſayings of the Book of the Revelation, Rev. 22. 9. The Angel that came to John, owns himſelf his fellow-ſervant, and of the Prophets, and thoſe that keep the ſayings of that Book. See God's Bond, and behold his witneſs; compare the promiſe, the prophecy, and performance: See his mercy in making them, his truth in performing them; let theſe be as the Hur and Aaron to ſupport the glory of God in our Souls. This will be a matter of praiſe, and furniſh us with Arguments to ſpread before God. Daniel firſt looked into the Book for the ſet time of the Jews return from Babylon, Dan. 9. 2. and took his riſe for pleas from thence. You may have need of this food; a Divine Promiſe is the beſt Cordial at a Stake or Gibbet, or when a Sword is at your breaſt.

8. When a time of ſtraits comes, wait patiently upon God: Let not hope ſink, when reaſon is non-pluſt by ſtorms, and ſees nothing but wracks. Wait upon God in the way of his Judgments, Iſa. 26. 8. in his ſtorms as well as calms. God waits to be gracious, and therefore we ſhould wait to be gratified. Not to wait, is to be partners in that ſin which brought deſtruction upon the Churches Enemies, viz. pride. It concerns God more in point of his glory, to haſten deliverance in its due time, than us in point of ſecurity; but there is as much danger in coming too ſoon, as too late. By waiting we imitate the higheſt pattern, who waits with patience for the Reformation of his Enemies, and Chriſt who waits for the total Victory. The longer God keeps the Church at any time under the Enemies Chains, the ſweeter will be his mercy to the one, and the ſeverer his Juſtice on the other. The Iſraelites waited, and God followed Pharaoh with Plagues, as he followed them with burdens, and took his time to cut off their Oppreſſors with moſt glory to himſelf, and moſt comfort to them. The Viſion hath its appointed time: Impatience will not make God break the Chains of his Reſolves, but Patience will bring down the bleſſing with great ſucceſs, and big with noble Births. God is not out of the way of his wiſdom and grace, and we can never keep in our way but by patience in waiting: By this we give him the honour of his wiſdom; by too much haſtineſs we check and controul him, and will not let him be the Maſter and Conductor of his own bleſſings. We many times get more good by waiting, than we do by enjoying a mercy: Such a poſture keeps the Soul humble and believing, whereas many times when we receive a mercy too haſtily with one hand, we let go faith and humility with the other. Sincere Souls have the ſtrongeſt and moſt heavenly raptures in a time of waiting, Iſa. 40. 31. They mount up with wings like Eagles.

9. In times of ſuch ſtraits, Be found only in a way of duty. If our ſtraits ſhould ever prove as hard as the Iſraelites at the red Sea, i. e. have ſomething of a reſemblance to their caſe, let us follow Moſes his counſel to them, Exod. 14. 13. Stand ſtill and ſee the ſalvation of the Lord. Let us not anticipate Gods gracious deſigns; if we will have our finger, where God only will have his arm, God may withdraw this arm and leave us to the weakneſs of our own fingers. Let them that want a God to relieve them, uſe ſinful, and unworthy ſhifts for their deliverance. If any ſucceſs be found out of the way of duty, it may be attended with a curſe, and want that favour of God which only can Sanctify it; We may purchaſe a preſent deliverance with a more durable plague at the end of it, becauſe we forfeit that favour which only can work a real freedom. Sinful ways do not glorify God, but diſparage him; our actions at ſuch a time pa rticularly ſhould adorn the goſpel, not diſcredit it, for it is by the Sword of his mouth that ſuch enemies will be deſtroyed, and every Sword cuts beſt when it is ſharpeſt and cleaneſt, not when it is blunt and ruſty. Not but that lawful means may, nay they muſt be uſed. Noah, though he went into the ark by Gods command, and was not to ſtir out without his order, yet he ſets open the windows, and ſends forth a Raven and a Dove to bring him notice when the waters were dryed up. 'Tis a fooliſh thing to offend God who only can help us in our ſtraits, and by our ſin to hold his Sword in his ſheath, which upon our obedience would be drawn for our relief. We know not how ſoon we may need him, and our diſtreſs be ſuch, that none but he can bring Salvation; let no ſin be a bar in the way.

10. Be much in prayer. Iſrael cryed unto the Lord before God did relieve, Exod. 14. 10. The perſecuted Church cryed travelling in birth, and found a ſecurity both for her ſelf and her off-ſpring, Rev. 12. 2. &c. The diſtreſs of the time is an argument to be uſed, Pſal. 123. 34. Have mercy upon us Lord, for we are exceedingly filled with Contempt. When Enemies are high, and acceſs to God free, 'tis an high contempt of God not to uſe the priviledge he allows us; and 'tis to truſt in an arm of fleſh rather than an arm of Omnipotence; to think him either inexorable, or unable. And for encouragement conſider, you have Chriſt arm'd againſt his Spouſes Enemies, and provided with merit to make her prayers ſucceſsful. Our prayers may at laſt be turned into praiſes: And we may ſay with David, Pſa. 9. 6. Oh thou enemy, deſtructions are come to a perpetual end.

H A

A DISCOURSE OF Delight in Prayer.

Pſal. 37. 4.

Delight thy ſelf alſo in the Lord, and he ſhall give thee the deſires of thy heart.

THis Pſalm in the beginning is a heap of Inſtructions: The great Leſſon intended in it is plac'd in verſe 1. Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of evil doers, neither be thou envious againſt the workers of iniquity. 'Tis reſum'd verſe 7, 8. where many Reaſons are alledged to enforce it.

Fret not.

1. Do not envy them. Be not troubled at their proſperity.

2. Do not imitate them. Be not provoked by their Glow-worm happineſs, to practice the ſame wickedneſs to arrive to the ſame proſperity.

3. Be not ſinfully impatient and quarrel, not with God, becauſe he hath not by his providence allowed thee the ſame meaſures of proſperity in the world. Accuſe him not of injuſtice and cruelty, becauſe he afflicts the good, and is indulgent to the wicked. Leave him to diſpenſe his bleſſings according to his own mind.

4. Condemn not the way of Piety and Religion wherein thou art. Think not the worſe of thy Profeſſion, becauſe it is attended with Affliction.

The reaſon of this Exhortation is rendred v. 2. For they ſhall ſoon be cut down as the graſs, and wither as the green herb; amplified by a ſimilitude or reſemblance of their proſperity to graſs: Their happineſs hath no ſtability; it hath like graſs, more of colour and ſhow, than ſtrength and ſubſtance. Graſs nods this and that way with every wind. The mouth of a Beaſt may pull it up, or the foot of a Beaſt may tread it down; the ſcorching Sun in Summer, or the fainting Sun in Winter, will deface its complexion.

The Pſalmiſt then proceeds to poſitive duties, v. 3.

1. Faith. Truſt in the Lord. This is a grace moſt fit to quell ſuch impatiencies. The ſtronger the faith, the weaker the paſſion. Impatient motions are ſigns of a flagging faith. Many times Men are ready to caſt off their help in Jehovah, and addreſs to the God of Ekron, multitudes of friends or riches. But truſt thou in the Lord; in the promiſes of God, in the providence of God.

2. Obedience. Do good. Truſt in God's promiſes, and obſervance of his precepts muſt be linkt together. 'Tis but a pretended truſt in God, where there is a real walking in the paths of wickedneſs. Let not the gliſter of the world render thee faint and languid in a courſe of Piety.

3. The keeping our ſtation. Do good. Becauſe wicked men flouriſh, hide not thy ſelf therefore in a corner, but keep thy ſphere, run thy Race. And verily thou ſhalt be fed; have every thing needful for thee. And now, becauſe men delight in that wherein they truſt, the Pſalmiſt diverts us from all other objects of delight, to God as the true object. Delight thy ſelf in the Lord; place all thy pleaſure and joy in him. And becauſe the motive expreſſeth the anſwer of prayer, the duty enjoyned ſeems to reſpect the act of prayer, as well as the object of prayer; Prayer coming from a delight in God, and a delight in ſeeking him. Truſt is both the ſpring of joy and the ſpring of Supplication. When we truſt him for ſuſtenance and preſervation, we ſhall receive them; ſo when we delight in ſeeking him, we ſhall be anſwered by him.

1. The

1. The Duty. In the act, Delight. In the object, the Lord.

2. The motive. He ſhall give thee the deſires of thy heart, the moſt ſubſtantial deſires, thoſe deſires which he approves of; The deſire of thy heart as gracious, though not the deſire of thy heart as carnal: The deſire of thy heart as a Chriſtian, though not the deſire of thy heart as a creature. He ſhall give, God is the object of our joy, and the author of our comfort.

Doctrine. Delight in God, in ſeeking him only, procures gracious anſwers; or, without chearful prayers, we cannot have gracious anſwers.

There are two parts. 1. Chearfulneſs on our parts. 2. Grants on Gods part.

1 Chearfulneſs and delight on our parts. Joy is the tuning the Soul. The command to rejoyce precedes the command to pray, 1 Theſ. 5. 16, 17. Rejoyce evermore, pray without ceaſing. Delight makes the melody, prayer elſe will be but a harſh ſound. God accepts the heart only, when it is a gift given, not forc'd. Delight is the marrow of Religion.

1. Dulneſs is not ſuitable to the great things we are chiefly to beg for. Goſpel-diſcoveries are a feaſt, Iſa. 25. 6. Dulneſs becomes not ſuch a ſolemnity. Manna muſt not be ſought for with a dumpiſh heart. With joy we are to draw water out of the Wells of Salvation, Iſa. 12. 3. Faith is the bucket, but joy and love are the hands that move it. They are the Hur and Aaron that hold up the hands of this Moſes. God doth not value that mans ſervice, who accounts not his ſervice a priviledge and a pleaſure.

2. Dulneſs is not ſuitable to the Duty. Goſpel-duties are to be performed with a Goſpel-temper. God's People ought to be a willing people, Pſa. 110. 3. נדבות, a people of willingneſs: As though in prayer no other faculty of the Soul had its exerciſe but the will. This muſt breathe fully in every word; as the ſpirit in Ezekiel's wheels. Delight, like the Angel *, muſt aſcend in the ſmoke and flame of the Soul. Though there be a kind of union by contemplation, yet the real union is by affection. A man cannot be ſaid to be a ſpiritual King, if he doth not preſent his performances with a Royal and Prince-like ſpirit. 'Tis for vigorous wreſtling that Jacob is called a Prince, Gen. 32. 28.

* Judg. 13. 20.

This Temper is eſſential to grace. Natural men are deſcribed to be of a heavy and weary temper in the offering of Sacrifices, Mal. 1. 13. It was but a ſickly, lame Lamb they brought for an offering, and yet weary of it, that which was not fit for their table they thought fit for the Altar.

In the handling this Doctrine I ſhall ſhew,

1. What this delight is.
2. Whence it ſprings.
3. The reaſons of the doctrine.
4. The uſe.

1. What this delight is. Delight properly is an affection of the mind that Springs from the poſſeſſion of a good which hath been ardently deſired. This is the top ſtone, the higheſt ſtep, delight is but an Embryo till it come to fruition, and that certain and immutable; Otherwiſe, if there be probability or poſſibility of loſing that which we have preſent poſſeſſion of, the fear of it is as a drop of gall that infects the ſweetneſs of this paſſion; delight properly is a ſilencing of deſire, and the banquet of the Soul on the preſence of its deſired object.

But there is a delight of a lower ſtamp.

1. In deſires. There is a delight in deſire, as well as in fruition. A chearfulneſs in labour, as well as in attainment. The deſire of Canaan made the good Iſraelites chearful in the wilderneſs. There is an inchoate delight in motion, but a conſummate delight in reſt and fruition.

2. In hopes. Deſired happineſs affects the Soul; much more expected happineſs, Rom. 5. 2. We rejoyce in the hope of the glory of God. Joy is the natural iſſue of a well grounded hope. A tottering expectation will engender but a tottering delight: Such a delight will Mad-men have, which is rather to be pitied than deſired. But if an imaginary hope can affect the heart with ſome real joy, much more a hope ſetled upon a ſure bottom, and raiſed upon a good foundation There may be joy in a title as well as in poſſeſſion.

3. In contemplation. The conſideration and ſerious thoughts of heaven do affect a gracious heart, and fill it with pleaſure, tho it ſelf be as if in a wilderneſs. The near appproach to a deſired good doth much affect the heart. Moſes was ſurely more pleaſed with the ſight of Canaan from Piſgah, than with the hopes of it in the deſert A travellers delight is more raiſed when he is neareſt his journeys end, and a hungry ſtomach hath a greater joy when he ſees the meat approaching which muſt ſatisfy the appetite. As the Union with the object is nearer, ſo the delight is ſtronger. Now this delight the Soul hath in duty, is not a delight of fruition, but of deſire, hope, or contemplation; Gaudium via, not patria.

1. We may conſider delight as Active or Paſſive.

1. Active, which is an act of our Souls in our approaches to God. When the heart like the Sun rouzeth up itſelf as a Gyant to run a ſpiritual race.

2. Paſſive. Which is Gods diſpenſation in approaches to us, and often met with in our chearful addreſſes to God, Iſa. 64. 5. Thou meeteſt him that rejoiceth and works righteouſneſs. When we delightfully claſp about the Throne of grace, God doth often caſt his arms about our necks: Eſpecially when chearful prayer is accompanyed with a chearful obedience. This joy is, when Chriſt meets us in prayer with a be of good cheer, thy ſins are forgiven, thy requeſt granted. The active delight is the health of the Soul, the paſſive is the good complexion of the Soul. The one is mans duty, the other Gods peculiar gift. The one is the inſeparable property of the new birth, the other a ſeparable priviledge. There may be a joy in God, when there is little joy from God. There may be Gold in the Mine, when no flowers on the ſurface.

2. We may conſider delight as ſetled or tranſient: As Spiritual or Senſitive.

1. A ſetled delight. In ſtrong and grown Chriſtians, when prayer proceeds out of a thankfulneſs to God, a judicious knowledg and apprehenſion of God. The nearer to God the more delight: As the motion of a ſtone is moſt ſpeedy when neareſt its Center.

2. A Senſitive delight. As in perſons troubled in mind, there may be a kind of delight in prayer, becauſe there is ſome ſenſe of eaſe in the very venting itſelf; And in ſome, becauſe of the novelty of a duty they were not accuſtom'd to before. Many prayers may be put up by perſons in neceſſity without any Spiritual delight in them; As crazy perſons take more Phyſick than thoſe that are healthful, and obſerve the Spring and Fall, yet they delight not in that Phyſick. The Phariſee could pray longer, and perhaps with ſome delight too, but upon a ſenſual ground, with a proud and a vaunting kind of chearfulneſs, a delight in himſelf; When the Publican had a more ſpiritual delight; Though a humble ſorrow, in the conſideration of his own vileneſs, yet a delight in the conſideration of Gods mercy. This ſenſitive delight may be more ſenſible in a young, than in a grown Chriſtian. There is a more ſenſible affection at the firſt meeting of friends, though more ſolid after ſome converſe; As there is a love which is called the love of the eſpouſals. As it is in ſorrow for ſin, ſo in this delight; A young convert hath a greater torrent, a grown Chriſtian a more conſtant ſtream; As at the firſt converſion of a ſinner there is an overflowing joy among the Angels, which we read not of after, though without queſtion there is a ſettled joy in them at the growth of a Chriſtian. An elder ſon may have a delight in his Fathers preſence more rooted, firm and rational, than a younger child that clings more about him with affectionate expreſſions. As ſincerity is the Soul of all graces and duties, ſo this delight is the luſtre and embroydery of them.

Now this Delight in Prayer,

1. 'Tis an inward and hearty delight. As to the ſubject of it, it is ſeated in the heart. A man in prayer may have a chearful countenance and a drowſy ſpirit. The Spirit of God dwells in the heart, and love and joy are the firſt-fruits of it, Gal. 5. 22. Love to duty, and joy in it; joy as a grace, not as a meer comfort. As God is hearty in offering mercy, ſo is the Soul in petitioning for it. There is a harmony between God and the heart. Where there is delight, there is great pains taken with the heart; a gracious heart ſtrikes it ſelf again and again; As Moſes did the rock twice. Thoſe ends which God hath in giving, are a Chriſtians ends in asking. Now the more of our hearts in the requeſts, the more of Gods heart in the grants. The Emphaſis of mercy is Gods whole heart and whole Soul in it, Jer. 22. 41. So the Emphaſis of duty is our whole Heart and whole Soul. As without Gods chearful anſwering, a gracious Soul would not reliſh a mercy, ſo without our hearty asking God doth not reliſh our prayer.

2. 'Tis a delight in God who is the Object of Prayer. The glory of God, communion with him, enjoyment of him is the great end of a believer in his Supplications. That delight which is in prayer, is chiefly in it as a means conducing to ſuch an end, and is but a ſpark of that delight which the Soul hath in the object of prayer. Godis the Center wherein the Soul reſts, and the end which the Soul aims at. According to our apprehenſions of God are our deſires, for him, when we apprehend him as the chiefeſt good, we ſhall deſire him, and delight in him, as the chiefeſt good. There muſt firſt be a delight in God, before there can be a ſpiritual delight, or a permanency in duty, Job 27. 10. Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? will he always call upon God? Delight is a grace; and as faith, deſire, and love, have God for their object, ſo hath this. And according to the ſtrength of our delight in the object or end, is the ſtrength of our delight in the means of attainment. When we delight in God as glorious, we ſhall delight to honour him, when we regard him as good, we ſhall delight to purſue and enjoy him, and delight in that which brings us to an intercourſe with him. He that rejoyces in God, will rejoyce in every approach to him. The joy of the Lord is our ſtrength, Neh. 8. 10. The more joy in God, the more ſtrength to come to him. The want of this is the reaſon of our Snail-like motion to him. Men have no ſweet thoughts of God, and therefore no mind to converſe with him. We cannot judg our delight in prayer to be right, if we have not a delight in God; for natural men may have a delight in prayer, when they have corrupt and ſelfiſh ends; they may have a delight in a duty, as it is a means, according to their apprehenſions, to gain ſuch an end: As Balaam and Balak offered their Sacrifice chearfully, hoping to ingratiate themſelves with God, and to have liberty to curſe his people.

3. A delight in the precepts and promiſes of God, which are the ground and rules of Prayer.

First David delights in Gods teſtimonies, and then calls upon him with his whole heart. A gracious heart muſt firſt delight in precepts and promiſes, before it can turn them into prayers; For prayer is nothing elſe but a preſenting God with his own promiſe, deſiring to work that in us, and for us, which he hath promiſed to us. None was more chearful in prayer than David, becauſe none was more rejoycing in the ſtatutes of God. Gods ſtatutes were his Songs, Pſa. 119.54. And the divine Word was ſweeter to him than the hony and hony-comb. If our hearts leap not at divine promiſes, we are like to have but drowſy Souls in deſiring them. If our eye be not upon the dainties God ſets before us, our deſires cannot be ſtrong for him. If we have no delight in the great charters of heaven, the rich legacies of God, how can we ſue for them? If we delight not in the covenant of grace, we ſhall not delight in prayers for grace. It was the hopes of reward made Moſes ſo valiant in ſuffering, and the joy ſet before Chriſt in a promiſe, made him ſo chearful in enduring the ſhame. Heb. 12. 1. 2.

4. A delight in prayer itſelf. A Chriſtians heart is in ſecret raviſht into heaven. There is a delight in coming near God, and warming the ſoul by the fire of his love. The Angels are chearful in the act of praiſe, their work is their glory. A holy Soul doth ſo delight in this duty, that if there were no command to engage him, no promiſe to encourage him, he would be ſtepping into Gods Courts. He thinks it not a good day, that paſſeth without ſome intercourſe with God. David would have taken up his lodgings in the Courts of God, and regards it as the only bleſſedneſs, Pſalm. 65. 4. And ſo great a delight he had in being in Gods preſence, that he envies the birds the happineſs of building their neſts near his Tabernacle. A delight there is in the holineſs of Prayer; a natural man under ſome troubles may delight in Gods comforting and eaſing preſence, but not in his ſanctifying preſence. He may delight to pray to God as a ſtorehouſe to ſupply his wants, but not as a refiners fire to purge away his droſs. Prayer, as Praiſe, is a melody to God in the heart, Eph. 5. 19. And the Soul loves to be fingering the inſtrument and touching the ſtrings.

5. A delight in the things askt. This heavenly chearfulneſs is moſt in heavenly things. What delight others have in asking worldly goods, that a gracious heart hath in begging the light of Gods countenance. That ſoul cannot be dull in prayer, that ſeriouſly conſiders he prays for no leſs than heaven and happineſs; no leſs than the glory of the great God. A gracious man is never weary of ſpiritual things, as men are never weary of the Sun, but though it is enjoyed every day, yet long for the riſing of it again. From this delight in the matter of prayer it is, that the Saints have redoubled and repeated their Petitions, and often double the Amen at the end of Prayer, to manifeſt the great affections to thoſe things they have askt. The Soul loves to think of thoſe things the heart is ſet upon; and frequent thoughts expreſs a delight.

6. A delight in thoſe graces and affections which are Exerciſed in Prayer. A gracious heart is moſt delighted with that prayer wherein grace hath been more ſtirring, and gracious affections have been boyling over. The Soul deſires not only to ſpeak to God, but to make melody to God; the heart is the inſtrument, but graces are the ſtrings, and prayer the touching them, and therefore he is more diſpleaſed with the flagging of his graces than with miſſing an anſwer. There may be a delight in gifts, in a mans own gifts, in the gifts of another, in the pomp and varniſh of devotion; But a delight in exerciſing ſpiritual graces is an ingredient in this true delight. The Phariſees are markt by Chriſt to make long prayers, vaunting in an outward bravery of words, as if they were playing the Courtiers with God, and complementing him: But the Publican had a ſhort prayer, but more grace; Lord be merciful to me a ſinner; There is relyance and humility; A gracious heart labours to bring flaming affections, and if he cannot bring flaming grace, he will bring ſmoaking grace: he deſires the preparation of his heart as well as the anſwer of his prayer, Pſalm. 10. 17.

2. Whence this delight ſprings.

1. From the Spirit of God. Not a ſpark of fire upon our own hearth, that is able to kindle this Spiritual delight; 'Tis the holy Ghoſt that breaths ſuch an heavenly heat into our affections. The Spirit is the fire that kindles the Soul, the ſpring that moves the watch, the wind that drives the ſhip. The ſwifteſt ſhip with ſpread ſails will be but ſluggiſh in its motion, unleſs the wind fills its ſails; without this Spirit we are but in a weak and ſickly condition, our breath, but ſhort, a heavy and troubleſome Aſthma is upon us, Pſal. 138. 3. When I cryed unto thee, thou didſt ſtrengthen me with ſtrength in my Soul. As prayer is the work of the Spirit in the heart, ſo doth delight in prayer owe itſelf to the ſame author. God will make them joyful in his houſe of prayer, Iſa. 56. 7.

2. From grace. The Spirit kindles, but gives us the Oyl of grace to make the lamp burn clear. There muſt not only be wind to drive, but ſails to catch it; a prayer without grace is a a prayer without wings. There muſt be grace to begin it. A dead man cannot rejoice in his Land, Money or Food, he cannot act, and therefore cannot be chearful in action: Chearfulneſs ſuppoſeth life: dead men cannot perform a duty, (Pſal. 115. 17. the dead praiſe not the Lord,) nor dead ſouls a chearful duty. There muſt not only be grace infuſed, but grace actuated. No man in a ſleep or ſwoon, can rejoice. There muſt not only be a living principle, but a lively operation. If the ſap lurk only in the root, the branches can bring forth no fruit; our beſt prayers without the ſap of grace diffuſing itſelf, will be but as withered branches. Grace actuated puts heat into performances, without which they are but benum'd and frozen,

* Reynolds. frozen *. Ruſty grace, as a ruſty Key, will not unlock, will not enlarge the heart. There muſt be grace to maintain it. There is not only need of fire to kindle the lamp, but of Oyl to preſerve the flame; natural men may have their affections kindled in a way of common working, but they will preſently faint and dye, as the flame of cotton will dimm and vaniſh, if there be no Oyl to nouriſh it. There is a temporary joy in hearing the word; and if in one duty, why not in another? why not in prayer? Mat. 13. 20. Like a fire of thorns that makes a great blaze, but a ſhort ſtay.

3. From a good Conſcience. A good heart is a continual feaſt, Prov. 15. 15. He that hath a good conſcience muſt needs be chearful in his religious and civil duties. Guilt will come trembling, and with a ſad countenance into the preſence of Gods Majeſty. A guilty child cannot with chearfulneſs come into a diſpleaſed fathers preſence. A Soul ſmoakt with Hell cannot with delight approach to heaven. Guilty Souls in regard of the injury they have done to God, will be afraid to come; and in regard of the ſoot of Sin wherewith they are defiled, and the blackneſs they have contracted, they will be aſhamed to come. They know that by their ſins they ſhould provoke his anger, not allure his love. A Soul under conſcience of ſin cannot look up to God, Pſal. 40. 12. Nor will God with favour look down upon it, Pſal. 59. 2. It muſt be a pure heart that muſt ſee him with pleaſure, Mat. 5. 8. And pure hands muſt be lifted up to him, 1 Tim. 2. 8. Jonah was aſleep after his ſin, and was outſtript in quickneſs to pray, even by Idolaters. The marriners jogg him, but could not get him, that we read of, to call upon that God whom he had offended, Jon. 1. Where there is corruption, the ſparks of ſin will kindle that tinder, and weaken a Spiritual delight. A perfect heart and a willing mind are put together, 1 Chron. 29. 2. There cannot be willingneſs without ſincerity, nor ſincerity without willingneſs.

4. From a holy and frequent familiarity with God. Where there is a great familiarity, there is a great delight; delight in one anothers company, and delight in one anothers converſe; ſtrangeneſs contracts, and familiarity dilates the Soul. There is more alacrity in going to a God with whom we are acquainted, than to a God to whom we are ſtrangers. This doth encourage the Soul to go to God; I go to a God whoſe face I have ſeen, whoſe goodneſs I have taſted, with whom I have often met in prayer. Frequent familiarity makes us more apprehenſive of the excellency of another; an excellency apprehended will be beloved, and being beloved will be delighted in.

5. From hopes of ſpeeding. There is an expectative delight which ariſeth from hopes of enjoying, Rom. 12. 12. Rejoycing in hope. There cannot be a pleaſant motion, where there is a palſie of doubts. How full of delight muſt that Soul be, that can plead a promiſe, and carry God's hand and ſeal to Heaven, and ſhew him his own Bond; when it can be pleaded not only as a favour to engage his mercy, but in ſome ſenſe a debt to engage his truth and righteouſneſs! Chriſt in his prayer, which was his Swan-like ſong, John 17. pleads the terms of the Covenant between his Father and himſelf; I have glorified thee on Earth, glorifie me with that glory I had with thee before the world was. This is the caſe of a delightful approach, when we carry a Covenant of grace with us for our ſelves, and a promiſe of ſecurity and perpetuity for the Church. Upon this account we have more cauſe of a pleaſant motion to God, than the ancient Believers had. Fear acted them under the Law, Love us under the Goſpel. He cannot but delight in prayer, that hath Arguments of God's own framing to plead with God, who cannot deny his own Arguments and Reaſonings. Little comfort can be ſuckt from a perhaps. But when we come to ſeek Covenant-mercies, God's faithfulneſs to his Covenant puts the mercy paſt a perhaps. We come to a God ſitting upon a Throne of Grace, upon Mount Sion, not on Mount Sinai; to a God that deſires our preſence, more than we deſire his aſſiſtance.

6. From a ſenſe of former mercies and acceptation. If Manna be rained down, it doth not only take off our thoughts from Ægyptian Garlick, but quickens our deſires for a ſecond ſhower. A ſenſe of God's Majeſty will make us loſe our gariſhneſs; and a ſenſe of God's Love will make us loſe our dumpiſhneſs. We may as well come again with a merry heart, when God accepts our prayers, as go away and eat our bread with joy when God accepts our works, Eccleſ. 9. 7. The Doves will readily fly to the windows, where they have formerly found ſhelter; and the Beggar to the door where he hath often received an Alms. Becauſe he hath inclined his ear to hear me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live, Pſal. 116. 2. I have found refuge with God before; I have found my wants ſupplied, my ſoul raiſed, my temptations check'd, my doubts anſwered, and my prayers accepted, therefore I will repeat my Addreſſes with chearfulneſs.

I might add alſo other Cauſes; as a love to God, a heavenlineſs of ſpirit, a conſideration of Chriſt's Interceſſion, a deep humiliation. The more unpleaſant ſin is to our reliſh, the more delightful will God be, and the more chearful our Souls in Addreſſes to him. The more unpleaſant ſin is to us, the more ſpiritual our Souls are; and the more ſpiritual our Souls, the more ſpiritual our Affections: The more ſtony, the more lumpiſh and unapt for motion; the more contrite, the more agil: From a ſpiritual taſt; report of a thing may contribute ſome pleaſure, but a taſt greater.

3. Reaſons. Without chearful ſeeking we cannot have a gracious Anſwer.

1. God will not give an anſwer to thoſe prayers that diſhonour him A flat and dumpiſh temper per is not for his honour. The Heathens themſelves thought their gods ſhould not be put off with a Sacrifice dragg'd to the Altar. We read of no Lead, that lumpiſh earthly metal, imployed about the Tabernacle or Temple, but the purer and moſt gliſtering ſorts of metals. God will have the moſt excellent Service, becauſe he is the moſt excellent Being. He will have the moſt delightful Service, becauſe he beſtows the moſt delightful and excellent gifts. All Sacrifices were to be offered up with fire, which is the quickeſt, and moſt active Element. 'Tis a diſhonour to ſo great, ſo glorious a Majeſty, to put him off with ſuch low and dead-hearted Services. Thoſe Petitions cannot expect an anſwer, which are offered, in a manner injurious to the perſon we addreſs to. 'Tis not for the credit of our great Maſter, to have his Servants dejected in his work? As though his Service were an uncomfortable thing; as though God were a Wilderneſs, and the World a Paradiſe.

2. Dull and lumpiſh Prayer doth not reach him, and therefore cannot expect an anſwer. Such deſires are as Arrows that ſink down at our feet; there is no force to carry them to Heaven: The heart is as an unbent Bow, that hath no ſtrength. When God will hear, he makes firſt a prepared heart, Pſal. 10. 17. He firſt ſtrings the Inſtrument, and then receives the ſound. An enlarged heart only runs, Pſal. 119. 32. A contracted heart moves ſlowly, and often faints in the Journey.

3. Lumpiſhneſs ſpeaks an unwillingneſs that God ſhould hear us. It ſpeaks a kind of a fear that God ſhould grant our Petitions. He that puts up a Petition to a Prince coldly and dully, gives him good reaſon to think, that he doth not care for an anſwer. That Husbandman hath no great mind to a Harveſt, that is lazy in tilling his ground, and ſowing his ſeed. How can we think God ſhould delight to read over our Petitions, when we take ſo little delight in preſenting them? God gives not mercy to an unwilling perſon. The firſt thing God doth, is to make his People willing. Dull ſpirits ſeek God as if they did not care for finding him: Such tempers either account not God real, or their Petitions unneceſſary.

4. Without delight we are not fit to receive a mercy. Delight in a mercy wanted, makes room for deſire; and large deſires make room for mercy. If no delight in begging, there will be no delight in enjoying. If there be no chearfulneſs to quicken our prayers when we need a bleſſing, there will be little joy to quicken our praiſe when we receive a bleſſing. A weak, ſickly ſtomack is not fit to be ſeated at a plentiful table. Where there is a dull asking ſupply, there is none, or a very dull ſenſe of wants. Now God will not ſend his mercies but to a Soul that will welcome them. The deeper the ſenſe of our wants, the higher the eſtimation of our Supplies. A chearful Soul is fit to receive the leaſt, and fit to receive the greateſt mercy. He will more prize a little mercy than a dull petitioner ſhall prize a greater, becauſe he hath a ſenſe of his wants. Had not Zacheus had a great joy at the news of Chriſts coming by his door, he had not ſo readily entertained and welcomed him.

Uſe 1. Of Information.

1. There is a great pleaſure in the ways of God, if rightly underſtood. Prayer, which is a duty wherein we expreſs our wants, is delightful. There is more ſweetneſs in a Chriſtians asking than in a wicked mans enjoying bleſſings.

2. What delight will there be in heaven! If there be ſuch ſweetneſs in deſire, what will there be in full fruition! There is joy in ſeeking, what is there then in finding! Duty hath its ſweets, its thouſands, but glory its ten thouſands. If the pleaſure of the ſeed-time be ſo great, what will the pleaſure of the harveſt be!

3. The miſerable condition of thoſe that can delight in any thing but prayer. 'Tis an aggravation of our enmity to God, when we can ſin chearfully, and pray dully: When duty is more lothſome than iniquity.

Uſe 2. Of Examination. We pray, but how are our hearts? If it be for what concerns our momentary being, is not our running like the running of Ahimaaz? But when for Spiritual things, do not our hearts ſink within us, like Nabals? Let us therefore follow our hearts cloſe, ſuffer them not to give us the ſlip in our examination of them, reſolve not to take the firſt anſwer, but ſearch to the bottom.

1. Whether we delight at all in prayer?

1. How do we prize the opportunities of duty? There is an opportunity of an earthly, and an opportunity of a heavenly gain; conſider which our hearts more readily cloſe with. Can we with much pleaſure follow a vain world, and heartleſly welcom an opportunity of duty, delight more with Judas in baggs, than in Chriſts company? This is ſad. But are praying opportunities our feſtival times? Do we go to the houſe of God with the voice of joy & praiſe?

2. Whether we ſtudy excuſes to wave a preſent duty, when conſcience and opportunity urge and invite us to it.? Are our Souls more skillful in delaies than in performances? Are there no excuſes when ſin calls us, and ſtudyed put-offs when God invites us? Like the ſluggard, folding our arms, yet a little while longer? Or do our hearts riſe and beat quick againſt frivolous excuſes that ſtep in to hinder us from prayer?

3. How are our hearts affected in prayer? Are we more ready to pray our ſelves aſleep, than into a vigorous frame? Do we enter into it with ſome life, and find our hearts quickly tire and jade us? Are we more awake when we are up, than we were all the time upon our knees? are our hearts in prayer like withered, ſapleſs things, and very quick afterwards, if any worldly buſineſs invite us? Are we like logs and blocks in prayer, and like a

Roe.

Roe upon the mountains in earthly concerns? Surely what our pulſe beats quickeſt to, is the object moſt delighted in.

4. What time is it we chooſe for Prayer? Is it not our drowzieſt, lazyeſt time, when our nods are as many, or more than our petitions; as though the dulleſt time and the deadeſt frame were moſt ſutable to a living God? Do we come with our hearts full of the world to pray for heaven? Or do we pick out the moſt lively ſeaſons? Luther choſe thoſe hours for prayer and meditation, wherein he found himſelf moſt lively for ſtudy.

5. Do we not often wiſh a duty over? As thoſe in the Prophet that were glad when the Sabbath was over, that they might run to their buying and ſelling? Or, are we of Peter's temper, and expreſs Peter's Language, 'Tis good to be here with Chriſt on the Mount?

6. Do we prepare our ſelves by delightful and enlivening conſiderations? Do we think of the Precept of God, which ſhould ſpur us, and of the Promiſe of God, which ſhould allure us? Do we rub our Souls to heat them? Do we blow them to kindle them into a flame? Do we ſend up Ejaculations for a quickening ſpirit? If thoughts of God be a burden, requeſts to him will not be a pleaſure. If we have a coldneſs in our thoughts of God and Duty, we can have no warmth in our deſire, no delight in our Petitions.

7. Do we content our ſelves with dull motions, or do we give check to them? Can we, though our hearts be never ſo lazy, ſtroke our ſelves at the end, and call our ſelves good and faithful Servants? Do we take our Souls to task afterwards, and examine why they are ſo lazy, why ſo heavy? Do we enquire into the cauſes of our deadneſs? A gracious Soul is more troubled at its dulneſs in prayer, than a natural conſcience is at the omiſſion of prayer. He will complain of his ſluggiſhneſs, and mend his pace.

2. If we find we have a delight, let us examine whether it be a delight of the right kind.

1. Do we delight in it, becauſe of the gifts we have our ſelves, or the gifts of others we joyn with? A man may rejoyce in hearing the Word, not becauſe of the holineſs and ſpirituality of the matter, but becauſe of the goodneſs of the dreſs, and the elegancy of the expreſſion, Ezek. 33. 32. The Prophet was unto them as a lovely Song, as one that had a pleaſant voice. He may upon the ſame ground delight in prayer. But this is a temper not kindled by the true fire of the Sanctuary. Or, do we delight in it, not when our Tongues are moſt quick, but our hearts moſt warm; not becauſe we have the beſt words, but the moſt ſpiritualiz'd affections? We may have Angels gifts in prayer, without an Angels ſpirit.

2. Is there a delight in all parts of a duty? Not only in asking temporal bleſſings, or ſome ſpiritual, as pardoning mercy, but in begging for refining grace? Are we earneſt only when we have boſom quarrels, and conſcience-convulſions, but flag when we come to pray for ſanctifying mercy? The riſe of this is a diſplicency with the trouble and danger, not with the ſin and cauſe.

3. Doth our delight in prayer, and ſpiritual things outdo our delight in outward things? The Pſalmiſts joy in God was more than his delight in the Harveſt or Vintage, Pſal. 7. 4. Are we like Ravens that delight to hover in the Air ſometimes, but our greateſt delight is to feed upon Carrion? Though we have, and may have a ſenſible delight in worldly things, yet is it as ſolid and rational, as that we have in duty?

4. Is our delight in Prayer an humble delight? Is it a rejoycing with humbling? Pſal. 2. 11. Serve the Lord with gladneſs, and rejoyce before him with trembling. If our ſervice be right, it will be chearful; and if truly chearful, it will be humble.

5. Is our delight in Prayer accompanied with a delight in waiting? Do we, like Merchants, not only delight in the firſt launching of a Ship, or the ſetting it out of the Haven with a full fraught, but alſo in expectations of a rich return of ſpiritual mercies? Do we delight to pray, though God for the preſent doth not delight to give, and wait like David with an owning God's Wiſdom in delaying? Pſal. 130. 6. Or do we ſhoot them only as Arrows at random, and never look after them where they light, or where to find them?

6. Is our delight in praiſing God when mercy comes, anſwerable to the delight in praying, when a wanted mercy was begged? The ten Lepers deſired mercy with an equal chearfulneſs, in hopes of having their Leproſie cured; but his delight that returned, only was genuine. As he prayed with a loud voice, ſo he praiſed with a loud voice, Luke 17. 13, 15. And Chriſt tells him, his faith had made him whole. As he had an anſwer in a way of grace, ſo he had before, a gracious delight in his asking; the others had a natural delight, and ſo a return in a way of common providence.

3 Uſe, Of Exhortation. Let us delight in Prayer. God loves a chearful giver in Alms, and a chearful petitioner in Prayer. God would have his children free with him. He takes ſpecial notice of a ſpiritual frame, Jer. 30. 21. Who hath engaged his heart? The more delight we have in God, the more delight he will have in us. He takes no pleaſure in a lumpiſh Service. 'Tis an uncomely ſight to ſee a joyful Sinner, and a dumpiſh Petitioner. Why ſhould we not exerciſe as much joy in holy duties, as formerly we did in ſinful practices? How delightfully will men ſit at their games, and ſpend their days in gluttony and luxury? And ſhall not a Chriſtian find much more delight in applying himſelf to God? We ſhould delight that we can, and have hearts to ask ſuch gifts, that thouſands in the world never dream of begging. To be dull, is a diſcontentedneſs with our own Petitions. Delight in prayer is the way to gain aſſurance. To ſeek God, and treat him as our chiefeſt good, endears endears the Soul to him. Delighting in Acceſſes to him, will enflame our love. And there is no greater ſign of an intereſt in him, than a prevalent eſtimation of him. God caſts off none that affectionately claſp about his Throne.

To this purpoſe,

1. Pray for quickening grace. How often do we find David upon his knees for it? God only gives this grace, and God only ſtirs this grace.

2. Meditate on the Promiſes you intend to plead. Unbelief is the great root of all dumpiſhneſs. It was by the belief of the Word we had life at firſt, and by an exerciſe of that belief we gain livelineſs. What maintains our love, will maintain our delight; the amiableneſs of God, and the excellency of the Promiſes, are the incentives and fuel both of the one and of the other. Think that they are eternal things you are to pray for, and that you have as much invitation to beg them, and as good a promiſe to attain them as David, Paul, or any other ever had. How would this awaken our drowzy Souls, and elevate our heavy hearts, and open the lazy eye-lids to look up! And whatever meditation we find begin to kindle our Souls, let us follow it on, that the ſpark may not go out.

3. Chuſe the time when your hearts are moſt revived. Obſerve when God ſends an invitation, and hoiſt up the ſails when the wind begins to blow. There is no Chriſtian but hath one time or another a greater activeneſs of ſpirit. Chuſe none of thoſe ſeaſons which may quench the heat, and dull the ſpritelineſs of your affections. Reſolve before hand this, To delight your ſelves in the Lord, and thereby you ſhall gain the deſire of your hearts.

I A

A DISCOURSE OF Mourning for other Mens Sins.

Ezekiel 9. 4.

And the Lord ſaid unto him, Go thorow the midſt of the City, thorow the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a mark upon the foreheads of the men that ſigh, and that cry for all the Abominations that be done in the midſt thereof.

WHen God in the former Chapter had charged the Jews with their Idolatry, and the multiplicity of abominations committed in his Temple; And v. 18. had paſt a reſolve that he would not ſpare them, but deal in fury with them, though they ſhould ſolicit him with the ſtrongeſt and moſt importunate ſupplications; In this Chapter he calls and commiſſions the Executioners of his juſt Decree. Ver. 1. He cryed alſo in mine ears with a loud voice, ſaying, Cauſe them that have charge over the City to draw near, even every man with his deſtroying weapon in his hand. And declares whom, and in what manner he would puniſh, and whom he would pardon. The Executioners of God's vengeance are the Chaldeans, deſcribed by the ſituation of them from Judea, and the direct Road from that Country to Jeruſalem. v. 2. Six men came from the way of the higher gate, which lies towards the North. Babylon lay North-Eaſt from Jeruſalem; and this gate was the way of entrance for Travellers from thoſe parts; it led alſo into the Court of the Prieſts, which ſhews from whence the Judgment ſhould come, and upon whom it ſhould light.

Six men] A certain number. Whether the Holy Ghoſt alludes to a particular number of Nations, which the Chaldean Army might be compoſed of under their Prince, who reign'd over ſeveral Countries; or reſpects the other chief Captains or Marſhals of his Army which are nam'd, Jer. 39. 3. or ſpeaks with reference to the other places wherein the City was aſſaulted by that Army, as ſome think, is uncertain.

And every man a ſlaughter-weapon in his hand.] A Hammer of deſtruction, an Inſtrument of death; the word ſeems to ſignifie a weapon much like a Pole-ax.

And one of them clothed with Linnen, with a Writers Ink-horn by his ſide.] Chriſt, ſay the Ancients, (and ſo they underſtood it before, and in Hierom's time) who appears here in his Prieſtly habit; a Linnen garment being the Veſtment of the Prieſts, Levit. 16. 4. White is an Emblem of Peace. Chriſt ſeals his People with his Spirit, the Spirit of Peace. Calvin rejects not this Interpretation, but rather underſtands it of an Angel whom God commiſſioned to ſecure his People in this deſtroying Judgment. And indeed Angels have often appear'd in the form of men, and clothed with Linnen; as to Daniel, Dan. 10. 5. Dan. 12. 6, 7. Chriſt's Royal Power is founded upon his Prieſtly Office, which is the ground of all the ſpiritual and temporal ſalvation Believers have from God.

Ink-horn.] The word is ſo tranſlated. Though the word, ſay ſome, ſignifies a Table, ſuch as they then uſed to write upon with a Pen of Iron. Or rather it ſignifies a caſe to put thoſe Pens in wherewith they wrote.

And they went and ſtood beſide the brazen Altar.] 'Tis uncertain whether this reſpects the original cauſe of their puniſhment, viz. Their offering Sacrifices to their Idols upon that Altar which was conſecrated to the Service of God: Or elſe reſpects the Sacrifices of vengeance; thoſe were inſtrumentally to offer to God's Juſtice. The Judicial puniſhment of God's Enemies is called a Sacrifice in Scripture, Isa. 34. 6. A Sacrifice in Bozrah, Jer. 46. 10. God's Day of Vengeance is called God's Sacrifice in the North Country.

Observe, 1. With what a small number if God please, can he destroy a city or nation? But six mentioned. Almightiness needs not great numbers to effect his will; no, not a man, since he can do it by his immediate hand, and command judgment in a trice.

2. How quick are Gods creatures to obey his call for the punishment of a rebellious people? He calls those six men, and they presently appear ready to execute Gods pleasure.

3. God doth not bring judgments on a people, till their wickedness hath overgrown the goodness of his own Children. Six to destroy, But one to preserve. a Sixfold work of Judgment to one of preservation, intimating that there were six bad to one good in the City.

4. The security of Gods people in this world, as well as that to come, depends upon the priestly office of Christ.

v. 3. And the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the Cherub whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house] The glory of God, which was in the Propitiatory above the Cherubims, went from one Cherub to another, till it came to the threshold; as birds that are leaving their nests leap from one branch to another till they fly quite away.

Observe, 1. God is not fixed to any one place. He hath his temple among his people, discovers himself in his Ordinances, but upon provocations departs. The glory of God, and his Ordinances, are not entayled upon any nation longer than they walk worthy of them.

2. The glory of Gods Ordinances is obscured among a people, before judgments come upon them. The glory of God went up from the Cherub. I will take away the hedge of my vineyard, and it shall be eaten up, and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be troden down, Isa. 5. 5. The Ordinances of God are understood by some interpreters to be the hedge, and wall of a People; when God takes away the Hedge, the breach is made wide for every wild beast to enter, and tread it down. The presence of God in his Ordinances, the presence of God in his providences is the hedge of a people. The Temple is forsaken by God, and then polluted, in judgment, by men, v. 7. God then comes to the man cloathed with linnen, that had the Writers inkhorn by his side, & said unto him, Go thorow the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh, and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof, v. 4. And v. 5. He commands the executioners of his wrath to go after him, & smite without any pity both small and great, beginning at his Sanctuary. תו. Interpreters trouble themselves much what this mark should be, and tell us from Origen, that a believing Jew told him the ancient Samaritan letter called Tau was written like a cross, But that is a fancy, the ancient Samaritan letter being the same with the Phœnician was not writ in that form. * Some say it was the law, because the Hebrew word תורה signifying the law begins with that letter, to shew that such were to be marked that were devoted to the observance of the law. Markt they were, saith Calvin, with a Tau, because that being the last letter in the Alphabet, shews that the people of God are of the lowest account among men, and the off-scouring of the world ת being the first letter of תחיה. vives, noted the preservation of them. On the foreheads *] Alluding to the custom of the Eastern countries to mark their Servants on the foreheads with the names of their masters. * Not on their visible foreheads, but on their invisible consciences; the conscience is the forehead of the Soul; As eminent in the heart as a forehead in the body.

* Grotius.

* Oecolampad.

The bloud of Christ upon the conscience is the best mark of distinction, as the blood of the paschal Lamb upon the posts was the mark whereby the Israelites were discerned from the Ægyptians, and the edge of the Angels destroying sword diverted from them. It was a mark of a special providence of God. The destroying Judgments were to follow the Sealing Angel, and not touch those that were markt by him on the forehead.

Observe 1. All judgments have their commissions from God, whom to touch, whom to overthrow. God doth not strike at random. The man in the linnen garment was to bridle the Chaldeans, & direct their Swords to the right objects. God overpowers the natural inclinations of all his creatures, whom he appoints executioners. God hath a hook in the nostrils of Leviathan; nothing can be done without the leave of providence; man forms the weapons, God gives the edge, and directs the stroak.

2. In the highest fury and vengeance God hath reserves of mercy for his own people. Angels are appointed to be preservers of his children in the midst of the destroying of a people. Invisible Angels are joyned with visible enemies, to conduct and govern their motions according to the Command of their great General. God's Judgments are dispensed with greater kindness to his People, than desires to take vengeance upon his Enemies. He hath a heart of Mercy as well as a hand of Justice.

3. God is more careful of his people than revengefull against his enemies. He first orders the sealing of the mourners, before he orders the destruction of the rebells; he will first honour his mercy in the protection of the one, before he will glorifie his justice in the destruction of the other. The Angel hath orders to secure Lot before Sodom was fired. The executioners of his wrath were to march after the securing Angel, not before him; Nor equal with him: And were only to cut off those whom the Angel had passed by.

4. If you take this mark for a mark on the Conſcience, then obſerve, That Serenity of Conſcience is a gift of God to his people in the time of ſevere judgments. As when death is near, the Conſcience of a good man is moſt ſerene, and ſings ſweetly in his breaſt the notes of his own integrity. In judgments as well as in death God ſets Conſcience upon its pleaſant notes. But this mark is not properly meant here; the Conſcience is a mark to our ſelves, but this is a mark to the executioners.

5. The places where God hath manifeſted the glory of his Ordinances, are the ſubjects of his greateſt judgments upon their provocations. Go through the City, through Jeruſalem: That Jeruſalem wherein I have manifeſted my glory, which I have intruſted with my oracles, which I have protected in the midſt of enemies, like a ſpark in the midſt of many waters. Go thorow that City into the midſt of it, and let not your eye ſpare.

6. The greateſt fury of God in a time of judgment often lights upon the Sanctuary, v. 6. Begin at the Sanctuary, defile the houſe. Not a man of them eſcaped as Oecalampad. notes, v. 7. I was left: He ſaw not in the viſion what was done in the City, but he was left alone in the Temple. The whole Sanhedrim, the 70 Ancients had revolted to Idolatry, Ezek. 8. 11. and the ſtroak firſt lights upon them, v. 6. Then they began at the Ancient men which were before the houſe.

In the v. obſerve,

1. Gods care in the preſerving his people. He Commands the Angel to go thorow the midſt of the City, and ſet a mark, a viſible mark upon their foreheads.

2. The Qualification of the perſons ſo preſerved. He doth not ſay, All that have not committed Idolatry, but ſuch as ſigh; which ſignifies,

1. The intenſeneſs of their grief. [Sigh and cry, נאנ, notes an intenſe groaning and ſorrow.

2. The Extenſiveneſs of the Object. [All the Abominations.

Doct. Lamenting the ſins of the times, and places wherein we live, is a duty incumbent on us, acceptable to God, and a great means of preſervation under publick Judgments.

There are three Branches.

1. 'Tis a Duty.

2. A Duty acceptable to God. God has his Eye particularly upon them that practiſe it.

3. 'Tis a means of preſervation under publick Judgments.

1. 'Tis a Duty. If we are by the Præſcript of God to bewail in confeſſion, the ſins of our Forefathers, committed before our being in the world, certainly much more are we to lament the ſins of the Age wherein we live, as well as our own, Levit. 26. 40. If they ſhall confeſs their iniquity, and the iniquity of their Fathers. If then their uncircumciſed be humbled, then will I remember my Covenant. Poſterity are part of the ſame body with their Anceſtors, and every member in a Nation is part of the body of a Nation; every drop in the Sea is a part of the Ocean. God made a ſtanding Law for an annual Faſt, wherein they ſhould afflict their Souls, the tenth day of the ſeventh month, anſwering to our September, and backed it with a ſevere penalty. He whoſe ſoul was not afflicted in that day, ſhould be cut off from among his people; which the Jews underſtand of cutting off by the hand of the Lord, Levit. 23. 27, 29. The particular ſin for which they were thus annually to afflict their Souls, was that national ſin of the golden Calf, in the Judgment of the Jewiſh Doctors.

It was alſo the practice of holy men in their private Retirements; as Daniel, Dan. 9. 5, 6. He bewails the ſins of his Anceſtors; and Nehemiah, Neh. 1. 6. Much more it is our duty to bewail a preſent guilt. The Churches Eyes are compared to the Fiſh-pools of Heſhbon, Cant. 7. 4. in her weeping for her own, and others ſins. To what purpoſe has God given us paſſions, but to honour him withal? And our affections of grief and anger cannot be better employ'd, than for the intereſt, nor better beſtowed, than for the ſervice of him, who implanted thoſe paſſions in us. Our natural motions ſhould be ordered for the God of Nature, and ſpiritual ordered for the God of Grace.

* Broughton Lives of the Fathers, p. 7. Crit. in loc.

1. This was the practice of Believers in all Ages. Before the Deluge * Seth called the name of his Son, which was born at the time of the profaning the name of God in worſhip, Enoſh, which ſignifies ſorrowful, or miſerable; that he might in the ſight of his Son have a conſtant Monitor to excite him to an holy grief for the profaneneſs and Idolatry that entred into the Worſhip of God, Gen. 4. 26. He called his name Enos, then began men to call upon the name of the Lord, חולח, profane it by calling upon it.

The rational and moſt precious part of Lot was vexed with the unlawful deeds of the generation of Sodom, among whom he lived, 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. he had a horrour and torment in his righteous Soul at the execrable villanies he ſaw committed by his neighbours, κατανύσσων afflicted under it, as under a grievous burden. It was a rack to him, as the other word, v. 8. ἐβασανιζεν ſignifies. The meekeſt man upon Earth, with grief and indignation breaks the Tables of the Law, when he ſaw the holineſs of it broken by the Iſraelites, and expreſſeth more his regret for that, than his honour for the material Stones, wherein God had with his own finger engraven the Orders of his will. He is more deſirous to deſtroy the Idol, than preſerve the Tables: Such an indignation againſt their ſin could not well be without grief for it. David, a man of the greateſt goodneſs upon Record, had a Deluge of tears, becauſe

they

they kept not God's Law, Pſal. 119. 136. Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, becauſe they keep not thy Law. Beſides, his grief, which was not a ſmall one, horrour, ſeiz'd upon him upon the ſame account, Pſal. 119. 53. like a ſtorm that toſt him to and fro. How doth poor Iſaiah bewail himſelf, and the People among whom he lived, as men of polluted lips? Iſa. 6. 5. Perhaps ſuch as could hardly ſpeak a word without an Oath, or by hypocritical lip-ſervice, mocked God in the very Temple.

Jeremy is upon the ſame practice, Jer. 13. 17. when his Soul ſhould weep in ſecret for the pride of the people, and, as if he was not ſatisfied with a few tears, wiſheth his head were a full ſpringing Fountain to weep for the ſlain of the Daughter of his People; for the ſin the cauſe, as well as the calamity the effect, Jer. 9. 1. He wiſhes his head to be filled with the vapours from his heart, and become a fountain.

What a tranſport of ſorrow had Ezra, when he heard of the peoples ſins, and the mingling the holy Seed with that of Idolaters! A horror run thorow his whole Soul; His aſtoniſhment is twice repeated, Ezra 9. 3, 4. Every faculty was alarumed at the ſin of the People.

'Tis probable John Baptiſt uſed himſelf to thoſe ſeverities which are mentioned, Matth. 3. 4. becauſe of the ſinfulneſs of that generation among whom he lived.

Paul diſcovers it to be a duty, when he reproves the Corinthians for being puſt up, inſtead of mourning for that fornication which had been committed by one of their profeſſion, 1 Cor. 5. 2. And when he writes of ſome that made the glorious Goſpel ſubſervient to their own bellies, he mixes his tears with his Ink, Phil. 3. 18, 19. I tell you weeping, they are enemies to the Croſs of Chriſt. The Primitive Chriſtians did much bewail the lapſes of their fellows. Celerinus, among the Epiſtles of Cyprian, acquaints Lucian of his great grief for the Apoſtacy of a Woman, through fear of perſecution, which afflicted him ſo, that in the time of Eaſter, the time of their joy in that Age, he wept night and day, and was reſolved that no delight ſhould enter into his heart, till through the mercy of Chriſt ſhe ſhould be recover'd to the Church. And we find the Witneſſes clothed in Sackcloth, when they propheſied in a ſinful time, to ſhew their grief for the publick abominations, Rev. 11. 3. The kingdom of Satan can be no pleaſure to a Chriſtian, and muſt therefore be a torment.

2. It was our Saviours practice. As he had the higheſt love to God, ſo he muſt needs have the greateſt grief for his diſhonour. He ſighed in his ſpirit for the incredulity of that generation, when they askt a ſign, after ſo many had been preſented to their Eyes, Mark 8. 12. He ſighed deeply in his ſpirit. And the hardneſs of their hearts at another time raiſed his grief, as well as his indignation, Mark 3. 5. He was ſenſible of the leaſt diſhonour of his Father, Pſal. 69. 9. The reproaches of them that reproached thee, fell upon me. I took them to heart. Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf when his Father was injured; as the Apoſtle deſcants upon it, when he applies it to Chriſt, Rom. 15. 3. His Soul was more pierc'd with the wrongs done to God, than the reproaches which were directed againſt his own perſon. His grief was unexpreſſibly greater than can be in any creature, becauſe of the unimitable ardency of his love to God, the nearneſs of his relation to him, and the unſpotted purity of his Soul. Chriſt had a double relation; to Man, to God. His compaſſion to men afflicted him with groans and tears at their bodily diſtempers; his affection to his Father would make him grieve as much to ſee him diſhonoured, as his love to man made him groan to ſee man afflicted. This grief for ſin was one part of Chriſt's Sacrifice and Suffering; for he came to make a full ſatisfaction to the Juſtice of God by enduring his wrath, to the holineſs of God by offering up an infinite ſorrow for ſin, which it was impoſſible for a creature to do. We cannot ſuppoſe that Chriſt ſhould only accept the puniſhment, but not bewail the offence which was the cauſe of it. A Sacrifice for the ſins of others, without remorſe for thoſe ſins, had not been acceptable; it had not been agreeable to the purity of his humane Nature. He wept at Jeruſalem's obſtinacy, as well as for her miſery, and that in the time of his triumph. The loud Hoſanna's could not ſilence his grief, and ſtop the expreſſions of it, Luke 19. 41. It was like a ſhower when the Sun ſhined. If Chriſt as our Head was filled with inward ſorrow for mens diſpleaſing the holineſs of God, 'tis ſurely our duty as his Members, to imitate the afflictions of the Head. He is unworthy of the name of Chriſt, who is not afflicted as Chriſt was; nor can call Chriſt his Maſter, who doth not imitate his graces, as well as pretend to believe his Doctrine; he cannot ſee that God who hath diſtinguiſht him from the world, diſhonoured, his precepts contemned, but he muſt have his Soul overcaſt with a gloomy cloud. 'Tis our glory to value the things he eſteem'd, to deſpiſe the things he contemn'd, to rejoyce in that wherein he was delighted, and to grieve for that which was the matter of his ſorrow and indignation. Thus was he afflicted, though he had a joy in the aſſurance of his Fathers favour, and the aſſiſtance of his Fathers power. The higheſt aſſurance of God's love in particular to us, ought not to hinder the impreſſions of grief for the diſhonour of his name. Did Chriſt ever look upon the ſwiniſh world, without melting into pity? Did he bleed for the ſins of the world, and ſhall not we mourn for them?

3. Angels, as far as they are capable, have their grief for the ſins of men. The Jewiſh Doctors often bring in the Angels weeping for ſin*. And one tells us, that in an Ancient Mahumetan Book he finds an Anſwer of God to Moſes; Even about this Throne of mine there ſtand thoſe, and they are many, that ſhed tears for the ſins of men. But the Scripture tells us, us, they rejoyce at the repentance of men, Luke 15. 10. Their Lord is glorified by a return of a Subject: The Subject advantaged by casting down his arms at the feet of his Lord. They do therefore as far as they are capable, mourn for the revolts of men, suo modo, as Beza upon the place. They can scarce rejoyce at mens repentance without having a contrary affection for mens prophaneness; if they are glad at mens return, because God is thereby glorified, it cannot be conceived but they mourn for, and are angry with their sins, because God is thereby slighted. Unconcernedness at the dishonour of God cannot consist with their shining knowledge and burning love. They cannot behold a God so holy, so glorious, so worthy to be beloved, without having some regret for the neglects and abuses of him by the Sons of men. How can they be instruments of Gods Justice, if they are without anger against the deservers of it?

* Grotius Luc. 15. 7. Ob peccatum Hebræi Angelos flentes inducunt.

II. 'Tis an acceptable duty to God. Since it is an imitating the copy of our Saviour, it is acceptable to God, nothing can please him more than to see his Creatures tread in the steps of his Son.

1. 'Tis a fulfilling the whole law, which consists of love to God and love to our neighbours: 'tis set down as a Character of Charity both as it respects God and man, Not to rejoyce in iniquity, 1 Cor. 13. 5. i. e. to be mightily troubled at it.

1. Tis a high Testomony of Love to God. The Nature of true Love is to wish all good to them we love, to rejoyce when any good we wish doth arrive unto them, to mourn when any evil afflicts them, and that with a respect to the beloved object. Τὸ φιλεῖν, τὸ βούλεσθαί τι ἃ οἴεται ἀγαθὰ, ἐκείνῳ εἶναι, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸς συναλγεῖν τοῖς λυπηροῖς*. Where there is this love, there is a rejoycing at one anothers happiness, a grieving at one anothers misfortunes. If it be a part of love to rejoyce at that whereby God is glorified, 'tis no less a part of love to mourn for that whereby God is vilified. So strait is the union of affection between God and a righteous Soul, that their blessings and injuries, joys and sorrows are twisted together. The increase of Gods glory is the greatest good that can happen to a Soul enamoured of him; his dishonour then is the greatest misery. A gracious Soul is like John Baptist, content to decrease, that Christ might encrease, in the esteem of men. He is like Jonathan, that would rather have the Crown upon Davids head than his own, as the words intimate, 1 Sam. 23. 17. v. thou shalt be King over Israel, I shall be next unto thee: And grieved more for his Fathers displeasure against David than against himself. So doth a Christian grieve more for the wrongs of God, than for those in his own liberty, estate, or life.

* Aristot. Rhetor. l. 1. c. 4.

Joshua was more careful of the name of God, than of the safety of the people singly considered, Josh. 7. 9. What wilt thou do unto thy great name? The glory of God is not dear to that man, that can without any regret look upon his bespattered name. What affection hath he to his friend, who can see him torn in pieces by Dogs, and stand unconcerned at his calamity? God indeed is uncapable of suffering; but what rending is to a creature, that is sin to the Divine Majesty. Can that man be said to love God who hath no reflection when he sees others tumbling God from his Throne, and setting up the Devil in his stead? Who can hear the tremendous name of God belcht out by polluted lips upon every vile occasion, and made the sport of Stage and Stews, without any inward resentment?

He only esteems God as his King who cannot see his laws broken without remorse. How Loyally did Moses his affection to God work, when he heard the name of God blasphemed, and saw a calf usurp the adoration due to the God of Heaven? And David felt the stroak of that sword in his own bowels which was directed against the heart of God, Psal. 139. 20, 21, 22. The dearer Gods name is to any, the more affected they are that God and Christ are loved and honoured less than they desire they should be.

'Tis hard sometimes to discern this Love to God, when Gods interest and ours are joyned, when we would mask our displeasure against some mens offences with a care of Gods honour, which is nothing but a hatred of the Person sinning, or revenge against him for some conceived injury to us. The Apostles calling for fire from Heaven upon the Samaritans when they refused Christ, Luke 9. 53, 54, 55. might seem to be a generous concern for their masters honour, but Christ knew it proceeded much from that natural enmity which the Jews bore to the Samaritans. The best way to judg is, when the interest is purely Gods, and hath no fuel of our own discontents to boil up, either grief or anger. Such an affection cannot but be highly acceptable to God, who is affected with the love of the creature, and honours them that honour him, as well as despises those that lightly concern themselves for him.

2. Love to our Neighbours. Nothing can evidence our love to man more, than a sorrowful reflection upon that wickedness which is the ruine of his Soul, the disturbance of humane society, and unlocks the treasures of Gods judgments to fall upon mankind. Sin is a reproach to a people, Prov. 14. 34. 'Tis always an act of Charity to mourn for the reproaches and ruine of a people. 'Tis a gross enmity to others, to see them stab themselves to the heart, jest with eternal flames, wish their damnation at every word, run merrily to the bottomless gulf, and all this without bestowing a sigh upon them, and pitying their madness; the greater should be our grief, by how much the further they are from any for their own destruction. If Cain discovered both his enmity to God, and also to his brother, in grieving that his brothers works were so good, Abel musts needs in the practice of the contrary duty, manifest manifeſt his love to Cain in grieving that his works were ſo bad. Our Saviours tears for the Jews diſcovered no leſs a concern for their miſery than for Gods diſhonour. Anger for ſin may have ſomething of revenge in it: Grief for ſin diſcovers an affection both to God and the ſinner. A duty which reſpects at once the ſubſtance of both the tables cannot but be pleaſing to God.

2. 'Tis an imitating return for Gods affection. How doth God reſent the injuries done to his people as much as thoſe done to himſelf? Thoſe ſins that immediately ſtrike at his glory are not accompanied with ſuch quick judgments, as thoſe that grate upon his Servants. Sharp perſecutions that tear the people of God in pieces have fuller vials of judgments here, than Vollies of others ſins which rend the name of God. When Cain affronted God by his Sacrifice, God comes not to a reckoning with him, till he had added the murther of his Brother to his former crimes againſt his maker. A ſweeter and more thankful return, and a more affectionate imitation of God there cannot be, than to reſent the injuries done to God more than thoſe done to our ſelves. The pinching of his people doth moſt pierce his heart; a ſtab to his honour, in gratitude, ſhould moſt pierce theirs. The four Kings that came againſt Sodom, Gen. 14. 9, &c. ſped well enough in their invaſion, gained the victory and had been in a fair way to have enjoyed the ſpoil, had they not laid their hands upon Lot, which was the occaſion of their diſgorging their prey. As God ingaged himſelf in the recovery of Lot, ſo Lot concerned himſelf in the honour of God; Gods anger is ſtirred at the Captivity of Lot, and Lots vexation is awakened at the injuries againſt God. What troubles his Children, raiſes ſenſible compaſſion in him to the ſufferer, and revenge upon the perſecutor; whatſoever doth blaſpheme the name of God, doth at the ſame time rack a ſincere heart. A perſecutor cannot injure a believer, but Chriſt records it as a wrong done to himſelf; and Chriſt cannot be diſhonoured by men, but a righteous Soul doubles his grief. Here is a mutual return of affection and æſtimation, which is highly pleaſing.

3. This temper juſtifies Gods Law and his juſtice *. When we diſlike and diſapprove of others ſins as well as our own, we acknowledg the glory of the law, that it is juſt, holy, and good, and ſet our ſeal of approbation to it. It juſtifies the holineſs of the law in prohibiting ſin the righteouſneſs of the law in condemning ſin. It owns the ſoveraignty of God in commanding, and the juſtice of God in puniſhing. The law requires two things; obedience to it, and ſuffering for the tranſgreſſion of it. This frame of heart approves of the obedience the law requires of men as rational creatures, and juſtifies the ſufferings the law inflicts upon men as impenitent ſinners. Unleſs we mourn for the ſins of others and thereby ſhew our diſtaſt, we cannot give God the glory of his Judgments which he ſends upon a people. This diſowning of ſin is very acceptable to God, becauſe by it Men honour that law for whoſe violations they are ſo troubled, and own Gods right of impoſing a law upon his creatures, and the creatures vileneſs in diſgracing that Law.

David's grief being for mans forſaking the Law teſtified his choice valuation of it.

4. 'Tis a ſign of ſuch a temper God hath evidenced himſelf in ſcripture much affected with. 'Tis a ſign of a heart of fleſh, the nobleſt work of God in the creature. A ſign of a contrite heart, the beſt ſacrifice that can ſmoak upon his Altar next to that of his Son. This he will not deſpiſe, becauſe it is a beam of glory dropped down from him, and aſcending in a ſweet ſavour to him, Pſal. 51. 17. Without this, we cannot have a ſufficient evidence that we are truly broken-hearted. We may mourn for our own ſins for ſecret by-ends, becauſe they are againſt our worldly Intereſts, and have reproaches treading upon the heels of them; we may mourn for the ſins of our friends, out of a natural compaſſion to them, and as they are the prognoſticks of ſome approaching miſery to them; but in ſorrowing for the ſins of the world, we have not ſo many, and ſo affecting obligations to divert us from a ſound aim in our ſorrow. To be affected with the diſhonour of God by the ſins of others, is a diſtinguiſhing character of a ſpiritual conſtitution from a natural renderneſs. 'Tis both our duty, and God's pleaſure. No grief is ſweeter to God, nor more becoming us.

III. 'Tis a means of preſervation from publick Judgments. Noah did not preach righteouſneſs without a ſenſible reflection on that unrighteouſneſs he preached againſt; and he of all the world had the ſecurity of an Ark for him and his Family, when all the reſt ſtruggled for life, and ſunk in the waters. No meer man ever wore more black for the Funeral of God's honour than David, nor was any bleſſed with more gracious deliverances. The more zeal we have for God (which is an affection made up of grief and anger) the more protection we have from him *. The more courage we have for God, the more we may expect both his conduct and ſecurity. If there be any hope in a time of actual, or threatned Judgments, 'tis by laying our mouths in the duſt, Lam. 3. 29. If there be any ground of hope, it will ſhine forth when we are in ſuch a poſture. There might be others in Jeruſalem, who had not complied with the Idolatry of that Age; but none exempted from the ſtroke of the Six Deſtroyers, but thoſe whoſe mouths lay in the duſt, and whoſe cries againſt the common ſin aſcended to Heaven; only the mourners among the good men are marked by the Angel for indemnity from the publick puniſhment.

* The ſteps of a man [good man, our tranſlation renders it. But the word is גבר, a valiant man] are ordered by the Lord, and he delights in his way, Pſal. 37. 23.

1. Sincerity always eſcapes beſt in common Judgments, and this temper of mourning for publick ſins, is the greateſt note of it. This is the greateſt note of ſincerity. We read of an Ahab, who put on Sackcloth for his own ſin, and humbled himſelf before the Lord; of a Judas ſorrowing that he betrayed his Maſter: Self-intereſt might broach their tears, and force out their their ſorrow; but never in Ahab, or Judas, or any other ungodly perſon in Scripture, lamented the ſins of others. Nay, they were all eminent for holineſs, that were noted for this frame, whom we have mentioned before. Moſes, a non-ſuch for ſpeaking with God face to face. David, who only had that honourable title of a man after God's own heart. Iſay, who had the fulleſt proſpect of Evangelical glory, of all the Prophets. Ezra, a reſtorer of his Country. Daniel, a man greatly beloved. Chriſt, the Redeemer of the world; and Paul, the only Apoſtle rap't up in the third Heaven, he was alſo humbled for the ſins of the Corinthians, 2 Corinth. 12. 21. Ezra hath a mighty Character, Ezra 7. 10. He prepared his heart to ſeek the Law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Iſrael Statutes and Judgments. And he both mourned for, and prayed againſt the common ſin. Lot is not recorded for this without a glorious Epithete: The Spirit of God over-looks thoſe ſins of his mentioned in Scripture, and ſpeaks not of him by his ſingle name, but Juſt Lot, his righteous Soul, 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. A ſincere Righteouſneſs glittered in his vexation for the wronged Intereſt of God. What a mark of honour doth the Holy-Ghoſt ſet upon this temper! 'Tis not drunken Lot, or inceſtuous Lot, with which ſins he is taxed in Scripture. This publickly religious ſpirit covered thoſe temporary ſpots in his Scutcheon. When all other ſigns of Righteouſneſs may have their exceptions, this temper is the utmoſt term, which we cannot go beyond in our ſelf-examination. The utmoſt proſpect David had of his ſincerity, when he was upon a diligent enquiry after it, was his anger and grief for the ſin of others; when he had reached ſo far, he was at a ſtand, and knew not what more to add, Pſal. 139. 21, 22, 23, 24. Am I not grieved with thoſe that riſe up againſt thee? I hate them with perfect hatred; I count them mine enemies. Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts, and ſee if there be any wicked way in me. If there be any thing that better can evidence my ſincerity, than this, Lord acquaint me with it; know my heart, i. e. make me to know it. He whoſe ſorrow is only for matter confin'd within his own breaſt, or ſtreams of it in his life, has reaſon many times to queſtion the truth of it. But when a man cannot behold ſin as ſin in another, without ſenſible regret, 'tis a ſign he hath ſavingly felt the bitterneſs of it in his own Soul. 'Tis a high pitch and growth, and a conſent between the Spirit of God, and the Soul of a Chriſtian, when he can lament thoſe ſins in others whereby the Spirit is grieved, when he can rejoyce with the Spirit rejoycing, and mourn with the Spirit mourning. This is a clear teſtimony that we have not ſelf-ends in the ſervice of God, that we take not up Religion to ſerve a turn, that God is our aim, and Chriſt our beloved. Now upright perſons have ſpecial promiſes for protection, Pſal. 37. 18, 19. The Lord knows the way of the upright, they ſhall not be aſhamed in an evil time; they ſhall not be aſhamed in it, though they may be daſht by it; they ſhall have a bleſſed inward ſecurity, though they may not always have an outward, when the wicked ſhall conſume away as the fat of Lambs, and exhale in the ſmoke. God's Eyes are upon them in the worſt of ſtraits. If ever he ſhew himſelf ſtrong, 'tis for thoſe that are perfect in heart before him. This is the end of the rouling and running of his Eyes about the Earth, 2 Chron. 16. 9. To ſuch he is both a Sun, and a Shield, a Sun to comfort them, and a Shield to defend them that walk uprightly, Pſal. 84. 11. There may be an uprightneſs in the heart, when there is an unknown, or a negligent crookedneſs in ſome particular path; and when men are negligent in reproving others for ſuch ſins as open the clouds of Judgments, God may be a Sun to ſuch, to give them ſome comfort in a common calamity, but ſcarce a Shield to defend them from it.

2. This frame clears us from the guilt of common ſins. He that is not afflicted with them, contracts a guilt of thoſe inſolencies againſt God by a tacit approbation, or not hindering the torrent by his prayers, tears, endeavours. Sin is not to be viewed without horror: we ſhare in the guilt, if we manifeſt not our deteſtation of the practice. The Corinthians had not approved themſelves clear in the matter of the inceſtuous perſon till they had mourned for it, 2 Cor. 7. 11. Jacob was afraid he ſhould be charged by God as a murtherer and thief, as well as Simeon, and Levi, if he did not profeſs his loathing of it, Gen. 49. 6. Oh my Soul come not thou into their ſecrets, unto their aſſembly mine honour be not thou united; for in their anger they ſlew a man, and in their ſelf-will they digged down a wall. His Soul ſhould bear a teſtimony againſt their ſecrets; he would count it his diſhonour to give their ſin any countenance before God or man. David intimates, Pſal. 101. 3. that if he did not hate the works of thoſe that turn aſide, the guilt of them would cleave to him. If we can patiently bear the diſhonour of God, without marks of our diſpleaſure, we ſhall be reckoned in the common infection, as one lump with the greateſt ſinners. He that is not with Chriſt, is againſt him; he that is not on the ſide of God by a holy grief, is on the ſide of ſin by a ſilent conſent. A thorow diſtaſt of ſins upon the account of their abomination to God, frees us from the guilt of them in the ſight of God. To mourn for them, and pray againſt them, is a ſign we would have prevented them if it had lain in our power; and where we have contributed to them, we by thoſe acts revoke the crime. When we cannot be Reformers, all that we can do is to turn mourners, and in our places admoniſhers and reprovers, and God is righteous, not to charge the guilt where it is not contracted or revoked. But where any are infected with common ſins, they muſt expect to taſt of ſome common Judgments*. The Iſraelites did partake of ſome of the Ægyptian ſins; and though God was upon their deliverance, yet he he inflicted upon them ſome of the Ægyptian Plagues; the Plague of Lice, which was the firſt God brought, without being imitated by the Magicians, was common upon the Iſraelites as well as the Ægyptians; for God did not ſever Goſhen from Ægypt till the Plague of Flies, Exod. 8.12, 23. In that day will I ſever the Land of Goſhen; I will put a diviſion between my people and thy people. And therefore in Pſal. 78. the Pſalmiſt reckoning thoſe Plagues, never mentions the Lice, becauſe that was inflicted upon Iſrael as well as Ægypt. This is a way to keep the Soul from common infection. 'Tis difficult for a Soul to defile it ſelf with the ſins of the times, when tears are continually running down the eyes for them. 'Tis an Antidote againſt the ſin, & againſt the Plague which follows at the heels of it. If we look not upon them with grief, we are in danger to be ſnar'd in the ſame temptation. Beſides, not ſorrowing for them is an implicit conſent to them, and by conſenting to them, we are little better than actors in them. By grieving for them, we enter our diſſent, & paſs our vote againſt them. When any ſin becomes national, it is imputed to the body of the Nation; as in ſome tranſgreſſions of the Law, the whole body of the Nation of the Jews was involved; and there is no way for any particular perſon to remove the guilt from him, but by diſowning it before God.

3. A grief for common ſins, is an endeavour to repair the honour God has loſt. 'Tis a paying to God that by Repentance (as much as lies in a creature) which is due from the worſt ſinner himſelf; 'tis to keep up ſome of God's glory, when ſo much is trodden down. And when the grief is accompanied with a more exact obedience, it repairs the honour God hath loſt by the miſcarriage of others. 'Tis an endeavour to wipe off the ſtains from the Robe of the glory of God. And thoſe that bear up God's glory in the world, ſhall find, if need be, the Creative, Omnipotent Power of God ſtretched out for their defence, in as eminent a manner as the cloud by day, which preſerved the Iſraelites from the ſcorching of the Sun, or the flaming fire by night, which prevented their wandring into by-ways and Precipices; for upon all the glory ſhall be a defence, Iſa. 4.5. i. e. upon thoſe that bear the mark of his glorious Redemption, and bear up his honour among the Sons of men. When we concern our ſelves for God's honour, God will concern himſelf for our protection. God never was, nor ever will be behind-hand with his creature in affection. Moſes was zealous for God's glory againſt the golden Calf, and God concern'd himſelf for his honour againſt Aaron and Miriam. Numb. 12. and then againſt the tumults of the People.

4. The mourners in Sion are humble, and humility is preventive of Judgments. To lie flat upon the ground, is a means to avoid the ſtroke of a Cannon-bullet. When men are caſt down, he ſhall ſave the humble perſon, Job 22.29. They lie loweſt in the duſt before God, who concern themſelves not only with the weight of their own ſins, but with that of others. Pride is a preparation for Judgment; the higher the Tower aſpires, the fitter Tinder it is for lightning; the bigger any thing ſwells, the nearer it is to burſting; the prouder any man is, the plainer Butt he is for an Arrow of God's wrath. Pride lifts up it ſelf againſt God's Laws and Soveraignty, as much as this frame of ſpirit acknowledges, and ſubmits to him. It was a temper contrary to this cauſed God to ſend Worms to banquet upon Herod, Acts 12.23. He gave not God the glory. He was not afflicted with the ſin of the People, nor reproved them for aſcribing to him the honour of God. A Soul-affliction for common ſins is a bar to Judgments. God revives the ſpirit of the humble, Iſa. 57.15. They that ſhare in the griefs of the Spirit, ſhall not want the comforts of the Spirit. God is concern'd in honour by virtue of his promiſe, not to neglect thoſe whom he hath promiſed to revive. He dwells with the contrite ſpirit; who more contrite than he that grieves for publick ſins, and Family ſins, and City ſins, as well as his own private? Men do not uſe to fire their own houſes, much leſs God the houſe and heart, which is dearer to him than either firſt or ſecond Temple, or local Heaven it ſelf. I might add,

5. That ſuch keep Covenant with God. The Contract runs on God's part, to be an Enemy to his Peoples Enemies, Exod. 23.22. It muſt run on our parts, to love that which God loves, hate that which God hates, grieve for that which grieves and diſhonours him; Who can do this by an unconcernedneſs? Thoſe that keep Covenant with God ſhall not fail of one tittle of it on God's part. 7. Such alſo fear Gods Judgments, and fear is a good means to prevent them. The Old World feared not God's threatning of the Deluge, and that came, and ſwallowed them up. The Sodomites feared not God's Judgments, and that haſtened the deſtroying Shower. The Advice of the Angel upon the approach of Judgments, is to fear God, and give glory to him, Rev. 14.7. And then follows another, v. 8. with the news of Babylons fall; Babylon is fallen, is fallen. The fall of Babylon is the preſervation of his People.

4. The Uſe. 1. Reproof for us. Where is the man that hangs his harp upon the willows at the time the Temple of God is prophaned? A head, a Fountain of tears for Common ſins, is a commodity rare to be found even in hearts otherwiſe gracious. The Mourners have been for number but a few, like the gleanings of the Vintage; but the Sinners in Sion for multitude, like the weeds in fallow ground. What multitudes of thoſe that diſparage God, and trample upon his Soveraign Commands, rend in pieces the very Law of Nature as well as the rights of Religion? It were well if there were one to Six, as was intimated in the beginning there might be in Jeruſalem; but we have reaſon to fear that one marker for the ſecret mourners would be too much for an hundred deſtroyers. I do not queſtion but there are ſome that ſigh for the abominations they ſee, and hear of,& that because they are dishonourable to God as well as injurious to themselves. But who of us present here can say, we have been deeply enough, and graciously enough affected with them? Certainly both you and I may bring a charge against our selves before the throne of God for this neglect, that we have not been throwly humbled for,& frequently bewailed publick iniquities,and spread them before God in secret. If we are unconcern'd in common sins,can we imagine God will leave us unconcern'd in common Judgments? If we endeavour not to keep up the glory of God,he will extract glory to himself out of our ashes. If this frame be so little regarded among professors, what shall we say to many others that have as little remorse for the stabs of Gods honour, as they would have for the Tragedy of an East India Prince, nay for the death of some inconsiderable fly? that have resentments for wrongs done to themselves, and sorrow at Command for any worldly loss, but not one spark of regret for affronts offered to God? In this cause their hearts are as dry as a heath in a parching Summer. Who laments the tearing the name of God in pieces by execrable oaths? Who bewails the impudent uncleanness boasted of by Concubines in the face of the Sun? Who mourns for so many thousand foreheads bearing the mark of the beast, and so many thousands more preparing to receive it? It reproves then

1. Those that make a mock and sport of sin, so far they are from mourning for it. The wise man gives them the title of fools, Prov. 14. 9. fools make a mock at sin. Which though it seems too low a Character for such abominable works, yet in scripture it hath a greater import than in our Common discourse, it signifies an Atheist, *Psal.*14. 1. Prodigious madness! to make that our sport which is the dishonour of God, the murderer of Christ, the grief of the Spirit,and the destruction of the Soul;that which opens the flood-gates of wrath, and brings famines, plagues, wars upon a people! If mourning for others sins be an affection like that of Angels, delighting in other sins is an affection like that of Devils. He is at the greatest distance from Christ, that looks pleasantly upon that which Christ could not regard without grief and anger. God seems to seal up such to destruction as well as the mourners to preservation, Isa. 22. 12, 13. And in that day did the Lord God of Hosts call to weeping and mourning, to baldness and girding with Sackcloth, and behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen and killing Sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine, let us eat and drink, for to morrow we shall dye. And it was revealed in mine ears by the Lord of Hosts,surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you till you dye; they were ranters instead of mourners, and God passes this sentence on them, their iniquity shall not be purged from them till they dye. If we carry our selves jollily at the sins of others, we evidence that the concerns of God are of little concern to us, that we have slight thoughts of his glory, and cast it at the heels of our own passions.

2. Those that make others sins the matter of invectives, rather than of lamentations, and bespatter the man without bewailing the sin. We should consider common sins with affection to God, and pity to the offenders; with a desire that they may restore, by a true conversion, the glory they have robb'd God of by an accursed Rebellion. While we hate the sin, we should evidence that we love the man *. We must never love the wickedness, nor hate the person. We pity a sick man, though we loath his Disease. Sinners are miserable enough without our hatred, and by hating them we make our selves more miserable, by committing a fault against reason and nature, and do them no good. The more wicked any man is, the more worthy of pity, by how much the more his crime is our hatred. God, who is infinite purity, hates mens sins, because they are enemies to his holiness; but he hath a common affection to their persons, as they are the effects of his goodness and creative Power. Our exclamations against common sins ought not to exceed lamentations for them. There ought to be more grief in our hearts, than fire in our tongues. They break the whole Law, that lament not the crime out of love to the Lawmaker, and grieve not for the Sinner out of love to their neighbour.

* Nonnunquam sæpe ita in eos afficimur inhumanè. Prosper.

3. Those who are imitators of common sins, instead of being mourners for them. As though others did not pilfer God's right fast enough, and were too slow in pulling him from his Throne; as if they grieved that others had got the start of them in wickedness. 'Tis a pious sadness, and a blessed grief to be affected with common sins, without being fetter'd by them; to mourn for them, without cleaving to them; to be transported with sorrow for them, without being drawn by a love to them.

4. Those that fret against God, instead of fretting against their own foolishness, Prov. 19. 3. The sins of good men are many times provocations to God to draw up the sluce from the hearts of wicked men, and give liberty to their lusts, for the chastening of others; and therefore in grieving for the sins of others, they implicitly grieve for their own.

5. Those who are more transported against others sins, as they are, or may be occasions of hurt to them,than as they are injuries to God. How warm are we often in our own Cause, and how cold in God's? We partly satisfie our own discontent by such a carriage, but not our duty.

6. Those who are so far from mourning for common Sins, that they never truly mourn'd for their own. Who have yet the Treasures of wickedness, after the rod of God hath been upon them, Mich. 6. 9, 10. Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked reflecting upon the Rod they had felt? Common sins are but a Glass wherein we may see our common Nature. The best men have the worst Sins in their Nature, though by Grace they have them not in their Practice. He that grieves not for other Mens Sins, more or less, leſs, never grieved truly for his own. He that is not concerned for the diſhonours of God by others, is little concerned for the diſhonour of God by himſelf. Let us uſe our Eyes for thoſe ends for which God hath given them; they are inſtruments of ſight, and inſtruments of ſorrow.

It is neceſſary for us to mourn for our own ſins. We can never mourn for others Sins, unleſs we mourn for our own. If we ſorrow not for our own, the ſorrow we may pretend to have for others, proceeds not from a right cauſe. We have that one Sin of Adam in our Nature, which ſubjected the whole world to an Anathema. Let us not ſtay in generals; every Man will lay the fault upon Sin in the bulk, without reflecting on the ſin in his own Bowels. We can complain particularly of thoſe ſins that are common, and why ſhould we reſt in generals, when we come to our own? Dolus verſatur in univerſalibus, 'tis a deceitful ſorrow that is for Sin in a heap. Is there not perfidiouſneſs to God, coldneſs in his ways, too much ſlighting the Goſpel, want of bowels and compaſſion, incorrigibleneſs under judgments, houſes fir'd and pride not conſumed; falſeneſs in reſolutions, like Oxen moving with the touch of the Goad, and preſently ſtanding ſtill; deceitful bows, letting the ſtring ſlip after they have ſtood fully bent? Hoſ. 10. 4. There may be Sins among us that may cauſe a ſtorm that we little think of: The Mariners little ſuſpected Jonah to be the cauſe of the tempeſt till he diſcovered it himſelf. He that never mourned for his own Sins, cannot perform this duty ſo neceſſary for his preſervation, and therefore cannot expect the mark of God in a time of publick judgment. He that would rightly mourn for the Corruptions of others, muſt enquire whether he hath not the ſame in his own Bowels, and fling the hardeſt ſtone at them. Judah calls for Tamar to the flames for that crime which himſelf had been a partner and actor in; ſo apt are we to be ſevere againſt others Sins, and indulgent to our own. The beſt have need to mourn for their own ſins in relation to the publick: The only good man in the Ship was Jonah, and for his ſin was the Storm ſent, and the reſt like to be wrackt.

2 Uſe. Of Comfort to ſuch as mourn for Common Sins. All the carnal world hath not ſuch a writ of protection to ſhew in the whole ſtrength of Nature, as the meaneſt mourner in Sion hath in his ſighs and tears. Chriſts mark is above all the Shields of the earth, and thoſe that are ſtampt with it, have his wiſdom to guard them againſt folly, his power againſt weakneſs, the everlaſting Father againſt man, whoſe breat his in his Noſtrils. We ſee that God doth not ſtrike at random, but reſerves a ſweetneſs for his Servants in the midſt of his fury againſt his Enemies; he hath his Meſſengers to mark, as well as his Executioners to ſtrike; the iſſuing the reſolute orders of his Fury, hinders not thoſe of his Grace and Compaſſion to his own. He will have a care of his Balſom-trees that diſtil this precious Liquor, no leſs than he commanded the Iſraelites in their ſharpeſt wars to have a care of the fruitful trees of a Land, Deut, 20. 19. God in the 6. v. following the Text gives the like charge to the executioners of his judgments, as David did to the Army concerning Abſolom, 2 Sam. 18. 5. Deal gently with the young man, Ezek. 9. 6. Come not near any Man upon whom is the mark. He makes proviſion firſt for the ſecurity of thoſe, before he unſheaths his Sword againſt his Enemies. The Deluge flows not from heaven till Noah be caſed in the Ark, nor is Sodom on Fire till Lot be lodged in the Mountain. God will always have a Church in the world, and ſuffer a generation of his own to inhabit the Earth: Gods attributes ſhall not interfere one with another; his truth remains firm notwithſtanding the provocations of Men. When thoſe people were ripe for judgments, God had his mourners among the Idolaters which he marks for preſervation; when he had threatened great judgments, Joel 2. 30, 31. the turning the Sun into Darkneſs and the Moon into Blood, he promiſes a remnant in Jeruſalem and Sion, v. 32. And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord ſhall be delivered, for in mount Sion, and in Jeruſalem ſhall be deliverance as the Lord hath ſaid, and in the remnant whom the Lord ſhall call. Neither the fury of Men ſhall, nor the judgments of God will extinguiſh the Church; not the malice of Men, becauſe of Gods power, nor God himſelf, becauſe of his truth; [The Lord hath ſaid.] God will either preſerve under judgments, or take away in them, to a place of happineſs. 'Tis thought by ſome, that the reaſon Enoch was ſnatcht to Heaven in the midſt of his life, according to the rate of living in that age, was becauſe he was afflicted with the ſins of thoſe among whom he lived. And indeed he could ſcarce walk with God without grieving that others diſdained to walk with him, and acted contrary to him: God would take him from that affliction, as well as from the danger of being corrupted by the age. He will either have his Chambers wherein to hide them here till the indignation be over-paſt, Iſa. 26. 20, 21. or his Manſions to lodge them in for ever with himſelf. What hurt is it to any to be refuſed a hiding place here, that he may be conducted to the poſſeſſion of a glorious reſidence for ever? That judgment that takes off the Fetters of a wicked Man for execution, knocks off the Fetters of the godly for a Gaol delivery; like Fire it conſumes the Droſs, and refines the Gold. The day of Gods wrath is a day of gloomineſs to the wicked, Joel. 2. 2. but as the morning ſpread upon the Mountains to the godly mourners, the dawning of comfort to them. God out of the ſame Pillar of the cloud diffuſed light upon the Iſraelites, and ſhot thunders and lightenings upon the Ægyptians, to which perhaps the Prophet might here allude.

3 Uſe. Mourn for the ſins of the time and place, where you live. 'Tis the leaſt diſlike we can ſhew to them. A flood of grief becomes us in a flood of ſin. How well would it be, if we were as loud in crying for mercy, as our ſins at the preſent are in crying for vengeance? While judgments march to ſeize our perſons, our grief ſhould run to damp the judgments: Moiſt Walls choak the Bullet. 'Tis far better to mourn for the cauſe of judgments, than to mourn under them. The jolly blades were the firſt prey to the Enemy, Amos 6. 1, 2, 3, to v. 7. They that chaunt to the ſound of the Viol, and drink wine in Bowls ſhall go captive with the firſt that go captive. We of this City have moſt reaſon to mourn; the Metropolis of a Nation is the Metropolis uſually of ſin, and the faireſt mark for the Arrows of Gods indignation. The chief City of a Nation is uſually threatned in Scripture, Rabbah of the Ammonites, Damaſcus of Syria, Tyrus of Phœnicia, Babylon of the Chaldean Empire, Jeruſalem of Judea, and ſuitably, why not London of England? And let no Man think that mourning is a degenerate and effeminate diſpoſition: Doth Solomon ever imprint the ſame Character on mourning as he doth on laughter? Eccleſ. 2.2. Doth he ever vilifie that with a term of madneſs, and call the mourners Bedlams? How can any, who hath not put off the Title and Nature of Man, behold, without amazement and grief, Men ſo bold, as to pull down the judgments of God upon them, and force his indignation? This temper is a pious embalming Chriſts crucified honour; ſhall any Man that profeſſeth Chriſt have ſo little love to him, as not to beſtow a groan upon him, when he ſees him freſhly diſhonoured and abuſed? If we had not committed any ſin in our whole life, there is cauſe of mourning for the abominations of the world. Chriſt had an unſpotted innocence and an unexpreſſible grief for Jeruſalems ſins and miſery; Oh Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, how often would I have gathered thee, and thou wouldeſt not! Never doth ſorrow more appear in love, than when it is more for what diſhonours God, than what pincheth us. Men may pretend a grief for the ſins of the times, when it is only for themſelves, that they have not thoſe pleaſing opportunities of greatning themſelves, and that eſtimation in the world, that ſtage for Pride and Covetouſneſs to act upon which they deſire. Our mourning is then right, when we grieve not ſo much that we, as that God is a ſufferer. It ſhould be proportionable where there are great breaches of Gods Law; our grief ſhould be as full, as, if poſſible, to fill up the ditch that is digg'd; the Septuagint in the Text implies it, κατασυλλόγων. Paul and Barnabas tore their garments, (a ſign of a great grief and indignation) when the Heathens would have ſacrificed to them as Gods, Acts 14.13. they uſed not the ſame expreſſions in ſmaller ſins; but this was againſt the Nature of God, and a multitude engaged in it. The greater the ſin, the greater the ſorrow. I need not mention the ſins among us; the impudent Atheiſm, contempt of the Goſpel, putrifying Luſt, barefac'd Pride, rending Diviſions, many ſins viſible enough to be grieved for, and too many to be ſpoken of. The ſorrow ſhould be univerſal. Not for one ſin which may be againſt any Mans particular intereſt, but for all, even thoſe that our carnal advantage is not concerned in. God is diſhonoured by one as well as by another, and Chriſt is crucified by one as well as by another. It muſt be attended with a more ſtrict obedience: 'Tis the higheſt generoſity to wear Chriſts Livery, when others put it off and lay it aſide as uſeleſs. No doubt but Joſeph of Arimathea mourned as well as the reſt for the ſufferings of our Saviour, but he teſtified alſo an Heroick affection to him, in going boldly to Pilate to beg the body of Jeſus, for an honourable burial, when none of the other diſciples ſought after it, but truſted more to the ſwiftneſs of their heels for their own ſecurity, than concern'd themſelves for the honour of their Maſter. While others therefore are defiling the world with their abominations, let us be waſhing it with our Tears, and filling heaven with our cries, that when God marcheth in his fury, we may be ſecure by his acceptance of our humiliations.

Motives.

1. This is a means to have great tokens of the love of God. No queſtion but Chriſt in his agony bewailed the ſins of the world, and then was an Angel ſent to comfort him, and aſſure him of an happy iſſue. It was juſt after the teſtimony of his diſpleaſure againſt Peter for diſſwading him from that death, whereby he was to honour God, and waſh off the ſtain of ſin, and repair the violations of the Law, whereby he manifeſted a concern for his fathers honour, that he was transfigured, and had therein the earneſt of an heavenly glory, and that tranſporting voice: This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed, hear you him, Mat. 16. 23. Mat. 17. 1, 2, &c.

2. It is a means to prevent judgments. Tears cleanſed by the Blood of Chriſt, are a good means to quench that juſtice which is a conſuming Fire. Sin puts a ſtop to the working of Gods Bowels, and opens the Magazines of wrath: grief for it diſarms Gods hand of his Thunders, and may divert his darts from our hearts. No other defence is often left againſt the ſtrength of judgments after ſin hath made its entrance. A holy ſeed in Jeruſalem, is the guard of it in the time of Senacherib's Invaſion, Iſa. 6. 13. The holy ſeed ſhall be the ſubſtance thereof. Growth in ſin ripens judgments, turns Bloſſoms and Buds into Fruit, Rods into Scorpions. Grief for it turns ſcorpions into Rods, leſſens a judgment if not wholly prevents it. The Water of repentance is the beſt way to quench the flames of ſin, and ſparks of wrath. If good Men fall under a common judgment, it may be often for a defect in this temper. This was Auſtins opinion, * That many good, men are taken away with with the wicked in Common Judgments; becauſe though, they do not Commit the ſame ſins, yet they connive at their iniquities, and ſo are laſht with their rods, temporally chaſtned, but not eternally puniſhed.

3. It will ſweeten Judgments. Such may ſay of Judgment, as Paul of death, Oh Judgment where is thy ſting! 'Tis a double burden to lye under the weight of common Judgments, and the weight of common ſins; grief for them is a means to remove the guilt, and thereby to eaſe thee of a Judgment. If we are concerned in mourning for ſin, we ſhall be more fit to honour God, if he makes us fall under his ſtroak. A holy ſorrow will bring us into a ſubmiſſive frame. Aaron had been, without queſtion, humbled for his timorous compliance with the people in the making of the golden Calf; and when God came to ſtrike him near in his own Children, he held his peace, Levit. 10. 3. No doubt but his former humiliation fitted him for his preſent patience.

4. Our repentance for our own ſins was never right, unleſs we are of this temper. Repentance is a juſtice towards God, and therefore is converſant about other mens ſins in a hatred of them. 'Tis for ſin as ſin, and ſin is ſin in whatſoever ſubject it be, and worthy of hatred according to right reaſon, and therefore that grace whereby a Man hates it in his own perſon, will engage him to hate it whereſoever it is: and we alwaies grieve for the encreaſe of that which is the object of our hatred. A truly juſt man hates the injury committed againſt another as well as that againſt himſelf. That filthineſs which diſpleaſeth a penitent in his own act, diſpleaſeth him in anothers act, there being the ſame adequate reaſon, and ſin being of the ſame nature againſt God in another as in himſelf. 'Tis All abominations, in the text; this is an argument of ſincerity: to mourn for one may be from ſelf intereſt, to mourn for all muſt be from a pure affection.

5. 'Tis an argument of a true affection to God. To mourn for ſin when it is rare, though groſs, is not ſo much a ſign of ſincerity, as to mourn for it when it is Epidemical, when the Foundations of godlineſs are out of courſe and the graces contrary to thoſe ſins are generally diſcountenanced: as it is a greater ſign of ſincerity to love the word, when it is generally ſlighted, than to love it when all admire it. What a noble affection had that Lady in Samuel, 1 Sam. 4. 19. &c. that grieved not ſo much for the loſs of her Father, Husband, Friends, but bewailed the departure of the glory of Iſrael, and implicitely at leaſt, the ſin that occaſioned it? How did her affection to God drown all carnal affections? Her ſorrow for the ark ſtifled the ſorrow of her travel, and the joy at the birth of her Son. She regarded it not. This is an evident token of affection, when we mourn moſt for the ſins which moſt diſhonour God, and the ſins of thoſe perſons that ſeem to be nearer to God, and caſt moſt reproaches upon his name.

6. Shall we be outſtript by Idolaters? The mourning for others ſins was a cuſtom kept up in Iſrael after their revolt from God unto Jeroboam. When Naboth was put to death for a pretended crime of blaſphemy, a faſt was proclaimed to lament his ſin, 1 Kings 21. 12. and though with a wicked intention, to palliate a murther with the cloak of religion, yet it evidenceth this mourning for the groſs ſins of others to be a common ſentiment among them, and practiſed upon the like occaſions.

7. We have juſt fears of judgments. We know not whence they will come, from the North or from the South. God ſets up his warnings in the Heavens: we behold him frowning and preparing his arrows; and are we careleſs in what poſture we ſhall meet him? He hath Spit in our faces, made us a by-word and reproach; ſhould we not be humbled? Numb. 12. 14. If her Father had ſpit in her face, ſhould ſhe not be aſhamed? God ſeems to be departing. He hath as it were kept open market a long time, he ſeems now to be putting up his wares, removing his Candleſtick, withdrawing the power of his Ordinances, recalling his Meſſengers, the light is almoſt in the ſocket. The voice of God is received with a deaf ear, the reproofs and admonitions of God have not a kindly operation, the ſigns of judgment amaze us, and the amazement quite vaniſhes. We ſtart like a man in a dream, and fall back upon our pillow and ſnort out our ſleep. Can we expect God to ſtay? He ſeems to be upon the threſhold of the Temple, come down already from the Cherubims; and is it not high time to bewail our own ſins, and the Common abominations, that have ſo polluted the place of his habitation, that we may ſay we cannot ſee how God can ſtay with honour to himſelf? If we bewail the ſins that provoke him to it, God may ſtay; if he will not, let us at leaſt ſhew this affection to him at parting. This is not a thing unbecoming the higheſt Chriſtian. Doth not the Spirit grieve for the ſins of others which play the wantons with the grace of God? Eph. 4. 30. Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God. The holy Spirit hath no ſins of his own to grieve for. Shall we be above that which the Spirit of God thinks himſelf not above? Shall we refuſe mourning for that which goes to the heart of the Holy Ghoſt? Let us therefore examine what are our own ſins, what are the abominations of the times and places wherein we live; make inquiſition for the one, that we may drag them out before the Lord: And in our places endeavour to ſtop and reform the other. As the true fire of Love to God will melt us into tears, ſo it will heat us into zeal. He is no friend, that will complain of a toads being in another's boſom, but not ſtrive to kill it. It will ſhew either Cowardice or falſeneſs. That zeal is wild-fire that is not accompanied with an holy ſorrow, and that ſorrow is crude which is not accompanied with a godly Zeal.

A DISCOURSE FOR The Comfort of Child-bearing Women.

1 Tim. 2. 15.

Notwithstanding she shall be saved in Child-bearing, if they continue in faith, and charity, and holiness with sobriety.

I Shall not take my rise any higher than v. 12. where the Apostle orders that a Woman should not teach. But I suffer not a Woman to teach, i. e. publickly.

Two Reasons are rendred;

1. * She was last in Creation: Adam was first formed, then Eve.

* Hieron.

2. First in defection, v. 14. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression. The fall of man was the fruit of the Womans first Doctrine, and therefore she is not suffered to teach any more; the Woman was deceived by the Serpent, and so drew her Husband, and whole Posterity, into ruine. Some of the Papists bring this place as an Argument against Womens reading the Scripture; but no reason can conclude it from this place. How can the Spirit of God prohibit their reading the Scripture in private, and the instruction of their Families, since Women are among those who are commended for reading the Scripture? Acts 17. 11, 12. where the honourable Women are mention'd. And Lois and Eunice are applauded for their instruction of Timothy. Are not Women bound by that command of Peter, to give a reason of their Faith to any that shall ask them, unless they would have Women Christians without reason? What was the Office of those Ecclesiastical Widdows in the Primitive times, but to instruct the younger Women? But this is not to be charged upon all the Papists: Becanus only is the man that Rivet mentions * And because upon this declaration of the Apostle some might be dejected by the consideration of the deep hand the Woman had in the first fall, in the punishment inflicted upon them for it, the Apostle in the Text brings in a Notwithstanding for their comfort. Notwithstanding her guilt in defection, her punishment in child-bearing, she hath as good a right to salvation as the Man: So that the Apostle here answers by way of anticipation, an Objection which might be made, whether the guilt contracted by the Woman, and the punishment inflicted, might not hinder her eternal salvation. The Apostle answers, No. Though she was first in the transgression, and the pain of child-bearing was the punishment of that first sin, yet the Woman may arrive to everlasting salvation notwithstanding that pain, if she be adorn'd with those graces which are necessary for all Christians. Though the punishment remain, yet the believing Woman is in the Covenant of Grace, under the wings of the Mediator of that Covenant, if she have Faith, the condition of the Covenant, which works by Love and Charity, and is attended with holiness, and renewal of the heart.

* Isagog. ad Script. c. 13. p. 990, 991.

Observe; God hath gracious [Cordials] to cheer up the hearts of Believers in their distress, and in the midst of those cases which are sufficient of themselves to cast them down. The Apostle here alludes to that curse upon the Woman, Gen. 3. 16. Unto the Woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; In sorrow thou shalt bring forth Children. The punishment is peculiar to the married woman, besides that punishment which was common to her with the man.

Thy sorrow and thy conception. Hendiadys say some; The sorrow of thy conception. The word הרון signifies the whole time of the Womans bearing in the Womb, and so includes not only those pains in the very time of Labour, but also all those precursory indispositions, as the weakness of the stomach, heaviness of the head, irregular longings, and and those other symptoms which accompany conceptions. Though this pain seems to be natural, from the constitution of the Body, yet since some other Creatures do bring forth with little or no pain *; It would not have been so with the Woman in innocency, because all pain which is a punishment of sin, had not been incident to a sinless, and immortal body.

* Aristot. Hist. Animal. l. 7. c. 9.

We will consider the words apart.

Saved.] It may either note the Salvation of the Soul, or the preservation of the Woman in Child-bearing. The first I suppose is principally intended, (for the Apostle here would signify some special comfort to Women under that curse. But the preservation of Women in Child-bearing was a common thing testified by dayly experience in the worst, as well as in the best Women, and Christianity did not bring the professors of it into a worse estate in those things which immediately depended upon God, or make the Children Vipers, not to come into the world without the death of their Mothers.) Yet a temporal preservation may be included; for when an eternal salvation is promis'd, temporal salvation is also promis'd, according to the methods of Gods wisdom and goodness in the course of his providence, there being in all such promises a tacit reserve, viz. if God sees it good for us; and the manner of their preservation also, wherein the preservation of a believer differs from that of an unregenerate Person. Others are preserved by God, as a merciful Creator and Governour, in a way of common Providence, for the keeping up of the world; But believers are preserv'd in the way of promise and covenant, in the exercise of faith, and by the special love of God, as a tender Father, and their God in covenant with them through Christ.

In Child-bearing.] διὰ τεκνογονίας through Child-bearing. The Præposition διὰ is often taken for ἐν, as Rom. 4. 11. That he might be the Father of all that believe, though they be not circumcis'd πιστεύοντων δι' ἀκροβυστίας believing in uncircumcision, where it notes the state wherein they shall be saved. So it notes here not the cause of the salvation of the Woman, but the state wherein she shall be saved, and amounts to thus much; The punishment inflicted upon the Woman for her first sin shall not be remov'd in this life, yet notwithstanding this, there is a certain way of salvation by faith, though she pass through this punishment. For by τεκνογονία is not meant a simple Child-bearing, but a Child-bearing in such a manner as God hath threatned with sorrow and grief.

If they continue.] By [They] is not meant the Children, as some imagine, because of the change of the singular to the plural; the sense then should run thus, she shall be saved, if the Children remain in faith, &c. That would be absurd, to think that the Salvation of the Mother should depend upon the faith and grace of the Children. When it is sometimes seen that the Children of a godly Mother may prove as wicked as Hell itself. But by [they] is meant the Woman. The name Woman is taken collectively for all Women, and therefore the plural number is added. The Apostle passes from the singular number to the plural, as he had done from the plural to the singular, v. 9. In like manner let the women adorn themselves in modesty, where he uses the plural, but v. 11. reassumes the other number again in his discourse. The graces which are here put as the conditions, are, Faith, Charity, Sanctification, Sobriety. Where the Apostle seems to oppose those to the first causes or ingredients of the defection.

1. Faith opposed to Unbelief of the precept of God and the threatning annext.

2. Charity, opposed to Disaffection to God. As though God were an Enemy to their happiness, and commanded a thing which did prejudice their happiness, whereupon must arise ill surmises of God, and an aversion from him.

3. Sanctification. In opposition to this Filthiness and Pollution brought upon the Soul by that first defection; there must therefore be in them an aim and endeavour to attain that primitive integrity and purity they then lost.

4. Sobriety, σωφροσύνη, Temperance. Because the giving the reins to sense, and obeying the longings thereof was the cause of the fall, Gen. 3. 6. She saw that it was pleasant to the eye. Original sin is called concupiscence, and lusting, and to this is opposed Sobriety.

1. Faith.] This is put first, because it is the Fundamental grace. It is the employer of Charity, for it works by it, the root of Sanctification, for by faith the heart is purified. By Faith is chiefly meant the grace of Faith (1) Faith in the habit (2) Faith in the exercise.

2. Charity.] The first sin was an enmity against God; therefore there is now necessary a Love to God. The first sin was virtually an enmity to all the posterity of man, which were to come out of his loins; therefore love to mankind is necessary. And Faith alwaies infers Love to God and man.

3. Sanctification] is here added, because by that both the truth of Faith and love appears to our selves and others. And justification by Faith is thereby ratified, James 2. 24. By Sanctification is not here meant a particular holiness or chastity due to the marriage bed, as some of the Papists assert, but an universal sanctity of heart and life.

4. Sobriety.] This is a natural means for Preservation. Intemperance makes bodily distempers more dangerous in their assaults. True Faith is accompanied with Temperance and Sobriety in the use of lawful comforts. The Papists, though without any good ground, frame an argument from hence to prove marriage to be a Sacrament, asserting that those graces of Faith and Charity, &c. are conferred upon the Woman by vertue of Marriage, and ex vi institutionis. How severe a Doctrine is it then to engage any in vows of a ſingle life when they might have a readier way to attain grace with the Satisfaction of nature? Are not the virtues mentioned here, as neceſſary to the ſingle, as the married Chriſtians? Who ever heard that marriage was appointed to confer thoſe Chriſtian graces which are neceſſary for men and women in all Conditions? Beſides, is it probable that that was inſtituted to confer Chriſtian graces, which was inſtituted in Paradiſe before Chriſtianity was in being, and had been valid if man had ſtood in innocency, where there had been no need of a juſtifying Faith?

Obſerve. 1. The Puniſhment of the woman, In Child-bearing.

2. The Comfort of the woman. She ſhall be ſaved.

3. The Condition of the Salvation. If they continue. Wherein is implyed an exhortation to continue in Faith, &c.

Doct. Many Obſervations might be raiſed.

1. The pain in child-bearing is a puniſhment inflicted upon the Woman for the firſt ſin.

2. The continuance of this puniſhment after Redemption by Chriſt, doth not hinder the ſalvation of the Woman, if there be the Goſpel-conditions requiſite.

3. The exerciſe of Faith, with other Chriſtian graces, is a peculiar means for the preſervation of Believers under God's afflicting hand.

I ſhall ſum them up into this one.

Doct. The continuance of the puniſhment inflicted upon the Woman for the firſt ſin, doth not prejudice her eternal ſalvation, nor her preſervation in child-bearing, where there are the conditions of Faith, and other graces.

Here I ſhall ſpeak,

1. Concerning the Puniſhment and the Cauſe of it.

2. The Nature of it.

3. Its not prejudicing Eternal Salvation.

1. Concerning the Puniſhment. Child-bearing it ſelf is not the puniſhment, but the pain in it. For the bleſſing [Increaſe and multiply] was given in Innocency. This puniſhment is peculiar to the Woman, and ſuperadded to that inflicted upon the Man, wherein the Woman alſo hath her ſhare, though it lay heavieſt upon Adam's ſhoulders. And becauſe this puniſhment is the greater, it is diſputed in the Schools whether Adam's or Eve's ſin were the greater. Various Opinions there are. We may, I think, ſafely make theſe Concluſions.

1. In regard of the kind of ſin it was equal in both: They both had an equal pride, an equal aſpiring to be like God: For in all probability, Eve gave not her Husband the fruit to eat, without acquainting him with the reaſons which mov'd her to eat it, as alſo the advantage ſhe expected from it. And God chargeth this aſpiring humour upon the man, Gen. 3.22. The Man, האדם, is become like one of us. Both of them therefore embrac'd the temptation as it was directed, and ſwallowed the fruit, with an expectation to be like, not the Angels, (as ſome think, from Gen. 3. 5. You ſhall be as Gods, Elohim;) but like God himſelf, as appears by v. 22. in that Ironical ſpeech, where the Lord God Jehovah ſaith, The Man is become like one of us. They both believed the Serpent, both broke the command in eating the fruit, both were guilty of this aſpiring Ambition. Some indeed think Eve ate twice of the fruit, once before the Serpent, and the other time when ſhe gave her Husband, Gen. 3. 6. She did eat, and gave to her Husband with her, and he did eat *. But that is not ſo clear in the Text.

* Maiana in loc.

2. In regard of the firſt motion to this ſin, Eves ſin was the greater. She was the ſeducer of Adam, which the Apoſtle expreſſeth in the verſe before the Text. The Woman being deceived, was in the tranſgreſſion. Where the Apoſtle intimates the Womans ſin in that reſpect to be greater than the mans. Adam was in it too, but the Woman deeper.

* Eſtius in ſenten.

3. In regard of the Womans condition, the ſin was greater on Adam's part *.

1. Becauſe he, being the Man, had more power to reſiſt, more ſtrength to argue the caſe.

2. Eve had a ſtronger and craftier Adverſary to deal with, the ſubtilleſt of all the beaſts of the field, Gen. 3. 1. animated and inſpired by a craftier Devil. The ſtronger the Tempter, the more excuſable the ſin. Adam was tempted by Eve, but Eve by the Serpent.

3. Eve had the command of not eating immediately from her Husband; which laid not altogether ſo ſtrong a tye upon her as it did upon him, who had it immediately from the mouth of God, and therefore was more certain of the verity of the Precept.

2. Of what nature is this Puniſhment?

1. 'Tis not a Puniſhment in a rigid ſenſe, nor continued as ſuch.

1. Becauſe 'tis not commenſurate to the nature of the ſin, neither is it that penalty which the Law required. Death was due, and death immediately upon the offence; but death was kept off by the interpoſition of the Mediator, and this which is leſs than death, inflicted at preſent. The Mediator or Days-man interpoſed before this ſentence; for the promiſe of the Seed which ſhould bruiſe the Serpents head, preceded the pronouncing of this ſentence, Gen. 3. 15, 16. God arms himſelf againſt both, but not with thoſe weapons they had deſerv'd. Capital Crimes are uſually attended with capital puniſhments, which draw a deſtruction upon the offender. Where death is deſerv'd, and a lighter puniſhment inflicted, it is rather an act of clemency, than ſtrict Juſtice, and may be called by the name of a partial pardon, or reprieve, as well as a puniſhment. 'Tis indeed a puniſhment when Conſcience racks a man with further expectation of torment, when it is but a Prologue to everlaſting burnings, when through thoſe pains any fall into the place of everlaſting horrour. 'Tis then more properly a puniſhment, when it proceeds from an irreconcileable Juſtice, arm'd with Omnipotency in the Execution, not when it proceeds from an anger mix'd with mildneſs, and mitigated by the Interceſſions of a Mediator.

an

2. 'Tis not a reparation of the injury done to God. One reaſon of the inſtitution of puniſhment is to repair the damage the Perſon offended ſuſtains by the malefactor, as far as he is capable. The injury done to God cannot be repaired by any temporary puniſhment. No nor indeed actually by an eternal one, though an eternal ſuffering is all the reparation a finite Creature is capable to make to the honour of God. A man is capable of making ſome kind of amends to his Neighbour for an offence done, but God being infinitely our Superiour cannot have his honour repaired by any thing a Creature can do or ſuffer.

3. 'Tis not continued as a part of Satisfaction to the juſtice of God. As though Chriſt needed the ſufferings of the Creature to make up the ſum which he was to pay for us, and which he hath already paid. 'Tis not, on the account of the death of Chriſt, purely a vindictive, but a medicinal act to a believer. 'Tis rather to awaken us than to Satisfy juſtice. As we wring a man by the noſe who is fallen into a ſwoon, not to have ſatisfaction from him for any injury he may have done us, but to fetch him out of his fit. Theſe puniſhments are to awaken men to a ſight of their firſt ſin.

4. The proper impulſive cauſe of puniſhment is wrath. Though this was the firſt cauſe of this ſentence, yet it is not inflicted in wrath upon a believer. Though at firſt it was an effect of Gods anger, yet in a beliver it is a fruit of Gods fatherly anger, wherein he acts with a compoſition of Judge & Father. In inflicting it he preſerves the authority of a Judge: In preſerving under it, and pardoning the ſinfor which it was inflicted, he evidenceth the affection of a Father. Puniſhment, as ſuch, is only to hurt, and make men reap the fruit of their iniquity: But the end of affliction in the intention of the perſon that doth afflict, is oftentimes to benefit.

2. Yet it is in ſome ſort a puniſhment and ſomething more than an affliction.

1. In reſpect of the meritorious cauſe, ſin. This is not inflicted ratione abſoluti dominii, but ratione meriti. 'Tis not an act of abſolute ſoveraignty, but a judicial legal act, upon the demerit of ſin. There are ſome afflictions which are not puniſhments, as in the caſe of the man that was born blind: Chriſt tells us that it was neither for his own ſin, nor for the ſins of his parents, but that God might be glorified, Joh.n 9. 2. 3. i.e. God in inflicting that blindneſs, reſpected neither the ſin of the man, nor the ſin of the parents, but the making him a paſſive ſubject of his glory, in our Saviours miraculous Cure. But in this caſe God reſpected the ſin of the woman as the cauſe and reaſon of the puniſhment.

2. Becauſe if man had ſtood in innocency, neither this grief, nor indeed any other had been. The birth in innocency, would have been without ſorrow and grief, as the hunger and thirſt which would have been in Adam in that ſtate, would have been without that gnawing in the ſtomack and that pain which we find in thoſe defects, becauſe a ſtate of integrity and perfect righteouſneſs muſt needs be without grief. But after the fall all thoſe pains incident to man or woman, are fruits of the curſe of ſin.

3. This puniſhment doth not hinder Salvation, though it be continued.

I ſhall lay down theſe Propoſitions to clear up this matter.

1. God intended not in the acceptance of Chriſts mediation to remove in this life all the puniſhments denounced after the fall. God takes away the eternal, but not the temporal. For this very puniſhment was threatned after his acceptance of Chriſts mediation, and after the compact and covenant between the Father and the Son, about their redemption of mankind, becauſe the promiſe preceded the threatning, and the mediatory covenant preceded the promiſe. Some parts of Chriſts purchaſe are only payable in another life, and ſome fruits of Redemption God intends for growth only in another ſoyl; ſuch are Freedom from pain, diſeaſes, death & ſin. And therefore the laſt day, when believers ſhall be gather'd together, is called by way of excellency, the day of Redemption, Eph. 4. 30. as if we had nothing of Redemption properly in this life, becauſe we have it not compleat. And it is called upon this account the time of refreſhing and the time of the reſtitution of all things, Act. 3. 19, 21. when all things ſhall be reſtored to their primitive compleatneſs, and we ſhall have a full refreſhment by a removal of all the evils which we ſuffer by reaſon of ſin. So that the ſatisfaction made by Chriſt extends not to a preſent removal of all the effects of the curſe, pains of the body, death of relations, &c. The ground is not reſtored to its original vigor and fruitfulneſs, man muſt ſtill eat his bread in the ſweat of his brows, women muſt ſtill bring forth with ſorrow, our lives muſt waſte by a continual invaſion of weakneſſes and diſeaſes, we muſt drop one after another into the grave, ſend ſome before us, and leave others to come after us; tho God in mercy doth mitigate theſe, in ſome more, in ſome leſs, according to his Soveraign pleaſure, and though thoſe curſes do materially continue, yet they are attended with a bleſſing, the fruits of Chriſts purchaſe. But the full value of Chriſts ſatisfaction will appear, when there ſhall be a new Heaven, & a new Earth, when the day of Redemption ſhall dawn, and all tears be wiped from believers eyes. But God never promiſed the total removal of them in this life to any Saint, no though he ſhould have all the Faith and Holineſs of all the Catalogue of Saints in the book of life centred in him.

2. Chriſt never intended in the payment of the price of our Redemption, the preſent removal of them. He interpoſed himſelf before this ſentence was pronounced (for the promiſe preceded the threatning) and therefore ſhew'd himſelf content, that thoſe marks ſhould be ſet upon that ſin, though he prevented by his Mediation the dreadful ſentence of eternal death. Chriſt never expected it; for the Compact between the Father and the Son did not run in this ſtrain. Chriſt's Enemies were not preſently upon his aſcenſion to be made his foot-ſtool, whereof death is not the leaſt; but he was to ſit at the right hand of God, expecting it; neither can we expect to be rid of our burdens, till Chriſt's Victory over his Enemies be fully compleat. He ſent after his Aſcenſion the Spirit to be our Comforter, which ſuppoſeth a ſtate wherein we ſhould need comfort; and when are we under a greater neceſſity of comfort, than when the puniſhment of ſin is actually inflicted on us? The Spirit was to comfort us in the abſence of our Saviour, and conſequently in the abſence and want of thoſe fruits of Redemption which are not yet compleated.

3. Chriſt intended, and did actually take away the Curſe of thoſe Puniſhments from every Believer. As Chriſt came to take away the guilt of ſin, ſo by conſequence he took away the curſe of puniſhment; for as he was not a miniſter of ſin, ſo he was not a miniſter of the curſe, Gal. 2. 17. for he himſelf by taking the curſe upon himſelf, took it off from us; ſo that though the curſe remains materially, yet it doth not formally. As when man felt his underſtanding and will were not deſtroyed, but the purity and healthfulneſs of thoſe faculties which made up his well-being were loſt: So in Redemption, the temporal puniſhment is not remov'd, but the Curſe, which is the ſting in that puniſhment, and is indeed the eſſential part of it, is remov'd, ſince the anger of God is pacified by the death of Chriſt. Death was a Curſe upon Man for ſin, yet the death of a Believer falls not under that title; becauſe Chriſt hath taken away the ſting, 1 Cor. 15. 55, 56. Oh death! where is thy ſting, &c. And the Victory over it, he ſaith, is given us through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Whence the Apoſtle puts even death it ſelf, and things preſent, into the Catalogue of Priviledges, upon the account of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Life, or death, or things preſent, or things to come, all are yours, and you are Chriſts, and Chriſt is Gods. Not that death ſimply in it ſelf is a Priviledge, but death as conquered, and as attended with conſequent bleſſings, is ſo to a Believer. Now the ſame reaſon is for all the other parts of the Curſe, which were either Prologues to, or Attendants upon death. And as Chriſt deſtroyed death by raiſing his own body from the grave, thereby taking from death the power of perpetually retaining man: So in the ſame manner he hath took away thoſe puniſhments, that they ſhall not perpetually remain, though they do for a time. But when death is ſwallowed up in victory, all the Attendants on it ſhall undergo the ſame fate. Though the Curſe was not immediately the work of the Devil, yet that which procur'd it was; and Chriſt's intention being to take away ſin, it was alſo to take away the Curſe, which was intentionally the Devils work, his chief aim being to bring men under the Curſe, by enticing them to ſin. The end of his manifeſtation was, to deſtroy the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 8. Chriſt therefore bore our infirmities, our natural penal infirmities, though not our natural ſinful ones, unleſs morally, i. e. by ſuffering for them; he bore the infirmity of our Nature, though not our perſonal infirmities. He endur'd pain, and grief, and death, and greater than we can endure; but he did not bear every particular pain and diſeaſe which ariſeth from ſin, and a particular cauſe; yet by ſatisfying the Juſtice of God, which required death, he ſatisfied for all other pains which were parts of the Curſe, though he did not formally feel them; ſo that no longer they remain as a Curſe, no more than death it ſelf is a Curſe to a Believer. Now, as Chriſt by his death upon the Croſs did remove the ſting of death from every Believer, and ſanctifie it, though he did not die every kind of death which a man may die; ſo by enduring pain and griet, and being a man of ſorrows, he took away the ſting of all thoſe pains, which are fruits of the Curſe, though they were of a different kind from thoſe he hath himſelf endured. This I have added to prevent an Objection that may be made, that Chriſt endured not this particular pain, and therefore the Curſe is not taken away.

4. Hence it will follow, that to a Believer the very nature of theſe Puniſhments is alter'd. Whence ariſeth a mighty difference between the ſame puniſhments when ſuffered by a Believer, and by an unregenerate man. Though they are materially the ſame, yet not formally, nor eventually. In the one the ſting remains, in the other it is pull'd out. The one is an earneſt of eternal torture, and a ſprinkling of Hell; the other is in order to ſalvation, and ſanctified by the Blood of Chriſt. Chriſt by his Croſs hath made our Judgments to become Phyſick, and turn'd a Believers puniſhments into purges. The intention of the Agent makes a vaſt difference, There is a great difference between a puniſhment edg'd with a a Princes wrath, and thoſe which are ſweetened with a Fathers affection; much difference between a Chirurgians Launce, and a Tyrants Wound. The Cord that binds a Malefactor and a Patient, may be made of the ſame Hemp, and a Knife only go between; but it binds the Malefactor to Execution, the other to a Cure. In a Believer they bring forth the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, Heb. 12. 11. ſuch fruits of righteouſneſs which engender peace and joy in the Soul. That which brings ſuch excellent effects is rather an argument of love in the Inflicter, and ſo cannot come under the full notion of a puniſhment. God comforts the Iſraelites that were to go into Captivity, by a Goſpel promiſe, Hoſ. 14. 4. I will heal their backſlidings, I will love them freely, for mine anger is turned away from them. The puniſhment was continued, for they never returned into their Countrey in the form of a common wealth; but the anger was removed, ſo that the Captivity of the Believers among them was not the effect of God's wrath as a Judge, ſince they were under his magnificent love as a Father. The change of our relation to God makes a change in the nature of the puniſhment; though the puniſhment threatned may be inflicted and continued, yet the anger in that puniſhment may be turned away.

5. Therefore all temporal puniſhments of Original ſin, though they remain, do not prejudice a Believers preſent intereſt.

1. They cut not off his relation to God. A Son is as much a Son under the Rod, as in the Boſom; neither the Fathers ſtroke, nor the Childs grief, diſſolve that dear relation: Nay a Father may ſhew more of a true paternal affection in his Chaſtiſements than in his Careſſes. The Branches which are battered with Sticks, may be nearer the Root than thoſe that flouriſh at their eaſe. Chriſt while a Man of ſorrows was pronounced by God, his well beloved Son, and bore our puniſhment, not only without forfeiting his Fathers affection, but with a high gratification of him: Neither doth God's viſiting the ſeed of Chriſt with ſtripes cut off their relation to him, Pſal. 89. 32. Then will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with Rods. Whoſe tranſgreſſions? v. 30 His Children. Whoſe Children? Even the Children of him whom he would make *the firſt born, higher than the Kings of the Earth, v.*27. Which cannot be underſtood literally of David, or his Lineal Poſterity in the Jewiſh Kingdom, who were never higher than the Kings of the Earth.

2. They debar not from the preſence of God. God may be, and is as near to us in ſupporting, as he is in puniſhing. 'Tis not the cloud that interpoſeth between the Sun and us, that alters the Suns courſe, or obſtructs its influences. Chriſt took not off the badges of Original Guilt from thoſe diſciples which had the greateſt intereſt in his affections; he left them in a ſinful world to endure the fruits of ſin; he ſent them not to eaſe, pleaſure, and a quiet and painleſs life, but to labour, toyl, and ſweat; yet promiſed that he would abide with them, that he and his Father would manifeſt themſelves to them. And he turned that ſweat and pain which was the fruit of ſin, by his preſence with them, to be inſtrumental for the glory of God, and the good of themſelves in the world.

3. They break not the Covenant: His Rod and his Stripes tho they ſeem to break our Backs, make no breaches in his Covenant, Pſalm 89. 32, 33, 34. he will viſit tranſgreſſion with Rods, but he will not ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail, nor break his Covenant. No, they are rather covenant mercies, when they break our Hearts, and are means by his Grace to make our Stony Hearts more Fleſhy. He makes even thoſe diſpenſations which were pronounced for puniſhment, to bring forth covenant mercies, and the rich fruits of his grace to grow upon the ſour crab-ſtock of his judgments. Jacob in Gen. 49. is ſaid to bleſs his Children, tho he predicts ſmart afflictions to come upon them; they are rankt among the bleſſings, becauſe the covenant ſhould remain firm. The laſh removes not the inheritance. Auſtin ſaith well, Noli attendere quam pœnam habes in flagello, ſed quem locum in Teſtamento.

6. Add to all this, That the firſt promiſe ſecures a believer under the ſufferings of thoſe puniſhments. Gods affection in the promiſe of bruiſing the Serpents head, was more illuſtrious than his wrath in the threatning. There are the Bowels of a Father in the promiſe, before there was the voice of a Judge in the Sentence. God brought Sugar with his Potion, and adminiſtred his Cordial before he ſtruck with his Lance. And therefore that threatning which commenc'd after the promiſe, can no more prejudice the fruits of the promiſe to a Believer, than the Law, which was given 430 years after the promiſe to Abraham, could diſannul that, and make it of no effect, as the Apoſtle argues in another caſe, Gal. 3. 17. Much leſs can the threatning denounced immediately after the promiſe, change the veracity of God, in that which was freſh in his mind at the very time of his threatning.

Ob. But it may be askt, What is the reaſon theſe puniſhments are continued ſince the redemption wrought by Chriſt?

Anſ. 'Tis frequent with God to inflict a temporal puniſhment after pardon. Not as the Papiſts aſſert, in order to ſatisfaction. Moſes his unbelief hindred him from coming unto Canaan, ſo that when he deſired to go over Jordan, God was wroth with him, cut him off ſhort, and commands him ſilence, Deut 3. 25, 26. Speak to me no more of this matter.

There are reaſons,

1. On Gods part. 2. On our part.

1. On Gods part.

1. 'Tis congruous to the wiſdom of God to leave them upon us while we are in the World. Since God created man to gain glory by his actions, but was preſently after his creation diſgrac'd and diſparag'd by him; it ſeems agreeable to the wiſdom of God, not immediately to bring him to his former ſtate, but to leave ſome marks of his diſpleaſure upon Man to mind him of the ſtate whence he was fallen, the miſery he contracted, and the neceſſity of flying to his mercy for ſuccour.

2. 'Tis congruous to the holineſs of God. God keeps up thoſe puniſhments as the Rector and Governour of the World, to ſhew his deteſtation of that ſin which brought a diſorder and deformity upon the Creation, and was the firſt act of diſhonour to God, and the firſt pollution of the Creature. 'Tis an high vindication of the Holineſs and Authority of God, and the Majeſty and Purity of his Law, to puniſh ſin in them that are dear to him upon anothers righteouſneſs, whereby he evidenceth, that he hates ſin in all, and will not wink at it, or approve of it. So he pardoned David, but for the honour of his name, which had been blaſphemed by occaſion of David's ſin, he would leave the ſmart of it upon his Family, 2 Sam. 12. 10, 14.

3. 'Tis a declaration of his Juſtice. 'Tis not congruous to the Juſtice of God not to leave ſome marks of his anger againſt that ſin, which cauſed him to be at the expence of his Sons Blood, and is the ſource of all thoſe evils whereby God is injur'd, for which the Redeemer bled, and by which the Spirit is grieved. Since Pardon doth not, neither can alter the demerit of ſin, but that will continue; and what is once meritoriouſly a capital crime in its own nature, can never be otherwiſe; God may for the demonſtration of his juſtice, inflict and continue ſomething upon the creature, though he free him from actual condemnation. We ſhould not be ſo ſenſible of the juſtice of God in the death of Chriſt, did we not feel ſome ſtrokes of it upon our ſelves, nor what the purchaſe of our redemption did coſt our Saviour: What we hear doth not ſo much affect as what we feel. That which brought diſorder into Gods Government of the world, and made him change the Scene of his Providence, may very juſtly have ſome ſignal remark upon it, notwithſtanding the Redemption, eſpecially when the fruits of it are not fully compleat: For ſince Man was the immediate end of the creation of this lower world, and ſince all Creatures were made for the ſervice of Man, that he might be fit for the ſervice of his righteous Creator, he did by his fall violate the order of the Creation, and ſubjected it to the ſervice of the Devil, a corrupt Creature, and an enemy to God the chief Lord of the World, and ſo did deprave the order of the univerſe, and endeavoured to fruſtrate the end of God, and the end of all the Creatures. 'Tis very rational to think, that tho God out of his infinite compaſſion would not loſe his creature, yet that he ſhould ſet ſuch a badge upon him, that ſhould make him ſenſible of a depravation he had wrought in the world.

4. 'Tis uſeful to magnify his love. We ſhould not be ſenſible of what our Saviour ſuffered, nor how tranſcendently he lov'd us, if the puniſhment of ſin had been preſently removed upon the firſt promiſe. Nay how then could he have died in the fulneſs of time, which was neceſſary to the demonſtration of Gods love, ſatisfaction of his juſtice, and the ſecurity of the Creatures happineſs? God adds the threatning to the promiſe as a dark colour to ſet off and beautify the brighter. As Chriſt ſuffered that he might have compaſſion on us; ſo are we puniſhed that we might have an eſtimation of him. When Paul cries out of the body of death, ſo when we cry out of the puniſhment of ſin, it ſhould raiſe our thankfulneſs for redeeming love, I thank God through Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 7. 24, 25. We never know the worth of mercy, till we feel the weight of miſery. The ſharper the pains of ſin, the higher are our valuations of redeeming mercy. In Iſa. 4. 2. In that day ſhall the branch of the Lord be beautiful. and glorious. In what day? After great puniſhments, v. 1. and in the foregoing chapter. He appears moſt beautiful to us when we are under the laſh for ſin. As ſin continues in us, that the juſtifying grace of Chriſts righteouſneſs might more appear to us, ſo puniſhment continues on us, that redeeming love might be more prized by us.

2. On our parts. 'Tis uſeful to us;

1. To make us abhor our firſt defection and ſin. 'Twas great, and is not duly conſidered by us.

* Killet Miſcel. * This ſin of Adam is the worſt that ever was committed in the world; Extenſively, though not Intenſively, worſe than the ſin of Judas, or the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt. In reſpect that thoſe are but the effects of it, and branches of that corrupt root. Alſo becauſe thoſe ſins hurt only the perſons ſinning, but this drew down deſtruction upon the whole world, and drove thouſands into everlaſting Fire and Brimſtone. 'Tis not fit that this which was the murder of all Mankind, the diſorder of the Creation, the diſturbing of God's reſt in the works of his Hands, ſhould be paſt over without a ſcar left upon us to make us ſenſible of the greatneſs of the evil. Though the wounds be great upon our Souls, yet they do not ſo much affect us as thoſe ſtrokes upon our Bodies. This certainly was one main end of God in this; to what purpoſe elſe did he (after the promiſe of reſtauration, and giving our firſt parents the comfort of hearing the head of their great ſeducer threatned to be bruiſed by the Seed of the Woman) order this puniſhment, but to put them in mind of the cauſe of it, and ſtir up a ſtanding abhorrency of it in all ages of the world? Had not this been his intent, he would never have uſher'd it in by a promiſe, but ipſo facto, have ſhowered down a deſtroying judgment upon the world, as he did upon Sodom, without any comfortable word preceding. God inflicts thoſe puniſhments both to ſhew his own, and excite our deteſtation of this ſin: He binds us in thoſe fetters to ſhew us our work and our tranſgreſſion, wherein we have exceeded, Job 36. 8, 9.

2. To make us fear to ſin, and to purge it out. Sin hath riveted it ſelf ſo deep, that eaſy Medicines will not diſplace it. It hath ſo much of our affections, that gentle means will not divorce us from it: We ſhall hate it moſt, when we reap the puniſhment of it. Puniſhment is inflicted as a guard to the law, and the ſecurity of righteouſneſs from the corrupt inclinations of the Creature. So it is ἐκτεία ψυχῆς, as Plato calls puniſhment. As death is continued for the deſtruction of ſin in the Body, ſo are the leſſer puniſhments continued for the reſtraint of ſin in our lives. We need further converſions, cloſer applications of our ſelves to God, more quick walks to him, and fixedneſs with him. Gods ſmitings are to quicken our turnings. As it was the fruit of Jacobs trouble to take away ſin, Iſa. 27. 9. So it is a great end of God in thoſe common puniſhments of mankind to weaken corruption in a believer by them. Therefore when we have any more remarkable ſenſe of thoſe puniſhments, let us ſee what wounds our ſin gets thereby: How our hatred of it is encreaſed. If we find ſuch gracious effects, we ſhall have more reaſon to bleſs God for it, than complain of it. Oh happy troubles, when they repair, not ruine us; when they pinch us and cure us, like Thunder, which, though it trouble the Air, diſperſes the infectious vapours mixed with it, or the Tide, which though turning the ſtream of the River againſt its natural courſe, carries away much of the filth with it at its departure.

3. To exerciſe Grace. Puniſhments of themſelves have no power to ſet any grace on work, but rather excite our corruptions, but the grace of God accompanying them makes them beneficial for ſuch an end. God hath to a believer altered the commiſſion of ſuch puniſhments, they are to exerciſe our Faith, improve our patience, draw us nearer in acts of recumbency; but he hath given them no order to impair our grace, waſte our faith, or deaden our hopes.

1. Faith and Truſt, 1. Tim. 5. 5. She that is deſolate truſts in God. The lower the ſtate, the greater neceſſity, and greater obligation to truſt; ſuch exerciſes manifeſt, that the condition we are in, is ſanctified to us. As ſin is ſuffered to dwell in a regenerate Man to occaſion the exerciſe of Faith, ſo is the puniſhment of ſin continued for the ſame end. The continuance of it is a mighty ground of our confidence in God. We experiment the righteouſneſs of God in his threatning, and it is an evidence he will be the ſame in his promiſe. When we bear the marks of his punitive juſtice, it is an evidence that he will keep up the credit of his mercy, in the promiſe, as well as of his juſtice in the puniſhment, both being pronounced at the ſame time; the good of the one is as ſure by God's grace to our faith, as the ſmart of the other is by our deſert to that ſin. The continuance therefore of thoſe puniſhments may be uſed by a Believer, as a means to fix a ſtronger confidence in God; for if he were not true to the one, we might ſuſpect his truth in the other; If God ſhould be careleſs of maintaining the honour of his truth in his threatnings, we ſhould have reaſon to think that he would be careleſs of maintaining the honour of it in his promiſes, and thereupon be filled with deſpondencies. What comfort could we have in an unrighteous God? The righteouſneſs of God in inflicting puniſhment, is but a branch of that eſſential righteouſneſs of his nature, which obligeth him to be righteous in the performing his promiſe too. 'Tis a mighty ſupport to faith, that the righteous God loveth righteouſneſs.

2. Obedience in a Believer hath a greater luſtre by them. It was the glory of Job that he preſerved his Integrity under the ſmarteſt troubles. To obey a God always ſmiling is not ſo great an act of Loyalty, as to obey a God frowning and ſtriking, 'Tis the crown of our obedience to follow our God though he viſits us with ſtripes. 'Tis a noble temper to love that hand which ſtrikes us, and chearfully ſerve that Father which laſheth us: Our obedience is too low when it muſt be excited by a ſucceſſion of favours, and cannot run to God unleſs he allures it by ſmiles. 'Tis then a generous and ſincere obedience, when we can embrace him with a ſword in his Hand, truſt him though he kill us, love him though he ſtone us, and as the Perſians did by the Sun, adore him when he ſcorcheth, as well as when he refreſheth us. Were theſe puniſhments wholly abſent, we ſhould not have a riſe for ſo heroick faith and love; and our holineſs in this ſtate would want much of its luſtre.

3. Humility. Theſe puniſhments are left upon us to allay our pride, and be our remembrancers of our deplorable miſcrriage. It had been an occaſion of pride in us to be freed from puniſhment at the firſt appearance of a Mediator. 'Tis reaſonable the Soul ſhould have occaſions to exerciſe it ſelf in a grace contrary to that firſt ſin pride, which was the cauſe of the fall. We affected to be Gods, and puniſhment is left that we may know we are but Men, which is the end of judgments, Pſal. 9. 20. Put them in fear, O Lord, that the Nations may know they are but Men; we ſhould otherwiſe think our ſelves Gods. We are ſo inclin'd to ſin, that we need ſtrong reſtraints, and ſo ſwell'd with a natural pride againſt God, that we need Thorns in the Fleſh to let out the corrupt matter. The conſtant hanging the Rod over us makes us lick the duſt, and acknowledge our ſelves to be altogether at the Lords mercy. Though God hath pardon'd us, he will make us wear the halter about our Necks to humble us.

4. Patience. Were there no puniſhments, there would be but little occaſion for patience. This grace would not have had its extenſive exerciſe, its full formation without ſuch ſtrokes left upon the creature. Reſignation to God, which is the beauty of grace, would not come to its due maturity and ſtature without ſuch trials. So that in theſe reaſons of the continuance, we ſee they are rather advantages to Salvation, than hindrances, by promoting promoting through the influence of God's grace, thoſe graces in us which are neceſſary to a happy ſtate.

Uſe.

1. See the infinite mercy of God, who, when upon the defection of our firſt Parents he might have burnt up the whole world as he did Sodom, would upon the Redeemers account, who ſtept in, impoſe ſo light a puniſhment upon that ſin; 'tis but light in compariſon of what the nature of ſin deſerves, every ſin being a contempt of the Majeſty of God, and a ſlight of his Authority; and that ſin having greater aggravations attending it. 'Tis a merciful puniſhment, it might have been an everlaſting damnation: God might have left us to the firſt ſentence of the law, and made no exchange of eternal death for temporal pains: He might have been deaf to the voice of a Mediator, and put his mercy to ſilence as he did Moſes, Speak no more of this matter; but his Bowels pull his Juſtice by the Arm, and hinder that fatal ſtroke; and a Mediator by his interpoſition, breaks off the full blow from us, by taking it upon himſelf, and ſuffers only ſome few ſmart drops to light upon us. Oh wonderful mercy! that our puniſhment ſhould not hinder, but rather further our everlaſting happineſs by incomprehenſible grace. Let not then our puniſhments for ſin hinder our thankfulneſs. Let our Mouths ſwell with praiſe, while our Bodies crumble away by diſeaſes, and Relations drop from us by death. Let us love God's glory, admire his mercy, while we feel his Arrows: Whatever our puniſhments are, there is more matter for praiſe than murmuring.

2. How ſhould we bewail original ſin, the firſt fall of man. 'Tis a great ſlighting of God not to take notice either of his judicial, or fatherly proceedings. As we are to lament any particular ſin more eſpecially when the judgments of God, which bear the marks of that ſin in their foreheads, are upon a nation or perſon, ſo, though we are to bewail the ſin of our nature at all times, yet more ſignally when the ſtrokes of God, the remembrancers of it, are moſt ſignally upon us. A Child doth more particularly think of his fault when he is under the correcting rod for it. We ſhould ſcarce think of original ſin, if we did not feel original puniſhment. All the pains of ſin ſhould be conſidered as Gods Sermon to us, and we ſhould under them be afflicted with that ſin, as we may ſuppoſe Adam and Eve were, when they firſt heard the puniſhment denounc'd in Paradice, when they had a ſenſe of the flouriſhing Condition they had loſt for a ſlight temptation. To turn ſorrow for pain into ſorrow for our firſt ſin, is to ſpiritualize our grief, and ſanctify our paſſion.

3. What an argument for patience under puniſhments is here? The continuance of them doth not hinder our Salvation. Shall a living man complain, a man for the puniſhment of his ſin? For ſuch a puniſhment that doth not hinder his eternal welfare, but by the grace of God, and the exerciſe of Faith, rather promote it? God promiſed as well as threatned: both his mercy and righteouſneſs directs him to that which is moſt for his honour and our good. Let us not by any impatience charge infinite wiſdom with blindneſs or unrighteouſneſs. They were puniſhments at firſt, but by Faith in Chriſt, the deportment of a judge is changed into that of a Father. Druſius hath an obſervation, Pſal. 56. 10. In God will I praiſe his word, in the Lord will I praiſe his word. The firſt word Elohim is a name belonging to God as a judg, the 2d word Jehovah is a name of mercy; I will praiſe God, whether he deal with me in a way of juſtice, or in a way of mercy, when he hath thunder in his voice as well as when he hath hony under his tongue. Oh how ſhould we praiſe God, and pleaſure our ſelves by ſuch a frame? When our diſtreſſes ly hard upon us, we ſhould juſtify Gods holineſs. So the Pſalmiſt, or rather Chriſt in the bearing our puniſhment, Pſal. 22. 1. But thou art holy, when he expoſtulates with God why he had forſaken him, juſtifies Gods holineſs. Howſoever thou dealeſt with me, thou art holy in all thy waies. Thou doſt me no wrong; why ſhould I complain when holineſs and hatred of ſin guides thee, in all thoſe actings with me?

4. How earneſt ſhould we be to get rid of ſin? By pardon, by Sanctification. Guilt is the ſting of puniſhment. Sin only embitters trouble. The Remiſſion and Mortification of ſin is the health of the Soul. If the arrows head be out of a wound, the cure will be more eaſy. Look upon my affliction, and my pain, and forgive all my ſin, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 25. 8. forgiveneſs of ſin would mitigate the ſharpneſs of his pain.

5. How ſhould we act faith on God in Chriſt before, and under ſuch a condition of puniſhment? As we can never love God too much, becauſe he is the higheſt good, ſo we can never truſt God too much, becauſe he is one of immutable truth; when we are in ſtraits, it is not for want of faithfulneſs in God, but for want of Faith in us, that we are many times not preſerved. We diſtruſt God, and this is the cauſe we fall into many diſtreſſes, which otherwiſe would not come upon us, or be quickly removed from us. Did we graſp the promiſes cloſely, and plead them earneſtly, we ſhould often find the deliverance we deſire. We pray, but we pray not in Faith, we cry for deliverance, but not with confidence, we plead Gods power but forget his promiſe. Many temporal promiſes are not perform'd to us, not for want of truth in God, but for want of faith in us. Particular fiduciary acts will draw out the riches of a promiſe, for want of which we remain poor in the midſt of abundance. Some think that the promiſe made to Joſiah of his dying in peace, which phraſe is uſually meant in Scripture of a peacable death upon the bed, was not performed, becauſe Joſiah was out of the way againſt the precept of God, and therefore could not act faith requiſite to the fulfilling of that promiſe, miſe, for faith is much dampt in its actings under preſent contracted guilt. † This Faith in promiſes for outward preſervation, is not an abſolute, infallible aſſurance that God will beſtow ſuch outward things (becauſe the promiſes themſelves are not abſolute) but it is rather an indefinite act of recumbency, and ſubmiſſion, referring it to his good pleaſure towards us. But it is certain we are very much defective in acting Faith upon promiſes for temporal mercies, becauſe it is an Epidemical diſtemper in us to truſt God with our Souls rather than with our bodies, and outward concerns. † Tho. Goodwin.

1. Exerciſe Faith before ſuch a time. Furniſh your ſelves with the comforts of the Covenant, and the efficacy of the death of Chriſt. In bodily diſtempers our minds are diſcompoſed and we cannot have that Freedom of thoughts and ſpiritual reflections. This is the way to engage God, who is the beſt aſſiſtant, a very preſent help in time of trouble.

2. Exerciſe it in the uſe of ſpiritual means. God never Commanded us to truſt him but in his own methods. That is not truſt in God which is attended with any wilful Omiſſions. If we be careful in doing our duty, God will be careful in doing what belongs to him. Prayer is the beſt means for Faith to exerciſe it ſelf in. A ſpirit of Prayer before-hand is a ſign of good ſucceſs. When the heart is drawn out to cry, it is a ſign God ſtands ready with the mercy in his hand. Times of diſtreſs are times of calling upon God, Pſal. 18. 6. In my diſtreſs I called upon the Lord, and he heard my cry. God is to be acknowledged in all our ways, Prov. 3. 6. In the beginning by prayer for his direction, in the end by praiſes for the ſucceſs. We are uſually more earneſt in trouble. We have not at all times an equal fervency. Chriſt himſelf (ſome ſay) had not, for when he was in his agony he prayed more earneſtly than before, Luke 22. 44.

3. Act Faith upon the Relation God bears to you. He is our Father. We truſt earthly Fathers, and are confident they will not abuſe us. How much more ought we to truſt our heavenly Father, and not doubt of his ſincerity towards us? The greater the trouble, the more we ſhould plead Gods relation to us. Our Saviour in the garden, Mat. 26. 39, 42. at his entrance into his paſſion for us, prays to God by the title of my Father, whereas at other times he calls God Father without that appropriation; But now he would excite his confidence, and truſt in God, and thoſe promiſes he had made him to aſſiſt him in that hour.

4. Act Faith upon the attributes of God. There is nothing in God can affright a believer. There is not an attribute but ſeems fixed in God to encourage our dependance on him in any ſtrait, wiſdom, mercy, truth, omniſcience, power, juſtice too (for what comfort could we have to truſt in an unjuſt God?) All which attributes are promiſed to be aſſiſtant to a believer in any caſe of need, in the Covenant of grace, where God makes himſelf over to us as our God, and therefore all that God hath, and is, is promiſed there for our good. Upon the Power of God. Gods Omnipotence was the ground of our Saviours prayer to him in his diſtreſs, and that which the Apoſtle ſeems to intimate his eyeing of, Heb. 5. 7. He offered up prayers unto him that was able to ſave him from death. And, Pſal. 16. 1. The Pſalmiſt, or rather Chriſt, pleads the power of God. Preſerve me O Lord, for in thee do I put my truſt, שמרני אל Aquila renders it ſtrong. Plead the truth of God in his promiſe. The promiſe that preceded the threatning, viz. The bruiſing the Serpents head, the defeating all his plots and deſigns, whereof this was one, to bring man into a ſtate of puniſhment. There is a promiſe which hath been eſpecially tryed and made good, though all in the book of God have been found true, Pſal. 18. 30. The Word of the Lord is tryed. Not one word but the truth of it hath been tryed; but eſpecially this word, That God is a buckler to them that truſt in him, i.e. That he will preſerve and defend depending believers.

5. Act Faith upon Chriſt. Hath God delivered Chriſt to death? It muſt be for ſome glorious end; not for deſtruction of the Creature, that might have been done without the death of his Son; but for remiſſion; if ſo, there is ſufficient ground to truſt him for every thing elſe. We have a merciful high Prieſt, which encourageth us to make our addreſſes to him. He cannot but be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, our penal infirmities which he ſuffered, our ſinful infirmities for which he ſuffered. Where can he ſhew his mercy but in our miſery? Are we under Gods ſtrokes? Chriſt himſelf felt them, that he might the better pity us. Are we in ſuch caſes tempted to deſpond and diſtruſt? He felt ſuch fiery darts of the Devil that he might the better commiſerate us. Run to him and cry out, Bleſſed Redeemer, Compaſſionate high Prieſt, let thy pity break out to allay my grief, and ſupport my weakneſs.

Take a few encouragements to fiduciary acts.

1. Nothing is more pleaſing to God. The continuance in Faith is the neceſſary condition of our Salvation. Nothing more honours him. We honour his wiſdom and goodneſs, when we acknowledge that he hath a ſingular care of his Creatures, and truſt him in his own methods; we own his skill in governing and his goodneſs in bringing every thing about to the beſt end. Chriſt hath given us the higheſt example of truſt, and highly pleaſed God in it, in coming into the world to dye upon Gods bare word and oath. 'Tis all we can do to glorifie God. Other graces glorifie ſome particular attribute, but confidence in God glorifies all in the lump, his wiſdom, righteouſneſs, faithfulneſs mercy, truth, omniſcience and power. There is no attribute but gives a particular encouragement to Faith, and there is no attribute but Faith returns a revenue of glory to. Deſpondency diſparageth the Fathers affection and the Redeemers love; if we do not truſt him, we imply that he hath not either wiſdom, or love, or power, or faithfulneſs enough to be truſted by us, and that his word is of no value.

2. Nothing is more ſucceſsfull. 'Tis the argument the Pſalmiſt or rather Chriſt uſeth, Pſal. 16. 1. Preſerve me. Why? Becauſe I truſt in the. Truſt in God is a ſtrong argument to prevail with God for preſervation. All the ancient Fathers were delivered by God upon their truſt, Pſal. 22. 4, 5. Our Fathers truſted in thee, they truſted and thou didſt deliver them, they cryed unto thee, and were delivered; they truſted in thee, and were not confounded. Faith in Goſpel-promiſes is not a grace of a new date. 'Tis as old as Adams fall, as old as the Patriarchs, and ſucceſsful in all ages of the world. They were under new-Covenant promiſes, and had new-Covenant deliverances before the promiſes were actually ſealed by the blood of Chriſt. How much ſtronger ground have we of truſt now? Faith draws out the treaſures of God, and ſets God on work to diſplay both his wiſdom, goodneſs and power, Pſal. 31. 19. How great is thy goodneſs which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee! Much more when Faith is vigorouſly acted. Unbelief binds Gods hands, Faith then draws forth that power which unbelief locks up. God is firſt the hope of Iſrael, and then the Saviour thereof in times of trouble, Jer. 14. 8. of every one of Iſrael. Where God inſpires with a humble confidence in himſelf, there is hope of ſucceſs, for God will not fruſtrate the expectation of that which he hath been the author of in his Creature. David had found ſuch good evidence of this, that he tells God he would make bold with him upon every occaſion of fear. Pſal. 57. 3. What time I am afraid I will truſt in thee.

3. Nothing more calms the ſpirit. A fiduciary reliance on God is the way to live free from fears and anxieties. Faith is an eſtabliſhing grace. By Faith we ſtand. What ſtorms would be in the minds of poor paſſengers in a Ship, as great as thoſe in the Sea, if they had no Pilot to direct them? How ſoon would the arrival of a skilful Steers-man, in whom they could confide, and that knew the ſhelves and rocks upon the coaſt, calm their diſquiets?

Well then, to Sum up all, This very Scripture is a Letter of comfort, writ only to women in the ſtate of Child-bearing; claim it as your right by Faith. What comfort is here to appeal from the threatning to the promiſe, from God as a Judg to God as a Father, from God angry to God pacified in Chriſt? How comfortable is this, that when God ſeems to fight againſt you with his puniſhments, you can take off the edge of his weapons by the pleas of his promiſe? Oh bleſſed God, who arms a believer againſt himſelf, before he arms himſelf againſt a believer! You can never be under the curſe if you have Faith, as long as God is ſenſible of his own credit in the promiſe. In the material part of the puniſhment there is no difference between a believer and an unbeliever; Jacob is pincht with famine as well as the Canaanite; but Jacob is in Covenant, and hath a God in Heaven and a Joſeph in Ægypt to preſerve him. God directs every pain in all by his providence, in believers by a particular love; every gripe in all the Phyſick he gives us. He orders even his contendings with his creature in ſuch a meaſure as the ſpirit may not fail before him; Iſa. 57. 16.

A DISCOURSE OF THE Sins of the Regenerate.

1 John 3. 9.

Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his Seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

THE Apostle having exhorted the Saints to whom he writes in the former Chapter, to abide in Christ, and to do righteousness, v. 28. 29. follows on this Exhortation, with several arguments and demonstrations, that a true Christian is not only bound to do so, but that he indeed doth so.

1. From that hope which hath eternal happiness for its Object, v. 2, 3. Where this hope is truly founded, it will inflame us with a desire and endeavour after holiness, which is a necessary means to attain it. There will be an endeavour to be like that Head here, which they hope to be perfectly like hereafter.

2. From the contrariety of sin to the Law of God. 'Tis not reasonable, neither can there be such a disingenuous disposition in any, to transgress the Laws of that person from whom only he expects his highest felicity; and the Law of God being pure and perfect, sin being contrary unto it, must be filthy and unreasonable. A Christian who is guided by this Law, will not transgress it.

3. From the End of Christs coming, which was to take away sin, v. 5. And a Christian ought not to endeavour to frustrate the Ends of Christ's coming by the nourishment of that which he came to destroy.

4. From the Communion they have with Christ; abiding in him, they sin not; if any man sin, it is an evident sign he hath not the knowledge of Christ, v. 6. nor ever was conform'd to that pattern. Where there is a Communion with Christ, it is necessary such an one should be righteous, because Christ was so.

5. From the first Author of sin, the Devil; he that sins, hath a communion with the Devil, v. 8. as he that doth righteousness, hath a communion with Christ. And to maintain the design and works of the Devil, is to walk contrary to the end and design of Christ, which was to destroy the works of the Devil; those therefore that indulge themselves in sin, are the Seed of the Devil.

6. From the New Nature of a Christian, which hinders him from sin, v. 9. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, &c. Various expositions there are of this. The greatest difficulty lies in those words; [Doth not commit sin, and cannot sin.]

1. He ought not to sin. Cannot indeed is sometimes taken for ought not; as Acts 4. 20. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. They had a Physical ability to hold their peace, but morally they could not, because of Christ's Precept to them to publish those things. What we cannot lawfully do, we cannot do; Non possumus quod non jure possumus; what we cannot honourably do, we are said not to be able to do, Mark 6. 5. He could there do no mighty work. Christ had natural ability to do mighty works there, but morally he could not, honourably he could not, because of their unbelief, which was a moral hinderance; and according to God's Methods, there was no hope of doing any good among them; their unbelief was so strong, they gave him no opportunity to do any mighty work. But this is not the meaning of cannot here, ought not. For an unrenewed man ought not to sin any more than a regenerate man. But the Apostle attributes here something peculiar to the regenerate, adding the reason [because he is born of God.] Though it carry in it something of an obligation in a higher manner than upon a meer natural man: He ought not to sin, not only upon the general obligation which lies upon all men not to sin, but upon the more special one of his state, being a Son of God, which ought to be counted a moral impossibility by a righteous man. Regeneration gives a man no advantage to sin, no external licence, no internal liberty or ability to sin; for the Apostle useth this as an argument to them, as well as an establishment, not to sin, because they are born of God, which was a more special obligation upon them not to sin, than what they had by nature.

2. He cannot sin so easily. 'Tis not impossible, but difficult for him to sin, because by receiving grace, he receives a principle contrary to sin, and so hath a principle of resistance against it: Or, because by that grace he is inclined not to sin, and so there is inchoative, an impossibility of sinning, which shall hereafter be perfected; Not a simple impossibility, but secundum quid: He endeavours to work as one born of God, and follows the motions of the Spirit against the sin to which he is tempted.

He cannot sin, i. e. 'tis a hard matter for him to sin; for considering the efficacy of grace, and the assistances attending it, it is a difficult thing for a righteous man to be brought under the power of sin; he may sin easily in respect of the frailty of the flesh, but not so easily in regard of the abiding of the Seed in him, which helps him to beware of sin. Grace being a divine habit, hath the nature of a habit, which is to incline the person to acts proper to that habit, and facilitate those acts, as a man that hath the habit of an Art or Trade, can with more ease work in it than any other.

3. He cannot sin, in sensu formali, as he is regenerate, or ex vi talis nativitatis. Grace cannot sin, because it can do nothing but what pertains to the nature of it; as the heat cannot cool, unrighteousness cannot do good. Fire doth not moisten per se, nor Water naturally heat. But it is not said, The Seed of God cannot sin; but in the Concrete, He that is born of God; and he that hath the Seed remaining in him cannot sin. A gracious man as a gracious man cannot sin, for grace being a good habit, is not capable of producing acts contrary to its nature. Sin in a regenerate man proceeds not from his grace, but from his corruption. Grace cannot be the principle of evil. But because his grace is imperfect, dwelling among remainders of sin, therefore a man sins, though this principle in him keeps sin from attaining a full dominion and superiority. Yet though he doth sin, his sin is not the proper fruit of the form whereby he is regenerate.

4. He cannot sin in sensu composito; as long as he is regenerate, as long as the Seed remains in him, as long as he follows the motions of the Spirit, and Grace, which are able to overcome the motions of concupiscence; but he may give up the grace. As an impregnable Tower cannot be taken as long as it is defended by those within; but they may fling away their Arms, and deliver it up. Grace quantum est ex parte sua, renders a man impeccable, as long as it continues in him; as Innocency did render Adam immortal, as long as he persisted in it. But we may ex culpâ nostrâ, lose it by mortal sin, and so perish, as Adam by his own will lost the integrity of his Nature, and was thereby made subject to death. This is founded upon a false Hypothesis, viz. That Grace may be lost: And the Text renders the being born of God, and the Seed remaining in us, to be the reason why we cannot sin, not the condition of our not sinning; for if it remains, and we cannot sin therefore, how can any sin come in to expel that which preserves us from it? A man must cease, according to what the Apostle here writes, to be born of God, before he can sin in that sense the Apostle means.

5. He doth not commit sin, and cannot sin, i. e. Grave peccatum, the mortal sin, and persist in it. The sin of unbelief, which is called in Scripture by way of eminency [Sin, and the Sin] 'tis the chief sin the Spirit convinceth of; 'tis the sin that easily besets us, Heb. 12. 1. Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, i. e. especially unbelief. Though this be true, yet it is not the full meaning and sense of it.

6. He doth not commit sin, and cannot sin, as the Devil doth, or as one that is of a diabolical nature, as one that is acted by the Devil; which is clear by the Antithesis, v. 8. He that commits sin, is of the Devil, for the Devil sins from the beginning. He cannot set himself against Christ, as the Devil doth, as the Pharisees did, in which respect our Saviour calls them the Children of the Devil, for their remarkable and constant opposition to him. He cannot make a practice of sin, and persist in it, as the Devil doth, who began to sin presently after the Creation, and continueth in it ever since. He sins, the present tence noting the continued act of the Devil. Sin may be consider'd two ways; viz. As to

1. The Act of sin. Thus a Believer sins.

2. The Habit of sin, or custom in it. When a man runs to sin freely, willingly, and is not displeased with it. Thus a Believer doth not commit sin, nor cannot sin. He commits it not. Potiùs patitur quàm facit; he gives not a full consent to it; he hates it while he cannot escape it. He is not such a committer of it, as to be the servant of sin, John 8. 34. He that commits sin, is the servant of sin; because he serves with his mind the Law of God: He bestows not all his thoughts and labour upon sin, in making provision for the flesh, Rom. 13. 14. in being a Caterer for sin: He yields not up his Members as Instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; he doth not let sin reign in his mortal body, nor yield a voluntary obedience to it in the lusts thereof, Rom. 6. 12, 13. for, being God's Son, he cannot be sins Servant; he cannot sin in such a manner, and so absolutely, as one of the Devil's Children, one born of the Devil.

His

His Seed remains in him] His, refers to God, or the person born of God. God's Seed efficiently, man's Seed subjectively.

Born of God.] Twice repeated: In the first is chiefly intended the declaration of the State, in the second the disposition, or likeness to God.

Observe, 1. The Description of a Christian. [Born of God.

2. The Priviledge of this Birth, or Effects of it.

1. Inactivity to sin; [He doth not commit it.

2. Inability to sin; [He cannot.

3. The ground and reasons of those Priviledges.

1. The inward Form or Principle whereby he is regenerate, which makes him unactive.

2. The Efficient Cause, which makes him unable; [Born of God; or likeness to God makes him unable.

4. The latitude of them in regard of the Subject; [Whosoever; every regenerate man. I intend not to run thorow all the parts of this Text, having only chose it as a bar to presumption, which may be occasioned by the former Doctrine, upon mens false suppositions of their having grace. There needs not any Doctrine from the Text; but if you please take this:

Doct. There is a mighty difference between the sining of a regenerate and a natural man: A regenerate man doth not, neither can commit sin in the same manner as an unregenerate man doth.

That I may not be mistaken, observe, when I use the word May sin, I understand it of a May of possibility, not a May of lawfulness: And when I say a regenerate man cannot sin so or so, understand it of a settled habitual frame; distinguish between passion, and surprise, a sudden effort of nature, and an habitual and deliberate determination. The sense of this cannot I shall lay down in several Propositions.

1. It is not meant exclusively of lesser sins, or sins of infirmity. There are sins of daily incursion and lighter skirmishes; there are some open, some secret assaults, a multitude of secret faults, Psal. 19. 12. undiscernable and unknown. Every good man is like Jacob, though he hath one thigh sound, he hath another halting. I do not find that ever God intended to free any in this life from the remainders of sin: What he hath not evidenc'd to have done in any, we may suppose he intended not to do. 'Tis a total Apostacy, not a partial Fall, that the Covenant provides against. Christ in his last prayer, prays for Believers preservation, and gradual sanctification, not for their present perfection. The very Office of Advocacy erected in Heaven, supposeth sins after regeneration, and during our continuance in the world, 1 John 2. 1. My little Children, I write unto you that you sin not; and if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father. In many things we offend all, James 3. 2. Not only you that are the inferior sort of Christians, but we Apostles. We is extensive; All offend in many things. 'Tis implyed in the Lord's Prayer, the daily standing Pattern. As we are to pray for our daily bread, so for a daily pardon, and against daily temptations, which supposeth our being subject to the one, and our commission of the other. The brightest Sun hath its spots; the clearest Moon her dark parts. The Church in her highest comeliness in this world hath her blackness of sin, as well as of affliction; because, though sin be dismounted from its Throne by grace, it is not expelled out of its residence: It dwells in us, though it doth not rule over us, Rom. 7. 20. And it cannot but manifest it self by its fruits while it remains. Yet those sins do not destroy our Adoption. Christ in his Sermon on the Mount to his Disciples, supposeth the inherency of sin, with the continuance of the relation of Children, Matth. 7. 11. If then you being evil know how to give good gifts to your Children, how much more shall your Father which is in Heaven give good things to them that ask him? He doth acknowledge them evil while he calls God their Father, and gives them the title of Children. To sin is to decline from that rectitude in an act, which the Agent ought to observe. In this respect we sin, according to the tenour of the Law, in every thing we do, though not according to the tenour of the Gospel.

2. A regenerate man cannot live in the customary practice of any known sin, either of omission, or commission.

1. Not in a constant omission of known duties. If a good man falls into a gross sin, he doth not totally omit the performance of common duties to God: Not that this attendance on God in his Ordinances doth of it self argue a man to be a good man; for many that walk in a constant course of sin, may from natural Conscience and Education be as constant in the performing external services as he is. 'Tis a proper note of an Hypocrite, that he will not always delight himself in the Almighty, nor always call upon God, Job 27. 10. i. e. not customarily: Whence it follows, that a delight in God in duties of Worship, is a property of a regenerate man. An act of sin may impair his liveliness in them, but not cause him wholly to omit them. We need not question but David, in the time of his impenitency, did go to the Tabernacle, attend upon the Worship of God: 'Tis not likely that for ten months together he should wholly omit it, though no doubt but he was dead-hearted in it, which is intimated when he desires a free spirit, Ps. 51. & prayes for quickening, Psa. 143. 11. one of his Penitential Pſalms. A total neglect of Ordinances and Duties, is a ſhrewd ſign of a total Apoſtacy, and that grace was never in ſuch a mans heart; eſpecially a total omiſſion of prayer; this is an high contempt of God, denying him to be the Author of our mercies, depriving him of the prerogative of governing the world, diſowning any need of him, any ſufficiency in him, declaring we can be our own Gods, and ſubſiſt of our ſelves without him, and that there is no need of his bleſſing. Grace, though ſunk under a ſin, will more or leſs deſire its proper nouriſhment, the Milk of the Word, and other Inſtitutions of God. Nature, though oppreſt by a diſeaſe, will require food to keep it alive. A good man in this caſe is like the Planets, which though they be turned about daily from Eaſt to Weſt, by the motion of the primum mobile, yet they ſtill keep up their proper motion from Weſt to Eaſt, either ſlower or quicker.

2. Not in a cuſtomary commiſſion of any known ſin. To work iniquity, is the proper character of natural men, hence called workers of iniquity, Pſal. 5. 5. Thou hateſt all workers of iniquity. And by the ſame title are they called by Chriſt at the Day of Judgment; Depart from me all you workers of iniquity, that contrive, lay the plat-form of it, and work at it as at a Trade, or as a curious piece of Art. 'Tis one thing to ſin, another to commit or do a ſin, Pſal. 119 3. They do not iniquity, they walk in his ways; their uſual, conſtant courſe is in the way of God; they do not iniquity, they ſettle not to it, take not pleaſure in it as their work and way of livelihood. So it is the character of an ungodly man to walk in the ways of ſin. Walking according to the courſe of the world, and fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, are one and the ſame thing, Epheſ. 2. 2, 3. A good man may ſtep into a way of ſin, but he walks not in it, to make it either his buſineſs or recreation. So walking in ſin, and living in ſin, are put together: What is called walking after the fleſh, Rom. 8. 1. is called living after the fleſh, v. 13. which is the ſame with committing ſin in the Text: So ways and doings are joyned together, Zach. 1. 6. To make ſin our way or walk, is when a man chuſes it as a particular trade and way of living. A good man in ſin is out of his way; a wicked man in ſin is in his way; a good man will not have ſo much as one way of ſin, a wicked hath many ways, for he ſeeks out many inventions. Not one Example of the groſs fall of a good man in Scripture will countenance any pretence for a courſe in ſin; for either they were not in a courſe of ſin, or it was not a courſe of known ſins.

Noah was drunk but once, yet that was not a ſin of the ſame hue with that among us. He firſt found out the fruits of the Vine, Gen. 9. 20. knew nothing of the ſtrength of the Grape, and therefore might eaſily be overcome by an unuſual liquor.

Lot's Inceſt was but twice, and that unwillingly: He knew not his Daughters lying down, or riſing neither time, Gen. 19. 33, 35. And for his Daughters, ſome think that they thought there was no man left upon the Earth but their Father, but that is not clear; for Lot had been in Zoar, and departed thence to the Mountain where their fact was committed. His drunkenneſs admits of ſome aggravations; it was no fit ſeaſon for him to ſwill after ſo ſharp a Judgment upon Sodom, ſo ſevere a remark of God upon his Wife, and ſo great a deliverance to himſelf: Yet this was not a courſe of ſin; you read no more of it. There is difference between a mans being drunk, and being a drunkard, the one notes the act, the other the habit and love of it.

Peter denied Chriſt, yet but three times together; not three times with conſiderable intervals for a full deliberation. 'Tis probable Peter's Faith was ſo ſtupified (as well as the Faith of thoſe Diſciples that were going to Emmaus, Luke 24. 21. We truſted that it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael; who (and indeed all the Diſciples in ſeveral paſſages) ſeem'd to expect a temporal Kingdom to be erected by him) as therefore not to judge it fit to hazard himſelf for a perſon he thought himſelf ſo much miſtaken in. Howſoever it was, it was not a courſe of ſin, and his Repentance over-rules the plea for any cuſtomary tranſgreſſion.

And though the Corinthians were charged with Fornication, and eating things ſacrificed to Idols, yet it ſeems to be out of a corrupt Judgment, as appears by the Apoſtles diſputing againſt the one, 1 Cor. 6. 13, 14, 15. and againſt the other, 1 Cor. 8. And that neither of thoſe were generally judged to be ſins by the converted Gentiles, as appears by the Decree of the Apoſtles, Acts 15. 28, 29. where they determine againſt both theſe; though this was a courſe of ſin, yet not a courſe of known ſins; and after they were informed by the Apoſtle of the ſinfulneſs of them, they abſtain'd: therefore in the ſecond Epiſtle * writ the year after to them, he charges them not with thoſe former crimes, but comforts them for their being ſo much caſt down with ſorrow.

* The firſt Epiſtle was writ the 25th year after the death of Chriſt, and 2d Epiſtle the 26th year according to Baronius.

David's ſin, though lying upon him for about ten or twelve months, yet it was not a courſe of ſin; and we find a ſignal Repentance afterwards; but of that after. To walk in a road of known ſins is the next ſtep to committing ſin as ſin, and manifeſts the habit of ſin to have a ſtrong and fixed dominion in the will.

I ſhall confirm this by ſome Reaſons, becauſe upon this Propoſition depend all the following.

1. Regeneration gives not a man a diſpenſation from the Law of God. As Chriſt came not to deſtroy the Law, but to eſtabliſh it, ſo grace doth not diſpenſe with the Law, but confirms the Authority of it. Habitual grace is not given us to aſſiſt us in the breaches of it, but to enable us to the performance of it. As the grace of God which hath appeared to all men

men teaches the Doctrine of Holineſs, ſo the grace of God in us enables us to walk in the way of holineſs. Grace in a Believer embraceth what the grace of God teaches. The Moral Laws of God are indiſpenſable in themſelves, and of eternal verity. Therefore as no rational creature, much leſs can a regenerate perſon be exempted from that obedience to the Law, which as a rational creature he is bound to obſerve. The grace of God juſtifying is never conferred without grace ſanctifying: 'Tis certain, where Chriſt is made righteouſneſs, he is made ſanctification. 'Tis not congruous to the Divine Holineſs, to look upon a perſon as righteous, who hath not a renewed principle in him, no more than it is congruous to the Divine Juſtice and Holineſs, to look upon him as righteous, meerly for this principle ſo imperfect.

2. 'Tis not for the honour of God to ſuffer a cuſtom and courſe of ſin in a renewed man. 'Tis true, a renewed man ſhould not voluntarily, nor doth commit willingly even ſins of lighter infirmities; but God ſuffers thoſe, becauſe they do not wound the honour of Chriſtianity, though they diſcover a remoteneſs from a ſtate of perfection. But they do not cuſtomarily fall into great ſins, for it ſeems not congruous to permit ſuch courſes commonly in any one which would diſgrace Religion, and make that deſpicable in the eyes of the world, which God hath deſigned in all Ages to honour. Since he hath delivered his Son to death, to preſerve the honour of his Law; it ſeems not to conſiſt with his wiſdom, to let thoſe who enjoy the fruits of his death, walk in a cuſtomary contempt of his Law. Neither can we think that God would permit that in a Believer, which is againſt the very eſſence of grace, though he may permit that which is againſt the beauty and accidental perfection of it.

3. 'Tis againſt the nature of the Covenant. In the Covenant we are to take God for our God, i. e. for our chief good, and laſt end. But a courſe of ſin is an adoration of the ſinful Object as the chief good, and laſt end, becauſe a man prefers the creature before God, and loves it ſupremely, contrary to the will of God. 'Tis eſſential for one in Covenant with God, to have an high valuation of God and his will. But a cuſtom of known ſins evidenceth that there is not a worthy and practical eſteem of God. How can any condition of the covenant conſiſt with a conſtant practice of ſin? How can there be faith where the precept is not believed? How can there be love if the pleaſure of God be not regarded? How can there be fear if his authority be wilfully contemned? How can there be a new heart when there is nothing but an old frame, and a diabolical nature. 'Tis a renouncing thoſe conditions upon which a right to heaven is founded. For a worker of iniquity walks in thoſe ways which are prohibited upon pain of not entring into that place of glory, and ſo doth wilfully refuſe the acceptance of the conditions on Gods part, and the performance of the conditions on his own part, which are neceſſary to Gods glory, and his own intereſt. 'Tis an invaſion of Gods right whereby he refuſeth God for his God and Lord, and ſets up himſelf as his own governour, an affecting vertually an equality with God, and independency on him, which in the common nature of ſin is vertually the ſame with that of the Devil, who ſinned from the beginning, and therefore a courſe in ſin, one that is born of God doth not continue in. Perhaps the Apoſtle in the Text might have ſome ſuch reſpect upon his oppoſing the Believers not committing ſin to the ſin of the Devil from the beginning, viz. ſuch a courſe of ſin whereby a Man declares as the Devil did, that he will be his own governour, as indeed in every courſe of ſin a Man doth practically declare.

4. 'Tis againſt the nature of our firſt repentance and converſion to God. True repentance is a breaking off iniquity by righteouſneſs, Dan. 4. 27. a turning from ſin to holineſs, from our ſelves to God, from our own Wills to the Will of God; from every thing elſe as the chief good, and laſt end, to God as both theſe. Now though a particular act of ſin be againſt the watchfulneſs which attends repentance, yet a courſe of ſin is againſt the nature of it, * the one is againſt the livelineſs of Repentance, the other againſt the life of it. A delightful walking in any known ſin, though never ſo little, is a defyance to God, and therefore contrary to the nature of converſion, and is a vertual embracing of all ſin whatſoever; becauſe he that in his ordinary walk in ſin hath no reſpect to the Will and pleaſure of God, though he knows it, and will not be reſtrain'd from his delight by any ſuch regard of God, would be reſtrain'd from no other ſin whatſoever, if he did conceive them as pleaſant, advantageous, and ſuitable to him as he doth that which is his darling. As he that breaks one point of the Law is guilty of all, James 2. 10. becauſe he ſhews thereby a Will and Diſpoſition to break all, if the ſame occaſions were offer'd. So he that commits one known ſin wilfully, much more he that walks in a courſe of ſin, is guilty of all ſins vertually. For he would boggle at no temptations upon a reſpect to God, becauſe if a regard to God doth not prevail upon him againſt a courſe in one kind, it will not detain him from a courſe in all other kinds of ſin, if he come under the ſame circumſtances for it. Let me add this too, If he that offends in one point of the Law be guilty of all, i. e. as much delight and eagerneſs, as he hath in the breach of that one, it is to be ſuppoſed that he would have in the breach of all the reſt upon the former reaſon, can then ſuch a diſpoſition which is in every courſe of known ſin, be conſiſtent with the nature of repentance and converſion?

5. 'Tis againſt the nature of habitual grace, which is the principle and form of our Regeneration. If he doth not commit ſin becauſe the ſeed of God remains in him, then ſuch a courſe of of ſin is againſt the nature of this ſeed; inconſiſtent with the birth of God; a crooked and perverſe Spirit in ſin is a ſign of a putrified Soul, a ſpot of a different nature from that of Gods Children, Deut. 32. 5. They have corrupted themſelves, their ſpot is not the ſpot of his Children, they are a perverſe and crooked Generation; 'tis a ſtain peculiar to the Children of the Devil, not the Sons of God. A Trade in ſin is an evidence of a Diabolical Nature, 1 John 3. 8. He that commits ſin is of the Devil. 'Tis not therefore conſiſtent with grace, which is a Divine Nature. The reign of ſin is inconſiſtent with the reign of grace, though the rebellion of ſin be not. 'Tis againſt the nature of Regeneration for ſin to guide our Wills, though it be not againſt the nature of it, for ſin to reſide in our fleſh. To walk after the fleſh, Rom. 8. 1. is an inſeparable Character of a natural Man. The Apoſtle, Rom. 7. ult. had been complaining of the Law of his Members, the ſerving ſin with his Fleſh, he comforts himſelf with this, that he obeyed it not; and that they were in Chriſt, whoſe ordinary walk was as the Spirit led, not as the Fleſh allured. * And indeed every Tree brings forth fruit ſuitable to its nature. A Vine brings not forth Thorns; and he that hath the ſeed of God, is under an impoſſibility of bringing forth the fruits of ſin with delight, ſince he hath a Root of righteouſneſs planted in him.

* Amyraut. in Joh. 8. 9.

1. 'Tis againſt the nature of a renewed underſtanding. A Regenerate Man hath a new light in his mind, whereby he hath a fairer proſpect of God, and a fouler of ſin. He was an enemy to God in his mind before, Col. 1. 21. He had diſhonourable opinions and conceits of God and goodneſs, and honourable thoughts of ſin above its merit, he thought ill of the one and well of the other. But now he is renewed in the Spirit of his mind, Eph. 4. 23. and he hath the Spirit of a ſound mind, 2 Tim. 1. 7. His judgment is regulated by the Law of God, he judges of ſin as it is in its nature a tranſgreſſion of the Law. Can we imagine, that a Man reſtored to a ſound mind, and that hath his natural madneſs and folly cured, ſhould act after this cure as much out of his wits as before. If he hath his conſtant frenzies and madneſs as much as before, where is his cure.? Can any Man in the world act always againſt his judgment? though he may be overpowered by the importunity of others, or over-ruled by a fit of paſſion to do ſomething againſt his judgment; can you expect always to find him in the road of croſſing the dictates of his underſtanding? An unregenerate Man hath a natural light in his Mind and Conſcience, and ſo a judgment of ſin; but he hath not a judgment of ſin adequate to the object, he doth not judge of ſin in the whole latitude of it; he hath not a ſettled judgment of the contrariety of his beloved ſin to God. He looks not upon it in the extent of it, as, malum injucundum, inhoneſtum, inutile; if he looks upon ſin as diſhoneſt, he regards it as profitable; if neither as honeſt or profitable, yet as pleaſant; ſo that the natural light, which is in the underſtanding when it dictates right, is mated and over-ruled by ſome other principle, the pleaſure or profit of it, and ſwayed by the inherent habits of ſin in the Will. The Devil that works in them hath ſome principle to ſtir up, or dim this natural light, and caſt a miſt before the Eye; and ſo they direct their courſe according to that particular judgment which is befriended in its vote by ſenſe.

2. 'Tis againſt the nature of a renewed Will. Grace is the law of God in the heart, and is put in to inable us to walk in the ways of God; and ſhall it endure ſuch wilful pollutions in the Creature, when it is the end of its being there to preſerve from them? The Spirit is given in the Heart, 2 Cor. 1. 22. ſent into the Heart, Gal. 4. 6. the Law put into the Heart, Heb. 10. 16. Since therefore there is an habit of grace in the Will, a Man cannot frequently and eaſily lanch into ſin, becauſe he cannot do it habitually, the remainders of ſin being mated with a powerful habit, which watches their motions to reſiſt them. Doth God put ſuch a habit there, ſuch a ſeed, an abiding ſeed to no purpoſe, but to let the Soul be wounded by every temptation, to be deſerted in every time of need? Grace is an habit ſuperadded to that natural and moral ſtrength which is in the Will. Man by natures ſtrength meerly, or with the aſſiſtance of common grace, hath power to avoid the acts of groſs ſins, for he is maſter of his own actions, though he is not of the motions tending to them; the Devil cannot force a Mans Will. And when grace a greater ſtrength comes in, ſhall there be no effects of this ſtrength, but the reins be as ſtiff in the hands of old luſt, and the Will as much captive to the ſinful habit in it as before? Grace being a new nature, it is as abſurd to think that a gracious man ſhould wallow in a courſe of ſin, as it is to think that any creature ſhould conſtantly and willingly do that which is againſt its nature. A gracious man delights in the Law of God, Pſal. 1. 2. His delight is in the Law of the Lord, and in his Law doth he meditate day and night; if he delights in it, can he delight to break it? Do Men fling that which they delight in, every day in the Durt, and trample upon it, or rather do they not keep it choicely in their Cabinets? If it be alſo the Character of a good man to meditate in the Law of God, he muſt have frequent exerciſes of faith, reflections upon himſelf, motions to God which cannot conſiſt with a courſe of ſin. Grace doth eſſentially include a contrariety to ſin, and a love to God in the Will. 'Tis a principle of doing good and eſchewing evil, and theſe being eſſential properties of grace, are eſſential to every regenerate man, and in every one. As a drop of Water, or one ſpark of Fire hath the eſſential properties of a great maſs of Water, or a great quantity of Fire; ſo every renewed man hath the ſame love to God, and the ſame hatred of ſin eſſentially, as the moſt eminent Saint, though not in degree, yea which thoſe in heaven have, though not in the ſame degree. As a ſpark of fire will burn, a drop of water will moiſten, though not in ſo eminent a meaſure. Now, upon the whole conſider whether is it poſſible to bare reaſon, that a regenerate man ſhould cuſtomarily do thoſe things which are againſt the eſſential properties of that which is in him, in his will, and doth denominate him a new Creature?

3. Propoſition. A regenerate man cannot have a fixt reſolution to walk in ſuch a way of ſin, were the impediments to it removed. Though unregenerate men may actually as to the outward exerciſe abſtain from ſome ſins, yet it is uſually upon low and mean conditions. If it were not for ſuch or ſuch an obſtacle in the way I would do ſuch and ſuch an act. This temper is not in a good man, he cannot have a fixed and determinate reſolution to commit ſuch an act, if ſuch bars were taken away. Such reſolutions are Common in unregenerate men, Jer. 44. 25. We will ſurely perform our vows which we have vow'd to burn incenſe to the Queen of Heaven, and Iſa. 56. 12. We will fill our ſelves with ſtrong drink, and to morrow ſhall be as this day, and much more abundant; we will have as merry a meeting as we had to day. The ſame character is aſcribed to ſuch an one, Pſal. 36. 4. He deviſeth miſchief upon his bed. He ſets himſelf in a way that is not good. He abhorreth not evil. He modells out his ſinful deſigns with head and heart, he ſettles himſelf as an army ſettles in their ground when they reſolve to fight, יִמְאָס He abhors not evil. He ſtarts not at ſuch motions, but by a Meioſis, he huggs and careſſeth them with a wonderful delight. Regenerate men fear to ſin, wicked men contrive to ſin. One would ſtarve it, the other makes proviſion for it. This temper cannot be in a Regenerate man.

1. 'Tis Diabolical. And ſo falls under that in the text, He cannot Commit ſin as the Devil doth. 'Tis a ſtain of the Devil, who is reſolved in his way of malice to God, and miſchief to man, but for the ſtrait Chains God holds him in; his reſolution is fixed, though the execution reſtrained. He goes about ſeeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet. 5. 8. καταπιεῖν to drink at one draught: Seeking both for an opportunity and permiſſion. Unwearied ſearches manifeſt fixed reſolutions. His throat is ready to ſwallow, if he had a morſel for it.

2. 'Tis a ſign of habitual ſin, a ſtate of ſin. This temper manifeſts that the will is habituated in ſin, though the hand doth not outwardly act it. The inherent power of ſin muſt be great, when a man is greedy to commit that, to which he hath no outward allurements, or when thoſe allurements are ballanced with contrary conſiderations; when he hath either no outward temptation to it, or the croſs impediments are as ſtrong, or ſtronger than the temptation. When men in the midſt of ſuch bars long for a temptation, it is ſuch a kind of deſire in one way, as the Creature hath in an other, for the manifeſtation of the the Sons of God, Rom. 8. 19. For the earneſt expectation of the Creature waits for the manifeſtation, 'tis ἀποκαραδοκία a putting out the head to ſee if he can find any coming to knock off the fetters, not of his ſin, but of his forced morality. In this caſe take two men, one Commits a great ſin upon a temptation even as it were over-power'd by it, and had no thoughts, no inclinations before that temptation appear'd, which began firſt to ſpirit him. Another Commits a lighter ſin, or would fain Commit it upon a weak temptation, and many bars lying in the way, and his heart was hankering and thirſting for ſome opportunity to Commit it: which do you think really is the greater offence in point of heart and affection? The firſt appears blacker, but it is an invaſion; the other is really blacker becauſe it is an affection, and ſhews ſin to be rooted in the heart as its proper ſoil, wherein ſin delights to grow, and the ſoil delights to nouriſh it. The one ſhews ſin to be a ſtranger, and a thief, which hath waylaid him, the other evidenceth ſin to be an inmate and intimate friend. Such a man is not oblig'd to his will for his abſtinence from ſin, but to the outward hindrances; and the reſolving act of the will to Commit it, were thoſe impediments remov'd, is as real an act of ſin in the ſight of God as any outward act can be in the ſight of man, becauſe God meaſures the greatneſs of ſin by the proportion of the will allowed to it; therefore many ſins which may be little in our account may be greater in Gods account, than the ſeemingly blacker ſins of others, becauſe there may be a greater ingrediency of the heart and affection in them than in the other.

3. 'Tis againſt the nature of our repentance and firſt cloſing with God. Repentance is a change of the purpoſe of the heart, not to Commit the ſame iniquity again, nor any other, Job. 34. 32. If I have done iniquity, I will do no more. 'Tis the property of converting grace to make the Soul cleave to the Lord with full purpoſe of heart, Act. 11. 23. This is eſſential to it, though there may be ſome ſtartings out by paſſion and temptation. A Pilots intention ſtands right for the port, though by the violence of the wind he may be forced another way. It alters not his purpoſe, though it defer his performance. This purpoſe is a perpetual intent, Pſal. 119. 112. v. I have inclined my heart to keep thy ſtatutes alway even to the end. It was an heart-purpoſe and inclination; It regarded all Gods ſtatutes, not for a fit, but perpetually, which he manifeſts by two words [alwaies even to the end] to ſhew that the perpetuity of it doth difference it from the reſolutions of wicked men, who may indeed have ſome fits to do good, but not a fixed purpoſe to cleave to the Lord; theſe flaſhy purpoſes are like the flight of a bird which ſeems to touch Heaven, and in a moment falls down to the earth; as Saul reſolved not to perſecute David, but we ſoon find him again upon his old game & purſuit. Where there there is true grace, there is hatred of all ſin, for hatred is πρὸς τὸ ϛύγον. Can a man be reſolv'd to Commit what he hates? No. For his inward averſion would ſecure him more againſt it than all outward obſtacles. As this inward purpoſe of a good man is againſt all ſin, ſo more particularly againſt that which doth ſo eaſily beſet him. David ſeems in ſeveral places to be naturally inclind to lying, but he takes up a particular reſolution againſt it, Pſal. 17. 3. I am purpoſed that my mouth ſhall not tranſgreſs. זמתי I have contrived to way-lay and intercept the ſin of lying when it hath an occaſion to approach me. A good man hath not only purpoſes, but he endeavours to faſten and ſtrengthen thoſe purpoſes by prayer. So David, v. 5. [hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footſteps ſlip not. He ſtrengthens himſelf by ſtirring up a livelineſs in duty, and by avoiding occaſions of ſin, v. 4. [I have kept me from the paths of the deſtroyer. Whereas a wicked man neither ſteps out of the way of a temptation, nor ſteps up to God for ſtrength againſt it. Now if all this be true, that in converſion the heart hath a fixed reſolution for God and his ways, and that perpetually, againſt all ſin, and particularly againſt the ſin of our natural inclination, and all this backt with ſtrong cries, how can it have a fixed reſolution to Commit it, if the way were outwardly fair for it?

4. 'Tis abſolutely againſt the terms of the Covenant. God requires in that a giving up our ſelves to him, to be his people with our whole heart and Soul, as he gives himſelf to us with his whole heart. He will not be a Sharer of the heart with ſin, much leſs an underling to it. God will not indure a competitor in the affections. To ſerve God and mammon are inconſiſtent by the infallible Axiom of our Saviour, Luke 16. 13. Now, as God cannot be true to his Covenant, if he had purpoſes againſt the articles of it on his part, ſo neither can we be true to our covenanting with him, if we have ſetled purpoſes of heart againſt the Conditions of it. Therefore the inſtability in the Covenant ariſeth only from the falſeneſs of the heart, Pſal. 78. 37. Their heart was not right with him, neither were they ſtedfaſt in his Covenant. The iniquity of our heels may compaſs us about, and make us ſtumble in our walk, yet our fears of being out with God may receive no eſtabliſhment, Pſal. 49. 5. Wherefore ſhould I fear, when the iniquity of my heels ſhall compaſs me about? Whether he means by iniquity the ſins of his ordinary walk, or the puniſhment of them, is all one. But yet if purpoſes of iniquity ſettle their reſidence in the heart, though we never act it by reaſon of obſtacles, 'tis a ſign we never ſincerely cloſed with God in Covenant, nor God with us. The very regards of iniquity in the heart put a bar to the regards of God towards us. It hinders all Covenant acts on Gods part, becauſe it is a manifeſt breach of it, Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me. ראיתי If I have curiouſly and intently looked upon iniquity with pleaſure in my heart.

5. 'Tis againſt the nature of Regeneration. Regeneration is a change of nature and conſequently of reſolutions. A Lyon chained up hath an inclination to ravage, but a Lyon chang'd into the nature of a Lamb loſes his inclinations, with that change of his nature; ſo that it is as impoſſible a regenerate man can have the fixed and determinate reſolutions that a wicked man hath, as it is impoſſible that a Lamb ſhould have the ravenous diſpoſition of a Lyon; you know the Scripture makes the change as great. How can any man reſolve to do a thing againſt that law, which at the ſame time, he hath an habitual approbation of as holy, juſt and good? Againſt a law natural to him, viz. The law of the heart. If a delight in the Law of God be a conſtitutive part of Regeneration, then any ſettled purpoſe to ſin is inconſiſtent with Regeneration, becauſe ſuch a purpoſe, being a teſtimony of an inward delight in that which is contrary to the Law of God, cannot conſiſt with a delight in that which forbids what his heart is ſet upon.

4. Propoſition. A regenerate man cannot walk in a way doubtful to him without inquiries, whether it be a way of ſin, or a way of duty, and without admitting of reproofs and admonitions according to his circumſtances. This conſiſts of two parts.

1. He cannot walk in a way doubtful to him without inquiries, whether it be a way of ſin, or of duty. If the nature of converſion be an inclination of the heart to keep Gods ſtatutes always, even to the end, Pſal. 119. 112. the natural reſult then will be an enquiry what are the ſtatutes of God which the Soul is to keep. A natural man, for fear of being diſturbed in his ſinful pleaſure refuſeth to underſtand the way of the Lord, and delights to be under the power of a willful darkneſs, Job. 21. 14, 15. We deſire not the knowledge of thy ways; what is the almighty that we ſhould ſerve him? and what profit ſhould we have, if we pray to him? This unwillingneſs to know the ways of God ariſes from a contempt of the Almighty and his ſervice. They judged it not profitable to ſerve and worſhip God, and therefore were loth to receive any inſtruction, for fear any light ſhould ſpring up in them, by way of conviction, to diſturb them. Men love ſin, and therefore hate any knowledge which may deprive them of the ſweetneſs of it, Prov. 1 22. The Scorners delight in their ſcorning and fools hate knowledg. They delight in ſin, and therefore hate any knowledg which may check their delight. And this unwillingneſs to chooſe the fear of the Lord is the ground of their hating the knowledg of it, v. 30. for that they hated knowledge and did not chooſe the fear of the Lord. They are afraid to be convinced that the way of their delight is a way of ſin, they would have no gall in their Conſcience to imbitter the hony of their luſts. This hatred of knowledg is inconſiſtent with true converſion, becauſe converſion is an election or choice of the fear of God, and therefore cannot reſiſt any means tending to promote that which is choſen. 'Tis eſſential to true grace to inquire into the mind and will of God, to underſtand what is pleaſing to him, Job. 34. 32. That which I ſee not teach thou me, if I have done iniquity I will done more. Inform me in what I know not,& if I understand it is iniquity,which I have walked ignorantly in,I will do it no more. He will not return to folly when he shall hear what God the Lord shall speak. 'Tis certainly incompatible to the new nature to act in a contrariety to God. Grace is always attended with an universal desire to know his will,and pleasure him in performing it; hence will follow an inquiry, what behaviour and what acts are most agreeable to him? John. 14.21. He that hath my Commandments and keeps them, he it is that Loves me. Ἐκεῖνός ἐστιν. The Antithesis is; He that hath no mind to have my Commandments,because he would not keep them, hath no love to me. He it is [Emphatically,] exclusively,that is the man, and none else that Loves me. Now if a man be afraid of making inquiry into the lawfulness of a course he is wedded to,for fear his beloved object should appear to be a sin, 'tis a sign he abstains from what he knows certainly to be a sin out of a servile fear,not out of a generous, Divine Love, a Principle as essential to the new nature, as fear is to an enlightned carnalist.

2. A Regenerate man cannot despise admonitions and reproofs,which would inform him and withdraw him from a sinful course. If he be in the way of life that keeps instruction,then he that refuseth reproof is in the way of death, Pro. 10.17. He is in the way of life that keeps instruction, but he that refuseth reproof erreth. 'Tis put in a milder expression, but if you observe the opposition, it amounts to the inference I make. So Prov. 15. 9, 10. *The Lord Loves them that follow after Righteousness; correction is grievous unto them that forsake the way, and he that hates reproof shall dye.*Here is a plain opposition made between them that follow after Righteousness, which is the character of a regenerate man, who is therefore the object of Gods Love, and that person that accounts correction grievous and hates reproof, he is not one that follows after Righteousness (to pursue is to embrace it) and therefore not the object of Gods Love, but the mark of death. So that it is impossible a righteous man should hate reproof. Nay the hating of reproof, whereby a man might be informed of his duty, is a sign not of a bare unregeneracy, but of one at the very bottom of it, wallowing in the very dreggs and mud of it farthest from the Kingdom of Heaven; one that scarce looks like a rational creature, Prov. 12.1. whoso Loves instruction Loves knowledge, but he that hates reproof is brutish. Whereas Solomons wise man, which is a Regenerate man, will love the reprover for the reproofs sake,and grow wiser by instruction, Prov. 9.8,9. Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee; rebuke a wise man and he will Love thee, give instruction to a wise man, and he will be yet wiser, teach a just man, and he will encrease in learning. Just men change their intentions upon a discovery of the sinfulness of their way. And though it may not at the first assault of an admonition appear to be a sin,yet it will check somewhat their violence in it.But where sin hath a dominion, every check and discovery of it doth rather enflame than quench it, and the heart like a stream rises the higher for the damm. Judas had an admonition from Christ that informed him of what wickedness he was about, and the danger of it, Mark 14. 21. He pronounceth a woagainst him. Compare this with Joh. 13. 27, 30. when he gives him the sop, which was at the same time he informed him of the danger, Satan entered into him, and he went more roundly to work to accomplish it, he went immediately out. Observe by the way, That the Spirit of God enters into a mans heart often upon admonitions from friends, and the Devil also more powerfully upon the same occasions than at other times. A good man cannot habitually hate the reprover. There is one example of a good man dealing hardly with a Prophet,for reproving him in the name of the Lord, 2 *Chron.*16.10. Then Asa was wroth with the Seer, and put him into a Prison house; for he was in a rage with him, because of this thing. And partly for the Judgment of war against him. But the Scripture gives an allay to it; For he was in a rage. He was in a passion, because of the threatning and the plainness of the speech, thou hast done foolishly. To say such a word to an inferior would ordinarily now a days swell many a professor to a fury,much more a Prince. This very Proposition will discover,that there are many more pretenders to a Regenerate state than possessors of it, so strangely is not only Humane Nature, but the Christian Religion depraved among us.

5 Propos. A regenerate man cannot have a settled,deliberate love to any one act of sin,though he may fall into it. Thus the Devil sins,he loves what he doth. Though a good man may fall into a sin, & even such a sin, which he was much guilty of before his Conversion and which he hath repented of, yet never into a love of it,or the allowance of any one act of it. For by Regeneration the Soul becomes like God in disposition, and therefore cannot love any thing which he hates, whose hatred and love being always just, are unerring Rules to the love and hatred of every one of his Children. He can never account a sin his ornament, but his fetter, never his delight, but his grief. I add this Proposition, because there may be a love of an act of sin, where there is not a constant course in it: As a man that hath committed a murther out of revenge, may love afterwards the very thoughts of that revenge, though he never murther any more: And a man that hath committed an act of Adultery, may review it with pleasure, though he never commit an act again. But a good man cannot. David is supposed to be inclined to the way of lying and dissembling; though he might falter sometimes, and look that way, and perhaps fall into it, yet never into a love of it; therefore observe, Psal. 119. 163. I hate and abhor lying; but thy Law do I love. A single hatred would not serve the turn; but,I hate and abhor. I have not the least affection to this of any, though I have the greatest natural inclination to it. What was the reason?

Thy Law do I love. There was another affection planted in his Soul, which could not conſiſt with a love to, or allowance either of the habit, or any one act of lying. A good man hath yielded his Soul up to the government of Chriſt, his affections are fully engaged; he cannot ſee an equal amiableneſs in any other Object, for he cannot loſe his Eyes again; his enlightened mind cannot be wholly blinded and deceived by Satan; he walks not by the inveiglements of ſenſe, but by the unerring Rule of Faith; ſo that though by ſome miſts before his Eyes, he may for a while be deluded, yet as he cannot have a ſetled falſe Judgment, ſo he cannot have a ſetled affection to any one act of ſin. 'Tis one thing for a City to ſurrender it ſelf to the Enemy out of affection, and another thing to be forced by them: Under a force they may retain their Loyalty to their lawful Prince. There may be ſome paſſionate approbations of an act of ſin. Jonah was an Advocate for his own paſſion againſt God, and made a very peremptory Apology for it, Jonah 4.9. I do well to be angry, even to the death. Yet if we may judge by his former temper, we cannot think he did afterwards defend it out of judgment, as he did then out of paſſion; for when the Lot fell upon him, Jon. 2.9, 12. he made no defence for his ſin, he very calmly wiſhes them to caſt him into the Sea. Where there is a paſſionate approbation, it cannot be conſtant in a good man; for when he returns to himſelf, his abhorrences of the ſin, and of himſelf for it, are greater, as if by the greatneſs of his grief he would endeavour to make ſome recompence for the folly of his paſſion.

Obſerve by the way; A good man may commit a ſin with much eagerneſs, and yet have a leſs affection to it in the very act, than another, who acts that ſin more calmly; becauſe it may ariſe, not from any particular inclination he hath in his temper to that ſin, but from the general violence of his natural temper, which is common to him in that action. This ſeems to be the caſe of Jonah both in this, and the former act. But if a man be more violent in that act of ſin, than he is in other things by his natural temper, there is ground both for himſelf and others to think, that ſin hath got a great maſtery over his affections.

Peter ſeems to be a man of great affections, and of a forward natural temper; he was very haſty to have Tabernacles built in the Mountain for his Maſter, Moſes and Elias, and have reſided there. He haſtily rebukes his Maſter; he flung himſelf out of a Ship to meet our Saviour walking upon the water, and after his Reſurrection he leapt into the Sea to get to him: So that Peter's denying his Maſter was not ſuch an evidence of diſaffection to him, or love to the ſinful act he was then ſurpriz'd by, as it would have been in John, or any other Diſciple of a more ſedate temper. But this only by the way, as a Rule both to judg your ſelves by, and to moderate your Cenſures of others. And conſider, That ſuch acts of ſin are not frequent. The violence of a mans temper, if godly, cannot carry him out into a courſe of ſin, or a love to any one act. As a wicked man may hit upon a good duty, and perform it, but not out of a ſettled love to God, or habitual obedience to his Law; ſo a good man may by ſurprize do an evil work, not out of obedience to the Law of ſin, or any love to the ſin it ſelf. What conſiderations may move a wicked man to a good duty, may in ſome reſpect move a good man to a ſinful act; yet it is not to be called a duty in the one, no more than it is to be called a ſin in the other of the ſame hue, of the ſame hue I ſay, with that in a natural man.

6 Propoſition; A regenerate man cannot commit any ſin with a full conſent and bent of will. A man may conſent to that which he doth not love. Hereby I diſtinguiſh it from the former Propoſition. I mean not, that he cannot commit any ſin wilfully as ſin, for ſo I believe no man doth; it being againſt the nature of the creature to do evil, as evil formaliter, but under ſome other notion of it. Some conſent of the will I do acknowledg, becauſe the will as well as the other faculties, is but in part regenerate; as there is not a triumphant light in the underſtanding, ſo neither is the grace of the will at preſent triumphant, but militant; yet it may be rather called the will of ſin, than a mans own will. Sometimes a good man is by ſome ſudden motion hurried on to ſin, before he can conſult law and reaſon, before he hath his wits well at liberty, before he can compare the temptation or ſin with the prohibition of it by the Divine Law. But generally there is a reſiſtance in him, as well as a provocation in ſin; for the two contrary principles exert themſelves in ſome meaſure. Grace reſiſts, and ſin provokes: Whereas another that hath no grace, ſins with a full conſent, becauſe he hath no ſpiritual reſiſting principle in him; for he is fleſh, and not ſpirit, and whatſoever is born of the fleſh is fleſh, and wholly fleſh. There is a reſiſting indeed in a natural man, but it is a reſiſtance of natural light, not of grace, a reſiſtance not of the Will, but of the Conſcience; the Will is bent to ſin, but natural Conſcience puts rubs in the way. Neither is this reſiſtance in ſpiritual ſins (which is the greateſt character I know, whereby to diſtinguiſh a reſiſtance of natural Conſcience, from a reſiſtance by a principle of grace) which natural Conſcience doth not ſo much trouble it ſelf about, as not having light without a ſpiritual illumination to diſcern them; but only in groſs ſins, ſuch as are condemned by common reaſon; ſo that if he hath any reſiſtance, it is not in the will of the man, but the will of his Intereſt, will of his Credit, or the will of his Conſcience; not in the rational will complying with, and delighting in the will of God.

A regenerate man cannot commit any ſin with

1. An habitual Conſent; becauſe he hath a principle of grace within him which oppoſes that that tide of nature which did forcibly carry him down before. This oppoſite principle doth remain, though the preſent oppoſition may not be diſcerned by reaſon of the prevalency of the temptation: As in a Room warm'd by a fire in Winter, there is a principle in the Air doth reſiſt that heat, and reduce it after the fire is out to its former rawneſs and coldneſs. A renewed man being paſſed into another nature, it cannot be ſuppoſed he can do any thing with an habitual bent of will againſt his nature. Grace hath put a ſtop to that. Paul diſtinguiſheth himſelf from ſin in the acts of it; 'Tis not I, or my will, but ſin. Rom. 7. 20. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwells in me. Κατεργάζομαι ſignifies to perfect and compleat a work, to work induſtriouſly and politely. Had I my will, I ſhould not do thus. There is a divorce made between the will and ſin, ſo that ſin acts upon a ſingle ſcore, now, 'Tis no more I; a divorce is made between my will and ſin. The Law of Sin is therefore called a Law in the members, not of the members; a Law found working there, v. 21. I find a Law in my members; I did not enact it, I placed it not there, I conſent not to its being there; but there I find it, and know not how to be rid of it, but it ſhall never have my will. But the Law of grace is called a Law of the mind, not in the mind; a Law which is ſettled there by the conſent of the Soul, and to whoſe Soveraignty and Guidance it yields it ſelf. The Law of ſin is in the members; the vigor of it is ſeen in the inferiour faculties of the Soul, not in the higher, the mind and will; 'tis a Law impoſed upon me, not imbraced by me; a Law of diſturbance, not of obedience; a Law that troubles me, doth not delight me, v. 21, 22. It reſides as an Enemy warring, but hath no intimacy with me as a friend, v. 23. yet it is an Enemy driven to the out-works, to the members: So that where all this is, you cannot ſuppoſe an habitual conſent to ſin, when the will is formed into another nature. As the will of the wicked is poſſeſſed by habits of ſin under the reſtraints from it, ſo the will of the godly is poſſeſſed by habits of grace, even under the rape of a prevailing temptation.

2. Nor an actual conſent both antecedent and conſequent. The Intereſt of ſin may ſeem to be actually higher and ſtronger in the Soul than the Intereſt of God, though this latter is habitually ſtronger than the Intereſt of ſin. Though there may be an antecedent delight in the motion, a preſent delight in the action, yet there is not a permanent conſequent delight after it; yet the two firſt are rare. 'Tis ſeldom that a renewed Soul and ſin do ſo friendly conſpire together without any ſpiritual reluctancy. Suppoſe he may have by the ſuſpenſion of grace, a whole actual conſent of will to one particular ſin, upon ſome ſtrong provocation, yet he gives not up himſelf to the will or way of that ſin. He is only under a temporary, not a perpetual power of it. As a man in a fight may by a fall be under the power of his Enemy, yet in the ſtruggle get up again, and reduce him to the ſame neceſſity. Though there be not an expreſs diſſent at the motion, nor in the action, yet there is alwaies after; for it is as much againſt the terms of the Covenant to have a perpetual delight in any ſin committed, as to commit it often, becauſe this delight in it is an approbation of it, and every act of delight, is a new act of approbation, and conſequently a recommiſſion of it, and a making a mans ſelf a perpetual acceſſary to that firſt act.

1. Sometimes he hath an antecedent diſſent. A renewed man is troubled and diſpleaſed at the firſt motion to a ſin; he is ſometimes troubled that any ſin ſhould ſo much as ask him the queſtion to have entertainment in him: 'Tis ſo many times with a natural man, much more with a regenerate man; yet afterwards that diſplicency abating, the ſin creeps upon him by degrees, and enſnares him. Paul had an act of will againſt that which he did, before he did it; he did that which was preceded by an act of his will nilling it, as there was an act of his will, for the doing good preceding his not doing it, Rom. 7. 19. The good that I would, I do not, but the evil which I would not, that I do. The act of his will was preſent, v. 18. To will is preſent with me, I have that ſtanding in a readineſs to do good; but the executive power is at a diſtance, I know not how to have it. But how to perform that which is good I find not. He ſpeaks as a man that was ſearching for ſomething which he had a great deſire to find, and could not meet with it. Many times a good man is tyred out with the importunity of a temptation, and is fain to fling down his weapons, and ſink under the oppreſſion, till he receive a new recruit of ſtrength by exciting and aſſiſting grace.

2. Sometimes concomitant, in the very commiſſion of a ſin. Peter ſeems to have had ſome reſiſtance in the very act of denying his Maſter. The Spirit of God blew up ſome ſparks of ſhame in him at that very time; for after the very firſt denial, he went out into the porch, Mark 14. 68. By his retirement he diſcovers ſome willingneſs to have avoided a further temptation. There is many times an exerciſe of diſpleaſure againſt it, while a man cannot avoid it, Rom. 7. 15. That which I do, I allow not; that which I hate, that I do. I hate it even while I do it, and my hatred is excited againſt it, in the very act; he means it of ſins of infirmity. The Seed of God in the heart cannot conſent to ſin, but will many times in the very acting of it be ſhewing its diſpleaſure, weakly or ſtrongly againſt it. As a Needle touched with a Loadſtone, if it be diſturbed in its ſtanding to the North-pole, will ſhake and tremble while the impediment is upon it *. Some demurrers were made in Peter's heart, but fear over-ruled the plea; and it is probable his heart was not wholly aſleep even in the very act; elſe it is not likely he ſhould have been ſo ſuddenly rouzed. There is a voice in him. Grace ſpeaks for God, but it is over-ruled and oppreſt by a temptation; tation; there are some pull-backs, some spiritual whisperers even when it presses hard. Why art thou cast down my Soul? Psal. 43. 5. There is the carnal part stirring in distrust; Hope thou in God, there is a spiritual part rising in Faith. A neat person may by stumbling be bemir'd in a dirty hole, but while he stumbles, there is a natural impetus, which endeavours to keep him upright; and if he doth fall, he struggles till he be delivered. But when a Swine falls into a puddle, he lies grunting with pleasure, and grumbles at any that will drag him out. Which leads me to a third thing.

3. But there is always a consequent dissent after the fall. He hath many rebukes in his Conscience; whereas a natural mans sin is brought up and nurtur'd with him, Eccles. 5. 1. They consider not that they do evil; they lay it not to heart, especially if it break not out in some foul and notorious manner. A renewed man is displeased at the very first motion that clambered up into his heart to entice him to his sin; not only the fruit, but the root that bears it is odious to him, Psal. 51. 5. Behold I was shapen in iniquity. By the same reason that he directs his hatred to the sin of his Nature, by the same reason he will do it to the first motion that immediately brought forth that bitter fruit; which a natural man doth not. 'Tis the character of a wicked man to rejoyce that he hath done evil, Prov. 2. 14. which I think is never found in a renewed man; for this is indeed to be under the power of Satan, and like their Father the Devil. But he condemns what he hath committed; and the greater his delight in it; the greater will his abhorrency be of it, and the more earnest his cry to be rid of his burden. When he comes to see what contrariety there was in his act to the Law of God, it is impossible but his heart should smite him. It cannot be, but that delight in the Law of God, which is a constitutive part of a regenerate man, Rom. 7. 22. must revive, when the weights which did suspend it are removed, and according to the degrees of his revived delight there will be suitable degrees of displeasure with what was contrary to the object of it; for since a delight in the Law of God is essential to a renewed nature, that delight must needs produce an aversion from every thing contrary to that Law, otherwise it is not a delight: If there be not such workings after a review of sin, I dare pronounce that such a man is not regenerate. But how long he may lie in a sin, without acting consideration about it, I cannot determine. He must needs have torment in his Soul, and a high disaffection to his sin, and himself for it, because upon a review he cannot but see how unlike to God it hath made him; how much it hath defiled his Soul, and impaired the Divine Image. No disease can be more grievous to the body than a sin fallen into is to the new nature; it grieves and pains the new creature, which is restless till it be rid of the disease; the new nature is a tender thing. Though he be assured of its pardon, he is in anxiety till he finds it purged, Psal. 51. 7. Purge me with Hyssop, and I shall be clean. David had been assured of the pardon of his Sin by Nathan; that would not quiet him, as long as the filth remained; he would not only have the guilt removed, but the stain washed off; as a man fallen in the dirt is desirous not only to be raised up, but to be washed clean from any remainders of the mire. A good man hath a disquietness in his heart, and is as much troubled at his sin, as at a stinking wound, or a loathsom disease, Psal. 38. 5, 6, 7, 8. and his sorrow is continually before him, v. 17. He is more displeased with that sin, than he is pleased at present with all the grace he hath. David's sin was ever before him, Psal. 51. 3. Peter brought forth no other fruit immediately after the review of his sin, but sorrow, and exercised more grief for that, than he did joy at the present, for the not failing of his Faith; as a man is more troubled with a pain of the Tooth, or a fit of the Gout, than pleased with all the health in his vital parts, which is far greater than his pain. Here then is a difference; Regenerate men have pain in their sins, natural men pleasure; the one is ashamed of his sin, the other at best but ashamed of his discredit; he condemns himself for it with so much severity, rips his heart open before God, that if a wicked man should hear him praying in his Closet after some sin, he would think he did belye himself, or else that he were the vilest Villain in the world. He will study no excuses, and present no pleas to God for his sin. If he hath not strength to conquer it, he hath a voice to cry against it: Prayers are doubled; one Messenger goes to Heaven upon the heels of another, and so moderation, which was in his requests before, is turn'd to an unsatisfied importunity. So that you see, there is not a plenary consent of will, but the dissent is habitual and actual, if not antecedent or concomitant, yet alwaies consequent.

What then doth the regenerate mans sin arise from? It ariseth

1. Either from a strong passion, which many times bears down the bars both of grace and reason. That is not wholly voluntary which is done by the prevalency of passion, which suspends the determination of the understanding, and consequently the regular and free motion of the Will. Such was the accusation of God in his Prophet, which David was guilty of, Psal. 116. 11. I said in my haste, all men are liars. I said, 'tis true, all men are liars, even the Prophet too, but it was in my haste. And in his haste he accuseth God of the breach of his promises, Psal. 31. 22. I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thy Eyes. God hath either forgot his promise, or changed his resolutions, for not one of them will be made good unto me. It was a passion in Moses which made him guilty of that act of unbelief, that cost him his exclusion from the land of promise, Num. 20. 8, 10, 11, 12. God commands him to use his Tongue, not his Rod on the Rock; but the passion the good

good man was in by the provocation of the people, transported him beyond his bounds. Peter's heart was not so full of courage as of Loyalty, his Zeal was put out of countenance by his fear. A strong fit of passion may make a man, as good and meek as Moses, fling away both the Tables of the Law, which otherwise would be as dear to him as the Apple of his Eye.

2. From inconsiderateness. There cannot be a full consent of Will, where a deliberate judgment doth not precede. Many a man, through an inconsiderate indulging his appetite, eats that meat which foments his humors into some dangerous disease. Sin creeps upon a good man when the liveliness and activity of his Spirit in former duties is in a slumber; but another hath as great inclinations to sin, when his understanding is in its strength. Peter had the grace of faith, but he fell into his sin for want of acting it; upon his repentance, it is said, Luke 22.6. And Peter remembred the words of the Lord. He had forgot Christs words, and that made him forget himself and his Master in that act of sin. If our Saviour had cast his Eye upon Peter, and excited his slumbering grace before the Maid had spoken to him, he might have prevented Peter's fall as well as afterwards recovered him. If God had sent Nathan with a message to David, when his corruption began first to put on its Arms, to have shewed him the vileness of his intentions, and excited him to a stout resistance, he might have prevented the loss of his innocency, as well as restor'd him after it had lain in the dust so long. David might have kept his standing, and dismist those inclinations, as he did his inconsiderate design of murdering Nabal and his family upon Abigail's admonition, for which he blesseth God, 1 Sam. 25. 32, 33. In short, The motion of a regenerate man to sin is violent, like a stone upward, the motion of an unregenerate man is natural, like a stone downwards. The Godly are violently pursued, but the wicked foolishly infatuated by a temptation. * And certainly when the strength of the passion is abated, and the free exercise of reason recovered, there will be the exercise of grace again; for it is not conceiveable, that the habit of grace and repentance should be without the actual exercise of it, when the impediments are removed, and an occasion presented; so that he that doth not recover himself to his former exercise, never had this true seed of God infused into him.

* Greenham.

7 Proposition. Though a regenerate man may fall, and sin have a temporary dominion, yet he recovers out of this state, and for the most part returns to his former holiness, and an increase of it, though not always to his former comforts. There are none whose sins are recorded in Scripture, but there are some evidences of their repentance for it, or the acting the contrary grace. Davids sin was gross, and his repentance remarkable; he was more tender afterwards in point of Blood, 2 Sam. 23. 16, 17. when he desired Water out of the Well of Bethlehem, and it was brought him by three valiant men with the Jeopardy of their lives; he would not drink it, because it was the Blood of the men that ventured their lives to satisfy his curiosity. Peters repentance is eminent, his affection is hot, for the truth of which he could appeal to his masters omniscience, John 21. 17. Lord thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee. His courage is illustrious in asserting his Masters honour in the face of the greatest dangers, in which exercise you find him the Foreman of that Jury of the 12 Apostles before every Assembly, Acts 2. 3. 4. 5. &c. Though Abraham had discovered a distrust of God in Pharaohs and Abimelechs courts, yet his faith afterward in his readiness to sacrifice Isaac, was as glorious as his unbelief had been base, which gave him the title of the Father of the faithful. Noah who was drunk, and thereby exposed to the derision of his Son, could not so well have curst him, had he not abhorred the sin as well as the reproach. And Lot, whose righteous Soul was vexed with the filthiness of others, could not have a less vexation at his own when he came to know of it. Those that affirm that mortal sins expel grace, yet doubt whether they expel the gifts of the Spirit, one end whereof say they, is to render the Soul pliable and flexible to the motions of the Spirit. * If they do not expel the gifts, I know not why they should expel the grace which is under the manutenency of the Spirit of God in a particular manner. The Spirit lusts against the flesh, as well as the flesh against the Spirit, and the lusting of the Spirit will prevail as well as the lusting of the flesh, and more, Gal. 5. 17. All natural things that are removed out of their proper place, are restless till they are reduc'd to their right station. A good man is as Water, that though it be turned into a Mass of Ice, wholly cold in the ways of God, yet still there is a principle in him, (as there is in Ice) to return to his former form, figure and activity, upon the warm eruptions of the Spirit of God. There is a powerful voice behind him that brings him back, when he turns either to the right hand or to the left from the ways of God, Isa. 30. 21. By virtue of this seed within him, and the Spirit of God exciting it, that word which comes home to the Soul after a sin, becomes efficaciously melting, and raises up springs of penitential motions, which could not arise so suddenly were the spiritual life wholly departed. For a man that hath no habit of grace in him, cannot so suddenly concur with Gods proposals, and exercise a repentance. In such an one we see first a stupefaction of mind, and an unaptness to faith, no motions of a true repentance, though some preparation to it. But with a regenerate man it is otherwise. David being admonisht by Nathan was struck to the heart, and Peter presently upon our Saviours look melted into tears. Their grace, like tinder, took fire presently upon those small ſmall but powerful occaſions; though it did not act at the time of their ſin, yet it had an aptneſs to act upon the removal of the impediments. Though Jonah ſeems to caſt off all regard of God and his command, yet upon the firſt occaſion in the Whales Belly, he brings forth excellent fruits of faith in a moment. Jonah 2. Grace in an inſtant upon the firſt motion of the Spirit will riſe up, and take its place from whence it ſeems to be depoſed. As a natural man under ſome ſting of Conſcience, and flaſh of a lightning conviction, may be reſtrained from ſin, yet his natural inclination to it remains, though ſuſpended at the preſent, and may be carried the quite contrary way, as the ſtream of a river by the force of the Tide is turned againſt its natural current, yet ſlides down its channel with its wonted calmneſs upon the removal of the force; ſo a good man under the violence of ſome luſt hath not his new nature changed, though at preſent it is reſtrain'd by an extrinſick force; ſo that as the one upon the taking off his conviction, returns to his ſin, ſo the other upon the removal of his fetters, returns to his holineſs with a greater ſpirit and delight. A wicked man may ſometimes do a good action, but he continues not in it. As a Planet is ſometimes retrograde, but ſoon returns to its direct courſe. When their Conſcience pinches them, they awake out of their trance. So a good man may ſin through infirmity, but he will revoke it by repentance. The ſeed of God remains in him as the Sap in the Root of a Tree that recovers the leaves the next return of the Sun at the ſpring. He may ſink by nature and riſe again by grace; but the Devil, who ſinned at the beginning, fell and never roſe more.

* Suarez de Gratia. lib. 11 c. 3. num. 10, p. 415.

Uſe of Examination.

If you find your ſelves in theſe caſes, in a courſe of known ſin, reſolution to commit it, were it not for ſuch bars; unwillingneſs to know Gods pleaſure and injunction, deſpiſing admonitions and reproofs, a ſettled love to it, a full conſent of Will without any antecedent, concomitant or conſequent diſſent, tumbling in it without riſing by repentance, a circle of ſinning and repenting without abhorrence of ſin; you may conclude your ſelves in an unregenerate ſtate, you ſin like the Devil, who ſinned from the beginning.

A DISCOURSE OF The Pardon of Sin.

Pſalm 32. 1, 2.

Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, whoſe ſin is covered. Bleſſed is the man unto whom the Lord imputes not iniquity.

THis Pſalm, as Grotius thinks, was made to be ſung upon the Annual day of the Jewiſh Expiation, when a general confeſſion of their ſins was made. 'Tis one of David's pœnitential Pſalms, ſuppoſed to be compoſed by him after the Murder of Uriah, and the pronouncing of his pardon by Nathan, v. 5. and rather a Pſalm of Thanksgiving. 'Tis called Maſchil, a Pſalm of underſtanding. Maſchil is tranſlated eruditio, intelligentia, and notes ſome excellent Doctrine in the Pſalm, not known by the light of Nature. Bleſſed אשרי] Bleſſednesſes. Ex omni parte beatus. Three words there are to diſcover the nature of ſin; and three words to diſcover the nature of pardon.

פשע Tranſgreſſion.] Prevarication. Some underſtand by it ſins of omiſſion, & commiſſion.

חטאה Sin.] Some underſtand thoſe inward inclinations, luſts and motions, whereby the Soul ſwerves from the Law of God, and which are the immediate cauſes of external ſins.

עון Iniquity.] Notes original ſin, the root of all. Three words that note pardon.

נשוי Levatus, forgiven.] Eas'd, נשא, ſignifies to take away, to bear, to carry away. Two words in Scripture are chiefly uſed to denote remiſſion, כפר, to expiate, נשא, to bear, or carry away; the one ſignifies the manner whereby it is done, viz. atonement; the other the effect of this expiation, carrying away; one notes the meritorious cauſe, the other the conſequent.

כסוי Covered.] Alluding to the covering of the Ægyptians in the Red Sea. Menochius thinks it alludes to the manner of writing among the Hebrews, which he thinks to be the ſame with that of the Romans; as writing with a Pencil upon wax ſpread upon Tables, which when they would blot out, they made the Wax plain, and drawing it over the writing, covered the former letters. And ſo it is equivalent with that expreſſion of blotting out ſin, as in the other alluſion it is with caſting ſin into the depths of the Sea.

יחשוב Impute.] Not charging upon account. As ſin is a defection from the Law, ſo it is forgiven; as it is offenſive to God's holineſs, ſo it is covered; as it is a debt involving man in a debt of puniſhment, ſo it is not imputed; They all note the certainty, and extent, and perfection of pardon. The three words expreſſing ſin here, being the ſame that are uſed by God in the declaration of his Name, Exod. 34. 7. Here are to be conſidered,

1. The Nature of Pardon.
2. The Author of it, God.
3. The Extent of it, Tranſgreſſion, Sin, Iniquity.
4. The Manner of it, implied, by Faith in Chriſt.

The Apoſtle quoting this place, Rom. 4. 7. to prove Juſtification by Faith: As ſin is not imputed, ſo ſomething is imputed inſtead of it. Covering implies ſomething wherewith a thing is covered, as well as the act whereby it is covered.

5. The Effect of it, Bleſſedneſs.

I ſhall not divide them into diſtinct Propoſitions, but take the words in order as they lie.

I. The Nature of Pardon.

1. Conſider

1. Conſider the words, and what notes they will afford to us.

(1.) Covering, as it alludes to the manner of writing, and ſo is the ſame with blotting our, Iſa. 43. 25. I, even I am he that blots out thy tranſgreſſion; whereby is implied, that ſin is a debt, and pardon is the remitting of it. It notes,

[1.] The nullity of the debt. A croſſed book will not ſtand good in law, becauſe the croſſing of the book implies the Satisfaction of the debt. A debt may be read in our manner of writing in a croſſed book, but it cannot be pleaded. God may after pardon read our ſins in the book of his Omniſcience, but not charge them upon us at the bar of his Juſtice.

[2.] Gods willingneſs to pardon. Blots, not razeth. He engraves them not upon marble, he writes them not with a pen of Iron, or point of a diamond; writing upon wax is eaſily made plain.

[3.] The extent of it. Blotting ſerves for a great debt as well as a ſmall, a thouſand pound may as well, and as ſoon be daſht out by a blot as a thouſand pence.

[4.] The quickneſs of it upon repentance. It takes more time to write a debt in a book, than to croſs it out; one blow would obliterate a great deal of writing upon wax. Sins, that have been contracting many years, when God pardons he blots out in a moment.

(2.) Covering, as it alludes to the drowning the Ægyptians is expreſt by caſting into the depths of the Sea, Micah. 7. 19. Thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the Sea.

This notes alſo

[1.] Gods willingneſs to pardon. Caſts them, not lays them gently aſide, but flings them away with violence, as things that he cannot endure the ſight of, and is reſolved never to take notice of them more.

[2.] Gods reality in pardon. He will caſt their ſins as far as the arm of his omnipotency can reach; If there be any place further than the depths of the Sea, thither they ſhall be thrown out of the ſight of his juſtice.

[3.] The extent. [All] their ſins. The Sea covered Ægyptian Princes as well as the people. The mighty Lord, as well as the Common Souldier, ſank like lead in thoſe mighty waters.

[4.] The Duration of it. The Sea vomits up nothing that it takes into its lower bowels, things caſt into the depths of the Ocean never appear more. Rivers may be turned, and drain'd, but who can lave out the Ocean?

[2.] Not imputing. Not putting upon account, not charging the debt in a legal proceſs. To this is æquivalent the expreſſion of not remembring, Iſa. 43. 25. I will not remember their ſins. An act of oblivion is paſt upon ſin. This notes,

[1.] That God will not exact the debt of thee. God doth not abſolutely forget ſin, for what he knows never ſlips out of his knowledg. So that his not remembring is rather an act of his will than a defect in his underſtanding. As when an act of oblivion is paſſed, the fact committed is not Phyſically forgotten, but legally, becauſe the fear of puniſhment is removed. God puts them out of the memory of his wrath, though not out of the memory of his knowledge. He doth remember them paternally to chaſtize thee for them, though not judicially to condemn thee.

[2.] Not upbraid thee. Not with a ſcornful upbraiding mention them to caſt thee off, but with a merciful renewing the remembrance of them upon thy Conſcience, to excite thy repentance, and keep thee with in the due bounds of humility and reverence.

More particularly the nature of pardon may be explained in theſe Propoſitions. We muſt not think thatt heſe expreſſions, as they denote pardon, do intimate in this act the taking away of the being of ſin, nature of ſin, or demerit of ſin.

1. The being and inherency of ſin is not taken away. Though ſin be not imputed to us, yet it is inherent in us. The being remains, though the power be dethroned. By pardon God takes away ſin, not as it is a pollution of the Soul, but as it is an inducement to wrath. Though remiſſion, and Sanctification are concomitants, yet they are diſtinct acts, and wrought in a diſtinct manner.

2. The nature of ſin is not taken away. Juſtification is a relative change of the perſon, not of the ſin; for though God will not by an act of his juſtice puniſh the perſon pardoned, yet by his holineſs he cannot but hate the ſin, becauſe though it be pardoned, it is ſtill contrary to God, and enmity againſt him. 'Tis not a change of the native malice of the ſin, but a non-imputation of it to the offender. Though the perſon ſinning be free from any indictment, yet ſin is not freed from its malitia, and oppoſition to God. For though the law doth not condemn a juſtified perſon becauſe he is tranſlated into another ſtate, yet it condemns the acts of ſin, though the guilt of thoſe acts doth not redound upon the perſon to bring the wrath of God upon him. Though David had the ſins of murther and adultery pardon'd, yet this pardon did not make David a righteous perſon in thoſe acts, for it was murther and adultery ſtill, and the change was not in his ſin, but in his Soul and ſtate.

3. The Demerit of ſin is not taken away. As pardon doth not alter ſins nature, ſo neither doth it alter ſins demerit, for to merit damnation belongs to the nature of it; ſo that we may look upon our ſelves as deſerving Hell, though the ſin whereby we deſerve it, be remitted. Pardon frees us from actual condemnation, but not, as conſidered in our own perſons, from the desert of condemnation. As when a King pardons a thief, he doth not make the theft to become formally no theft, or to be meritoriously no capital crime. Upon those two grounds of the nature and demerit of sin, a justified person is to bewail it, and I question not but the consideration of this doth add to the triumph and Hallelujahs of the glorified Souls, whose chief work being to praise God for redemption, they cannot but think of the nature and demerit of that from which they were redeemed, Rev. 5. 13.

4. The guilt of sin, or obligation to punishment is taken away by pardon. Sin committed doth presently by vertue of the law transgressed bind over the sinner to death: but pardon makes void this obligation, so that God no longer accounts us persons obnoxious to him. Peccatum remitti non aliud est quam non imputari ad pœnam *. 'Tis a revoking the sentence of the law against the sinner; and God renouncing upon the account of the Satisfaction made by Christ to his justice, any right to punish a believer, doth actually discharge him upon his believing, from that sentence of the law under which he lay in the state of unbelief; and also as he parts with this right to punish, so he confers a right upon a believer humbly to challenge it, upon the account of the Satisfaction wrought by his surety. God hath not only in his own mind and resolution parted with this right of punishing, but also given an express declaration of his will, 2 Cor. 5. 19. God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, i. e. openly renouncing upon Christs account the right to punish, wh ence follows the non-imputation of sin. Not imputing their trespasses unto them. The justice of God will not suffer that that sin which is pardoned, should be punished; for can that be justice in a prince to pardon a thief, and yet to bring him to the gallows for that fact? Though the malefactor doth justly deserve it, yet after a pardon and the word passed, it is not justly inflicted. God indeed doth punish for that sin which is pardoned. Though Nathan by Gods Commission had declared Davids sin pardoned, yet the Sword was to stick in the bowels of his family, 2 Sam. 12. 10, 15. The Sword shall never depart from thy house, [the Lord hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not dye.] But

(1.) 'Tis not a punishment in order to Satisfaction. Because Christs Satisfaction had no flaw in it, and stood in need of nothing to eek it out: But 'tis for the vindication of the honour of Gods holiness, that he might not be thought an approver of sin, and this was the reason of Davids punishment in the death of his child by Bathsheba. 2 Sam. 12. 14. [Because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to Blaspheme.]

(2.) 'Tis not so much pœnal as medicinal. A judg Commands a hand to be cut off, that is for punishment; a Physician and a Father order the same, but for the Patients cure, and the preservation of the body. And though God after pardon acts not towards his people in the nature of a Judg, yet he never lays aside the authority and affection of a Father. We are delivered from a Judges wrath, but not from a Fathers anger. In that remarkable dumbness inflicted upon Zachary for his unbelief, Luk. 1. 18. 20. there was a confirmation of his Faith, as well as the chastisement of his incredulity. The Angel upon his unbelieving desire of a sign, gives him a Testimony of the truth of his errand, but such an one that should make him feel in some measure the smart of his unbelief.

(3.) If it be penal, 'tis not the eternal punishment due to sin. 'Tis but temporary and not embittered by wrath, which is the gall of punishment.

This taking off the obligation to punishment is the true nature of pardon. Which will be evident from, 2 Sam. 19. 19. Let not my Lord impute iniquity unto me. Shimei desires David not, to impute iniquity, and not to remember it. It was not in Davids power absolutely to forget it and Shimei's confessing the fact with those circumstances in verse 20. was enough to recall it to Davids memory, if he had forgot it; but he desires David not to bring him to satisfy the penalty of the law for reviling his Soveraign.

II. The Author of Pardon, God. For pardon is the Soveraign prerogative, of God whereby he doth acquit a believing Sinner from all obligation to Satisfactory punishment upon the account of the Satisfaction and Righteousness of Christ apprehended by Faith.

1. 'Tis Gods act. Remission is the Creditors not the Debtors act; though the Debtor be obliged in Justice to pay the debt, yet there is no obligation upon the Creditor to demand the debt, because it is at his liberty to renounce or maintain his right to it; and God hath as much power as man to relax his right, provided it be with a Salvo to his own honour, and the holiness of his nature, which he cannot deny for the sinners safety, as the Apostle tells us, God cannot deny himself. Yet properly, say some, though sin be a debt, God is not to be considered in pardon as a Creditor, because sin is not a pecuniary debt, but a criminal, and so God is to be considered as a governor, law-giver, guardian and executor of his laws, and so may dispence with the severities of them. If an inferior person tear an indictment, it may be brought again into Court; but if the chief Magistrate order the casting it out, who can plead it? 'Tis Gods act, and if God justifies who can condemn? Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that justifies, who shall condemn? That God absolves thee that hath power to condemn thee, that God who enacted the law whereby thou art sentenced, proclaims the Gospel whereby thou art reconcil'd. 'Tis an offended God who is a foregiving God; that God whose name thou hast prophaned, whose patience thou hast abused, whose laws thou hast violated, whose mercy thou hast slighted, whose justice thou hast dared, and whose glory thou hast stained.

* Durand. lib. 4. dist. 1. q. 7 For sin to be pardoned, is nothing else but not to be imputed in order to punishment.

2. 'Tis not only his act but his prerogative, and he only can do it. God is the party wronged. Nemo poteſt remittere de jure alieno. This prerogative he glories in as peculiar to himſelf, the thoughts of this honour are ſo ſweet to him, that he repeats it twice, as a title he will not ſhare with another, Iſa. 43. 25. [I, even I am he that blots out thy tranſgreſſions. Pardoning offenders is one of a Princes royalties. And this is reckoned among his Regalia, as a choice flower and jewel in his Crown. Exod. 34. 7. [forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſions and Sins. A Prince puniſheth by his miniſters, but pardons by himſelf. And indeed God is never ſo glorious as in acts of mercy: Juſtice makes him terrible, but mercy renders him amiable. When Moſes deſired to ſee God in his royalty, and beſt perfections, he diſplays himſelf in his goodneſs, Exod. 33. 18. Shew me thy glory, v. 19. I will make all my goodneſs paſs before thee. I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious. And though the Apoſtles had a power of Remiſſion, and binding, that was only miniſterial and declarative, like that prophetical power which Jeremy had to root up nations, and deſtroy Jerm. 1. 10. i. e. to declare Gods will in ſuch and ſuch Judgments, as he ſhould ſend him to pronounce. Men cannot pardon an infinite wrong done to an infinite juſtice. Forgiveneſs belongs to God, as

(1.) Proprietor. He hath a greater right to us than we have to our ſelves.

(2.) Soveraign He is Lord over us, as we are his creatures.

(3.) Governour of us, as we are parts of the world.

(3.) 'Tis an act of his mercy: Not our merit. Though there be a conditional connexion between pardon, and repentance, and Faith, yet there is no meritorious connexion ariſeth from the Nature of thoſe graces, but remiſſion flows from the gracious indulgence of the promiſe.

'Tis the very tenderneſs of mercy, the meltings of inward bowels, Luke. 1. 78. To give knowledg of Salvation, and Remiſſion of their ſins through the tender mercies of our God. σπλαγχνα ελεους an inexhauſtible mercy, Pſal. 86. 5. Thou Lord art ready to forgive, and art plenteous in mercy. A multitude of tender mercies, Pſal. 51. 1. What Arithmetick can count all the bublings up of mercy in the breaſt of God, and all the glances and all the doles of his pardoning grace towards his creatures? And he keeps this mercy by him as in a treaſury to this purpoſe, Exod. 34. 7. keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving inquity, &c. And is ſtill as full as ever, as the ſun which hath influenced ſo many animals and vegetables, and expelled ſo much darkneſs and cold, is ſtill as a ſtrong man able to run the ſame race, and perform by its light and heat the ſame operations. When mercy ſhews it ſelf in ſtate with all its train, it is but to uſher in pardoning grace, Exod. 34. 6. 7. not a letter, not an attribute that makes up the compoſition of that name but is a friend and votary of mercy. And that latter clauſe a learned man explains of Gods clemency, He will by no means clear the guilty, viſiting the Iniquity of the Fathers, &c. which he renders thus; He will not utterly cut off and deſtroy, but when he doth viſit the ſins of the Fathers upon the Children, it ſhall be but to the third or fourth Generation, not for ever. This name of God is urged by Moſes, Number 14. 17. Now I beſeech thee, let the power of my Lord be great; the Lord is long-ſuffering and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and tranſgreſſion, and by no means clearing the guilty, viſiting the iniquity, &c. Pardon I beſeech thee, the iniquity of this people, according to the greatneſs of thy mercy. Where Moſes repeats this clauſe more particularly than he doth the other parts of his name; which ſurely he would not have done, and pleaded it as a Motive to God to pardon Iſrael, if he had not underſtood it of God's clemency; for otherwiſe he had dwelt more upon the argument of Juſtice than upon that of mercy, which had not been proper to edg his preſent petition with. Nay it is ſuch pure mercy, the genuine birth of mercy, that it partakes of its very name, as Children bear the name of their Father, Heb. 8. 12. I will be merciful to their iniquity, which in the Prophet, Jer. 31. 34. whence the Apoſtle quotes it, is, I will forgive their iniquity.

That it is ſo, will appear, becauſe

(1.) No attribute could be the firſt motive of pardon but this. His Juſtice would loudly cry for vengeance, and flame out againſt ungrateful ſinners. His holineſs would make him abhor not only the embraces but the very ſight of ſuch filthy creatures as we are. His power would attend to receive and execute the Commands of his juſtice and holineſs, did not compaſſion ſtep in to qualify.

(2.) Unconſtrained mercy. Men pardon many times, becauſe they are too weak to puniſh. But God wants not power to inflict Judgments, neither doth man want weakneſs to ſink under it, Rom. 5, 6. When we were without ſtrength, Chriſt dyed for us. God wanted not ſufficient reaſon to juſtify a ſevere proceeding both in the quality of ſin, every ſin being a contrariety to the law, Soveraignty, work, glory, yea the very being of God, now for God to pardon that which would pull him out of his throne, hath blemiſhed the creation, robs him of his honour, muſt be an act of the richeſt and pureſt mercy: And in the quantity, multitudes of ſins of this curſed quality as numerous as motes in the Sun-beams. 'Tis impoſſible for the nimbleſt Angel to write down the extravagancies of men committed in the ſpace of twenty four hours, if he could know all the operations of their Souls as well as their outward actions; all thoſe God doth ſee, ſimul & ſemel, and yet is ready to pardon in the midſt of numberleſs provocations.

(3.) Reſolv'd and deſigned mercy. 'Tis not through inadvertency and inſenſibleneſs of the the aggravating circumſtances of them. God muſt needs know the nature and circumſtances of all thoſe ſins he himſelf laid upon Chriſt. Yea God hath an actuated knowledge of all when he is about to pardon, Iſa. 43. 22. God reckons up their ſins of omiſſions: They had been weary of him, and had not brought to him their ſmall Cattle; had preferr'd their Lambs and Kids before his Service, wearied him with their iniquities, endeavoured to tire him out of the Government of the World. What could one have expected after this black Scroul, but Fire-balls of Wrath? Yet he blots them out, v. 25. though all thoſe ſins were freſh in his memory. Nay, the Name we have profaned becomes our Solicitor, Ezek. 36. 22. For my holy Names ſake which you have profaned.

(4) Delightful and pleaſant mercy. He delights in pardoning mercy, as a Father delights in his Children. He is therefore called the Father of mercy, Micah 7. 18. he pardons iniquity, and retains not his anger for ever, becauſe he delights in mercy. Never did we take ſo much pleaſure in ſinning, as God doth in forgiving. Never did any penitent take ſo much pleaſure in receiving, as God doth in giving a pardon: He ſo much delights in it, that he counts it his wealth; Riches of grace, riches of mercy, glorious riches of mercy; no Attribute elſe is called his riches. He ſighs when he muſt draw his Sword, Hoſ. 11. 8. How ſhall I give thee up, O Ephraim! But when he blots out iniquity, then it is, I, even I am he that blots out your tranſgreſſions for my Names ſake. His delight in this is equal to the delight he hath in his Name. This is pure mercy, to change the Tribunal of Juſtice into a Throne of Grace; to beſtow pardons, where he might inflict puniſhments, and to put on the deportment of a Father inſtead of that of a Judge.

4. The Act of his Juſtice. Thoſe Attributes which ſeem contrary, are joyned together to produce forgiveneſs: Yet God is not to be conſidered in pardon only as Judex, but paternus Judex; there is a compoſition of Judge and Father in this act; Free Grace on God's part, but Juſtice upon the account of Chriſt. That God will accept of a ſatisfaction is Mercy, that he will not forgive without a ſatisfaction is Juſtice: Mercy forgives it in us, though Juſtice did puniſh it in Chriſt. Chriſt by his death paid the debt, and God by the Reſurrection of Chriſt diſcharged the debt; and therefore the Juſtice of God is engaged to beſtow pardon upon a Believer. God ſet forth Chriſt as a propitiation, that he might be juſt, and therefore a juſtifier of him that believes, Rom. 3. 26. Either the debt is paid, or not; if not, then Chriſt's Death is in vain; if it be, then God's Juſtice is ſo equitable, as not to demand a ſecond payment. Therefore another Apoſtle joyns faithful and righteous; it might have been faithful and merciful, faithful and loving; but faithful and righteous, or juſt takes in the Attribute, which is moſt terrible to man, 1 John 1. 9. He is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, δικαιος. Iſay joyns both together, a juſt God, and a Saviour, Iſa. 45. 21. So that here is unſpeakable comfort. That which engaged God formerly to puniſh man, engageth him now to pardon a Believer. That which moved him to puniſh Chriſt, doth excite him to forgive thee.

5. The Act of his Power. 'Tis a ſign of a noble and generous mind to paſs over offences and injuries. Sick and indigent perſons are the moſt peeviſh and impatient, and leaſt able to concoct an injury. And when we kindle into a flame upon the leaſt ſparks of a wrong, the Apoſtle tells us, we are overcome of evil, Rom. 12. 21. Be not overcome of evil: We become captives to our angry paſſions; ſpeedy revenge in us being an act of weakneſs, the contrary muſt be an act of power over our ſelves. God's not executing the fierceneſs of his Anger is laid upon his being a God, and not man, Hoſ. 11. 9. God's Infinite Power gives a riſe to pardon, Micah 7. 18. Who is a God like to thee, that pardons iniquity? Junius and Tremellius render it, Who is a ſtrong God? and the Hebrew אל will bear it. Let the power of my Lord be great, ſaith Moſes, Numb. 14. 17. The word Jigdal is written with a great Jod, to ſhew, ſay the Jews, that it is more than an ordinary power to command ones ſelf when injured. Therefore when God proclaims his pardoning Name, he uſhers it in with names of power; The Lord, the Lord God, Exod. 34. 6. 'Tis a greater work to forgive, than to prevent the commiſſion of ſin; as it is a greater work to raiſe a dead man, than to cure a ſick man; one is a work of Art, the other belongs only to Omnipotency.

III. The Manner of it. How it is carried on.

1. On God's part by Chriſt.

(1.) By his Death. He is the Scape-Goat, upon whom our ſins are laid, Iſa. 53. 6. Our ſins are made Chriſt's, and Chriſt's righteouſneſs is made ours: He is ſaid to be made ſin for us, and we are ſaid to be made the righteouſneſs of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. a bleſſed exchange for us; he bore that wrath, indured thoſe torments, ſuffered thoſe ſtrokes of Juſtice which were due to us. The pardon of ſin doth coſt us confeſſions and tears, but it coſt Chriſt blood, and unknown pains; (as the Greek Liturgy, Δι' ἀγνωστων παθων, have mercy on us.)

[1.] Laid upon him by God. God appropriates this work to himſelf, Zach. 3. 9. I will engrave the engraving thereof, ſpeaking of the Stone, which is the ſame with his Servant the branch. As a Stone is cut with a Chizzel, which makes deep furrows in it; ſo did God deal with Christ, and that in order to the taking away of sin. I will remove the iniquity of that Land in one day, viz. the Day of Christ's suffering. By that Offering of himself, he shall perfectly satisfie me. Therefore it is called the will of God, in order to the taking away sin, Heb. 10. 9, 10. compared with v. 11, 12. I come to do thy will, by which will we are sanctified; which will was to take away sin. For v. 11. that was the end of his Sacrifice, the Legal Sacrifices not being able to do it. God did not only consent to it, or give a bare grant, but it was a propense and affectionate motion of his heart, Isa. 53. 10. It pleased the Lord to bruise him. Hence did the Angels sing at his Birth, Glory to God in the highest, peace on Earth, and good will towards men. The peace he was to procure was the fruit of God's good will towards us.

[2.] Voluntarity undertaken by Christ, Heb. 10. 5, 7. Lo I come, I delight to do thy will, O my God. Willingness in the entrance of the work; willingness to take a body, and willingness to lay down that body. He had as it were a Fever of Affection, a combustion in his bowels till it was finished. In his greatest Agonies he did not repent of his undertaking, or desire to give it over: He cryed indeed to his Father, that this Cup might pass from him, but he presently submits: If there be no other way to save sinners, I will pass on through Death and Hell to do it. When he was afflicted and oppressed, he murmured not at it, Isa. 53. 7. He opened not his mouth, he opened not his mouth; it is twice repeated, to shew his willingness. And God was highly pleased with him for this very reason, because he did pour out his Soul, and bore the sins of many, and made intercession for the transgressors. All which expressions denote his earnestness and readiness in it.

(2.) By his Resurrection. His Death is the payment, his Resurrection the discharge, Rom. 4. ult. Who was delivered for our offences, and rose again for our Justification. Not that we are formally justified by the Resurrection of Christ, but that thereby God declar'd, that whosoever believes in him should be justified upon that believing. For if Christ had not risen, there had been no certainty of the payment of the debt. In his Death he pays the Sum, as he is our Surety; and in his Resurrection he hath his Quietus est out of God's Exchequer. God will not have this payment from Christ, which he hath acknowledged himself publickly to be satisfied with, and from Believers too. For upon his Resurrection he sent him to bless men, Acts 3. ult. God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you. How? In turning away every one of you from his iniquity: It being a great encouragement to turn men from sin, when God had thus declar'd them pardonable by the Resurrection of his Son.

2. On our parts by Faith. Faith is as necessary in an instrumental way, as Christ in a meritorious way, Acts 26. 18. That they may receive forgiveness of sins by Faith that is in me. Christ purchaseth a pardon, but Faith only puts us into possession of a pardon; yet it cannot from its own worth challenge forgiveness at the hands of God, but upon the account of Christ, who hath merited forgiveness. Though the King grants a pardon to a condemned Malefactor, yet he may be executed unless he pleads it the next Assizes, though he hath it lying by him: So, unless we sue it out, and accept of it by Faith, all Christ's purchase will not advantage us. Faith looks not barely upon the sufferings of Christ, but upon his end and design in it: It looks not upon his Passion as a story, but as a Testament; and you seldom find the Death of Christ mentioned in the New Testament without expressing the end of it. This forgiveness by Christ's Death as the meritorious cause, shews

(1.) God's willingness to pardon. If God did delight in the Death of Christ, it was not surely simply in his Death; for, could a Father delight to tear out the bowels of his Son? The afflictions of his People go to his heart, much more would the sufferings of his darling. God had more delight in forgiveness, than grief at his Sons sufferings; for he never repented of it, though our Saviour besought him with tears. And that God who were never deaf to any that called upon him, nor ever will be, would not hear his only Son in the request, to take the Cup from him, or abate any thing of the weight of his sufferings, because it was necessary for the pardon of sin, necessitate decreti, if not naturæ. God repented of making the World, but never of forgiving sin: So that the pardon of sin is more pleasing to him, than the sufferings of his Son were grievous; otherwise whatsoever the Father would have done by Instruments, yet surely he himself would not have been the Executioner of him. But in this affair there were not only Instruments, Judas to betray him, the Jews to accuse him, the Disciples to forsake him, Pilate to condemn him, the Souldiers to mock and crucifie him, and Thieves to revile him, but God himself, Isa. 53. 10. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: Thou shalt make his Soul an Offering for sin. His own Father that lov'd him, (as Abraham in the Type) puts as it were the knife to the throat of his only Son; which surely God would not have done, had not pardon of sin been infinitely pleasing to him. And how great a pleasure must that be, that swallowed up all grief at his Sons sufferings? Yea, he seemed to love our Salvation more than he loved the life of his Son; since the end is always more amiable than the means, and the means only lovely as they respect the end.

thy pardon. God will not deny what his Son hath earned so dearly; and what he earn'd was for us, and not for himself. Did God pardon many before Christ died, and will he not pardon believing Souls since Christ died? Some were certainly saved before the coming of Christ: Upon what account? Not for their own righteousnes; that is but a Ragg, and could not merit infinite grace. Not by the law; that thundered nothing but death, and condemned millions; but never breathed a pardon to one person. Or was it by their vehement supplications? Those could not make an infinite righteousnes mutable: Justice must be preferred before the cries of Malefactors; and if those could have done it, God would not have been at the expence of his Sons Blood. Therefore it must be upon this account, Rom. 3. 25. For the remission of sins that are past. Did God pardon upon trust, and will he not much more upon payment? Did he forgive when there was only a promise of payment, and some thousands of years to run out before it was to be made? and will he not much more forgive, since he hath all the debt paid into his hands? Would God remit sin when Christ had nothing under his hand to shew for it? and now that he hath a publick testimony, and acquittance, will he not much more do it? Seeing his purging our sins, or expiating them by his death, was the ground of his exaltation to the honour of sitting at the right hand of God in our natures, Heb. 1. 3. When he had by himself purged our sins, sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high; it is a certain evidence of the grant of pardon upon the account of this Sacrifice to those that seek it in Gods Methods, since God hath shewen himself so pleased with it: For it is clear, that because Christ loved righteousnes and hated iniquity, i. e. kept up the honour of Gods justice and holiness by the offering himself to death, that God hath given him a portion above all his fellows.

(3.) The extent of it. Both to original and actual sin, John 1.29. Behold the Lamb of God, that takes away the sin of the world. Sin of the World, the sin of humane nature, that first sin of Adam. Of this mind is Austin, and others, that original sin is not imputed to any to condemnation since the death of Christ. But howsoever this be, it is certain it is taken away from Believers, as to its imputation. Christ was made sin for us, 2 Cor. 5.21. to bear all sin. It had been an imperfect payment to have paid the Interest, and let the Principal remain; or to have paid the Principal, and let the Interest remain. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, Rom. 8. 1. and therefore no damning matter or guilt left in arrear. It had been folly else for the Apostle to have published a defying challenge to the whole Creation to have brought an Indictment against a justified person, (Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect?) if the least crime remained unremitted for the justice of God, the severity of the Law, the acuteness of Conscience, or the malice of the Devil to draw up into a charge. Since the end of his coming was to destroy the works of the Devil, whereby he had acquired a power over man, he leaves not therefore any one sin of a Believer unsatisfied for, which may continue, and establish the Devils right over him. If the redemption only of the Jews with the exclusion of the Gentiles in the first compact seemed to displease him, to shed his blood for small Sins only would have been as little to his content. It had been too low a work for so great a Saviour to have undergone those unknown sufferings for debts of a smaller value, and to shed that inestimable Blood for the payment of Farthings and leave talents unsatisfied. Certainly, God sent not his Son, but with an intention his Blood should be improved to the highest uses for those that perform the covenant conditions; and that Father who would have us honour his Son as we honour himself, will surely honour his Sons satisfaction in the extensive effects of it, as he would honour his own mercy, since they are both so straitly linkt together. And it is as much for the glory of Christs satisfaction, as for the honour of his fathers mercy, to pass by the greatest transgressions.

(4.) The continuance of it. Thou art pardoned, and yet thou sinnest; but Christ hath paid and never runs more upon the score. Thou art pardoned and dost daily forfeit, and needest a daily renewal; but Christ hath purchased, and never sins away his purchase. God exacted a price suitable to the debt he foresaw men would owe him, for he knew how much the Sum would amount unto. When he gave Christ, he intended him for the justification of many offences, Rom. 5. 16. The free gift is of many offences unto justification, speaking of the gift of God, v. 15. And therefore since God cannot be mistaken in the greatness of the Sum, because of his infinite knowledge, it had been a greater act of wisdom not to provide any remedy at all, than not to do it thoroughly. If the continuance of that imperfect remission of Adam and the Patriarchs was drawn out for above 3000 years and more, and the enjoyment of happiness made good to them meerly upon Christs undertaking, surely it will be much more upon his actual performing, Rom. 3. 25. There was then a πάρεσις, now an ἄφεσις, they had a continuance of freedom from punishment by his mediatorship, and sponsion, much more shall Believers have a continuance of pardon by his actual Sacrifice, upon which the validity of all the former mediatory acts did depend: Since now there is no more remembrance of Sin by the continuance of legal sacrifices, his being so absolutely compleat. Therefore God hath erected a standing Office of Advocacy for Christ, 1 Joh. 2. 1. in Heaven, for the representing of his wounds and satisfaction, and bespeaking a continuance of grace to us. He is said to be the lamb that taketh away the ſins of the world, John 1. 29. not ὁ αἴρας hath taken, or ὁ ἄρων will take, but ὁ αἴρων which notes, actum perpetuum, the conſtant effect of his death. And ſince as I ſaid before, Chriſt hath an higher portion than others, becauſe he loved righteouſneſs, in this portion he hath a joy and gladneſs; but his joy would certainly be ſullied, if pardon ſhould not be continued to thoſe for whom he purchaſed it.

(5.) The worth of it. That muſt be of incomparable value that was purchaſed at ſo great a price, as the Blood of God, Acts 20. 28 (So it is called by reaſon of the union of the divine nature with the humane, conſtituting one perſon.) 'Tis Blood, which all the Gold and Silver, and the Stones and Duſt of the Earth turned into Pearls, could not equal. God underſtood the worth of it, who in juſtice would require no more of his Son at leaſt than the thing was worth, not a drop of Blood more than the value of it. Neither ſurely would Chriſt, who could not be miſtaken in the juſt price, have parted with more than was neceſſary for the purchaſe of it. It would have beggar'd the whole Creation to have paid a price for it. The Prayers and Services of a gracious Soul, though God delights in them, could not be a ſufficient recompence. And the bare mercy of God, without the concurrence of his provokt juſtice, could not grant it, though his Bowels naturally are troubled at the afflictions of his Creatures.

IV. Extenſiveneſs, fulneſs, or perfectneſs of pardon. 1. In the Act; forgiving, covering, not imputing. 2. In the Object; iniquities, tranſgreſſions, and ſins.

1. Perfect in reſpect of ſtate. God retains no hatred againſt a pardoned perſon. He never imputes ſin formally, becauſe he no more remembers it, though virtually he may, to aggravate the offence a Believer hath fallen into after his juſtification. So Job poſſeſſed the ſins of his youth. And Chriſt tacitly put Peter in remembrance of his denial of him. The grant is compleat here, though all the fruits of remiſſion are not enjoyed till the day of judgment, and therefore in Scripture, ſin is ſaid then to be forgiven. 'Tis a queſtion whether Believers ſins will be mentioned at the day of judgment. Some think they will, becauſe all men are to give an account. Methinks there is ſome evidence to the contrary. Our Saviour never mentioned the unworthy carriage of his Diſciples to him in his ſufferings, and after his reſurrection ſeems to have removed from him all remembrance of it. 'Tis not to be expected, that a loving Husband will lay open the faults of his tender Spouſe upon the day of the publick ſolemnization of the nuptials. But if it be otherwiſe, 'tis not to upbraid them, but to enhance their admirations of his grace. He will diſcover their graces as well as their ſin, and unſtop the Bottles of their tears, as well as open the Book of their tranſgreſſions. Our Saviour upon Maries anointing him, applauds her affection, but mentions not her former iniquity.

It muſt needs be perfect.

[1.] All Gods Actions are ſuitable to his Nature. What God doth, he doth as a God. And is he perfect in his other works, and not in his Mercy, which is the choiceſt flower in his Crown? God ſees blacker circumſtances in our ſins, than an inraged Conſcience, or a malicious Devil can repreſent: But God pardons not according to our apprehenſions, which though great in a tempeſtuous Conſcience, yet are not ſo high as Gods knowledge of it.

[2.] The Cauſe of pardon is perfect. Both the mercy of God, and the merits of Chriſt are immutably perfect. 'Tis for his own glory, his own mercies ſake, that he pardons. He will not dimm the luſtre of his own Crown, by leaving the effect of his glory imperfect, or ſatisfying the importunities of his mercy by halves. The Saints in Heaven have not a more perfect righteouſneſs, whereby they continue their ſtanding, than thoſe on Earth have; for, though inherent righteouſneſs here is ſtain'd, yet imputed, upon which pardon is founded, is altogether ſpotleſs. A righteouſneſs that being infinite in reſpect of the perſon, hath a ſufficiency for Devils, had it a congruity; but it hath both for us, becauſe manifeſted in our natures.

(2.) In reſpect of the Objects. Sinful nature, ſinful habits, ſinful diſpoſitions, pardon'd at once, though never ſo heinous;

[1.] For quality. There was no limitation as to the deepneſs of the wounds cauſed by the Fiery Serpents in the Wilderneſs; the precept of looking upon them, extended to the cure of all, let the ſting reach never ſo deep, the wound be never ſo wide, or ſharp, and his ſight be never ſo weak, if he could but caſt his Eye upon the Brazen one. The Commiſſion Chriſt gave to his diſciples, was to preach the Goſpel to every Creature, Mark 16. 15. every Humane Creature; the worſt as well as the beſt; though you meet meet with monſtrous ſinners in the likeneſs of Beaſts, and Devils, except none from ſuing out a pardon in the court of mercy. The Almightineſs of his mercy doth as much tranſcend our higheſt iniquities, as it doth our ſhalloweſt apprehenſions. Our ſins, as well as our ſubſtance, are but as the Duſt of the Ballance, as eaſily to be blown away by his grace, as the other puft into nothing by his power. No ſin is excepted in the Goſpel, but that againſt the holy Ghoſt, becauſe it doth not ſtand with the honour of God to pardon them who wilfully ſcorn the means, and account the Redeemer no better than an Impoſtor. No man can expect in reaſon he ſhould be ſaved by mercy, who by a wilful malice againſt the Son of God, tramples upon the free offers of grace, and provokes mercy it ſelf to put on the deportment of juſtice, and call in revenging wrath to its aſſiſtance, for the vindication of its deſpiſed honour. The infinite grace of God diſſolves the greateſt miſts, as well as the ſmalleſt exhalations, and melts the thick clouds of ſin as well as the little icicles.

[2.] The Quantity. Hath God ever put a reſtraint upon his grace, and promiſe, that we ſhall find mercy if we ſin but to ſuch a number, and no more? 'Tis not agreeable to the greatneſs and majeſty of Gods mercy, to remit one part of the debt, and to exact the other. It conſiſts not with the motive of pardon, which is his own love, to be both a friend and an enemy at the ſame time, in pardoning ſome, and charging others; and thus his grace would rather be a mockery, and deriſion of men. Neither doth it conſiſt with the end of pardon, which is Salvation; for to give an half pardon is to give no Salvation; ſince if the leaſt guilt remains unremitted, it gives juſtice an unanſwerable plea againſt us. What profit would it be to have ſome forgiven, and be damned for the remainder? Had any one ſin for which Chriſt was to have made a compenſation, remain'd unſatisfied, the Redeemer could not have riſen; ſo if the ſmalleſt ſin remains unblotted, it will hinder our riſing from the power of eternal death, and make the pardon of all the reſt as a nullity in Law. But it is the glory of God to paſs by all, Prov. 19. 31. It is his glory to paſs over a tranſgreſſion. 'Tis the glory of a man to paſs by an offence. 'Tis a diſcovery of an inward principle or property, which is an honour for a man to be known the maſter of. If it be his glory to paſs by a ſingle and ſmall injury, then to paſs by the more heinous, and numerous offences is a more tranſcendent honour, becauſe it evidenceth this property to be in him, in a more triumphant ſtrength, and power. So that it is a clearer evidence of the illuſtrious vigor of mercy in God, to paſs by mountainous, and heaped up tranſgreſſions than to forgive only ſome few iniquities of a leſſer guilt, Jer. 33. 8. I will cleanſe them from all their iniquities whereby they have ſinned againſt me, and I will pardon all their iniquities whereby they have ſinned againſt me, and whereby they have tranſgreſt againſt me. Therefore when God tells the Jews, that he would give them a general diſcharge in the fulleſt terms imaginable, to remove all jealouſie from men, either becauſe of the number, or the aggravations of their ſins, he knew not how to leave expreſſing the delight he had in it, and the honour which accrued to him by it, It ſhall be to me a name of joy, a praiſe and honour before all the nations of the earth. He would get himſelf an honourable name by the large riches of his Clemency. Mercy is as infinite as any other attribute, as infinite as God himſelf: And as his power can create incomprehenſible multitudes of worlds, and his juſtice kindle unconceiveable Hells; ſo can his mercy remit innumerable ſins.

3. Perfect in reſpect of Duration. Becauſe the hand writing of ordinances is taken away, Col. 2. 14, 15. Blotting out the hand writing of ordinances that was againſt us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his Croſs; which was the Ceremonial Law, wherein they did by their continual preſenting Sacrifices, and impoſition of Hands upon them, ſign a Bill, or Bond againſt themſelves, whereby a conſcience of ſin was retain'd, Heb. 10. 2, 3. and a remembrance of ſin renewed, they could not ſettle the Conſcience in any firm peace, Heb. 9. 9. they were compelled to do that every day, whereby they did confeſs that ſin did remain, and want an expiation. Hence is the Law called a miniſtration of condemnation, 2 Cor. 3. 9. becauſe it puts them in mind of condemnation, and compelled the people to do that which teſtified, that the curſe was yet to be abolliſhed by virtue of a better Sacrifice. This Hand writing which was ſo contrary to us, was taken away, nailed to his Croſs, torn in pieces, wholly cancelled, no more to be put in ſuit: Whence in oppoſition to this continual remembrance of ſin under the legal adminiſtration, we read under the New Teſtament, of Gods remembring ſin no more, Heb. 10. 3, 17. Chriſt hath ſo compounded the buſineſs with Divine Juſtice, that we have the ſins remitted, never returning upon us, and the renewal alſo of remiſſions upon daily ſins, if we truly repent. For though there be a blacker Tincture in ſins after converſion, as being more deeply ſtain'd with ingratitude, yet the Covenant of God ſtands firm, and he will not take away his kindneſs, Iſa. 54. 9, 10. And there there is a greater affection in God to his Children, than to his Enemies; for theſe he loves before their Converſion with a love of benevolence, but thoſe with a love of complacency. Will not God be as ready to continue his grace to thoſe that are penitent, as to offer it to offending Rebels? Will he refuſe it to his Friends, when he intreats his Enemies? Not that any ſhould think, that becauſe of this duration, they have liberty to ſin, and upon ſome trivial Repentance, are reſtored to God's favour. No, where Chriſt is made Righteouſneſs, he is made Sanctification. His Spirit and Merit go together. A new Nature, and a New State, are Concomitants; and he that ſins upon preſumption of the grand Sacrifice, never had any ſhare in it.

V. The Effect of Pardon. That is Bleſſedneſs.

(1.) The greateſt evil is taken away, ſin, and the dreadful conſequents of it. Other evils are temporal, but thoſe know no period in a doleful Eternity. There is more evil in ſin, than good in all the creatures. Sin ſtript the fallen Angels of their Excellency, and diſpoſſeſſed them of the Seat of Bleſſedneſs. It fights againſt God, it diſparages all his Attributes, it deforms and deſtroys the creature, Rom. 7. 13. Other evils may have ſome mixture of good to make them tolerable, but ſin being exceeding ſinful, without the mixture of any good, engenders nothing but deſtruction, and endleſs damnation. Into what miſeries, afflictions, ſorrows, hath that one ſin of Adam hurl'd all his poſterity? what ſcreechings, wounds, pangs, horrours, doth it make in troubled Conſciences? How did it deface the Beauty of the Son of God, that created and upheld the World, with ſorrow in his Agonies, and the ſtroak of Death on the Croſs? How many thouſands, millions of poor creatures have been damned for ſin, and are never like to ceaſe roaring under an inevitable Juſtice? Ask the damned, and their groans, yellings, howlings, will read thee a dreadful Lecture of ſins ſinfulneſs, and the puniſhment of it. And is it not then an ineſtimable bleſſedneſs to be delivered from that, which hath wrought ſuch deplorable Executions in the World?

2. The greateſt Bleſſings are conferred. Pardon is God's Family-Bleſſing, and the peculiar mercy of his choiceſt darlings: He hands out other things to wicked men, but he deals out this only to his Children.

[1.] The Favour of God. Sin makes thee Satan's Drudge, but pardon makes thee God's Favourite. We may be ſick to death, with Lazarus, and be God's Friends; ſold to ſlavery, with Joſeph, and yet be dear to him; thrown into a Lions Den, with Daniel, and be greatly beloved; poor, with Lazarus, who had only Doggs for Chirurgions to dreſs his Sores, and yet have a Title to Abraham's boſom. But we can never be beloved, if we are unpardoned; no ſhare in his friendſhip, his love, his inheritance, without a pardon. All created evils cannot make us loathſom in a juſtified State; nor all created goods make us lovely under guilt. Sin is the only Object of God's hatred; while this remains, his Holineſs cannot but hate us; when this is removed, his righteouſneſs cannot but love us; remiſſion and favour are inſeparable, and can never be diſ-joyned. 'Tis by this he makes us as a Diadem upon his Head, a Bracelet on his Arm; it is by this he writes us upon the Palms of his Hands, makes us his peculiar Treaſure, even as the Apple of his Eye, which Nature hath ſo carefully fenced.

[2.] Acceſs to God. A Prince may diſcard a Favourite for ſome guilt, and though he may reſtore him to his liberty in the Common-wealth, yet he may not admit him to the favour of his wonted privacies. But a pardoned man hath an acceſs to God, to a ſtanding and perpetually ſettled Grace, Rom. 5. 1, 2. Being juſtified by Faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom alſo we have acceſs. Guilt frights us, and makes us loath the very ſight of God: Pardon encourageth us to come near to him: Guilt reſpects him as a Judge, Pardon as a Friend. Who can confidently, or hopefully call upon an angry and condemning God? But who cannot but hopefully call upon a forgiving God? Sin is the partition wall between God and us, and Pardon is the demoliſhing of it. Forgiveneſs is never beſtowed, but the Scepter is held out to invite us to come into God's preſence. And what can be more deſirable than to have not only the favour of, but a free acceſs at any time to the Lord of Heaven and Earth, and at length an everlaſting being with him?

[3.] Peace of Conſcience. There muſt needs be fair Weather when Heaven ſmiles upon us. All other things breed diſquietneſs. Sin was a Thorn in David's Crown; his Throne and Scepter were but miſerable comforters, while his guilt overwhelmed him. The glory of the World is no ſoveraign Plaiſter for a wounded Spirit: Other enjoyments may pleaſe the ſenſe, but this only can gratifie the Soul. God's Thunder made Moſes tremble, tremble, Heb. 12. 21. But the probability of a gracious Pardon would make a damned Soul ſmile in the midſt of tormenting flames. How often hath the ſenſe of it raiſed the hearts of Martyrs, and made the Sufferers ſing, while the Spectators wept? Though this, I muſt confeſs, is not always an inſeparable concomitant. There is much difference between a Pardon, and the comfort of it; that may paſs the Seal of the King, without the knowledge of the Malefactor. Pardon indeed always gives the jus ad rem, a right to peace of Conſcience, but not always jus in re, the poſſeſſion of it. There may be an actual ſeparation between Pardon, and actual Peace, but not between Pardon, and the ground of Peace.

[4.] It ſweetens all mercies. Other mercies are a ring, but pardon is the Diamond in it. A juſtified perſon may ſay, I have temporal mercies and a pardon too, I live in repute in the world and Gods favour too; riches increaſe, and my peace with God doth not diminiſh. I have health with a pardon, friends with a pardon, as Job ch. 29. 3, 6, 7. among all other bleſſings this he counts the chiefeſt, that Gods Candle ſhin'd upon his head. A Priſoner for ſome capital crime, may have all outward accommodations, for lodging, dyet, attendance, without a real happineſs, when he expects to be called to his tryal before a ſevere judge, from whom there is no appeal, and that will certainly both paſs, and cauſe to be executed a ſentence of death upon him. So though a man wallows in all outward contents, he cannot write himſelf bleſſed, while the wrath of God hangs over his head, and he knows not how ſoon he may be ſummon'd before Gods tribunal, and hear that terrible voice, Go thou curſed. What comfort can a man take in Houſes, Land, Health, when he conſiders he owes more than all his eſtate is worth? So, what comfort can a man have in any thing in this world, when he may hourly expect an arreſt from God, and a demand of all his debts, and he hath not ſo much as one farthing of his own or any intereſt in a ſufficient ſurety? We may have honour and a curſe, wealth and a curſe, Children and a curſe, health and long life and a curſe, learning and a curſe, but we can never have pardon and a curſe. Our outward things may be gifts, but not bleſſings without a pardon.

[5.] It ſweetens all afflictions. A frown with a pardon is better than a thouſand ſmiles without it. Sin is the ſting of croſſes, and Remiſſion is a taking the ſting out of them. A ſight of Heaven will mitigate a croſs on earth. The ſtones about Stephens ears did ſcarce afflict him, when he ſaw his Saviour open Heaven to entertain him. To ſee death ſtaring us in the face, and an angry and offended God above, ready to charge all our guilt, is a doleful ſpectacle. Look upon my affliction and my pain, and forgive all my ſins, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 25. 18. Sin doth embitter and adds weight to an affliction, but the removal of ſin doth both lighten it and ſweeten it.

USE.

1. An unpardoned man is a miſerable man. Such a ſtate lays you open to all the miſeries on earth, and all the torments in Hell. The pooreſt begger with a pardon is higher than the greateſt prince without it. How can we enjoy a quiet hour, if our debt be not remitted, ſince we owe more than we are able to pay? You may dye with a forfeited reputation, and yet be happy; but what happineſs, if you die with unpardoned guilt?

(1.) There muſt either be pardon or puniſhment. The law doth oblige either to obedience or ſuffering: the Commands of it muſt be obſerved, or the penalty indured. God will not relax the puniſhment without a valuable conſideration. If it be not executed, the creature may accuſe God of want of wiſdom in enacting it, or defect of power in maintaining it. Therefore there muſt be an exact obſervance of the law, which no creature after the firſt deviation is able to do; or an undergoing the penalty of it, which no Sinner is able to bear. There muſt therefore be a remiſſion of this puniſhment for the good of the creature, and the Satisfaction of the law by a ſurety, for the honour of Gods juſtice. If we have not therefore an intereſt in the ſurety, the purchaſer of remiſſion, we muſt lye under the ſeverity of the law in our perſons.

(2.) You can call nothing an act of Gods Love towards you, while you remain unpardoned. What is there you do enjoy, which may not conſiſt with his hatred, as well as his Love? Have we knowledge? So have Devils. Have we riches? So had Nabal and Cain. Have we honour? So had Pharaoh and Herod. Have we Sermons? So had Judas, the beſt that ever were preacht. Nothing, nothing but a pardon is properly a bleſſing. How can that man take pleaſure in any thing he hath, when all the threatnings in the book of God are as ſo many arrows directed againſt him?

(3.) All the time thou liveſt unpardoned thy debts mount the higher. Every new ſin is an adding a figure to the former ſum, and every figure after the three firſt adds a thouſand. Every act of ſin adds not only the guilt proper to that ſingle act upon it, but draws a new univerſal guilt from all the reſt committed before, becauſe the perſiſting in any one ſin is a renewed approbation of all the former acts of rebellion committed againſt God.

(4.) 'Tis that God who would have pardon'd thee if thou wouldſt have accepted of it, who will condemn if thou doſt utterly refuſe it. 'Tis that God thou haſt provoked, offended, and diſhonoured. That power which would have been manifeſted in forgiving thee, will be glorified in condemning thee. That Juſtice which would have ſigned thy abſolution if thou hadſt accepted of its terms, will ſign the writ of execution upon thy refuſal of them. Nay the mercy that would have ſav'd thee, will have no compaſſion on thee. The Law condemns thee, becauſe thou haſt tranſgreſſed it, and mercy will reject thee, becauſe thou haſt deſpiſed it. The Goſpel, wherein pardon was proclaimed, will acquit others, but condemn thee. God would be falſe to his own word, if after thy ſlighting ſo many promiſes of grace and threatnings of wrath, thou ſhouldeſt be ſpar'd.

2. Uſe. Of comfort.

Pardon of ſin may make thee hope for all other bleſſings. Hath God done the hardeſt, and will he ſtick at the eaſieſt? Hath he overthrown mountains, and ſhall molehills ſtop him? 'Tis an eaſier thing to waft thee to Heaven, than it was at firſt to remit thy guilt, Rom. 5. 10. For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we ſhall be ſaved by his life. To this the death and reſurrection of the Son of God was neceſſary, and there was to be compoſition and agreement made between mercy and juſtice: But ſince this is compleated, the Redeemer ſaves thee by his life; ſince he hath dyed for thy remiſſion, there is no need of his dying for thy further Salvation. Seeing he hath made manifeſtation of his pardoning grace unto thee, he will not ceaſe till he hath brought thee into a perfect ſtate. For to what purpoſe ſhould the Creditor forgive the ſmaller part of the debt, and caſt the debtor into priſon for an unpayable ſum?

(1.) If once pardoned, thou will be always pardoned. For the firſt pardon Chriſt paid his blood, for the continuance he doth but plead his blood, and we cannot be without a pardon till Chriſt be without a plea. He merited the continuance as well as the firſt remiſſion. Will our Saviour be more backward to intercede for pardon, than he was to bleed and pray for it on earth? Would not our deareſt Saviour let ſin go unremitted when he was to conteſt with the Fathers wrath, and will he let it go unpardoned when he is only to ſolicite his Fathers mercy? Thou ſhalt not want the daily renewals of it, ſince he is only to preſent his blood in the moſt holy place, ſeeing an ignominious and painful death did not ſcare him from the purchaſe of it upon the Croſs. As Gods heart is more ready to give than we are to ask forgiveneſs, ſo is Chriſts heart more ready to plead for the continuance of it, than we are daily to begg it; for he Loves his people more than they can Love him, or Love themſelves. Our praying is according to ſelf Love, but Chriſts interceſſion is according to his own infinite Love with a more intenſe fervency.

(2) Thou art above the reach of all accuſations. Shall the law condemn thee? No. Thou art not under the Law, but under grace. And if grace hath forgiven thee, the law cannot ſentence thee. Shall conſcience? No. Conſcience is but the Eccho of the law within us; That muſt ſpeak what God ſpeaks. Gods Spirit and a believers Spirit are joint witneſſes, Rom. 8. 16. For the Spirit it ſelf bears witneſs with our Spirits that we are the Children of God. Conſcience is ſprinkled by the blood of Chriſt, which quite changeth the tenour of its Commiſſion. Will God condemn thee? No. That were to loſe the glory of all his pardoning mercy hitherto conferred upon thee; that were to fling away the vaſt revenue grace hath all this while been gathering for him: yea it were to deny his own covenant and promiſe. Shall Chriſt condemn thee? No. That were to diſtard all his offices, to undo his death, and bely his merits; did he ſweat and bleed, pray and dye for thee, and will he now condemn thee? Hath he been pleading for thee in Heaven all this time, and will he now at the upſhot caſt thee off? Shall we imagine the ſeverity of a Judg more pleaſing to him than the charity of an Advocate, ſince his primary intention in coming was to ſave the world, not to condemn it? No. It would not be for his honour to pay the price, and to loſe the purchaſe.

(3.) Ther

(3.) There will be a ſolemn juſtification of thee at the laſt day. Thou art here pardoned in Law, and then thou ſhalt be juſtified by a final Sentence; there is a ſecret grant here, but a publick manifeſtation of it hereafter. Thy Pardon was paſt by the Spirit of God in thy own Conſcience, it will then be paſt by the Son of God in thy own hearing. That Saviour that did merit it upon his Croſs, will pronounce it upon his Throne: The Book ſhall be laid out of ſight, there ſhall be no more writing in the Book of God's Omniſcience to charge thee, or of thy Conſcience to affright thee: His fatherly anger ſhall for ever ceaſe; and as all diſpoſition to ſin, ſo all paternal correction for it ſhall be for ever aboliſht, and forgiveneſs be fully compleat in all the glorious effects of it.

(4.) Faith doth intereſt us in all this, though it be weak. The grant of a Pardon doth not depend upon the ſtrength of Faith, though the ſenſe of a Pardon doth. A weak Faith, as a Palſy perſon, may not ſo well read a Pardon, though it may receive it. As a ſtrong Faith gives more glory to God, ſo it receives more comfort from him. Chriſt made no difference in his Prayer, John 17. between the feebleſt and ſtouteſt Believer. His Lambs as well as Sheep were to be fed by his Apoſtle with Goſpel-comforts; and even thoſe Lambs, Iſa. 40. 11. he himſelf carrys in his boſom. Strong Faith doth not intitle us to it, becauſe it is ſtrong; or a feeble Faith debar us from it, becauſe it is weak; but it is for the ſake of a mighty Saviour that we are pardoned. 'Tis the ſame Chriſt that juſtifies thee, as well as Abraham the Father of the faithful. 'Tis the ſame Righteouſneſs whereby thou art juſtified as well as Paul, and the moſt beloved Diſciple.

3 Uſe Of Examination.

Conſider whether your ſins are pardoned. Will you examine whether your Eſtates are ſure, and will you not examine whether your Souls are ſure?

Here I ſhall 1. Remove falſe ſigns, whereon men reſt and think themſelves pardoned.

(1.) The littleneſs of ſin is no ground of pardon. Oh may ſome ſay, my ſins are little, ſome tricks of youth, ſome petty oaths or the like. The Scripture ſaith that Drunkards, Fornicators, Extortioners and Covetous, ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; not Great Drunkards only, but thoſe that are drunk but now and then, as well as thoſe that are Drunkards every day.

[1.] Doſt thou know the malignity of the leaſt ſin? No ſin can be called abſolutely, (though it may comparatively) little. Is it a little God who is offended by ſin? Is it a little wrath which is poured down on ſin? Is it a little Chriſt that hath dyed for ſin? Is it a little Soul that is deſtroyed by ſin? and is it a little Hell that is prepared for ſin? Is not the leaſt ſin Deicidium, as much as in a man lieth, a deſtroying of God? Did not Chriſt ſhed his blood for the leaſt as well as for the greateſt? Is not Hell kindled by the breath of the Lord for the leaſt as well as the greateſt ſins? Is that little which is Gods burden, Chriſts wound, the Spirits grief, the penitents ſorrow and the Devils Hell? Every drop of poiſon, is poiſon every drop of Hell is Hell, every part of ſin is ſin, and hath the deſtroying and condemning nature of ſin. Can Angels expiate the leaſt ſin, or can a thouſand worlds be a ſufficient recompence for the injury that is done to God by the leaſt ſin?

[2.] The leſs thy ſin, the leſs the excuſe for thy ſelf. 'Tis the aggravation of their injuſtice, that they ſold the Righteous for a pair of Shoes, Amos 2. 6. Doſt thou undervalue God ſo as to ſell a Righteous and Eternal God ſo cheap, for a little ſin? Is a little ſin dearer to thee, than the favour of the great God? Is a little ſin dearer to thee, than an Eternal Hell is grievous? To endanger thy Soul for a trifle, to loſe God for a bubble, is a confounding aggravation of it, as it was of Judas his ſin, that he would ſell his Saviour for a little Silver, for ſo ſmall a Sum. Sin is not little in reſpect of the formality of it, but in reſpect of the matter, in reſpect of the temptation; and this littleneſs is an aggravation of ſin.

[3] Doſt thou know how God hath puniſhed the leaſt ſin? A drop of ſin may bring a Deluge of Miſery. An Atom of ſin is ſtrong enough to overturn a World. It was but an Apple that poiſoned Adam, and his whole Poſterity. Leſs ſins are puniſht in Hell, than are pardoned here. God caſts off Saul for leſs ſins than he pardoned David for. How many Ships have been deſtroyed upon ſmall Sands as well as great Rocks?

(2.) Fewneſs of ſins is no argument of pardon. Conceive, if thou canſt, the amiableneſs and luſtre of the Angels, how far beyond the glory of the Sun it was; yet one ſin diveſted them of all their glory. It was but one ſin kindled Hell for the fallen Angels, Every ſin muſt receive a juſt recompence of reward. Heb. 2. 2. Shall one ſingle ſin intitle thee to Hell? what will millions of ſins then intitle thee to? One ſin is too much againſt God. Had thy iniquities been never ſo few, Chriſt muſt have died to anſwer the Pleas of his Fathers Juſtice againſt thee. [Every ſin is Rebellion againſt God as a Soveraign, undutifulneſs to God as a Father*.] Contempt of God as a Governour, and preferring the Devil before God; the Devil that would deſtroy and damn thee, before God that made thee, and preſerves thee; a preferring the Devil's temptations before God's promiſes.

* Burgis.

(3.) The commonneſs of ſin is no argument of pardon. Many Angels combin'd in the firſt Conſpiracy againſt God; but as they were Companions in ſin, ſo are they Companions in torments. The commonneſs of Sodoms ſin made the louder cry, and haſtened the ſeverer Judgment: Not one Inhabitant eſcaped, but only righteous Lot, and his Family: Common ſins will have common Plagues. It doth rather aggravate thy ſin, than plead for pardon, when thou wilt rather follow mens Example to offend God, than conform to God's Law to pleaſe him. Sin was common in the Old World, for all fleſh had corrupted their ways, Gen. 6. 12. and all were ſwept away by the deſtroying Deluge. To walk according to the courſe of the World, is ſo far from being a foundation of pardon, that it is made a Character of a Child of the Devil: To walk according to the courſe of the World, is to walk according to the pattern of the Devil, and to be in the number of the Children of Wrath, Eph. 2. 2. Wherein in times paſt you walked according to the courſe of this World, according to the Prince of the Power of the Air.

(4.) Forbearance of puniſhment is no argument of pardon, Eccleſ. 8. 11. Becauſe Sentence againſt an evil-work is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the Sons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil. Forbearance is made uſe of by men, to make them ſin more deſperately, more headily. Fully ſet; all checks ſilenced and ſtopt. Forbearance is no acquittance; it argues not God's forgiving the debt; the debt is due, though it be not preſently ſued for; and the longer the debt remains unpaid, the greater Sum will the Intereſt amount unto; becauſe, the longer God doth forbear puniſhment, the longer time thou haſt for Repentance; the account for that time will run high.

That God doth not puniſh, is an argument of his patience, not of his pardoning mercy. God laughs at Sinners: he ſees their day is coming, though they may be jocund aud confident of a pardon. God's forbearance may be in Juſtice; he may be brewing the Cup, and mixing that which thou art to drink. Priſoners may be reprieved one Aſſize, and executed the next: Reprieval of Execution is no allowance of the Crime, or change of the Sentence.

(5.) Proſperity is no ſign of pardon. Oh! I am not only born with, and forborn, but I have a great addition of outward contentments ſince my ſin.

That which you make an argument of pardon, may be an argument of condemnation. Aſaph was much troubled at the proſperity of the wicked; but at laſt ſaith, Pride compaſſeth them as a Chain, and violence covers them as a garment, Pſal. 73. 6. That kindneſs which ſhould have made them melt, made them preſume. That which ſhould broach thy Repentance, enflames thy Pride: Thy goods may increaſe thy ſins.

(6.) Forgetfulneſs of thy ſin and Commiſſion long ago, is no ſign of pardon, and therefore having no checks for them is no ſign of pardon. God doth not forget though thou doſt, no ſin ſlips from the memory of his knowledge though now he doth caſt many ſins away from the memory of his juſtice. In regard of Gods eternity the firſt ſins are accounted as committed this moment, for in that there is no ſucceſſion of time, and the ſins thou haſt committed twenty years ago, are as freſh as if thou hadſt acted them all ſince thy coming into the congregation. Joſephs brethren, Gen. 37. 24. laboured to wipe out the thoughts of their late cruelty by their eating and drinking, when the cries and tears of their brother were freſh in their memory, and might have dampt their jollity. His affliction troubled them not, his relation to them, his youth, and their Fathers Love to him could not make them relent; but twenty two years after, conſcience began to fly in their faces, when awakened by a powerful affliction, Gen. 42 21. Is not thy conſcience oftentimes a remembrancer to thee, of thy old forgotten ſins, and doth it not turn over the old records thou hadſt quite forgot?

7. Hopes of Gods mercy are no grounds of thy being pardoned. Gods mercy is not barely enough, for then Chriſt needed not have dyed for ſin. Nor Chriſts death enough, without the condition of that covenant whereby God will make over the intereſt and merits of his death to thee. Gods mercy muſt be conſidered, but in Gods own way. God is merciful, but his Mercy muſt not aboliſh his Truth. Doth not a Judges mercy conſiſt with condemning a male-a malefactor? God hath been merciful to thee, and thou would'ſt not accept of it; thou wouldſt not hear mercy ſpeak in a day of grace; why then ſhould not juſtice ſpeak in a day of vengeance? Thou would'ſt not hear a God of mercy when he cryed to thee, how then ſhould mercy hear thee when thou comeſt to begg?

2. Some falſe grounds, why thoſe that are pardoned, think themſelves not pardoned.

(1.) Great afflictions are not ſigns of an unpardoned ſtate. Moſes had ſinned by unbelief, Aaron by making a golden calf, God pardoned their ſin but took vegeance on their inventions, Pſal. 99. 8. Thou waſt a God that forgaveſt them, though thou tookeſt vengeance. Nathan in his meſſage to David brings at once both pardon and puniſhment. The ſin is removed, but the ſword muſt ſtill ſtick in the bowels of his family, 2 Sam. 12, 13, 14. The Lord hath put away thy ſin, thou ſhalt not dye. Howbeit becauſe by this deed, thou haſt given great occaſion to the enemies of the Lord to Blaſpheme, the child alſo that is born unto thee ſhall ſurely dye. God may afflict temporally when he reſolves not to puniſh eternally. What! becauſe he will not condemn thee as a Judg, will he not chaſtize thee as a Father? We may well bear a ſcourge in one hand when we have a pardon ſealed in the other. God pardons thy ſin, but there is need of affliction to ſubdue that ſtout ſtubborn heart of thine. Pſal. 89. 32, 33. God doth viſit with rods, when he is reſolved not utterly to take away his loving kindneſs from a people.

(2.) Terrors of Conſcience are no ſign of an unpardoned ſtate. We find a pardoned David having broken bones and a rackt Conſcience after Nathan had pronounced his pardon, when there was no remorſe before, Pſal. 51. He had the grant of a pardon, but the comfort of a pardon was wanting. God may ſcorch thy Soul, when he gives a pardon; not that juſtice is thereby Satisfied, but ſin more embittered to thee. By a pardon thou doſt relliſh his mercy, and by the torments thou mayeſt have in thy Soul, thou wilt underſtand his Juſtice. He ſhews thee what he freely gives, but he would have thee know what thou haſt fully deſerved; he gives thee pardon, but Gall and Wormwood with it, that thou mayeſt know what the purchaſe of it did coſt thy Saviour. The Phyſick which heals, cauſeth pain. That Phyſick which doth not make thee ſick, is not like to bring thee health. God pardons thee, that thou mayeſt be ſaved; he terrifies thee withal, that thou mayeſt not be induced by temptations to ſin.

(3.) Senſe of ſin is no argument of an unpardoned ſtate. A pardon may be granted, when the poor condemned man expects to be haled out to Execution. Mary ſtands weeping behind her Saviour, when Chriſt was declaring her pardon to Simon, That much was forgiven her, and afterwards Chriſt turns to her, and cheers her with the news of it. Luke 7. 44, 45, 46, 47. He pronounceth her pardon, v. 48. and the comfort of it, v. 50. Thy Faith hath ſaved thee, go in peace. The Heavens may drop, when now and then the Sun may ſteal a Beam thorow the Clouds. There may be a pardon, where there are not always the ſenſible effects of a pardon. We find, after the ſtilling of a Storm, the ragings and roulings of the Sea. A penitents wound may ake afreſh, when a Saviours blood drops in mercy.

(4.) The Remainders of ſin are not a ſign of an unpardoned ſtate. Though a Diſeaſe be maſtered by Phyſick, there may be ſome grudgings of it in a perſon. Though ſin be pardoned, yet the dregs of ſin will be remaining, and ſometimes ſtirring. Chriſt hath enliven'd us, not by wholly deſtroying, but pardoning ſin. Pardon takes away the guilt of ſin; grace takes away the power of ſin; but neither pardon, nor infuſion of grace, takes away the nature, and all motions of ſin; for in purging out an humour, ſome dregs ſtill remain behind, Col. 2. 13. And you hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all treſpaſſes.

3. What are the true ſigns of a pardoned man?

1. Sincerity in our walk. A Spirit without guile, is made the Character of a pardoned man in the Text: There may be failings in the life, yet no guile in the heart; ſuch a man is a pardoned man: A heart that hath no mixtures, no pretences or excuſes for ſin, no private reſerves from God: A heart, that as the needle in a Compaſs, ſtands right for the Intereſt & glory of God, & anſwers to the profeſſion, as an Eccho to the voice: A heart that would thruſt out any ſin that harboured there, would not have an Atom of any filth odious to the Eye of God lurk there. Where this ſincerity is, a willingneſs and readineſs to obey God, (which is the condition of the Covenant) the ſubſtance of the Covenant is kept, though ſome particular Articles of it may be broken. Grace, the pardoning grace of God, is with them that love Chriſt in ſincerity, Eph. 6. ult. Grace be with all them that love Chriſt Jeſus in ſincerity. Not a man excluded that is ſincere; though he hath not ſo ſparkling a flame as another, yet if he be ſincere, the Crown of pardoning grace, and that of conſummating grace ſhall be ſet upon his head.

(2.) Mourning

(2.) Mourning for ſin. A tender heart is a ſign of a pardoned ſtate, when ſin diſcontents thee becauſe it diſpleaſeth God. What ſhowers of tears did Mary Magdalen weep after a pardon? Love to God, like a gentle fire, ſets the Soul a melting. Tears that come from love are never without pardoning mercy. God's bowels do firſt ſtir our mournings. 'Tis impoſſible a gracious heart can read a pardon with dry Eyes; 'tis the leaſt it thinks it can do, as it were, like Mary Magdalen, to waſh Chriſt's feet with its tears, when it hath been waſhed its ſelf with Chriſt's blood. The Soul cannot enough hate that, which God hath been merciful in the pardon of. Forgiveneſs is like the warmth of the Spring, it draws out the Sap of the Tree, the tears of the Soul, which elſe would ſcarcely ſtir. If God hath given thee Repentance, it is ſure enough that he hath given thee a pardon, for if he did not mean to give thee that, he would never have given thee the other.

(3.) Fearfulneſs of ſin. Whoſoever knows the bitterneſs of ſin and the benefit of a pardon, can never confidently ruſh into it. A pardoned man will never go about to forfeit that which he hath newly received. Forgiveneſs from God doth produce fear in the creature, Pſal. 130. 4. But there is forgiveneſs with thee, that thou mayeſt be feared. 'Tis a ſign we have repented and got pardon, if we find after that exerciſe of repentance and prayer, our hatred of ſin encreaſeth, eſpecially of that ſin we were guilty of before.

(4.) Sanctification. God never pardons but he ſubdues ſin, Mich. 7. 19. He will ſubdue our iniquity and thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the Sea. Both are put together. In the Lords prayer, deſires to be rid of all evil, and not to be led into any temptation follow immediately upon the deſire of pardon. A juſtified Perſon and a Sanctified nature are inſeparable, Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt [there is pardon;] but how ſhall I know that I am pardoned? If you walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. We never ſincerely deſire pardon, but we deſire purging, and God never gives the one, but he beſtows the other. If thou haſt an intereſt in a pardoning Chriſt, thou wilt have the effects of a Sanctifying Spirit. Where Gods grace forgives all ſin, he will give us grace to forſake all ſin. 'Tis his covenant to turn away ungodlineſs, when he takes away the puniſhment of ſin; Rom. 11. 26, 27. the deliverer ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob. The applications of Gods grace to us are attended with the infuſions of Gods grace into us. When he puts his law into the heart, he remembers ſin no more, Jer. 31. 33, 34.

(5.) Forgiving others. In the Lords prayer we pray, forgive us our treſpaſſes as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. Our Saviour comments upon this petition, to ſhew that pardon cannot be without this condition, in Mat. 18. from v. 23. to the 35. Chriſt makes it at leaſt a cauſa ſine qua non of pardon, Luke 11. 4. and forgive us our ſins, for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us.

(6.) Affectionate Love to God and Chriſt. When we deſire to glorify him by his grace, as well as be glorified by it. 'Tis the injury done to God by our ſins which doth moſt affect that heart upon which the Spirit of God is poured, Zac. 12. 10. they ſhall mourn over him, or be in bitterneſs for him. The Soul is more concerned for Chriſt than for it ſelf. When there is too much of ſelf in our deſires for it, God delays the manifeſtation of it to the heart, that we may come up to purer ſtrains. Chriſt, certainly ſhed his blood for their remiſſion who are willing to ſhed theirs for his glory. Elſe Chriſt, whoſe glory it is to outſtrip the hotteſt affection of his creature, would be behind hand with him in love. That Soul that would ſpend its all upon Chriſt, he will not ſuffer to ſtand long ſobbing before him, Luk. 7. 47.

4 Uſe of Exhortation.

(1.) To thoſe who are careleſs of it. Oh! by all means ſeek it. Will it at laſt comfort thee, to think of thy mirth and pleaſures, how honourable, how rich, or how well ſtor'd with friends thou haſt been? What ſhould take up thy heart, buſy thy thoughts or employ thy endeavours, but this that concerns thy eternal ſtate? Wilt thou ſin away the time of Gods patience, and thine own happineſs? Is it not a time which God hath allotted thee, to get a pardon in? What would Cain, Judas, Pilot, Herod, and all the black regiment give for the very hopes of it? Oh prize that here, which thou wilt hereafter eſteem infinitely valuable, and call thy ſelf fool and madman a thouſand times, for neglecting the opportunity of getting. The anger of a King is as the roaring of a Lyon, what then are the frowns of an infinite juſt God? Why is thy ſtrength and affection ſpent about other things? Would a forlorn malefactor leading to execution liſten chearfully to any thing but the news of his princes clemency? Seek it

[1.] Earneſtly. Pardon is an ineſtimable bleſſing and muſt not be ſought with faint and tired affections.

[2.] Preſently. Is it not full time ſeriouſly to ſet about it? Thou haſt loſt too many days already already, and wilt thou be ſo ſenſeleſs as to let another ſlip? How knoweſt thou but if thou doſt refuſe it this day, thou may'ſt be uncapable of it to morrow? There is but a ſtep, a few minutes between thee and death, and delaies in great emergencies are dangerous.

[3.] Univerſally. Content not your ſelves with ſeeking a pardon for griſly, ſtaring ſins, which fright the conſcience with every look; but ſeek the pardon of your inward ſecret ſpiritual ſins; while you begg moſt for the pardon of thoſe, Sanctifying grace will come in as well as juſtifying; the more you pray againſt the guilt of them, the more you will hate the filth of them.

(2.) To thoſe that ſeek a pardon and yet are in doubt of it. Secure ſinners that underſtand not the evil of ſin, think it is an eaſy thing, and that forgiveneſs will be granted of courſe. But thoſe that groan under the burden of their iniquity, imagine it more difficult than indeed it is. Preſumption wrongs God in his juſtice, and every degree of deſpair or doubting, in his mercy.

[1.] God is willing to pardon. Ephraim doth but deſire that God would turn him, and God preſently cries out, Is Ephraim my dear Son? is he a pleaſant Child? Jer. 31. 18, 20. I have ſurely heard Ephraim bemoaning himſelf thus. A penitent Ephraim is inſtantly a pleaſant Child. Ephraim ſtrikes upon his thigh with confeſſion, and God ſpeaks to his heart with affection. God doth as it were take the words out of Ephraims mouth, as though he watched for the firſt look of Ephraim towards him, or the firſt breath of a Supplication. God is more willing to pardon ſin than we are to ſin; Becauſe we ſin with reluctancy, natural conſcience checking us, but God hath no check when he goes to pardon. He waits to be gracious, Iſa. 30. 18. Therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you, and therefore will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you. He hath waited all the time of your ſinning, to have an opportunity to ſhew grace to you; and now you give it him by repenting, will he loſe the fruit of his waiting? 'Tis the end of Chriſts exaltation, whether it be meant of his being lifted up on the croſs, or his exaltation in Heaven; 'tis true of both, that his end is to have mercy upon you.

[2.] God will pardon the greateſt ſins. His infinite compaſſion cannot exhauſt it ſelf by a frequent remiſſion. Mercy holds proportion to Juſtice; as his Juſtice puniſheth little ſins as well as great, ſo doth mercy paſs by great ſins as well as little. Your higheſt ſins are the ſins of men, but the mercy offered is the mercy of a God.

The debt you owe is a vaſt debt, but Chriſts Satisfaction is of a greater value; and a Kings revenue may well pay a beggers debts, though ſhe owe many thouſands, the firſt day of marriage. Multiplied ſins upon repentance ſhall meet with multiplied pardons, Iſay. 55. 7. הרב הסליח abundantly pardon. We cannot vie our ſins with Gods mercy. The grace of God and righteouſneſs of Chriſt which are neceſſary for the remiſſion of one ſin, are infinite, and no more is requiſite for the pardon of the greateſt, yea of the ſins of the whole world, if they were upon thy ſingle ſcore. The grace conferred upon Paul was more than would ſuit his neceſſity, 1 Tim. 1. 14. ὑπερεπλεόνασεν, Superabound, and the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, enough to have pardoned a whole world as well as Paul; like the Sun, that emits as much heat in his beams upon one puddle, as is enough, not only to exhale the moiſture of that, but of a 100 more. Suppoſe thou art the greateſt ſinner that ever was yet extant in the world; do not think that God, who hath ſnatcht ſo many firebrands of Hell out of the Devils hands, will neglect ſuch an opportunity to make his grace illuſtrious upon thy humble Soul. If God hath given thee repentance, it is a certain evidence he will follow it with a pardon, though thy ſins be of a deeper ſcarlet than ever yet was ſeen upon the earth; for if he did not mean to beſtow this, he would never have beſtowed upon thee the neceſſary condition of it. Is there not a ſinner can equal thee? Then ſurely God is wiſer than to loſe the higheſt opportunity he yet had to evidence his ſuperlative grace. And therefore,

[1.] Continue thy humiliations. There muſt be a conformity between Chriſt and thee; he was humbled when he purchaſed remiſſion, and you muſt be humbled when you receive it. God will not part with that very cheap, that coſt his Son ſo dear: though thou art not at the expence of the blood of thy Soul, thou muſt be at the expence of the blood of thy Sins. When a man comes to be deeply affected with his ſin, then God ſends a meſſage of peace, Iſay. 6, 6, 7. Then flew one of the Seraphims and laid a live coal upon his mouth and ſaid, thine iniquity is taken away and thy ſin purged. When v. 5. he had cryed out, woe is me, for I am undone, becauſe I am a man of unclean lips. The way to have a debt forgiven is to acknowledge it, Pſ. 32. 5. I ſaid I will confeſs my tranſgreſſions unto the Lord, and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin. God ſtood as ready to forgive Davids unrighteouſneſs, as he was ready to confeſs it. Mercy will not ſave a man without making him ſenſible of, and humbled for his iniquity. Put thy buſineſs therefore into Chriſts hands, and ſubmit to what terms he will impoſe upon thee.

[2.] In thy Supplications plead his glory. You find this the conſtant argument the people of God in the Scripture uſe for the prevailing with God for forgiveneſs. That argument is moſt comfortably pleaded, which God Loves moſt, and whereunto he orders all his actions. No ſtronger motive can be uſed to him to grant it, than that whereby he excites himſelf himſelf to beſtow it. When thou beggeſt other things, thou mayeſt diſhonour God; but God cannot be a loſer of his glory in granting this. Lord if thou turneſt me into Hell, where is the glory of thy mercy upon thy creature? Nay, where is the glory of thy juſtice, my eternal torments not being able to compenſate the injury done to thee by ſin, ſo much as the ſuffering of thy only Son, whoſe death I deſire to ſhare in, and whoſe terms I am willing to ſubmit to?

3. Exhortation to thoſe that are pardoned.

1. Admire this grace of God. To pardon one ſin is a greater thing than to create a world, to pardon one ſin is greater than to damn a world. God can create a world without the death of a creature, he can damn a world without the death of the Creator, but in pardoning there muſt be the death of the Creator, the Son of God.

2. Serve God much. Is the guilt of ſin, the cord that bound thee, taken off? It is fit that when thou art ſo unfettered, thou ſhould'ſt run the ways of Gods Commandments. A ſenſe of pardon of ſin makes the Soul willing and ready to run upon Gods errands, and to obey his Commands, Iſa. 6. 8. I heard the voice of the Lord ſaying, Whom ſhall I ſend? Then ſaid I, Here am I: Then, when he had received aſſurance that his iniquity was taken away, v. 7. Gods pardon ſet thee upon a new ſtock, and therefore he expects thou ſhould'ſt be full of new cluſters.

3. Be more fearful of ſin. Diſpute with thy ſelf, Hath God pardoned the guilt of ſin that it ſhall not damn me? and ſhall I wallow in the mire of ſin to pollute my ſelf? Oh, thy ſins after pardon have a blacker circumſtance than the ſins of Devils, or the ſins of wicked men, for theirs are not againſt pardoning mercy, not againſt ſpecial Love. Oh, thaw thy heart every morning with a meditation on pardon, and ſin will not ſo eaſily freeze it in the day time. When thou art tempted to ſin, conſider what thoughts thou hadſt when thou wert ſuing for pardon, how earneſt thou wert for it, what promiſes and vows thou didſt make, and conſider the Love God ſhewed thee in pardoning. Do not blur thy pardon, ſo eaſily wound thy Conſcience, or weaken thy faith.

4. Be content with what God gives thee. If he gives thee Heaven, will he deny thee earth? He that beſtows upon thee the pardon of ſin, would ſurely pour into thy boſom the gold of both the Indies, were it neceſſary for thee. But thou haſt got a greater happineſs; for it is not ſaid, bleſſed is he that wallows in wealth, honour and a confluence of worldly proſperity, but Bleſſed is he whoſe ſin is forgiven, and whoſe iniquity is covered.
